BUSH UNVEILS EDUCATION PLAN

Calling for "a true renaissance in American education," President Bush Thursday unveiled a strategy for improving U.S. public schools that would leave most of the details to states and local communities.

"If we want America to remain a leader, a force for good in the world, we must lead the way in educational innovation," Bush told a group of congressional, business and education leaders in the East Room. "Think about every problem, every challenge we face. The solution to each starts with education."

By the end of the century, Bush said, he wants educators to ensure that all children have adequate preschools programs and that U.S. students meet basic competency requirements in core subjects, rank first in the world in mathematics and science achievement, attend drug-free schools and have a high school graduation rate of 90 percent. He also wants to end illiteracy. To accomplish these goals, the President proposed revamping performance standards for schools, encouraging those now in the work force to continue their educations and urging parents to become more involved in their childrens' education than they are now.

The federal government's role would be small. "People who want Washington to solve their educational problems are missing the point," Bush said.... He noted school districts already have begun implementing innovations.... The federal price tag would be small, too.... "It's not a program, it is a crusade," Secretary Alexander told reporters later. (John Yang, Washington Post, A1)

'Education President' Slates New Tests, Revamped Schools

President Bush laid out a sweeping, long-range strategy to improve education Thursday and then surprised everyone by announcing that he'll become a student again....

"I want to learn how to operate a computer," Bush said. "I don't expect the new tutorial to teach me how to set the clock on the VCR, but I want to be computer literate and I'm not. I want to learn, and I will." Bush did not elaborate on how he planned to take his training. (Carrol Innerst, Washington Times, A1)

Critics Wonder Where Education Reform Money Will Come From

Educators and government leaders say they don't know where the money will come from to finance President Bush's proposed "revolution" in the U.S. educational system.

"If the plan is to succeed, it will require a major commitment in terms of resources and will," NAACP spokesman James Williams said Thursday after Bush unveiled his plan. "We question whether the financial resources that have been required are adequate to do the job.... Keith Geiger, president of the National Education Association, applauded the initiatives but said "there are hurdles we all must overcome."... He added that his union's member teachers "are understandably cynical about moving ahead to a bright new future when the present financial climate looks so threatening."

(Tamara Henry, AP)

Critics See Politics In Education Plan

...Some strategists said President Bush had political...motives in the education plan....

DNC Chairman Brown called the Bush plan "one part policy, four parts politics."...

"All of us have seen a large number of White House press conferences before," Sen. Mitchell said. "Too often, effort...stops when the cameras stop."

Chief of Staff Sununu disputed that notion. He said Bush has taken domestic action all along, but it's been obscured by the war. He ticked off key legislation passed last year: budget reform, clean air, child care, drug control, air transportation and control and disabled workers' rights.

And with the war over, Sununu said, a renewed push will be made to add to that record....

"At some point, the public will realize the failure to pass these things is Congress' failure," Sununu said.

(Richard Benedetto, USA Today, 4A)

Despite Some Doubts, Educators Accentuate The Positive

...For the most part, educators are setting aside cynicism in this latest run at one of the nation's most intractable problems. While the President's plan is largely a patchwork of existing ideas, most educators are hopeful that a strong signal from the top will translate into action -- any kind of action.

"When a President and his education secretary come out like this, they move the whole agenda forward," said Frank Newman, president of the Education Commission of the States. "You embolden the risk-takers."

"This is an historic turning point in American education," said Albert Shanker, president of the American Federation of Teachers. "It's the first time a President has acknowledged there is a role for the federal government."...

Some educators are not happy with the level of funding Bush has proposed....

"When they developed the 'Stealth' bomber they didn't set up a private corporation to try to raise the money," Shanker said. "Education shouldn't be dependent on private charity."

(Anthony Flint, Boston Globe)

'Education President's' Ambitious Agenda Faces Formidable Obstacles Nationwide

The Education President is trying to finally earn the label he gave himself, but it will take all his skills as politician-in-chief to prevail....

"We're on the right track, finally," says former North Carolina Gov. James Hunt.... Former Gov. Thomas Kean adds: "This is what I've been waiting for for eight years."

(David Shribman & Hilary Stout, Wall Street Journal, A16)

Bush Opens Debate On Education, Democrats Offer Own Ideas

President Bush opened a national debate on education with the announcement of his long-awaited plan to turn around America's failing schools, only to find the Democrats waiting with faint praise and pledges to push their own plan.

Democrats commended Bush's effort, but said they had reservations about how much he could accomplish without putting more federal dollars into education and related programs designed to help disadvantaged children.

Sen. Kennedy...said Bush had repackaged Democratic ideas that had been rejected by former President Reagan's White House.... Sen. Mitchell said a Democratic plan now working its way through the Senate would form the basis of new education legislation.

"We would be much farther along toward our national education goals today if only we had this kind of cooperation from the Administration in 1981 instead of 1991," Kennedy said.

(Jacqueline Frank, Reuter)

Bush Proposes Crusade For School Reform With No New Major Spending

President Bush launched Thursday what backers called a crusade for educational reform while skeptical Democrats in Congress expressed doubts about several aspects of his goals for the year 2000....

For the most part, educators responded positively to the President's plan and voiced the hope that Bush's expressed interest in education would translate into action in various layers of the government and communities....

Sen. Kennedy said he welcomed Republicans to the debate on education after "years of neglect and rhetoric." Rep. Gephardt said Bush's ideas were not revolutionary at all. "Had the Founding Fathers adopted this as a definition of revolutionary change, America would still be a part of England," he said.

(John Mashek, Boston Globe)

Belatedly, Congress Fights To Control Education Agenda

Flanked by cameras and flow charts, congressional Democrats staged a press conference Thursday to welcome President Bush to the fight for better schools.

"We welcome the President's involvement, belated though it might be," said Sen. Mitchell. Mitchell's office went on to release a study tracing the Democrats' historical commitment to education to party founder Thomas Jefferson.

And in case the press missed the point, Rep. Gephardt circulated comparisons of Bush Administration proposals versus what the Congress has enacted in the three years since Bush ran for office on the promise to be the Education President.

Within their own political ranks, however, the Democrats have been faulted for being slow and squandering their chances to claim the issue as their own. "The Administration wasted two years and did nothing -- and the Democrats didn't move," former DNC Chairman Robert Strauss said recently.

(Mary Deibel, Scripps Howard)

National Standards At Core Of Proposal

...President Bush stepped carefully around the American tradition of local control of schools, particularly the issue of federal mandates on curriculum. Instead, he assigned a panel of Administration officials and governors to develop the education standards and national tests, while a business-led nonprofit corporation is to fund "a new generation of American schools."

Educators generally praised Bush...for turning his attention to the subject and producing a broad strategy. But some critics deemed Bush's plan less than comprehensive for inadequately addressing three of the six goals it seeks to implement: better pre-school preparation, a lower dropout rate and the banishment of illegal drugs from schools. And many questioned the details of the proposals for encouraging voluntary national tests and more parental choice of schools. (Kenneth Cooper, Washington Post, A1)

CONDOMS IN CLASS: BUSH IS CAUTIOUS

President Bush says schools should consult parents before dispensing condoms to students as the mayors of New York and Washington have advocated.

In an interview with religion writers, Bush also denounced so-called Catholic-bashing by AIDS demonstrators from ACT-UP as "an excess of free speech" and said he often is uncomfortable with his own public displays of religion.

"I don't want to act like I'm holier than thou, or that I want to wear my faith or my religion on my sleeve, or that I'm...the philistine in the temple beating his breast and praying the loudest," he said during an interview that at one point probed his public calls for prayer. (Frank Murray, Washington Times, A1)

THORNBURGH DETAILS DEAL ON GUN BILL
Hill Support Sought For Bush Proposals

The Bush Administration may drop its opposition to a ban on certain automatic assault weapons, as well as to a waiting period for handgun purchases, if Congress agrees to broaden the use of the death penalty and of improperly obtained evidence, Attorney General Thornburgh said Thursday.

Thornburgh...expanded the potential range of White House concessions on gun control. But he tied Bush's support for those measures to adoption of the President's anti-crime proposals, saying Bush would not sign the Democratic-sponsored legislation "if everyone is going to take down their fence and go home."

...Sen. DeConcini noted in an interview that Thornburgh "left himself plenty of outs. It was encouraging, but I don't take it as a commitment."...

Thornburgh would not promise that Bush would sign either the Brady Bill or the assault weapons ban if Congress adopted his anti-crime package. But he said passage "would obviously create a situation where we would look much more favorably on any allied legislation."

(Sharon LaFraniere, Washington Post, A4)

Bush Will Accept Gun Control If Congress Passes His Tough Crime Bill

The Bush Administration Thursday gave its clearest signal yet that it would accept the gun control measures it once shunned, including a waiting period for handgun purchases and a ban on some semi-automatic weapons -- if Congress enacts certain provisions of the President's crime bill.

Attorney General Thornburgh, testifying before the Senate Judiciary Committee, said both measures "will be favorably reviewed by the Administration only as part of a comprehensive crime control package incorporating the key provisions of the President's bill." Thornburgh repeated that if either measure came to the President's desk by itself it would be vetoed.

Committee chairman Biden said he was quite encouraged that a deal could be struck: "I think your willingness to moderate the Administration's position on gun control measures paves the way for passage of some tough legislation," Biden said.... "After today, I feel it's worth going into the trenches again on this [Brady Bill]," Biden said. "...This is a much more conciliatory stand."

(Ethan Bronner, Boston Globe)

THORNBURGH SAYS MOST STATES NOT READY FOR COMPUTERIZED GUN SALES

The Bush Administration acknowledges that most states don't yet have the ability to conduct fully computerized "point-of-sale" records checks to prevent felons from purchasing handguns....

Attorney General Thornburgh was unable to tell the Senate Judiciary Committee on Thursday how long it would take for federal and state governments to computerize criminal records to enable such "point-of-sale" checks.

