BUSH SAYS HE'LL TAKE MILITARY ACTION AGAINST HUSSEIN IF PROVOKED

SAN FRANCISCO -- President Bush said Monday that if provoked by Saddam Hussein, he would not hesitate to take military action against Iraq and, if necessary, would do so without congressional approval.

"History is replete with examples where the president has had to take action. I've done this in the past and -- somebody mentioned provocation -- would have no hesitancy at all," he said in response to questions about congressional approval of any military action.

Reminding reporters that he ordered U.S. troops into combat in Panama last December, Bush said, "I am as determined as I ever have been that this aggression will not stand."...

Bush's comments coincided with hard-line comments by secretary Baker. Speaking in Los Angeles to the Los Angeles World Affairs Council, Baker said the U.S. "will not rule out" the use of military force if Saddam's forces do not surrender Kuwait....

An Administration official called the hard-line tone of Bush's and Baker's speeches...coincidental and not part of a coordinated strategy.

(Kathy Lewis, Dallas Morning News)

Bush Asserts Presidential Primacy In Gulf Policy

SAN FRANCISCO -- President Bush, edging toward possible conflict with Congress over U.S. policy in the Persian Gulf, indicated Monday that he would not hesitate to make a unilateral decision on the use of military force.

"History is replete with examples when the President had to take action" alone, the President told reporters after a private San Francisco breakfast for gubernatorial candidate Pete Wilson....

Taking questions from reporters before heading home to Washington, the President denied that the Administration's tough talk was an effort to prepare the country for war.

"I'm not preparing anybody for anything," said Bush, who reiterated his hopes for a peaceful resolution of the gulf conflict....

"I know the authorities that a president has," Bush said. "History is replete with examples where the president has had to take action. I've done this in the past, and certainly -- somebody mentioned provocations -- we'd have no hesitancy at all."

(Mark Barabak, Copley)

U.S. Hasn't Ruled Out Use Of Force

President Bush and Secretary Baker both warned Monday that the U.S. has not ruled out using military force to drive President Saddam 's soldiers out of Kuwait.

Speaking to reporters at a brief news conference at the San Francisco airport, Bush answered "no" when asked if he is preparing the U.S. for a military clash with Iraq and was evasive when asked if he thought continued tensions would lead to war.

"I'm just doing my job as President of the United States," said Bush. "I'm not preparing anybody for anything. I am determined as I've ever been that this aggression will not stand."

Bush said he will meet Tuesday with congressional leaders, Secretary Cheney and Gen. Powell to discuss the crisis, including the possibility of sending 100,000 more troops to the gulf and the President's responsibility to notify Congress of military confrontation under the War powers Act.

"I am working very hard to get this mater resolved peacefully. We have a lot of force there and they're well trained," said Bush. "They are highly motivated, and that alone is sending an enormously strong signal to Saddam Hussein." (San Francisco Chronicle, A1)

BUSH ISN'T EVERYBODY'S SCAPEGOAT

SAN FRANCISCO -- Ken Buksa, irate taxpayer, had a message for President Bush as he flew into the Bay Area Monday for a campaign appearance.

But it probably wasn't what Mr. Bush expected. On the sign in front of the Clarion Hotel next to the airport, Mr. Buksa had spelled out a message: "Mr. President -- We All Like To Criticize. But None Of Us Wants Your Job."

It's not that Mr. Buksa, a hotel manager, is happy with the federal budget package. "I have the tax increase like everyone else," he explained. "But I think he's getting most of the blame when it's not like anyone else has a solution."

And he's not alone.

Mr. Bush's popularity rating may have plummeted to an all-time low, but Americans as individuals seem reluctant to blame him personally for the budget debacle, according to those traditional monitors of the American pulse, the nation's bartenders and radio talk-show hosts.

Instead, many people seem to be taking out their frustrations on institutions -- like Congress and the federal government -- and incumbents in general, rather than focusing their anger on individual representatives.

(Valerie Richardson, Washington Times, A3)

BUSH DRAWS HIS SWORD TO SLASH 'GOSSIPY' PENS

SAN FRANCISCO -- A frustrated President Bush blasted "mischievous, gossipy reporting" on recent White House actions Monday as he tried to reverse the swelling public disapproval of his handling of the economy.

During an impromptu news conference here, Mr. Bush also increased his attack on the Democratic-driven budget deal he signed last week, promising an all-out offensive on Democrats until next week's midterm congressional elections.

His five-day campaign swing was peppered with punches at Democrats, but Monday Mr. Bush launched a tirade against reporters. He ridiculed the scribes for focusing on "inside the Beltway" bickering among his senior staff members, who have counseled different political strategies to revive Mr. Bush's slumping presidency.

He singled out stories in Monday's newspapers, which indicated his anger with Chief of Staff Sununu and others and which described a split inside the Bush Administration over how to handle the tax issue.

"Please don't give any credence to this kind of mischievous, gossipy reporting when we have things like Iraq, budget deficits, enormously important elections," he told reporters during his second stop in California.

"It's just crazy," the President said while here for a fund-raising event on behalf of GOP gubernatorial hopeful Sen. Wilson. Fifty couples paid $25,000 each to attend.

(Paul Bedard, Washington Times, A1)

BUSH SAYS DEMOCRATS 'CHOKED THE ECONOMY'

OKLAHOMA CITY -- With his own poll ratings continuing to slide, President Bush fired back at the Democrats in Congress Monday, accusing them of partisan delays on the budget that "choked the economy" and put the country on the brink of recession.

Taking note of rising unemployment and inflation figures, Bush sought to shift the blame for the declining economy, telling a Republican campaign audience at the Cowboy Hall of Fame, "This Congress was content to stall an agreement and stall the economy. We are not going to let them get away with it."

Bush's speech here Monday was a prelude to a final week of campaigning as he and other Republicans try to recover from the political damage they appeared to suffer during the long budget fight. He plans another speech to a GOP rally in Washington Tuesday and will hit the road for a final campaign swing later this week.

But Bush's hectic campaigning in the final week also will be aimed at boosting his own standing, now that his once-stratospheric approval ratings have dipped sharply.

Bush tried out his new themes here Monday while campaigning for Bill Price, the Republican candidate for governor. The President charged that Congress was controlled by perpetual legislators interested more in pork-barrel perks and their own reelections than the good of the country....

"America doesn't need a liberal House of Lords," he said. "America needs a Republican Congress."

(Dan Balz, Washington Post, A12)

Bush Turns Up Rhetoric Against Democrats

President Bush, with the Nov. 6 elections just a week away, has dropped the conciliatory tone he adopted during delicate budget talks with Congress and is charging the Democrats triggered the economic slowdown by taking partisan advantage of the effort to trim the federal budget deficit.

"The Democrats choked the throttle, pulled the throttle back, of a slowing economy while they hunted for every last morsel of partisan advantage, all in the name of politics and higher taxes," Bush told a political rally in Oklahoma City Monday.

"We are not going to let them get away with it," Bush said, vowing to stump tirelessly between now and election day to win more Republican seats in Congress....

Bush told reporters he plans to repeat these themes -- and introduce new ones -- in a major political address Tuesday.

"I want to keep hammering this," the President said.

Bush's Republican Party has taken its own hammering from Democrats in recent weeks as congressional Democrats accused him and his party of favoring the rich in its budget and tax policies and then forcing him to reverse his 1988 campaign vow against new taxes....

He said that the taxes in the budget pact he had agreed to were "a ransom to get the $350 billion in spending cuts." Of the charges that the Republicans were the party of the rich, he said: "You and I both know that that's hogwash, and we're not going to let them get away with that any more." (Irwin Arieff, Reuter)

From President To Politician: Bush Attacks The Democrats

OKLAHOMA CITY -- It is not easy to run against the government you are running. It is not easy to carve up Democrats as "big taxers" when you've been huddling with the Democrats in Washington to raise taxes.

It is not easy to say you need more Republicans in Congress to help push your agenda when the White House-approved budget deal was passed mostly with Democratic votes.

But, as George Bush knows, consistency is the hobgoblin of politics. With a bipartisan budget agreement finally in place, President Bush came to the National Cowboy Hall of Fame Monday and declared that it was High Noon for Democrats.

With a sneer in his voice and the sort of Clint Eastwood-style "red meat lines" that have not been heard since the 1988 campaign, Mr. Bush began the scalding partisan attack on the "liberal" Democrats in Congress that he will be using till Election Day. He accused them of everything from stalling the economy and the budget agreement for partisan gain, to spreading "class warfare garbage," to turning their backs on police officers and the American dream, to pushing through "pork barrel bonanzas" like the Lawrence Welk tourist attraction in North Dakota.

Some Bush advisers feared that it would smack of cynicism to take a bitter and brutal tone toward the Democrats as the spend-and-tax party so soon after working with them on a budget deal that included new taxes, and that the tactic would backfire....

But Mr. Bush shrugged off questions Monday about his sagging popularity and about whether he has become a liability to Republican candidates.

(Maureen Dowd, New York Times, A1)

PRESIDENT GETS 'SHAKA'

HONOLULU -- A former teacher, Republican Rep. Pat Saiki had a class of one Sunday as she explained to President Bush the "shaka" sign.

Saiki, who rode with Bush from the Hilton Hawaiian Village to Hickam AFB, said she suggested that Bush use the sign when waiving to crowds lining the streets.

Bush asked what the hand gesture meant after he noticed fans waving at him.

"Where does that sign come from? It apparently is very popular," Bush said, according to Saiki.

"They will understand, Mr. President, if you give them the 'shaka' sign," Saiki told Bush.

"How do you spell it?" Bush asked, as he started to wave back using thumb and pinkie.
(Honolulu Star-Bulletin)

3 ISLAND YOUTHS HAPPY TO PLAY IN BUSH LEAGUE

HONOLULU -- Bored with Nintendo football, three Honolulu youths headed for the beach with a real football and had a night to remember tossing it with President Bush.

"He just walked up and said, 'Right here guys,' and we threw," said Jason Schwartz.

Blinded by camera lights, Bush missed the first catch, asking, "Where'd it go?"

Finding the ball, he tossed it back for another round and caught the second pass....

Bush was flanked by Secret Service agents who tried to keep him moving, but he wasn't in a hurry.

"Well, this is fun, trolling around the beach," the President said. He stopped to shake hands, hold babies, pose for pictures, and chat with people.

NATIONAL NEWS

FED ACTS TO LOWER KEY RATE Central Bank Hints It Won't Ease More

The Fed, as expected, lowered its target for the key federal funds interest rate by a quarter of a percentage point Monday in the wake of congressional passage of a bill to slash the federal budget deficit.

The drop from 8 percent to 7.75 percent in the rate financial institutions charge one another for overnight loans, however, did not spill over into either the long-term bond market or stock prices, both of which declined.

Analysts said the way in which the central bank went about signaling that it was seeking a lower federal funds rate indicated that the Fed does not want financial markets thinking it is likely to make another cut in the rate soon.

(John Berry, Washington Post, D1)

SUBSTANTIAL POWER ON SPENDING IS SHIFTED FROM CONGRESS TO BUSH

Congress has ceded substantial power over spending decisions to the Bush Administration's OMB under procedures approved as part of the $490 billion deficit reduction package.

The procedures, intended to insure that spending cuts agreed to in the package are made, are a complicated variation on the existing Gramm-Rudman-Hollings balanced budget law. Like that 1987 law, they would require automatic spending cuts if Congress fails to meet its deficit reduction commitments, but there are important differences.

Under the new system, for three years federal spending is divided into three broad categories -- domestic, military and foreign aid -- each of which has its own spending cap already agreed to by lawmakers and the White House. Rather than subject the entire budget to automatic spending cuts if a particular deficit target is not met each year, the new system imposes automatic spending cuts only in the category where a breach has occurred.

Therefore, cuts in military spending could not be used to offset overruns in domestic programs....

Politically, the new budget process provides something for everyone. The sponsors of the original budget-balancing bill get to say that it is not dead. The Democrats are liberated from thinking about deficit targets that can sometimes be arbitrary. And the Administration can say it has put into place a true enforcement mechanism.

(Susan Rasky, New York Times, A1)

HILL SPENDING CHOICES REFLECT TURN INWARD Emphasis On Domestic Concerns Renewed

In the spending choices it made, the 101st Congress took major steps toward shifting America's priorities back toward pressing domestic concerns by providing the biggest increases in a decade for public works, education and environmental protection.

Congressional sources Monday predicted that the priorities established by the Appropriations committees as a result of a one-time, $20 billion "peace dividend" will be felt across the U.S. and will help to cushion the nation against the impact of recession and military personnel cuts. This largely unpublicized windfall was allowed in the deficit-reduction package endorsed by the White House and Congress. Senior congressional aides said it signified a recognition by the President and his advisers that investment in domestic programs would be smart anti-recession economics as well as good politics for 1992....

"The country is ready for change," said Rep. Fazio. "This (spending program) evolved without an overall game plan. But there was a tacit recognition that we needed to stop running in place."
(Dan Morgan, Washington Post, A1)

VICE PRESIDENT BEING TREATED LIKE ONE ON CAMPAIGN TRAIL Polls Find Most Still Uneasy With 'President Quayle'

For Vice President Quayle, this is a good news-bad news election cycle.

The good news is that after nearly two years in office, Quayle is acting and being treated this fall like most vice presidents before him. He raises barrels of cash for GOP candidates, carries the President's case to partisan audiences around the nation, and helps fellow Republicans who will remember and help him later. In all of it, he gets very little national attention, as is normal for a vice president.

The bad news is that Dan Quayle is still not like most vice presidents, who have tended to rise and fall with the presidents they served. Through good times and bad for President Bush, Americans have seemed frozen in the attitudes they formed toward the vice president in the rough 1988 campaign and the early days of the Bush Administration. That is, most are fairly comfortable with "Vice President Quayle." But most are quite uncomfortable with "President Quayle."

A Washington Post poll of 1,000 voters taken Oct. 17-21 found that half gave Quayle "favorable" marks and 37 percent "unfavorable" when asked to rate the job he is doing as vice president -- similar to the rating he received after a year in office. But a Wall Street Journal-NBC News poll Oct. 19-21 of 1,000 voters found fewer than 30 percent of them had positive feelings about Quayle in general, and 69 percent said they were uncomfortable with the thought of Quayle as president.

TIDE IS TURNING AGAINST 'BIG GREEN'
California Environmental Initiative Once Viewed As Sure Winner

LOS ANGELES -- California's "Big Green" environmental initiative, considered a certain winner even by opponents six months ago, is close to defeat with potentially serious consequences for the U.S. environmental movement.

Although Mervin Field's California Poll once showed the initiative, the most ambitious antipollution measure ever considered by American voters, ahead by more than 2 to 1, Field said last week that it now has no better than a 50-50 chance of approval. A Los Angeles Times poll released Saturday showed it trailing 44 to 42 percent, with the losing margin as much as 12 percentage points among those most likely to vote.

Conservative critics of the initiative, listed as Proposition 128 on the Nov. 6 ballot, have been joined by the usually liberal Los Angeles Times and Sacramento Bee as well as Assembly speaker Willie Brown (D). A new television spot, in which former U.S. Surgeon General Koop says the proposition "would not protect Californians' health," has begun to have an impact.

CONGRESS FLED WITHOUT FUNDING ENOUGH IMMEDIATE S&L RESCUES

The $500 billion cleanup of ailing S&Ls could end up costing taxpayers even more because Congress adjourned last weekend without voting funds for the rescue program, U.S. officials say.

The delay in short-term funding could add hundreds of millions of dollars to the overall cleanup bill, according to RTC Chairman Seidman....

"It will create a significant slowdown," said an RTC spokeswoman, who said the lack of money would prevent the agency from carrying out plans to bail out 18 major S&Ls.

SENATE CONFIRMS KESSLER AS COMMISSIONER OF FDA

The Senate has confirmed David Kessler, a New York pediatrician and hospital administrator, as commissioner of the FDA.

Dr. Kessler, 39 years old, is medical director of Jack D. Weiler Hospital, an affiliate of Albert Einstein College of Medicine in New York. An expert in food and drug law, he is widely regarded as a pragmatist who will seek a bigger budget for the understaffed FDA, while looking for ways to spare industry from burdensome regulation.

U.S. PLANS TALKS ON GULF OFFENSIVE

Within the next week, the Bush Administration will discuss a timetable for possible use of military force against Iraqi forces in Kuwait at talks with U.S. allies in Europe and the Persian Gulf, sources said Monday.

With Administration officials increasingly convinced that U.N. sanctions will not force Iraq to withdraw, Secretary Baker will visit Europe, Saudi Arabia and other Arab nations, perhaps as early as this weekend, to assess the current status of the embargo and to consider additional steps, including a military offensive, the sources said.

A senior government official in Washington declared that if the U.S. were to exclude the military option, "it would be hard to find a scenario with any link to reality." He added that the most likely time for a U.S. offensive would be in December or January, "although it could come earlier or a little later."

The official, who is involved in Persian Gulf strategy, indicated that he considers war almost inevitable and said: "I know of no one who disagrees with my assessment of the situation and what we have to do to achieve our goals."

GULF LEADER SAYS FAILED OVERTURES COULD MEAN WAR BY YEAR'S END

RIYADH -- The Secretary General of the Gulf Cooperation Council, a regional alliance led by Saudi Arabia, predicted Monday that war could break out by the end of the year despite the extensive diplomatic activity surrounding the Persian Gulf crisis.

Asked when he thought fighting might begin, the council's Kuwaiti leader, Abdullah Bishara, said in an interview at the alliance's white marble headquarters here, "I would not be wrong if I guessed that it will be in December."

Speaking at the end of a two-day meeting of the foreign ministers of the alliance's six member nations, Mr. Bishara said a "mood of pessimism" dominated the conference....

"The chapter of diplomacy to resolve the gulf crisis will be closed very soon. There is no breakthrough," said Mr. Bishara.

IRAQ MAY FREE ALL FOREIGN HOSTAGES, FINANCIAL TIMES SAYS

LONDON -- Iraq is considering freeing all its foreign hostages, provided France and the Soviet Union commit themselves to resolving the Persian Gulf crisis by peaceful means, the British Financial Times newspaper said Tuesday.

The paper quoted an Iraqi official as saying: "Such a commitment would open the way for a peaceful solution."... The Financial Times quoted top Iraqi officials as saying Baghdad would consider the release of all Western hostages in return for a Franco-Soviet commitment to a peaceful settlement.

BUSH, BAKER SIGNAL U.S. PATIENCE RUNNING OUT IN GULF

President Bush and Secretary Baker joined Monday in sending a fresh signal to President Saddam that U.S. patience was running out in the Persian Gulf.

Bush, talking to reporters in San Francisco, denied he was trying to prepare America for war in the gulf but said he would not hesitate to order U.S. troops to respond to any Iraqi provocation.

And Baker, in a speech to the Los Angeles World Affairs Council, threatened Saddam with dire consequences if he tried to use chemical or biological weapons to consolidate the invasion or extend hostilities to Saudi Arabia where a huge multinational force is now deployed.

"Let there be no doubt: we will not rule out a possible use of force if Iraq continues to occupy Kuwait," Baker said. "Saddam Hussein must realize there is a limit to the international community's patience. He must also realize that should he use chemical or biological weapons, there will be the most severe consequences," the secretary of state said.

Bush, asked whether he was preparing the country for war to end the Iraqi occupation of Kuwait, responded:

"No, I'm just doing my job as president of the United States. I'm not preparing anybody for anything." (Irwin Arieff, Reuter)

BAKER SAYS IRAQ IS ABUSING HOSTAGESHealth Of American 'Human Shields' Reported To Be Deteriorating

Secretary Baker turned up the pressure on Saddam Hussein Monday, accusing the Iraqi president of "making political and economic war" on U.S. citizens held hostage by Iraq and charging that Americans are becoming sick from serious mistreatment.

