BUSH, ROH ACT TO REASSURE NORTH KOREA Moscow-Seoul Relationship Described As No Threat To Pyongyang

President Bush and South Korean President Roh publicly assured North Korea Wednesday that the recent dramatic improvement in the Moscow-Seoul relationship does not presage any security threat to the heavily armed regime in Pyongyang.

"The United States reaffirms that it is not a threat to North Korean security, and we seek to improve relations with that country," White House spokesman Fitzwater told reporters following the 45-minute meeting of Bush and Roh.

A South Korean spokesman said Roh asked President Gorbachev at their groundbreaking meeting Monday in San Francisco to pass along assurances to the North Korean regime. "We do not seek military superiority over North Korea, and we have no intention to attack North Korea," the spokesman quoted Roh as saying.

Bush Welcomes Roh, Urges Seoul-Pyongyang Warming

Hailing this week's "historic meeting" between the Presidents of South Korea and the Soviet Union, the White House called Wednesday for similar steps between the two Koreas as President Bush conferred with South Korean President Roh.

Roh, speaking to reporters afterward, said that he and Bush agreed that the two nations on the divided Korean peninsula "have to cooperate so that we can melt down the ice which still exists from the Cold War years." ...

"The problem is the opening and reform in North Korea, and I and President Gorbachev agreed to combine efforts along that line. I am hopeful that this meeting will help greatly the process of reunification." ...

In addition, he said the meeting with Gorbachev might lead to talks to bring about a reduction in U.S. troop strength in South Korea and would help reduce tensions on the peninsula.

NORTH KOREA ATTACKS 'UNPARDONABLE, TRAITOROUS' GORBACHEV

TOKYO -- North Korea's state news agency carried a blistering attack on President Gorbachev Thursday for his "unpardonable, traitorous bargaining" with the leader of hated South Korea....

"All facts prove that the talks between Roh Tae-woo and Gorbachev...were an unpardonable, traitorous bargaining," said the statement, ostensibly from the Pyongyang-backed "South Korean National Democratic Front."

HIGH-TECH SALES PLAN UNVEILED

The Bush Administration offered major concessions to its allies Wednesday, agreeing during a high-level meeting in Paris to allow the sale of advanced telecommunications equipment to newly democratic nations of Eastern Europe, Administration and industry sources reported. The new U.S. position is far more liberal than one President Bush announced a month ago. It would allow the sale of "very sophisticated telecommunications equipment" to countries that agreed to set up control regimes that would keep the equipment away from the Soviet military, an industry official said. These countries are Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Poland.

HOUSE TIES HIGH-TECH SOVIET SALES TO LITHUANIAN CRACKDOWN

The House voted Wednesday to forbid the sale of sophisticated U.S. computers, telecommunications equipment and other high-tech goods to the Soviet Union until it ends its economic boycott against breakaway Lithuania.

In the first congressional action since President Bush and President Gorbachev signed a trade agreement last week, the House also voted to ban such sales if Gorbachev carries out a threat to slow the emigration of Soviet Jews.

On a 390-24 vote, the House voted not to grant U.S. companies licenses to sell high-tech products to the Soviets unless President Bush certifies that Moscow is conducting negotiations with the Lithuanian republic..."without economic coercion."

The vote was on an amendment by Rep. Durbin to an Administration-opposed bill that would ease the export of high-tech goods to the Soviets, the fledgling democracies of Eastern Europe and U.S. allies.

House Passes Bill Relaxing Export Controls

The House passed legislation that would make it easier for U.S. companies to export equipment of strategic importance, such as computers and fiber-optic systems, to Eastern Europe.

But the House approved an amendment to the bill that would retain all current restrictions for the Soviet Union as long as it continues its crackdown on Lithuania....

The proposal's immediate fate was uncertain because Senate consideration of similar legislation was not imminent, and House Republicans said President Bush would likely veto the measure in its present form.

BALTIC LEADERS TO ASK GORBACHEV AGAIN FOR INDEPENDENCE TALKS

MOSCOW -- The presidents of the three independence-minded Baltic republics said Wednesday they would again ask President Gorbachev for talks on their joint bid to break links with the Kremlin. The three told a news conference after meeting in the Latvian town of Jurmala that they would shortly send Gorbachev a telegram requesting a joint meeting of representatives from the three Baltic states and Moscow.

"The telegram emphasizes the need to settle differences by way of negotiations," a Latvian parliament official said.

NATO MINISTERS BUOYED BY PROSPECT OF GERMAN BREAKTHROUGH

TURNBERRY, Scotland -- NATO foreign ministers begin a review of European security Thursday buoyed by hints of a deal with the Soviet Union on a united Germany's military allegiance.

West German and British officials voiced optimism after briefings by Secretary Baker on his talks Tuesday with Foreign Minister Shevardnadze.... "Since the Baker-Shevardnadze meeting...the mood has changed and the impression left was that we are in the middle of negotiations that are going to succeed," one said. (Donald Forbes, Reuter)

BAKER SEEKS EUROPE SECURITY GROUP SHIFT

COPENHAGEN -- In an effort to parry Soviet hopes to have the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe rather than NATO take the leading role in shaping a new Europe, Secretary Baker Wednesday offered his own ideas of how the 35-nation organization should evolve. As he spoke at a conference meeting in the Danish capital, the Secretary of State addressed attempts increasingly to seize on the conference as a framework for building a pan-European security structure that could replace NATO and the Warsaw Pact.

JEWISH EMIGRATION TO CONTINUE

COPENHAGEN -- Soviet Foreign Minister Shevardnadze has assured Secretary Baker that his government will not halt Jewish emigration to Israel despite President Gorbachev's threat in Washington on Sunday. Shevardnadze gave that assurance to Baker during their two-hour meeting here Tuesday night after Baker raised U.S. concerns about the meaning of Gorbachev's comments, a senior U.S. official told reporters Wednesday....

On Sunday, Gorbachev said, "Either our concern is heeded in Israel and they will make certain conclusions or else we must give further thought to it in terms of what we do in issuing permits for visas." The senior official, who declined to be identified, said that in the Tuesday meeting Baker had told Shevardnadze that the U.S. government "was surprised and concerned by Gorbachev's statement and wanted clarification." The official added that Baker "made clear that any move in that direction would have very serious consequences."

According to the official, Shevardnadze explained that Gorbachev "wanted to demonstrate that (the Soviets) would like to have certain understandings from the Israelis because there's a problem as far as (the Soviets) are concerned." However, the official continued, Shevardnadze stressed that Moscow has no intention of backing away from its liberalized emigration policy.

ISRAELI OFFICIALS ANNOUNCE EASING OF RULES FOR RESIDING IN TERRITORIES
Policy Of Expelling Spouses, Children Had Drawn Criticism

JERUSALEM -- Israeli authorities have announced an easing of residency regulations for Palestinians living in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, reversing a policy under which about 250 persons were summarily expelled from the country last year.

In a statement to the Supreme Court, a lawyer for the military administration said spouses and children of residents of the territories would be allowed to remain permanently in the country even if they did not qualify for residence status themselves....

The policy change represented a concession to the Palestinian community by the caretaker government of Prime Minister Shamir at a time when Israel is generally perceived as moving toward more aggressive policies in the territories.

U.S. LIKELY TO SUSPEND DIALOGUE WITH PLO

The U.S. is likely to suspend its dialogue with the PLO because of its failure to condemn last week's seaborne raid on Israel and discipline the guerrilla who planned it, diplomats said Wednesday.

The Middle Eastern diplomats said it now appeared impossible to rescue the dialogue.... The fact that the PLO executive completed a two-day meeting in Baghdad Wednesday without condemning the raid was another nail in the coffin of the dialogue.

"Pressure is now mounting in Congress all the time. The question now is whether the Administration will end the dialogue of its own free will or whether it will be dragged into ending it kicking and screaming. The former seems more likely," said one source.

National Security Adviser Scowcroft was quoted as telling some visitors this week that Washington's relationship with the PLO was in "extreme crisis" and might change soon. (Alan Elsner, Reuter)

FOUR SENATORS URGE END TO DIALOGUE WITH PLO Refusal To Condemn Attack On Israel Cited

Four senators Wednesday introduced legislation urging the Administration to end its dialogue with the PLO for refusing to condemn a thwarted guerrilla attack on Israel by one of the PLO's constituent groups.

The move coincided with a PLO statement from its Tunis office excoriating the U.S. for "protecting Israel and its crimes...and encouraging it to commit more." ...

The lack of any PLO disciplinary action against hard-liner Mohammed Abul Abbas, whose group claimed responsibility for the assault, was "discouraging," a U.S. official said.

...Sens. Mack, Lieberman, Lautenberg and Grassley [called] for an immediate suspension of the U.S. dialogue with the PLO that began in December 1988 after the PLO renounced terrorism.

ALLEGED RAIDER SAYS CIVILIANS IN TEL AVIV WERE HIS TARGETS

JERUSALEM -- A man identified as one of the participants in an attempted attack on the Israeli shoreline last week said on state television here that "the aim of the operation was to murder civilians."

The man, who identified himself as Ahmad Mohammed Yusef...said that the Palestinians had the objective of attacking the Tel Aviv hotel district along the city's Mediterranean beaches. "As for the Tel Aviv hotel district, we were supposed to bombard it with 23mm and 14.5 mm shells, murder civilians, cleanse the hotel and murder anyone we encountered," he said.

ARENS CONTENDS U.S. CREDIBILITY ON LINE

JERUSALEM -- Foreign Minister Arens said Wednesday the attempted sea attack by a faction of the PLO showed that Israel was not to blame for the lack of progress toward peace in the Middle East.

"Israel will continue to act for the furtherance of the peace process in close cooperation with the U.S.," Arens said. (UPI)

RAFSANJANI HINTS ACCEPTANCE OF IRAQI PEACE OVERTURE

CAIRO -- Iranian President Rafsanjani indicated Wednesday that Iran is prepared to respond positively to proposals from Iraqi President Rafsanjani to transform their 1988 ceasefire into a formal peace treaty.

The Iraqi leader suggested in a May 1 letter to Rafsanjani that they meet for direct talks.... "We have not answered negatively" to the peace feelers, Rafsanjani said in a news conference....

Rafsanjani spoke also about Western hostages in Lebanon, saying that Washington should pressure Israel and Kuwait to release their Shiite Moslem prisoners if it wants to gain the freedom of six Americans still held. (Caryle Murphy, Washington Post, A30)

U.S. PLANS TO OFFER SAUDI ARABIA $4 BILLION IN ARMS

The Bush Administration Wednesday announced plans for a new $4 billion arms sale to Saudi Arabia, including armored vehicles, anti-tank missiles and modernization of AWACS radar warning planes.

...The Administration said it had notified Congress of the new offer, which will be made unless lawmakers veto the move within 30 days.

U.S. TELLS CHINA OF CONCERN OVER REPORT OF AID TO LIBYA

The U.S. has complained to China about a report that China may be supplying raw materials for chemical weapons to Libya, informed U.S. officials said Wednesday.

Assistant Secretary of State Solomon told a Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee that the U.S. has "some indications that something may be going on in that area, and we have expressed concerns" to China "at a very high level." Solomon was not more specific in responding to a question from Sen. Biden about China's involvement in "poison gas."

