BUSH VETOES CIVIL RIGHTS BILL

President Bush Monday vetoed the Civil Rights Act of 1990, prompting the sharpest criticism he has endured since taking office from women, unions, blacks and other minorities.

In a three-page veto message to Congress, Bush said that "despite the use of the term 'civil rights,'" the legislation "actually employs a maze of highly legalistic language to introduce the destructive force of quotas" in the workplace.

The dispute has centered largely on the defenses available in the legislation to employers sued for so-called "unintentional" discrimination. The White House has charged that the provisions in the bill were so burdensome to employers that they would create "powerful incentives" for them to "adopt hiring and promotion quotas" to avoid lawsuits, as the President said Monday in his veto message.... "The rhetoric may be gentler and kinder, but the policies of George Bush are no less dangerous and regressive than those of Ronald Reagan and Ed Meese," said Ralph Neas, executive director of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights.

Arthur Kropp of People for the American Way accused Bush of trying to "out-Reagan Reagan." John Sturdivant, president of the American Federation of Government Employees, accused Bush of "political rhetoric designed to please Jesse Helms, David Duke and their followers in the ultra-right wing of the Republican Party."

(Ann Devroy, Washington Post, A1)

Civil Rights Act Veto

President Bush Monday vetoed the Civil Rights Act of 1990, a bill intended to restore job protections eroded by a series of Supreme Court decisions last year, because he said it would in effect impose quotas on employers.

"The temptation to support a bill -- any bill -- simply because its title includes the word 'civil rights' is very strong," Bush said in a veto message. "But when our efforts, however well intentioned, result in quotas, equal opportunity is not advanced but thwarted."

The President called on Congress to pass an alternative bill the White House drafted and sent to Capitol Hill Saturday. But some key members of Congress denounced that measure as a "sham," and the press of budget business at the end of the legislative session made consideration of any new proposal unlikely.

Congress also seems unlikely to override the veto -- neither house passed the measure by the two-thirds margin needed for that -- but the issue is not likely to disappear. Activists angrily charged that the White House had bowed to the interests of conservatives and business leaders, rejecting the advice even of the Bush-appointed chairman of the Civil Rights Commission that the President sign the bill.

"For the first time since 1866, when Andrew Johnson was president, a president has vetoed a major piece of civil rights legislation," said Gov. Cuomo, sometimes mentioned as a possible 1992 Democratic challenger to Bush. "It was fair and balanced, and I regret it did not become law."

Civil Rights Bill Vetoed By Bush

Ending five months of on-again, off-again attempts at negotiations, President Bush on Monday vetoed the Civil Rights Act of 1990, almost certainly killing what civil rights leaders had called their No. 1 legislative priority.

Senate supporters of the bill plan to try to override Bush's veto Tuesday, but all sides concede that they have little chance of mustering the necessary two-thirds majority. The leading House sponsor of the bill, Rep. Hawkins, said that he is inclined not to try a doomed override vote in his chamber.

"I'm just not going to waste any more time," Hawkins said.

(David Lauter, Los Angeles Times)

SENATE IN LONG-SHOT BID TO OVERRIDE BUSH CIVIL RIGHTS VETO

Senate sponsors are launching a long-shot effort to override President Bush's veto of a major civil rights bill, which he says would encourage hiring quotas.

But the bill's House sponsor, Rep. Hawkins, acknowledged Monday that a new push for civil rights legislation likely will have to wait until next year.

"When the chips are down, the White House is against civil rights," Sen. Kennedy said following the veto. He called the action "tragic and disgraceful."...

The Senate planned an override vote Tuesday, but sponsors appeared at least two votes short of the 67 needed for a two-thirds margin.

CIVIL RIGHTS ACT VETO IS DOUBLE-EDGED SWORD IN TESTY POLITICAL CLIMATE

President Bush's veto of the Civil Rights Act of 1990 Monday is the latest chapter in a bitter, 20-year partisan conflict over racial policy that historically has hurt the Democratic Party.

However, with Bush already weakened by his wavering stands in the debate over tax policy and the federal budget, politicians and activists in both parties are unsure who will gain the political edge in the current dispute.

"If Bush does a good job labeling the bill as a quota bill, it will be okay for the Republicans," said Fred Steeper, a pollster for the RNC. "Americans want to be fair, and reverse discrimination in their minds has never been fair, even to make up for past wrongs. That does not sell.... Quotas have been a very strong issue, one that has been hurting Democrats in presidential elections."

But if Democrats and civil rights advocates can define the opposition to the measure as the work of corporations "hiding behind the quota issue" and persuade voters that the bill is needed to force big business to end job discrimination against blacks and women, then Bush loses the advantage, Steeper said.

(Thomas Edsall, Washington Post, A12)

TURNER TRIED TO SWAY BUSH AGAINST RIGHTS BILL VETO

Republican mayoral candidate Maurice Turner tried to persuade President Bush to sign a civil rights bill Monday.

The President ignored him, while some District Democrats accused him of pandering to voters.

Mr. Turner's 30-minute meeting with the President's congressional liaison highlighted one of several issues on which the mayoral candidate - a former Democrat -- and Mr. Bush disagree.

"He's clearly on a mission impossible," said D.C. Democratic State Committee Chairman Joslyn Williams. "Why go to the White House after the President has said he's made up his mind? Obviously, this was designed to get some political mileage out of the event. I think voters will see it for what it is."...

"It's good to have access, and I was able to come here because of it. But my commitment is for support of this bill. There are members of the Republican Party who are in disagreement with the President about this legislation," Mr. Turner said outside the White House.

(Vincent McCraw, Washington Times, B1)

CONFEREES GAIN GROUND IN RACE FOR BUDGET PLAN

Racing against a midnight Wednesday deadline for shutting down the government again, a House-Senate conference committee reportedly made considerable progress on a compromise budget plan Monday, despite a weekend falling-out on how the rich should be taxed.

But an agreement remained elusive as congressional aides ran into delays in completing computer analyses of the new proposals, which were designed to resolve differences over additional tax burdens for millionaires and the size of cutbacks in the Medicare program.

Even so, Republicans and Democrats apparently narrowed their differences over how much to raise gasoline taxes in a new deficit-reduction package -- with a 6-cent-a-gallon increase emerging as the most likely compromise between outside limits of 5 and 7 cents.

They reportedly were only $2 billion apart on the size of Medicare reductions and close to agreement on how to soften the impact on elderly beneficiaries, who are regarded as a potent political force.

They also decided on raising about $6 billion in extra taxes from the very wealthiest Americans, but they clashed again on just how to do it.

(William Eaton, Los Angeles Times)

BUDGET TALKS REMAIN DEADLOCKED
Negotiators Struggle Over Taxes On Rich

In a battle of political symbolism and simple mathematics, congressional bargaining over a deficit-reduction package remained deadlocked Monday over the question of how to increase taxes on the wealthiest Americans.

At issue is whether to boost taxes on the very richest directly by raising income tax rates, as the Democrats propose, or indirectly by limiting the benefits of the tax deductions they claim, as Bush Administration officials and GOP lawmakers want.

The matter is complicated by the inability of House Republican leaders to guarantee that a majority of their members will vote for whatever deal is struck. That would require strong Democratic support for any deficit-reduction package to clear Congress.

As bargainers waited hour after hour for computer analyses of various tax plans Monday, the House cleared the way for expedited consideration of another omnibus stopgap spending bill on Wednesday. (John Yang and Steven Mufson, Washington Post, A1)

Medicare and Millionaires Stymie Budget Talks

White House and congressional budget negotiators spent Monday swapping and analyzing proposals as talks became snagged on two principal issues: how to cut Medicare and how to tax millionaires.

A group of 10 top congressional and Bush Administration officials, including House and Senate leaders from both parties, Secretary Brady and Budget Director Darman, met privately Monday night in search of a resolution to the ongoing budget crisis.

But participants said no deal was forged during the late-night session, which broke up at about 11 p.m. Rep. Gephardt left the meeting saying Congress may have to seek another stopgap measure to extend the government's spending authority beyond Wednesday....

Darman said President Bush was unlikely to sign another stopgap measure, setting the stage for the possibility of the second government shutdown this month. Gephardt said the earliest an agreement could be taken to the House floor would be Wednesday.

(Robert Shepard, UPI)

DEMOCRATS CONSIDERING DROPPING SURTAX
ON THOSE WITH $1 MILLION INCOMES

Democratic negotiators are considering dropping their call for a surtax on the 36,000 taxpayers with million-dollar-a-year incomes if a Republican proposal to limit tax writeoffs for the million-dollar-a-year crowd will produce the same result.

Congressional computers crunched numbers into Monday night to analyze both alternatives and show if they both make wealthy taxpayers shoulder the same share of the load in the compromise deficit-reduction package that lawmakers are pushing to complete this week.

"The problem from our side is that we want to see the equity distribution," said Rep. Gray. "Nobody said we were going to accept (the GOP plan); we want to see what the computer says."

(Mary Deibel, Scripps Howard)

FAMILY TAXES WOULD GO UP $269 EACH YEAR IN PROPOSED LEVIES

Look out, Joe Sixpack: The average household would pay about $269 more a year on the taxes on beer, wine, gasoline, tobacco and liquor that Congress is considering.

That's the estimate for a family earning between $25,000 and $35,000 a year, according to a study done for the National Chamber Foundation, an opponent of the tax increases.

A 16-cent tax on a six-pack of beer would cost the average household about $19.52 annually, while 9 1/2-cent gas tax would drain about $148.97 a year, the researchers say. An 8-cent-a-pack cigarette tax increase would cost an average $27.39 more a year.

The study notes that the excise taxes would reach deepest into the pockets of the poor, women and blacks -- all traditional Democratic constituencies. (David Dahl, Washington Times, A10)

LONG-TERM GAIN OUTWEIGHS SHORT-TERM, ECONOMISTS SAY

John Maynard Keynes might not approve, but many private economists believe the Bush Administration and Congress are right in backing budget cuts and tax increases even in the face of a possible recession.

The view flies in the face of a major economic tenet advanced by Keynes, who argued that cutting government spending and increasing taxes is the wrong thing to do in economic hard times.

Instead, the late British economist contended the government should run deficits during recessions to prime the pump and encourage a shrinking economy to start growing again....

Economists who support this shock therapy conceded that economic growth, at least in the short-term, will be hurt by the tax hikes and spending cuts, perhaps even making a mild recession slightly worse.

But they argue that the long-term benefits outweigh the short-term pain.

"When things are this far out of kilter (with the budget deficit soaring), the benefits of solving the underlying structural problem outweigh the short-term damage," said David Wyss, senior financial economist at DRI-McGraw Hill.

However, supply-side critics of the effort charge that George Bush is in danger of becoming a modern-day Herbert Hoover. That Republican president preached the need for budgetary restraint as a response to the worsening economic situation of the early 1930s.

"The deficit-cutters have a simplistic notion that if the medicine doesn't taste good, then just swallow hard and you will feel better in the morning. I don't think that is true," said John Makin, an economist with the conservative American Enterprise Institute. (Martin Crutsinger, AP)

PAIR'S WAYS AND MEANS INSPIRE ANGER AND PRAISE

President Bush's top budget honchos -- John Sununu and Richard Darman -- have gained the title "Nasty Boys" in marathon talks droning away on Capitol Hill.

Like the Cincinnati Reds' flamethrowing relief pitches of the same name, Sununu and Darman's blunt, hardball style in pressing the White House case has been bashed by critics as complicating talks, triggering flare-ups and prolonging the timetable for agreement. In the process, they've dusted off senators and Congress members used to swinging at softballs.

Rep. Lightfoot was so miffed he wrote Bush asking him to leave his "pit bulldogs at the White House" and come to Congress himself to patch up relations.

Bush, however, dismisses it as part of the game: "When the passions get high, I understand there's going to be a little broken china up there."
(Richard Benedetto, USA Today, 6A)

QUAYLE CREDITED IN BUDGET TALKS

Vice President Quayle may emerge as a winner in the budget battle.

Quayle, who served in the House and Senate, is being credited with helping to rescue the Bush Administration's budget policy meltdown by serving as broker between the White House and Congress.

"The word is that Quayle's been very accessible and very helpful," said Rep. Mickey Edwards.