According to Baker, more than 100 Americans being held as "human shields" by Saddam "are forced to sleep on vermin-ridden concrete floors. They are kept in the dark during the day and moved only at night. They have had their meals cut to two a day. And many are becoming sick as they endure a terrible ordeal. The very idea of Americans being used as human shields is simply unconscionable."

In an address to the Los Angeles World Affairs Council, Baker also renewed the threat of military force in the confrontation with Iraq. "We will not rule out a possible use of force if Iraq continues to occupy Kuwait," Baker said.

Baker's complaint about the treatment of Western hostages was echoed by several of the more than 260 former French hostages who arrived in Paris Monday night. "It is especially hard for the Americans and the British hostages there, who are really being treated like prisoners of war," said Pierre Sanchez, one of the returning French captives.

Baker's speech was described by Administration officials as part of an effort to refocus attention on Iraq after several weeks of budget politics and other diversions that some officials said may have led to doubts in Baghdad and other foreign capitals about American resolve.

U.N. BOOSTS PRESSURE ON BAGHDAD
Security Council Votes To Censure Iraq For Ninth Time

U.N. -- The U.N. Security Council Monday passed a resolution that begins the process of making Iraq legally responsible for financial damages and human rights violations caused by its invasion of Kuwait.

By a vote of 13 to 0, with two abstentions, the council condemned Iraq's "mistreatment and oppression" of Kuwaiti citizens and innocent hostages from other countries. It invited U.N. members to collect information about Iraq's "grave breaches" of human rights, warned Baghdad that "it is liable for any loss, damage or injury" it causes in Kuwait and demanded that besieged foreign embassies in Kuwait be given food, water and basic services.

The resolution -- the ninth to be voted against Iraq since its Aug. 2 invasion of Kuwait -- marked a successful effort by the U.S. and its allies to turn the council's attention back, at least temporarily, to the gulf crisis after three weeks of debate about condemning Israel for the killing of Palestinians during an Oct. 8 riot in Jerusalem.

U.S., SOVIET UNION APPEAR TO SEND MIXED SIGNALS TO IRAQ

The Bush Administration and the Soviet Union appeared Monday to send sharply mixed signals to Iraq, with Washington talking tough about a possible military solution to the Persian Gulf crisis and President Gorbachev saying he opposes a military solution and hopes Arabs can settle the dispute diplomatically.

At the U.N., the Soviet Union and the U.S. worked together to build pressure on Iraq, joining with others to cosponsor the 10th anti-Iraqi resolution to be adopted by the Security Council since Iraq's conquest of Kuwait on Aug. 2. The resolution holds Iraq liable for damages caused by its occupation of Kuwait.

But after meeting with President Mitterrand Monday outside Paris, Gorbachev repeated his view that "it is unacceptable to have a military solution to this question."

Gorbachev said that "the best thing is for us to deal with this man," referring to Saddam. "The best thing would be to have an inter-Arab meeting, some Arab mechanism. Certain countries might undertake a particular role. I am thinking of Saudi Arabia.... They might take an initiative."

Administration officials were quick to deny that Gorbachev's statements signaled a break in the close cooperation between the Soviet Union and the U.S. on confronting Iraq.

Commenting on Gorbachev's remarks, State Department spokeswoman Tutwiler said the department "is not in a position to analyze right now as to what he meant.... We're not sure exactly what group he was referring to or to what mechanism he has in mind. Does he mean the Arab League or some other type grouping? We just don't know."

GORBACHEV URGES ARAB INITIATIVEAny Political Solution Must Consider Iraq's Position, Soviet Says

PARIS -- President Gorbachev said Monday the time has come for a new Arab peace initiative to resolve the Persian Gulf crisis because under the pressure of global trade sanctions, "some signs are emerging that Iraq's leadership may be heeding the will of the United Nations."

Gorbachev said he learned in an early morning telegram from his Middle East envoy, Yevgeni Primakov, who flew to Saudi Arabia Monday after two meetings with President Saddam, that "some new reflections have taken place" and that Saddam's "position is no longer the same which he held some time ago."

Gorbachev, speaking to reporters with President Mitterrand after the two signed a treaty to enhance political and economic cooperation, did not spell out what changes Primakov cited and he noted that some contacts remain secret. But he emphasized, with Mitterrand's concurrence, that Iraq may be ready for an inter-Arab parley under Saudi Arabia's possible sponsorship, which he said "could be the quickest way to a settlement."

SADDAM STANDS PAT IN CNN INTERVIEW

President Saddam repeated Monday night that Iraq would not withdraw from Kuwait without a comprehensive solution of Middle East issues.

In an interview in Baghdad with CNN, Saddam said that in addition to the presence of U.S. troops in the region, the "two fundamental questions" were Israeli occupation of Palestinian lands and the gap between rich and poor Arab states. In an hour-long edited version of the two-hour interview, Saddam suggested that an international conference be held to reach "a package deal for all the issues of the region."

While Saddam did not repeat precisely the conditions he has set in the past for a settlement of the crisis -- for example, he did not explicitly repeat his call for a Syrian withdrawal from Lebanon -- there appeared to be no shift in the position.

SURVIVAL RATE STRESSED IN GAS WARFARE
Top U.S. Specialist Reassures Medics

SAUDI ARABIA -- The U.S. military's top expert on the medical effects of chemical warfare said Monday that history shows over 95 percent of those hit by nerve and mustard gas have survived.

"I think the threat of chemical warfare is very real.... But you're not talking about some devastatingly effective weapon," said Col. Michael Dunn, commander of the U.S. Army Medical Research Institute of Chemical Defense.

His message to 95 doctors, nurses and medics finishing a three-day course on treating victims of chemical attacks was simple: "There are very effective things you can do to deal with chemical casualties."

CRISIS SEEN HINDERING ISRAELI-ARAB PEACE STEPS
Both Sides Now Uneasy With U.S. As Broker

JERUSALEM -- Severe tensions produced by the U.S.-led multinational alliance against Iraq are eroding the diplomatic and political ground for any peace process here between Israelis and Palestinians, analysts on both sides of the conflict say.

President Bush has rejected efforts by President Saddam to link Iraq's occupation of Kuwait with Israel's hold on the Palestinian-populated West Bank and Gaza Strip. But Bush has declared that once Iraq's invasion of Kuwait is reversed, a new effort can be launched to resolve the Israeli-Arab dispute. The implicit commitment has been strongly echoed by President Gorbachev, the leaders of the EC, and Arab states such as Egypt with which Washington is allied.

At the same time, however, the passions and alliances created by the standoff if the gulf are poisoning the shallow well of goodwill between Israelis and Palestinians here and prompting both sides to question Washington's role as a prospective broker of the peace process. Much like Iraq's reported destruction of Kuwait, the damage here seems to grow worse with each passing week of the gulf crisis, making the prospect of an eventual Israeli-Palestinian peace process seem increasingly remote.

ISRAEL'S SHAMIR CHIDES U.S. AGAIN OVER EAST JERUSALEM

JERUSALEM -- Prime Minister Shamir has issued a rallying cry to world Jewry and a challenge to the U.S., Israel's closest ally, by reasserting that the Jewish state will never relinquish East Jerusalem.

In his first speech since a government-appointed inquiry blamed Palestinians for the police killing of 18 Arabs on Jerusalem's Temple Mount, Shamir Monday night addressed U.S. Jewish fundraisers in a hotel in Israeli-annexed East Jerusalem.

"We have been engaged in a struggle for 100 years for our right to return to our ancient land," he said. "Throughout this century we faced riots and terrorism, intifada and war -- and we stood firm. Nothing has moved us."

In a veiled reference to Washington's failed attempt to persuade Israel to accept a U.N. inquiry into the Oct. 8 Temple Mount killings, he added: "No act by friend or foe has caused us to waver."

HEZBOLLAH AGREES TO LEAVE BEIRUT

BEIRUT -- Militias of the pro-Iranian Hezbollah and two Syrian-backed factions agreed Monday to withdraw from Beirut, heralding key progress in securing Moslem-Christian peace in Lebanon.

Security sources said most of 12 Western hostages believed to be held by the Shiite Moslem Hezbollah have already been moved out of the city's southern suburbs where the militia is based.

Hezbollah announced its willingness to withdraw after talks with a ministerial committee contacting Lebanon's warlords on a date and means for disbanding their militias in Beirut.

FRENCH, SOVIETS SIGN TREATY ON COOPERATION IN CRISES

PARIS -- The Soviet Union and France signed a cooperation treaty Monday in which they pledged to "harmonize their positions" during international crises.

Besides the comprehensive Treaty of Understanding and Cooperation, and two governments signed five accords dealing with industrial, technological, scientific and social exchanges. France will also provide a $1 billion package of loans and credits, primarily for the purchase of French grain.

The political agreement signed by presidents Gorbachev and Mitterrand was conceived barely two months ago and rushed to completion, according to French sources, because the Soviets wanted to conclude it before Gorbachev visits Germany next month to sign a monumental treaty of friendship....

The French-Soviet treaty binds both nations to undertake consultations if either side deems "major security interests" are threatened. The documents calls on their governments "to make contact without delay,...harmonize their positions and agree on measures to improve the situation or bring it under control."

EC STEPS UP PRESSURE ON U.S. OVER GLOBAL WARMING

LUXEMBOURG -- The EC has pledged to stabilize emissions of the gas that contributes most to global warming in a decision that steps up pressure on the U.S. to do the same.

The EC's environment and energy ministers agreed Monday that it should cap its total output of carbon dioxide at current levels through the year 2000, while allowing individual members to move at their own speed.

In five hours of tough bargaining, Britain won concessions allowing it to retain its target of stabilization by 2005.

Spain and other less industrialized members also obtained assurances that they would be able to continue with their development plans and perhaps even increase their carbon dioxide emissions within the overall EC target.

"The community is committing itself to act as a leader on the greenhouse effect," said Italian Environment Minister Giorgio Ruffolo who chaired the talks.

SOME VIETNAM POWS MAY STILL BE ALIVE

American POWs were held in Vietnam after the Pentagon said there were none, and some are probably still alive, Senate staff investigators reported.

In an interim report Monday, the Republican staff of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee said the government's claim that no evidence exists that any Americans are being held against their will in Southeast Asia "cannot be supported."

The staff, which conducted the first independent investigation in 17 years of the methods used by the Pentagon to account for the POWs and MIAs of the Vietnam War, said, "The information uncovered during this inquiry provides enough corroboration to cast doubt upon the veracity of the U.S. government's conclusion."

The investigators said "more information remains to be reviewed" and said its report was based on evidence uncovered to date.

BANGKOK -- Vietnam has accepted a U.S. proposal to station a permanent U.S. representative in Hanoi for the first time to deal with efforts to account for Americans still missing in action from the Vietnam War, Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach said Tuesday.

Thach also dismissed a Senate report that there was evidence Americans were still being held captive in [Vietnam]. (UPI)

NON-COMMUNIST NATIONALISTS WIN GEORGIAN REPUBLIC VOTE

MOSCOW -- A non-communist coalition, running on a platform of independence from the Soviet Union and the creation of a capitalist economy, won overwhelmingly in Sunday's legislative elections in the Soviet republic of Georgia, official reports said Monday.

Led by former dissident Zviad Gamsakhurdia, the seven-party Georgian Round Table defeated the Communist Party by a 2-to-1 margin, with more than 90 percent of the districts in the southern republic reporting. (David Remnick, Washington Post, A13)

PRESIDENT

ABC's Peter Jennings: President Bush's popularity is still declining. Our latest ABC News poll shows that 51 percent approve of the way Mr. Bush is doing his job now [$\pm 3.5\%$], the lowest rating since he took office and not the kind of news the President wants to hear when he is on the road trying to help fellow Republicans win their elections a week from tomorrow.

President's job performance:

Approve.....51%

Disapprove....43%

Mr. Bush spent the morning in San Francisco campaigning for Sen. Wilson, who is in a very tight race for governor of California with Dianne Feinstein.... It is one of the most important governors races in the country; it has so much to do with the future political map.

ABC's Brit Hume: This was the sixth time this year the President has been here to campaign and raise money for Sen. Pete Wilson's drive to keep a Republican in the state house in the nation's most populous state.

(President: "The governorship here is enormously important; it has national importance.")

Nobody would dispute that, and here's why: the California legislature, firmly in Democratic hands, will soon redraw this state's congressional district boundaries in keeping with new census numbers giving the state seven additional seats in Congress. The legislators can draw the lines any way they want, and after the last census, with the cooperation of a Democratic governor, they did. Among the results was a district in Los Angeles, California's 27th. Natural boundaries would likely have made it Republican country. But it was gerrymandered, as it's called, to look like this.

It and other areas that might have gone Republican here have remained Democratic.

(President: The lines were drawn across communities, towns, even streets, into twisted, contorted, crazy shapes without the slightest regard for either the will of the people or the rules of elementary fairness.")

Democrats only claim they did what the GOP would have done if it could.

(Peter Kelly, California Democratic Party: "The line that I like best to refer to was the then-minority leader of the Republican state assembly after he looked at our plan. He said, well, this is nothing compared to what we would have done to them.")

But the Republicans are in no position to do that; not here nor in Florida or Texas, the other large states that will gain congressional seats next year. The Republicans do hold the governorship and its veto power in both those states, and the President will be in both later this week.

IRAQ

Jennings, from San Diego: ...This is a Navy town with thousands of men in the Persian Gulf. We are just down the road from Camp Pendleton [which has] thousands of Marines in the Gulf as well. And so when San Diego woke up to the news from the Gulf this morning, the latest failure to make diplomatic progress had more of an impact here than in many other places. Soviet leader Gorbachev said in France Monday morning that he saw some give in Saddam Hussein's position on Kuwait, but over the weekend Mr. Gorbachev's personal emissary said publicly that was not what he saw, and it was that weekend failure...which prompted a tougher line at the United Nations Monday.

ABC's John McWethy reports from the U.N. that when Primakov's mission failed to produce movement, the Security Council swung into action, voting for its tenth resolution against Iraq. The Council asked all countries to document financial damages and mistreatment of civilians, presumably to build a case against Iraq for war crimes. The resolution also called for food and water to be given to the two embassies still holding out in Kuwait, those of the U.S. and Britain. The Iraqi ambassador claimed the resolution was just a cover.

(Abdul Amir Al-Anbari, Iraqi Ambassador to U.N.: "This will make it possible for those who advocate war, combat and aggression to think explicitly that they have exhausted all attempts to achieve peace and that the war option is the only option left.")

It was Secretary Baker, in one of his toughest speeches to date, who seemed to answer the Iraqi, saying Saddam Hussein's approach was a prescription for war.

(Secretary Baker: "If his way of doing business prevails, there will be no hope for peace in this area.")

Baker said the U.S. still preferred a peaceful settlement.

(Secretary Baker: "All options are being considered, and let no one doubt we will not rule out a possible use of force if Iraq continues to occupy Kuwait.")

Late Monday, the military representatives of the U.S., Soviet Union, France, Britain and China met to consider tougher ways to enforce all the U.N. resolutions against Iraq. It was not a council of war, but it was yet another powerful signal to Saddam.

Jennings reports there are 210,000 Americans and 130,000 troops from other nations facing Saddam.

ABC's Bill Redeker reports on Britain's Desert Rats from Saudi Arabia. They are excited and proud to be serving alongside Americans in their first deployment since defeating the Germans in North Africa.

(Maj. James Myles: "Clearly we double the Marine armor power by bringing in 120 Challenger tanks. So, there's a good reason for us to be made welcome.")

The British are already under U.S. command and say they don't resent it. But they caution the Marines not to be too cocky and not to underestimate the Iraqis.

ABC's Jim Hickey reports from Saudi Arabia on the French Foreign Legion. They are glad to have an enemy to fight. They like to work alone because they feel they are the best fighting force in the world.

Jennings reports 260 French citizens were freed Monday and flown to Paris. One released French woman said the U.S. and Britain must now do something for their hostages; they are, she said, in very bad shape.

(ABC-Lead)

NBC's Tom Brokaw: It's been almost three months since Iraq's Saddam Hussein invaded Kuwait, and Monday night we're no closer to peace and we may be closer to war. A Soviet diplomatic mission collapsed and the Bush administration is talking tough tonight.

NBC's Charles McLean reports on the Primakov mission in Baghdad.

(Reporter: "Are you disappointed, sir?"

Primakov, while boarding plane: "Yes.")

As Primakov headed to Saudi Arabia, Saddam Hussein tried to put a more positive spin on the failure of the peace talks.

(Saddam Hussein: "I haven't seen any statement in which Primakov said that the visit that he's made here is the last chance for anything.")

(Tariq Aziz, Iraqi Foreign Minister: "Diplomacy and quite complicated issues need patience and continuation.")

But patience ran out quickly as talks between Primakov and Saddam broke up after only 40 minutes. Soviet journalists reported Primakov held fast to the U.N. position that Iraq must withdraw from Kuwait. Saddam Hussein was equally firm. His troops, he said, were in Kuwait to stay. But for the Iraqi man on the streets there was some good news: The government announced late Sunday night that gas rationing was over, and by morning long lines of Iraqis were filling up their cars with newly available gasoline. The government also announced that the minister of oil had been fired and was replaced by Saddam's son-in-law.

Brokaw reports President Bush meets with congressional leaders Tuesday to discuss the possibility of another 100,000 American troops going to the Persian Gulf, and Monday the President and secretary of state were sending verbal warnings.

NBC's John Dancy reports from the State Department officials said they never expected the Primakov mission to succeed -- that it was mostly for Soviet domestic consumption to show the Soviets were doing all they can to avoid war. On Monday, the U.S. moved quickly to push through a new U.N. resolution holding Iraq responsible for war damages to Kuwait. With it came a warning the U.S. would act to protect its citizens in Kuwait.

(Ambassador Pickering: "This is a fundamental obligation. The United States will do that which is necessary to meet its obligations to its own citizens.")

If that meant taking military action, said President Bush, he would move quickly.

(President: "History is replete with examples where the President has had to take action, and I've done this in the past and certainly, somebody mentioned provocation -- would have no hesitancy at all.")

And Secretary Baker, usually that most cautious of men, Monday opened the throttle. Until Monday, Baker had used phrases like military option and force. Monday, speaking of Saddam, Baker used the phrase war.

Dancy continues:

(Secretary Baker: "His is a prescription for war. And ladies and gentlemen, let me say this very bluntly: If his way of doing business prevails, there will be no hope for peace in this area.") Baker also warned the West might use force to retake Kuwait.

(Secretary Baker: "And let no one doubt we will not rule out a possible use of force if Iraq continues to occupy Kuwait.")

In Paris, President Gorbachev told Saddam not to expect a split in the ranks of the West, but Gorbachev called a military solution to the crisis unacceptable. In any case, the U.S. is still building up its forces in Saudi Arabia; military planners say the U.S. is not ready yet to push Iraq out of Kuwait. Even so, a senior State Department official conceded Monday the U.S. is simply running out of diplomatic options.

Brokaw asks how much of the war talk is designed to get Saddam to focus more on the diplomatic possibilities?

Dancy says some of what took place Monday was aimed at that. With the failure of the Primakov mission, the U.S. feels that it now has to persuade Saddam that the U.S. has a credible military threat in the region and is willing to use it if necessary. The Soviets have said they would not action without U.N. authorization. One U.S. official said Monday that eventually we will have to go to the U.N. and ask for that resolution, but that is not imminent at the moment.