But other officials said later that a U.S. intelligence report suggested recently that China may be selling chemicals needed to make weapons to Libya. The officials said the report was not substantiated but was serious enough to warrant a complaint.

Chinese Reported To Weigh Sale Of Poison Gas Chemicals To Libya

The U.S. has received intelligence reports that China is considering the sale of chemicals to Libya that can be used to make poison gas, Bush Administration officials said Wednesday.

OFFICIAL DEFENDS CHINA POLICY AGAINST SENATE ATTACK

The Bush Administration defended its China policy Wednesday against a blistering attack by Senate opponents of President Bush's decision to renew favored tariff status for Chinese exports.

Told he was defending an indefensible policy because of China's abuses of human rights, Assistant Secretary of State Solomon told senators "there's a certain element of holding one's nose here" in balancing the competing demands of "hard-nosed" national interests and American ideals....

Solomon repeated Administration arguments that it sought to maintain its relationship with the Chinese government while at the same time making clear it regarded Beijing's human rights performance as unacceptable.

..."You really can't defend anything, quite frankly," Sen. Biden told Solomon. "The rationale you are offering does not hold any water at all."

BEIJING -- The Chinese government announced Wednesday the release of 97 more people imprisoned without formal charge after last spring's student-led democratic uprising, including, for the first time, two prominent student activists.

DIRE LOSSES FORECAST FOR FHA HOME LOAN INSURANCE FUND

The GAO and representatives of a private accounting firm hired by the Department of Housing and Urban Development told a Senate subcommittee Wednesday that the government's main home loan insurance program has been forced to the brink of collapse by declining real estate values and risky underwriting.

Reports released Wednesday by both the GAO and the Price Waterhouse accounting firm predict dire times ahead for the Federal Housing Administration's mutual mortgage insurance fund, which, by conservative estimates, is expected to lose $208 million during 1990.

Less optimistic forecasts of economic conditions, the Price Waterhouse accountants said, make it "reasonably possible" that 1990 losses could total as much as $667 million.

"Plainly speaking, FHA was mismanaged," said Secretary Kemp. "It was backing risky loans on the cheap."

KEMP ATTACKS GOP CHALLENGER TO CUOMO

Secretary Kemp...unleashed a torrent of criticism Wednesday at Pierre Rinfret, the New York Republican Party's choice to challenge Gov. Mario Cuomo.

Speaking to reporters, Kemp criticized Rinfret as a one-issue candidate who has decided to "walk away" from the accomplishments of the Reagan Administration and is "practicing the politics of the death penalty" in his campaign for governor.

"He's running on the death penalty for drug pushers," Kemp said. "I mean, goodness gracious, if...that's what politics has descended into in the 1990s -- who can get to the far right on the death penalty -- it is a sad day."

Kemp...said Rinfret is squandering an opportunity to challenge Cuomo on the governor's proposals to increase taxes and has failed to support President Bush's call for a cut in the capital gains tax.

...Rinfret campaign officials declined to comment on Kemp's remarks, but RNC spokeswoman Leslie Goodman said the party still expects Kemp to campaign on behalf of Rinfret this fall.

"When all is said and done, we support our Republican candidate 100 percent," Goodman said.

PRO-CHOICE REPUBLICANS CHALKING UP VICTORIES IN STATES

Pro-choice Republicans won a trio of platform victories at recent state party conventions and expect still more states to part ways with the national GOP's anti-abortion plank this year.

Republicans in Maine and New York have adopted pro-choice state platform provisions, and Wisconsin Republicans voted down an anti-abortion plank that would have called for legal protection "for all human beings, from conception on." ...

"The Atwater theory is alive -- those views are being accommodated," said Leslie Goodman, spokeswoman for the RNC. "We, of course, are not involved at the state level in what their platforms look like, but there's no question that abortion is now an issue that's being handled at the state level."

FEINSTEIN'S GUBERNATORIAL NOMINATION

Former San Francisco mayor Dianne Feinstein's Democratic primary victory Tuesday -- the first major party gubernatorial nomination for a woman in California -- topped a women's surge at the polls that poses a serious challenge to the well-funded campaign of GOP gubernatorial candidate Sen. Pete Wilson.

Women defeated men in five of six contested major party statewide races Tuesday....

Wilson immediately released a television commercial praising his Senate work on behalf of San Francisco and displaying a Feinstein letter telling him, "You're wonderful." CALIFORNIANS APPROVE INCREASE IN GASOLINE LEVY
Analysts Debate Whether Initiative's Victory
Signals National Retreat From Tax Revolt

In the state where the national tax revolt began a dozen years ago, a shot was fired Tuesday that is bound to be heard around the country: Californians voted to raise their taxes.

Proposition 111, a measure that would allow the state gasoline tax to double over the next five years to pay for repairing and expanding the state's deteriorating highway system, was approved by a 52 percent to 48 percent vote....

Leaders of the bipartisan coalition that supported Prop. 111, including Gov. Deukmejian and several Democratic legislators, cautioned against interpreting the vote as more than an endorsement of taxes to meet a specific, serious need. Elected officials and policy analysts around the country also were wary of overinterpreting Tuesday's vote.

In Washington, lawmakers involved in budget talks with the Bush Administration discounted the significance of the California vote.... "Having approved it, it doesn't necessarily mean that every member of Congress is going to run down and put into the hopper proposals to raise taxes," said Speaker Foley.

(Jay Mathews & Paul Taylor, Washington Post, A7)

Prop. 111/Reaction

President Bush, who rode to office on a "no new taxes" pledge, had no reaction Wednesday to California's vote to double its gasoline tax. But Jack Kemp, a leading guardian of that pledge, warned that Tuesday's election should not be interpreted as a signal that the national antipathy to new taxes has diminished....

"It means that people want roads and highways in California which have not been built to the extent that they should be," said Kemp....

"Again, we see the President has no coattails," said Rep. Beryl Anthony.... "Bush's popularity does not translate into votes at the ballot box for the Republican Party." ...

Leslie Goodman, press secretary for the RNC, called the vote "a setback," but dismissed as "poppycock" any efforts to link the vote to the President's popularity.

"A truly informed electorate would have passed it," she said, blaming Democrats for "confusing voters." (George Condon, Copley)

Calif. Tax Hike 'Sends A Message'

MASSACHUSETTS DEMOCRATS ALLEGE GOP 'DIRTY TRICK'

BOSTON -- Massachusetts Democrats, struggling to hold their near-monopoly on political power here, are trying to pin the blame for a disruption at their recent nominating convention on a Republican "dirty trick" run out of the White House.

Rep. Chester Atkins, the Democratic State Committee chairman, charged this week that Ron Kaufman, a deputy director of personnel in the Bush Administration, was the mastermind behind a last-minute picket line thrown up outside the Springfield Civic Center Saturday that delayed the Democrats' convention by four hours.

Atkins and other top Democrats noted that the picketing was staged by the Springfield police local, a group that noisily endorsed Bush in the 1988 Presidential campaign, and that Kaufman, who orchestrated that endorsement, was spotted in Springfield during the weekend.

"I don't think you have to be Dick Tracy to figure out what happened," Max Stern, a prominent Boston attorney hired by the party, said at a news conference announcing plans to sue the police union and Kaufman for allegedly violating the convention delegates' civil rights....

Kaufman denied any involvement, saying his role was "none, zero." Although he met with the president of the police local last month in Washington, Kaufman said he was as surprised as anyone when he saw the police picket line on television Saturday morning. "I would never do anything that would in any way, shape or form hurt the President or the White House," he added in a telephone interview.

LINE-ITEM VETO POWER GETS OFF TO SLOW START

President Bush's appeal for a line-item veto in dealing with appropriations bills got off to a bleak start in Congress Wednesday as the Senate refused to consider the proposal as part of an unrelated bill, one to prohibit airlines from restricting seating for the visually handicapped.

By 43 to 50, the Senate refused to waive procedural rules requiring prior approval of the Budget Committee.... The proposal fell short by 17 votes.

The amendment proposed by Sen. McCain would have granted Bush authority to reject individual items within a spending bill without having to veto the bill as a whole.

ARTS CHAIRMAN URGES CONGRESS NOT TO RESTRICT FUNDS

The chairman of the National Endowment for the Arts urged Congress Wednesday not to restrict funds for his agency because of past exhibits that were considered obscene by some House and Senate members.

"Because of only 20 images, we have come under attack. Our very existence is in question," NEA Chairman Frohnmayer told a Senate Appropriations subcommittee hearing....

"The primary goal, to which this agency and all members of Congress ascribe, is that obscenity not be funded," he said in his testimony. But he said congressional restrictions would be counterproductive. (Robert Green, Reuter)

NEA Proposal Meets Resistance

A White House proposal to reauthorize the National Endowment for the Arts for one year met with a poor reception on the Hill Wednesday and quickly started to change shape under the heat of congressional critics.

NEA Chairman Frohnmayer appeared before a Senate appropriations subcommittee and said he and the Administration still support a full five-year reauthorization of the endowment, but will settle for a shorter period, perhaps a year or maybe three.

Senate sources said Democrats handling the legislation to extend the life of the agency might support a year renewal if the bill imposed no restrictions on the content of federally funded art and if the legislation had vigorous White House support. But Sen. McClure said he will oppose extending the NEA's life for even a year without restrictive language....

On the House side, members from both sides of the aisle said they were unwilling to fight for a one-year reauthorization. "The Administration reminds me of a car careening from one proposal to another," said Rep. Coleman.

In what appears to signal a potential shift in the Bush Administration's position, a senior White House official said the Administration prefers no content restrictions but would not necessarily veto a one-year extension that includes the current language. (Kim Masters, Washington Post, C1)

NEA Chairman Frohnmayer, an amateur singer, has been getting free voice coaching from an agency subordinate during and after working hours, with piano accompaniment by another NEA official, according to endowment employees....

Frohnmayer...acknowledged Wednesday that he had been coached by the employee. Asked if he paid for the lessons he said, "No, I did not."

But the NEA chairman emphatically denied that the coaching sessions had occurred at the agency during working hours. When told that numerous NEA employees said they had, he said, "I don't have any comment on that at all.... There's no ethical problem."

BUDGET DEFICIT NEGOTIATORS AGREE TO STUDY MILITARY SPENDING

Budget deficit negotiators from Congress and the Bush Administration agreed Wednesday to study ways of cutting military spending, ending in better spirits a session that began with suspicion on both sides.

Sen. Sasser said afterwards the negotiators had made progress by agreeing to the study but added, "It's the only thing we've agreed upon all day."

At the lunch break, Sasser had appeared completely pessimistic about the talks, saying the Bush Administration would have to do more to cut defense spending. He said Secretary Cheney "had nothing new to say" during a briefing on the military.... But the afternoon session produced some results, however slim. "We've agreed to do some work," Cheney said. Budget Negotiators To Study 25 Percent Military Force Cut

With Secretary Cheney sitting in, White House and congressional budget negotiators agreed Wednesday to study a possible 25 percent, five-year reduction of American military forces.

A nine-member subcommittee, which includes Cheney, was designated to study the possible one-quarter cut in military capability and report to the larger negotiating group in about a week.

