BUSH HAILS GRAND CANYON CLEAN-AIR PACT

GRAND CANYON -- President Bush Wednesday hailed an agreement among the federal government, environmentalists and owners of a large power plant intended to curb the major source of winter air pollution over the Grand Canyon, the first use of a 14-year-old federal law to protect scenic vistas within a national park....

The environment is one of three domestic policy issues, along with education and health care, that the President's political advisers say they are most concerned about. Asked to rate the degree of confidence they had in Bush in those three areas, 45% of those questioned in July for a Wall Street Journal/NBC News poll gave him a 1 or 2 on a five-point scale in which 5 represented the highest confidence. Less than half as many, 21%, gave him a 4 or 5. The poll was conducted by Democratic consultant Peter Hart and Republican strategist Robert Teeter.

(John Yang, Washington Post, A8)

BUSH VISITS GRAND CANYON, PLAYS UP ENVIRONMENTAL RECORD

GRAND CANYON -- President Bush sought to polish his image as an environmentalist Wednesday as he began a campaign-style swing through the West designed to lay the groundwork for his all but official reelection bid.... Bush's trip triggered a small avalanche of critical news releases, a sure sign that the presidential election season is underway. "Anybody who sees George Bush as the environmental President at the Grand Canyon ought to watch for Elvis, alive and well, rafting by on the Colorado River," Sen. Gore said. "The Bush record in the environment is a fraud," Gore added in an attack that accused the Administration of inaction on global warming and efforts to weaken the Clean Air Act.

(Gene Gibbons, Reuter)

BUSH POLISHES IMAGE AS ENVIRONMENTAL PRESIDENT

GRAND CANYON -- President Bush traveled to the Grand Canyon for the first time Wednesday, hiked a trail and polished his image as an environmental president amid Democratic charges of hypocrisy.... "President Bush has chosen the perfect place to discuss his Administration's dismal environmental achievements," DNC chairman Brown said in a statement. "The enormous gap between Bush's environmental rhetoric and his actual environmental record is almost as wide as the Grand Canyon." Brown said Bush's own Competitiveness Council "tried to gut the very (Grand Canyon) cleanup effort Mr. Bush touts today."... Asked whether the visit was a warm-up for his 1992 re-election bid, Bush replied, "No, no, no, you'll know it when you see it." Sen DeConcini disagreed. "Sure, that's part of the process," he said when asked whether election-year politics had begun early. "But I'd rather see him do it (environmental concerns) on the campaign than not do it at all."

(Jeff Baker, Arizona Republic)

COOPERATION ON THE ENVIRONMENT

GRAND CANYON -- Calling it a great cooperation, President Bush today presided over the signing of an agreement designed to reduce haze over the Grand Canyon. "I don't believe anywhere in the world could you find an outdoor attraction as impressive as this," Bush said. "Today celebrates the kind of civility and cooperation this Administration tries to promote for the entire society.... Bush praised the agreement as a cooperation between environmental groups, business and the government. "What we need is an environmental policy that promotes economic growth, creates new jobs, and still protects the beauty of the great outdoors."

(Becca Rothschild and Lance Evans, Arizona Daily Sun)

A 'GOOD START' IN THE ENVIRONMENT

GRAND CANYON -- Pledging to build on what he termed a "good start" in aggressive efforts to protect the environment, President Bush Wednesday visited the Grand Canyon for the signing of a plan designed to cut air pollution. Standing outside the historic El Povar Hotel at the South Rim, a sweeping view of the canyon behind him, Bush drew chuckles from the crowd during his opening remark.... "It looks like something that started out in Washington as a trench and went over budget," he quipped. Bush, who has proclaimed himself the "environmental President," praised the canyon's natural beauty and spoke solemnly of efforts to protect it. "Many times, what you don't see is as impressive as what you do," he said.