Brokaw says Gen. Schwarzkopf, in an interview in the Atlanta Journal-Constitution, warned that if there is a ground war it would last a long time and many people would be killed. Schwarzkopf said he hopes the huge allied troop deployment will persuade Saddam to withdraw from Kuwait.

(NBC-Lead)

CBS's Dan Rather: President Bush said Monday he will not hesitate to use force against Iraq if provoked and use it without consulting the Congress of the United States. Secretary Baker said Saddam Hussein's tactics are "a prescription for war." The Iraqi leader said in an interview that he is ready for war. The U.N. Security Council again voted another hardline resolution against Saddam.

CBS's Bill Plante reports from the State Department that in those tough statement from the President and secretary of state and the new U.N. Security Council resolution condemning Iraq, the U.S. has launched a major new diplomatic and public relations initiative to seize control of the Persian Gulf agenda. The Security Council, after weeks of arguing over Israel, shifted its focus back to Iraq. (Ambassador Pickering: "Baghdad must hear from us clearly: Unprovoked aggression entails crippling costs.")

In Los Angeles, Secretary Baker signaled more strongly than ever that U.S. military action is likely if economic sanctions fail. He insisted that the U.S. is not only able, but willing to fight if it becomes necessary.

(Secretary Baker: "Saddam Hussein must realize that there is a limit to the international community's patience. And let no one doubt we will not rule out a possible use of force if Iraq continues to occupy Kuwait.")

Plante continues: In California on the campaign trail, President Bush sounded the same note. When asked about concern among congressional leaders that he may decide to use military force without asking their approval --

(President: "History is replete with examples where the President has had to take action, and I've done this in the past and certainly, somebody mentioned provocation -- would have no hesitancy at all.")

President Gorbachev discussed the crisis with President Mitterrand and urged new sanctions against Iraq. New sanctions are also part of the Bush-Baker plan, but don't expect to hear too much about diplomacy; the administration wants Saddam to believe that he has no choice but to withdraw from Kuwait or to fight. So on Baker's upcoming trip to Europe and the Gulf states, diplomacy is likely to be overshadowed by war.

CBS's Martha Teichner reports from Baghdad Secretary Baker's speech is unlikely to soften Saddam's intransigence. In an interview Monday in Baghdad, he offered no new proposal for ending the crisis and once again called for an international conference to discuss all Mideast issues. He did not offer to get out of Kuwait; he said he was ready for war if it comes and claimed God is on the Iraqi side.

(Saddam Hussein: "Whoever commits aggression against Iraq will be the party that shall turn out to be the loser.")

Asked if his people would forgive him if he leads them into war, Saddam said the same problem confronts his Western adversaries.

(Saddam Hussein: "Let me ask: Will the American people -- and indeed will the British people -- forgive Mr. Bush and Mrs. Thatcher if these two leaders were to drag their people into war?") Western diplomats see the reversal of gas rationing as the first example of Saddam backing off a policy because of popular discontent. The appointment of Saddam's son-in-law as oil minister is seen as a sign of further consolidation of power within the President's inner circle.

Brokaw reports the plane of Frenchmen flown out of Baghdad contained the last French diplomats from that country's embassy in Kuwait. One of the freed French hostages said many of the American hostages are "in very bad shape" and "can't carry on much longer." The BBC played a tape it said had been smuggled out of Kuwait. It was taped five weeks ago and had the voice of one American hostage.

(Unidentified American hostage: "We'd get the knock on the door, then they'd take us away to unknown sites to long imprisonment and to possible death. We know we're at the lowest priority; the President himself listed us so. Yet we do not accept this should be so. Our greatest fear is that you will forget us and that we will be forced to starve or surrender.")

CBS's Peter Van Sant reports from Saudi Arabia that American soldiers are severely restricted in their religious worship. In Saudi Arabia, Americans are welcome to fight, but not to openly practice their religion. Many Arabs see the Americans here as infidels.

(Ismail Nazei, Islamic religious leader: "There shall be only one religion in Saudi Arabia, and that is the religion of Islam.")

Like the foreigners who do the menial work in the country, U.S. troops are seen as temporary workers, visitors who should keep their religious expression confined to base.

CBS's Jim Stewart reports families with military personnel overseas are having trouble coping with the change in family lifestyle. Teachers are already receiving training on grief counseling for the children in their care. (NBC-Lead)

BUDGET

ABC's Sheilah Kast reports from Capitol Hill that some industries got special help in the new budget. Sen. Bentsen insisted on $2.3 billion in tax breaks for the oil industry. Sens. Dole and Daschle fought for $200 million in tax breaks for ethanol fuel derived from corn. Sen. Packwood earned small wineries like the ones in his and other states an exemption in the increase in excise taxes. Rep. Gephardt did the same for small breweries. Still, after the first budget summit agreement had taken such a beating as a back-room deal, some special provisions were dropped, like the tax break for an insurance company in Sen. Mitchell's home state of Maine. Many members consider the new bill relatively clean. But other bills passed in last weekend's rush to adjourn include plenty of pork-barrel spending, like $500,000 for band leader Lawrence Welk's birthplace museum in North Dakota and dozens of research grants at state universities. With some of these bills not even printed yet, no one knows just how full the pork-barrel is. (ABC-5)

CBS's Frank Currier reports on the controversy surrounding the funding of the preservation of Lawrence Welk's birthplace in Strasburg, North Dakota.

(Rep. Conte: "That's right: A-one, a-two, a-tree, a-four, a-half-a-million-dollars. Strike up the band.")

Critics have turned Strasburg into a symbol of government waste.

(Rep. Conte: "It sends a message that we don't care -- that we're not serious about reducing the deficit.")

In Strasburg, the money is seen as an investment in the survival of a community. Farmers there haven't harvested crops in three years and many cattlemen are in trouble. (CBS-6)

ECONOMY

Rather reports that according to a CBS News/New York Times poll earlier this month, 58 percent of those polled believe the American economy already is in recession.

CBS's Ray Brady reports on Americans trying to cope with the economic crunch. Washington is raising taxes to pay off its debt, companies are letting workers go to square theirs and Americans are cutting back. (CBS-2)

CLEAN AIR BILL

ABC's Ned Potter reports the Clean Air Bill is even tougher than many of its backers had hoped.

(Rep. Waxman: "This is an historical bill because it's going to set the course for at least the next decade to get us to the task of cleaning up the air pollution that threatens the public health in this country.")

The new bill is intended to reduce some types of auto emissions 60 percent, reduce urban smog 15 percent in six years, control acid rain by making power plants cut their pollution in half, control 90 percent of the toxic chemicals in the air. -more-

Potter continues: Congress and the White House are delighted and big industry says it will do its part.

(Mark Nelson, DuPont: "We're going to be regulating 189 listed pollutants versus eight that we've regulated so far.")

Most controls will be phased in over a decade and environmentalists would like to have seen results sooner, especially in the big cities. The auto industry complained and was given extra time to comply. Consumers will start paying more as industry passes on the higher costs of cars, electricity and countless other things that involve emissions. But the administration says the total is really only 25 cents per person per day and the benefits will range from lower hospital bills to healthier farm crops.

(William Reilly, EPA: "We are literally going to see farther, particularly in the Northeast, as a result of the acid rain title of the Clean Air Act. What's that worth to people?")

The government hopes plenty. It calls the bill the toughest pollution law in a decade.

ELECTIONS

NBC's Andrea Mitchell reports on Rep. Long's (D.-Ind.) rush back home to campaign. Until Long's election 18 months ago, people here were solidly Republican. Reflecting the mood across the country, they are fiercely opposed to new taxes. For months, the congresswoman was held hostage to the budget talks; in the eight days left, she is racing to make up for lost time. Because of the budget fiasco, she has a lot to explain. Long's challenger, Rick Hawks, is getting big-time help from Washington.

(TV coverage: Vice President campaigning.)

(Vice President: "Rick Hawks will give us a partner in the Congress.")

Some partner. On the budget issue, Hawks is running away from the President as fast as he can.

(Rick Hawks: "President Bush's switch on taxes has not helped Republicans across the country, but it has not hurt us because we've held to that line.")

Hawks is being rewarded for opposing the President. The Republican campaign committee thinks this is one of its best chances to pick up a Democratic seat and is pouring in money in these final days. With the blessing of party leaders, both candidates are saying: Read my lips, no new taxes, and trying to persuade voters they have nothing to do with the mess in Washington.

(NBC-2)

NBC's Lisa Myers reports abortion has re-emerged in the final days of this campaign. Being pro-choice does not pack the political wallop it did a year ago, but Oregon Democrat Harry Lonsdale believes the abortion issue will decide enough votes in these final days to help end the career of Sen. Hatfield. In Florida, Democratic gubernatorial candidate Lawton Chiles has increased his lead since he began emphasizing his support for abortion rights two weeks ago. And in Kansas, a reversal of the usual partisan roles: Republican Gov. Mike Hayden trumpets abortion rights to stave off a challenge from an anti-abortion Democrat. Candidates are pushing this issue now because it cuts most among voters who make up their minds late -- younger voters, often women.

Myers continues:

(Celinda Lake, pollster: "It can bring to the pro-choice candidate that last three to five percent. It comes out of independent voters and it can be a determining factor in a race.")

Even if abortion does make the difference in a handful of close races, it is clearly not as powerful an issue this year as many expected. Abortion rights activists vowed to make Pennsylvania Gov. Casey pay for signing the nation's most restrictive abortion law. He hasn't and is expected to win re-election big. One reason the issue has faded is that so few legislatures passed abortion restrictions. Abortion opponents have diffused the issue further by promising not to push legislative restrictions.

(Linda Divali, Republican pollster: "And I think the fear overall has lessened. People understand that there's not going to be significant change.... There are other issues that are much more important, particularly in times when the economy has become a concern of so many voters. The bottom line is their pocketbooks right now, that's what they're focused on.")

Abortion-rights advocates have not been able to move the big block they promised would rise up against anti-abortion candidates. Either that giant still sleeps, or doesn't exist. (NBC-3)

MINNESOTA GOP

Brokaw reports the Minnesota GOP is in chaos since the resignation of Jon Grunseth. The GOP is searching for a replacement. (NBC-4)

CALIFORNIA VOTE

Jennings reports that the California ballot has 230 pages to it. There are 28 voter initiatives and bond issues. It is an enormous challenge to voters to understand it all. (ABC-3)

SUPREME COURT

Brokaw reports the Supreme Court Monday cleared the way for a rape victim to sue a state trooper who she says left her in a high crime area late at night. It also upheld a judge's ruling ordering a Kansas City suburban school to accept black students from the inner city. The Court also upheld a Montana law that requires longer sentences for crimes committed with guns. (NBC-6)

EDITORIALS/COLUMNISTS

PRESIDENT BUSH

Salvaging The Bush Presidency -- "The President must shore up his White House team.... Any staff that allows the boss to be kicked in the shins as Bush was last week at party fund-raisers should be fired forthwith (one candidate never showed up for the President, another won cheers by attacking his policies). The President should reach out to some more seasoned Republicans leaving Capitol Hill -- retiring Rep. Frenzel, for example -- to join him as personal advisers. He must also make hard calls as to whether his top budget negotiators, John Sununu and Richard Darman, can still work with Congress.... The most serious challenges facing America are here at home, not overseas, and Bush will never really succeed until he stops kissing off domestic questions with an airy wave.... Bush...can find great strength by turning to the American people in a way he has never done before. Confide in them, seek their counsel, call on them for help.... The people are right, and George Bush must now assert himself as their advocate, their leader and their friend."

(David Gergen, U.S. News and World Report, 11/5)

Bring Back Reaganism -- "...Under Bush the [Republican] Party has gradually emerged as a Beltway collaborator in what Middle America wants to fight. The budget debacle raises questions, not only about White House competence, but comprehension. Does Bush see the world real and whole? ...Democrats...are a bitter, resentful, envious lot, whose feelings about George Bush are not markedly different than their feelings about Richard Nixon or Ronald Reagan. Nixon once warned tat Reagan's problem might be that he was too nice a guy. Actually, that is President Bush's problem: he is Skull and Bones, an Ivy League gentleman in the old Hobey Baker tradition in a world where Lawrence Taylor is king."

(Patrick Buchanan, New York Post, 10/27)

George Herbert Hoover Bush -- "...George Bush...is a man without philosophy, without vision, at least as to domestic policy. Mr. Reagan believed in free markets and minimal government interference. Mr. Bush, like so many Eastern establishment types, has no agenda, no burning creed: which is why he gives in when pushed. Mr. Reagan, by trade, was a missionary; Mr. Bush is a mechanic. He likes to get out the tool kit and make the machinery hum. As to the qualities of the machinery itself, he has few opinions.... We've got two more years of this, and I have a feeling. It is that the age of Republican presidential domination may be ending."

(William Murchison, St. Louis Post-Dispatch, 10/24)

'Insider' Bush Sounds Silly Criticizing Establishment -- "George Bush has discovered the focus of political evil in modern America. It is Washington.... But so far as is known, Mr. Bush has not been detained here at gunpoint for most of the past quarter century.... 'Inside-the-Beltway hogwash' there undoubtedly is, in plenty, just as Mr. Bush says. In fact, it is an excellent description of what he has been saying on the stump."

(Edwin Yoder, Atlanta Constitution, 10/24)

Bad Judgement -- "Most presidents run into unavoidable trouble by the time they reach midterm, but George Bush is different. Many of his troubles were not only avoidable but predictable, and this has hurt him because they raise questions about his judgement.... The odd thing about Bush is that he plans his fumbles. He didn't have to promise not to raise taxes in a future he could not possibly foresee.... He's all over the lot -- fighting for the rich, campaigning not only in North Carolina but in California, driving in from Camp David to conserve gas and letting his helicopter return empty, jogging in the morning and flying to the World Series at night, always on the move, always pleasant and even cheerful. He is the first president in memory who has not been able to get the votes of a majority of the members of his own party for a major bill in Congress. He may come through smiling and even be re-elected, but it will take him a while to recover from the planned fumbles of the first half."

(James Reston, [New Orleans] Times-Picayune, 10/23)

George Bush Tries on his 'Presidential Hick' Costume -- "George Bush is about to switch identities again. After a quarter of a century on the inside, the ultimate D.C. dude has started selling himself as the Stranger In Town.... Instead of confessing that today's fiscal fiasco is a bipartisan production, President Bush has dressed himself up in the lingo of the Death Valley kid and beat it out of town. His heehaw costume may get him past Halloween. Election day may be a bit trickier."

(Christopher Matthews, Seattle Post-Intelligencer, 10/22)

Bush Could Benefit From Dole's Domestic Agenda -- "...When she struck out on her own, Dole's agenda was impressive. Unfortunately, Bush failed to seize it and make it his own. If he had, he could have begun shaping a domestic policy for the 1990s.... It's too bad Dole was frozen out of decision-making in the Bush administration, which is tightly controlled by key White House aides and longtime Bush chums. Bush should learn from his departing labor secretary. And he should listen to his next one - especially if he or she pursues ideas as well-founded as Dole's."

News From the Hill

And now the post-mortems begin.

As members of Congress have scattered from coast to coast — most of them in search of electoral support from the voters to enable them to return next year — staffers who have been left behind are still sorting through the mounds of paper created by the last-minute actions of their bosses.

What cleared? What didn't? What kind of key provisions were quietly tucked into an unrelated bill? What inadvertent actions did Congress take that will require "technical corrections" next year.

Not all of those answers were readily available yesterday.

During the last, frenzied day of activity, the Senate passed 72 bills and joint resolutions, approved three treaties, and confirmed 39 executive branch nominations and hundreds of armed services promotions.

The House passed 39 bills and joint resolutions.

Didn't Quite Make It

But several major bills did not gain final approval, providing ample fodder for recriminations during the next 10 weeks while Congress is gone.

Foremost among the measures that did not gain final passage was a bill that would have provided much-needed additional funds for the savings and loan bailout.

Other major legislation that did not make it through all the legislative hoops — or made it through only after being significantly altered — included campaign finance reform, increases in veterans' compensation, President Bush's education package and a number of important anticrime measures.

S&L Bailout: Congress did not approve last-minute legislation to provide additional money to pay for the savings and loan bailout.

House lawmakers — wary of approving additional bailout money so close to the election — never had to vote on the issue after Frank Annunzio, D-Ill., objected to a unanimous-consent request to consider the bill (HR 5891). And Senate lawmakers passed their version (S 3222) only after the issue had died in the House.

Members were working on legislation to provide the Resolution Trust Corporation (RTC) with $10 billion to cover savings and loan losses.

Congressional inactivity now threatens the RTC's ability to keep the bailout moving through the winter. The administration has said that without a cash infusion this year, the S&L bailout would grind to a halt. But House Banking Committee Chairman Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Texas, said the administration did not lift a finger to get the bill passed. "There was absolutely no evidence that anyone in the administration turned a hand to help us gain support in the closing hours of the session," he said.

Most lawmakers and the administration agree that the RTC has the authority to borrow money to keep the bailout operating. But an RTC official said that investors may be less willing to spend money on bids if there is doubt about the government's ability to structure deals.

Campaign Finance: Perhaps the biggest disappointment for House and Senate leaders was their inability to clear campaign finance legislation despite their vows to push for legislation this year.

But lawmakers never came close to coming up with a package that would receive the support of both parties.

A Senate bill (S 137) to limit spending in Senate election campaigns would have cut off the flow of political action committee (PAC) contributions to campaigns.

S 137 would also have established a voluntary system of spending limits and partial public financing of Senate general election campaigns. Candidates who agreed to the voluntary limits would have been granted a series of benefits, including reduced rates for mailings and broadcast advertising.

House-passed legislation (HR 5400) would have capped spending on campaigns at $550,000 — but would have let candidates who garnered less than 67 percent in the primary accept more. The measure also would have limited PAC contributions to 50 percent of campaign funds.

President Bush threatened to veto either the House or Senate proposals on the grounds that they were too favorable to Democrats.

Crime Bill: Before clearing a scaled-down version of the crime bill (S 3266), Congress dropped some hotly contested provisions from the measure to make the legislation more palatable to both liberals and conservatives.

Among the provisions not included in the final version were an expansion of the death penalty to cover federal crimes, including presidential assassination and treason and changes in the habeas corpus procedures barring some federal court appeals by death row inmates. In addition, provisions in the Senate version banning the manufacture and sale of nine types of semiautomatic assault weapons were also removed from the final bill.

Veterans' COLA. A measure to give veterans a cost-of-living increase in fiscal 1991 died after members of the

Bush Sets Gulf Briefing

President Bush announced yesterday that he will meet today with congressional leaders to discuss the U.S. military buildup in the Persian Gulf.

Defense Secretary Dick Cheney raised the possibility last week that as many as 100,000 more American troops could be sent to the region. Many members of Congress in the last few weeks before adjournment urged the administration to consult with Congress before embarking on any major new policies in the Middle East.

Year-End Wrapup Due Tomorrow

Tomorrow's issue of the Monitor will feature a brief wrapup of the significant legislative activity during the Second Session of the 101st Congress — featuring both bills that cleared and those that did not.

Tomorrow's issue will be the last one you receive this week. The next issue, dated and delivered on Monday, Nov. 5, will preview the Nov. 6 election.

Senate objected to provisions of the House-passed measure (HR 5326) that dealt with Agent Orange. A last-minute attempt by members of the House to pass another bill without the Agent Orange provisions (HR 5962) failed on the last day of the session.

The cost-of-living increase would have given a 4.5 percent increase to veterans suffering from service-connected disabilities or survivors of veterans who died of service-related injuries.