Cheney said after budget negotiators ended their second meeting of the day that the 25 percent figure "seems like a reasonable number to look at" given the reduced Soviet military threat." (Bud Newman, UPI)

Cheney Digs In Heels On Accepting Defense Cut Beyond Bush Proposal

Secretary Cheney Wednesday declined to embrace cuts in defense spending beyond those recommended by President Bush in his January budget proposal....

"I was hoping Secretary Cheney would acknowledge the problem (with the growing federal deficit) and recommend additional savings that could be taken. That has not been the case so far," said Sen. Sasser. (Chris Harvey, Washington Times, A6)

GREENSPAN SEES NO ECONOMIC DETERIORATION

SAN FRANCISCO -- Despite signs the U.S. economy is slowing, there is no evidence of fundamental deterioration that would require action to lower interest rates, Federal Reserve Chairman Greenspan said Wednesday.

"The signs of the economy at this stage are really quite ambiguous," said Greenspan at the close of the International Monetary Conference, noting that although inflation has eased, the unemployment rate remains steady.

"There are no indications of building up of inventories or cumulative layoffs in any of the data we see," he said.

QUAYLE: BEWARE 'POLITICAL EXPLOITATION' OF ENVIRONMENT

Vice President Quayle warned against "political exploitation of the environment" Wednesday in an attack on environmentalists who have urged tougher controls on industry.

In remarks to members of the American Paper Institute and the National Forest Products Association, Quayle suggested some environmental groups were taking advantage of growing public concern over the environment to press for "unnecessary" regulation of industry.

Quayle defended President Bush's commitment to "balanced" policies that took into account the economic impact of pollution controls as well as their environmental benefits.

"Our economic competitiveness demands that we must not allow the physical exploitation of our resources and our environment," he said. (UPI)

1.3 BILLION POUNDS OF CHEMICALS LINKED TO BIRTH DEFECTS RELEASED

Industrial plants released more than 1.3 billion pounds of chemicals suspected or known to be linked to birth defects in 1988, with the largest amount coming from the petrochemical belt of Texas, an environmental group said Thursday.

Citizen Action said it analyzed computerized data from the EPA to determine what regions of the country had the mostly hazardous chemical pollution.

Industrial facilities emitted more than 4.6 billion pounds of hazardous chemicals into the air, according to EPA figures released earlier this year.

The analysis by Citizen Action, based on the same EPA statistics, showed that nearly one-third of the chemicals released -- about 1.3 billion pounds -- have either been shown to cause birth defects or are strongly suspected to have such a link. Most of these releases were into the air. (H. Josef Hebert, AP)

ANTI-PESTICIDE PROVISIONS ADDED TO FARM BILL

Two strong anti-pesticide provisions were added to the Senate version of the 1990 farm bill Wednesday over the objections of the Bush Administration.

One, authored by Sen. Leahy, bars exports of U.S.-made pesticides that are banned for use in the U.S....

The second, authored by Sen. Fowler, charges U.S. grading standards for fruit and vegetables to include flavor, sugar content and nutritional values as standards as well as exterior appearance.

Fowler said between 10 and 40 percent of all pesticides are now used just to improve the appearance of fruit and vegetables to pass the standards set by the U.S. Department of Agriculture....

Dan Haley, administrator of the USDA Agricultural Marketing Service, said Fowler's standards would cost the government $53 million to put in place and would override an ongoing study of the standards. The Administration also argued, in a letter from Secretary Yeutter and EPA Administrator Reilly, that banning the export of U.S.-made pesticides will merely force U.S. companies to move their plants and jobs overseas or lose the business to foreign competitors. SENATE BACKS SHIFT OF AIDS WORKERS

The Senate joined the House Wednesday in proposing to permit employers to transfer workers with AIDS out of food-handling jobs, a controversial departure from sweeping anti-discrimination protections for the disabled that are nearing final approval in Congress....

"If Ryan White were still alive and he wanted to go down and work at Burger King, this legislation would say no," said Sen. Kennedy.

AGENT'S SHOVING OF BLACK BUSH AIDE PROBED

The Secret Service said Wednesday that it is investigating an incident in which an agent reportedly shoved Condoleezza Rice, a Soviet affairs specialist and one of the Bush Administration's top-ranking blacks, as she was waiting in a line of dignitaries to say goodbye to President Gorbachev.

Other staff members "came to the rescue" and intervened so she could return to her place in the farewell line at San Francisco International Airport on Monday evening, a White House official said.

THORNBURGH MAY HAVE BROKEN RULES

Attorney General Thornburgh may have violated Justice Department guidelines when he rejected internal recommendations that his top ethics cop review an FBI investigation into a news leak, law enforcement officials said Wednesday.

The investigation involved two of his closest aides, "Robin" Ross and David Runkel....

Top Justice officials told Thornburgh in January that the matter should go to Michael Shaheen, head of the Office of Professional Responsibility, for review, law enforcement sources said. The recommendation...was rejected by Thornburgh, said the officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity....

"The whole establishment there have run roughshod over the careerists," said one Justice official. "They have alienated many longtime people in the department."

(Jerry Seper, Washington Times, A6)

PROPOSAL WOULD REMOVE FBI AS DEA OVERSEER

...The Justice Department wants "to reflect reality," as one official put it, by removing the DEA from the general supervision of the FBI director so that both agencies report separately and directly to Attorney General Thornburgh.

Requiring the top drug official to report through the FBI director has stirred deep resentment inside the DEA and has not been the actual practice since 1988....

"Both DEA and FBI have significantly different missions," Justice Department spokesman Dan Eramian said Wednesday. "To have the DEA report to the FBI adds another layer of bureaucracy and slows down the flow of information."

JACKSON URGES BARRY NOT TO RUN
Move Would Provide Bargaining Leverage, Rights Leader Says

Jesse Jackson urged D.C. Mayor Barry Wednesday to announce he will not seek a fourth term, saying such a public declaration could serve as powerful leverage in plea negotiations with U.S. Attorney Jay Stephens.

As jury selection in Barry's perjury and drug trial entered its third day in U.S. District Court, Jackson said in an interview that the mayor seemed willing to "take a step off dead center" and announce that he would abandon all plans for reelection....

Meanwhile, officials in the White House, the Justice Department and the national Republican Party said Wednesday they were unaware of any preliminary contacts by Jackson or Del. Walter Fauntroy that some Democratic sources said were initiated earlier in the week. (R.H. Melton & Tracy Thompson, Washington Post, A1)

IN COLOMBIA, TRIAL REFLECTS WEAK U.S. ANTI-DRUG EFFORT

BOGOTA -- D.C. Mayor Barry is innocent until proven guilty in the U.S., but in Colombia he has already been convicted by public opinion, and an acquittal would be viewed by many Colombians as confirmation that Americans are not serious about the war on drugs....

"An acquittal would be a major blow to the so-called drug war, and could lead to a deterioration of U.S.-Colombian relations," said Francisco Santos, managing editor of El Tiempo, the nation's largest newspaper....

Santos said his newspaper would continue to play the Barry trial prominently because "it is a symbol of how hypocritical U.S. society and policies are." (Douglas Farah, Washington Post, A22)

TAXES/ABORTION

NBC's Tom Brokaw: Taxes and abortion: two of the most explosive issues in American politics. And Wednesday night, what may be a sign of the times: a vote for taxes, a definite vote for abortion rights. California voters, who started a whole tax-cut movement a few years ago, now they've agreed to double gasoline taxes. A new trend?

NBC's Don Oliver reports from Los Angeles that the aversion of Californians to increase taxes was overcome by their frustration of snarled traffic. By a narrow margin, voters approved a proposition to double the state's gasoline tax over the next five years. Since the money is specifically earmarked for improving the state's transportation system, some analysts don't see the vote as a sweeping endorsement of new taxes.

(William Schneider, political analyst: "When the voters have a very clear idea of why the money is needed and what it's going to be used for, then maybe, narrowly and reluctantly, they will pass a tax increase.")

But others say the approval of bond issues for new schools, prisons and the development of more mass transit systems means the end of an era.

(Arthur Laffer, economist: "This is clearly the end of the tax revolt of California. Taxes have been raised and again a spending limit has been eliminated.")

Around the country, there are indications some new taxes may be acceptable. In Massachusetts, blue collar workers rallied for an increase in the gasoline tax to repair roads and bridges. The Texas legislature reluctantly raised the tax on cigarettes and mixed drinks and increased the sales tax by one-quarter percent to raise $600 million for schools. But in November, voters in 10 states will ballot on proposals to roll back or limit taxes as a rebuke to state officials.

(Gerald Miller, Association of State Budget Directors: "And in those states where they have not been what we might say responsible, the public might pass a tax limitation amendment.") Both the supporters and the foes of the California tax increase say it would be a mistake for officials in Washington to take the vote here as a cue to raise federal taxes.

Brokaw reports that there are other signs that the American people are changing their minds about the need for new taxes. A recent NBC News/Wall Street Journal poll found that almost all American voters think a federal tax hike is likely this year. When given the options, more people think it's better to raise taxes than to continue living with that huge federal budget deficit.

-- 49 percent favor raising taxes.

-- 43 percent favor living with the deficit.

What kind of taxes? An overwhelming majority would prefer higher alcohol and tobacco taxes.

- 83 percent prefer higher alcohol and tobacco taxes.
- 49 percent favor a higher capital gains tax.
- 44 percent favor a higher gasoline tax.
- 43 percent favor a national sales tax.
- 23 percent favored raising individual income taxes.

Brokaw reports that abortion-rights candidates did very well in primaries, especially in Iowa, where it was the issue in the Democratic primary for governor.

NBC's Bob Kur reports that Don Avenson was among the successful candidates helped by the abortion issue. Dianne Feinstein owes her California gubernatorial primary victory, in part, to an abortion-rights position stronger than her opponent's.

(Feinstein: "It is not the business of government to interfere with a woman's right to choose.")

And although the former Charlotte, N.C., mayor's abortion-rights position was not a factor in North Carolina's Democratic senatorial primary, it could help him in a very tough November election against Jesse Helms. Harvey Gantt is the first North Carolina black to win a major political nomination. While anti-abortion activists recently proved they still could turn out a couple hundred thousand troops, political consultants now doubt the movement can turn out the votes.

(Geoff Garin, political analyst: "In 1990 it's been simple: The pro-choice candidates have been gaining and the pro-life candidates have been losing. The voters have sent one message for this year which is, don't mess with choice.")

Last week, for the first time in its history, the N.Y. Republican Party approved a pro-choice plank in its platform. Of the 39 states which have considered anti-abortion bills, only one, Pennsylvania, has enacted significant restrictions, and they are being challenged in court.

(Kate Michelman, National Abortion Rights Action League: "The pro-choice majority in this nation has awakened to the fact that it is up to them to protect the right to choose, and that they need to do it through the political process.")

With an eye on November, Democratic leaders believe choice may be the issue that can pull voters across party lines, and that the message may best be delivered by women. No surprise that more than half the Democratic senate candidate in N.Y. this year are women.

(NBC-Lead, ABC-13, CBS-4)

CBS's Ed Bradley: Results from the California primary are raising new questions Wednesday night about whether the nationwide tax backlash of the 1980s is over. Californians have voted to approve a big increase in their own gasoline tax.