"We are moving forward as vigorously as we can, that's all I can say," Thornburgh said. But he said a computerized system was preferable to making handgun purchasers wait a week while local police check their records to ensure that would-be buyers are not felons.

DRUG CZAR BLASTS COLLEGE PRESIDENTS FOR NOT BATTLING DRUG, ALCOHOL ABUSE

New drug-policy chief Martinez Thursday criticized college presidents for failing to combat drug and alcohol abuse aggressively on the nation's campuses.

"I do believe there's a general weakness of university administrators to tackle the problem," Martinez said..., adding that a highly publicized drug raid at the University of Virginia suggests that illegal drugs continue to tempt many college students....

Martinez said he believes high school principals have been "more responsive" than college officials in urging students to avoid drugs and disciplining those who do....

Martinez acknowledged that surveys continue to show a decline in drug use among key segments of the population, and said he has "every reason to believe it will continue."

CENSUS PUTS UNDERCOUNT IN MILLIONSPressure To Adjust Numbers Intensifies; District Error Severe

The 1990 census failed to count as many as 6 million Americans, a figure that includes close to 2 million blacks and reflects an undercount rate far greater than in 1980, the Census Bureau reported Thursday....

The figures released...heightens the political battle over whether the census should for the first time in history be statistically adjusted to compensate for the undercount....

"Those numbers just seem to confirm our greatest concerns," said Rep. Sawyer, chairman of the House subcommittee on census and population. He added that the new information provided "mounting evidence that the level of inaccuracy in the census is damaging to communities of every kind across the country."

If the government decides to adjust the census figures based on the "post-enumeration survey" figures, California would gain an eighth new congressional seat and Wisconsin would lose a seat.

(Barbara Vobejda, Washington Post, A1)

Numbers Showing Census Count Low Draws Flood Of Complaints

City and state leaders are howling about a Census Bureau review of the 1990 census that found as many as $6.3 million people -- particularly minorities -- may not have been counted.

New York Attorney General Abrams grumbled about a "statistical shell game." The head of the U.S. Conference of Mayors, J. Thomas Cochran, thundered that the numbers embodied "our worst fears." Massachusetts considered filing a lawsuit.

The Census Bureau on Thursday defended the tally as a good job of locating people in a complex and largely unregulated society.

NEIL BUSH REPRIMANDED FOR CONFLICTS OF INTEREST
S&L Regulator Issues Mildest Sanction

The nation's top thrift regulator Thursday formally reprimanded President Bush's son Neil for engaging in conflicts of interest while serving as a director of the now-defunct Silverado Banking, Savings and Loan Association.

OTS Director Ryan said Neil Bush "has engaged in unsafe or unsound practices and breaches of his fiduciary duties involving multiple conflicts of interest." Ryan ordered him to "cease and desist" from any future conflicts of interest if he again becomes a director of a bank or thrift....

"It's a slap on the wrist," said Bert Ely, a Washington-based consultant on financial institutions.

"It's not surprising that Ryan found in favor of his agency's law judge," said Neil Bush's attorney, James Nesland.... Nesland suggested his client may be unable to afford to fight the case further, saying, "We have to determine the economics of the entire situation."

(Sharon LaFraniere, Washington Post, A4)

Government Order Against Neil Bush Too Lenient, Critics Say

Neil Bush is getting off with just a wrist slap in his S&L case, some critics say....

One Democrat said Bush's name could have helped his case. "It's hard for me to believe" that the fact Bush is a son of the President didn't play a role in OTS Director Ryan's decision, said Rep. Vento. "I think if it was anyone else they would at least have been barred for a period of time from engaging in the business."...

Rep. Joseph Kennedy...complained that Ryan's order simply requires Bush to obey the law. He should be banned from the industry or compelled to make restitution for losses he caused taxpayers, Kennedy said. "This is a slap on the wrist with a velvet hammer," he said. "It seems to me that at the very least, Mr. Bush should have been ordered to pay restitution. His cozy inside deals cost the taxpayers at least a hundred million dollars."

Stephen Gillers, a professor of law at New York University, called Ryan's order "generous" to Bush. "A harsher penalty could have been defended. There was a conflict of interest there." But he also said it was a "reasonable sanction." (Marcy Gordon, AP)

BUSH REPORT TO CONGRESS TOUTS ENVIRONMENTAL GAINS

President Bush is presenting a rosy view of his Administration's environmental accomplishments, despite criticism from environmental activists that he has failed to live up to his rhetoric.

Bush said in a report to Congress on Thursday that his environmental quality achievements saw "a landmark year" in 1990, and that in the coming year he will pursue "market-oriented" provisions in amendments to the Clean Water Act and other legislation.

He did not give specifics, but said he would "seek to make progress toward the goal of no-net-loss of wetlands."...

The Wilderness Society said it had supported some Bush policies, mainly the overhaul of the Clean Air Act, but was discouraged by what it called his weak record in other areas, most notably public lands protection. (Rita Beamish, AP)

MAJOR CLEANUP CUTBACKS PROPOSED AT WEAPONS PLANTS

Despite repeated pledges to accelerate cleanups of its polluted nuclear weapons plants, the Energy Department contemplated budget cuts that would have prevented the agency from meeting formal environmental compliance agreements with states, documents released Thursday showed.

The internal department documents also showed the agency proposed cutting 1992 cleanup funding much more sharply than money for nuclear weapons production -- the opposite of Secretary Watkins' state budget priorities.

The documents were made public by Sen. Glenn..., who also released a letter to Watkins in which he said the proposed cutbacks would only reinforce public perceptions that the department was more committed to weapons production than to a cleanup....

Fred Lash, a spokesman for the department, said the agency already was moving to restore cleanup money. (George Lobsenz, UPI)

NAVY SUED OVER DEATHS ON USS IOWA

The families of 38 sailors who died in a turret explosion on the battleship USS Iowa two years ago filed a multimillion dollar suit in federal court Thursday claiming the accident was caused by the Navy's failure to adequately train the sailors or maintain and test the equipment. (Robert Howe, Washington Post, A4)

CAPTAIN BLAMES SNAFU ON ARMS CONTRACTORS

A top Navy official criticized for botching the Pentagon's biggest-ever weapons program Thursday blamed two major arms contractors for the cancellation of the project to build a Navy stealth jet.

Capt. Lawrence Elberfeld, the chief manager for the A-12 program, told a House Armed Services investigative subcommittee that the contractors' optimistic analysis led him to believe the program was on track despite independent information showing a major cost overrun and schedule delays....

Committee members, however, didn't buy the excuse.

BUSH MAY LET SADDAM SELL $1 BILLION IN OIL IF HE COOPERATES, OFFICIAL SAYS

President Bush, hoping to avoid an open-ended American military presence in northern Iraq, may allow Saddam Hussein's regime to sell $1 billion in oil if it cooperates with U.S. plans to build Kurdish refugee camps and turn them over to U.N. supervision, a senior Bush Administration official said Thursday.

Army Lt. Gen. Shalikashvili, commander of all U.S. forces in the Kurdish refugee relief operation, plans to meet with Iraqi military commanders inside northern Iraq on Friday to discuss the refugee operation. He plans to seek formal Iraqi assent or at least acquiescence for the U.S. plan..., the senior official said.

In a separate interview with Chicago Tribune editors in Chicago, Secretary Cheney said Shalikashvili also would "make certain that the ground rules are understood and make clear that we expect them not to interfere" with the joint task force plan....

In exchange, Bush may look favorably on a formal Iraqi request to the U.N. to sell nearly $1 billion in oil to meet emergency food, medical and spare parts needs..., the senior official, speaking on condition he not be identified, said. "We're not going to let the Iraqi people starve," he said. "We're going to take a look at this (request) and see." (George de Lama, Chicago Tribune)

U.S., IRAQI OFFICERS TO MEET ON AID PLAN

DIYARBAKIR, Turkey -- The American commander of the allied military task force assisting Kurdish refugees will fly into Iraq on Friday for a meeting with Iraqi military officers, a U.S. spokesman said here tonight. The spokesman said the meeting, to be held in Zakhu, will address "Iraqi noninterference" in the multinational effort to set up a safe haven for the Kurds....

Cmdr. Woodhouse, U.S. spokesman for the operation, said he could give no details about why Iraq has agreed to the meeting between its military and Lt. Gen. John Shalikashvili. But in Washington, a senior State Department official said the U.S. side will tell Iraq not to fly its aircraft north of the 36th Parallel, not to move its troops within 20 miles of Zakhu or interfere with the operation. Iraq continued to denounce the allied plan as unjustified foreign meddling. (Blaine Harden, Washington Post, A1)

DEMOCRATS SCUTTLE PARTISANSHIP, BACK BUSH ON KURD REFUGEE AID

For the first time since the cease-fire against Iraq was declared, President Bush and congressional Democrats agree on what to do about the Kurds. Democrats have generally endorsed Bush's ambitious plans to ferry U.S. troops to the highlands of northern Iraq and build safety zones for the Kurds. And they brush aside legal questions of interfering in Iraqi affairs....

"It's the right thing to do, it's worth doing," said Sen. Levin.... "The alternative is too horrendous."...

Key Democrats involved in foreign policy predict the Administration will win swift approval for an expected emergency request of up to $200 million in refugee assistance.

U.S. BEGINS ASSESSING RELIEF PLAN'S IMPLICATIONS
Troops Envisioned In Iraq For One Month

In the rush to deal with the Iraqi refugee disaster, U.S. officials acknowledged Thursday they are only now beginning to explore the full implications of President Bush's decision Tuesday to send U.S. troops into northern Iraq....

"We are taking this one day at a time, and our planning takes us maybe a month from now," said a senior official. He said the "scenario-planning" for the new Bush policy is just starting and is being coordinated by the "deputies committee," a group of senior officials from various departments and agencies chaired by Robert Gates, deputy national security adviser..... Ideally, American forces will be able to withdraw from northern Iraq within about four weeks, after relief workers from the U.N. and international agencies arrive to run the camps, a senior official said....