Omnibus Education. An omnibus education measure — the major education initiative of the Bush administration — died in the last days of the session.

The House passed the compromise measure (HR 5932) last Friday. The bill supposedly was worked out between both parties and members of the Bush administration, but last-minute objections by GOP senators to some provisions — including one to give money to the National Board for Professional Teaching Standards — killed the bill.

The bill would have authorized $800 million and would have revamped many of the nation's education policies and included Bush's initiative to reward teacher excellence.

Final Week Successes

Some bills that were cleared for the president last week that have not been included in previous issues of the Monitor include:

Defense Production Act. Congress cleared HR 486, which authorizes the president to ensure defense-related production in a national emergency. The measure gives the president the authority to ration certain strategic materials and provide loans and purchase guarantees to ensure the production of vital products.

The measure also includes legislation to pressure foreign countries to open up their financial markets to U.S. banks. Under the measure, if the Treasury Department issued a finding that U.S. banks operating abroad were not given fair access to markets, U.S. banking regulators could deny the bank applications of institutions from that country.

Florida Keys: Non-controversial legislation (HR 5909) to establish the Florida Keys National Marine Sanctuary to harbor and protect marine life found in the region was cleared for the president on Sunday.

Health Objectives. The Senate Saturday gave final congressional approval to a stripped-down bill (S 2056) that would authorize $10 million public health grants to states to implement state health objectives plans, agreeing by voice vote to House amendments and sending the legislation to the president.

Judicial Expansion: Congress cleared for the president legislation (HR 5316) that would add eight new appeals court judges and 39 new district court judges.

Maritime Commission. The House Saturday cleared for the president legislation (HR 4009) to reauthorize the Federal Maritime Commission at nearly $15.9 million and the Maritime Administration (MARAD) at roughly $500 million in fiscal 1991, agreeing by voice vote to a Senate substitute amendment. The Senate had passed it earlier in the day.

NIH Authorization. The Senate Saturday cleared for the president a vastly stripped-down bill (S 2857) to authorize only two National Institutes of Health (NIH) programs, agreeing by voice vote to amendments the House had added when it approved the measure by voice vote the previous day.

The meat of the bill was stripped on the floors at the 11th hour, leaving a bare-bones measure. The measure does not contain a fiscal 1991 reauthorization for several of the NIH institutes, as had been intended. However, funding for the facilities was included in the Labor/Health and Human Services appropriations bill (HR 5257).

The measure would establish a center for rehabilitative research and a private foundation for biomedical research.

Earlier in its legislative journey, the bill had included a highly disputed provision calling for new research centers to study contraception and infertility. Abortion rights opponents had convinced senators to strike that portion even before the latest slashing of the legislation.

Pipeline Safety. The Senate Saturday cleared a bill (HR 4888) that would require fuel pipeline owners to inspect and rebury exposed lines in the Gulf of Mexico. The House passed the measure Oct. 15.

The bill was pushed by members of the Louisiana delegation, after two accidents in which boats hit exposed gas lines, setting off explosions that claimed 13 lives. Pipelines are currently required to be buried, but the gulf currents and the silty nature of the ocean floor have resulted in many exposed pipelines.

Securities Settlement. Legislation (HR 3656) designed to improve the clearance and settlement of securities transactions was approved by lawmakers.

Supporters contend that the measure will help to stabilize markets by providing traders with more up-to-date information on where the market is heading. Securities analysts say that the uncertainty that results from heavy trading and delays in processing orders sometimes leads to market instability.

Small Business: A bill (HR 4793) to reauthorize small-business assistance programs through fiscal 1994 was cleared for the president in the early hours of Sunday. It authorizes $3.5 billion for small business programs in fiscal 1991, including loan programs for veterans, minorities and the disabled.

The measure would authorize $38 million for direct small business loans to veterans and disabled people and $24 million for a loan program intended to aid minority-owned enterprises.

Taft Institute. The Senate Saturday approved the conference report on legislation (S 1939) to reauthorize the Taft Institute, sending the measure to the president. The House approved the report Oct. 22.

The bill authorizes $700 million in fiscal 1991 for the nonprofit institute, an organization that conducts seminars on politics for classroom teachers, administrators and librarians. Funding levels would be phased out over four years, allowing the institute to operate on its own.

Transportation Safety: A bill (S 3012) authorizing funds for the operations of the National Transportation Safety Board (NTSB) for fiscal 1991-93 was cleared for the president Sunday. The House agreed to a number of Senate amendments including one requiring that the results of certain toxicological tests of Department of Transportation employees are made available to the NTSB. Another amendment widens the scope of the odometer mileage disclosure requirements as listed in the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act.

Trauma Care. The Senate Saturday cleared a compromise measure (HR 1602) calling for improvements in emergency medical services and trauma care. The House passed the bill Friday.

The legislation would authorize $60 million this fiscal year for states to develop and implement regional trauma care and emergency medical networks.

Water Projects. The House Saturday cleared an omnibus two-year reauthorization for Army Corps of Engineers water projects, after paring the bill in response to administration objections. The Senate adopted the conference report earlier in the day.

The bill would authorize 26 new projects, but conferees dropped five others that were pending corps approval. And they dropped a $270 million project modification to restore wetlands along the Kissimmee River in Florida that were damaged by a corps navigation project.

Remaining in the bill is a huge $1.2 billion flood control project along the Passaic River in New York and New Jersey.

Correction: The Oct. 29 issue of the Monitor incorrectly said that funds were included in the Commerce, Justice, State, judiciary spending bill (HR 5021) for construction of a new embassy in Moscow. Senate report language accompanying the bill suggested that $10 million be made available, but the final bill included no funds. ■

Dear Mr. President,

I can't thank you enough for all the kindnesses shown me and Elaine on the trip to Hawaii-San Francisco - Oahu City.
It was a highlight of nine years in government. As I tell people, you are the finest, most decent man in public life, and what a good example you set for all of us by how you conduct yourself.

Best,

Bill

POINTS FOR MEETING WITH CONGRESSIONAL LEADERSHIP

- I am glad that we could arrange to meet even though the Congress has adjourned.
- I want to say at the outset how much I appreciate the Congressional support our Gulf policy has enjoyed to date. It is hard to exaggerate just how important this support is. Saddam clearly holds to the opinion that Americans lack staying power. Congressional backing of our policy sends the best possible signal to Saddam of US determination to succeed.
- We are approaching a key juncture in the policy. Although compliance with sanctions is extremely high, it is not clear that sanctions yet are having a serious impact on Iraq. Meanwhile, Iraq continues to violate Kuwait, hold our hostages, and upgrade its military posture. We see no evidence they are interested in doing anything other than weakening and dividing the coalition against them.
- Because the Iraqis have virtually doubled their forces in and near Kuwait since we began our military deployments, we are moving toward a further augmentation of our forces in the Gulf. We are also pushing our allies to do the same. We need to make sure the military option is credible, in

- I AM GLAD THAT WE COULD ARRANGE TO MEET EVEN THOUGH THE CONGRESS HAS ADJOURNED.
- I WANT TO SAY AT THE OUTSET HOW MUCH I APPRECIATE THE CONGRESSIONAL SUPPORT OUR GULF POLICY HAS ENJOYED TO DATE. IT IS HARD TO EXAGGERATE JUST HOW IMPORTANT THIS SUPPORT IS. SADDAM CLEARLY HOLDS TO THE OPINION THAT AMERICANS LACK STAYING POWER. CONGRESSIONAL BACKING OF OUR POLICY SENDS THE BEST POSSIBLE SIGNAL TO SADDAM OF US DETERMINATION TO SUCCEED.
- WE ARE APPROACHING A KEY JUNCTURE IN THE POLICY. ALTHOUGH COMPLIANCE WITH SANCTIONS IS

WE SEE NO EVIDENCE THEY ARE INTERESTED IN DOING ANYTHING OTHER THAN WEAKENING AND DIVIDING THE COALITION AGAINST THEM.
- BECAUSE THE IRAQIS HAVE VIRTUALLY DOUBLED THEIR FORCES IN AND NEAR KUWAIT SINCE WE BEGAN OUR MILITARY DEPLOYMENTS, WE ARE MOVING TOWARD A FURTHER AUGMENTATION OF OUR FORCES IN THE GULF. WE ARE ALSO PUSHING OUR ALLIES TO DO THE SAME. WE NEED TO MAKE SURE THE MILITARY OPTION IS CREDIBLE, IN CASE WE HAVE TO USE IT, AND AS A BACKDROP TO OUR EFFORTS TO CONVINCE SADDAM OF OUR

- JIM BAKER WILL BE VISITING THE REGION SHORTLY. HIS MISSION WILL BE TO CONSULT ON NEXT STEPS. IT IS ESSENTIAL THAT THE COALITION REMAIN UNITED ON BOTH MEANS AND ENDS.
- I'D ALSO LIKE TO SAY A FEW THINGS ABOUT CONSULTATIONS HERE AT HOME. FROM THE OUTSET OF THIS CRISIS, I COMMITTED MYSELF TO CLOSE CONSULTATIONS WITH THE CONGRESS AND I INTEND TO CONTINUE. WE HAVE WORKED TOGETHER THROUGH THE WHOLE COURSE OF THIS CRISIS THUS FAR. FROM MY PERSPECTIVE, OUR DISCUSSIONS AND YOUR INSIGHTS HAVE BEEN EXTREMELY USEFUL AS I HAVE SET OUR COURSE. October 24, 1990

Dear Mr. President:

The possibility of new developments in the Persian Gulf has led us to provide for the possibility of calling Congress back to Washington after adjournment sine die.

We have earlier stated our belief that regular communication and consultation between the branches on matters involving national security and foreign policy are both necessary and useful. We therefore have asked a leadership group made up of the joint bipartisan leadership and leaders from the committees of jurisdiction to make themselves available for consultation with you as necessary. We urge you to consult regularly with the Congress on matters involving the Persian Gulf and to make use of this group for such purpose.

The members designated to be available for consultation are as follows:

Speaker Thomas S. Foley
Senate Majority Leader George J. Mitchell
House Majority Leader Richard A. Gephardt
President Pro Tempore Robert C. Byrd
House Republican Leader Robert H. Michel
Senate Republican Leader Robert Dole
Congressman Dante Fascell
Senator Claiborne Pell
Congressman William S. Broomfield
Senator Jesse Helms
Congressman Les Aspin
Senator Sam Nunn
Congressman William L. Dickinson
Senator John Warner
Congressman Anthony C. Beilenson
Senator David L. Boren
Congressman Henry J. Hyde
Senator William S. Cohen

With warm regards, we are,

Yours faithfully,

George J. Mitchell

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

October 29, 1990

DROP-BY MEETING OF NATIONAL EVANGELICAL LEADERS

DATE: October 30, 1990
TIME: 3:00 p.m.
LOCATION: Roosevelt Room
THROUGH: DAVID DEMAREST dw ^{DD}
ASSISTANT TO THE PRESIDENT FOR COMMUNICATIONS
FROM: LEIGH ANN METZGER lam
SPECIAL ASSISTANT TO THE
PRESIDENT FOR PUBLIC LIAISON

I. PURPOSE

To strengthen your support within this key constituency by reaffirming your commitment to traditional conservative values.

To accommodate recent requests by evangelical leaders for a meeting to discuss their concerns on several issues, including the departure of Doug Wead, the invitation of homosexual organizations into the White House, and child care legislation.

II. BACKGROUND

For several months, a growing rift between the White House and evangelical leaders has developed, due to a perception that they and their concerns are being taken for granted. Evangelicals now use terms like "betrayal" and "abandonment" to describe their relationship with the White House.

This is due to several Administration actions: 1) the invitation of homosexual activists to the Hate Crimes Signing Ceremony, and allegations that these same groups were "sneaked" into the ADA Signing Ceremony by White House staffers; 2) the presence of Playboy's Christi Hefner at a Magazine Publishers Association meeting with you; 3) the departure of Doug Wead, which was seen as another example of the White House's "disregard" for evangelicals; and 4) a feeling that the White House should have taken a stronger stand on the National Endowment for the Arts funding controversy.

Adding to this frustration has been the budget package negotiated with Congress. Specifically, two issues are of major concern: First, ministries and churches were worried that charitable deductions might be eliminated for upper income individuals. This concerned these groups, since a significant portion of their operational revenue comes from upper income individuals.

Secondly, the White House's child care legislation has caused major discontent among evangelicals. For a variety of reasons, they feel it discriminates against traditional families, and does not provide adequate protection for religious institutions that might accept the vouchers. They are particularly upset over earlier White House promises which they feel have not been honored.

All these incidents have occurred during the last six months, and have damaged your image within this key constituency. Much has been said in their newsletters and radio shows on how the White House has chosen to ignore the very people who helped them get elected.

In August, Don Wildmon, president of the American Family Association, called for a meeting of all pro-family leaders to discuss the Administration's actions. It was alleged that one of the topics of the meeting was to come up with an alternative candidate for the 1992 elections. For a variety of reasons, this meeting never fully developed, but it illustrates their frustration with the Administration.

This meeting on Tuesday could go a long way toward repairing your relationship with evangelicals. Specifically, you need to:

- 1) Assure these leaders that you are personally committed to a pro-family, conservative agenda;
- 2) Explain that your "open doors" policy means we remain open to all citizens but do not necessarily endorse their policies or lifestyles;
- 3) Remind them of your past actions on behalf of the family, ie. the protection of the unborn, the prosecution of pornography and illegal obscenity, support for a constitutional amendment permitting voluntary school prayer and protecting the American flag, and a rejection of hiring and promotion quotas.
- 4) Recognize them as a sizable constituency, one that played a major role in your election victory; and
- 5) Call upon these leaders to work together with the Administration, and with the Office of Public Liaison in policy development and legislative issues.

-- Governor Sununu and Roger Porter may stay to answer additional questions on specific policy matters.

Suggested talking points attached

SUGGESTED OPENING TALKING POINTS
DROP-BY MEETING WITH NATIONAL EVANGELICAL LEADERS
OCTOBER 30, 1990 -- 3:00 P.M.
ROOSEVELT ROOM

- o I want to begin by thanking all of you for coming here today. I know several of you have flown across the country to be here for this meeting and I appreciate your concern and desire to work with us.
- o I have heard from several of you in the past few months about having a meeting like this and I agree that it is long overdue. It has been at least 6 months since we last had an opportunity like this.
- o Much has happened since August. You know if Congress would do its job we wouldn't be in this position every two years trying to put together a package at the eleventh hour. Unfortunately the urgent nature forces members of Congress as well as the Administration to make concessions on matters that we've all worked so long and hard for.
- o I understand that there are concerns over the direction of some Administration policies and I think that we should use this meeting as a chance to discuss them frankly.

RE: Addendum to Campaign '90 Memo

This is a follow-up to the memo sent earlier today.

After rereading the memo I sent to you this morning, I thought that you might get the impression that I felt the Democrats could not be blamed for what is going on. That is not the case.

What I am referring to more than anything else is the tone and the attitude of your approach. I don't think we should allow the news media to force you into "hot" language. I think we should force them into covering full statements of yours in a very calm and reasoned way. We need to continue to say that the Democrats are in control of Congress. The Democrats always do everything they can to avoid spending cuts or controls, and that they in fact did tax the middle class. "Congress is to blame" is a fine theme. "Give me a Republican Congress" is a good theme. It's all a matter of tone.

RE: Addendum to Campaign '90 Memo

This is a follow-up to the memo sent earlier today.

After rereading the memo I sent to you this morning, I thought that you might get the impression that I felt the Democrats could not be blamed for what is going on. That is not the case.

What I am referring to more than anything else is the tone and the attitude of your approach. I don't think we should allow the news media to force you into "hot" language. I think we should force them into covering full statements of yours in a very calm and reasoned way. We need to continue to say that the Democrats are in control of Congress. The Democrats always do everything they can to avoid spending cuts or controls, and that they in fact did tax the middle class. "Congress is to blame" is a fine theme. "Give me a Republican Congress" is a good theme. It's all a matter of tone.

Mr. President, I am not convinced that a harsh attack on the Democrats with one week to go is going to work, and I'm not sure it is in character with you as the President. This is not 1988. The mood is different and the press is looking to make you the issue. You, in effect yelling away at Democrats and letting the network do negative analysis afterward may hurt Republicans and not help them. I know this is contrary to the popular thinking and a lot of people think that you can reassert yourself now by hammering Democrats. My problem with that thinking is that I believe it may give up some of the dignity of the Presidency. It's more important to maintain and stabilize that at the moment.

A very thoughtful speech to the American people between now and the election on how the budget is decided on and what really took place from your point of view might be better and more effective. I'm afraid "red meat language" now is not the answer. It perhaps could have worked a couple of months ago, but because of the actual budget situation that wasn't possible. Even if you give a thoughtful speech and only a few words are "hot", those are the words the evening news will run. I would rather force them to run intelligent, well thought out but memorable statements which demonstrate to the public that you know exactly what is going on.

I don't mean to try to confuse the issue or throw a monkey wrench into the current planning at this point if the decision has already been made to move forward. But if it hasn't, I would urge you to rely on your own instincts here. Listen to everybody and nobody. You are President of the United States, and nobody understands this process better than you. You went through the budget process by saying "I am going to try to forge a budget so that we can govern this country". To back off that 100% now and blame the Democrats when they have the media spinning for them may not be viable.

A better approach might be to get off the road as soon as feasible and craft a speech that explains to the people what the budget process is and why you did what you did. Even admit that you perhaps miscalculated the Democrats partisanship and ability to inflict political damage when they saw an opportunity. I think the tone of your speeches and the rhetoric should be clever but thoughtful, and that your pitch, style and tone should be straightforward but not overly energetic. You did what was right--now you have to communicate it.

The Presidency is a series of defining events. Up until the budget crisis, every time you handled a defining event you handled it brilliantly, and it worked for you. There is a media perception that you are bored with and don't particularly like domestic politics, so you have turned it over to others. All of that doesn't matter now. It only matters how you handle the next defining event. Until then you should be calm, tough, specific in language, even tempered and confident. I just don't believe you personally should be the issue on everybody's lips on Election Day. And if you are out there giving the media a sideshow every night between now and the election, you will be. If you go out there and bang away at Democrats for one week (not enough time), and any Republicans lose, the media will blame it all on you, and it will further weaken the poll numbers. Also the message on the Middle East is "unity". The message on the budget is "hit the Democrats". They can't work in the same speech.

I am sorry to come at this so directly at such a critical time because I know there are others offering a different point of view, and obviously my feelings won't be hurt if this is rejected out of hand. However, I would not feel good if I didn't at least give you my best advice.

MEMORANDUM FOR GOVERNOR SUNUNU
CHIEF OF STAFF
THE WHITE HOUSE

SUBJECT: SPECIAL BULLETIN: CONGRESSMAN SUNDQUIST TO CHALLENGE VANDER JAGT

DATE: OCTOBER 30, 1990 - 3:45 PM

Congressman Don Sundquist (R-TN) is lobbying House Republicans to support his bid to replace Congressman Guy Vander Jagt (R-MI), the 15-year veteran chairman of the National Republican Congressional Committee (NRCC), according to Republican sources in the Administration and on Capitol Hill, who suggested that the campaign may have White House support. Sundquist met with White House Chief of Staff John Sununu at the White House over the weekend, a sign being interpreted among Republicans on Capitol Hill as a laying on of hands. One source cautioned, however, that the meeting does not necessarily imply White House support Sundquist's bid. Sununu, who stayed behind in Washington this weekend while President Bush campaigned in Hawaii and California, is reported to want NRCC Co-Chairman Ed Rollins's resignation. After Congress adjourned this weekend, Sundquist is reported to have met with members of "the '92 Group," comprised of moderate to liberal Republicans, who offered their support for his campaign to replace Vander Jagt as NRCC Chairman.