Quayle has seized the budget as an opportunity to rehabilitate his image as a drag on Bush.

In a three-day swing through Montana, Idaho and California, Quayle tirelessly parried questions about the mess:

Taxes? "The Democrats passed a whopping tax increase of $90 billion on Middle America. Take a family of four earning $35,000: their taxes are going up a staggering $270!" The blame? A runaway Congress. "They don't want to do anything except come home and run campaigns. They're not very good." The leader? "The President." Bush has compromised, but Quayle says he won't cave in to Congress.

(Jessica Lee, USA Today, 6A)

CONFEREES COMPLETE SWEEPING CLEAN-AIR REVISION

Congressional conferees Monday gave final approval to the first clean air legislation in 13 years after compromising on a relief program for laid-off workers in a pre-dawn effort to avoid a presidential veto.

The compromise was tentatively accepted by White House officials at the session, setting the stage for a champagne toast by conference members at 5:05 a.m. The agreement provided the momentum to get conferees over the final hump, as House negotiators -- threatened by a Senate filibuster -- dropped their plan to protect the visibility of national parks in the West clouded by pollution from power plants.

Gathering again 10 hours later in the ornate caucus room of the Cannon House Office Building where the conference began 15 weeks ago, the 141 negotiators formally approved the package of new standards and technological demands designed to cleanse the air of urban smog, acid rain and toxic industrial emissions by early in the next century.

UTILITIES CALL CLEANER AIR FEASIBLE BUT EXPENSIVE

Coal-burning electric utility companies around the country said Monday that they had not seen the text of the House-Senate compromise on acid rain, but that they did not believe it differed markedly from earlier proposals, which they characterized as feasible but expensive.

"Everybody anticipated that something would pass," said Bruce Stoecklin, a spokesman for the Cincinnati Gas and Electric Company, which serves 670,000 customers in Ohio and Kentucky, and uses coal for 99 percent of its fuel. "I wouldn't say we expect to have any trouble meeting the provisions; it's just the expense," he added.

GOP CANDIDATES HAVE LOTS OF EXCUSES FOR SHELIVING BUSH ADS

Droves of Republican candidates are shunning television ads of themselves with President Bush, and they've got their reasons.

They couldn't get to the White House for a taping. The quality of the footage is bad. They don't have money to buy the TV time. Endorsements don't work in their race.

And, well, maybe it's not such a good idea to latch onto a guy whose ratings are slipping. Who promoted a wildly unpopular budget plan. Who's part of the Washington establishment that this year's candidates love to hate.

"If something is radioactive, your natural inclination is to stay away from it," said Craig Tufty, a spokesman for Rep. Grandy. Is there a Bush endorsement in Grandy's future? "We don't have one," said Tufty, "and we don't plan on getting one."

Bush has taped about 1200 endorsement spots for Republican House, Senate and gubernatorial candidates. But an AP spot check of campaigns across the country indicates few are finding their way onto the airwaves.

Many candidates seem to be taking their cue from freshman Rep. McCrery. He scrapped plans to show his ad with Bush before the [Louisiana] state's unique open primary on Oct. 6. Instead, he ran ads against Bush's budget compromise.

McCrery coasted to re-election 10 points ahead of a Democrat who had been expected to give him trouble, and a winning strategy was born.

FEDS SEEK $30 MILLION IN S&L CASE

Federal regulators said Monday they'll seek restitution from Florida banker David Paul, former chairman of the failed CentTrust bank.

The action by the OTS seeks $30.8 million -- the second largest amount sought in an S&L case -- topped only by a $40 million case against Charles Keating.

OTS Director Timothy Ryan assailed Paul's "insatiable vanity and greed" -- ranging from gold-plated plumbing to a $456,900 home security system -- as a major factor in CentTrust's February downfall. Projected cost to taxpayers: $1.7 billion....

Paul is a noted Democratic fund-raiser and contributor.

GOP SENATORS ACCUSE ETHICS PANEL OF DELAYING S&L CASE

Partisan rancor over the Senate ethics committee's probe into five senators' ties to S&L executive Charles Keating spilled onto the Senate floor Monday as Republicans accused the panel of delaying action that could result in exonerating the only GOP senator in the case.

Angry Democrats, including George Mitchell and Howell Heflin, countercharged that an "organized campaign of leaks" was being waged against three of the four Democrats who are under investigation in the high-profile "Keating Five" case.

Sen. McCain, the only Republican in the case, opened the debate with an emotional appeal that the committee act before Congress adjourns later this week on a special counsel's recommendation that no further action be taken against him and Sen. Glenn. In a report to the committee Sept. 10, special counsel Robert Bennett recommended a further full-scale investigation of the other three: Sens. Cranston, DeConcini and Riegle.

Leaks From S&L Case Spur Probe Of McCain

Senate Ethics Committee investigators are looking into allegations that Sen. McCain has been a source of leaks to the news media concerning the committee's probe of S&L kingpin Charles Keating.

The Arizona Republican, who appealed Monday for the immediate release of a report on the case by special counsel Robert Bennett in an effort to clear his name, faces possible expulsion from the Senate if the allegations are proved true.

"There is concern that Mr. McCain may have leaked secret and confidential information to the media about the committee probe," said a source close to the committee. "If true, he may have violated the rules of the Senate and he could be in a lot of trouble."

AIDS MONEY BILL FALLS SHORT OF AUTHORIZED AMOUNT

The House is backing a spending bill that provides money for new programs to combat AIDS but falls short of the hefty amount approved earlier this year as the deadly disease claimed the life of Ryan White.

By a vote of 335-74 Monday, the House approved a $182 billion appropriations bill for the departments of Labor, Education and HHS for the fiscal year that began Oct. 1.

The measure includes $226 million to partially fund a newly authorized program to help cities and local governments deal with the AIDS epidemic. But that was far less than the $875 million authorized by a separate bill enacted earlier this year.

That emergency AIDS treatment bill was dedicated in memory of White, an Indiana teen-ager whose fight against the disease, which he contracted from a blood transfusion, gained national attention.

EMOTIONAL ISSUES CLOUD CHANCES OF ELECTION-YEAR ANTI-CRIME BILL

Congress may have been robbed of its favorite election-year issue -- crime and punishment -- because too many members are being stubborn about what they won't give up in this season's anti-crime bill.

Capital punishment, death row appeal rights, bans on assault weapons and broader search rights were cited by lawmakers on both sides of these emotional issues. "As a result, with Congress trying to finish work by the end of the week to go home and campaign, some said it's doubtful that an omnibus crime bill will be enacted this year.

"I don't know if we will be able to conclude all the difficulties with the crime bill," Speaker Foley said Monday. "I would hope so."

If Congress fails to pass a crime bill this year, it would be the first election year since 1982 that it did not send a bill to the President that was tough on crime and drugs.

REP. LUKENS FACES NEW SEX ALLEGATION

The House ethics committee, responding quickly to new allegations of sexual misconduct by Rep. Lukens, Monday revived an earlier ethics investigation of Lukens stemming from his conviction of a misdemeanor sex charge and ordered him to appear before the panel Tuesday....

The committee abruptly reopened the inquiry Monday after a Capitol elevator operator alleged to her superiors that Lukens had made what the panel termed "unwanted and unsolicited sexual advances" toward her. AP reported that Lukens allegedly fondled and propositioned a young elevator operator and gave her his business card in an incident last week.

SINGLETON TAKES MODERATE PATH, URGE BUSH TO SIGN D.C. BILL

Harry Singleton, the Republican nominee for D.C. delegate, called on President Bush Monday to sign the 1991 D.C. appropriations bill, despite the President's personal opposition to provisions that permit the public funding of abortions.

Singleton said he has told top White House aides that "it was not appropriate for the President to veto this legislation based on his views about abortion." He noted that the bill would permit only local tax dollars -- not federal money -- to be used to finance abortions for poor women.

"The District should be treated like any other jurisdiction as far as control over its money," Singleton said in a luncheon interview with reporters and editors of the Washington Post.

IRAQ SAID PLANNING TO FREE AT LEAST 14 AMERICANS TUESDAY

BAGHDAD -- Iraq will free at least 14 detained U.S. citizens Tuesday, the head of a U.S.-based Iraqi friendship society said.

Salim Mansour, president of the Iraqi-American Friendship Foundation, told a news conference the group was likely to include sick and elderly Americans prevented from leaving Iraq since the invasion of Kuwait on Aug. 2.

"It won't be less than 14," Mansour said. He said names were being worked out between the Iraqi foreign ministry and the U.S. Embassy in Baghdad. (Reuter)

IRAQ HINTS AT MOVES ON HOSTAGES

Private American Makes Plea For Infirm; French Singled Out

AMMAN -- Iraq made new moves on the hostage issue Monday, as a private American intermediary said he expected some U.S. detainees to be released, and President Saddam indicated he is willing to release all detained Frenchmen.

The prospect of early releases for the U.S. and French hostages came one day after British former prime minister Edward Heath announced that a number of British detainees are to be freed Tuesday on orders from Saddam. Small groups of German, Spanish and British citizens were released last week after anti-war activists made humanitarian appeals in meetings with senior Iraqi officials similar to Heath's.

Although such gestures have meant freedom for a growing number of Europeans and Americans, the Iraqi leader declared that these piecemeal releases do not signal any shift away from his tactic of holding Western and Japanese men as insurance against a U.S. bombing attack. In an interview with Japan's NHK public television network broadcast in Tokyo Monday, Saddam said a general hostage release will be considered only "on condition that the threat of war against Iraq ceases to exist."

FRANCE REJECTS IRAQ'S HOSTAGE OFFER, BUT CRACKS APPEAR

PARIS -- France has rejected President Saddam's offer to free all its citizens held in Iraq, believing it was an attempt to drive a wedge into the West's united condemnation of Iraq's invasion of Kuwait.

President Mitterrand's spokesman dismissed the offer within hours of a surprise announcement in Baghdad that Saddam had asked parliament to release France's 250 hostages in Iraq and Kuwait.

"That's their business. Nothing can substitute for the resolutions of the U.N. Security Council...freedom for all the hostages and the liberation of Kuwait," spokesman Hubert Vedrine told reporters.... Defense Minister Jean-Pierre Chevenement, criticized in France for a dovish attitude to the gulf crisis, said he would be delighted if they were freed.

"I would rejoice at the liberation of our hostages if it took place. But for the moment, it is only a proposition so one has to be prudent," Chevenement told French television.

'HUMAN SHIELDS' SPEAK UP

BAGHDAD -- Americans being held as "human shields" at a liquefied-gas plant here have smuggled out a letter protesting the "immoral and illegal" action of President Saddam.

The letter was released Monday by the U.S. Embassy as several private groups claimed progress on efforts to win freedom for a limited number of Americans and other Western hostages.

"The camp inside of the LPG (liquefied petroleum gas) storage terminal compound is in an extremely dangerous location and in the event of fire or explosion...it would be impossible for camp occupants to survive," the letter said.

It is the first concrete report of the conditions facing the 104 Americans and several hundred Europeans and Japanese being held by Mr. Hussein as human shields at potential military targets, most of which are in northern Iraq.

"Disregarding our strong protests, the persons named herein have been forced to move into this camp," said the letter, from which signatures were deleted before its release.

The hostages charged that the Iraqi strongman was violating international law by prohibiting them from leaving and protested "this immoral and illegal act."

SAUDI EASES POSITION ON KUWAIT

DHAHRAN -- Saudi Arabia's defense minister indicated in comments published Monday that if Iraq leaves Kuwait, the Saudis would not oppose legitimate Iraqi claims, even if they involved territorial concessions by Kuwait.

In an apparent effort to persuade President Saddam to withdraw, Defense Minister Prince Sultan bin Abdulaziz said Arab countries were ready to grant Iraq "all rights" and that Saudi Arabia "sees no harm in any Arab country giving its Arab sister land, a site or a position on the sea."

Sultan added that Arab states' claims against one another should be resolved "by understanding, not force." He also repeated that "any solution which does not provide for unconditional withdrawal and reinstating Kuwait's legitimate government is unacceptable and rejected" by his government and "the Arab nation."

Sultan's remarks were the latest of several diplomatic feelers in recent days in which a range of nations -- including France, the Soviet Union and now Saudi Arabia -- appeared to be signaling the Iraqis that if they leave Kuwait, the international community might be prepared to consider some of their pre-invasion claims for money and territory, including Iraq's demand for the strategic islands of Bubiyan and Warba.