(Rosemary Case, Mesa Tribune)

BUSH PLUGS ENVIRONMENT, HEALTH CARE EFFORTS

SALT LAKE CITY -- President Bush straddled the Grand Canyon's famed Kaibab Trail and the campaign trail Wednesday as he took the offensive in a battle with the Democrats over the nation's domestic policies....

Critics saw Bush's visit to the Grand Canyon as a prime opportunity to strike back. A Sierra Club official noted "a disturbing trend in President Bush's use of photo opportunities and sound bites to mask what are becoming increasingly anti-environmental policies."

George Frampton, president of the Wilderness Society, said: "It's easy enough for a politician to stand in a national park and bask in the glory of the scenery. What is harder is to make the decisions that will protect our national parks. So far, President Bush has not mastered that part of the job."...

A spokesman for Governor Wilder said, "The governor finds it ironic that the President had to travel 2,500 miles to demonstrate his resolve to cut air pollution and improve visibility when all he had to do was cross the Potomac River."

DNC chairman Brown said, "Try as he might, President Bush can't haze over the facts about his failed commitment to an environmental presidency."

Citing what he called "a record of inaction and neglect," League of Conservation voters President Bruce Babbitt said, "The Bush record at the very best is only mixed."

(Paul Bedard, Washington Times, A3)

BUSH VISITS UTAH

SALT LAKE CITY -- President Bush finally visited the state Wednesday that gave him the highest percentage of votes in the country.

With the national press looking on, he praised the strong families and work ethic of Utah....

Before Bush arrived at the Primary Children's Medical Center, Secretary Sullivan announced a new program aimed at reducing the nation's infant mortality rate.

The new "Healthy Start" program will target the nation's 15 worst areas for infant mortality, with the goal of reducing infant deaths by more than 50 percent in five years, he said.

"These communities are going to show the rest of us what can be done to get this nation out of the basement in infant mortality ratings," Sullivan said.

(Paul Rolly & Chris Jorgensen, Salt Lake Tribune)

OPPOSITION WANES; GATES APPEARS LOCK

CIA director-designate Gates appears headed for Senate confirmation next week unless new revelations about his past or other problems arise in Senate Intelligence Committee hearings.

"To be honest, thus far he has made a very positive impression," said Sen. Boren....

"I agree he'll probably be confirmed," Sen. Metzenbaum said on the "MacNeil-Lehrer News Hour" Wednesday night.

(Bill Gertz, Washington Times, A3)

PANEL EXAMINING WHETHER GATES SLANTED CIA'S LOOK AT POPE PLOT

In 1985, Robert Gates presented policymakers with a study strongly suggesting Soviet involvement in the plot to kill the pope, without revealing he had told his analysts to ignore contrary evidence, according to allegations made to the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence.

The allegation is likely to come up Friday in a classified session where several CIA analysts are expected to argue that Gates was involved in "cooking the books" or politicizing intelligence to fit Administration policy aims....

Senators supporting his nomination appear to be offering Gates an opportunity to defuse the "politicization" issue. Responding to a question from Sen. Warner, Gates said it is "something I have grappled with throughout my career. When I was a young analyst I was absolutely convinced that the refusal to accept my analysis was politically motivated by the people on the seventh floor of the agency."

(Benjamin Weiser, Washington Post, A5)

NATIONAL NEWS

FIFTY-FOUR PERCENT OF AMERICANS POLLED SAY THOMAS SHOULD JOIN SUPREME COURT

NEW YORK -- Fewer than one in six Americans in an AP poll are opposed to having Clarence Thomas join the Supreme Court, and more than half say he should be confirmed.

About half of the 1,009 adults polled say they approve of President Bush's nomination of Thomas.

Fifty-four percent, including 10 percent of those who disapprove, say the Senate should confirm his nomination....

About two in five Americans polled were unable to say whether their impression of Thomas was favorable or whether he should have been more forthcoming in his testimony.

By 4-1, those who had an opinion of Thomas's testimony said that opinion was favorable.