A senior Republican official told the Bulletin this afternoon that the "chairmanship of the NRCC is one of the few plums a House Republican can aspire to. You get a bigger expense budget, staff, visibility, et cetera. It is an 'in-demand' job. I suspect Sundquist was interested long before [the White House spat with] Ed Rollins came on the scene."

When asked whether or not Sundquist would challenge Vander Jagt, Administrative Assistant to Sundquist Thomas McNamara told the Bulletin: "We don't have any announcement."

INSIDE THE BELTWAY

Stirring it up

The fuss over White House policy regarding concerns of the evangelical right hasn't gone away. A group of President Bush's original supporters, who gave him a strong endorsement in 1988, has issued a statement urging him "to resist the faulty advice of your White House staff and return to the principles" that guided his campaign.

"We want you to know your staffers are still saying that what we do or think doesn't matter," the group said. "This is an insult."

The group expresses grave concern for the actions of Budget Director Richard Darman. "His arbitrary insistence for taxes and his arrogance in representing you is not worthy of your style or commitment to the voters. This is not George Bush," they said.

And, the group insists, the "wrong persons" are winning the cultural war on the White House staff. "We want you to know that you are not well served by staffers such as Bobbie Kilberg and David Demarest," the group said, charging those two staffers with inviting "the ACLU, Playboy magazine, the National Gay & Lesbian Task Force, the Washington Blade, and other extremist, anti-family organizations" to the White House.

The group said "millions of Americans are confused and bewildered" because Playboy magazine was invited to the White House but Mr. Bush's staff "refuses to even meet with the newly elected leaders of the Southern Baptist Convention, the largest Protestant denomination in America."

Signers of the statement include Ed McAteer, founder of the Religious Right activist group; Jack Stanton, first vice president of the Southern Baptist Convention; Bill Carmichael, publisher of Virtue magazine; Nathan Urshon, general superintendent of the United Apostolic Churches; Kathryn Boggs; and Bob Hawkins.

GOP uprising

These are not the best of times for the White House, which is orchestrating love-ins at which administration and Republican National Committee loyalists pledge their fealty to Mr. Bush. One sore spot is the National Republican Congressional Committee, where Co-chairman Ed Rollins has been urging candidates to emphasize their differences with the prez.

Now comes news that Rep. Don Sundquist, Tennessee Republican, is making a bid to replace Michigan GOP Rep. Guy Vander Jagt as Mr. Rollins' co-chairman at the NRCC. The White House Bulletin said Mr. Sundquist met over the weekend with White House Chief of Staff John Sununu, known to be after Mr. Rollins' scalp. The report said the meeting did not necessarily imply White House support for the insurgency. Mr. Sundquist is said to have already rallied the "'92 Group" of moderate and liberal Republicans behind him.

Ed Crane very likely gave the bust of F.A. Hayek to the wrong Soviet.

Not a complete bust

One thing Soviet envoy Yevgeny Primakov won't be coming home to in Moscow is a bust of free market economist F.A. Hayek.

CATO Institute top man Ed Crane gave Mr. Primakov, a senior member of the Gorbachev cabinet, the Hayek bust last month during a brief ceremony in the official conference room of the Communist Party Central Committee at the plush Oktyabrskaya Hotel. Mr. Hayek was one of a small band of economists who stood eloquent against the vogue of Communism in the 1930s and 1940s, arguing a "planned" economy not only couldn't work but would suppress human liberty.

"Hayek was right and Marx was wrong," Mr. Crane told Mr. Primakov.

The message was apparently too much for Mr. Primakov, who was last seen engaging in Middle East shuttle diplomacy, to digest. The bust now rests in the Kremlin offices of Stanislav Shatalin, the principal author of the controversial 500-day plan for turning the Soviet economy into a market system.

Avoid the rush

Congress may be slow to act on some things but there are exceptions. One of our Beltway Irregulars reports that just after passage of the "tax and spend" package, including, of course, the increase in excise taxes on liquor, House Minority Leader Bob Michel, Illinois Republican, was spotted loading up at a Capitol Hill liquor store. By "loading up" we don't mean getting tanked, but rather that it took a two-wheeled hand truck to carry the bulk purchases out to his waiting limo.

Giving them gas

State Department mid-level bureaucrats are saying President Bush will veto the Export Administration Act because of the section that includes imposing sanctions against countries and companies that deal in chemical weapons. The State officials say the President needs more "selectivity" in how sanctions are imposed. While the act contains a broad waiver for countries, it is tough on companies. "They're pushing for the veto even as our troops in the Mideast face poison gas," our concerned source said. "Other agencies are trying to get him to sign it, and everybody's hoping cool heads at the White House will prevail."

A slice of pork

American Conservative Union's "Pork Rating Index" focuses on the feeding frenzy associated with a "dire emergency funding supplemental bill" that went through the House. "Just a typical bit of legislation on a typical day in Congress," said ACU's Bob Billings. Some 33 additional amendments were tacked on to the legislation aimed at helping Nicaragua and El Salvador, ranging from funding for a defunct ferry boat in Samoa to addition of $25 million to franking privileges. "It's just a snapshot view of how Congress really works," Mr. Billings said, adding that the report is free and may be obtained by calling ACU at (202) 546-6555.

From: Mike Boskin MB
Re: Personal Income and Outlays in September and October Purchasing
Managers' Survey

Personal income rose 0.5 percent in September, while spending adjusted for inflation rose 0.3 percent. This was about what was expected. Given the recent sharp decline in consumer confidence surveys, consumer spending will probably be the key to the next couple of quarters.

Also, the Purchasing Managers' index, a private survey covering just the industrial sector of the economy, will be released Thursday morning and show a continuation of its gradual erosion. Its level is now the lowest since the 1982 recession. In my conversations with them, they expect a brief mild recession beginning this quarter.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRESIDENT

FROM: MICHAEL J. BOSKIN mf

SUBJECT: September Personal Income and Outlays, Commerce
Department Release, Tomorrow, 10:00 a.m.

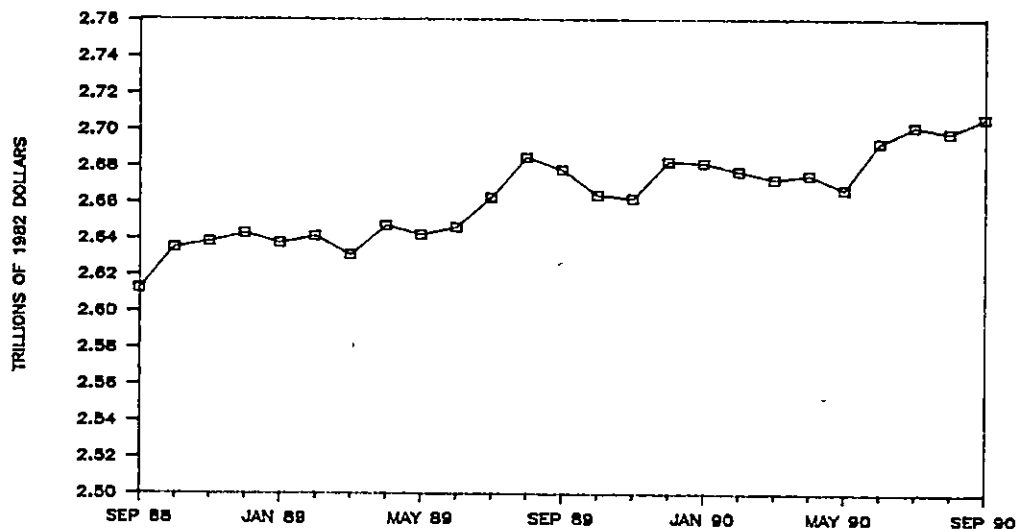

Personal income rose 0.5 percent in September, matching the average of private forecasts. After-tax income rose 0.4 percent, but was down 0.3 percent after adjusting for inflation. The decline in real income was the fourth decline in the last 6 months.

Adjusting for inflation, consumer spending rose 0.3 percent in September, rebounding from August's slight decline. A surge in durable goods led the spending gain and offset continued weakness in spending on nondurable goods. Spending on services continued to rise steadily. Consumer spending increased 1.1 percent before adjusting for inflation, following a 0.5 percent gain in August. September's increase exceeded the 0.8 percent average of private predictions.

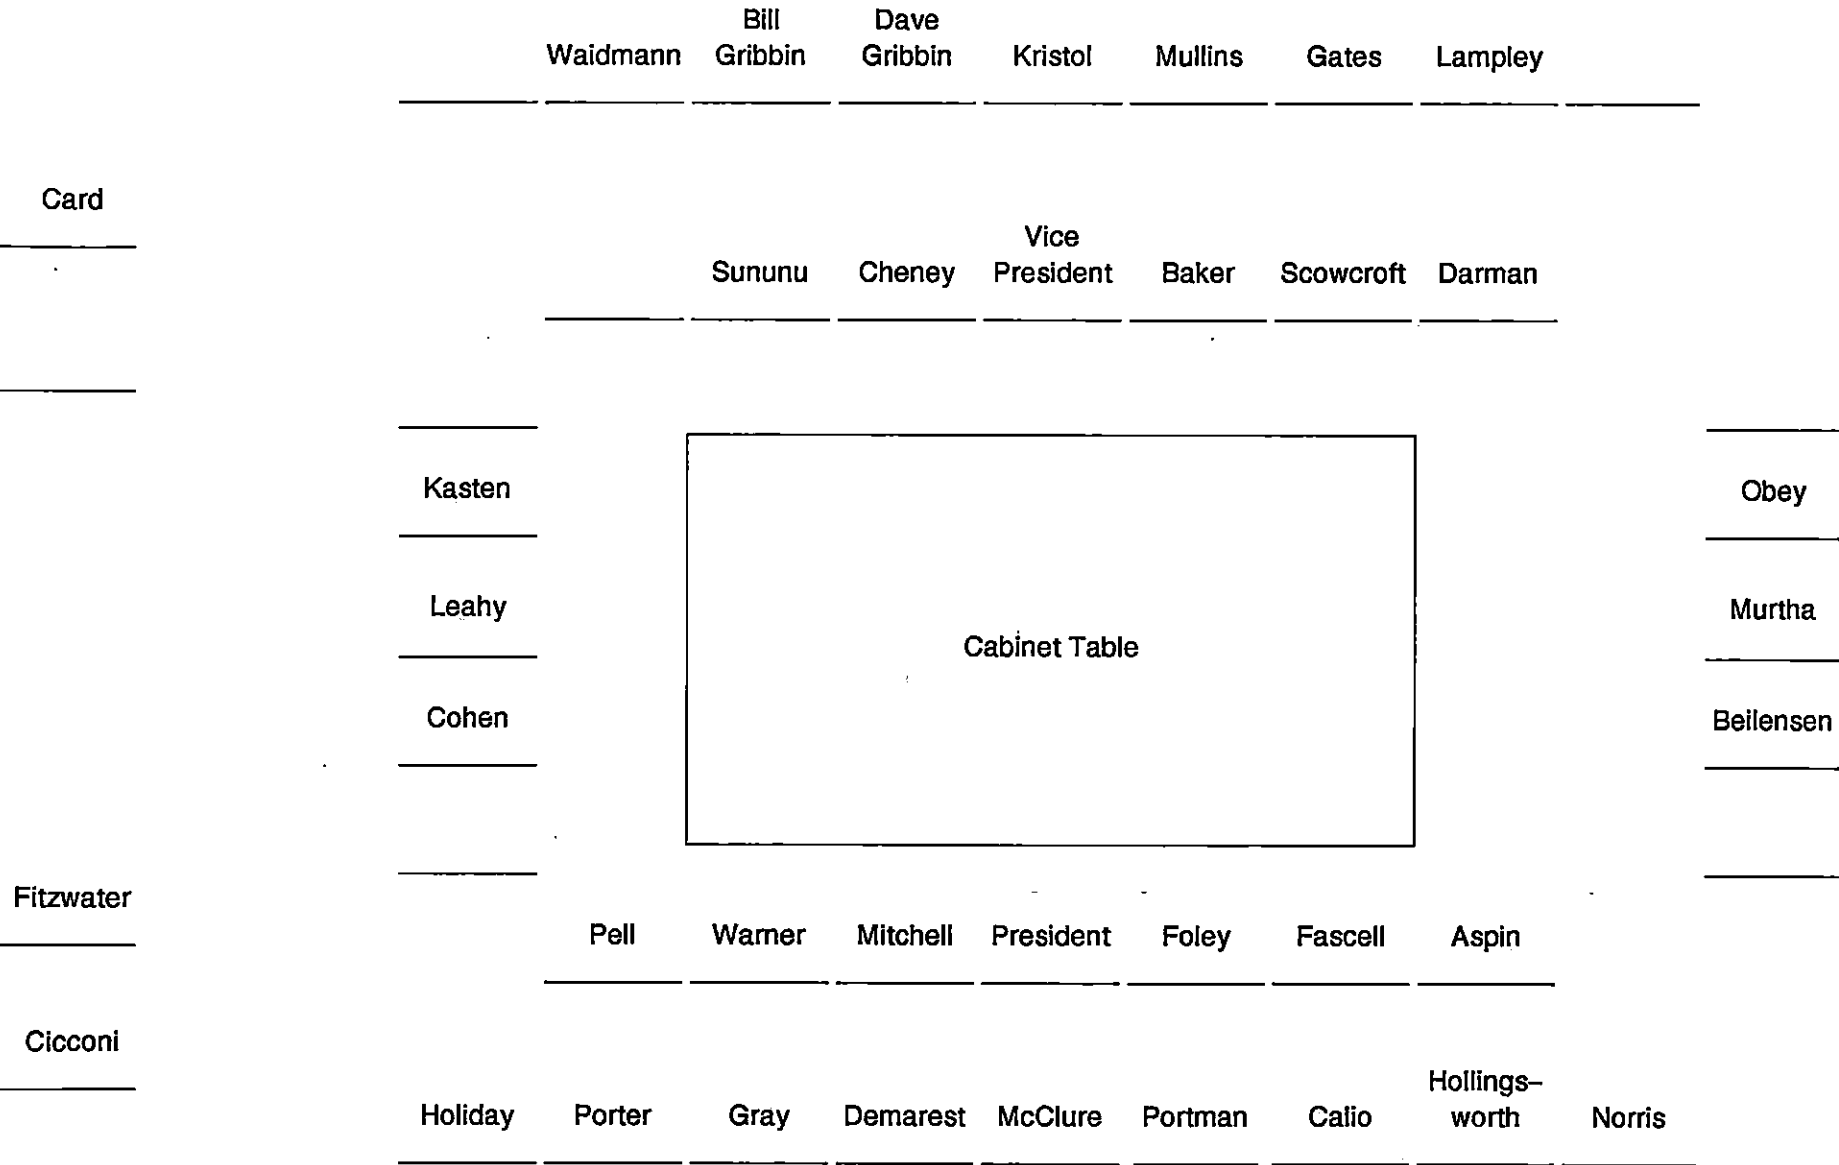

For the 3 months ending in September, the saving rate fell to 4 percent, the lowest rate in 21 months. Downward revisions to personal income in August and July also reduced saving for those months.

As the graph below indicates, real consumer spending was on a slightly declining trend from August 1989 through May 1990. Since June 1990, however, it has shown a slight upward trend.

Draft Executive Order
submitted to the President by

The National Association of Evangelicals and the
Christian Life Commission of the Southern Baptist Convention, et al

October 30, 1990

AFFIRMATION OF TRADITIONAL FAMILY VALUES

By the authority vested in me as President by the Constitution and laws of the United States of America, and in order to affirm traditional family values in general and, specifically, as these values relate to human sexuality, provide a national example of leadership in setting public standards, increase agency accountability regarding traditional family values, provide for presidential oversight of the administrative process, and insure unified and correlated administrative policies and procedures, it is hereby ordered as follows:

Section 1. Definitions. For the purposes of this Order:

(a) "Regulation" means an agency statement of general applicability and present or future effect designed to implement, interpret, or prescribe law or policy or describing the procedure or practice requirements of an agency.

(b) "Policy" or "Procedure" means an agency statement of specific applicability and present or future effect designed to implement, interpret, or prescribe law or policy or describing the procedure or practice requirements of an agency.

(c) "Where Applicable" means applying or relating to the content of moral human behavior.

(d) "Traditional Family" means a man and woman joined in lawful marriage, and includes blood relatives, legal adoptions, and foster children.

(e) "Values Relate to Human Sexuality" means heterosexuality, pre-marital sexual abstinence, post-marital monogamy, pro-creative in lawful marriage, and pro-adoptive.

(f) "Agency" means any authority of the United States that is an "agency" under 44 U.S.C. 3502(1), excluding those agencies specified in 44 U.S.C. 3502(10).

Section 2. General Requirements. In promulgating new regulations new policies, new grants and awards, in reviewing existing regulations, existing policies, existing grants and awards, and in developing legislative proposals concerning regulations, policies, grants and awards, all agencies, to the extent permitted by law, shall adhere to the following requirements:

(a) Administrative decisions, where applicable, shall uphold and affirm traditional family values in general and, specifically, as these values relate to human sexuality:

(b) Regulatory action, development of legislative policy and procedure, development of administrative policy and procedure, request for proposals regarding grants and awards shall not be undertaken when action serves to promote or encourage, directly or indirectly, homosexuality, bisexuality, pedophilia, bestiality, or promiscuous heterosexuality, whether pre-marital or extra-marital;

(c) Application(s) for grants and awards shall not be approved if proposed recipient(s) is shown, by current goals and practices, to promote or encourage, directly or indirectly, homosexuality, bisexuality, pedophilia, bestiality, or promiscuous heterosexuality, whether pre-marital or extra-marital;

(d) Agencies, where applicable, shall set administrative priorities with the aim of affirming traditional family values and, specifically, as these values relate to human sexuality, taking into account local community standards and state laws regarding human sexuality, but at no time violating the provisions of subsections (b) or (c) of this section.

Section 3. Judicial Review. This order is intended only to improve the internal management of the Federal government, and is not intended to create any right or benefit, substantive or procedural, enforceable at law by a party against the United States, its agencies, its officers, or any person.

TALKING POINTS -- DROP-BY MEETING WITH NATIONAL EVANGELICAL LEADERS, 3:00 P.M., OCTOBER 30, 1990

- o I want to begin by thanking all of you for coming here today. I know several of you have flown across the country to be here for this meeting, and I appreciate your concern and desire to work with us.
- o I have heard from several of you in the past few months about having a meeting like this, and I agree that it is long overdue. It has been at least six months since we last had an opportunity like this.

- o Much has happened since August. You know, if Congress would do its job we wouldn't be in this position every two years trying to put together a package at the eleventh hour. Unfortunately, the urgent nature forces members of Congress as well as the Administration to make concessions on matters that we've all worked so long and hard for.
- o I understand that there are concerns over the direction of some Administration policies, and I think we should use this meeting as a chance to discuss them frankly.

TALKING POINTS ON SPECIFIC ISSUES AND CONCERNS
DROP-BY MEETING WITH NATIONAL EVANGELICAL LEADERS

OCTOBER 30, 1990 -- 3:00 P.M.

ROOSEVELT ROOM

CHILD CARE POLICY

The child care issue is one of the most important legislative issues for this group. They rallied early behind your position during the campaign and have been supportive throughout the legislative battle over the last two years.