Saudi Arabia Says Remarks On Gulf Crisis 'Misinterpreted'

NICOSIA -- Saudi Arabia's defense minister said conciliatory comments he made about the Persian Gulf crisis had been misinterpreted and he repeated demands that Iraq withdraw fully and unconditionally from Kuwait.

The official Saudi Press Agency Monday night quoted Prince Sultan Ibn Abdulaziz as saying in an "explanation" that reports carried by some news agencies contained "wrong interpretations...and a clear distortion of what he meant."

Prince Sultan, addressing Arab journalists in Riyadh Sunday, said Arab states were ready to grant Iraq "all its rights."...

SPA quoted the prince as saying Monday: "What I mean by these remarks is that Saudi Arabia succeeded in the past and through goodwill and cordial understanding in solving certain border problems that existed with Iraq for a long time, also with Jordan and the United Arab Emirates." (Maurice Kaldawy, Reuter)

DEAL COULD BUST COALITION

A spate of cryptic reports from the Persian Gulf, including news that the Prophet Mohammed appeared in a vision to President Saddam, fueled speculation Monday of an Arab solution to the Persian Gulf crisis.

The reports, which also included talk of Iraqi troops retreating from forward positions and of a possible softening of the Saudi stand against Iraq, also raised fears that U.S. efforts to force Iraq out of Kuwait might be undermined.

White House officials insisted there was "no difference in the positions of the United States, Saudi Arabia and Kuwait" toward Iraq, which has stood virtually alone since its Aug. 2 invasion of the oil-rich emirate.

But Middle East experts and Arab officials said hints of a possible compromise by Saddam could effectively destroy U.S. strategy, which opposes any partial solution that would leave Saddam, his army of 1 million and his vast chemical-weapons stock intact.

"It would be terrible for the United States, a nightmare scenario," Adam Garfinkle, an analyst at the Foreign Policy Research Institute in Philadelphia, said of any deal between Saudi Arabia and Iraq. (Andrew Borowiec, Washington Times, A1)

PRICE OF OIL SLIDES BY MORE THAN $5
Fall Linked To Talk Of Progress In Gulf

The price of a barrel of crude oil plunged more than $5 Monday, its largest one-day drop ever, as oil markets swirled with speculation and rumors that a peaceful settlement to the Persian Gulf crisis had become more likely.

A benchmark barrel of high-quality crude for November delivery traded as low as $27.90 on the New York Mercantile Exchange before closing at $28.38, a $5.41 decline. It was the first time oil has been under $30 a barrel since Sept. 5.

SAILORS BOARD IRAQI SHIP AFTER IT IGNORED U.S. SHOTS

DHAHRAN -- Australian and U.S. sailors Monday boarded an Iraqi ship that had ignored warning shots and orders to turn around, but the vessel had apparently dumped banned cargo overboard, a U.S. Navy spokesman said.

The Bahar Arabi was allowed to continue after the sailors, making a second search of the 7,000-ton ship, found the cargo holds empty, said spokesman J.D. Van Sickle. Iraq branded the incident a provocation.

The ship, stopped because of U.N. economic sanctions, was searched the first time Saturday in the Persian Gulf and ordered back to Iraq after U.S. Coast Guard sailors discovered steel tubes and plywood aboard. (Reuter, Washington Post, A16)

CHENEY SAYS OVER 210,000 U.S. MILITARY PERSONNEL NOW IN GULF

Secretary Cheney said Monday night the U.S. had over 210,000 soldiers, airmen and sailors in the Persian Gulf and he would discuss prospects for ending the record peacetime build-up with the Pentagon's senior general this weekend.

Speaking to reporters aboard his airplane en route home from Paris, Cheney also denied that the French and U.S. governments were at odds over whether to negotiate with President Saddam to end his military occupation of Kuwait.

Cheney wound up a nine-day visit to Britain, the Soviet Union and France, where he discussed the explosive gulf situation, arms control and other issues with leaders of the three countries.

"We now have in excess of 210,000 in the region," including more than 35,000 sailors, Cheney said. The new total is 10,000 higher than the figure given reporters by Cheney nine days ago.

Asked if the U.S. was getting ready to end its build-up around Iraq begun in early August, he said he would discuss the situation with Gen. Powell when Powell returns from a visit to U.S. forces in Saudi Arabia this weekend. (Charles Aldinger, Reuter)

CHENEY SAYS DEFENSE BUDGET WILL PRESERVE B-2, EASE FORCE CUTS

The Pentagon reached agreement with the House and Senate Armed Services Committees Monday night on a $288.3 billion 1991 defense budget which will preserve the B-2 stealth bomber and reduce cuts in military personnel, Secretary said.

Cheney told reporters flying home with him from Paris that he was satisfied with the compromise and would recommend that President Bush accept it. The White House had requested a $306.9 billion defense budget.

"I would characterize it as a pretty good deal," said Cheney, adding that 80,000 personnel would be cut from the 2.1 million-member armed forces in the fiscal year which began this month instead of up to 120,000 earlier demanded by Congress....

Cheney said $4.2 billion in funds were approved for the B-2 program, which would allow initial spending for start-ups on a yet-undetermined number of aircraft beyond the 15 already ordered from Northrop.

He said a compromise bill also called for the creation of a new presidential commission to study the politically sensitive issue of closing domestic military bases.

MILITARY, FOREIGN AID BILLS HIT SNAGS
Hill, White House Tackle Disagreements In Key Spending Measures

Congress and the White House worked Monday to sort out disagreements over key military and foreign aid spending bills that threaten to delay adjournment set for later this week.

Administration officials said the President is likely to veto the $8.4 billion military construction bill, which now eliminates the U.S. contribution toward a $500 million NATO base in Crotone, Italy.

Pentagon officials have also warned that the President might veto the $268 billion defense authorization bill because it contains only $2.9 billion for SDI, $1.2 billion less than the Administration requested.

House Armed Services Committee sources said Monday they were considering attaching the legislation -- approved in a House-Senate conference -- to the main defense appropriations measure to make it harder to veto. That bill contains a number of provisions favored by the Administration, though it, too, lowers SDI spending to $2.9 billion....

In other action on the foreign spending bill, the Senate affirmed 97 to 1 a $700 million transfer of U.S. military equipment to Israel, rejecting an attempt by Sen. Byrd to eliminate the language. Byrd said the transfer measure appeared to set a mandatory floor under the amount of equipment Israel might receive.

COVERT LETHAL AID TO ANGOLAN REBELS IS CURBED;
CEASE-FIRE WOULD SUSPEND IT

House and Senate intelligence committee conferees have decided to limit covert lethal aid for Jonas Savimbi's rebel army in Angola and to provide for its quick suspension if there is a cease-fire in the 15-year civil war and firm progress toward free elections.

The restrictions, first enacted by the House last week, were modified in conference after warnings of a possible presidential veto. But Administration officials were still uncertain Monday night whether the compromise would be acceptable.

Lethal aid to Savimbi's UNITA, sources said, is slightly less than half of the $60 million of covert aid in the classified section of the 1991 Intelligence Authorization Act. The conferees said the flow of weapons should be suspended if the Soviet-backed Angolan government is willing to accept a cease-fire and proposes "a reasonable timetable" for free and fair elections and if the soviet Union indicates it has ceased to provide the regime with lethal aid and has withdrawn its advisers from the region.

INTIFADA SHIFTS FOCUS, METHODSIndividual Attacks Replace Mass Clashes; Jerusalem Is New Target

JERUSALEM -- A wave of stabbings of Israeli Jews by Palestinians in the past few days has confirmed a trend since the summer of Palestinians shifting their weapons from stones and strikes to knives and bombs in the long-running Arab uprising....

This new, more bitter brand of Israeli-Palestinian conflict has been seeping into the country ever since the breakdown last March of U.S. attempts to broker a peace process, Palestinian and Israeli observers say. Its advent was strengthened by eruption of the Persian Gulf crisis, which has caused many Palestinians to embrace the radical stance toward Israel of Iraq's Saddam Hussein.

Now, as Palestinians mourn the death of at least 19 demonstrators shot by Israeli police in a riot on Temple Mount Oct. 8, a kind of watershed seems to have been reached: few street demonstrations have occurred in Jerusalem and the territories in the last two weeks, but a wave of isolated, violent attacks have been mounted by Palestinians on Israeli soldiers and civilians....

In leaflets last week, the two largest organizations of the uprising, the PLO's Fatah and the Islamic Resistance Movement, or Hamas, endorsed armed attacks on Israeli soldiers and civilians for the first time.

COLOMBIANS REPORT RECORD 862 KIDNAPS

BOGOTA -- Drug barons, unemployed hitmen, common criminals and Marxist guerrillas are terrorizing Colombia with an unprecedented wave of kidnappings for political and financial gains, forcing the government to create special units to deal with the phenomenon.

Authorities in Medellin, the city hardest hit by the crime wave, say cocaine cartel leader Pablo Escobar, with billions of dollars in assets but little cash inside the country, is responsible for many of the abductions of wealthy businessmen to keep his empire afloat financially.

Because Escobar has not been able to maintain his private army of hired assassins, many of the kidnappings are believed to be the work of unemployed hitmen. And, because of the impunity with which kidnappers act, abductions are becoming a favorite source of income for common criminals.

According to the statistics of the center for Criminal Investigations, in the first nine months of 1990, a record 862 kidnappings were reported -- an average of more than three per day -- and only 40 percent of the kidnappings are believed to be reported to authorities. Many of the rest are paid off quietly to save the victim.

AMERICAS WATCH TARGETS MILITARY

BOGOTA -- The New York-based human rights group Americas Watch charged Monday that paramilitary groups tied to the military and sometimes financed by drug traffickers were responsible for the most serious human rights abuses in Colombia.

A report urged conditioning of U.S. military aid to Colombia on severing the "unholy alliance" of paramilitary, military and trafficking interests.

"The infusion of vast amounts of aid could help promote human rights, but only if the Bush Administration is willing to use it as leverage to encourage the democratic institutions in Colombia to investigate the paramilitary groups thoroughly, to punish those officers who have contributed to political violence, and to drive the cartels' military allies out of the armed forces," the report said. CIVIL RIGHTS VETO

NBC's Tom Brokaw: This was expected to be a dull election year, but now there are two explosive issues on the national political agenda: the budget mess and civil rights. When President Bush vetoed a major civil rights bill on job discrimination Monday, he guaranteed a stormy political showdown.

NBC's John Cochran: For months, the White House and Congress seemed this close [fingers inches away] to getting a compromise on the civil rights bill, but in the end all the negotiating, all the arguing, produced nothing but a veto. The bill is aimed at undoing the effect of recent Supreme Court decisions on job discrimination, especially a decision against minorities working at a salmon hatchery. The court put more burden on workers to prove that they are being unfairly treated. But President Bush agrees with the business community that this civil rights bill goes too far; that it would require hiring and promotion to turn on factors of race, sex, ethnicity or religion rather than on qualifications.

(Fred Krebs, U.S. Chamber of Commerce: "The so-called civil rights act is a good example of a bill that has a good title but is a bad law.")

In Congress, the President's veto drew fire -- as expected.

(Rep. Lewis (D.-Ga.): "By vetoing this bill, the President is giving cover to the likes of David Duke, the Klan, the skinheads and companies that discriminate against minorities and women.")

Women's rights advocates have focused more on other issues such as abortion, so the civil rights bill has been viewed more as a racial issue even though it greatly affects women.

(Claudia Withers, Women's Legal Defense Fund: "We consider the civil rights act just as important for women workers as it is for workers who are people of color.")

Although White House polls show that Bush's veto will be popular among white voters, his aides say politics played no part in his decision. But the bill's co-author claims Bush is trying to please extremists in his party.

(Sen. Kennedy: "The President's veto of this legislation is going to be a major step back for equality in the workplace for all Americans.")

President Bush does have the votes in Congress to sustain his veto, but he may not have the votes to get his own version of the civil rights bill passed, and if there's no bill at all, then the Supreme Court rulings will stand.