Administration officials said Thursday they do not yet have a plan for dealing with a situation in which the refugees simply refuse to move back. (Ann Devroy & Al Kamen, Washington Post, A16)

Iraqi Refugees

With the White House vision of a "neat and clean" victory in the Persian Gulf fading, a senior Administration official said Thursday the Kurdish refugee crisis that is drawing the U.S. deeper into Iraqi affairs probably can't be settled until Saddam Hussein is out of power. But the aftermath of the war -- which he lost -- paradoxically may have strengthened his position within his own country, the official said, at least for a time....

The U.S. official admitted the White House has no clear sense of how long U.S. troops might remain in Iraq. "If you're fishing for the question that there might be a long-term U.S....[military role], you may or may not be right," he said. "But over time, it certainly gets smaller as it gets more multinational," and U.S. involvement could end if the operation is taken over by U.N. peacekeeping forces....

"This is clearly the one dimension of the postwar where, yeah, things have not turned out nearly the way we would have liked..., " said one top policymaker, interviewed on condition of anonymity. "I'm not going to tell you it's as neat and clean as we would have liked."... "I think people [in the White House] just made a calculation that the humanitarian need was so great that it justified swallowing hard on some of these questions that are out there," one official said.

LEGAL SCHOLARS DEBATE REFUGEE PLAN, GENERALLY BACKING U.S. STAND

The Bush Administration's legal justification for using armed forces to establish sanctuary sites for refugees on Iraqi soil has generally won support from international legal scholars, although some questions have been raised about the U.S. acting on its own.

...Thomas Franck, a professor at New York University, said he believed the U.S. should seek new authority from the U.N. Without it, he said, "I think there are serious problems about the United States unilaterally establishing refugee bases on Iraqi territory." He said if a nation's sovereignty were so violated, even for a humanitarian purpose. "it could be a recipe for chaos."

BRITAIN PUSHING FOR FAST U.N. ACTION IN NORTHERN IRAQ

ANKARA -- Allied troops will hand over the refugee havens to be set up in northern Iraq as soon as the U.N. can administer them, according to a British government minister.

Lynda Chalker, Britain's Overseas Development Minister, is due to tour mountain camps on the Turkish border by helicopter Friday. She told a news conference in Ankara that Britain was urging the U.N. to get personnel to the area more swiftly....

"I imagine that we are going to be in business here for certainly not weeks but several months," she said Thursday.

IRAQ TELLS OF CHEMICAL ARMS CACHE

U.N. -- Iraq told the U.N. on Thursday that it does not have biological armaments or nuclear weapons materials but that it still possesses chemical arms and 52 ballistic missiles, diplomats said.

...According to a preliminary translation of the first letter..., Iraq said its remaining arsenal contains 30 chemical and 23 conventional warheads for its Scud missiles, one source said. The second letter...claimed that Iraq possesses no capacity to build nuclear armaments....

At the State Department, officials said Iraq's letter on nuclear materials "falls short of the requirements" imposed by the U.N. resolution ending the Gulf War. "In any case," said one Bush Administration official, "the resolution calls for on-site inspections, and I'm sure we will be recommending places for the inspectors to look."

Tutwiler declined to say specifically whether the Administration is disappointed with the pace of normalization, but a senior State Department official noted that "it was important" to Bush and Baker to assess the situation first-hand.

ARAFAT WARNS: NO PLO, NO PEACE

TUNIS -- Yasser Arafat warned Secretary Baker Thursday that it is "bye-bye for peace" if the PLO is forced to remain on the sidelines in regional peace efforts.

"If Arafat is not beautiful enough to deal with, for the PLO there will be no peace," Arafat said. "What peace is he going to make and with whom? This is like treating cancer by using aspirin. This means bye-bye for peace."

In a two-hour interview with USA Today, Arafat...also declared that his support for Saddam Hussein is unwavering. "Definitely I am with him" as long as "there is American troops in Iraqi territory."

ISRAELIS GIVE BAKER ICY WELCOME BACK

JERUSALEM -- Secretary Baker received a chilly welcome here Thursday, with radical Jewish settlers marching in the occupied territories and Prime Minister Shamir warning him not to put pressure on Israel....

A senior State Department official said Baker has deliberately avoided responding to developments in Israel in a way that might further stir up the charged atmosphere.

SHAMIR VOWS NOT TO BOW TO PRESSURE AHEAD OF BAKER TALKS

JERUSALEM -- Prime Minister Shamir, while hinting that he could drop opposition to a European role in Middle East peacemaking, has told the U.S. not to press Israel on giving back land or on Palestinian representation at peace talks....

"Anyone who knows Israel knows that pressure does not yield flexibility. We are interested in peace and when we see that a certain road leads to peace faster and in a more complete fashion, we will not hesitate to take it," Shamir said. "There are some things on which we cannot change our stand, not even by an inch," he told Israel radio Thursday. (Robert Mahoney, Reuter)

Shamir Says Israel Will Not Be Pressured On Peace

JERUSALEM -- Prime Minister Shamir credited efforts by the Bush administration to broker Middle East peace, but warned his nation would not be pressured into accepting a solution at any stage of the process.

Shamir...said in a broadcast interview Thursday night he hoped the "serious strategy being pursued aggressively by the Administration would be successful.

"We are witnessing a very serious effort on the part of the U.S. government, and I really hope this effort will yield fruit," said Shamir. But "anyone who know Israel, knows pressure does not yield flexibility, just the opposite.... We will not take part in any peace meeting that is linked with the United Nations."

Israeli government sources said Europe was pressing for participation at the conference table, with some suggesting using economic leverage over Israel to gain access. (Frank Csongos, UPI)

JORDAN WELCOMES BAKER VISIT, SEES OPENING FOR PEACE TALKS

AMMAN -- Jordanian officials are privately encouraged by the latest steps toward Middle East peace taken by Secretary Baker.

"Although it is premature for Jordan to publicly issue a reaction to the peace ideas carried by Baker, one can view them positively," a senior Jordanian official said Thursday...on condition of anonymity....

Meanwhile, a senior Western diplomat confirmed that the U.S. has dropped "regional conference" in its reference to a proposed meeting between the Jewish state and the Arabs. "The U.S. no longer insists on calling the proposed peace conference a regional conference," the diplomat said. "It will simply be known as a 'peace conference' from now on." (Jamal Halaby, AP)

HANOI TO TAKE HARD STAND NORMALIZING RELATIONS WITH U.S.

HANOI -- Vietnam is expected to take a tough stand against conditions for normalizing relations with the U.S. in talks with a U.S. delegation headed by Gen. John Vessey, Western diplomats said.

Vietnamese officials have said privately they are pleased to be talking again to their former enemy and are ready for a constructive meeting when the delegation arrives Friday.

But a government spokeswoman said Hanoi wanted normalized ties with Washington without preconditions. (Kathleen Callo, Reuter)

REPORT LINKS CHINESE EXPORTS TO PRISONERS

BEIJING -- Chinese authorities are systematically using prisoners in forced labor camps to produce cheap goods targeted for export to countries including the U.S., Japan and Germany, according to a human rights report to be released Friday.

The report, compiled by the New York-based Asia Watch from internally circulated documents written by prison and labor camp officials, details the widespread use of prison labor as part of policies outlined by Communist Party authorities. China denies it follows the practice.

U.S. law prohibits the import of products made by prisoners....

A Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman said Thursday that prisoners in labor reform camps make a "limited" number of products for domestic use, but denied that labor camp prisoners are involved in foreign economic and trade activities.

DALAI LAMA ASKS CONGRESS TO RECOGNIZE OCCUPATION OF TIBET

Pointing to Kuwait as an example of a country that has been freed from a "cruel occupation," the Dalai Lama, exiled leader of Tibet, asked members of Congress Thursday to recognize that his homeland suffered from a similar occupation by China.

"Sadly, all small nations cannot expect similar support for their rights and freedoms," he said. "A 'new World order' cannot truly emerge unless it is matched by a 'new world freedom.' Order without freedom is repression."...

The Dalai Lama...received a standing ovation in the rotunda. Sen. Mitchell said of the Tibetans, "We are with them -- we the people of the United States and the members of Congress -- and we want the People's Republic of China to hear this message." He added, "We all agree on the final goal: freedom and human rights for the people of Tibet."

Dalai Lama Speaks In Capitol Rotunda

The Dalai Lama...urged the U.S. Thursday to link its relations with China to the human rights of the Tibetans.

In an address in the Capitol Rotunda, he said, "linking bilateral relations to human rights and democracy...is a proven, peaceful and effective means to encouraged genuine change."

The audience included lawmakers who had sharply criticized President Bush for thwarting an address the Buddhist leader was to have delivered Tuesday to a joint meeting of Congress....

Later Thursday, the Senate by voice vote approved a resolution commending Bush's meeting with the Dalai Lama, expressing U.S. solidarity with the Tibetan people "on their journey toward freedom," and saying, "all Americans are united on the goals of freedom and human rights for Tibet." The resolution was passed after Sen. Dole blocked a more strongly-worded version that criticized the Chinese for violating the human rights of the Tibetans.

U.S. SCRATCHES NUCLEAR TARGETS IN SOVIET BLOC

For the first time since the advent of the Nuclear Age, a large number of targets in the former Communist world are being deleted from the U.S. nuclear war plan following a two-year, top-secret Pentagon review, according to U.S. sources.