They are unhappy with the current proposal that has been negotiated in the budget deal. They feel that their interests have been betrayed and "sold out" just to get some type of child care passed.

They are concerned that the current package:

- 1) Still discriminates against traditional families. It is not equitable because it provides billions more for parents who choose care outside the home, while only $500 million for traditional families. Further, it expands the current Dependant Care Tax Credit (DCTC), which is only available to those who choose care outside the home, by making it refundable.
- 2) Still allows for a "double dip" by non-traditional families to obtain both the DCTC and the Young Child Supplement of the EITC (Earned Income Tax Credit). They feel that this is unfair to traditional families who are subsidizing this through taxes yet cannot qualify for it.
- 3) Does not provide adequate protection for the religious institutions that might accept the vouchers.
- 4) Contains inadequate and vague language regarding mandated vouchers. There is a phrase that calls for "flexibility" authority by the states and many feel that this might limit the actual mandate for vouchers. Congressman Bartlett wrote OMB last Wednesday expressing his concern over this, and OMB has agreed to work on some regulatory language that would guarantee that approximately 60 percent of the funds have to be used in the form of vouchers.

SUGGESTED RESPONSE TO CHILD CARE CONCERNS:

- o Your good work over last year and a half gave us a strong position in the negotiating process.

Bush Presidential Library Photocopy

NO REFUNDABLE
NO DOUBLE DIPPING

Not now

"Refundable"

- o Sure its not perfect, but when you don't control either body of Congress you have to bargain the best deal you can. I feel that this child care proposal does break new ground in the recognition of traditional families through both a credit approach (wee tots) and vouchers which will empower parents with choice.
- o I also understand that OMB is working with you to draft appropriate language regarding your concerns on mandated vouchers.

NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE ARTS

SUGGESTED RESPONSE TO NEA FUNDING CONTROVERSY:

- o I share your outrage over some of the blasphemous and pornographic "art" that has come out lately, and I have expressed these concerns with Chairman Frohnmeyer, and I think he is very responsive to your criticisms.
- o The Chairman and I will closely study the final language of NEA's appropriations bill to make sure that only responsible and sensitive art is funded with tax dollars.

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION OF EVANGELICALS IN THE WHITE HOUSE

This is an allegation that comes up periodically, but one that has found a new breath of life since Doug Wead's departure. This accusation is often made out of frustration when evangelicals feel they are shut out of the policy-making process.

CBN has been sniffing around the White House for a story the last couple weeks. They have spoken with several identified "evangelicals" on the staff who have not given any credibility to these allegations. David Demarest and I have spoken "off the record" with the reporter and they seem to have backed off the story for now.

SUGGESTED TALKING POINTS ON EVANGELICAL APPOINTMENTS:

- o I can tell you that I would never tolerate discrimination of any person on my staff for any reason, particularly for their religious beliefs.
- o I know that we have had several recent appointments to commissions that demonstrate that this is a totally unfounded proposition.
- o In fact, (you can look at Jerry Falwell) I believe that we just nominated Pierre Guillermin, the president of Liberty University, to be a Member of the National Advisory Council on Educational Research and Improvement.

Bush Presidential Library Photocopy

not submitted
Blasphemy

- o As you have heard me say a lot during the past few months, I don't believe in quotas; I hire staff and nominate individuals based on their qualifications. I am sensitive to your desire to have people who represent your philosophy, and I'm sure that we can continue to find those individuals who will bring both skill and conviction to a position.

HATE CRIMES BILL SIGNING CEREMONY

Conservatives and evangelical leaders claim that this is the first time that an invitation has been extended to homosexual groups to visit the White House. They take it as a "slap in the face" to the 33% of the population that claim to be evangelical and voted for you.

The explanation was given that representatives of the homosexual lobbying group, the Gay and Lesbian Task Force, were invited because they were part of the 13 group coalition who supported the Hate Crimes legislation.

This incident probably could have been forgotten, but several months later homosexual activists were photographed inside the White House gates at the Americans With Disabilities Act signing ceremony. This only revived the anger among the evangelical groups and raised their doubts about your commitment to their issues.

These incidents were followed by what appeared to be an "ousting" of Doug Wead. Wead never raised any concern in staff meetings about the invitations to the gay activists for the Hate Crimes Bill signing ceremony. But later he wrote a letter critical of White House staff regarding the issue. Wead's letter was used to portray him a martyr and seemed to confirm that homosexuals had been invited again to the White House.

SUGGESTED RESPONSE TO SIGNING CEREMONY INCIDENTS:

- o I want to give you the facts on these events. When we decided to have a ceremony for the Hate Crimes bill, we were concerned about how groups like yourselves would react to the invitation of homosexual activists. My staff worked with the various coalition leaders who said that all members of the coalition should be there or none of them would participate. We felt that this legislation was important and deserved the ceremony and so we invited the whole coalition.
- o The bill protects many in our society against the persecution and crimes of hate. We were not singling out any one group for praise or endorsing any one

MEMORANDUM FOR ROSE M. ZAMARIA
SPECIAL ASSISTANT TO THE PRESIDENT
GRD FL WEST WING

FROM: MIKE ORTEGA Mike
NIGHT SUPERVISOR, WHITE HOUSE MAIL ANALYSIS
OEOB ROOM 60

SUBJECT: WEST WING TOURS AND THE PRESIDENT

I wish to express my gratitude, once again, for the privilege we have to visit the West Wing with a few guests from time to time.

Last night, 10-24-90, the President was attending to business in the Oval and nearby offices yet we were still allowed to make "the rounds" with our guests. As the President was away momentarily, we viewed the Oval Office until the Secret Service Officer on duty asked us to move quickly into the Roosevelt Room. As we moved backward, the President began to enter his office when an eleven year old girl in my group squealed loudly as she saw the President pass by. The President turned back, smiled and waved at our group as the young lady turned several shades of red. Her mother reprimanded her and said, "my goodness, he's not Michael Jackson." She apologized to me as well.

I hope at some opportune moment you might tell the President how very grateful many of us staffers are for taking these great liberties in the working White House. We are also very proud of our President's graciousness and courtesy in contending with us on those occasions when we may get in the way.

With his wave and smile, this eleven year old will never forget her visit to the West Wing nor will her family forget their opportunity to see the President in person.

As always, many thanks.

WASHINGTON

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Austin:

Thank you for your thoughtful letter telling me about Kyle's impression of Saddam Hussein. It sounds like you have a very bright grandson.

It means a great deal to me to receive words of support from those who have loved ones personally affected by the situation in the Persian Gulf. I know you must be concerned about your son-in-law's safety. Be assured that I will continue to do my best to bring about a timely and peaceful resolution of this matter of grave importance to our nation and to the world.

Barbara and I join people everywhere in praying for you and your family. God bless you.

Sincerely,

Barbara Bush

1:45 P.M. NEWS UPDATE

GULF/PRESIDENT (Rita Beamish, AP) -- President Bush's "patience is wearing thin" in the Persian Gulf crisis, one lawmaker reported today after a White House meeting that included discussion of possible military action. Congressional leaders emerging from the meeting said they had urged the President to explore all other avenues for resolving the crisis and got no indication that U.S. military action was imminent. "His patience is wearing thin," said Sen. Cohen, adding, "for the time being, he's going to continue to pursue the course that we're currently on.... There was no indication we're at the near-break point" for moving to military action. Asked if Bush appeared to have a military strike on the front burner, Sen. Pell said, "It's certainly on the burner and not ruled out." "There's concern on Capitol Hill...that this is somehow a prelude to immediate military action," Sen. Leahy said.

(Reuter) -- ...Sen. Pell said the legislative leaders advised Bush to "go slow, take it easy. There's a general feeling that we ought to give the sanctions a chance to work."... He said Bush was "genuinely shocked" at the plight of Western hostages in Iraq.

GULF/CHENEY (Pittsburgh/Reuter) -- Secretary Cheney reaffirmed the U.S. has not ruled out the use of force against Iraq and said there was no upper limit on the numbers of troops the U.S. may deploy in the region. "We have not ruled out the military option. We think it's important that we not eliminate that possibility," Cheney told reporters before addressing the World Affairs Council here. "We've never had an upper limit. We've never said we have a point where we would go no further."

GULF/ARMY (AP) -- The Army is preparing to rotate fresh combat units to Saudi Arabia to relieve units that have been in the desert since the start of Desert Shield, Gen. Gordon Sullivan, the Army vice chief of staff, said. However, he said the Army had not yet been instructed to increase the overall number of soldiers in Saudi Arabia beyond the more than 100,000 already there or en route.

GULF/BAKER-SHEVARDNADZE (Reuter) -- Secretary Baker will meet Soviet Foreign Minister Shevardnadze in Europe next week to discuss the Gulf crisis and arms control, the State Department said.

MOSLEMS/EGYPT (Cairo/Reuter) -- Egypt has uncovered a network of Moslem extremists responsible for major unsolved terrorist acts, including the assassination of the parliament speaker, Interior Minister Abdel-Halim Moussa said.

NEW HOME SALES (UPI) -- Sales of new single-family homes declined 21 percent in September to an annual rate of 503,000 units from 638,000 units in the year-earlier period, the Commerce Dept. said. But experts have found some hope because builders are cutting back on housing starts at a greater rate than sales have declined.

ENVIRONMENT/WOMEN (New York/Reuter) -- American women are more concerned about the environment than a host of other pressing problems including the deficit, AIDS, homelessness and crime, according to a "Good Housekeeping" survey published today, which added that only the drug problem concerns women more.

11:00 A.M. EST NEWS UPDATE

GNP (UPI) -- The nation's total output of goods and services jumped by an unexpected 1.8% in the third quarter on strong consumer purchases of cars, vans and trucks, the Commerce Department said. Private economists expected an initial estimate increase of 0.8%.

SMALL BUSINESSES (New York/UPI) -- Owners of small businesses are more pessimistic about the prospects for their companies and the economy than they have been since the deep recession of 1982, a national survey released Tuesday showed. The survey, which will appear in the November/December issue of D&B Reports, a Dunn & Bradstreet Corp. publication, found 59 percent of small-business owners were optimistic -- down from 67 percent last year -- while 23 percent were pessimistic vs. 13 percent a year ago.

GULF/PRESIDENT (AP) -- ...President Bush brushed off a reporter's question of a news report in The Los Angeles Times that Administration officials would discuss a timetable with U.S. allies for a possible military offensive. "I could, but I'm not going to comment," Bush said.

GULF/ACCIDENTS (Manama, Bahrain/AP) -- A pipe ruptured today in the boiler room of the USS Iwo Jima, releasing searing steam that killed six U.S. sailors and severely injured four, the Navy said.

(UPI) -- ...A Marine died when a vehicle overturned in Saudi Arabia, U.S. military officials said.

GULF/SADDAM (Nicosia/AP) -- Saddam Hussein today summoned senior military aides and told them the U.S. and its allies might attack in "the coming few days," the Iraqi News Agency reported. Saddam and the armed forces joint command met to complete preparations for "urban warfare" in occupied Kuwait, the report said.... Middle East diplomats who spoke to the AP on condition of anonymity said Saddam was reacting to statements by Secretary Baker Monday.

(Baghdad/Reuter) -- Saddam Hussein called on his generals to be on high alert over the next few days and spoke of "treacherous American designs."... "The president underlined the need for extreme alert in the face of the treacherous designs of the American enemy and its allies in the coming days and for full readiness to face any possible evil aggression," INA said.

GULF/KUWAIT (Nicosia/Reuter) -- Kuwait's ousted rulers told Soviet envoy Yevgeny Primakov they appreciated his efforts to resolve the Gulf crisis but would accept nothing less than an unconditional Iraqi withdrawal from their entire country.

GULF/FRANCE (Riyadh/Reuter) -- French troops will complete a move to new positions in northeast Saudi Arabia this week, pulling back from the front line with Iraqi soldiers, military sources said. They said Saudi Arabia had asked the French to withdraw 13 miles to leave Arab forces, believed to be Syrian, facing the Iraqis.

TEMPLE MOUNT (Jerusalem/Reuter) -- Jerusalem/Reuter) -- Senior Moslem leaders in the Holy Land accused Israeli police of planning the Temple Mount shootings with government approval.

Fate of historic congressional battle in hands of voters

By DE'ANN WEIMER

United Press International

It's white knuckles time for Florida's Republican and Democratic party regulars.

The skirmishes on taxes, abortion and the environment are almost over, and on Nov. 6 the voters will decide who will represent Florida's 19 congressional districts.

Last year, the Republicans gained control of the state's 19 U.S. House districts, holding 11 of those seats. That puts the Republican Party in an unprecedented position for the GOP of defending an 11-8 majority in a southern state's congressional delegation.

A year ago when the power brokers in each party began to look toward the 1990 election no less than four congressional seats were viewed as pivotal must wins for both sides.

Hundreds of thousands of dollars later after countless television spots and handshakes, three of those four races are still too close to call. The exception is District 6 where incumbent Rep. Clifford Stearns, a Republican, appears headed for an easy win over Art Johnson of Gainesville.

That means the three remaining races are must wins for the Democrats, if they are to recapture control with a slim 10-9 majority.

"As far as we are concerned, we have three races in particular that are standoffs: Jim Bacchus — he has done exceptionally well; Reid Hughes, who is probably going to defeat Craig James; Pete Peterson, who faces Bill Grant in the 2nd Congressional (District)," said Gayle Andrews, a spokeswoman for the Florida Democratic Party.

Bacchus is trying to hold on to the District 11 seat for the Democrats that was held by former U.S. Rep. Bill Nelson, who abandoned it to make his failed bid for the governor's office.

Bacchus, who is making his first run for elected office, has benefited from no competition in the primary and his own ability to raise large amounts of cash. He has raised a total of $579,235.

His opponent Bill Tolley bested four hopefuls outright in the Republican primary and emerged victorious from an October runoff with John Vogt. His campaign has been boosted by support among strident anti-abortion activists and the endorsement of Pat Robertson.

With the exception of the Bacchus-Tolley matchup, the Republicans are on the defensive.

"This year's races are awfully important given there are very few (switching parties)."

Smith says confidence in Grant's ability to retain his seat has never waivered, despite the fact that the Democratic National Party has committed itself to ousting Grant.

The most vulnerable Republican incumbent is District 4's Craig James who was distracted from campaigning by the budget mess in Washington.

"I think it's a double-edged sword on one hand it's unfortunate Craig isn't able to campaign personally down here, because people want to talk to there congressman. On the other hand, Craig's position against the budget, the first budget, drawn up with only 20 people deciding, is supported by constituents," said campaign manager Jim Dornan.

James has also been hurt by a report in the Washington Post that he spent $78,000 in taxpayer money to send a mailout to constituents informing them that he had returned his $7,100 congressional pay raise to protest congressional spending.

James' opponent is Reid Hughes. In 1982, Hughes ran for the seat, which includes much of Florida's prime citrus land, forcing former Rep. Bill Chappell Jr., who was first elected to Congress in 1968, into a run-off in the primary that Hughes subsequently lost. It was Chappell that James beat two years ago.

The Hughes-James match is close. Dornan says polls show James with about a 10 percent lead among likely voters.

Kobly Peterson, Dornan's counterpart in the Hughes campaign, says his polls give James 41 percent to Hughes' 40 percent.

"Regionally, we are beating the congressman in Volusia County, which is half of the district. We'll win that handily. In the other five counties, we're either in a virtual tie or beating him," Peterson said.

Ultimately, all either side can do in each of the three key races is wait on voters to punch their ballots.

But Democratic strategists have their fingers crossed that the heated gubernatorial battle between Republican Gov. Bob Martinez and Lawton Chiles will bring Democratic voters to the polls in force and help win back the congressional delegation from the Grand Old Party.

Quayle stumps for Isakson

ATLANTA (UPI) Vice President Dan Quayle led a pep rally Monday for Johnny Isakson's longshot gubernatorial bid, urging Georgia voters to wrest the governor's office from the Democrats for the first time in 122 years.

Quayle, who recently campaigned for Isakson in Savannah, was the featured speaker at a $1,000 a ticket fund-raiser at the Colony Square hotel in Atlanta.

The White House has made the Georgia election a priority.

Quayle's visit follows campaign stops on behalf of Isakson by first lady Barbara Bush, who was in Atlanta last week, and President Bush, who stumped for Isakson earlier in the month.

"Georgia is on our mind and Johnny Isakson is going to be the Republican governor that Georgia hasn't had since the 1860s," Quayle told a throng of cheering Isakson supporters.

Georgia's last Republican governor was Rufus Bulloch, who held office during Reconstruction.

"There is no doubt in my mind ... that he is going to be the next governor of the state of Georgia," Quayle said of Isakson. "If Atlanta can get the Olympics, if Evander Holyfield can be heavyweight champion of the world, Johnny Isakson can be the next governor of Georgia."

The most recent polls, however, show Isakson trailing Democratic opponent Zell Miller, by 21 percentage points.

Isakson joined Quayle on stage with GOP insurance commissioner candidate Billy Lovett and Republican lieutenant gubernatorial candidate Matt Towery.

An upbeat Isakson, before introducing Quayle, said he planned to battle Miller to the finish.

"I am taking off my coat and rolling up my sleeves," Isakson said.

"We have had enough. We need a change and next Tuesday we are going to send them a message from the ballot box."

First Lady Speaks On Senator's Behalf at Fund-Raiser

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — First lady Barbara Bush on Monday came to the aid of embattled Sen. Mark Hatfield, saying his work has brought millions of federal dollars to Oregon.

While Hatfield was speaking, two hecklers were hustled out of the Hilton Hotel ballroom by security guards.

The protesters, who shouted about homosexual rights, were charged with trespass and one was charged with disorderly conduct, said police spokesman Dave Simpson.

Mrs. Bush urged more than 1,100 people who attended the $100-a-plate breakfast to do whatever they could to ensure that Hatfield is elected to a fifth term.

"Make that extra phone call, ring that extra doorbell and stuff that extra envelope," she said.

The first lady said Hatfield, as the ranking Republican on the Senate Appropriations Committee, has helped bring millions of federal dollars to Oregon for such projects as the Hatfield Marine Science Center at Newport.

The Republican senator is locked in a tight race against Democrat Harry Lonsdale, a Bend businessman who has attacked Hatfield as a Washington insider who's beholden to special interests.

Barbara Bush endorses Democrat for Oregon governor

PORTLAND, Ore. (UPI) — Oregon's Democratic gubernatorial candidate picked up the endorsement of Barbara Bush Monday, but it isn't as surprising as it sounds.

The same day the country's first lady was in Portland to campaign for Sen. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., Democratic gubernatorial nominee Barbara Roberts said she was endorsed by a semi-retired Portland librarian named Barbara Bush.

In fact, the Roberts campaign said it found four Barbara Bushes in Oregon who endorsed the Democrat, but assumed the first lady was backing Republican gubernatorial nominee Dave Frohnmayer. President Bush campaign for Frohnmayer earlier this year.

"Four out of five Barbara Bushes recommend Barbara Roberts for governor," the Roberts campaign said in a tongue-in-cheek announcement.

Pamela Reamer-Williams, a spokeswoman for Roberts, said she thought up the gag because one of the Barbara Bushes is her mother-in-law.

Shrewd Positioning and Sharp Tactics Give Michigan's Blanchard the Lead

By JOE DAVIDSON

Staff Reporter of THE WALL STREET JOURNAL

CADILLAC, Mich. — By rights, Gov. James Blanchard should be in big political trouble right about now.

He heads a state with one of the nation's highest unemployment rates; he is seeking a third term at a time when anti-incumbency talk is popular; his former wife wrote a book portraying him as career-obsessed and neglectful of his family, and in the midst of the campaign he clumsily dropped his popular lieutenant governor, a 78-year-old woman, from the ticket.