CBS's David Dow reports that opponents of the gas tax feared the worst.

(Arthur Laffer, economist: "It really does end the tax revolt of California and I think it sends a very serious message to Washington.")

Dow continues: But in Washington the reading of that message was far more cautious. No one at Wednesday's budget summit meeting was touting the California as a blank check for just any tax increase. (Sen. Sasser: "The fact that the voters of California voted to increase the gasoline tax indicates that voters will approve tax increases for specific purposes that they think are absolutely necessary.")

In fact, proponents of proposition 111, the gas tax measure, spent heavily convincing voters that this was indeed a specific tax for a specific crying need -- one dramatized by last fall's earthquake -- the need for building a better transportation system. But even with the media blitz, voters approved the new taxes by a narrow 52 to 48 percent margin.

(Sherrie Bebitch Jeffe, political analyst: "It's no drunken spending spree, and the politicians better not read it as a mandate for such.")

The question is whether the California approach could be used to sell a tax specifically earmarked for federal deficit reduction.

(William Schneider, political analyst: "People are worried about what it may portend, but until the deficit becomes a crisis -- until you have that sense of urgency -- it's going to be very hard for the President and Congress to make a deal and for the public to accept a deal that could possibly involve higher taxes.")

At the very least, the sales success of the California measure proved that talking taxes, at least the right tax, is not necessarily political suicide.

Bradley asks CBS's Lesley Stahl: How is this likely to affect the budget and tax negotiations now going on in Washington?

Stahl: From everything I've heard Wednesday, this vote does not give much hope to those who think it's necessary to raise federal taxes. First off, in addition to California, 21 other states have raised the gas tax in the last year and a half. As the states have seen their grants and other aid from the federal government dry up, they've moved to co-opt the gas tax as theirs, making it more difficult to go that route for the Feds. Secondly, the White House says this California vote is an anomaly. The vast majority of votes across the country to raise taxes still fail. The White House says there were 500 cases this past year that failed. And finally, the California tax was specifically tied to a very visible and aggravating need to fix the roads. Higher federal taxes would go to reduce the deficit or bail out the S&Ls, and that does not have very much public support.

Bradley: Is there anything coming out of these budget negotiations?

Stahl: Not yet. They met Wednesday and apparently talked about defense numbers but nothing was agreed to. They meet and talk; they haven't even gotten to taxes. I've heard that it's possible they're looking for a way to put off this whole decision till November so that if they do raise taxes, the voters won't punish either side at the polls. (CBS-Lead)

FHA

Bradley: More sticker shock Wednesday for Americans already stuck for billions of dollars in losses because of mismanagement and corruption in both the savings and loan industry and government housing programs. Wednesday, it turns out the government-backed FHA Home Mortgage Fund stands to lose, this year, somewhere between $200 million and $500 million.

CBS's Terence Smith reports that Secretary Kemp told Congress Wednesday that the FHA is losing money rapidly and will become insolvent unless changes are made. Kemp said that mismanagement and increasingly frequent defaults have caused the agency's mortgage fund to plummet from $8 billion in 1979 to $2.6 billion last year, and more losses are expected.

(Secretary Kemp: "If nothing were done to tighten up the insurance fund for FHA, the FHA wouldn't even be around for first-time home buyers in the future.")

To stop the fund's erosion, Kemp wants to impose a number of stricter loan requirements including higher mortgage insurance premiums and making FHA borrowers pay more of their closing costs, a burden experts say would be heavy.

(Jane DeMarines, Mortgage Banker's Association: "The main effect of these proposals would be to knock out thousands of young, first-time home buyers from the program, the very people that FHA was designed to serve.")

Kemp's tightened loan procedure still will have to be approved by Congress, which traditionally is reluctant to take such steps during an election year. But experts warn that unless something is done, another major federal government program could face the prospect of default.

NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE ARTS

Jennings reports that the White House and Congress are negotiating over the future of funding for the National Endowment for the Arts.

ABC's Jed Duvall reports that the NEA has been on fire with controversy over the funding of artworks allegedly obscene.

(Rep. Tom Coleman: "The fact is you can't just go out and do your own thing. There's a limit in this country.")

(Rep. Pat Williams: "The mail is now running 40 to one in favor of the endowment and against censorship. Is there anybody in America that's surprised by that except a few right-wing evangelical political cuckoos?")

The White House, to appease conservatives, Wednesday backed away from its earlier stand in favor of usual five-year funding of the NEA, saying now it would support a one-year budget. Some say art in America has been damaged by the fighting of the past year.

(ABC-9)

BAKER TRIP

Bradley reports that Secretary Baker said Wednesday he hopes the U.S. and the Soviet Union are making progress on the German question. Baker flew to Scotland to brief NATO allies on his talks Tuesday night with Soviet Foreign Minister Shevardnadze, talks that centered on the new shape of Europe after German reunification.

(CBS-9)

LIBERIA

Brokaw reports an airlift rescue can soon be underway in Liberia, where rebel troops are advancing on the capital of Monrovia. NBC News has learned that the U.S. is planning to airlift out all Americans and their dependents -- some 3,300 people altogether. This airlift could start as early as Saturday. (NBC-6)

U.S.-PLO DIALOGUE

NBC's Fred Francis reports that one of the Palestinian terrorists who attacked Israel last week confessed on television that he was to kill as many civilians as possible. What the bungled raid did accomplish was to tie American Mideast policy in knots. Did Libya's Gadhafi and the PLO's Arafat conspire to stage the attack as Israeli politicians claim or was Arafat set-up by the Libyan leader and rebels within his own ranks, as some American diplomats think? Eighteen months of U.S. peace talks with a supposedly moderate Arafat are now in danger.

(Sen. Lautenberg: "This confirmed that this tiger has not changed its stripes.")

Intelligence sources say it is indisputable that Gadhafi sponsored that attack. Both U.S. and Israeli intelligence knew some sort of attack was being rehearsed in Libya. But Akmed Mohammed Yosef [phonetic], the confessed terrorist, said the raid was doomed early when the Libyan mother ship refused to launch five commando boats closer to Israel. Yosef said only two boats made it despite all the training in Libya. He also said he worked not for Arafat but for rival Abul Abbas. Israeli intelligence agrees with that, saying it has no evidence the PLO leader knew of the raid; that is what Arafat has been saying. But Arafat also refuses to condemn it or expel Abul Abbas, the man he embraced here from the Palestinian leadership, something he must do to salvage his relationship with Washington and the administration's Mideast policy. (NBC-8)

SOVIET EMIGRATION

Brokaw: The Soviet Union now says that it will not end Jewish emigration even if Israel continues to settle Soviet Jews in the occupied territories. Foreign Minister Shevardnadze said there will be no change in emigration policy after Secretary of State Baker warned him of very serious consequences. (NBC-7)

SOVIET UNREST

Jennings reports that officials described as a catastrophe the latest outbreak of ethnic violence in the Central Asian Republic of Kirghizia. Fighting between the Kirghizis and the Uzbek minority spread Wednesday to the capital city of Frunze. At least 40 people have been killed and hundreds have been injured. (ABC-3, NBC-9)

ALBANIA

Bradley reports that Albania said Wednesday it wants to join the CSCE. It promised to respect human rights in line with the 1975 Helsinki Accords. (CBS-10)

ESPIONAGE

ABC's Peter Jennings: We begin with a spy story. It has been called the largest case of espionage since World War II. In West Germany Wednesday, a retired American Army sergeant was sentenced to life in prison -- Clyde Lee Conrad, found guilty by a West German court of selling the Western alliance's military secrets to the Soviet bloc for more than a decade.... Federal investigators have now turned their attention to another man.

ABC's John Martin reports that investigators say former American Army sergeant Rodrick [phonetic] Ramsay helped Clyde Lee Conrad steal thousand of pages of top-secret documents for Warsaw Pact intelligence services. In 1983, while stationed as an operations clerk with the Eighth U.S. Infantry Division, he had access to a top-secret vault. Sources familiar with the spy ring say Ramsay was being groomed by Conrad to lead the spy operation, but before he could take over Ramsay was relieved of duty for a minor drug violation and left the Army. A source familiar with his actions said Ramsay later helped Conrad smuggle high-tech computer parts from the U.S. through Canada to the Eastern Bloc. A member of the network said Ramsay represents the third generation of Americans serving in Germany who spied for the ring, going back to the middle of the Cold War. For nearly 20 years, the ring provided top-secret NATO war plans to Hungarian and Czech intelligence agents. The documents pinpointed nuclear weapons, unit assignments, even operational plans. The information was passed on to East German and Soviet intelligence agencies. The motive, says one participant, was strictly money. Ramsay has been talking to the FBI for some time believing, apparently, that he will not be prosecuted. But the Justice Department is using him, learning as much as it can about one of the biggest spy operations in the Cold War before it takes him into custody. (ABC-Lead)

IRAN

ABC's Bill Redeker reports from Tehran that for the first time, Iranian President Rafsanjani made one specific demand for his continued help in resolving the hostage standoff: The U.S., he said, must pressure Israel to free hundreds of Lebanese and Palestinian prisoners from Israeli jails.

(Rafsanjani: "And let me tell you that if they are released, the release of western hostages in Lebanon shall continue. Five hundred Moslem hostages are to be exchanged for five or six Western hostages.")

It was the Iranian president's clearest statement yet of what Washington must do to win freedom for more hostages. Resolving the hostage stalemate is important for Rafsanjani because it could help him repair this nation's faltering economy by convincing Western government that Iran has matured, has become a stable place for foreign loans and investments. Iranians are growing weary of their isolation and are eager for news from the outside world.

There are signs that Iran's revolutionary fervor is fading. State-run television cancelled a live broadcast of the one-year anniversary of the death of Ayatollah Khomeini. Millions had been expected -- only about 150,000 showed up. And some women are ignoring the threat of strict new penalties for violating the Islamic dress code.