However, 30% said Thomas should have been more forthcoming about his views on abortion. Twenty-eight percent said he should not have been more forthcoming. (Howard Goldberg, AP)

OPPONENTS OF SUPREME COURT NOMINEE AIMING AT EEOC RECORD

Opponents of Judge Thomas's Supreme Court nomination are not giving up their fight even though Democrats and Republicans alike say he is likely to win Senate confirmation....

Thomas's "philosophy and positions are antithetical to everything that the court has adopted in the civil rights area," said Julius Chambers, director of the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund. (James Rowley, AP)

SEN. JOHNSTON SAYS HE'LL VOTE FOR THOMAS

Sen. Johnston said Wednesday he intends to vote for Judge Thomas as an associate justice of the court....

"I believe he has shown himself to have the intelligence, the integrity, the background, the experience, the balance" to serve on the high court, Johnston said. (Washington Post, A16)

EDITOR'S NOTE: "The Master Of 'Non-Speak,'" regarding Gates and Thomas showing an ability to say nothing at great length during their hearings, appears in The Washington Post, page A19.

SENATORS WANT TO SEE REPORTS BEFORE ACTING ON STATE NOMINEE

Leaders of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee are holding up the nomination of President Bush's choice for the No. 3 post at the State Department because of delays in producing several arms-control reports....

"These reports would be very helpful to the committee in dealing with various significant issues of mutual interest," [said a letter from senators on the committee to President Bush].

(Bill Gertz, Washington Times, A4)

KERREY TO LAUNCH CAMPAIGN FOR PRESIDENCY ON SEPT. 30
Nebraskan's Candidacy Likely To Be Unconventional

Sen. Kerrey Wednesday set Sept. 30 as the day he will formally announce that he will run for the Democratic nomination....

Kerry's campaign, according to those who have been involved in launching it, is likely to stress the urgency of domestic problems, the importance of leadership in getting people and institutions to attack them and a skepticism that government is always the best way to solve them. (Dan Balz, Washington Post, A2)

ABORTION-RELATED RIDER STRIPPED FROM AID BILL

House and Senate conferees have dropped a contentious abortion-related proposal on funding of international family planning programs in hopes of avoiding a presidential veto of the first foreign aid authorization bill with a good chance of enactment since 1985....

It's my belief he will sign it," said Sen. McConnell. "There's a lot in here (the bill) that the Administration wants and the things they objected to have been whittled down."

(Helen Dewar, Washington Post, A14)

FOLEY DROPS 5-CENT GASOLINE TAX IN REVISING HIGHWAY BILL

Rep. Foley formally announced Wednesday that his party would rewrite a massive five-year highway and mass transit bill without a 5-cent increase in the federal gasoline tax.

In a statement released by his office, Foley and Rep. Rostenkowski had agreed that in place of the tax the new legislation would extend an existing 2.5-cent addition to the gas tax for three extra years to help fund the highway legislation.

WITH EYE ON VETO THREAT, BIPARTISAN
SENATE GROUP TO REVISE FAMILY LEAVE BILL

A bipartisan group of senators Wednesday said they would water down a long-stalled bill to provide unpaid employee leaves for family medical needs, in hopes that the new version would pass the Senate with enough votes to withstand a threatened presidential veto.

The revisions appear to have given the bill some new momentum as it heads for a floor vote, but they did not dent the opposition from the business community and the White House....

Sen. Bond acknowledged that he had tried out the new version on White House Chief of Staff Sununu in a telephone conversation on Tuesday. "I didn't get an endorsement," Bond said....

Judith Lichtman, president of the Women's Legal Defense Fund, said Wednesday she was "disappointed" that further compromise was necessary, but hailed the new version as a "breakthrough" that could lead to enactment -- with or without Bush's signature.

MARTIN OPPOSES MANDATE ON LEAVE

Secretary Martin does not believe in using the "big stick" approach to force companies to adopt family leave policies.