James Blanchard

Yet, the 48-year-old governor is the odds-on favorite to defeat his GOP opponent, state Senate Majority Leader John Engler. He has accomplished this through shrewd political positioning and, in a campaign scenario lifted from President Bush's victory over Michael Dukakis, a negative campaign that etched an unflattering portrait of his opponent in voters' minds before Mr. Engler was able to get his message across.

The governor, Sen. Engler complains, is "laying negatives on me—and laying them on faster than I can articulate the positive."

Republicans entered this campaign with high hopes and spared few efforts on Mr. Engler's behalf. President Bush—who received critical help from Mr. Engler in the 1988 Michigan caucuses—has visited three times. Barbara Bush, Vice President Quayle, two cabinet members and former President Reagan also have stumped for him. "Everybody loves John Engler here," says Mary Matalin, chief of staff of the Republican National Committee.

As Gov. Blanchard is now aware, capturing and defining the agenda enables a campaigner to stop even a strong challenge. As the state Senate GOP leader, Mr. Engler developed a reputation as a tough and calculating deal-maker. Gov. Blanchard and his handlers seized on that perception and in a devastating series of television ads painted a portrait of Mr. Engler as an unproductive, obstructionist, career politician who has made back-room deals with politically unsavory elements.

When gasoline prices began to soar after the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait, the governor's media adviser, Robert Squier, produced a TV spot showing Sen. Engler's face floating over what appears to be sewage flowing from a pipe. "When big oil needs a favor, they turn to John Engler," says the announcer. "Why? Engler voted four times [for state legislation] to let polluters off the hook."

Gov. Blanchard, meanwhile, proved not to be as easy a target as Republicans had hoped as small business. In Cadillac, a town of 11,000 where Main Street Republicans grow thicker than the sugar maple trees covering this upstate recreational area, Mr. Blanchard offended business leaders a few years back by telling them their storefronts were looking shabby—then came up with some state money to help renovate the aging main drag.

"I'm probably going to vote for the guy," says Bob Jones, director of Cadillac's Chamber of Commerce, "and I'm a good friend of Engler's." The governor "drove through the town, saw the problem and got something done," he says.

Sen. Engler tried to get back in the race by passing out nickels to illustrate—incorrectly, Mr.

Blanchard says—how little the governor's property-tax relief plan would mean to each person in the state. "You're nothing but a tax-and-spend governor," he tells Mr. Blanchard, and he advocates a 20% property-tax cut. But Mr. Blanchard has turned the tax argument back on his opponent by charging that Mr. Engler would install programs costing each taxpayer $1,100 more annually.

The governor also has countered Mr. Engler's attempts to harness anti-incumbent sentiment. Sometimes the counterthrust has been subtle. In the second of their three debates, Mr. Blanchard made a point of praising the 20 years of service Mr. Engler—who is 42—has in the state Legislature. At other times, the instrument is blunt: The governor's commercials contend Mr. Engler would be a "change for the worse."

Not all is smooth sailing for Mr. Blanchard. Showing thin skin in the second debate, he curtly refused to comment on a Detroit News article that said $183.5 million in state contracts have been given to people who contributed $114,000 to his campaign and his officeholder expense fund. Economic problems remain: Average personal income has fallen below the national average, and a higher percentage of people receive Aid to Families with Dependent Children than in any other state. Despite the state's declining economic reliance on the auto industry, a recession is likely to hit hard; estimates of the state budget deficit now reach $900 million.

But observers say Gov. Blanchard appears to have succeeded in his quest to turn his opponent into an unacceptable alternative. Says William Ballenger, publisher of a newsletter called Inside Michigan Politics: "As unenthusiastic as some people are in Michigan about Blanchard, they simply are not ready to turn over the reins to John Engler."

WASHINGTON WAYS

Reagan's Homing Instinct

By Donnie Radcliffe
Washington Post Staff Writer

The last time he was in Dixon, Ill., was on his 73rd birthday when he dedicated his boyhood home, which later was opened to the public. Today, six years and 140,000 visitors later, Ronald Reagan goes back to Dixon, this trip minus the trappings of the presidency but not the aura; 4,000 fans are expected to await him at an afternoon rally in the high school gym.

Certainly the timing is right. Reagan's memoir, "Ronald Reagan: An American Life," published by Simon & Schuster, will be in bookstores by Monday. And just as Nancy Reagan did a year ago when her memoir, "My Turn," was published, Reagan has ruled out a book tour. Instead, the Great Communicator will do his communicating via three taped television interviews, two of them on ABC with Barbara Walters of "20/20" and Charles Gibson of "Good Morning America," and the third on PBS with Reagan's longtime ideological soul mate William F. Buckley Jr.

In the first of two excerpts, Time magazine in its Nov. 5 issue quotes Reagan as saying, "A number of things that happened during my watch as president gave me great satisfaction, but I'm probably proudest about the economy."

At another point the former president recalls phoning his daughter Patti, away at school in Arizona, the night he won the California governor's race in 1966. When he told her he had been elected, he says, "she started to cry."

"She was only 14," Reagan writes, "but as a child of the 1960s she believed the anti-Establishment rhetoric that was popular among members of her generation, and she let me know that she didn't like having a member of the Establishment in the family."

Patti Davis, reached yesterday for comment, said she has not

Davis said she wasn't the only student crying that night. So was a schoolmate, Nikki Williams, whose father, John R. Williams, also was elected governor—of Arizona. (A Goldwater Republican, he remained in office until 1974, the year that Reagan left the statehouse.)

"She went to bed crying," Davis remembered, "but my hysteria, being the dramatic person I am, had me racing all around the campus."

Whether she's traveling light or traveling heavy, Barbara Bush says, one of the perks of living in the White House is "I don't have to pack anymore. I hang."

If President Bush's Hawaiian wardrobe was any clue, he may do a little of both. Over the weekend, in between campaign fund-raising, giving a speech and meeting with Pacific island leaders, Bush unveiled what almost certainly will become the standard for what every well-dressed president should tuck into his suitcase for a tropical outing—just in case.

When Bush wasn't splashing around in swim trunks in the blue Pacific waters off the Hilton Hawaiian Village Hotel, he was changing into his golf togs for 18 holes at Hickam Air Force Base with national security adviser Brent Scowcroft; Adm. Huntington Hardisty, commander of U.S. Pacific operations; and longtime Washington friend Fred Zeder, head of Overseas Private Investment Corp.

But for a cruise on Zeder's catamaran Saturday night, Bush showed up in his pièce de résistance: a gaudy Hawaiian print shirt. And in case anybody had other ideas, he told reporters his outfits were "getting very good reviews."

Barbara Bush, back last night from the Hatfield-Lonsdale wars in Oregon, goes vote-hunting for Maurice Turner today in his bid for mayor of the District.

Yesterday in Portland, while Sen. Mark Hatfield was speaking, she

As ranking Republican on the Senate Appropriations Committee, Hatfield has been instrumental in bringing millions of federal dollars to Oregon for such projects as the Hatfield Marine Science Center at Newport, Mrs. Bush said.

Democrat Harry Lonsdale, Hatfield's challenger, has been on the attack, accusing the Oregon incumbent of being a Washington insider beholden to special interests.

The anniversaries continue, this one Robert F. Kennedy's, who would have been 65 on Nov. 20.

Two years ago it was the 25th anniversary of John F. Kennedy's assassination, and on that occasion viewers of cable television's Home Box Office saw the poignant documentary "JFK in His Own Words," which some critics rated one of the best of its kind.

Now comes a sequel, "Robert F. Kennedy in His Own Words," also by Kunhardt Productions, to be aired on HBO on the anniversary of his birth. Some of his words are from the 26 hours worth of oral history he taped the year after JFK died. They cover the period from 1960 to 1963 and have never before been heard by the public, according to Peter Kunhardt, who received permission to use them from Kennedy's widow, Ethel.

"Sometimes it's as if Bobby is in the room, and sometimes the words are so garbled and imperfect that they could only be heard after they were digitally cleaned up," says Kunhardt, who spent 26 hours listening to every word. "What impressed me was the candor, and the voice which wasn't his public voice but quiet and thoughtful, often joking, often serious but unlike any I had heard before."

The difficult part of Kunhardt's search for words came in gleaning the ones Robert Kennedy spoke about himself; 95 percent of what he said was about Jack.

Ethel Kennedy agreed to provide Kunhardt access to her husband's oral tapes as well as the family's home movies after she saw the JFK film in 1988. For a while, no one could locate the movies. Then one

INSIDE THE WHITE HOUSE BUSH'S QUICK BUT BRADY'S BETTER

November 1990/The Washingtonian

■ George Bush, a passionate exerciser, likes to play "aerobic golf." The object is to play a round of golf as quickly as possible. Bush doesn't waste time lining up shots, but swings as quickly as possible, jumps in a golf cart and careens to the next shot. His record time is 1 hour and 41 minutes for eighteen holes. However, he may have been bested by Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady. During a one-hour refueling layover at Elmendorf Air Force Base in Alaska after a trip to the Far East, Brady jumped out of the plane and played a quick nine holes on the base's golf course, completing a one-over-par outing in 50 minutes. He then jumped back in the plane and headed back to Washington. At that rate, Brady would have broken George Bush's "aerobic golf" record by one minute.

■ When the President of Turkey, Turgut Ozal, came to town last month, reporters were amazed at how short he was—barely five feet tall. As George Bush was greeting him, one irreverent reporter asked, "Is that the President of Turkey or something for Millie to play with?"

■ Reporters are still laughing about the beeper that went off during church services at Kennebunkport during the last Bush visit. The beepers can receive audible messages, and one reporter's beeper blared forth in the sanctuary with a message from his editor in Washington: "Hey, a--hole, call your desk."

■ The A-word was also used during the budget negotiations, directed against White House chief of staff John Sununu, who was twisting arms for support of the first proposed budget measure. A number of congressmen were hanging around as one of their number reacted verbally to Sununu's badgering. Once the offensive word was uttered, there was a moment's silence, then slowly members began to clap, the applause eventually reaching a crescendo.

■ If Lee Atwater is still ill, look for Transportation Secretary Sam Skinner to resign and head up George Bush's 1992 re-election campaign.

PRESS BRIEFING
BY
MARLIN FITZWATER AND CHAIRMAN OF THE
COUNCIL OF ECONOMIC ADVISERS DR. MICHAEL BOSKIN

October 30, 1990

The Briefing Room

11:48 A.M. EST

MR. FITZWATER: To start off this morning we have the honor of having with us the President's Chairman of the Counsel of Economic Advisers, Dr. Michael Boskin, to discuss the GNP numbers out this morning. Michael will have a few remarks, then take questions, and we'll resume my regular briefing shortly.

DR. BOSKIN: On the record, as far as I'm concerned.

MR. FITZWATER: The rules are the same as a regular briefing.

DR. BOSKIN: Thanks, Marlin. As you know, every quarter the Commerce Department makes three estimates of real GNP growth, its components, overall measures of inflation based on GNP. This morning the Commerce Department released the first of those measures for the third quarter of Calendar 1990, the quarter that ended at the end of September.

Real GNP grew at an annual rate of 1.8 percent, a substantial increase from the .4 percent rate in the second quarter. It was the fastest quarterly rate since 1988, ignoring a technicality about the drought of '88, and well above what private forecasters had been anticipating. The consensus of private forecasters had been to .8 percent, and, as you know, there were some who had claimed a recession might have begun in the summer; so it's clear they were too pessimistic.

The increase extends the record-breaking peacetime expansion which began in the fourth quarter of 1982 to almost eight years. The acceleration of the third quarter clearly shows the economy has not been in recession, as some have claimed, in the third quarter. Now, to be sure, there are some sectors and regions that have performed well and better than others, and others that are not doing as well. But the overall economy continued to grow.

We know some of the regional and sectoral patterns with exports and consumer services having been strong for the last few quarters, and actually consumer purchases of durable goods were a major strength in the third quarter as well. Regionally, we see that Southwest oil patch versus the Northeast. You draw political connotations.

Q Whooooooooa.

Q While some economists are still forecasting a recession, so far it's just that -- a forecast. Third quarter data, as well as recent and expected declines in interest rates, suggest their pessimism may be overstated.

I have to emphasize, before saying one or two more words about the details of the GNP numbers, that the economic outlook and forecast which is always uncertain -- every time I've been in here for two years, you've heard me explain that it's a science, but an imprecise one -- is particularly uncertain at this time because of events in the Persian Gulf and the oil situation, the size and duration of that -- what we call an oil shock -- is the technical economics term for it -- is difficult to predict; and, obviously will affect the economy over the next few quarters.

Some of the strong points in the third quarter were: Consumer spending was strong, growing at an annual rate of 3.6 percent, including purchases of consumer durables, and especially a rebound in auto purchases. Business investment in factories and equipment was strong at 7.4 percent growth rate, the most rapid since the first quarter of 1989. Both of these are good signs, and it shows that they have some confidence in the future.

Residential investment declined substantially, and real net exports were down slightly. Inventories fell slightly and, as you know or as you've heard me say before, when inventories start to accumulate around the economy, that may be a sign that sales are slowing relative to production, and that could cause problems down the line. Inventory accumulation at this time does not appear to be a problem. As a matter of fact, growth in final sales of domestic purchases was 2.7 percent in the third quarter, reflecting strong demand in the United States.

Related to the GNP are two measures of -- broad measures of inflation. You're used to hearing me talk about the Consumer Price Index which just deals with consumer goods; the Producer Price Index dealing with a subset of goods that producers purchase. But the GNP deflator and the GNP Fixed Weight Index are two broad-gauged measures to look at consumer spending, the prices of investment goods, of government services and so on. And these were, again, up at -- the prices were up at a modest rate and the overall inflation rate in the Fixed Rate Index was 4.1 percent, and the GNP deflator 3.4 percent.

We have been expecting, obviously, a blip in inflation due to the oil price syndrome, or oil price events, that's shown up in consumer and producer prices and probably will for another month or two. We would expect inflation next year to come back down rather substantially as oil prices abate.

And let me also say that there's no sign whatsoever that there's anything like a 1970s-style wage price spiral. The Employment Cost Index numbers and other numbers suggest that there

Q Dr. Boskin, you said that you think the pessimism of economists may be overstated when they had said that we were already in a recession. But you said that you have an oil price shock and, obviously, that will affect the economy over the next several quarters, driving up prices, making it more costly for businesses to function. Could we have a problem with the economy in coming quarters? And is this something that, for example, the Federal Reserve should be concerned about?

DR. BOSKIN: The Federal Reserve is concerned about the future course of the economy and recently appears to have begun lowering interest rates. I'm sure they're carefully monitoring where they believe the economy not only is, but where it's likely to go, and I'm sure they will take appropriate action.

With respect to the oil price situation, it's again exceedingly difficult to say how long oil prices will stay up, how high they will stay, for what duration. So we're here adding a great deal of additional uncertainty to the usual difficulty of making forecasts. It is our best judgment that there will be some subtraction because of the oil price situation in the fourth quarter from what GNP would have otherwise been; but we still expect the economy to grow, although more slowly, in the next couple of quarters.

Q What will be the drag on the economy from the increased taxes in the budget? What will this -- what is your picture on that and, beyond that, does this improvement in the economy make it less likely now that the Fed would lower rates because of a sort of -- if not a heating up of the economy, at least a warming of the economy?

DR. BOSKIN: While this is pleasant news about the third quarter, as I've just indicated, we are concerned about a sluggish fourth quarter in the early part of 1991 that's been in our official forecast. So I don't think it will have much impact on what the Fed would or wouldn't do.

With respect to the budget, I think as people have an opportunity to understand what fully was in the deal, they'll come to understand increasingly that the bulk of the reductions are on the spending side. There are some major improvements in the budget process that will give us a tougher budget law with greater enforcement, and I think as financial markets and the general public comes to understand that, they'll see that this, combined with the monetary policy response, will be good for the economy over a span of time.

It would have been better still if Congress could have done this earlier. The President called the summit many months ago, and if we could have gotten this taken care of earlier -- and the Federal Reserve's starting to ease earlier -- it obviously would have given us more of a shock absorber, more of a cushion as we head into the situation with the oil shock.

Q So the Fed should ignore this set of statistics?

that's not complete at the time that the measurement was taken.

DR. BOSKIN: That's correct. Particularly the third month of the quarter's trade numbers -- that's the September trade numbers, in this case -- and some inventory numbers that are not quite available, and these come in later. As a matter of fact, every day the Commerce Department is getting additional information, and they put out these three numbers. It used to be called "the flash," by the way. It's now called "the advance." There's no such thing as a flash --

Q I like flash better. At a time when inventories are liable to be growing, that's a kind of a crucial omission in the measurement, isn't it?

DR. BOSKIN: Let me just state it, that this is their best judgment right now. Additional information has become available not only for September, but we're going to start to get the first information for the month of October.

Q In your personal opinion, do you think the economy grew 1.8 percent the third quarter?

DR. BOSKIN: Yes, I think this is the best judgment -- and I think it is as likely to be revised up as down, when you put it that way.

Q Dr. Boskin, what do you make of the massive collapse of the rate of Japanese investment in the U.S. in the first six months of the year? Is that a matter of concern to the administration?

DR. BOSKIN: I think it's important to realize that there are some major changes that have gone on in Japan -- major changes in their financial market, major changes in their interest rates. Interest rates are much higher in Japan than they were before, and I think that is one of the major reasons why more Japanese investment is staying home. But I'd really like to focus on the economy. If you want to talk about kind of tangential things, call my office and we'll see if we can do it.

Maybe one or two more, and let Marlin get on to other things.

Q The Fed yesterday lowered interest rates by a quarter of a point -- a good-faith gesture after the budget agreement. But the bond market did not pay much attention and did not follow suit. Are you concerned that the markets did not respond correctly? And would the administration urge banks to lower their prime rates to facilitate more consumer spending?

DR. BOSKIN: I think the move by the Federal Reserve was already widely anticipated, and hence discounted in other interest rates and in the financial markets, and I do believe that there were a lot of other things going on yesterday that -- oil prices rose, a variety of other things; so you can't just separate out one particular action. But I do believe that it's been discussed on talk shows and in Congress and a variety of other places, and I think this analysis and prediction or forecast of -- economic growth for the --

DR. BOSKIN: Let me just try to explain this. When we were discussing -- at the very beginning of the budget negotiations, we spent a lot of time on making sure the budget deal being contemplated and the economic assumptions were consistent with one another. The way the administration has always presented these things is to propose a budget and a policy package and an economic forecast that's consistent with it being enacted.

The CBO takes another approach which is that they assume -- they had been assuming there would be a very small amount of deficit reduction and that's what they based their economic forecast on. We were able to square that circle, get a common set of assumptions about what likely would happen, and we wound up with short-term economic forecasts for the next couple of years which are quite close to one another.

Now, we will be making a new economic forecast with the preparation of the budget early next year which will incorporate a variety of things. But importantly, it'll give us much better information and we'll have more experience with what's really gone on in oil markets, and we'll see what impact that has likely had. But these numbers that were released with the budget summit do indeed already incorporate the likely impact of the kind of budget package that was in the original budget summit.

There's much similarity with what actually was passed. There are some differences that we think worked and that made the second package, the one that was actually passed, not as good as the original summit package. But the basic overall level of deficit reduction and so on is already built into those assumptions.

DR. BOSKIN: She's really been waiting back there. I apologize.

Q As you know in Gramm-Rudman there was a recession escape clause if we had two quarters of projected negative growth. Do you foresee that happening in the next six quarters?