Brokaw examines the civil rights struggle since Lyndon Johnson's signing of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. With new Reagan and Bush appointments to the Supreme Court, the more conservative Court began in the late 1980s to curtail the use of civil rights laws. So this year's civil rights act, passed overwhelmingly by Congress, was an attempt to undo what the Court had done -- an attempt now blocked by the President.

(NBC-Lead)

ABC's Peter Jennings: ...With congressional elections just two weeks from Tuesday, a divisive issue has been thrust right into the middle of the campaign. President Bush Monday evening vetoed the civil rights bill. He called discrimination a fundamental evil, but he said this bill would introduce the destructive force of quotas to remedy it.

ABC's Brit Hume: Outside the White House Monday, Dick Gregory, the comedian and political activist, was carrying a sign citing the black U.S. soldiers in the Persian Gulf as reason for the President to sign the civil rights bill. But the word inside the gates was that a veto was certain though the President was making no big display of it. His only public event Monday was an environmental awards ceremony where he said nothing about civil rights.

Press Secretary Fitzwater, though, said the bill Congress passed "rigs the rules against employers, leaving them little choice except to adopt hiring quotas to avoid costly litigation they cannot expect to win." There was support of that assessment from major business groups.

(Frederick Krebs, U.S. Chamber of Commerce: "If you can be sued by the numbers or hauled into court by the numbers, you will hire by the numbers.")

But civil rights activists whom the President has tried to win over and their allies in Congress scorned such objections, and Monday they scorned the President too.

(Ralph Neas, Leadership Conference on Civil Rights: "This will be a star forever on the Bush presidency. He will join Andrew Johnson and Ronald Reagan as the only presidents in our history to veto a civil rights bill.")

(Rep. Lewis, (D.-Ga.): "By vetoing this bill, the President is giving cover to the likes of David Duke, the Klan, the skinheads and companies that discriminate against minorities and women.")

(Sen. Kennedy: "When the chips are down, this White House is against civil rights.")

The President is finding that his oft-stated support for what civil rights leaders want to do doesn't help much politically when he doesn't also support their way of doing it. Mr. Bush sent a civil rights bill of his own to Congress over the weekend. He may have the votes to sustain this veto, but it's doubtful he can get the votes to pass his own bill. With the election at hand, the air is full of many things, but compromise on this issue does not seem to be one of them.

(ABC-3)

Rather: President Bush Monday night vetoed a major civil rights bill. The legislation was aimed at making it easier to fight discrimination against women and minorities in the workplace.

CBS's Wyatt Andrews: The President has been fond of the veto, but this one holds high political costs. By vetoing this bill, the President not only jeopardizes his own 20 year record with civil rights, but also his two year effort to convince blacks he's kinder and gentler than Ronald Reagan.

(Rep. Conyers (D.-Mi.): "We thought we had turned the corner on the '80s, and what President Bush has done today is to tell us there is a new face, but the policies are essentially the same.")

Andrews continues: Mr. Bush argues he's all for civil rights, but calls this bill a lawyer's goldmine, one that encourages discrimination lawsuits that even innocent employers could lose and which rigs the rules so that employers can only defend themselves by hiring through quotas.

(President, May 17: "I want to sign a civil rights bill, but I will not sign a quota bill.")

Angry civil rights leaders and members of Congress call the quota argument a smokescreen.

(Sen. Kennedy: "The President's veto of the Civil Rights Act of 1990 and his repeated efforts to pin the false label of quotas on this legislation are part of a disreputable tactic to appeal to public resentment and prejudice.")

The White House will try to quell the uproar by introducing a jobs-protection bill of its own and by insisting this fight is over legalities, not sympathies. Our bill also expands protection against discrimination, White House spokesman Fitzwater says, but it allows employers a fair chance to defend their legitimate employment practices. The veto will now likely be sustained, job protection as an issue will go into limbo and Democrats -- even those who wanted this bill -- are now free to paint Republicans as the party that vetoed civil rights, all of which makes this an issue the President could win in Congress but lose in the field of public perception. (CBS-4)

BUDGET

Rather: Negotiators for President Bush and the Congress wrangled again Monday to get a done deal finally on the budget deficit. They spent Monday eyeball-to-eyeball and tax-to-tax. This included more arguing Monday about taking more out of the pockets of millionaires and less from Medicare recipients.

CBS's Bob Schieffer reports from Capitol Hill the general feeling is that an agreement can be reached by the middle of the week, but with this new fight now over how to put more of the tax burden on the wealthy, no one on either side seems quite certain just how it's going to be done.

(Darman: "We're back on track, perhaps -- perhaps -- you can't tell. You know what it's like. I mean, we've been at this for months.")

When the President reversed course and agreed to higher income tax rates for the wealthy, the deal looked all but done, but Democrats are still holding out for a surtax on the super-rich -- those with incomes over $1 million a year. Instead of the surtax, the White House wants new restrictions on tax deductions for the rich. With so few House Republicans now willing to support any budget deal, Democrats say adding the surtax is the only way to get the Democratic votes necessary to pass the bill.

(Sen. Bentsen: "The problem that you have as far as the White House is that they're pushing a plan on which they can only deliver a third of the Republican votes in the House, and still asking us as Democrats to provide a majority when they can't deliver their own Republican vote.")

Schieffer continues: So it was that House Republicans and Democrats, for very different reasons, were urging the White House Monday night to butt out until congressional negotiators can strike a deal.

(Rep. Rangel: "Mr. President: Stay out of our business. Wait until you get a bill and let the people govern.")

(Rep. DeLay: "Walk away from the table, Mr. President. Let the Democrats pass their tax bill, then veto it and save the American economy.")

The wrangling is propelling Congress towards its longest session in an election year since World War II. (CBS-Lead)

NBC's Andrea Mitchell reports from Capitol Hill Budget Director Darman was back Monday, but without Chief of Staff Sununu, who led Sunday night's walkout.

(Darman: "This is a little like the Perils of Pauline: You think you're all right and then all of a sudden it's back [inaudible] and you think you're making progress again.")

(Sen. Mitchell: "We're working and making progress.")

(Reporter: "Are you going to have a deal by Wednesday night?"

Sen. Bentsen: "We'd better.")

Both sides were trying to revive what appeared to almost dead on Sunday. Backtracking Monday, the White House said Sununu's body language Sunday was misinterpreted. At the talks, the fight is now over not whether to tax the rich, but how. Democrats want a surtax on millionaires; the President wants a limit on itemized deductions. But that wouldn't pass in the House, lacking support even from Republicans from high-tax states where taxpayers rely on deducting high state and local taxes.

(Rep. Roukema: "Where did these Republican spokesmen come from? I've talked with numerous Republican colleagues; this does not represent their viewpoint.")

While negotiators have not produced a budget, they have taken care of their states. Mitchell of Maine got a tax break for his state's biggest life insurance company. Packwood of Oregon made sure the new wine tax won't apply to wineries back home. Sam Gibbons protected the cigar industry of his native Florida from the new tobacco tax. So Monday night, they're still looking for a compromise. With elections just around the corner, Sen. Dole says members of Congress may have to vote themselves by absentee ballot.

(NBC-2)

Jennings reports there was some optimism on the budget. There is still no agreement on what one congressman called the M&M problem: taxing millionaires and cutting Medicaid, but Sen. Dole said agreement is in sight and Sen. Mitchell called Sunday's walkout by the White House representatives a tempest in a teapot. (ABC-4)

CLEAN AIR BILL

Jennings reports there was tentative agreement Monday on a new effort to clean up the nation's air. It is the first strengthening of the clean air laws in 13 years to reduce acid rain. Coal-burning plants in 21 states would have to cut sulfur dioxide emissions in half by the year 2001. The bill would also drastically reduce pollution from factories and cars -- if it passes. (ABC-5)

OIL

Jennings: We begin Monday night with the price of oil and whether it is an accurate reflection of the political situation in the Persian Gulf. If you were inclined to buy oil on the world market Monday, it was $5 a barrel cheaper than it was on Friday, and that is the largest one day drop in the price of a barrel since they began trading oil in 1938.... It appears oil traders do not think that war is in the wind -- at least not at the moment.

ABC's Stephen Aug reports the price of oil had been driven by the possibility of war.

(Frank Kneuttel, oil analyst, Prudential Bache: "The downward move today was being driven by -- one rumor in the London market said Saddam Hussein had a dream that told him to pull out of Kuwait.") Don't look for the big drop in the price of oil to be reflected at the gas pumps. Oil companies say, until now, the price of gasoline has not gone up as much as the price of oil. Third quarter profits at some oil companies are only mediocre. Also, many oil companies make chemicals and have had to pay the market price for oil at a time when demand for chemicals is down. At Amoco, profits from its oil, gas and chemical business has actually fallen 18 percent from a year ago. Occidental Petroleum said its profits hardly budged. Other companies which just produce oil did much better. Oil companies should make less money if prices remain down, but all you need is tough talk by Saddam Hussein or George b=Bush to send oil prices back through the roof. (ABC-Lead)

NBC's Bob Jensen reports Phillips Petroleum said its profits for the last three months shot up $91 million, an increase of 105 percent. Arco's profits were up $83 million; Ashland Oil's profits were up $98 million. Critics are outraged.

(Edwin Rothschild, Citizen's Action: "Consumers across the country are angered by paying higher prices for gasoline and heating oil while oil companies are profiting at their expense.") Analysts say higher crude prices are only one reason for the higher profits.

(Paul Mlotok, Morgan Stanley: "In several cases, the increases come from gains that they've had on asset sales.") The oil companies say they did not pass along all their cost increases to consumers. (NBC-3)

CBS's Ray Brady reports that oil companies got such a bad name from raising prices that some of them will now move to cut gas prices by five to 10 cents a gallon over the next couple of weeks with home heating oil coming down even more -- provided there's no more increased tension in the Middle East. (CBS-2)

IRAQ

Jennings reports the leader of an Iraqi-American group says he's been promised that some sick and elderly Americans will be allowed to leave. No word on how many or when. Diplomats in Baghdad have apparently received a letter from Americans and other foreigners who say they're being held at a gas storage facility; they say that being held is inhumane and a violation of international law. In the Gulf of Oman, an Iraqi freighter that ignored warning shots over the weekend was stopped and boarded for a second time Monday.

Jennings continues: The U.S. and Australian sailors, however, found the ship empty; the Pentagon says it believes the freighter had been carrying a load of steel tubes and plywood to sell in Yemen, but dumped the cargo overboard rather than have it confiscated.

ABC's Bill Redeker reports from Saudi Arabia on the problems facing the multinational force there. U.S. Gen. Schwartzkopf is supposed to be in charge, but must first consult with the top Saudi general and King Fahd. No one is saying who will have the last word if they disagree. And there is no guarantee the French will follow anyone's orders; they insist they're independent. Nor is there any guarantee the Egyptians will even attack; they say they're here only to defend. In the desert, confusion surrounds even the simplest combined military maneuver. For two days, reporters were promised a visit to a live-fire exercise where U.S. and Saudi forces would work side-by-side, but there were no Saudis. One official said they finished early, another said they weren't ready, and still another said communications broke down. Americans say they need contact with Saudis if only to learn how to recognize them. Both the Syrians and Iraqis use the same tanks, which could be another problem of recognition. In the air, French helicopters and fighters are flying on both sides of the border.

(Paul Beaver, Jane's Defense Weekly: "The great risk is what is called a blue on blue encounter. In other words, friendly air defenses firing on friendly aircraft.")

The communications equipment commanders use is not always compatible.

(John Cittadino, defense consultant: "We've got multinational forces that have non-NATO standardized equipment, and when you have a situation where forces can't coordinate battle attacks, it very often results in chaos.") (ABC-2)

CBS's Allen Pizzey reports from Baghdad that as a result of a French peace initiative, the Iraqi parliament will meet Tuesday to discuss releasing all French nationals held. A Finnish parliamentary delegation took five Finns home Monday; three were released on humanitarian grounds, the others won their freedom in a lottery among those who did not qualify as compassionate cases. An American delegation handed over more than $60,000 worth of medicine to the Iraqi version of the Red Cross as a gesture for peace in the Gulf region. (CBS-3)

NAVY/SEXUAL ASSAULT

ABC's Al Dale reports from the Naval Training Base in Orlando, Florida, that the Navy's inspector general says there were at least six rapes of female students or recruits here during a recent 18 month period, plus numerous complaints of sexual assault, indecent exposure and other forms of sexual harassment -- sometimes by their commanding officers. And, the report says, not only were some of the cases not prosecuted, in some of the cases those who brought the charges suffered additional harassment from investigators. The base commander acknowledges there has been a serious problem here, but says awareness programs and other measures are making things better.