The reduction -- well over 1,000 and perhaps more than 2,000 -- represent about 20% or more of the total group of about 8,500 Soviet Bloc targets that were to be struck by about 12,000 U.S. nuclear weapons in the event of an all-out war, two knowledgeable sources said.... About 1,000 of the scratched targets are in the former Warsaw Pact states of Eastern Europe.... The rest are in the Soviet Union itself. (Robert Toth, Los Angeles Times, A1)

GORBACHEV, KAIFU SIGN ACCORD BUT FAIL TO RESOLVE KEY ISSUES

TOKYO -- President Gorbachev and Prime Minister Kaifu emerged from a marathon negotiating session Thursday night to sign a joint agreement that declares the long-hostile neighbors to be friends but solves none of the specific problems they have been arguing over for 45 years.... "We have made the first steps," Gorbachev told reporters.... Pressed to cite specific agreements, he replied, "Everything is still ahead of us." Japanese officials echoed that sense of optimism. MOSCOW SEEKS NEW U.S. GRAIN CREDITS

The Soviet Union has asked the U.S. for $1.5 billion in new credit guarantees to purchase U.S. grain in the hope of forestalling widespread food shortages, U.S. officials said Thursday. Bush Administration officials confirmed that President Gorbachev at the end of March requested the guarantees...in a letter to President Bush....

Rep. Nagle, who was among those who met with a high-level Soviet trade delegation Thursday, said the visitors told him that if they failed to obtain the additional credits in the U.S. or elsewhere, "food shortages would result. People would not have food. There was an atmosphere of desperation."

U.S. TRADE DEFICIT DOWN TO $5.3 BILLION IN FEBRUARY

The U.S. trade deficit in February dropped to $5.3 billion, its lowest monthly level since 1983, the Commerce Department reported Thursday. Economists welcomed the decline. But many played down its significance, noting it was caused not by increased exports -- U.S. sales abroad actually declined slightly -- but by cheap oil and a recession-induced decline in U.S. demand for foreign goods....

The Bush Administration played down the significance of February's decline. "Under President Bush's national export initiative, we are back producing high quality products with exports continuing to provide strong support for economic activity in the United States," Secretary Mosbacher said in a statement released in Mexico. Some economists, however, were less impressed. "The source of the improvement is worrisome," said Allen Sinai, chief economist at the Boston Co. "It is recession."

SENATORS PRESS BUSH TO SIGN U.N. CHILDREN'S RIGHTS TREATY

Sen. Dodd Thursday described as "glaring" the failure of the Bush Administration to sign a 1989 U.N. treaty on the rights of children, as three senior Republican senators were circulating a letter urging President Bush to join the 135 heads of state who have done so.

"The world looks to us to take a leadership role on issues like this," Dodd said at a news conference. "For us to be a non-player is intolerable." The letter to Bush from Sens. Dole, Hatfield and Lugar expresses "concern" that the U.S. is among a small group of non-signers that includes Iran, Iraq, Libya, Ethiopia and South Africa....

A legal adviser in the State Department, where the treaty is under review, said the Administration's main reservations center on states' rights issues and a constitutional question of whether basic human rights in this country can be guaranteed by an international treaty.... The official, who asked not to be identified, also noted the convention contained a number of specific provisions that conflict with state laws -- most notably, a prohibition against capital punishment for minors.

REAGAN BELIEVES GOOD SS MEN WERE BURIED IN BITBURG CEMETERY

NEW YORK -- Ronald Reagan, in letters to a Holocaust survivor, offers a new explanation for his controversial visit to Germany's Bitburg cemetery -- some of the SS men buried there were executed for trying to save concentration camp victims....

In the letters [to World Jewish Congress vice president Kalman Sultanik], including one written in his own hand, the former President admitted that his belief could not be backed up with documentary evidence. He said his information came from German officials.

EDUCATION

ABC's Peter Jennings: President Bush said today that he has a plan to revolutionize America's failing public school system. A year and a half ago during a highly promoted education summit at the University of Virginia, the nation's governors put the challenge to Mr. Bush: If you truly intend to be the Education President, prove it. Today in Washington the President unveiled the details of what he calls America 2000, a plan to turn the nation's schools around and do vastly better for American students by the end of the century.

ABC's Brit Hume: The President outlined his new education plan in a White House speech this afternoon. It will not be costly, at least to the federal government, but it is ambitious.

(President Bush: "For today's students we must make existing schools better and more accountable. For tomorrow's students, the next generation, we must create a new generation of American schools.")

The Bush strategy has four major points: new national achievements standards in math, science, English, history and geography; voluntary national tests in these subjects for fourth, eighth and twelfth graders so parents can see how their students stack up; freedom for parents to choose which schools their children will attend; finally, development of so-called new American schools -- at least one in every congressional district by 1996. Federal money would help open them, and a privately funded corporation would contribute ideas on how to re-intent the school. The President spent the day hurrying from meeting to meeting on his plan trying to help it help him in three ways: by adding to a thin domestic agenda, but to do it with little new money and without deeply involving Washington in running the nation's schools.

[TV COVERAGE of President Bush with governors in the Oval Office.] In that last objective, especially, he's getting some help from the nation's governors, including some Democrats. Governors were much in evidence here today.

(Colorado Gov. Romer: "I think 92 percent of the education of the youngsters in America is the job of governors. We need the President's help.)

But other Democrats were more skeptical.

(Sen. Mitchell: "We hope the President will join with us as well. We welcome his interest in education, belated as it is.")

In fact, though, by working so closely with the governors and proposing so little new spending, the President has left Congress with little say in this program.

Jennings: The President's initiative comes at a time when the vast majority of school districts in the nation are feeling economic pressure, which in the state of Washington has led the teachers to go on strike.

ABC's Brian Rooney reports that the teachers union president says there is only one thing that teachers want now from President Bush. (Carla Nukoll, Washington Education Assoc.: "President Bush needs to not only provide the moral authority, but also the finances. He has to put the money where his mouth is.")

Jennings: Two other examples of school systems with money troubles: More than 500 teachers in Indianapolis will be told tomorrow they will not have their jobs next fall. The Indianapolis school system is predicting a $36 million budget shortfall this year. And the school board in Richmond, CA, north of San Francisco, voted last night to file for bankruptcy. They have the money to meet a $7 million payroll next month, but no more.

(ABC-Lead)

Jennings says on the American Agenda the centerpiece of President Bush's plan, "to break the mold," as the President put it, is to give money to hundreds of communities around the country so they can try to create better schools, starting from scratch.

ABC's Bill Blakemore reports the President's education plan is asking for nothing less than the re-invention of the American school. It calls for public schools funded and managed in new ways, taught in new ways -- curriculums chosen and tests given in new ways, and which may not even be in the kinds of buildings we've thought of as schools.

(Dr. Chester Finn [phonetic], chief adviser for the plan: "Cast aside everything that you take for granted about schools today and clear your mind. Don't assume bricks and mortar, don't assume teacher-student ratios, don't assume blackboards and textbooks. Erase everything. Don't assume a 180-day year, for heaven's sake. Don't assume a gap between school and home, and start from scratch -- and invent.")

There is no one blueprint for schools in the plan and no new federal money. Instead, the centerpiece is the President's proposal to reallocate $1 million to each of the nation's 435 congressional districts to create new schools that break the mold of existing school design. Such schools might, as a few already have, teach without age-level grades, using individual learning plans so students can each learn at their own speed. Some schools might be run not by city bureaucracies but by a museum, say, or a group of businesses. Some might use parents, even some home teaching. And the President already has a promise of $150 million from private industry for research teams to help local districts develop new ideas. Keeping all this new diversity within bounds would be new national standards holding each school accountable to prove its way of teaching really teaches. It could be a good model for other schools nearby. But schools these days are wondering how they can afford anything new. This new financial survey from the governors tells of cutbacks everywhere, state taxes shooting up, and layoffs including teachers. Good school programs are being cut, along with social services that can mean the difference between dropping out and success -- services such as counseling and even health care.

(Roger Porter, domestic policy adviser: "The principal problem with American education is not one of resources. It is one of results. And what we need to turn our attention to is a system that is more results oriented, more accountable.")

Blakemore continues: Such a system has so far eluded American education. But President Bush, after two years of an inactive education secretary, is now putting together a team which is impressing the education community and even many Democratic politicians. New Secretary Alexander, chief architect of the new action plan, has a long history visionary education reform; Xerox Chairman David Kearns, who has led an education reform crusade among business leaders; widely respected innovator Diane Ravitch to lead the research teams; and Ted Sanders, a leader in new ways to run schools. And the President has built consensus with the 50 governors, the ones who have the greatest clout when it comes to making education change. The change hasn't happened yet, but this comprehensive plan is being presented only one month after the new secretary was sworn in, in front of the space museum's lunar landing module. The symbolism was intentional. It is a moon shot. But for openers, at least, many educators are saying President Bush still has a chance to be remembered as he says he wants to be, as the Education President.

[TV COVERAGE of President Bush reading to children.] (ABC-7)

NBC's Tom Brokaw: America's schools and crime on the streets -- two of the most difficult challenges that we face in this country, and today President Bush offered a bold new approach for one, a hard-line approach for the other.

NBC's John Cochran: The President is trying to earn the title he set his eyes on during the '88 presidential campaign -- the Education President. The President wants to regain the momentum without spending any more money.

(President Bush: "And dollar bills don't educate students.")

But Bush does support a new way of encouraging better performance in five subjects: math, science, English, history and geography. The President wants to offer voluntary national tests on those subjects to students in the fourth, eighth and twelfth grades.

(President Bush: "These American achievement tests will tell parents and educators, politicians and employers, just how well our schools are doing.")

These national tests, the first ever, would not be used to punish some schools by withholding funds from those that do badly. But the President does want to give parents more freedom of choice to send their children to schools that score well, including private schools -- a controversial idea that some in Congress oppose. But Congress may buy another Bush proposal to help create a new model school in every congressional district throughout the country, and every member of Congress could claim credit by voting for schools that would use the latest technology in teaching methods. This Democratic governor credits Bush with new thinking.

(Arkansas Gov. Clinton: "The idea of creating new schools from the ground up is something that's different.")

Bush's new education secretary, Lamar Alexander, gets high marks from Congress, which had little or no confidence in the man Alexander replaced. But Alexander admits the federal government can do little to help chaotic school districts, as in Washington state, where 21,000 teachers went on strike for more pay; or Richmond, CA, where schools face bankruptcy.