Martin stressed her opposition to any bill that would force employers to provide such benefits [as in the recently unveiled Senate Family Planning bill]. "The Administration's view is not in opposition to family leave," she said in a meeting with reporters and editors at The Washington Times. "What we're looking at here is the question of mandates -- is that the way you want to go about it?"... On another workplace subject, Martin also stressed her opposition to the proposed extension of unemployment benefits.... "It's the usual Democratic stuff," Martin said of the unemployment bill, blasting Congress for failing to take into account the budget deficit when sending the bill to the President.

"What a mockery to send a bill and not pay for it," she said.

BUSH MAY VETO SOCIAL SECURITY BILL, OFFICIAL WARNS

The Bush Administration has warned Congress that legislation to make the Social Security Administration an independent agency and raise the amount of money a retiree can earn without loss of benefits faces a possible presidential veto. Louis Enoff, principal deputy commissioner of Social Security, told a House Ways and Means subcommittee this week that Secretary Sullivan would "recommend that the President veto any legislation containing a provision to make SSA an independent agency." Enoff contended that Social Security actually would become weaker, losing its "strong, firm advocate's voice at the Cabinet table."

POVERTY IN U.S.: DEEPER, LONG-LASTING

Global labor market changes led to increases in poverty throughout Western industrialized nations in the 1980s, but the U.S. stood in "ignominious isolation" in its failure to lift its least well-off citizens out of poverty, according to a study released Wednesday. The report by the Joint Center for Political and Economic Studies found not only was the poverty rate here higher in the 1980s than in the six other countries studied, but also that poverty in the U.S. was deeper and of longer duration.

"This report should set alarm bells ringing in Washington and other Western democracies," said Eddie Williams, president of the center.

SLOWDOWN IN HOUSING STARTS SIGNALS A SLUGGISH RECOVERY

Builders slowed new housing construction to a modest 0.6 percent gain in August, the smallest in three months, the government said Wednesday in one of two reports that portrayed a sluggish economic recovery that is missing some parts of the nation. The small rise in housing activity reported by the Commerce Department was echoed by the Fed's "beige book" sampler of the U.S. economy, which noted that the economy's uneven recovery also is evident in consumer spending and borrowing.

BUSH THREATENS TO SEND JETS TO BACK UP IRAQ INSPECTIONS

President Bush Wednesday sharply escalated pressure on Saddam Hussein to allow U.N. inspection and destruction of his hidden nuclear, chemical and biological arsenal, saying he was prepared to send more warplanes to protect U.N. helicopters searching for the weapons.

In addition to placing some U.S.-based aircraft units on alert, Bush also said an unspecified number of Patriot missiles will be sent to Saudi Arabia at the request of King Fahd.

Senior American officials and Western diplomats described the U.S. actions as an effort to give military credibility to an ultimatum delivered to Saddam this week....

The U.S. threat appeared to have backing of both Britain and France.... Bush's efforts to force Saddam to back down were widely supported on Capitol Hill. Sen. Dole called the U.S. moves the "final warning" to Iraq, and others said the Administration briefings matched public comments that the action envisioned was presently limited to enforcing the helicopter inspections....

Secretary Cheney played down the prospect of military action, telling reporters, "It's a prudent course for those of us in the Defense Department to be involved in planning for contingencies and that's exactly what we're doing." At the U.N., Iraqi Ambassador Abdul Amir Anbari dismissed the situation as "a tempest in a teacup" and insisted that Iraq had been fully cooperating with the U.N.... Sen. D'Amato said, "I think the President has really given him (Saddam) every opportunity; he had been more than patient. What you have to know is that when the President undertakes this type of action, what he's saying is, 'Saddam, you better tune up your hearing aid. We're not going to allow you to thumb your nose at the international community.'"

'Fed Up' Bush Threatens To Send Warplanes To Escort U.N. In Iraq

GRAND CANYON -- President Bush declared Wednesday he will send warplanes to escort U.N. helicopters searching for hidden Iraqi weapons if Saddam continues to impede the inspectors. Bush said he was "plenty fed up" with Saddam but not looking for a new war.