Dale continues:

(Adm. Louise Wilmot, U.S. Navy: "Can we in good conscience say, moms and dads of America, send us your young people -- and we can and we do.")

But the report on the Orlando facility is only the latest example of the Navy under scrutiny for its treatment of women.

(Rep. Schneider: "It's all throughout the services, and the services have tended to try and wink at it, delay, cover it up, sugar-coat it.")

The Pentagon says it is trying to improve things, but this latest report is particularly damaging because it says the men involved often were allowed to go right on working near the alleged victims.

(ABC-9)

NBC's Brad Willis reports the lack of punishment has made many women feel like second-class citizens. The inspector general concluded that it is time to pay more than lip-service to the rules about women in the Navy. The Navy says it was simply following policy.

(Lt Cmdr. Nettie Johnson, U.S. Navy: "Every report is investigated. However, if there's not sufficient evidence to prosecute, then no further action can be taken.")

(Rep. Byron (D.-Md.), Chairwoman, House Armed Services Subcommittee on Military Personnel: "I think there's a sense of outrage that you have not had prosecution when you have had basically a crime committed.")

(NBC-8)

CRIME

Jennings reports the FBI says across the country rape increased 10 percent during the first six months of this year compared to the same period a year ago. Violent crime as a whole is up by 10 percent over last year, and murder in the nation's largest cities has increased by 20 percent. Meanwhile, the Soviets say organized crime is growing in their country, with criminals taking advantage of current political and economic instability. The chairman of the KGB says that brutality, violence and sadism have become widespread.

(ABC-10)

SURROGATE MOTHERING

Jennings reports a California court ruled a surrogate mother with no genetic relation to the baby she carried is to have no visiting rights with the child.

(ABC-6, NBC-7, CBS-5)

BRIDGES

ABC's Chris Bury reports on efforts to replace America's aging bridges with wooden ones.

(Michael Rains, U.S. Forest Service: "A wooden bridge is about 30 percent cheaper than concrete and steel and it lasts about three times as long.")

The U.S. Forest Service is spending $7 million to help local governments build bridges from the timber in their own areas. According to the Forest Service, eight of 10 bridges in rural areas need to be repaired or replaced.

(ABC-12)

POLITICAL ADVERTISING

NBC's George Lewis reports MTV is sponsoring a series of ads urging young rock fans to get out and vote. The "Rock the Vote" campaign features Madonna and MC Hammer.

(L. Brent Bozell, conservative activist: "The Rock the Vote People are out there saying, we are nonpartisan. Nonsense they're nonpartisan. They're far left, anti-conservative bashers. If they want to do that, let them do that -- but they've got to identify themselves.")

And then there are the Veterans of Foreign Wars; they do not think a flag-draped Madonna is exactly in vogue.

(Steve Van Buskirk, VFW spokesman: "We feel that what she's demonstrated here borders on desecration of the flag.") (NBC-9)

LAWSUITS

NBC's Roger O'Neil reports from Colorado that the state bar association is proposing to have businesses stop suing each other and start talking to each other out of court. A University of Wisconsin study found in the last 15 years there's been an explosion of business-against-business lawsuits, with the amount spent on legal services up 90 percent. It's hoped that a friendlier business atmosphere will not only help relieve courtroom congestion, but also attract new business to Colorado -- where settling is more important than suing. (NBC-4)

WORKING MOTHERS

NBC's Betty Rollin reports an increasing number of mothers are working part-time. Forty times as many companies than 10 years ago are adapting to such workers; 4,300 companies work around women's family priorities today. (NBC-6)

ARKANSAS INCINERATOR

CBS's Deborah Potter reports Jacksonville, Arkansas, is fighting government plans to burn toxic waste on site, just a few hundred yards from houses. Dioxin has been burned before, but never this much and never this close to a residential neighborhood. Local and state officials say the people who live around here have nothing to worry about and that burning the chemicals is the only really safe way to get rid of the pollution. Critics of the incineration plan, including some within the federal government, say there's only one reason behind the plan.

(Hugh Kaufman, EPA: "The government wants to save money, the responsible parties want to save money, and the public be damned.") Unless the plan is blocked, officials say, they'll go ahead with plans to incinerate more toxic waste right where it sits in dozens of other communities around the nation. (CBS-6)

FOREIGN MEDIA REACTION

MIDDLE EAST

"Bush, Get Off Our Back And Turn Your Attention To Saddam"

"President Bush is much like a general who set out to fight a war and on the way forgot who was his enemy. Bush has been preparing to tackle a ruthless dictator who had wiped out a sovereign state, but found himself fighting against his only true friend, which also happens to be the only democracy in the Middle East.... Why doesn't Bush get off our back at last and turn his attention to the real threat to world peace: Saddam Hussein?"

(Haaretz, Israel)

"Baker's Firm Stand Is Reassuring"

"There is no question of ever appeasing Saddam Hussein. This was made clear by...Secretary Baker.... The U.S. thinking on the matter is shared by other nations of the region and elsewhere. All feel that Saddam should not be allowed any chance to enjoy the fruits of his conquest.... Baker's firm stand against 'partial solutions' is, therefore, reassuring."

(Riyadh Daily, Saudi Arabia)

"Drift In U.S. Policy?"

"Some analysts in Washington argue that President Bush's public handling of the crisis is appearing to drift. Now that any diplomatic compromise has been publicly ruled out, it is becoming increasingly unclear what tactical options the President is going to choose next to isolate Saddam Hussein." (Independent, Britain)

"Once Japan Shakes Off The Constitutional Fetters"

"Once Japan shakes off the fetters of the postwar pacifist constitution, graduating from the league of economic superpowers into the league of political superpowers, it will no longer be possible for the U.S. forces to keep this 'grown up military giant' within the bounds of the three (sic) small islands of Japan in the future."

(Lianhe Zaobao, Japan)

U.S. ECONOMY

"The Current Crisis Has Been Waiting To Happen"

"Sorting out the budget remains the key, not only to a cut in interest rates, but also, more fundamentally, to whether the Federal Government can take action both at home and abroad."

(Financial Times, Britain)

"A Nation In Decline"

"President Bush is being attacked from all sides for his inconsistent signals...(and) his leadership is...contributing to America's image as a nation in decline."

News From the Hill

SENATE FLOOR: Foreign aid and Interior bills taken up.

After stop-and-start consideration of the $15.5 billion foreign aid appropriations bill (HR 5114) yesterday, senators agreed to put off further consideration of the measure in favor of working into the night on the Interior Department appropriations bill (HR 5769).

But before moving to the Interior bill senators did manage to act on a handful of amendments to the aid bill.

During work on the foreign aid bill, senators adopted, 97-1, an amendment that would allow the president to send as much as $700 million worth of U.S. weaponry to Israel for defense against military threats from Iraq.

The transfer of arms would not be allowed if U.S. readiness in the Persian Gulf were affected. Most of the arms are now in Europe where troops are being cut.

The appropriations bill already contained about $3 billion in military and economic aid as well as other benefits for Israel.

Senators also set aside for possible reconsideration an amendment by Tim Wirth, D-Colo., to reverse U.S. policy that disallows federal funds for global population organizations that promote abortion.

Members also passed, 95-3, an amendment linking the receipt of so-called tied aid credits from the U.S. to the use of U.S. businesses and services.

HOUSE FLOOR: Three spending bills gain final House OK.

The House yesterday approved the conference reports for three fiscal 1991 appropriations bills, bringing Congress closer to final passage of the 13 measures that will provide federal spending for the fiscal year that began Oct. 1.

The compromise bills still must be approved by the Senate.

By voice vote, members agreed to the conference report on a $52.2 billion appropriations bill (HR 5268) for federal farm programs, largely operated by the Department of Agriculture. The measure includes a scaled-back federal crop insurance program that House and Senate negotiators agreed to last week.

The House approved, 335-74, compromise legislation (HR 5257) to provide $182.2 billion for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education.

On a 343-67 vote, members adopted the conference agreement on HR 5241, the $20.9 billion spending bill for the Treasury, Postal Service and general government.

The House last night passed by voice vote a bill (HR 4407) to require law enforcement agencies to report cases of missing children immediately to the Justice Department's National Crime Information Center.

Late Sunday: The House late Sunday passed, 292-117, an almost $1.7 billion fiscal 1991 appropriations bill (HR 5399) for the legislative branch, accepting several amendments to cut about $75 million from the measure's original $1.7 billion level.

Members also decided to establish a mail allowance for each House member, limiting the amount each member may spend on official mail to that level. It would require members to disclose the amount spent on official mail.

See NEWS p. 2

Today

Floor Action: The Senate is likely to attempt to override President Bush's veto of civil rights legislation (S 2104).

Senators may also consider the conference agreement on the fiscal 1991 appropriations bill (HR 5399) for the legislative branch.

The House may take up the conference report on the fiscal 1991 spending bill (HR 5021) for the Commerce, State and Justice departments, the compromise farm bill (S 2830) and a seafood inspection measure (S 2924).

Members will also consider numerous bills under suspension of the rules.

Thrift Bailout: The House Banking Committee will address the politically touchy subject of additional funds to bail out failed savings and loans.

The administration has requested an additional $57 billion for fiscal 1991 for the bailout operation. Of that, $40 billion would be used to cover thrift losses and $17 billion would go for additional working capital — funds that would be recouped when S&L assets are sold.

But election-eve jitters have made the administration and lawmakers reluctant to address the issue head-on.

Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady declined repeated invitations to appear before the committee to discuss the administration's request, and members are skittish about raising the issue so close to the election.

The panel will mark up a draft measure, crafted by Chairman Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Texas, that would provide $10 billion, enough funds to allow the bailout to continue through February.

NEWS from p. 1

CLEAN AIR negotiators wrap up marathon conference.

More than four months after convening, a House-Senate conference committee gave its approval yesterday to compromise clean air legislation (S 1630).

Agreement came after conferees decided to accept a modified version of a House proposal to provide extra financial assistance and retraining to workers, notably coal miners, displaced by the bill's tough new restrictions on industry. The agreement would authorize $250 million in aid.

Workers must be enrolled in a retraining program to be eligible for the financial assistance.

The wide-ranging bill seeks to bring cleaner air to the more than 100 most polluted areas of the country within 15 years.

It also aims to:

- Sharply curtail industrial emissions of 189 toxic chemicals, many of them cancer-causing.

- Halve coal-fired utility emissions of sulfur dioxide, a component of acid rain.

- Curb motor vehicle emissions by tightening controls on tailpipe emissions, requiring the sale of cleaner blends of gasoline in cities with the worst smog problems, and phasing in a new generation of alternatively fueled vehicles for use in California.

Republican conferees, including Rep. Norman F. Lent of New York and Sen. John H. Chafee of Rhode Island, predicted that President Bush would sign the bill.

But White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the administration still opposes the program to aid displaced workers and was continuing to make its opposition known on Capitol Hill. However, he added that the administration "has not signaled a veto."

The Clean Air Act was last revised 13 years ago.

BUSH's VETO of rights bill sets stage for override vote.

President Bush's expected veto yesterday of civil rights legislation (S 2104) will place one more demand on the week's already jammed calendar in Congress.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., calling the veto "tragic and disgraceful," urged Congress to override the president. None of the president's previous 15 vetoes has been overridden. (See box, p. 4)

The civil rights bill veto, Kennedy said, "denies justice to millions of Americans," and the president's alternative bill was "a sham."

Bush vetoed the bill, which would make it easier for women and minorities to sue for employment discrimination, saying that the bill would foster hiring and promotion quotas as well as simply provide more business for lawyers.

While the civil rights conference report was not overwhelmingly approved — 62-34 in the Senate and 273-154 in the House — backers of the legislation hope that they can pick up additional support with Election Day just two weeks off.

DEFENSE SPENDING bill approved by House-Senate conference.

Conferees on a defense spending bill (HR 5803) for fiscal 1991 completed their work late Saturday night. The measure would appropriate $268.2 billion.