(Secretary Alexander: "If we are trying to transform the way America thinks about education and the results of children and adults, then those results are going to take awhile.")

Cochran continues: President Bush said today he will try to set a good example by learning how to work a computer -- something he admits many children can do but he can't. (NBC-Lead)

CBS's Dan Rather: President Bush came out today with his plan for improving America's schools. Is it too little too late and designed mostly to help in next year's election campaign, or is it a breakthrough workable blueprint for real reform in U.S. education?

CBS's Susan Spencer: Potomac Landing Elementary is just the sort of school the White House has in mind when it pushes for new approaches in education. Parents help run the place.

(Doreen Albury, Parent: "It's neat to see what you can do. You may say, well, it's just one voice, but actually, you can make a difference.")

(Roger Porter, domestic policy adviser: "And what the President is saying is, we need to break the mold and take these isolated pockets of excellence that are working now and replicate them all across the country.")

Few would dispute that. But the White House, in a public relations extravaganza, today laid on five events to make the point and to unveil Mr. Bush's education strategy. Among its highlights, plans for a new American Schools Development Corporation, largely business-funded, to explore non-traditional learning; voluntary nationwide achievement tests to make schools accountable; a controversial plan for parental choice in selecting schools; and pay incentives for exceptional teachers.

(President Bush: "If we want America to remain a leader, a force for good in the world, we must lead the way in educational innovation.")

But Democrats said far from innovating, the President had simply re-packaged some of their ideas, introduced a few new ones, and called it reform.

(Rep. Gephardt: "If the founding fathers adopted this definition of revolutionary change, America would still be a part of England.")

Events today in Washington state show what any approach is up against -- 21,000 teachers on strike for money, supplies. Nearly a third of the states have had to cut their education budgets. Though the White House says its new ideas won't cost big new money, even supporters today weren't willing to let Mr. Bush off the hook completely.

(Gov. Romer: "But he said I want to be a spokesman for education, and I think one of the ways he is, and should be a spokesman, is to go to the people of this country and say, support your local schools, get in there and make it work, adequately finance it.")

Packages without hard price tags are often very popular in Washington, especially when they involve safe issues. The challenge for Mr. Bush may be to make enough of a difference so that Education President sounds like a real title and not just a political slogan.

CBS's Wyatt Andrews reports on the debate surrounding national achievement testing. (CBS-Lead)

CRIME

NBC's Andrea Mitchell: It's going to be a lot more difficult for the President to get what he wants on crime than education. So today he offered Congress the hint of a compromise on gun control. Well, sort of. At first, Attorney General Thornburgh seemed ready to bargain. The President might accept a ban on some U.S. made semi-automatic assault rifles and a waiting period before handguns could be purchased -- if Congress passed his crime bill. But Thornburgh would not promise that the President would sign gun-control measures.

(Sen. Biden: "I know you don't want them. I know you'll try to keep them off, and I respect that. But if you lose, and they're [passed], are we going to have a deal?

Thornburgh: "Mr. Chairman, you know me well enough to know I don't write blank checks. I would want to see that legislation.")

Supporters of handgun controls had taken heart when Ronald Reagan endorsed the Brady Bill. But Thornburgh said unless Bush gets everything he wants, no Brady Bill.

(Sen. Kennedy: "General, am I correct in assuming that if the Brady Bill is sent to you as a single item, a single issue, that you would recommend a veto of that bill?

Thornburgh: "The President has stated that he is not interested in partial solutions to the problem of violent crime.

Kennedy: "Does that mean a veto?

Thornburgh: "Yes.")

(Sen. Metzenbaum: "Why do you need an overall comprehensive assault on common crime in order to stop people from buying guns who are criminals today?")

Democrats are themselves divided on gun control. Leaders in both houses have opposed the Brady Bill. But on other elements of the crime bill, the Democrats and Bush are both proposing to greatly expand the death penalty. But they differ on legal rights for defendants and convicted criminals, and on white-collar crime.

(Kennedy: "When is the Justice Department going to get tough on white-collar criminals?

Thornburgh: "Senator Kennedy, this department does not bend to pressure from big business or anyone else.")

Some Democrats suspect that Bush would rather fight to a draw over crime than win in order to gun them down with the issue in the next election campaign.

REFUGEES/GULF

Jennings: Along the Iraqi border with Turkey today, American troops are beginning to have a visible impact on the lives of Kurdish refugees. In one instance, U.S. soldiers spent part of today digging latrines, a very basic concern, as health workers were warning that otherwise epidemics would be just around the corner. At another location inside Iraq itself, American troops have been distributing food....

As for when the new refugee camps for the Kurds inside Iraq will be ready, the U.S. military says several dozen of its people are now looking for the best locations reportedly as deep as 60 miles inside the country. But finding the right location is not easy.

ABC's Bob Zelnick reports Pentagon sources say military survey teams have picked only the first of six sites for the Kurdish refugees, 12 miles inside of northwest Iraq. Officials say it has been difficult to find areas with flat terrain, roads, water supply and drainage needed to accommodate hundreds of thousands of refugees. Military officials are considering taking over an Iraqi airfield to bring in supplies. The officials still expect all the camps to open in about two weeks. But they say it may take more than a month to transport all the Kurds to the new sites. The operation's commander will meet tomorrow with Iraqi military officials to discuss ways to avoid conflict with Iraqi troops. Some in the military have been reluctant to take the new mission for fear they might become involved in open-ended fighting between Kurdish rebels and Iraqi troops. But military intelligence believes Saddam Hussein will do nothing to impede the relief effort. Only small, lightly armed Iraqi units patrolled the area where the camps will be built. Intelligence sources believe the Iraqis are more interested in rebuilding than fighting. Iraq desperately wants to have the sanctions lifted so they can earn money by selling oil again. Sources say a refinery north of Baghdad heavily damaged by allied bombing may reach its pre-war capacity of a million barrels a day by the end of the month.

ABC's Dennis Trout reports that nearly a month after the Kurdish exodus began, the U.N. has fewer than 40 officials at the border with Turkey. U.N. officials say they've been slow to move because they needed international agreement and Iraqi consent to get started. And that came just today. How well they coordinate with U.S. efforts remains open to question. The U.N. is setting up its own camps and says it will not help run the U.S. facilities -- only transport refugees from one to another. There is also no plan for a U.N. force in northern Iraq to protect the Kurds. Caring for Iraq's Kurds is exactly the kind of long-term job that the Pentagon does not want. But with so much uncertainty about what the U.N. can and will do, the American military could well find itself months from now still stuck in a country it's been trying so hard to leave.

BAKER MIDEAST TRIP

Jennings reports that Amnesty International says the killing and torture of non-Kuwaitis in Kuwait is still going on. It is one reason why Secretary Baker is going to make an unscheduled visit to Kuwait to meet with the ruler.

ABC's John McWethy: On the way to Israel, the Secretary got a phone call from the President asking Baker to make the visit to Kuwait early next week. The Bush Administration is increasingly unhappy with the emir of Kuwait and the entire ruling family because of their continued bickering and the priority the emir has is giving to the family's pampered lifestyle at the expense of the rest of the country. What progress has been made in Kuwait towards restoring order is due almost entirely to the U.S. Army, which now runs the country's services. Another major concern is the Amnesty International report accusing the Kuwaitis of unchecked human rights violations of the type the Iraqi army wants inflicted upon the Kuwaitis.

McWethy continues: Hundreds of arbitrary arrests, torture, and summary executions were cited, with the Palestinians receiving the roughest treatment. Baker is expected to deliver a firm message from President Bush, which will say, in essence, this was not what the U.S. had in mind when it fought a war to liberate Kuwait.

(ABC-3, NBC-4, CBS-6)

GORBACHEV/JAPAN

Rather: President Gorbachev and Prime Minister Kaifu ended a summit meeting with friendly words but no breakthrough on the dispute over Japanese islands seized by the Soviets in World War II. They promised more talks later.

(CBS-4)

NEIL BUSH

CBS's Rita Braver reports that the OTS today formally declared that Neil Bush engaged in conflicts of interest while serving as a director of the failed Silverado S&L. OTS chief Timothy Ryan would not discuss his decision. But in an embarrassing blow to Bush, Ryan has ordered the President's son to cease and desist from any future unsafe or unsound practices. Bush had no comment today, but he has steadfastly disputed charges that he voted to approve loans to his own business associates without revealing the ties to other bank directors.

(Neil Bush, July 10, 1990: "I believe in the principle that if you didn't do anything wrong don't admit to it. And I didn't do anything wrong.")

Still today, there were charges from Democrats that Bush's punishment was too lenient.

(Rep. Vento: "We're out a billion dollars in terms of this particular institution. It seems to me the least we could say is you stay out of the business for five years; you don't come back into this.")

(Rep. Kennedy: "Bush has been ordered to do nothing more than obey the law. This is a slap on the wrist with a velvet hammer.")

Today's action may be the least of Neil Bush's problems. Still pending against Silverado, a $200 million civil suit and a federal fraud investigation.

(CBS-2)

CONTAMINATED BLOOD

CBS's Edie Magnus reports that senior officials with the American Red Cross, while insisting their blood supply is safe, acknowledged to Congress today the Red Cross still has serious problems keeping blood contaminated with AIDS or other infectious diseases out of the system.

(CBS-3)

RAIL STRIKE

Brokaw: The rail strike is history after President Bush signed emergency legislation ending the day-long walkout. The bill established a special board to deal with disputed issues.

(NBC-7)

ECONOMY/GASOLINE PRICES

Jennings reports the government said the trade deficit in February was down to $5.3 billion, and that is the lowest level in seven years. But part of it is due to lower oil prices, and that may not last long, because gasoline prices are already heading back up.