Bush and other top Administration officials, while raising the prospect of imminent military activity, sought to cut short any speculation that new fighting was in store. "This is not Desert Storm II," one senior official said.... In Damascus, Secretary Baker said he and President Assad "had a complete discussion of Iraq's failure once again to comply with U.N. resolutions." Baker said he had similarly communicated with the governments of Egypt, Israel and Saudi Arabia, but he declined to characterize their reactions to Bush's decision to send warplanes to the area. Syrian foreign minister Sharaa refused comment on that point, other than to say "We support the U.N. resolution." At U.N. headquarters, Secretary General Perez de Cuellar said he saw no sign the Iraqis were ready to drop their resistance to weapons inspections.

BASES ON ALERT TO HEAD TO PERSIAN GULF; PATRIOTS TO BE SENT TO SAUDI ARABIA

GRAND CANYON -- President Bush, "plenty fed up" with Saddam's refusal to let U.N. inspectors survey Iraqi weapons plants, on Wednesday threatened to order more warplanes to the Middle East to force Iraq's compliance.... Allied air strikes designed to eliminate Iraq's remaining nuclear capability "would take a sustained air campaign of several days, at least," according to Lt. General Horner. But Iraq could easily hide its stockpile of enriched uranium. "You could put it in a suitcase or hide it under a bed," said George Ullrich, deputy director of the Defense Nuclear Agency.

BUSH 'FED UP' WITH SADDAM HUSSEIN

GRAND CANYON -- President Bush said he is "plenty fed up" with Saddam Hussein but is as determined as ever to keep the Iraqi president faithful to U.N. resolutions ending the Gulf War....

The day's statements and moves were reminiscent of earlier confrontations with Saddam, which have generally ended with compliance. Bush said the latest actions were once again precautionary in nature and no firm order for action would become necessary if Saddam allows the helicopters to fly freely.

National Security Adviser Scowcroft echoed that view.

"There is military planning going along," Scowcroft said. "It is incident to our demand that Saddam Hussein permit U.N. helicopters to fly on their inspection trips and there's been no execute order (to put the escort missions into effect) and if he will comply with the U.N. resolutions, there won't need to be an execute order."

LAWMAKERS AND BUSH'S IRAQ POLICY

Members of Congress offered support to the Administration Wednesday on its political effort, backed by a renewed military threat, to force Iraq to comply with U.N. inspection flights....

"President Bush is taking the appropriate precautions," Dole said. "In taking those steps, President Bush is not seeking a confrontation or military solution. On the contrary, while preparing for military action, if necessary, the President is sending yet another, and perhaps a final, signal to Saddam and giving him one last chance...." Sen. Heflin said: "Sooner or later we have got to have a face-off with Saddam. If he blinks, we ought to let him have it with both fists. I think Saddam should be dealt with and resolve the situation in that part of the world." "I'm very hopeful that the action that has been taken...will show that we're not going to tolerate any more of the lies of Saddam Hussein," said Sen. Kennedy. Sen. Dodd said he would not second guess the President's actions and said, "Prudence would dictate that we take these weapons out before we wait and see what this madman is going to do with them." Rep. Aspin said sending units to Saudi Arabia "is more political than military, but we need to do it." "It is more political than military," said Aspin, "because we already have enough squadrons in Saudi Arabia to carry out any air raids the Administration may wish."

SECURITY COUNCIL AWAITS IRAQI REPLY TO DEMAND FOR COOPERATION

SAUDI ARABIA DENIES U.S. TROOPS TO DEPLOY WITHIN 48 HOURS

DECISION TARGETS BANNED WEAPONSNearly Stepped-Up Search May Begin This Weekend

The Bush Administration's decision to prepare for possible military action in Iraq is aimed at ensuring that the U.N. can begin a new, more aggressive phase of its effort to unearth banned Iraqi weapons of mass destruction, U.S. and diplomatic officials said Wednesday.