In general, the appropriations conferees approved the same funding levels for major weapons systems as conferees on the defense authorization did last week. The strategic defense initiative would receive $2.9 billion, about $1.8 billion less than President Bush had requested. The B-2 stealth bomber would get $4.1 billion but with no instructions for any additional planes beyond the 15 already under construction.

Conferees agreed on a compromise of $405 million to be used for major reconstruction of the aircraft carrier John F. Kennedy, at the Navy yard in Philadelphia, Pa. The Senate-passed bill contained $113 million for the project; the House-approved version included $963 million.

One item approved by the appropriations conferees that is not contained in the authorization bill is $1 billion to build more fast-moving cargo ships.

NEGOTIATIONS WITH White House may alter defense bill.

Members of the Senate and House Armed Services committees, negotiating with the Bush administration to avoid a veto of the fiscal 1991 defense authorization bill (HR 4739), may have agreed to make changes in the legislation to placate the president.

Defense authorization conferees reached an agreement on a bill last week and have been working since then to issue their written report.

One Republican source said that negotiators had agreed on a provision that would allow Defense Secretary Dick Cheney to cut fewer troops than the conference agreement calls for. That agreement would cut 100,000 troops in fiscal 1991 — a much deeper cut than Bush wants.

The new accord would give Cheney some flexibility in this area, letting him cut as few as 81,000 troops.

This would leave two provisions in the bill that the Bush administration dislikes — some restrictive language on the strategic defense initiative and the wording on a base-closing measure. House Republicans, complaining that they were left out of the conference, had urged the president to veto the bill.

RECONCILIATION: Many subgroups wrap up negotiations.

House and Senate negotiations on the five-year $250 billion deficit-reduction bill (HR 5835) continued on several fronts yesterday.

Fifty-three senators and 65 members of the House are on one or more of the subconferences that have been formed to negotiate over specific items in the bill.

While most of the attention has been focused on the efforts of the leaders of the Senate Finance and House Ways and Means committees to reach agreement on proposals to increase taxes and reduce Medicare spending, many other committees have been able to complete work on their relatively minor portions of the omnibus reconciliation bill.

Agriculture: The House and Senate Agriculture committees agreed to a package of cuts totaling $13.6 billion as part of the final conference committee action on the farm bill (S 2830).

Most of the savings — an estimated $7 billion — would be achieved by reducing by 15 percent the amount of acreage on which farmers could receive subsidies. Another $1 billion would be gained by changing the formula for calculating farmer income subsidies. A reduction in direct lending by the Farmers Home Administration would result in $1.6 billion in savings.

Banking: The House and Senate Banking panels yesterday reached agreement on a big chunk of their part of the reconciliation bill. The package will contain an increase in bank insurance premiums, overhaul the Federal Housing Administration and increase fees for administering federal crime and flood insurance.

Conferees agreed to clarify the authority of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) to borrow from the Federal Financing Bank.

Issues still pending at press time last night were Senate efforts to include a coin redesign bill and to give the FDIC and the Resolution Trust Corporation first crack at the proceeds from suits against crooked savings and loan operators.

Civil Service: The Senate Governmental Affairs and House Post Office panels today plan to resolve the few remaining minor issues on their similar proposals to save $14.35 billion over five years.

Judiciary: With no substantial differences to resolve, the Senate and House Judiciary panels have wrapped up their part of the conference. The panels would save $495 million over five years by making the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office a wholly self-sufficient, user-financed operation.

Key elements of the plan include the elimination of lump-sum retirement benefits and the overhaul of federal employee health benefits.

Veterans: Members of the House and Senate Veterans' Affairs committees approved reconciliation proposals that reduce veterans' pensions, benefits and rehabilitation services while increasing the fees they must pay for preferential federal loans. The two packages differed only slightly. The cuts were designed to save $3.5 billion over five years, slightly more than required under the budget resolution.

The packages would limit inheritance of benefits; reduce education benefits; reduce pensions to veterans in nursing homes; eliminate the presumption of disability, and associated benefits, when a veteran turns 65; cancel benefits for surviving spouses who have remarried; reduce the government's Medicare copayment obligations; increase home loan fees by 0.75 percent; and limit vocational rehabilitation services.

TREASURY DELAYS auction, as borrowings reach debt ceiling.

The Treasury Department yesterday postponed a $19.2 billion auction of 13-week and 26-week bills because the Treasury has borrowed as much as it legally can.

It was the second auction within a week to be delayed because the debt ceiling has been reached. The Treasury on Thursday postponed an auction of $10.75 billion in 52-week bills.

An increase in the debt ceiling is contained in the reconciliation bill (HR 5835) now in conference.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION conference completed.

House and Senate lawmakers wrapped up action on legislation (HR 486) to reauthorize the Defense Production Act yesterday.

The 1950 act aims to give the president broad authority to ensure defense-related production in times of national emergency. The administration has the authority to ration certain strategic materials and to provide purchase guarantees to ensure production of vital defense products.

Lawmakers also agreed to attach legislation designed to pressure foreign countries to open up their financial markets to U.S. banks.

Under the measure, if the Treasury Department issued a finding that U.S. banks operating abroad were not given fair access to markets, U.S. banking regulators could reject the bank applications of institutions from that country.

The policy — called "reciprocal national treatment" — differs from the current U.S. policy of treating foreign banks essentially the same as domestic banks. The administration has opposed the change in policy on the grounds that it could have an adverse effect if countries retaliated and restricted U.S. banks' access to their markets.

MATH, SCIENCE measure gains negotiators' approval.

Conferees yesterday reached agreement on legislation (HR 996) that would establish new programs to promote better math, science and engineering education.

The three-year authorization would provide $17 million in fiscal 1991 to establish 10 regional consortiums on math, science and engineering education. It would also establish a clearinghouse at the Department of Education that would, among other things, act as a depository for information on teaching methods for math and science.

Also authorized in the measure would be three new scholarship programs. One, the National Science Scholars, would give $5,000 a year for four years to two students (one of whom must be a woman) from each congressional district for outstanding work in math, science or engineering.

The other two scholarship programs would provide grants in exchange for agreements either to work in the fields of science, math or engineering or to teach in these fields for two years for each year a scholarship was received.

The measure would provide funding for an additional 100 National Science Foundation scholarships — an increase of about $2 million in fiscal 1991 — for a total of $37.9 million in fiscal 1991.

Finally, the legislation directs the Office of Science and Technology to prepare a five-year plan to support and coordinate federal interagency activities relating to math, science and engineering education.

ANIMAL RESEARCH lab protection bill advances in House.

The House Agriculture Committee yesterday approved a bill (HR 3270) to make it a federal offense to damage an animal research facility. The legislation is in response to recent attacks on such laboratories by animal rights activists who claim that animals used in experiments there are being needlessly harmed and killed.

It provides for a maximum 20 years' imprisonment and various fines for theft of animals or other property, damage to facilities and trespassing. It also calls for a study by the attorney general and Agriculture secretary into the effects of domestic and international terrorism on animal research labs.

ETHICS PANEL announces new allegations against Lukens.

The House ethics committee yesterday announced it had expanded the scope of its original probe of Rep. Donald E. "Buz" Lukens, R-Ohio, to include new allegations that he "may have made unwanted and unsolicited sexual advances to a congressional employee."

Lukens has been ordered to appear before the panel this afternoon.

Lukens was convicted in 1989 on a misdemeanor charge stemming from a sexual liaison with a minor in Ohio. He was defeated for re-election in the May 8 Republican primary. The ethics committee — formerly known as the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct — began a preliminary inquiry into those allegations, but had not commented on the probe.

Under normal circumstances — with Lukens destined to leave Congress at the end of the year — the probe would have been dropped in the absence of new allegations.

KEATING FIVE judgment is 'inexcusably delayed,' McCain says.

Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., in a Senate floor speech yesterday urged the Ethics Committee to decide this week on whether or not to continue its probe of five senators who were involved with Charles H. Keating, Jr., the former thrift operator.

"Justice delayed is justice denied," McCain said, regarding the lengthy investigation focusing on him and fellow Sens. John Glenn, D-Ohio; Donald W. Riegle Jr., D-Mich.; Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz.; and Alan Cranston, D-Calif.

"And this decision has been frustratingly and inexcusably delayed," McCain added.

McCain additionally urged that the committee make public the report and recommendations of its special counsel, Robert S. Bennett.

McCain also referred to reports that the committee investigation was being prolonged deliberately for political reasons.

But Ethics Committee Chairman Howell Heflin, D-Ala., denied the veracity of any such reports. Heflin said that demands on the Senate's calendar are the reason for the delay in committee action.

Last week Sen. Trent Lott, R-Miss., lashed out at the committee, of which he is a member, saying he felt like he was "an accomplice to a crime" because of the delays in committee action.

Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., urged the panel to "do it now." He said a judgment on the case should be made before adjournment, projected by Dole to be in the latter part of the week.

Correction: Monday's edition of the Monitor erroneously reported that the Senate had approved the nomination of George Fleming Jones as ambassador to the South American nation of Guyana.

Jones' name was not among the some 20 foreign service nominees approved by voice vote by the Senate in the early morning hours of Oct. 19. Jones, whose nomination is opposed by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., remains unconfirmed by the Senate. ■

COUNCIL OF ECONOMIC ADVISERS

From: Mike Boskin MB

Re: Advance durable shipments and orders

Advance orders for durable goods decreased 1.7 percent in September. These data usually give a preview of future production plans. Motor vehicles, electrical machinery and communication equipment declined the most. Aircraft orders remain strong. Shipments of durable goods declined 3.0 percent, mostly due to a decline in motor vehicles.

These big ticket durable goods orders and shipments, which are sensitive to interest rates, remain quite weak.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRESIDENT

FROM: MICHAEL J. BOSKIN

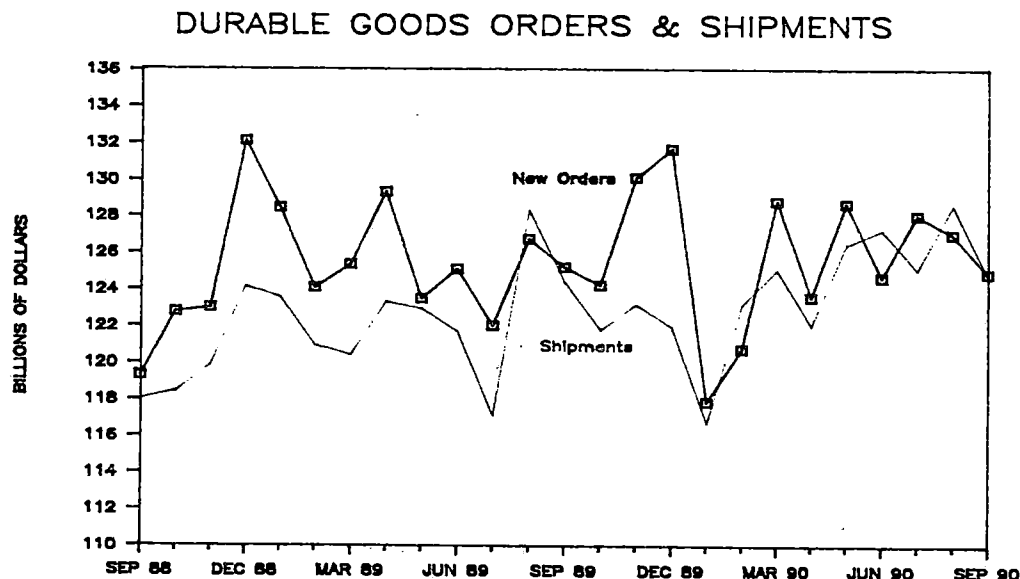

SUBJECT: Advance Durable Goods in September, Commerce
Department Release, Tomorrow Morning, 8:30 a.m.

New orders for manufactured durable goods decreased 1.7 percent in September, following an 0.8 percent decline in August. The September decline exceeded the average of private analysts' projections for a 0.2 percent decline. Durable goods orders have fallen in three of the last four months. However, new orders for nondefense capital goods increased 6.3 percent in September.

Within major industries, the pattern of change was mixed. Orders for transportation equipment were down, led by declines in motor vehicles and parts and shipbuilding. Nonelectrical machinery orders rose, with office and computing equipment posting the largest increase.