DR. BOSKIN: The question is, there's an escape clause in Gramm-Rudman for a forecast of a recession for the following two quarters --

Q The next four quarters.

DR. BOSKIN: -- and the question is: Do I anticipate that happening in the next few quarters? And the answer is, no, but let me just repeat economic forecasting is an inexact science. There's a lot of information. Who could have, in July or June when we were working on all this, anticipated the events in the Middle East. Who could have, last year, anticipated the collapse of communism, the decline of the Berlin Wall, the need to have capital go into East Germany; so you never say never, but right now I don't see that as likely.

Thank you very, very much.

countdown event at the Hyatt Regency Hotel here in the city, and that's open coverage with a travel pool to accompany.

He has the meeting at 3:30 p.m. that he talked about with his foreign policy advisors for an update on the Persian Gulf situation.

Q Who's in that meeting?

MR. FITZWATER: I don't have a list, but generally Defense and State representatives.

Q All internal?

MR. FITZWATER: Yes, all internal.

Q Any readout?

MR. FITZWATER: No readout.

Q What prompted you to put that on the schedule when you normally don't? Is there some signal you're sending?

MR. FITZWATER: No. Because the President mentioned it at the press conference yesterday.

Q Oh.

MR. FITZWATER: Unless he was sending a signal, I don't know, but -- anyway I don't think so. I think he was just responding to a question.

And meeting with Governor Sununu at 4:30 p.m. and that's it for the day.

Let me give you a brief summary of the meeting this morning, then we'll take questions on any of these issues. The President met, as I said, for about an hour and 15 minutes. He noted the congressional support our Gulf policy has enjoyed to date. He said, "Congressional backing of our policy sends the best possible signal to Saddam Hussein of U.S. determination to succeed."

The President also noted his strong congressional support for sanctions and willingness not to rule out additional steps if required. The President stated his commitment to consultations with the Congress. He noted how closely he and the Congress have worked together through the course of this crisis and said he will continue to seek the advice and support of Congress as we proceed.

The President spoke of Secretary Baker's upcoming visit to the region to review the general situation in the Gulf. The President said that Iraq has virtually doubled its forces in and near Kuwait since our original deployment. As a result, the administration is considering further augmentation of our Gulf forces and will be consulting with the allies on this matter.

Q Beyond 200,000?

Q Read that again, any such commitment must be hedged?

Q Must be hedged?

Q Marlin, do you mind?

MR. FITZWATER: "I will continue to seek your advice and support as we proceed. We must all understand, however, that any such commitment must be hedged, given the unpredictable and dynamic circumstances of this crisis. What I can say is that we will do our best, consistent with our common stake in seeing that nothing is done that would needlessly endanger lives or place U.S. interests in any greater risk."

Q Marlin, I think most members of Congress have expressed an understanding of the President's possible need to react in an emergency, for example, if American lives were endangered. But that wouldn't prevent him, would it, having committed U.S. troops to action in such a contingency, from then going to Congress and requesting a declaration of war? Would he consider doing that after having committed troops to action?

MR. FITZWATER: We can't lay out what's going to happen in a predictive sense. Quite obviously, we would intend to follow the constitutional process that's laid out in these matters. But it's just impossible to say what might develop. Right now our policy is in place. We are enforcing the sanctions and we are relying upon them to have the effect of forcing Saddam Hussein to comply with the U.N. resolutions. And so we can't -- there's no way to speculate on a course of action.

Q Can you provide some clarity, perhaps, from your reading of this meeting? Senator Cohen came out and said the President's patience is wearing thin. Others said that they didn't get that impression. The primary impression they gained was that he was going to stay the course and there was varying interpretations of the military signals being sent. What can you tell us about that a little bit?

MR. FITZWATER: I know you asked Dante Fascell if the President's patience was growing thin. And Dante said, no, he would say the President was troubled. And that's probably a good description. The President is troubled by the circumstances we find there, of the hostages being held as human shields, of continued brutality in Kuwait, of the continuing danger to our embassies both in Kuwait, in Baghdad, and of the fact that Iraq seems to have dug in for the long stay. So it is a troubling situation and I think the President reflected those aspects of it in this meeting. I suspect that's what both Cohen and Fascell were referring to.

Q And when they say that they got the impression the President would stay the course, what precisely is that a reference to?

MR. FITZWATER: I think that's a reference to the President's reiteration of our policy and of his commitment to it -- that we are there to help enforce the sanctions with a multinational unilateral action is something that depends upon courses of events, provocations and the like, but that our purpose is to enforce the sanctions.

Q Marlin, given the administration's commitment to sanctions as one thing, does the President think they will work?

MR. FITZWATER: We certainly hope they will, and we think they have every chance of working. It's only been two months, remember, since the sanctions were put in place. It's only been about three months since the invasion itself on August 2. So we are still in the opening phases. I think anybody who's been involved with the sanctions from the beginning has known that they would not have an effect in an immediate sense. So we still are sticking with them and we think that they have a good chance of working.

Q In this meeting, did the President share any misgivings about the chances of sanctions working?

MR. FITZWATER: Only that it is a process that requires patience. That we have to keep watching it. That we have not seen a lot of impact at this point. We've seen some evidence that the sanctions are having an impact in terms of dwindling supplies and parts shortages and things like that, but that we can't at this point claim that it's been a success; that's for sure.

Q Is it the feeling of the administration that war is almost inevitable?

MR. FITZWATER: No. I have seen those quotes, but our purpose is still a peaceful resolution of this issue. We continue to discuss it with the allies. The President continues to discuss it with leaders in the Gulf and around the world. And everyone's emphasis is on the implementation of the U.N. sanctions in a peaceful manner. And it's too early to make any judgment to the contrary, at this point.

Q Was that -- what was that question?

MR. FITZWATER: Is war inevitable? I said no.

Q Does the United States have a timetable for action in the Persian Gulf, assuming that the sanctions don't work? And is Secretary Baker going to talk to the allies about a timetable?

MR. FITZWATER: There is no timetable. And as these things unfold, of course, there are always scenarios for action that have to be considered. But there is no specific timetable.

Q Are you considering scenarios for action?

MR. FITZWATER: No, I said there are always scenarios for action that are held in contingency in any case like this. There have been since day one. But there's no timetable for action.

Q Baker's not going to talk to the allies about certain dates -- if things don't reach a point by this, here's what we should do?

Iraqi forces? And run that against the timetable of sanctions, the concern that he's expressed before about whether or not one --

MR. FITZWATER: He expressed that concern in the context of a discussion of the reason for our policy and the aggression of Saddam and the havoc that it has wreaked on that part of the world. But that was the context.

Q A lot of these senators and congressmen that came out said that the discussion dealt largely with their concern that the President might act out of impatience, or at least they request that he not do so. Did they give any idea why they thought he would do so? And what was the President's reaction to the idea that he would act out of impatience?

MR. FITZWATER: Well, he didn't talk about why they had those concerns. I think one of the main reasons, frankly, is that they are turning and going home. They're concerned that they're going to be gone for a couple of months. They want assurances of consultations during that period should anything happen -- any change in policy or course of events -- and the President assures them that he would, indeed, be consulting with them.

That was the main emphasis, as near as I could tell.

Q One immediate potential provocation is the Embassy in Kuwait. Did that come up in the discussion -- and what did the President tell the senators and congressmen he was going to do about that? And if he didn't discuss it, what is he going to do about that now with the --

MR. FITZWATER: Well, the President said that that was one of the most immediate and troubling situations he's facing -- that indeed, we have people in our Embassy in Kuwait with dwindling supplies of food and water and other means of support, and that is a difficult situation.

The U.N. Resolution 674 that passed just recently -- the most recent one -- addressed this situation in calling for the right of those embassies to be resupplied and calling for them to be resupplied -- reprovisioned, I guess was the word they used. So that is an immediate problem. The President did not suggest a course of action, but simply outlined the problem for them, told them essentially where we stand, and said, well, he didn't have a solution at this point; clearly that's one of the next issues we've got to address.

Q Well, are you planning on resupplying the Embassy?

MR. FITZWATER: Well, as I say, we don't have a course of action, and we certainly wouldn't want to discuss it anyway because of the security aspects of it. But we are looking at that within the context of the U.N. resolution.

Q Well, now that you have the U.N. Resolution, does that change any plans you might have had for closing down the Embassy? Is it now certain that one way or another they're going to stay?

the operation or the timetable or anything like that.

Q The purpose of the U.N. Resolution would be to allow you to do it publicly.

MR. FITZWATER: The purpose of the U.N. resolution, as I understand it, is to require that Baghdad ensure the reprovision of the embassies, and that's the initial course we would look to.

Q And hence you would make a public attempt, at least initially, to --

MR. FITZWATER: We would say what we're saying now, which is that they ought to be reprovisioned, yes.

Q Is the President delaying a decision on whether to add 100,000 troops to the Gulf pending Baker's trip? Does he have a formal proposal from Cheney in front of him?

MR. FITZWATER: No, there's no -- I don't know that there's any kind of big package number. I mean, the President has said from the beginning that we would continue to send forces in the Gulf commensurate with our concerns and our objectives, and we have, I think, the last figure we gave out was, what 100,000? Cheney's talked about 100,000. And -- but there have been forces continually moving in there in excess of that number, and what this says is that we will continue to augment those forces. We aren't giving a new high.

Q Cheney said the other day, as I recall, that you might add -- you've got about 210,000 there I guess now -- that you might add 100,000.

MR. FITZWATER: No, he said we might add up to --

Q Is there a decision point at hand for the President on that?

MR. FITZWATER: There is no specific decision point. I mean, obviously that's something that's reviewed on a continuing basis, and we could increase the numbers all the time. I would say that the issue of how many troops are there and what their purposes are and what the strategic situation on the ground is, is a matter that's constantly before the President. But right now, we are in a steadily increasing mode, is the way I would put it.

Q There's certainly a heightened sense of urgency about military options. The President's talked about this, the Secretary has talked about it. Have things gotten substantially worse over there in the Persian Gulf than they have been in the past few weeks?

MR. FITZWATER: I don't know that things are much different, other than the continuing buildup on both sides. I think we also have a reality here where the focus in the media and other places is kind of swinging back to it after the diversion of the budget situation. I think that's a piece of it. But there's nothing really dramatically changed on the ground that I'm aware of.

the road about the Persian Gulf meeting tonight and Baker's trip? Would you say it's closer to sort of taking a poll or close to laying the groundwork, preparing for war? Which would you say --

MR. FITZWATER: I wouldn't give any kind of --

Q Well, Marlin, because we're getting all these comments in and consultations and consultations. You've talked with everyone -- and then by the same token he said the messages --

MR. FITZWATER: I would say that it is pretty much steady as she goes. There's not a lot of change in this -- in those aspects of it. The Baker trip, of course, is a new development, and beyond that the consultations with allies in the region have continued pretty much at a pace as they have in the last three or four weeks, and there really hasn't been that much change.

Q Marlin, if it's steady as she goes, why did we get yesterday a sudden clearly-coordinated sharp escalation of rhetoric by both the President and Secretary Baker? If it is indeed steady as she goes, doesn't that invite Pat's conclusion that this is pure political rhetoric designed to focus the final week of the election on the Persian Gulf instead of the idea that Bush is a friend of the rich?

Q Goddamn, Marlin.

Q All those trips are horrible. (Laughter.)

MR. FITZWATER: Take that, baldheaded guy. (Laughter.) Well, I'll tell you, Deborah --

Q You weren't ready for this, were you, Marlin?

Q Marlin, seriously -- Marlin, if it's steady as she goes, why the shift in rhetoric?

MR. FITZWATER: I don't think there has been a shift. Secretary Baker was testifying before the Congress, President Bush was asked about these matters at a press conference --

Q He was giving a speech.

Q In Los Angeles.

MR. FITZWATER: I mean, he gave a speech to the World Affairs Conference. And the fact is that the process of appearances and language and so forth has not changed. I think the big factor is simply that the Congress is leaving and they finished up all the legislation, and now this has become a major focus again, which is probably good. I think America should be focused on what's going on in the Gulf and in many ways it's too bad we had that dip in attention during those two or three weeks. (Laughter.) Not ways that I can recount quickly for you, but ways.

Q Patrick Leahy had also said that he didn't feel these statements were a prelude to any immediate action in the Gulf. Could they, in any way, be a forewarning of action down the line?

MR. FITZWATER: The situation has not changed. We are preparing for the possibility of using that option should it ever be necessary, but our purpose is to implement and enforce the sanctions.

Q Marlin, in the course of the consultation today, did Bush specifically ask the members for their thoughts on possible military action?

MR. FITZWATER: I don't think there were any direct requests of that nature, no. There was a lot of discussion along those lines, but no direct requests.

Q They brought it up?

MR. FITZWATER: It went around the table the way -- who was it, Cohen or Fascell describes it -- went around the table and everybody gave their views on the situation.

Q -- methods of consulting with Congress during the recess?

MR. FITZWATER: The two most obvious methods are the ones we've used in the past which is, one, by telephone directly between the President or General Scowcroft or Secretary Baker and these members. Two, having representatives of the administrations go to their homes and visit with them wherever they may be. We've done that on a number of occasions. And, of course, they could always be invited back to Washington for any briefings if there were any need for that.

Q Who are the leaders who were included in this consultation?

Q What was the question asked?

MR. FITZWATER: Who would be included in consultations. And I say it would be the leadership of the Congress. The same group that we always meet with.

Q That's what makes it -- you're talking about Dole, Mitchell, Michel and Foley?

MR. FITZWATER: No, no, no. The leadership that's involved in this issue. Today, we had several committees there, Defense, Foreign Affairs, et cetera.

Q All those guys?

MR. FITZWATER: Yes. It would be a large consultative process.

Q Is there any formal process set up for that? Are you going to be briefing them, say, every week or every two weeks or just as the need arises?

MR. FITZWATER: As necessary.

Q Absent an attack that would provoke a response courses of actions or other scenarios.

Q Senator Leahy said that there was considerable concern among the congressional leaders that all options short of military action would not be pursued. Was that concern expressed explicitly and what was the President's response?

MR. FITZWATER: I'm sorry. All options short of military

Q The concern among the congressional leaders that the administration would not pursue all possible options short of military action. Was that concern expressed explicitly this morning and what was the President's response?

MR. FITZWATER: I never heard that concern expressed in that fashion, at least. Maybe that's his characterization from what he heard.

Q In what fashion did you hear it expressed?

MR. FITZWATER: That they wanted to be consulted and wanted reassurance that we were sticking with our policy and that there had been no change in the policy. And they received assurances on all those points.

Q There are informations according to which Saddam Hussein could announce tomorrow that all hostages will be free. Do you have any information or do you believe that that could be true?

MR. FITZWATER: Pascal asked about a possible announcement that four hostages would be freed.

Q No, all hostages.

MR. FITZWATER: All hostages would be freed? I don't believe we have any information on that. Have you seen anything, Roman? No.

McDonald, that you back there? You're so handsome.
(Laughter.) Not that you weren't before.

Q Was there any discussion about Soviet peace efforts? And has the President had any communications with Gorbachev or Mitterrand about what's going on, on that front?

MR. FITZWATER: I don't have any specific communications to report, although there have been any number of communications with French and Soviet officials. Secretary Baker has talked with Foreign Minister Shevardnadze and Ambassador Bessmertnykh. And, of course, Mr. Primakov was in to see the President just a week ago. So there have been all kinds of communications there.

The President's talked to Mitterrand several times; I don't know when the most recent one was. Suffice it to say we feel we have very good contact and a very certain feeling about our relationship with the Soviets and the French in this matter. And the President did say in this meeting that he felt the Soviets were

MR. FITZWATER: Well, you just can't give definition to that. I mean, there's just no way you can do that. I mean, the President -- you can go back to his statement of our objectives, of course, about protecting American lives and American interests there. But beyond that, you can't describe a given situation. There's just no way to say okay in this instance we'd do this and this and that. We can't do it.

Q Are there provocations that are part of your contingency plans? I mean, are there set trip wires that you have in place?

MR. FITZWATER: I'm not aware of any established trip wires, no.

Q The French have now left their embassy in Kuwait. I suspect I know what you're going to say -- you've always said this -- we have to do something soon, would you care to choose a new adverb as far as how much time before some sort of decision has to be made on what to do with the embassy?

MR. FITZWATER: No, that was a good one. I'll stick with it.

Q Why would the U.S. consider resupplying the embassy rather than shutting it down? Hasn't the U.S., in fact, made its point by keeping those U.S. officials there all this time?

MR. FITZWATER: First of all, as we have always said, Iraq had no legal authority or moral right to annex Kuwait and certainly no right to require the closing down of our embassies. And that point is a continuing one and not a temporary one. Therefore, our interest is to maintaining our embassy there as long as possible.

Q But don't 200,000 troops in Saudi Arabia also make that point?

MR. FITZWATER: But this is an important -- you can always find other -- you can always say, well doesn't some other point make the same one, but the fact is it's a very important international diplomacy point to make, that we can't be driven out of a country by the naked aggression of a neighboring country. I would refer you on that to Tom Pickering, our Ambassador to the U.N.'s statement last night on Security Council Resolution 674, who is quite eloquent.

Q There have been two more military accidents involving the Iwo Jima and a military vehicle -- seven deaths, I think. Do you have any comment on that?

MR. FITZWATER: No, I'd have to refer you to the Pentagon at this point. I don't have much beyond what's been in the press.

Q Just a follow-up on that, Marlin. What has the President said about this? This brings to about a total of 38 or 40 accidents. Obviously, there's a lot of stress and strain, but has he said anything about this?

interested in ways to increase it. I might note just as an aside that we were told today that the oil shortages caused by the situation in Kuwait in terms of supplies to the United States has now been almost totally made up. So we do have rather a constant flow now.

Q Marlin, is the White House considering having the President go on national TV again in the next few days to --

MR. FITZWATER: We'll have to wait and see.

THE PRESS: Thank you.

Q Wait, wait, wait! Wait, Marlin. Why isn't the President doing any campaigning the last three days of the campaign from what the schedule shows?

Q Question?

MR. FITZWATER: He is.

Q What was the question?

Q Did he run out of candidates?

MR. FITZWATER: Let me just answer this last question.

Q We've got Saturday, Sunday, Monday in Texas with two Texas events, period. That seems a lot of time to spend --

MR. FITZWATER: No, my pool report yesterday I think laid that out. If it didn't --

Q I did, but there's hardly anything -- I saw it. It looks like a really --

MR. FITZWATER: Well, let me go through it again because I --

Q No, please don't.

MR. FITZWATER: I'm going to be on that trip and I don't know how I'm going to survive. I want to make sure nobody's under the impression that we've got it easy. Which --

Q This one's to Illinois. What happened to Iowa?

MR. FITZWATER: Which days are you worried about?

Q Sunday, Monday.

Q What happened to Oregon and Nebraska?

MR. FITZWATER: Sunday we're in Houston with other events in Texas yet to be scheduled. Monday we've got -- we've just added Tyler, Texas, and we've got Waco, Texas and back to Houston for an event. So we've got three events in three cities in Texas on Monday. We'll probably have that many more in the next few days.

lot of -- MR. FITZWATER: I don't know that they were. We've got a

Q They were overnight stays and they're not on the schedule.

Q New Mexico, Arizona?

MR. FITZWATER: Lot of changes. Changing priorities. Changing campaigns.

Q Marlin, is he going to do anything election night?
Go out? Party?

MR. FITZWATER: I don't know. Going to win them all.

Q Is Rollins going to be there this afternoon?

THE PRESS: Thank you.