The newly stepped-up search is expected to begin as early as this weekend officials said.

IRAQI FLEXIBILITY SIGNALLEDHints Seen Baghdad May Comply With U.N. Measure

U.N. -- Iraq's ambassador to the U.N. Wednesday described U.S. plans to send Air Force units to Iraq to enforce the terms of a U.N. cease-fire resolution as a "pseudo-crisis," and Western diplomats indicated that Iraq may be backing down from its refusal to comply....

Abdul Amir Anbari, Iraq's ambassador here did not say whether his country is prepared to comply "unconditionally" with the resolution as called for by the U.S. and other members of the Security Council.

"Sometimes there are signals of flexibility which I very much welcome," Secretary General Perez de Cuellar said earlier Wednesday when asked about negotiations with Anbari.

IRAQ DENOUNCES U.S. THREAT TO MILITARILY ENFORCE U.N. WEAPONS

NICOSIA -- Iraq accused the U.S. Thursday of using the issue of U.N. helicopter flights by weapons inspectors to justify renewed military attacks, but it stopped short of refusing to comply with U.N. truce terms.

"This controversy is a fabrication because Iraq had previously accepted the use by the U.N. inspection team of helicopters, if this did not threaten Iraq's and the team's security," the government run Al-Jumhuriya newspaper said. (AP)

Iraq Says U.S. Banging Drums Of Aggression

BAGHDAD -- Iraq Thursday accused the U.S. of banging the drums of aggression and said new threats of force endangered regional security....

The government newspaper Al-Jumhuriya said the U.S. had blown out of proportion the question of helicopters used by U.N. weapons inspection teams to justify maintaining international sanctions against Iraq....

It accused the Bush Administration of seeking "a pretext to keep unjust sanctions on the country, adding: "It is a threat to Iraq's national security and sovereignty and the interest of its people, and it is a dangerous path that threatens all regional security and stability." SYRIA WARNS U.S. ON ISRAELI LOAN

Approval Could Jeopardize Mideast Peace Talks, Baker Is Told

DAMASCUS -- Syria warned Wednesday night that if the U.S. grants an Israeli request for $10 billion in housing loan guarantees, it will cloud the prospects for a Middle East peace conference that Syria and other Arab states have promised to attend....

"You can conclude that if the U.S. has granted the loan, then that will be a major obstacle to peace, certainly," foreign minister Charaa said in a news conference here....

U.S. LETTER SUPPORTS RETURN OF LAND TO SYRIA

DAMASCUS -- The U.S., cranking up the pressure for Middle East peace talks, strongly backs Syria's demand for return of the Golan Heights.

Secretary Baker met here Wednesday with President Assad and gave him a U.S. letter supporting U.N. resolutions for the return of all Israeli-occupied lands. (Johanna Neuman, USA Today, 1A)

ISRAEL DEFENDS SETTLEMENTS POLICY

JERUSALEM -- Israel defended its settlement of occupied Arab lands following an unprecedented U.S. threat to deny aid over the Israeli policy it says is blocking Middle East peace.

Israeli officials expressed shock and regret after a U.S. official travelling in the Middle East with Secretary Baker linked Israel's request of $10 billion in loan guarantees to its settlement of Jewish immigrants.

Asked about the official's threat that President Bush would take the issue to the U.S. people, Avi Panzer, spokesman for Prime Minister Shamir, told Reuters:

"We hope it won't come to that. We are not interested in any showdowns. It is not our policy. We simply need the money for humanitarian reasons and it would be very wrong to make it conditional on anything." (Howard Goller, Reuter)

BAKER DENIES PRESSING ISRAEL

DAMASCUS -- Secretary Baker said early Wednesday the U.S. has not demanded a freeze on Jewish settlements in the occupied territories in return for helping Israel absorb Soviet Jews.