Shipments of durable goods dropped 3 percent in September, with most of the decrease occurring in motor vehicles and parts. Primary metals and nonelectrical machinery shipments also fell. Shipments of office and computing equipment, however, were up 3.7 percent during the month.

The graph below indicates that new orders have shown little increase on average for the last several months.

Little Bush fan gets big reward

Dover boy gets presidential pic and letter

By JILL M. ARESON
Democrat Staff Writer

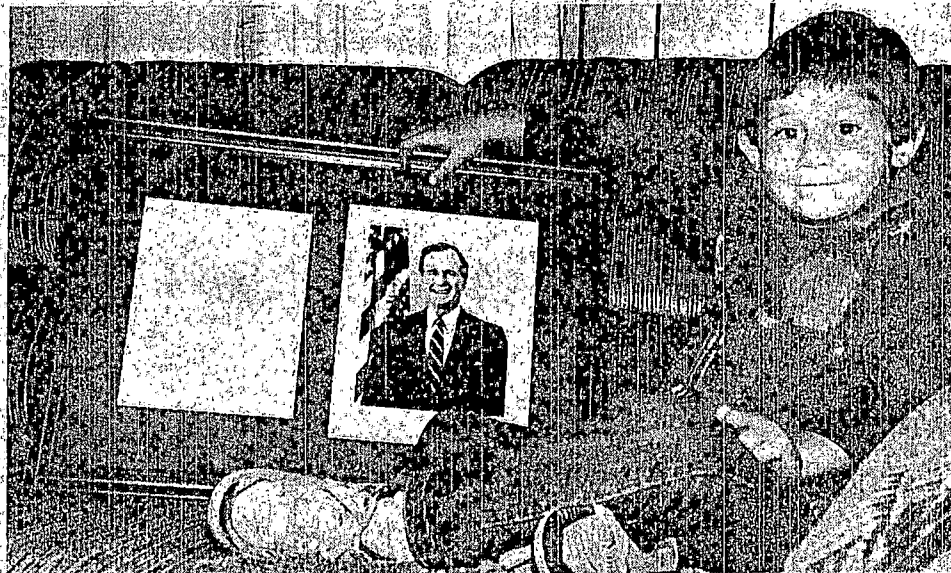

DOVER — Five-year-old Ford Natirboff likes President George Bush "because he makes our country free," and the boy's loyalty was recently rewarded with a letter from the president.

The local youth received the letter several weeks ago from Bush. The move was spurred by Ford's grandmother, Geraldine Sylvester, director of the state's Office of Alcohol and Drug Abuse. Ms. Sylvester was meeting with the president to discuss the nation's drug problem when she informed the president of his biggest fan in Dover.

The president's letter is framed along with a picture of the president, and hangs on the living room wall. In the letter, Bush says Ford's grandmother told him Ford "was one of my strongest supporters last year and that you were absolutely confident that I would win. I sure am glad you were on my side."

Ford said he learns about Bush and other events from television and actually saw the president arriving at Pease Air Force Base.

Another reason Ford said he likes Bush is "because he's the government." Messages of the president that the 5-year-old remembers in particular is "stopping litterbugs and helping (stop) drugs."

Although Ford said he did not know much about former President Ronald Reagan, he does know that presidents are supposed to help people.

"If I could be president I would free the country and maybe some other country that wasn't," he said.

In this country, freedom means

"you can go where you want and do anything you want," according to Ford.

Ford's family is not new to politics, said Lisa Fadley, Ford's mother.

"I was brought up in a very Republican family," Ms. Fadley said. "We were very politically minded."

"When you get into my family you can't help but become political," she said. Her husband, Doug, was a Democrat when she first met him but now identifies himself as a Republican, she joked.

The mother and son talked about the recent release of East German citizens from their Soviet-dominated country.

"The government let them go," Ford said. "Do you think some of them are coming to our country?" he asked his mother. With a "maybe" response from his mother, the boy was encouraged. "Yeah, we'll have to meet some."

Stewart Smith, GOP Leader, Succumbs at 70

By JULIE HOOGLAND

Stewart A. Smith, a three-term state senator, longtime car dealer and influential Republican from Rutland, died early Tuesday morning in his home after a long illness. He was 70.

Smith had been ill with cancer for more than a year.

A leader in state Republican Party politics for decades, Smith was the national committeeman from Vermont at the time of his death.

He had also been state chairman of George Bush's presidential campaigns and James Jeffords' many congressional campaigns.

Smith was state party chairman during the early 1970s. He (See Page 12: Smith)

Smith

served as senator from Rutland County from 1979-84 and was elected Senate majority leader in 1981.

Friends and officials throughout Rutland County and the state remembered Smith as a community-minded man known for his honesty, good-humor, and service to the party.

"I think his kindness stands out, his honesty and his kindness," said Mary Wing of Rutland, a friend and a party activist. "His word was his bond."

"I think he was as community-minded as anybody you could name," said former Gov. Richard A. Snelling, who considered Smith a political adviser. Smith was in the Senate during Snelling's administration, and the two worked together in party politics for 20 years.

"He had a great sense of humor," Snelling said. "But he was a very demanding person with high standards. He wasn't the kind of person you threw an opinion at lightly. He was perfectly capable of saying, 'That's silly.' He was a thoughtful, probing, concerned person. I'm going to miss him."

Snelling also called Smith one of the most effective fund-raisers in the state, both for the party and charitable causes. "He was a premier Republican fund-raiser," he said.

Republican Rep. Madeline B. Harwood of Manchester, who has known Smith for 40 years, remembered Smith as a "considerate man" with an outgoing and friendly campaign style.

Harwood and Smith served together in the Senate and on the Republican National Committee. The policy-setting national committee meets twice a year and consists of three people from each state: a national committeeman, a national committeewoman, and the state party chairman.

"He was a very strong individual. He's going to be greatly missed," Harwood said.

Smith is the second major political figure Rutlanders have lost recently. Former Rutland Mayor and Sen. Gilbert G. Godnick, one of Smith's closest friends, died seven weeks ago.

While Godnick was often in the spotlight, Smith labored more in the background, friends remembered.

"He was rather quiet, and he never sought personal glory," Wing said. "When he sought the chairmanship of the party or when he ran for national committeeman, it was a sincere desire to help his constituency."

Smith had his share of battles in state party politics.

He resigned as state chairman in 1975 following a long fight with the national committeeman at the time, Roland Q. Seward of Wallingford, a political opponent who differed with Smith on party philosophy. Smith, a longtime Bush supporter, was also targeted for ouster as national committeeman by supporters of Ronald Reagan when Bush and Reagan were opponents.

One of Smith's goals during his tenure in his GOP leadership posts was to broaden the party.

"He was a staunch Republican, although not a rigid one," Wing said. "He felt there was room for everyone in the party."

"He did not like to be labeled as a conservative," Wing added. "He used to say, 'I'm a conservative, but I'm really quite moderate.'" Smith's support of Jeffords and Bush, neither considered conservative Republicans, was evidence of that.

Wing said Smith was a fiscal conservative, but that he was generous in his support of social programs for the needy.

However, he felt there was often wasted spending at the state level, she said.

Smith, a native of White River Junction, lived in Rutland County for more than 40 years. His car business on Route 7, a Buick, GMC and BMW dealership, was more than 30 years old when he sold it in 1988. At the time, Smith was trying to re-enter politics with a bid for his former Senate seat. He lost that election.

Smith graduated from the University of Oregon and served with the U.S. Army during World War II. He was a member of several Rutland service organizations, including the Masons, Elks, Moose Lodge, Veterans of Foreign Wars and the American Legion.

His wife, Priscilla Smith, is also active in Republican politics. The Smiths have one son, Allen N. Smith of Rutland.

The funeral service will be at 10 a.m. Thursday at the Trinity Episcopal Church.

Stewart Smith Deserving

Though Stewart Smith didn't make much of it, George Bush had called him several times during his long fight with cancer that ended last Tuesday. Smith and Bush knew each other well and, after all, the president owed him a considerable amount. Smith had chaired Bush's Vermont campaigns, was Vermont's Republican national committeeman and had hosted candidate Bush at his home during campaigns. But Bush called Smith basically because he cared and that says something nice about George Bush.

Stewart Smith deserved a call from a president because he was a good man. I got to know Smith long ago when I covered politics for the Rutland Herald and I found him a man of his word, a man with a good sense of humor, with no outsize opinions of himself. And we both shared a deep interest in the Civil War.

It was the party of the Civil War president Abraham Lincoln that Smith loved, the Republican philosophy that says any person ought be allowed to make as much of themselves as possible. At times, some Republicans interpret that to mean full speed ahead and devil take the hindmost. But Smith always had an eye of concern on those toward the back of the pack. And when he quarreled with his one time old friend Roland Seward about party philosophy, broader based versus narrow based control, well, Stewart would often tell me that his blood pressure was alarmingly high. He still kept up the fight.

And he was still fighting the last time I saw him, three days before he died. He insisted on rising to his feet when I entered the room, though I had to help him, and he kissed my hand when I left and, through his pain, managed a weak smile. There were no pretenses. He bravely faced the end. He told his last callers we were saying final goodbyes. I will miss him. A lot of people in Vermont are now saying that.

So, too, I guess, is a U.S. president. I'm glad that any person who ends up with the massive job of trying to run this country has such friends. Certainly, I know I'm glad Stewart Smith was my friend.

3:30 P.M. EDT NEWS UPDATE

BUDGET (UPI) -- ...Democratic leaders conceded they did not have enough support to pass the proposed budget plan and prepared to resume negotiations with the Senate and the Administration.... "We're halfway there because half the members were supportive," said Rep. Rostenkowski.... Rep. Gephardt said the "two dominant messages" from the Democrats were opposition to the Republican plan to limiting deductions for the wealthy and opposition to further cuts in Medicare.... Rep. Panetta said Democrats do not want to go beyond the House figures [on Medicare]. That "is very much a bottom line that we cannot move from," he said. Rostenkowski said Democratic leaders have warned the Administration it must compromise further in order to win Democratic votes in the House, "but that keeps falling on deaf ears."

ANTI-TAX (UPI) -- Citizens Against Government Waste is calling on citizens to gather in cities across the nation this weekend to express their anger at the government's failure to end the budget impasse. The anti-tax group said it hopes to rally thousands to join in sending Washington pols "a message that they are fed up with the current generation of politicians" and "inept leadership."

INCOME/STATES (UPI) -- U.S. personal income growth increased by only 1.3 percent in the second quarter, primarily because of a slowdown in the Plains, the West and the Southeast regions, a Commerce Department survey said.

CIVIL RIGHTS BILL (AP) ...Senate sponsors were shooting for an override vote as early as Wednesday, but the timing was uncertain.

FRANKS/CIVIL RIGHTS (AP) -- ...During a debate Sunday night in Connecticut, Democratic former Rep. Toby Moffet said it was a disgrace that his congressional campaign opponent, Republican Gary Franks, opposed the civil rights bill. "Do not talk to me about civil rights," said Franks, who is black. "I had a cross burned in front of my house" when he was 9 years old.

GULF/U.S. FORCES (AP) -- The Pentagon said it is nearing a decision on whether to send additional U.S. troops to the Persian Gulf beyond the more than 210,000 already there. Spokesman Pete Williams told reporters Gen. Colin Powell would recommend whether to extend the buildup when he returns Thursday from Saudi Arabia.

GULF/IRAQ (Baghdad/Reuter) -- Iraq said it was ready to talk to any country which did not want to wage war against it. Foreign Minister Aziz told the Iraqi News Agency: "(Iraq)...accepts dialogue with any Arab or international party whose mind is not preoccupied with predetermined aggressive intentions."

GULF/SAUDIS (AP) -- Saudi Arabia's ambassador was summoned to the State Department today, where he denied the kingdom wants Kuwait to yield territory to Iraq in order to defuse the Gulf crisis. Saddam Hussein "should not be under any illusion," Prince Bandar told reporters as he arrived for a meeting with Secretary Baker. "This is a decision for the Kuwaitis, not for us. But we don't think aggression should be rewarded."

Hungary? Only dinner at White House will do

Add budget skirmishes to the prospect of war in Iraq and endless campaign-trail appearances, and it's easy to see why President Bush hasn't entertained much lately. But when Hungarian Prime Minister Jozsef Antall came to town Thursday, only a White House state dinner would do.