VICE PRESIDENT/ATTACK

Jennings reports that Vice President Quayle was startled but not hurt when somebody threw a bundle of papers at him as he walked to his car on Capitol Hill. The thrower, said to be a man from the Virgin Islands, was arrested. It was not clear what the papers were or why they were thrown. (ABC-8, CBS-5)

Brokaw reports that the suspect was angry because he didn't win Ed McMahon's American Family Publisher Sweepstakes. (NBC-2)

MASS TRANSPORTATION

ABC's Ned Potter reports that European governments have started something almost unseen in America: comprehensive, big-budget plans to give people appealing alternatives to their cars. Outside Essen, West Germany, a diesel bus picks up passengers, then closer to downtown it transforms itself into an electric trolley on rails. It solves three problems: it can go anywhere in the suburbs, it outsmarts downtown traffic, and cuts urban smog. In Frankfurt, a computer monitors bus routes and turns lights green for the buses. They stop less, pollute less and arrive sooner. In Berlin, engineers demonstrate a train with no wheels and no engine; it floats on magnets which also pull it along. Such a train, called Maglev, was a U.S. invention but Germany spent $1 billion to build it. It protects the environment because there's no pollution. It does not take cutting-edge technology to make mass transit work. Other governments have sought other alternatives to gridlock. Holland has developed a plan to make bicycling more appealing than driving. Bike lanes are built directly into major streets; shopping centers have parking lots -- but not for autos. In the old city of Delft, the Netherlands, cars can get downtown but detours prevent them from driving across downtown. The plan works: the plan increased bicycling 11 percent. Nationally, bikes now account for one-third of all trips the Dutch make. Changes like these are made more easily in Western Europe because people are more used to government planning and to the taxes that pay for all those plans. In the U.S., the average gas tax is 30 cents a gallon. In Europe, more than $1.80. High as those prices are, European governments say those prices will have to rise much more to steer people away from the habits that endanger the planet. The message for us Americans then, is not that the car can or should be eliminated, but that with good enough planning, better, cleaner, healthier alternatives can speed people on their way. (ABC-12)

AIDS/DISABLED

Jennings reports that a bill intended to protect disabled people from discrimination will apparently not protect people with AIDS in some circumstances. The Senate has voted to allow employers to bar people with AIDS from jobs that require them to handle food. Sen. Helms argued that people still believe AIDS can be transmitted through food handling. All the evidence says this is not true. Sen. Harkin said AIDS sufferers will be the victims of ignorance, prejudice and mythology. (ABC-5)

RIGHT TO DIE

ABC's Chris Bury reports on the controversy surrounding Dr. Jack Kevorkian, a euthanasia advocate who helped an Oregon woman commit suicide Tuesday. Kevorkian said the court injunction against using the machine would not stop him from using it in other places.

(Kevorkian: "I understand the injunction is only for Oakland County. I have patients in other counties who have contacted me. I can make another machine very fast.")

Dr. Murray Levin has known Kevorkian for 30 years.

(Levin, Oakland County Michigan Medical Society: "Jack has been a loner, he's had unique ideas, he does things uniquely -- out of bounds with the rest of medicine.")

Kevorkian has been pushing his ideas on TV talk shows, but he has not been published in a serious medical journal since 1961.

(Kevorkian: "I've been stonewalled up and down the line in this country by a very strictly-controlled medical press.")

(ABC-4, NBC-3)

PESTICIDE EXPORTS

Bradley reports the Senate Agriculture Committee attached a provision to the 1990 Farm Bill Wednesday to stop U.S. companies from exporting pesticides that are banned in this country. Among other things, supporters said that food grown with those pesticides abroad frequently winds up being sold here.

(CBS-11)

EDUCATION

CBS's Edie Magnus reports from Boston on decreasing funds for education. Severe state budget cutbacks and declining high school enrollments are forcing some tough choices in many of America's public schools. In Boston, the threat of teacher layoffs threatens racial harmony. A new court order requires the city to spare recently hired minority teachers, which means almost all of those who could lose their jobs are white.

(CBS-2)

POPULAR OPPOSITION

ABC's Linda Pattillo reports from Granville, North Carolina, that residents opposed to a hazardous waste incinerator in their community have resorted to a new method of protest. A local attorney bought 48 acres of land smack in the middle of the proposed site and started selling five by six foot parcels for $5. The idea is to bog down the bureaucracy. By law, the state must notify each owner before it can condemn the property. So far there are 6,000 names on the deed, some who live in rural areas very far away.

(ABC-14, CBS-12)

BARRY TRIAL

CBS's Rita Braver reports that ever since his indictment, Marion Barry has loudly proclaimed himself a victim of government harassment.

(Mayor Barry: "My family have had to go through my mail being opened, my bank accounts checked, my tax return looked at, my phones tapped.")

-more-

Braver continues: This week in a campaign publication, Barry's campaign manager compared the FBI sting operation against him to tactics used when Jews were being taken away to Hitler's ovens and when blacks were being lynched in the South. Wednesday, Rev. Jesse Jackson criticized the government, too.

(Jackson: "When you consider the process used in the sting operation -- using sex and poisonous drugs that were life threatening, the role of the FBI in this, some of the horror stories we know hear about the FBI's role.")

The government insists it has acted properly.

(Jay Stephens, U.S. Attorney: "Our job is to investigate and to prosecute. We seek to do that responsibly. Our job is to present the evidence in court.")

Which version is getting through? Both.

(Man in street: "I think that he should go to jail and I definitely think he should be out of office.")

(Woman in street: "I don't believe that the mayor is being fairly treated here in Washington, D.C.") (CBS-6)

SUMMIT

Bush: Gorby's Last Friend -- "...It's beginning to sound as if George Bush is repeating Franklin Roosevelt's mistake with Stalin: thinking that personal rapport is more important in foreign affairs than fundamental power politics. If so, Mr. Bush is likely to find himself in the odd position of being Gorby's only friend.... At least Mr. Bush didn't appear to back down on his insistence that Germany may be reunited as a member of NATO. But the rest of his chummy summit performance may have led Mr. Gorbachev to believe that the administration eventually could be pushed off its position."
(Detroit News, 6/6)

Down From The Summit -- "When the Bush-Gorbachev summit opened, German reunification was Topic A. Now that the summit is over, it remains a touchstone of world diplomacy.... What Washington cannot accept is a precipitate dismantling of NATO that would eviscerate the U.S. role in Europe or lead to a neutralized Germany no longer anchored in Western values and interests.... Actually, it would serve Soviet desires to 'contain' Germany. If Mr. Gorbachev cannot afford politically to accept that solution at present, multilateral diplomacy (not bilateral summitry) will have to find him a way out."
(Baltimore Sun, 6/6)

After The Summit: Still A Time For Caution -- "...The thaw in U.S.-Soviet relations doesn't signal the advent of 'peace in our time.'... The world, in short, remains a dangerous place -- even in the wake of a genial summit. And before Congress begins to chase an elusive 'peace dividend' by slashing the military budget, its members -- and administration officials -- would be wise to keep in mind the ancient Roman proverb: 'If you want peace, prepare for war'. Harsh though it may sound, this maxim remains acutely relevant in the existing international climate."
(New York Post, 6/6)

Trading With The Soviet Union -- "An assumption is afoot in Congress that a natural connection exists between enhanced U.S.-Soviet trade and President Gorbachev's treatment of Lithuania. That assumption is faulty.... It seems quite clear that the U.S. can do more to influence the course of events in the Soviet Union by employing the carrot than administering the stick. Congress can approve the new U.S.-Soviet trading relationship without giving the slightest legitimacy to Gorbachev's atrocious mishandling of Lithuania. It should do so."
(Minneapolis Star-Tribune, 6/6)

The Summit That Saved Gorbachev -- "If it had been a beer commercial, you might have called it the 'Tastes Great, Less Filling Summit.' Lots of fizz, but not much for calories, content or kick. Basically it was four days of the Non-Stop Gorby Charm Machine. What we saw was Mikhail Gorbachev campaigning like hell on U.S. soil to save his job. And George Bush as campaign manager, deftly stepping aside to let pal Gorbachev hog the TV glare."
(Sandy Grady, Baltimore Evening Sun, 6/6)

The Last Of The Red-Hot Summits -- "What made this past weekend's summit so special is the widespread realization that formal gatherings of U.S. and Soviet leaders are coming to be less special and, in fact, needn't be special.... The one double-barreled disappointment of the Washington summit was (1) Mr. Gorbachev's refusal to budge on the question of greater autonomy if not outright independence for the Baltic republics and (2) Mr. Bush's curious change of heart over dangling MFN trading status as a lure to encourage more enlightened Soviet policies.... Still, in delinking the Baltics and MFN, Mr. Bush yielded up too easily the best prize we had to influence Moscow's attitude on the special status of Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia."

(Atlanta Constitution, 6/5)

Unresolved Issues Obscured True Importance Of Summit -- "...This was the most important Soviet-American summit since the end of World War II, simply because it was the first such meeting held out from under a cloud of threats and fear.... The U.S. ought not try to foist a NATO that includes a united Germany upon the Soviet Union until time and German behavior wipe out fear of a Fourth Reich just as time has eroded the American and Soviet fears of each other. Let the political and economic unification of the Germans go forward. Let the issue of a united Germany entering NATO fall into abeyance while the Soviets remove their troops from East Germany slowly, hoping that time will prove that theirs is no longer an aggressive conquer-our-neighbors psyche common to the German people."

(Carl Rowan, Chicago Sun-Times, 6/6)

Gorby Deserves Wariness, Not Cult Hero Standing -- "...[The U.S.'s] collective swoon for Mikhail Gorbachev is as unseemly as the behavior of those in the '30s who would ally the U.S. with Hitler's 'nationalism.'... Mr. Gorbachev's domestic agenda is to save the power of the Communist Party. His foreign agenda seems to be to divide Washington. What with Mr. Bush waffling on Lithuania, congressional Democrats now have an issue with which to appear strong. They can hold the trade bill hostage to Soviet concessions, embarrassing the President.... Those who would praise this physician to a dying empire should remember his true leanings. This proponent of peace invited Jane Fonda to lunch. She probably agreed to pose in a Soviet tank in Lithuania."

(Dick Williams, Atlanta Journal and Constitution, 6/5)

The New Enemies -- "Beneath the hoopla, the Summiteers were merely sweeping up the Cold War.... Events have so outpaced politicians that such questions as German reunion and arms control now seem almost quaint. The twin specters of overpopulation and a polluted planet are the new enemy -- one the weary superpowers so far refuse to face."

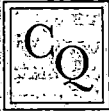

(Jim Gain, Baltimore Evening Sun, 6/4)

The Historical Key For The Superpowers -- "...Whether Bush and Gorbachev have really learned [their] lessons...will be proved in the efforts that the two administrations devote to persuading their peoples to take seriously the challenge to both the Soviet and the American position in world affairs by the rising commercial powers."

Today in Congress

Floor Action: The Senate will vote again on whether to limit debate on a broad anticrime bill (S 1970).

If cloture fails, senators may continue debate on a bill (S 341) that would prohibit discrimination against blind people by airlines.

The House is scheduled to vote on whether to override President Bush's May 24 veto of legislation (HR 2364) authorizing $2 billion over three years for Amtrak, the national passenger railroad. Bush objected to a provision that would require the Interstate Commerce Commission to review proposed acquisitions of major railroads by non-railroad companies. He said the requirement would provide an unnecessary "regulatory burden" on those transactions.

Cable TV Regulation: In response to numerous complaints about the cable television industry's expansive control of the market, the Senate Commerce Committee is expected to approve a bill to rein in activities of big cable operators and to re-regulate cable subscriber rates.

The measure before the committee — a scaled-back version of S 1880 as introduced — was crafted by Chairman Ernest F. Hollings, D-S.C., ranking Republican John C. Danforth, Mo., and Communications Subcommittee Chairman Daniel K. Inouye, D-Hawaii.

The legislation would give the Federal Communications Commission more control over cable subscriber rates, which have risen sharply in recent years. The measure also seeks to limit ownership of programming services by large cable operators. And the bill would require cable companies to provide programming to competitors, such as wireless cable services.

Conrad Burns, R-Mont., will offer an amendment that would allow telephone companies to provide cable service within their franchise territories, a proposal that is expected to spark some heated debate.

OIRA Markup: The Senate Governmental Affairs panel will try once again to mark up legislation (S 1742) to reauthorize the Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs (OIRA), a division of the Office of Management and Budget that reviews draft rules issued by federal agencies.