ABC's Stephen Aug reports that gasoline prices have gone up about a penny a gallon over the past couple of weeks, and they're likely to go higher because there's less gasoline available. Government officials say there still should be enough gasoline to meet demand. (Calvin Kent, Department of Energy: "We are going to make it through, but there could be some prices rises, and certainly at any one point in time there could be a sharp price fight. But on the whole we don't think we're going to have any problems.") Some observers say prices may surge another 10 to 15 cents a gallon just over the next three or four weeks. (ABC-4)

CENSUS

Jennings says the Census Bureau today acknowledged what its critics have been saying all along: It may have missed as many as 6 million Americans in its 1990 head count. Based on a supplementary survey, the bureau says the population may be as high as 255 million, not 249 million. (ABC-6)

REFUGEES/U.S. ACTION

Quagmire In Iraq -- "...Let it be said at the outset that Mr. Bush has acted correctly, if belatedly. This nation cannot avert its face from an immense tragedy it did not cause but in which it is profoundly implicated.... President Bush's reluctance to take this potentially dangerous course is understandable. It denies him the swift, clean exit from the Persian Gulf region that he and his generals desired.... If [the ouster of Saddam] was not a legitimate war aim before catastrophe engulfed the Kurds, it is now. It may require military action. It may be brought about by offering the dictator asylum in a third country.... But so long as Saddam Hussein is in power, Iraq will be a quagmire from which the United States will not be able to extricate itself."

(Baltimore Sun, 4/18)

Safe Haven For The Kurds -- "...In effect, President Bush has embraced Prime Minister Major's proposed 'safe havens' for Kurdish refugees. Well done -- and about time.... As welcome as the President's hand to the Kurds is, it remains only a first gesture. For one, his plan addresses just the Turkish borders. Kurds on the Iraq-Iran border need help, too. And the safe havens are stopgaps at best. The long-term goal, as Bush properly noted, is to let Kurds return to their villages and cities safely, without fear of Saddam's revenge. To achieve all of that, the U.S. and its allies must stay in Mesopotamia for a while to come.... None of this has to mean 'patrolling the streets of Baghdad,' as Bush puts it. But it does require a proper exercise of U.S. power and humanitarian principle."

(New York Daily News, 4/18)

Kurdish Relief -- Compromise Plan Should Be Improvement -- "...Clearly, there is interest on the part of U.S. coalition partners to ensure the refugees safety in enclaves protected by United Nations forces. The precedent for the U.N. imposing far-reaching conditions on the internal affairs of its members was set with its demands on Iraq to end the gulf war. As a collective means to ensuring the Kurds' safety, this is certainly as noble an undertaking as liberating Kuwait, one that President Bush should be willing to support. Whether or not the President feels he bears any responsibility for their plight by calling for the Iraqi people to rise up against Saddam Hussein, the magnitude of human suffering by the Kurds demands not just a compassionate, but a far-reaching response by the U.S."

(Dallas Morning News, 4/18)

Tea And Sympathy For The Kurds -- "...It's the continued presence of Saddam Hussein in Baghdad that is causing the instability the Bush Administration claims to abhor. It may be too late for President Bush to finish the job he should have finished last month. But it may not be so easy to pull out of Kurdish areas once U.S. troops are involved there. It may take more than airdropped tea and sympathy to stabilize the area now." (Detroit News, 4/18)

President Bush Finds His Heart -- "President Bush's surprise announcement of a change in American policy towards the Kurdish refugees was both courageous and welcome.... We've...argued that President Bush has a will of steel; that once he determines to do something, he makes sure his aides and advisers find a way to see it done. So it was with the war itself; so it will be -- we pray -- with the endangered Kurdish survivors. No doubt the new policy has risks -- struggles against evil always involve risk. But we have faith that U.S. and coalition forces can do whatever is necessary to punish Saddam, should he try to interfere with the relief effort. And we have no doubt that taking measures to keep the Kurdish people alive is a better course than turning our backs."
(New York Post, 4/18)

Mr. Bush's Wrong Answers -- "Suddenly, a shift -- albeit a minor one -- in Bush Administration policy. U.S. troops will finally help stanch the blood and tears of misery flooding Kurdistan by building refugee camps in northern Iraq. White House polling must have turned up some slippage in President Bush's approval ratings.... Bush now runs from his own pregnant comparison of Saddam and the Baathists with Adolf Hitler and the Nazis. Where he once darkly warned of Nuremberg-type trials, now he would 'be willing' to offer Saddam 'a happy life forever in some third country.' He fishes as mass murder happens, insisting that U.S. troops will not be 'shoved into a civil war.' The President's policy toward Iraq's hapless people finds favor in some eyes. Saudi Arabia likes it. The Kremlin likes it. Saddam Hussein likes it. We, like many Americans, are horrified by it."
(Boston Herald, 4/18)

Kurd Horror: Suddenly It's All Action -- "...[The Kurds' bold but vain bid for freedom has] now pulled the United States and some of its allies into the midst of an ancient communal conflict.... The operation's humanitarian aims require no defense. The Kurds' situation is desperate, their need for food, shelter and medical care is compelling. But what Washington and other aid-givers must acknowledge is that the challenge is not short-term, like disaster relief after an earthquake, but likely to be prolonged.... The U.S. move into northern Iraq should meanwhile be as the President outlined it: brief in duration, limited in scope, focused on the objective of providing immediate succor, and then turning the matter over to others. It's clear a major international effort is needed. The European Community may have the right idea. Now it must show its readiness to act on it." (Los Angeles Times, 4/17)

Bush's Quagmire? -- "...President Bush's plan to use U.S. and allied air and ground forces to create safe havens for the Kurdish refugees in northern Iraq is well-meaning, but could be ill-fated. Bush now has placed this country out in front of the United Nations -- a step he was careful to avoid throughout Operation Desert Storm.... What Bush intends as a temporary mission for American forces could thus become a permanent one. This is a slippery slope.... This isn't a tragedy of George Bush's making. It belongs to Saddam Hussein. Saddam's troops have harassed the hapless Kurdish rebels. His troops have done the killing. The solution to the Kurdish question is to remove Saddam from power."

News From the Hill

SENATE FLOOR: CFTC re-authorization passes.

During a busy legislative day yesterday, senators passed, 90-8, a measure (HR 707) that would reauthorize the Commodity Futures Trading Commission (CFTC), the federal agency that monitors the commodities futures industry.

Members defeated, 33-65, a controversial amendment by Christopher S. Bond, R-Mo., and Tim Wirth, D-Colo., that would have allowed the financial markets to determine where certain brokered instruments that resemble both stocks and futures should be traded.

Opponents to the amendment said it would lead to partial deregulation of the industry.

Members agreed, 98-0, to an amendment by Bond that would prohibit the CFTC from characterizing bank deposits as futures and regulating them as such.

Members also tabled, or killed, on a 57-41 vote, an amendment by Wirth that would have ordered the Securities and Exchange Commission and the CFTC to coordinate efforts to track fraud and abuse in the stock and commodity pits in New York and Chicago.

Senators also passed by voice vote a bill (S 253) that calls on the United States to work with the United Nations and the Persian Gulf states to establish a war crimes tribunal to prosecute Iraqi military leaders. The bill had been approved earlier in the day by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Late Wednesday. By voice vote, members late Wednesday passed legislation (S 64) that would establish a National Commission on a Longer School Year. Commission members would study proposals to lengthen the school year so that U.S. students could better compete with students in other countries.

Also on Wednesday, members agreed by voice vote to a resolution (S J Res 77) that calls on the State Department to persuade the government of Saudi Arabia to eliminate a 73-cent per minute surcharge on international calls made by troops in Saudi Arabia.

The House was not in session yesterday.

BUSH SIGNS emergency measure to end rail strike.

President Bush signed emergency legislation (H J Res 222) early Thursday morning ordering a quick end to the first rail strike in nine years and returning the nation's 235,000 rail workers to their jobs.

The administration had estimated the strike, which began 16½ hours before Congress acted to end it, would have cost the economy $50 million a day initially and could have idled up to half a million workers in rail-dependent industries.

The House passed the measure late Wednesday on a 400-5 vote, and the Senate cleared the legislation without debate by voice vote.

The law establishes a new emergency mediation board to resolve outstanding issues between unions and railroads and, if necessary, impose a settlement through binding arbitration within 65 days. The three-member panel, which will use the recommendations made in January by an earlier presidential emergency board as a starting point, was empowered to make binding decisions.

Both management and labor were dissatisfied with the earlier proposals by the presidential board.

The strike, waged by eight unions and honored by three others against 11 major railroads, capped a three-year dispute over pay, work rules and health benefits. The unions opposed congressional intervention on the grounds it would eventually lead to an unfavorably imposed settlement.

Democratic lawmakers, usually sympathetic to union concerns, said the precarious state of the economy forced them to move a bill quickly.

About a third of all U.S. goods are shipped by rail. Automakers would have been especially hard hit. They require delivery of supplies to plants only days before their use.

Ford Motor Company said some plants could have been forced to shut down in just two to three days.

STRIKER REPLACEMENT ban bill advances in House Education.

A bill that would ban the hiring of permanent replacements for striking workers gained approval from a deeply split House Education and Labor Committee yesterday.

The bill (HR 5) was ordered reported on a party-line, 25-14 vote, after Democrats beat back a series of GOP amendments aimed at weakening the bill. By 25-14, the committee adopted an amendment offered by Pat Williams, D-Mont., to clarify that the protections under the bill would apply only to union-represented employees.

Bill supporters said that the measure would protect the right to strike, which they say has been eroded in recent years as companies have increasingly used the threat of permanent replacements to break strikes.

But panel Republicans maintained that the measure would tilt the advantage too far toward labor. "This is the most potentially disruptive bill before the Congress," said Dick Armey, R-Texas, a vociferous opponent.

The committee rejected, by voice vote, a substitute amendment offered by ranking Republican Bill Goodling, Pa. The amendment proposed to bar the hiring of permanent replacements during the first eight weeks of a strike and would have directed the National Labor Relations Board to speed up deliberation of cases in which permanent replacements have been hired.