"Americans admire Hungarians, whose deeds so inspire us," Mr. Bush told Mr. Antall during the toast, citing Nobel Prize winners, Olympic medalists and composers Liszt and Bartok.

Mr. Antall responded that Hungarians hold Americans, and particularly Mr. Bush, in equally high esteem. In light of Mr. Bush's recent decline in popularity polls, the compliment seemed backhanded when he said, "Mr. President, if you don't have a chance to be a third-time president of the United States, I'm sure the Hungarian nation would willingly elect you as president."

After dinner, Mr. Bush playfully turned the budget question back to the press, saying, "I want advice from you. What should I do?" When reporters began to give it, however, he escaped, saying, "Where's Mr. Costner?"

Mr. Costner was Kevin Costner, who had spirited Redskins quarterback Mark Rypien away for a tutoring session in throwing techniques. Barbara Bush was doing some throwing of her own. Despite wearing ing a blue-sequined ball gown, she pulled her leg up to her chest, slung her arm behind her and let fly an imaginary baseball just like the one she threw out for the second game of the World Series last week.

Meanwhile, former Miami Dolphin Larry Csonka discussed a strategy he and his wife, Nancy, had worked out for hooking sports and his Hungarian heritage together. "We're going to Hungary next April and I'm going to get involved in import-export trading. I'm hoping to carry a few NFL goodies over there."

Like Mr. Csonka, designer Adrienne Vittadini said she would be doing business there next year. But Mrs. Bush's press secretary, Anna Perez, said she thought Mrs. Vittadini's line was doing just fine here at home. "I've got tons of them," she said. "They travel like gangbusters and I do a lot of traveling."

The after-dinner entertainment for guests, including David Souter, Civil War historian Barbara Fields, hydrogen bomb inventor Edward Teller, Secretary of State James Baker and his wife, Susan, and Tony Curtis, was a performance by pianist Van Cliburn. With dancing still to come, the Bushes quickly headed for the upper quarters, leaving the 1990 Miss America, Marjorie Vincent as the most sought-after partner on the dance floor.

DON'T forget to stop by the Park Avenue Armory Antiques Show when a retrospective of the fabulous faux-jewels of Kenneth Jay Lane takes place on Friday, Saturday and Sunday. At least 400 exceptional pieces he designed from 1960 to 1990 will be on view, delighting collectors of vintage costume jewelry and the rest of us.

After all, Kenny Lane's jewels have been worn by such glamorati as Rosalind Russell, the Duchess of Windsor, Diana Vreeland (the sale of Diana's KJL collection fetched a pretty penny at Sotheby's), Jacqueline Onassis, Elizabeth Taylor, Joan Collins and many more.

Kenny Lane sold his first earrings to Bonwit Teller in 1963 and, presto, he was a star! Now Barbara Bush wears his pearls — and they are also in the permanent collection of the Smithsonian.

The treasure trove of luxurious pieces, including many modern interpretations of 18th century French and Moghul-inspired pieces and his jeweled animals, is being presented under the auspices of the Little Shop of Antiques in New York. Kenny himself will be there in the flesh from 3 to 5 Saturday afternoon.

Costner and Bush exchange expertise

KEVIN Costner went to Washington last week — and even President Bush asked for an audience. Costner, who visited the nation's capital to premiere his new film "Dances With Wolves" and be "adopted" by the Lakota Sioux Indians, spent an hour walking the White House grounds with his wife, Cindy, their three kids, the President, Barbara Bush and the First Dog, Millie. "We just walked around and talked about things like fishing and dogs," Costner told PAGE SIX. The previous night, the actor and Bush also talked "a little bit about Kuwait" at a dinner the President held for Hungary's prime minister. According to the local press, Bush also told Costner that he didn't quite "understand" his film "Field of Dreams." When we asked him the following day if he had cleared up the "Dreams" thing with Bush, Costner tactfully replied, "You'll have to talk to him about that." At the film's premiere, while Washington powerbrokers preened for the paparazzi outside the theater, Hollywood powerbroker Mike Ovitz slipped inside unnoticed. The Creative Artists Agency boss, who's held the hand of many an insecure star, this time held the hands of Costner's children to make sure they got into the theater safely. Also taking in the film were Philadelphia Eagle Jim McMahon, Baltimore Oriole Cal Ripkin Jr. and Guess model Claudia Schiffer, who proclaimed "Dances with Wolves" "the best movie I have ever seen."

GULF/FAHD (Beijing/UPI) -- King Fahd urged Saddam Hussein to withdraw from Kuwait and said he would not lose face if he did, according to news reports. The statement appeared to be Saudi Arabia's most conciliatory message yet to him.... "It would be nothing to cause anxiety or pain," Fahd told the Saudi Press Agency. "But to the contrary if President Saddam thought seriously about the matter, he will find that it is in the interest of Iraq, in his interest, and in the interest of the Arab nation that he pull out from Kuwait."

GULF/AL-MASHAT (Reuter) -- The Iraqi ambassador to the U.S. welcomed a remark by Saudi Arabia's defense minister that suggested a willingness to let Iraq keep some Kuwaiti territory as an outlet on the Persian Gulf. "This bespeaks of readiness to negotiate which was always the case with us," Ambassador al-Mashat said in an interview on "Good Morning America." He said Iraq wanted to negotiate a peaceful settlement and was sticking to a demand that negotiations take place before any eventual withdrawal, "and so this is a helpful sign."

GULF/France (Paris/Reuter) -- France rejected any negotiations with Iraq on releasing French hostages, but said it would immediately repatriate them if they were freed unilaterally.... "The taking of hostages is odious. Their liberation is merely an atonement for that inadmissible act. France cannot lend itself to any negotiation whatsoever on this issue," the Foreign Ministry said.

(UPI) -- France is sending 500 more soldiers as well as additional combat tanks and helicopters to Saudi Arabia, raising to 5,500 the number of French troops there, military sources said.

ANC/ZULUS (Johannesburg/AP) -- In a conciliatory move aimed at ending black factional fighting, the ANC has proposed a meeting between Nelson Mandela and rival black leader Mangosuthu Buthelezi, saying the meeting should take place in the "near future."

PALESTINIANS (Jerusalem/AP) -- A Palestinian truck driver stabbed two unarmed women soldiers in northern Israel in a third straight day of Arab knifing attacks, police and radio reports said.

(Reuter) -- Defense Minister Arens predicted growing violence in Jerusalem and the occupied territories.

FIGHTER CRASH (Seoul/Reuter) -- A U.S. F-16 jet fighter on a training mission crashed Tuesday in a remote hilly area in South Korea but the pilot bailed out safely, Yonhap News Agency said.

CHINA (Beijing/AP) -- China's guardians of Marxist ideology announced a new campaign against pornography and Western liberalism and said they would press on with an anti-crime drive in which hundreds have been executed.

(Beijing/UPI) -- China praised the partial lifting of political sanctions imposed by the EC, calling the move a "wise decision."... "This is beneficial not only for China but for the world," the statement said.

1:00 P.M. EDT NEWS UPDATE

BUDGET (Burlington/Tom Raum, AP) -- President Bush...defended his support for unpopular higher taxes and spending cuts. He said the days of "damn the deficit must come to an end." "We're hanging tough for a good agreement," Bush said. He said he hoped a budget package he can support would be crafted by Wednesday's midnight deadline. "We've got a sluggish economy out there nationally."

(Burlington/Laurence McQuillan, Reuter) -- President Bush...defended the emerging budget package in Congress as the best possible even if it contains tax hikes and spending cuts he doesn't like.... "I've had to swallow hard, but the long-term health of the United States of America and our economy has to come before self-interests," he said.... "Real deficit reduction will bring interest rates down."

(Burlington/Thomas Ferraro, UPI) -- Faced with slumping polls and a sluggish economy, President Bush pointed to the budget mess in Washington as proof why GOP numbers must be increased this November in the Democratic-controlled Congress.... "There is no doubt in my mind: Congress wouldn't be in the mess today if we had more Republicans in the Congress," Bush told a morning fundraiser for Rep. Peter Smith.... "My message before the election is going to be this: Only Congress has the power to tax. Only Congress has the power to spend. But Congress may have forgotten one thing: The people have the power to choose who sits in the Congress and that's a message I am going to take all over this country."

(AP) -- House Democrats were badly split today over a deficit-reduction plan that would raise gasoline taxes, boost Medicare costs and limit deductions of higher-income Americans. "We asked for a show of hands on support for the package and it was right down the middle -- 50-50," Rep. Rostenkowski told reporters after a caucus of House Democrats. "That's not good, not good at all."... He said the biggest problem among Democrats was a plan pushed by the Administration and House Republicans which would limit the itemized deductions of people with incomes over $100,000. Democrats prefer to impose a surtax on incomes over $1 million.

(AP) -- ...Asked if agreement were near, Rep. Gray said, "Who knows, lightning might strike at any moment."... House Democrats met with their rank and file to discuss the proposals to raise taxes on the richest Americans. "We want to talk to them about how to bring the wealthy in, what the Administration says it wants to do," Gray said.... "Not yet," Sen. Mitchell replied when asked whether a tentative agreement had been reached.

(UPI) -- Budget Committee member Rep. Slattery said President Bush's position on a surtax for millionaires was "absolutely incredible" and said it "is not going to sell in this country." But Slattery added on the "Fox Morning News" that he thought cuts in Medicare could be made without "devastating the program."

CIVIL RIGHTS BILL (AP) -- Senate sponsors are launching a long-shot effort to override President Bush's civil rights bill veto.... The Senate planned an override vote today, but sponsors appeared at least two votes short.

GULF/PRESIDENT (Burlington/Gene Gibbons, Reuter) -- President Bush, comparing Iraq's invasion of Kuwait to Hitler's invasion of Poland, declared there could be no compromise solution to the Gulf crisis. "There can never be compromise, any compromise, with this kind of aggression," he said during a campaign speech for Republican congressional candidate Peter Smith. In an impassioned and at times emotional appeal for continued public support, he said world order was at stake. "It isn't oil that we're concerned about, it is aggression, and this aggression is not going to stand."

GULF/HOSTAGES (AP) -- Fourteen Americans left Baghdad for Jordan today after being freed by Saddam Hussein's government.

GULF/POWELL (Dhahran/Reuter) -- Gen. Colin Powell said Iraqi troops remain solidly entrenched in Kuwait and show no signs of pulling back. "The Iraqi forces remain very solidly in Kuwait in the numbers we have been reporting all along. And frankly, I have not seen any evidence of withdrawal," Powell said in a brief interview near the end of a two-day trip to Saudi Arabia.... Powell refused to answer questions about reports that U.S. military leaders believe they need two more tank divisions in Saudi Arabia. But he described himself as "enormously pleased" with the U.S. buildup.

GULF/SAUDI (UPI) -- Saudi Defense Minister Sultan Bin Abdul Aziz, who seemed to suggest Kuwait should give Iraq two Persian Gulf islands in return for peace, said his remarks were misinterpreted and that he favored withdrawal of Iraqi troops from all of Kuwait.

GULF/MISSILES (Cairo/Reuter) -- Iraq's capture of advanced American missiles during the invasion of Kuwait is a headache for U.S.-led forces in the Persian Gulf, posing an unexpected threat to allied combat aircraft, analysts say. The Iraqis are now armed with Hawk anti-aircraft missiles.... "It's very troublesome," said a U.S. military analyst. "We could lose aircraft if war breaks out. But it doesn't change the equation of power in the Gulf."

SADDAM/DREAM (AP) -- ...A Kuwaiti newspaper in Saudi Arabia, Al-Seyassah, reported Monday that Saddam Hussein dreamed the prophet Mohammed appeared before him and told him his country's missiles "were pointed in the wrong direction." They're aimed at Saudi Arabia.... Middle East observers said the dream report indicated Saddam could be preparing his people for a withdrawal from Kuwait, and the newspaper said Iraqi intelligence was spreading the story around Baghdad in an apparent attempt to prepare Iraqis psychologically for a pullout from Kuwait. The report could not be independently confirmed, and the newspaper is an arm of the Kuwaiti government-in-exile.

(Headline News) -- President Bush responded to news of the dream this morning. He said, "No comment on dreams. I have enough problems dealing with reality."