But in the next breath, Baker said the Bush Administration will at least want assurances that U.S. aid will not be used to build new dwellings on the West Bank and Gaza Strip....

"I have not discussed either publicly or privately a settlement freeze in connection with the question of absorption aid to Israel," Baker said.

The President wants the four month delay, he said, "because we want to avoid the question of linkage, not promote it."

But Baker added that "the Administration believes that when Congress debates the issue of absorption aid to Israel...we have a right to know and a right to ask how that aid and how those guarantees will be used." (Warren Strobel, Washington Times, A8)

U.S. Seeks To Disavow Reports of Linkage

The Bush Administration, fearing its efforts to settle an explosive dispute over $10 billion in loan guarantees for Israel could be jeopardized, launched a major damage control effort Wednesday to persuade congressional leaders it is not linking eventual support for the guarantees to a pledge by Israel to freeze settlements in the occupied territories....

The uproar, which the State Department blamed on "erroneous reporting" but which some congressional sources called "a screw-up by Baker," comes at a sensitive period in the debate over the guarantees....

Sen. Leahy said he was contacted by a "very high-level official" who said Baker's position was simply that some conditions would be applied to the guarantees.

"As I recall it, (the conversation), it was that he (Baker) was not saying the peace conference or the settlements were a precondition for the guarantees but that they (the Israelis) won't get the guarantees with no strings attached," Leahy said.

HILL LEANS TOWARD DELAY, ON ISRAEL'S LOAN REQUEST

Congress appears to be moving toward a compromise with the Bush Administration to delay action on Israel's request for $10 billion in loan guarantees....

Interviews with high-ranking congressional aides and a senator involved in the discussions indicate lawmakers are unwilling to reject Bush's request of a delay....

Sen. Lugar said many senators are willing to let Bush decide how to proceed after 120 days. He added that a sizeable number a lobbying for a promise that the guarantees will be approved.

BUSH PUTS ISRAELI LOBBY ON THE DEFENSIVE

By refusing to budge in his blunt confrontation with Israel, President Bush has put the formidable pro-Israeli lobby and its congressional supporters on the defensive for one of the few times in more than a decade.

Pro-Israeli forces are not confident they have enough support in Congress to overcome Bush's opposition to $10 billion in loan guarantees....

An ABC News poll taken last weekend supports the assessment. An overwhelming majority, 86%, backed Bush's position that consideration of the loan guarantees should be delayed for 120 days so as not to interfere with the peace conference.

Fifth-eight percent said Israel should not be given the loan guarantees at all....

"This won't hurt him politically," predicted GOP strategist Charles Black. "Any time he takes a tough stand and backs it up, it reinforces the image that he is the President of the world and makes it hard for any Democrat to climb up to his stature."

CONFLICTING SIGNALS AFTER NEW HOSTAGE RELEASE REPORTED IMMINENT

BEIRUT -- Syria's foreign minister says he is optimistic a Western hostage would be released soon, but British officials say they have no information on an Iranian report that Briton Jack Mann may be freed.

Israel and some Shiite leaders also appeared at odds Wednesday over the process of a broad swap of Arab prisoners and Israelis that would involve the 11 Westerners missing in Lebanon, including five Americans.

U.S. PROMISES SOVIETS EMERGENCY AIDBrady, Greenspan Tell Premier Of Food Aid, Easier Loan Terms

MOSCOW -- U.S. officials told Prime Minister Ivan Silayev Wednesday that Washington was willing to help with direct food deliveries and possibly easier terms for loan guarantees for the purchase of American agricultural products....

Soviet officials told the visiting American delegation that any donated food could be distributed by a group such as the Red Cross in order to allay U.S. concerns that the food is distributed fairly....

Secretary Brady and Fed chairman Greenspan said they received positive signals from Soviet officials about the prospects for an economic and political union agreement....

Silayev said Wednesday that the U.S. had agreed to advance its third chunk of agricultural loan guarantees to September from Oct. 1. Brady, however, said that no agreement had been reached, but that the Bush Administration would consider such a move.