Panel Democrats want to rein in OIRA, which they say subjects agency regulations to political litmus tests, but they differ over how much the agency needs to be curbed.

During the committee's two previous attempts to act on the bill, sponsor Jeff Bingaman, D-N.M., pushed for tough restrictions on the agency, while Sam Nunn, D-Ga., held out for lighter restraints. Nunn fears that excessive regulation will burden small businesses with more paperwork. The two have reportedly worked out a compromise that is expected to gain the panel's support today.

Additional Frequencies: Legislation that would require the government to make available more frequencies on the electromagnetic spectrum for commercial use will be marked up by the House Energy and Commerce Subcommittee on Telecommunications today.

The bill (HR 2965) is aimed at easing the potential impact on commercial use of the spectrum that the broadcast of high-definition television (HDTV) signals would have. HDTV signals would use more of the spectrum than existing television broadcasting, and if more of the spectrum is needed for the new technology, the government would have to displace current users, such as cellular telephone users.

The federal government has exclusive control over 12.9 percent of the most readily usable spectrum.

The bill would require that 200 megahertz of the federal government's

HOUSE FLOOR: Debate begins on bill to ease exports to East bloc.

The House opened debate on a bill (HR 4653) yesterday that would ease restrictions on high-tech U.S. exports to Eastern Europe, adopting several amendments to link some overseas U.S. trade concessions to human rights improvements in the Baltic republics and China.

The measure would renew a 1979 law aimed at restricting the export of goods with potential military uses to the East bloc. But, in response to the fall of the region's communist regimes, the bill would allow sales of some non-military high-tech goods to those nations. It would tighten restrictions on those off-limits items remaining on the Commerce Department's "control list."

Members adopted, 390-24, an amendment by Richard J. Durbin, D-Ill., to bar the administration from easing the export restrictions for the Soviet Union until that government lifts economic sanctions against Lithuania and enters into negotiations for the Baltic republic's independence.

Two amendments by Gerald B.H. Solomon, R-N.Y., to restrict U.S. exports to China, including a new prohibition on the sale of U.S. satellites, also won approval (352-62 and 393-15).

Under an amendment by Les AuCoin, D-Ore., adopted 409-0, Eastern European countries receiving U.S. aid — Poland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia — would benefit from the eased export flow if they met certain safeguards for the products' use and against transferring the technologies to other nations.

SENATE FLOOR: Debate begins on blind anti-discrimination bill.

The Senate yesterday began working on a bill (S 341) that would prohibit airlines from discriminating against blind

Primary Season In High Gear: Nine States Vote

Sens. Max Baucus, Bill Bradley, Thad Cochran and Howell Heflin moved closer to re-election Tuesday, while Rep. Ronnie G. Flippo's bid for governor of Alabama was squelched and GOP Sen. Jesse Helms of North Carolina found out he will be facing a Democratic opponent trying to make history in November.

Those outcomes were among the highlights of primary election balloting in nine states Tuesday.

Here's a look at key races around the country Tuesday:

Alabama: Flippo, in his seventh term in the House, came up far short in his bid for governor, finishing fourth in a six-man Democratic primary field.

Teachers' association head Paul Hubbert (who won 32 percent of the primary votes) and state Atty. Gen. Don Siegelman (25 percent) will face off in a June 26 runoff. The winner will attempt to unseat GOP Gov. Guy Hunt.

Flippo won just 17 percent of the votes.

In the 5th District, which Flippo left to seek the governorship, Democrats Bud Cramer and Lynn Greer will be in the June 26 runoff. The winner will face GOP nominee Albert McDonald. Cramer won 44 percent, while Greer captured 19 percent of the votes in the seven-way primary.

In the Senate race, Democrat Howell Heflin easily won renomination for a third term, with a 81 percent to 19 percent victory over his primary challenger, Mrs. Frank Ross Stewart. Heflin will face Republican state Sen. Bill Cabaniss, who also gained an easy primary victory.

Reps. Sonny Callahan, R, Tom Beville, D, and Ben Erdreich, D, have no opposition in November.

California: Republican Sen. Pete Wilson had no problem winning his party's nomination for governor, amassing 88 percent of the votes in the four-way primary.

Wilson will face former San Francisco Mayor Dianne Feinstein, the Democratic primary winner, in November. He would have to give up his Senate seat only if he wins.

Elsewhere in California, Democrats in the 14th District nominated Patricia Malberg to face GOP candidate John T. Doolittle in the general election. The winner will fill the seat being vacated by Norman D. Shumway, R, who is retiring. In the open 29th District, being vacated by retiring Augustus F. Hawkins, D, Democrat Maxine Waters grabbed 89 percent of the vote against three other candidates and will be a big favorite in November against Republican Bill DeWitt.

Democratic Rep. George E. Brown Jr. may have a tough fight in the 36th District against Republican Bob Hammock, who easily won his party's nomination on Tuesday.

Incumbents Richard H. Lehman, D-18th District; Ron Packard, R-43; and Duncan Hunter, R-45, have no major-party opposition in November.

Iowa: With a November Senate matchup between Sen. Tom Harkin, D, and Rep. Tom Tauke, R, already set, the most interesting congressional races were the Democratic and Republican battles to find a candidate to replace Tauke in the 2nd District. Democrat Eric Tabor edged Steve Sovern, 56 percent to 44 percent, in a race that featured Tabor's abortion-rights position and Sovern's opposition to abortion. Tabor will be favored in November against GOP nominee Jim Nussle, who narrowly won a three-way race with just 39 percent of the vote.

Mississippi: GOP Sen. Thad Cochran had no party opposition on Tuesday and found out this week that he will have a free ride in November as well: Robert McNeely Sr., the only Democratic candidate, dropped out of the race and will not appear on the ballot. McNeely stood no realistic chance of victory, and the Democratic Party had distanced itself from his candidacy.

Cochran is one of at least three senators who have no major-party opposition. Democrats David Pryor of Arkansas and Sam Nunn of Georgia also have no opposition.

There were no congressional primary races: All five incumbents had no intraparty opposition, and G. V. "Sonny" Montgomery, D, has no major party opposition in November.

Montana: Sen. Max Baucus, mindful of the 1988 general election upset of his former colleague, John Melcher, breezed to an easy 83 percent primary victory in a three-way Democratic race for the Senate nomination.

Baucus has a big campaign money cache for his November battle against the GOP nominee, Lt. Gov. Allen Kolstad, who won a close, 44 percent to 35 percent primary victory over Bruce Vorhauer and two other Republicans, who shared the remaining 21 percent.

Neither of the two House incumbents — Democrat Pat Williams and Republican Ron Marlenee — faced a primary challenge and both are expected to win easily in November.

New Jersey: In the 12th District, left open by the retirement of GOP Rep. Jim Courter, state Sen. Richard Zimmer pulled a surprise victory in the Republican primary. Zimmer captured 38 percent of the votes to best former football player Phil McConkey (31 percent) and state Rep. Rodney Frelinghuysen (29 percent).

Zimmer will face the Democratic primary winner, Marguerite Chandler, in this predominantly GOP district.

In other House races, Democrat Robert Andrews easily won a four-way primary in the open 1st District. He will face Republican Daniel J. Mangini, who had no primary opposition. The winner will fill the seat vacated when James J. Florio, D, quit in January to become governor.

Rep. Robert A. Roe, D, won a big primary victory in the 8th District and has no GOP foe in November. Also unopposed for re-election is Democrat William J. Hughes.

Elsewhere, Sen. Bill Bradley, who also has a large campaign war chest, gained an easy, 93 percent to 7 percent Democratic primary victory in his bid for a third term. Bradley will face Republican Christine Whitman in November.

New Mexico: First District GOP Rep. Steven H. Schiff will seek re-election in November against Democratic Secretary of State Rebecca Vigil-Giron, who apparently won the nomination with a razor-thin victory over state Treasurer James Lewis. Complete, but unofficial returns, show Vigil-Giron with a margin of less than 250 votes over Lewis.

The two Senate candidates — incumbent Pete V. Domenici, R, and Democratic challenger Tom R. Benavides — had no primary opposition.

Rep. Joe Skeen, R-3rd, has no major party opposition.

North Carolina: Former Charlotte Mayor Harvey B. Gantt captured 57 percent of the votes in the Democratic runoff race in his bid to become the first black Democrat elected to the Senate. Gantt defeated Mike Easley and will now face Sen. Jesse Helms, R, in November.

Gantt, who failed to win the nomination outright on May 8 when he fell just short of the required 40 percent of the primary ballots, was not expected to do so well. Black candidates in North Carolina have traditionally lost in runoff elections against white candidates.

The rest of the November lineup for congressional races was settled in the May 8 primary.

South Dakota: Voters in South Dakota had to focus on local races Tuesday — there were no primaries for either the Senate nomination or the race for the at-large House seat.

The November lineup is already set: Incumbent GOP Sen. Larry Pressler will face Democrat Ted Muenster and Rep. Tim Johnson, D, will battle Republican Don Frankenfeld.

NEWS from p. 1

The bill would require airlines to accept any blind person desiring to fly, and would also require the airlines to allow blind passengers to sit on exit row seats on commercial airlines.

An amendment by Christopher S. Bond, R-Mo., to require commercial aircraft to have child safety systems was approved by voice vote.

However, debate on the bill was bogged down by an attempt by John McCain, R-Ariz., to attach an amendment to allow the president line-item veto of budgetary measures passed by Congress. McCain's amendment fell on a 43-50 procedural vote.

At press time, the Senate was debating an amendment by Nancy Landon Kassebaum, R-Kan., that would absolve general aviation manufacturers from liability in lawsuits arising from crashes of airplanes more than 20 years old.

• Earlier, the Senate decided to go to conference with the House on S 933, the Americans with Disabilities Act. The Senate backed a motion by Jesse Helms, R-N.C., to instruct the Senate conferees to accept a House amendment that would allow employers to reassign food service workers with infectious diseases.

PESTICIDE EXPORT ban approved by Senate farm panel.

A divided Senate Agriculture Committee yesterday approved an amendment that would restrict the export of pesticides that are considered too dangerous for use in the United States.

The amendment, which split the committee along partisan lines, was included in the 1990 farm bill, despite Republican objections that it would cost the U.S. chemical industry jobs. It was approved by voice vote.

Chairman Patrick J. Leahy, D-Vt., said foreign producers now use the banned pesticides on food that is eventually shipped to the United States. "These chemicals often end up on America's dinner tables," he said.

Missouri Republican Christopher S. Bond argued that the United States would be imposing its food safety standards on other countries, where health risks from pesticides may seem slight compared with the need to feed people.

CPSC AUTHORIZATION wins House subcommittee's backing.

A bill requiring the federal government to take more aggressive action to rid the marketplace of dangerous products won the approval yesterday of the House Energy Subcommittee on Consumer Protection.

The regulatory changes were included in legislation (HR 4952) authorizing $42 million in fiscal 1991 for the Consumer Product Safety Commission (CPSC). The measure was approved on a vote of 3-2, but only after several Republican attempts to gut the bill.