LATIN AMERICAN debt, environment bill OK'd by panel.

The House Foreign Affairs Subcommittee on International Economic Policy and Trade yesterday approved by voice vote a bill (HR 964) that would put into effect a combination debt-relief, environmental improvement program for Latin American and Caribbean countries.

The bill embodies some portion of President Bush's Enterprise for the Americas Initiative, first put forward last September. HR 964 would allow forgiveness of some portions of government-to-government debt owed the United States by Latin American countries that engage in economic adjustment plans devised by the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund and the Inter-American Development Bank.

Interest payments that would have been due on those debts would be deposited into an environmental improvement fund for projects in the indebted country.

The panel agreed by voice vote to an amendment by panel Chairman Sam Gejdenson, D-Conn., that would cap the authorized debt relief at $285 million in fiscal 1992 and $182 million in fiscal 1993.

Gejdenson said he would vote for the bill in subcommittee but would need more information on program costs before he could support it in the full committee.

The House Foreign Affairs Subcommittee on Western Hemisphere Affairs approved HR 964 on Wednesday.

KURDISH AID measure wins Senate panel's approval.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee yesterday gave unanimous approval to legislation (S 786) that would authorize $50 million for humanitarian assistance to the Kurds of Iraq.

More than a million Iraqi Kurds have become refugees in the weeks after the end of the Persian Gulf War.

Wells Nomination. In the same en-bloc vote of 16-0 by which the panel approved S 786, members recommended Senate approval of a number of treaties and State Department nominations. Included in the list was Melissa Wells, whose nomination as ambassador to Zaire had been held up by ranking Republican Jesse Helms, N.C., last month. Helms, who had said he needed more time to study Wells' responses to several questions, said yesterday he expected Wells to win confirmation.

NATURAL GAS provisions bog down Energy markup.

After a brisk first two days, the pace of the Senate Energy Committee's markup of a bill (S 341) to map a national energy strategy eased considerably as members debated an amendment aimed at protecting U.S. natural gas suppliers from Canadian imports.

Offered by Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., and Tim Wirth, D-Colo., the amendment would eliminate loopholes in import regulations that sponsors said allow Canadian natural gas to appear cheaper, when in reality, it is not.

Domenici said the loopholes result in the "American consumer being charged for gas which is ultimately more expensive." At first glance, he said, the gas appears cheaper because it reflects only the "commodity" portion of the total price, not the "fixed costs," which include shipping and storage.

"These practices cheat our natural gas consumers and discriminate against U.S. producers," Domenici said.

Although the amendment was approved by voice vote, other senators promised to revisit the topic. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., disagreed with the contention that the Canadian natural gas was more expensive for U.S. consumers.

The administration has raised the concern that the amendment would undo the U.S.-Canada free-trade agreement. But panel Chairman J. Bennett Johnston, D-La., said that was not the case. "We never would have approved a free-trade agreement that would give to Canada any competitive advantage," he said.

The panel intends to continue to work on natural gas issues when the markup resumes next Tuesday.

REFUGEE AID increased in State Department bill.

U.S. refugee assistance programs would receive a $109.5 million boost under legislation (HR 1415) approved yesterday by the House Foreign Affairs Subcommittee on International Operations.

The bill, approved by voice vote, would reauthorize the State Department and U.S. Information Agency for fiscal 1992-93.

In all, the measure would authorize $5.6 billion, slightly above President Bush's request of $5.5 billion. Chairman Howard L. Berman, D-Calif., said that spending limits imposed by last year's budget pact prevented the panel from increasing the spending authority for most programs.

Berman did get the approval of full committee Chairman Dante B. Fascell, D-Fla., to increase aid for refugees. The administration had requested $490.5 million for fiscal 1992. The panel approved $600 million, including $75 million to help refugees, who are primarily from the Soviet Union, resettle in Israel.

In fiscal 1991, a total of $485.6 million was appropriated for refugee assistance.

The measure also includes $130 million for the U.S. Embassy in Moscow, but withholds any decision on how the money should be spent. That decision will be made at the full committee markup expected to be held April 25.

IRAQI ASSETS could be taken over under House Energy bill.

The House Energy and Commerce Subcommittee on Commerce yesterday gave voice-vote approval to legislation (HR 1286) that would give the administration more authority to seize assets in the United States that are owned or controlled by Iraq.

The bill grants the administration the same authority to take over assets as would be the case if Congress had formally declared war on Iraq.

Subcommittee Chairman Cardiss Collins, D-Ill., said the Treasury Department has identified 52 businesses and 37 individuals that are acting as "front companies and agents of Iraq." Many of them are involved in the weapons business, according to the Treasury Department.

The bill includes provisions allowing the government to continue operations of companies it takes control of if it determines that U.S. businesses might suffer because of a loss of supplies from a seized company.

Panel members agreed by voice vote to an amendment that would exempt the government from certain liability for the operation of companies it seizes.

BUSH EDUCATION strategy unveiled to mixed reviews.

President Bush's national education strategy was hailed by a number of governors and education officials yesterday as a bold and aggressive blueprint for change, but leading congressional Democrats called it too little, too late.

The president said the goal of his national strategy is to increase high school graduation rates, end adult illiteracy and improve student test scores.

The proposal, called America's 2000 Strategy, would establish new voluntary national examinations in English, math, science, history and geography. Universities would be encouraged to use the results of the tests in determining admissions.

The strategy also calls for national and state report cards to be used to keep parents informed on the educational progress of their children compared with the progress of children in other districts and states.

Bush's plan also calls for higher pay for teachers specializing in core subjects, who teach in high-crime areas or who serve as mentors for new teachers.

Education Secretary Lamar Alexander, who helped develop the strategy, called it a "bold, complex and long-range plan to move every community in America toward those goals."

"The president is coming to the table with a lot more aggressive action, and we welcome it," Colorado Democratic Gov. Roy Romer said.

But congressional Democrats were more wary.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., said the plan's "most glaring defect is the absence of any genuine commitment to ensure all students start school ready to learn." He said the Bush proposals were largely "repackaged initiatives" that Democrats have been pushing for years.

House Majority Leader Richard A. Gephardt, D-Mo., said the president's strategy "does not represent a radical education reform We must do more than tinker around the margin of educational excellence."

THORNBURGH LEANS toward a gun ban in exchange for crime bill.

The Bush administration may be willing to accept a ban on some semiautomatic assault weapons and a seven-day waiting period for handgun sales if Congress approves President Bush's crime package, Attorney General Dick Thornburgh told the Senate Judiciary Committee yesterday.

The attorney general did not specify which weapons the administration would consider banning, but he did say that the administration favors a ban on magazines, clips and other devices that allow gunmen to fire more than 15 rounds without reloading.

Thornburgh stopped short of pledging that he would recommend that Bush sign gun control measures if Congress passes the crime control bill sought by the administration.

"I don't write blank checks," the attorney general told Judiciary Chairman Joseph R. Biden Jr., D-Del.

Thornburgh's offer to consider a ban on certain semiautomatic weapons comes on the heels of the administration's stated willingness to accept the so-called Brady bill waiting period for handgun purchases.

The Brady bill, which is being considered by the House Judiciary Committee, would require handgun purchasers to wait seven days to allow local police to determine if they have a criminal record.

Biden said he was willing to iron out differences between his own proposed crime bill and the one submitted by the president.

"Your willingness to moderate the administration's position on gun control measures paves the way for passage of the crime control bill," Biden said.

NEW TRADE TALKS good idea, Bentsen says.

Senate Finance Committee Chairman Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, signaled support for a new round of trade negotiations if current talks taking place in Geneva break down.

The United States, Japan, the European Community and other nations have been meeting the last two years to work out an agreement to cut export subsidies under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT). The negotiations have shown some progress, but no agreement is in sight.

Faced with the prospect that the Geneva talks might collapse, Bentsen endorsed a plan — called "GATT plus" — to have some of the participating nations continue to negotiate among themselves. William Brock, a former secretary of Labor and U.S. trade representative who proposed the GATT-plus plan, said the new round of talks means that some countries are willing to accept what the GATT negotiations have accomplished so far.

The panel also touched on other trade issues and heard testimony from Ernest F. Hollings, D-S.C., who reiterated his opposition to giving the Bush administration more time to continue negotiating a free-trade agreement with Mexico under special "fast-track" procedures that would bar lawmakers from amending the treaty before voting whether to approve it.

A vote by either chamber by June 1 could block the extension of fast-track authority. The administration says it wants an additional two years to hammer out an agreement.

DOE WASTE CLEANUP efforts challenged by lawmakers.

Defending his department against allegations that it was not spending enough money on nuclear waste cleanup at federal nuclear weapons plants, Energy Secretary James D. Watkins told the Senate Armed Services Committee yesterday that it would have been a mistake to give more money to the cleanup effort.

"We do not need $5 billion. We could not have managed the $5 billion. To throw around this money would have been a mistake," he said.

And DOE spokesman Fred Lash said the department is satisfied with its fiscal 1992 request before Congress for $4.5 billion in money to clean up four decades of nuclear waste.

Watkins was responding to questions about an internal memo from the head of the waste cleanup effort, who said in the memo last December that the agency risked lawsuits and a loss of credibility unless it sought more money for cleanup activities.

The memo was an appeal to the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) to spend $5 billion on the cleanup effort instead of $4.1 billion, as preferred by OMB.

"Congress and environmental groups will likely view the OMB decision to not fund activities transferred to Environmental Management as favoring production operations," Leo Duffy, DOE's director of environmental restoration and waste management, said in the memo.

But Watson told the panel, "In no way do I believe production is taking a lead seat to environment and waste management."

John Glenn, D-Ohio, disagreed. The chairman of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee, Glenn yesterday released DOE's summary of projects that cannot be funded under the department's 1992 budget request, including $109.2 million in waste cleanup efforts required under agreements between the federal government and the states with contaminated plants.