William E. Dannemeyer, R-Calif., and Howard C. Nielson, R-Utah, said the legislation meddled in regulatory decisions that should be left up to the CPSC. An amendment by Dannemeyer to strip provisions calling for action on specific products, such as reclining chairs, amusement parks, and children's toys, was defeated, 2-3. Instead, the subcommittee adopted amendments calling for action on two additional products: three wheel all-terrain vehicles and garage doors. The amendments essentially would codify voluntary agreements between the consumer agency and manufacturers.

BUDGET TALKS resume; work set to begin on spending bills.

Congressional and White House negotiators yesterday held their fifth closed-door meeting on the fiscal 1991 budget, a gathering that featured a visit from Defense Secretary Dick Cheney.

The two sides are trying to find consensus on a budget that will go a long way toward reducing the deficit to the $64 billion fiscal 1991 ceiling mandated by the Gramm-Rudman budget reduction law. Reaching the ceiling may require cuts of such size that the economy would be jolted, but many negotiators believe that they should strive to agree on cuts of about $45 billion to $60 billion.

Because of the diminishing threat from the Soviet Union and the political changes in Eastern Europe, the Defense Department is expected to undergo the deepest budget cuts.

• Meanwhile, at the behest of Republicans who argued that the summit negotiators should be given more time to produce an agreement, House Democratic leaders agreed to postpone, for about two weeks, floor action on a resolution that would ease the consideration of fiscal 1991 appropriations bills.

The unnumbered resolution, which would eliminate some potential parliamentary problems for floor action on spending bills, was due on the floor today. But the House Appropriations Committee will begin work anyway on two of the 13 regular spending bills. That will come after the 13 subcommittee chairmen meet today to allocate money among the subcommittees.

EARTHQUAKE HAZARD bill approved by House Science panel.

The House Science Subcommittee on Science, Research and Technology yesterday approved by voice vote legislation (HR 3533) that would authorize a big increase for the federal government's effort to reduce earthquake hazards.

The bill, which gained the House Interior Committee's approval on April 4, would authorize $110 million in fiscal 1991, $136 million in 1992, $170.5 million in 1993 and $210.8 million in 1994. Currently, federal funding for earthquake response is about $73 million.

FHA FINANCIAL condition in trouble, Kemp tells panel.

Housing and Urban Development Secretary Jack F. Kemp yesterday told Congress that an independent study of the Federal Housing Administration (FHA) has determined that the agency is financially troubled.

"It is not now actuarially sound. The good news is that we can take steps to make FHA sound," Kemp said at a hearing of the Senate Banking Subcommittee on Housing and Urban Affairs.

The study conducted by the accounting firm of Price-Waterhouse determined that the FHA's Mutual Mortgage Insurance Fund (MMI) has a net worth of $2.6 billion, a big drop from the 1979 high of $8 billion.

Kemp said the accounting firm had recommended that the MMI's capital be increased immediately to a minimum of $3.4 billion, or 1.25 percent of its total insurance exposure of $271 billion.

Kemp said the financial security of the FHA, which enables low- and moderate-income families to buy homes by insuring low-interest those loans, has been threatened by "past mismanagement and neglect."

Kemp outlined an administration plan to improve the FHA's financial standing that includes an increase in insurance premiums on high-risk loans, requiring buyers to pay two-thirds of closing costs and maintaining current mortgage limits to prevent high-income families from using the FHA to finance homes.

BANK REGULATORS tell panel they are not causing credit crunch.

Federal monetary regulators denied at a House hearing yesterday that their agencies are fostering a "credit crunch" in the Northeast or nationwide by excessively scrutinizing bank lending practices.

But lawmakers and Massachusetts banking officials warned that zealous bank examiners may be threatening the region's economy by making it hard for creditworthy businesses to secure loans.

Del. Walter E. Fauntroy, D-D.C., described to the House Small Business Committee a new "credit squeeze" being felt by businesses in Washington, D.C.

While several factors may be responsible for this, he said, that recent examinations of bank loan portfolios by the comptroller of the currency have had a "depressing effect" on some Washington firms.

Comptroller of the Currency Robert

L. Clarke denied that his agency is responsible for the credit squeeze. "We do not tell bankers, 'do not make loans,'" he said, but the office does encourage them to lend cautiously.

NO OBSCENE NEA-backed art works found in GAO survey.

A General Accounting Office (GAO) study requested by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., to determine whether the National Endowment for the Arts (NEA) has broken the law by funding obscene projects has not turned up any violations, a GAO official told the House Education and Labor Subcommittee on Postsecondary Education yesterday.

Last year, in the fiscal 1990 interior appropriations bill, Congress prohibited the NEA from using funds to promote, disseminate or produce materials that the endowment considered obscene and without artistic value.

Henry R. Wray, senior associate general counsel at the GAO, said a legal analysis of the controls the NEA has put in place to carry out the law "are appropriate." Any grant application believed by a review panel to be a potential problem is sent to the Endowment's chairman.

• At a separate hearing yesterday before the Senate Appropriations Interior Subcommittee, NEA chairman John E. Frohnmayer asked for a one-year reauthorization of $175 million in fiscal 1991, $3.74 million above the fiscal 1990 appropriation. Frohnmayer and the White House are now asking for just a one-year reauthorization of the endowment while awaiting for an advisory commission to make recommendations on the future of the NEA.

AIR FORCE says it needs at least 75 B-2 bombers.

Air Force Secretary Donald Rice said yesterday that the radar-evading B-2 stealth bomber would be useless if Congress approved fewer than 75 of the planes.

But Rice told the Senate Armed Services Subcommittee on Strategic Forces and Nuclear Deterrence that the reduced threat from the Soviet Union made some reduction of the B-2 bomber program possible. Originally, 132 of the planes were planned for production.

The Air Force's chief of staff, Gen. Larry Welch, told the panel the Air Force had decided to seek only 75 B-2 bombers because nuclear targets in Eastern Europe had been eliminated by the collapse of the Warsaw Pact military alliance.

UNSPENT BILLIONS available with no oversight, Hill panels told.

About $100 billion in unspent federal funds has piled up in the Treasury and agencies have the right to spend it without the approval of Congress, according to congressional investigators' testimony yesterday at a joint House hearing.

In one case, the Air Force spent $1 billion in lapsed funding to fix flaws of the B-1 bomber, even though Congress had refused to authorize the spending.

The funds — called Merged Surplus and "M" Accounts — can be tapped because of a 1956 law that allows agencies to pay valid bills after appropriations have expired. But the definition of which spending is valid is open to interpretation and abuse, said Bruce Chafin, an Energy and Commerce staffer who has spent three months investigating the accounts.

Energy Committee Chairman John D. Dingell, D-Mich., who chaired the joint hearing of his Oversight panel and the Government Operations Committee's Legislative Subcommittee, said he will introduce legislation next week to return the balances of these accounts and prevent agencies from forming such accounts in the future.

ARMY DEFENDS its night-vision goggles in House hearing.

The Army told members of a House Armed Services subcommittee yesterday that controversial night-vision goggles are safe and necessary for night fighting.

"Operations in Panama reinforced what we already knew. The air assaults conducted at night under night-vision goggles minimized casualties and aircraft damage and maximized combat power," said Col. Douglas Terrell, commander of the aviation brigade at Fort Ord, Calif.

And Maj. Gen. William H. Forster, who works in the office of the Army's deputy chief of staff, told the Investigations Subcommittee that the goggles, which enhance vision when there is little light, give U.S. troops a big advantage in combat.

Members acknowledged that the goggles may have helped in the Panama invasion, but some skeptics said they still had concerns about their use in training exercises.

During hearings last year, the Investigation Subcommittee told the Army to review its use of the goggles during training exercises after numerous reports of crashes and deaths in flights that used night goggles. ■ portion of the spectrum be turned over for commercial use. Bill sponsor and Energy and Commerce Committee Chairman John D. Dingell, D-Mich., says that the measure would prod the government into using its portion of the spectrum more efficiently.

Asbestos Removal: The Senate Environment Subcommittee on Toxic Substances will mark up legislation (S 1893) to increase federal aid to schools that must remove hazardous asbestos.

A 1984 asbestos-in-schools law authorized the Environmental Protection Agency to provide financial assistance to schools for removing asbestos that threatens children's health. Substantial amounts of asbestos were used in schools built from 1946 to 1972. In a number of these schools, materials containing asbestos have been damaged, dislodging asbestos fibers into the air, where they pose a threat to school children and school employees.

The bill would extend aid to schools through fiscal 1995 and increase the annual authorization from $125 million to $250 million. Bill supporters say the additional funds will be needed because, under a 1986 law, all school districts were required to inspect their schools for asbestos and to implement removal plans. As a result, over the next few years more schools will need federal funds.

Contracting Out: The House Post Office and Civil Service Subcommittee on Human Resources will mark up legislation (HR 4049) to revise the contracting-out process, in which federal agencies hire private companies to perform government work.

The bill would require agencies wishing to contract out their work weigh the costs and benefits of hiring outside labor against those of relying on in-house employees. The Office of Management and Budget would have to set up uniform accounting procedures for these cost comparisons.

HR 4049 would call for an economic impact statement in cases where contracting out affected more than 25 federal employees. And any workers who lost their jobs due to contracting out would receive early retirement benefits.

Bill supporters say the measure would enhance the efficiency of contracting out and guarantee federal employees a fair shot at winning work assignments.

According to a panel aide, the bill should win approval easily today. But before it can advance to the House floor, the Government Operations Committee, which also has jurisdiction, must sign off on the measure. ■

Not As Scheduled

The House Banking Committee's markup of legislation (HR 1180) to reauthorize federal housing programs was postponed yesterday. A committee aide said that a caucus of Democratic members on the panel lasted longer than expected and caused the postponement. The committee is planning to begin the markup at 9:30 this morning.

Background: The bill is designed to curb rapidly growing apparel and footwear imports, which is causing domestic plant closings and job losses. Textile imports alone grew by more than 12 percent in 1989 and are showing a 10 percent increase so far in 1990. The bill would set quotas at 1989 import levels, plus one percent. For textiles the quotas would rise 1 percent annually in subsequent years. For non-rubber footwear the quotas would remain frozen at the 1989 level. The measure enjoys wide support — more than half the members of the Senate are cosponsors.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRESIDENT

FROM: BRENT SCOWCROFT B

SUBJECT: Preparations for Houston Economic Summit

The "Sherpa" team held its third preparatory meeting for the Houston Summit on May 17-19 in Paris. Discussions focused on five issues: the Houston theme, the environment, trade, Eastern Europe and developing countries.

1. Houston Theme

- ✓ All G-7 countries agree that Houston should stress democracy and free markets and that the communique should have strong language supporting this. Along those lines, NSC staff are working on a
- ✓ proposed Charter for Democracy and Growth, which would set forth general principles to promote market-based growth internationally.

2. Environment

- ✓ The environment, which Kohl, Thatcher, Mitterrand and Mulroney all wish to highlight at Houston, risks being divisive unless we
- ✓ can bridge serious differences, particularly on steps to deal with global climate change (CO2 and ozone) and assistance to
- ✓ developing countries. The other Sherpa teams sharply criticized the approach outlined in our thematic paper as inadequate and unresponsive to growing political pressure in their countries for strong action on the environment. The Europeans and Canada want
- ✓ a commitment for a framework climate change convention by 1992, along with a CO2 protocol. They also support an environmental
- ✓ fund in the World Bank, as well as an action plan to deal with tropical deforestation. As next month's London conference on amending the Montreal Protocol to the Vienna Convention
- ✓ approaches, we will be under increasing pressure to reverse our decision not to contribute financially to a fund to transfer CFC-reducing technology to developing countries. The British and German Sherpas indicated that Thatcher and Kohl will be writing you to stress the importance of a strong environmental statement at Houston.

3. Trade

✓ We stressed that the Uruguay Round will be a key issue at Houston and that success of the round depends on agriculture. The Europeans (except the British) would be content with bland, hortatory language which does not commit their governments to an ambitious outcome. Canada shares our view that Summit leaders must give clear instructions to the negotiators and provide the political muscle to ensure that they are carried out expeditiously and completely. Agriculture, industrial subsidies and integrating the developing countries into the GATT are the key issues. You will be pressed to give up our unilateral measures (Section 301 and certain provisions of the 1988 Trade Act) in return for improved multilateral dispute settlement procedures.

4. Eastern Europe

✓ All countries agree that the G-7 should continue to work closely with Eastern Europe to ensure that democracy and market forces take root. The Europeans were preoccupied at this meeting with the economic situation in the Soviet Union and took almost every opportunity to turn the discussion back to that question. They want the Houston Summit to send an economic message to Gorbachev, but are uncertain yet about the content. Some believe Gorbachev will send you a message and others suggested that, as host, the U.S. should offer to brief Gorbachev on the outcome. Our delegation demurred on the latter point, but indicated that we would expect to reply to any message from Gorbachev as Mitterrand did at Paris. The Japanese remain skeptical of Soviet intentions in East Asia and consequently remain wary about doing anything that appears to "help" Gorbachev.

5. Developing Countries

✓ The G-7 will be under pressure to reassure the non-Eastern Europe developing countries that we have not forgotten them. In general, aid to Eastern Europe has not come at the expense of developing countries, but that fact is not understood. All the Sherpas agreed that Houston should send the message that similar support would be available to other developing countries, if they, too, undertake genuine political and economic reforms. On debt, there was an animated, sophisticated discussion about the eventual need for donor governments to provide some relief on outstanding official debt. The Brady plan's success in reducing the burden of commercial debt had highlighted the importance of similar action on the official side. However, any action here would have important budgetary implications. In all discussions about debt, the Europeans referred repeatedly to the situation in East Europe, particularly Poland, another indication of Western European preoccupation with events closer to home.

Patty:

I returned Bob Macauley's call. He was calling to ask the President if one of his sons would like to go on their next trip to Eritrea (part of Ethiopia) from June 15-18.

There is a total of 12 going. Bob Macauley will be going as well Senator Humphrey. Dr. Lee has been invited and Macauley thinks he will go too. Macauley is thinking of sending his son, Bob Jr. The purpose of the trip is to deliver 41,000 pounds of medicine and to meet with different heads of medicine. He said this will be a very safe trip, a highly visible trip, and a very humanitarian trip.

Bob Macauley suggested that perhaps Neil would be a good candidate -- only his suggestion -- any would be welcomed.

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

June 7, 1990

Dear Joe:

I have often said that, in America, any definition of a successful life must include serving others. A successful life means that we're engaged in the lives of others, not islands unto ourselves -- that we are measured not by the sum of our possessions but by how we help our neighbors.

That is why I am pleased to congratulate you. Your efforts in behalf of the Youth for Tomorrow home exemplify the best that is America. You have displayed a responsibility toward your community that deserves the heartfelt thanks of all your fellow citizens. You have mine.

God bless you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Joe Gibbs

Dear Ms. Dukakis:

Thank you for your letter supporting my position toward the NEA. It is clear to me that some of the works that have been funded are offensive, and I can certainly understand the criticism that has come our way.

I will continue to oppose censorship, and I am determined to preserve an artist's freedom of expression. However, I am also confident that the NEA has the support of the American people in its effort to cut down on funding for indecent works of art that offend the sensibilities of so many people.

John Frohnmayer has my full confidence as Chairman of NEA. He is a sensitive, knowledgeable man of the arts, and I would prefer that he handle issues of propriety, rather than having the Federal Government legislate to artists how they should express themselves.

Barbara and I send our best wishes.

Sincerely,

Ms. Olympia Dukakis

Dear Ms. Dantzler:

Thank you for your kind note and generous invitation to attend the Post-Corbett Awards Program in Cincinnati this coming November.

Like you, I believe we must demonstrate to our children how -- with faith and lots of hard work -- our greatest dreams can come true. It is always a pleasure to meet young Americans like Tessa Hersh, whose hopes for the future are virtually unlimited.

As I'm sure you will understand, the responsibilities of my office often prevent me from accepting kind gestures of hospitality such as yours. Nevertheless, I have asked Joe Hagin, my Director of Scheduling and a former resident of your beautiful Queen City, to be in touch with you as my schedule for the fall develops.

With appreciation and warm best wishes,

Sincerely,

Ms. Lea Dantzler

STATEMENT BY THE DEPUTY PRESS SECRETARY

We welcome the announcement of the ending of the State of Emergency in South Africa, except in Natal. This is another significant step toward creating a climate conducive to negotiations that will lead to a democratic, non-racial South Africa. This announcement builds on earlier decisions by President de Klerk to release Nelson Mandela and certain other political prisoners, to unban the ANC and other organizations, and to permit free political debate to take place in South Africa.

Much work remains to be done, by all sides. The issue of the remaining political prisoners needs to be resolved. The continuing climate of violence and intimidation must be transformed. The senseless killings in Natal Province must end.

However, we are encouraged by the remarkable progress that has been made in recent months. With this latest move, the Government has moved to meet almost all of the opposition's requirements to enter into negotiations. We look forward to the early beginning of a negotiating process.

TEXT OF A LETTER FROM THE PRESIDENT TO THE SPEAKER OF
THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES AND THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE

June 7, 1990

Dear Mr. Speaker: (Dear Mr. President:)

I am pleased to transmit my Statement of Policy for the Recommended 1990 RPA Program regarding Federal management and use of our Nation's natural resources pursuant to the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act (RPA) of 1974 (16 U.S.C. 1606). Accompanying the Statement of Policy is the RPA Assessment of the Forest and Rangeland Situation in the United States, 1989, and the Secretary of Agriculture's recommended program entitled The Forest Service Program for Forest and Rangeland Resources: A Long-term Strategic Plan.

The Secretary of Agriculture's proposed program provides important guidance for the conservation and wise use of the Nation's natural resources. The proposal recommits the Forest Service to multiple-use principles, while emphasizing the importance of seeking a proper balance among resources and the commitment to a healthy environment. It is a strategy that will help to ensure a proud legacy of diverse forests and rangelands for future generations of Americans.

Sincerely,

GEORGE BUSH

POOL REPORT # 3

CHICAGO TO DES MOINES

JUNE 7, 1990

The good news -- Bush did not stroll back. No one seemed to know what he did on the flight. (Alixé suggested that he read "arms control briefing books." Really.)

Mary Matalin stopped by. She said about 300 people forked over $5,000 -- per couple -- for pix with the President after the Edgar speech. Valdez took the shots. She also said Bush wanted to do Thompson appearance even though political folks feel he didn't need the help.

Motorcade from Des Moines airport to hotel passed by throngs of onlookers scattered along route. This is the State where Bush could only come in 3rd during the 1988 caucuses.

Note from Edgar speech. Your pool's vantage point yielded nothing more that couldn't be heard from woman protesting on AIDS. "It's a crisis to me -- why is it not a crisis to you," she yelled at one point.

Chopper from Meigs to airfield uneventful.

POOL REPORT # 2

MILWAUKEE TO CHICAGO

JUNE 7, 1990

Motorcade to the airport and flight to Chicago uneventful and newsless. Illinois Secretary of State Jim Edgar and U.S. Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner were on Air Force One. Governor Jim Thompson greeted them at the airport.

Bush and his party choppered from O'Hare to freshly scrubbed Farnsworth Elementary School, northwest side of Chicago, where handmade U.S. flags and banners adorned lockers in the hallway. Chicago Mayor Richard Daley was waiting with other local luminaries.

The school is predominately white, but racially mixed. It is set in a neighborhood of neat bungalows and two and three flat apartment houses. It's an old two-story red brick school.

Bush's first stop was in a kindergarten room, where 22 school principals were waiting. They were all recipients of Whitman Awards, sponsored by the Whitman Corporation. Bush sat at the center of a horseshoe and the comments were piped in. Daley, Thompson, Skinner, and Edgar watched from the second row. The room was colorfully decorated with the usual colorful classroom paraphernalia. The President began to speak and then reached for a pocket and said, "Oh, I have to turn on my loudspeaker." He turned on his wireless microphone. You could hear the rest.

After about 15 minutes, Bush and your pool were escorted upstairs to the school library where a group of over 40 K-4 graders sat on risers awaiting the arrival of the First Storyteller. The boys had on neckties and bowties; the girls seemed to favor puffy pink pinafores. The Storyteller walked in and pushed himself on a small stool between the two risers at the center of the room. He read from a signed copy of "The Wednesday Surprise" and the kids leaned forward as he began, clearly anxious to hear him and see the pictures in the book. The book was by Eve Bunting. The storytelling was scheduled to kick-off National "Read Aloud Day" on Friday, and the "Family Reading Challenge 1990." After he read the book, he took questions from his audience. You should have heard it all. He signed the arm cast of Dianne Kuczynski, 9, 3rd grade, who broke her arm falling off a bike: "Love! George Bush." The students gave him a pair of white Chicago Bulls-Chicago Tribune gym shorts, and they took a class photo.

Before boarding the helicopter, Bush did a ropeline at the school fence, where several hundred, fairly excited, local residents and their children waited, many with video cams.

Chopper ride to Meigs Field and motorcade to Hyatt uneventful.

Just minutes before this pool report was completed, Alixe Glen told your pool that President Bush, while meeting yesterday with Greek Prime Minister Mitsotakis, invited his guest to an official working visit at a mutually convenient time in the future.

Pool Report #1
Air Force One from
Andrews to Milwaukee
June 7, 1990

Marlin, suffering from post-summit blues did not join this odyssey, so we were honored by Ms. Glen's presence. She put out a statement in her name on South Africa, which you will have in the filing center.

Bush was accompanied by Governor Thompson, Skinner, Gates, Card, Mary Matalin and Susan Engeleiter of the Small Business Administration, who is from Wisconsin.

Mary chatted before takeoff, said Atwater is home and happy to be there, progressing in his physical therapy and still undergoing treatment.

We have asked for reaction on report from PLO that US is set to break off dialogue, but have not got any at this writing.

No one came back other than Mary and Alixe.

We are told that the President has not discussed the Springfield police business with Ron Kaufman. Nor is he said to be in any trouble, although there is no sign that this has progressed to the point where he is due the obligatory turn through the Rose Garden or Peking Duck dinner to show he is not in the doghouse.

Ms. Matalin told your pool that Kaufman must be innocent, because if he had really cooked this up, he "would never have left tracks." Ahem.