CLOSED CAPTIONING of Senate to begin next January.

Senate leaders announced yesterday that starting next January, television coverage of floor proceedings will be closed captioned for the hearing impaired.

The system will provide a near verbatim transcript of each speaker's remarks and will be visible only on those television sets equipped with a closed-caption decoder.

Majority Leader George J. Mitchell, D-Maine, in announcing the new service, said, "Our commitment to enfranchising the nearly 23 million Americans who are hearing impaired, the elderly or new residents wanting to understand the government of their new homeland is firm."

The Senate Appropriations and Rules committees had authorized the Department of Education to contract out for the captioning service. But the Senate ultimately decided to have the secretary of the Senate establish an Office of Captioning Services to undertake the project, after receiving no outside bids for the job.

HOLLOWAY announces Louisiana gubernatorial bid.

Louisiana Rep. Clyde C. Holloway, R, has announced plans to seek his party's nomination for governor.

Because the gubernatorial election is this year, he will not have to relinquish his House seat to make the race.

Holloway, who won his first House election in 1986, will enter what is expected to be a crowded Republican field.

Incumbent Gov. Buddy Roemer, who recently switched from the Democratic to the Republican Party, plans to seek reelection. David Duke, a former member of the Ku Klux Klan who waged an unsuccessful bid for senator last year, is also expected to be in the field.

Holloway said that if he does not receive the party's endorsement at a state convention in June, he would drop out of the race.

All Democratic and Republican candidates run in an open primary on Oct. 19, with a runoff between the top two finishers if no candidate receives more than 50 percent of the vote. ■

Correction. In Thursday's issue of the Monitor, it was incorrectly reported that four House Foreign Affairs subcommittees had finished marking up their portions of a fiscal 1992-93 authorization bill. The Europe and the Middle East Subcommittee did not complete its work and will resume the markup next week.

If Condition of Arizonan Does Not Improve Shortly, He Will Leave Hill, Wife Tells Speaker

By Karen Foerstel

In a letter delivered to House Speaker Tom Foley (D-Wash) Friday night, the wife of Rep. Mo Udall (D-Ariz) said that her husband's poor health may soon require him to resign from Congress.

"Based on my discussions with his doctors and my own evaluation of his condition, it appears that he may not be able to return to the rigorous demands and duties required of Members of Congress," the letter from Norma Udall to Foley read. "Because of this difficult situation, I have begun the complex task of putting his public and personal affairs in order.

"If discussions between physicians and our family indicate that a marked improvement in his condition is not forthcoming in the near future, we will ask for your assistance in making the necessary arrangements for his resignation and disability retirement from the House of Representatives."

On Jan. 6, Udall, who is chairman of the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, fell down a flight of stairs in his Arlington home, fracturing his right

80 Senators Pay Tribute to Heinz

By Susan B. Glasser

It was supposed to have been a busy day on the Hill. The Senate was slated to debate the Commodity Futures Trading Commission authorization bill; dozens of committee meetings were scheduled.

Instead, much of the Senate left Washington early yesterday morning on four chartered planes to attend the funeral of their colleague, Sen. John Heinz (R-Pa).

Heinz, 52, was buried yesterday morning after a service at the Heinz Memorial Chapel at the University of Pittsburgh, the chapel his family donated to the school more than 50 years ago. He died last Thursday in a mid-air collision between the small plane on which he was flying and a helicopter.

Nine military pallbearers carried Heinz's flag-draped coffin inside the chapel, as Heinz's wife Teresa Simoes-Ferreira and three sons, John IV, Andre, and Christopher, followed.

Bizarre S&L Triad

Keating, D'Amato, Father Ritter

By Glenn R. Simpson

On behalf of a prominent and controversial New York City charity, Sen. Alfonse D'Amato (R-NY) in 1987 asked the government's top savings and loan regulator to reconsider a costly decision rendered against Charles Keating's Lincoln Savings and Loan.

The incident, which is spelled out in correspondence acquired recently by Roll Call from government files, is one of the strangest chapters in the Keating saga.

The charity that D'Amato went to bat for in a letter dated Feb. 26, 1987, was Covenant House, a Catholic shelter for runaways. Its rial Campaign Committee called the timing of the letter "suspicious," and Tupper admitted that he wanted the timing to coincide with a DC fundraiser tonight.

Adams's office issued a statement Tuesday saying: "Senator Adams is tired of these deliberately false accusations and the hurt such untrue statements cause him and his family. Senator and Mrs. Adams are discussing the letter with his attorney."

His staff points out that the charges against him were investigated by US Attorshoulder bone and several ribs and sustaining a concussion.

Udall, 68, was hospitalized for one month at the National Institutes of Health before being transferred to the National Hospital for Rehabilitation. Last week, he was moved to the Veterans Administration Medical Center where he is now undergoing therapy on a part-time basis.

His rehabilitation has been hampered by the fact that since 1980 he has suffered from Parkinson's disease.

"Although Mo's condition has continued to progress steadily since his accident, that progress has been painfully slow — in part because of complications attributable to Parkinson's disease," Norma Udall wrote the Speaker.

Udall's press secretary Erik Barnett said he didn't believe the letter was written to set a precise timetable for a possible resignation but rather to inform the Speaker on the 15-term Congressman's progress.

Still, the letter is a strong indication that Udall, one of the best liked and most productive Members of the House over the past three decades, will resign in mid-term. He announced last year that the 102nd Congress would be his last.

After learning of Mrs. Udall's letter, the Arizona Republic yesterday called on Udall to resign.

An editorial stated, "It has been said that even an incapacitated Morris Udall is more effective than some Congressmen in full health. This is no longer true, and Mr. Udall knows it. No matter how difficult the decision, Mr. Udall has the inner strength to do what is best for Arizona. He should resign from the Congress of the United States."

Udall first came to the House in 1961 to fill the seat of his brother Stewart (D), who was appointed Secretary of the Interior in the Cabinet of President John F. Kennedy.

In 1977, Rep. Udall was named chairman of the Interior Committee, but earlier this year, Rep. George Miller (D-Calif) took over as the acting chair of the committee due to Udall's poor health.

In the letter delivered to Foley on Friday, Norma Udall said, "Please know that whatever decisions and actions taken in the days ahead will be taken with the best interests of the institution and the people of the Second District of Arizona in mind."

While no candidates have formally de-

'Because of this difficult situation,' Norma Udall wrote Foley, 'I have begun the complex task of putting his public and personal affairs in order.'

clared they will run for Udall's seat should he resign, Arizona politicians say the names of four Democrats are being widely circulated: former Rep. Jim McNulty, who represented the 5th district from 1983 to 1985; Maricopa County Supervisor Ed Pastor; Tucson Mayor Tom Volgy; and Phoenix attorney Janet Napolitano.

Barnett said that since Udall's fall in January, the Congressional office has concentrated on constituent casework and legislative correspondence.

"One of the early requests from the doctors was not to inundate [Udall] with work," Barnett said.

Barnett described the staff's morale as "pretty fair.... It's admittedly difficult." But he said there has been only one departure from the office since the accident, and that was unrelated to Udall's health.

TALKING POINTS FOR MEETING WITH THE GRAND MASTER OF THE ORDER OF MALTA

- It's a pleasure to welcome you to the White House during what I understand is your first visit to Washington.
- In addition to my good friend, Bill FitzGerald, I know you are well acquainted with our Ambassador to the Holy See Tom Melady.

--I would like to take this opportunity to thank and congratulate you and the Order of Malta for the Order's longstanding good works on behalf of the sick and the poor, particularly through your network of hospitals throughout the world.

--I'd be interested in hearing about some of your recent initiatives, particularly any relating to the Middle East and anything the Order is contemplating with respect to the tragic situation involving the Kurds.

--As you know, we have recently launched a significantly expanded effort to provide humanitarian assistance to those refugees. I know the Order is also committed to refugee assistance, and I'd appreciate any thoughts you have in that regard.

POINTS TO BE MADE FOR PHONE CALL WITH MEXICAN PRESIDENT CARLOS SALINAS DE GORTARI

- I am calling to discuss with you the peace negotiations in El Salvador. I have just talked to President Cristiani on this. As you may know, UN Assistant Secretary De Soto met with him on Thursday in San Salvador.
- This is a crucial week to gain a global agreement on key issues in the talks, including a cease-fire. Key issues involving constitutional change remain to be agreed upon if the two sides want the current legislature to vote for them before April 30.
- Cristiani is prepared to go a long way to meet legitimate FMLN demands. We have been impressed with the flexibility his government has shown.
- But frankly, I think he has to bring something back from the negotiations to justify the steps he is willing to take, particularly those on reducing and reforming the military.
- The guerrillas cannot demand an unlimited number of revolutionary changes. After all, they have never been elected by anyone.
- I hope you will use your influence with the FMLN to urge them to agree to key political issues and to a cease-fire.
- [IF RAISED] I agree with President Cristiani that changing the way the constitution is amended, that is, simply || changing Article 248, is not a good idea. It will make the
|| amendment process open-ended, and all the democratic parties
|| in El Salvador oppose this. They believe that the two sides should be able to agree on individual constitutional reforms by April 30, and that if they do, the incoming legislature will be able to approve them a second time as early as May. The FMLN can agree to this if it is serious about peace.

Nicaragua

-- On another matter, I just had a very productive meeting with President Violeta Chamorro during her State Visit.

-- She said that her number one priority is to clear Nicaragua's arrears with the World Bank and the Inter-American Development Bank.

-- I pledged that we would do whatever we can.

-- I know that she is seeking your help too, and I hope we can work together to help her in this crucial effort since it is key to Nicaragua's economic recovery.

Free Trade Agreement

-- You did a magnificent job of presenting the case for the FTA during your public speeches in Canada and around the United States. We continue to work hard to win the fast-track extension, and I think things are moving slowly in our direction.