U.S. WON'T ABANDON GUANTANAMO

With the Pentagon budget shrinking, the communist threat receding and Soviet troops set to vacate Cuba, Guantanamo Bay would seem a likely candidate for abandonment....

But the Pentagon has no intention of letting it go, despite its $42 million annual operating cost.

"I do not have any plans to change its status. The only place I have seen any discussion of that is [Soviet foreign minister] Pankin's announcement," Secretary Cheney told Jane's Defense Weekly in an interview published Wednesday.... "Guantanamo has a regional mission that goes beyond countering the Soviet presence in Cuba," said Commander Gregg Hartung, a Pentagon spokesman. "Guantanamo provides logistical support for U.S. Navy vessels operating in the region."

AFGHAN ARMS ACCORD TRIGGERS NEW FIGHTING

PAGHMAN -- The U.S.-Soviet agreement to stop arms shipments to Afghanistan's combatants at the end of the year has triggered escalated fighting around Kabul, as commanders on both sides of the civil war seek to demonstrate their martial resolve in the aftermath of the superpowers' peace initiative.

Political leaders on both sides of the war have welcomed the pledged cessation of arms supplies, but neither side has made any move toward implementing a proposed cease-fire.

IRAQ/U.S. MILITARY

ABC's Peter Jennings: We begin tonight with the Bush Administration and Saddam Hussein. Nowhere near another military confrontation, but Mr. Bush says he's getting plenty fed up, in his words. At issue is the Iraqi refusal to let UN inspectors fly their own helicopters without restrictions over Iraqi territory to search for Iraqi weapons of mass destruction. And the larger point is a belief in Washington that ever since the war in the gulf ended, Saddam Hussein has been violating the terms of the UN cease-fire agreement. Today, the Administration said some U.S. aircraft units may be sent to Saudi Arabia to escort those UN inspectors if it ever should become necessary.

ABC's Brit Hume: Out in the Grand Canyon to promote his environmental policies, the President spent much of his day giving assurances that U.S. preparations to protect UN helicopter flights over Iraq do not mean a renewal of the Gulf War or even that Saddam Hussein is being threatened with that.

(TV coverage: President Bush at Grand Canyon.)

(President Bush: "There's no, you know, threats. It's just determination. That's all it is -- firm determination that he will comply to the letter of the UN resolutions.")

Gen. Scowcroft said all that's happened is some planning, in case there's a need to protect UN choppers making weapons checks over Iraq.

(Gen. Scowcroft: "Incident to our demands that Saddam Hussein permit UN helicopters to fly on their inspection trips, and there's been no execute order. And if he will comply with the UN resolutions, there won't need to be an execute order.")

But such explanations did little to quell the excitement back in Washington, especially in Congress, over news stories suggesting renewed bombing of Iraq might soon begin.

(Sen. D'Amato: "If you force us to commit troops to Iraq again, this time things will be different. This time, they'll be sent to bring you back dead or alive.")

Even some senators who voted against the Gulf War were all for these military steps, which they thought had already begun.

(Sen. Kennedy: "I'm very hopeful that the actions which have been taken now in the movement of an airwing to Saudi Arabia will be a sufficient indication of the resolution of the United States that we're not going to tolerate any more of the lies of Saddam Hussein.")

In fact, no airwing has yet been sent. And one congressman with authority in military matters suggested it wouldn't actually be needed.

(Rep. Aspin: "I think that basically what we're doing is sending a political message. And the reason I think it's political is that we already have the assets in-country or in the area to do whatever we need to do militarily.")

Hume continues:

Administration officials agree the initial forces won't be needed, but for a different reason. They don't think Saddam will continue to block the helicopter missions once it's clear the U.S. and its allies will use force to protect them. (ABC-Lead)

Jennings reports Iraqi officials say they're in complete compliance with the UN resolutions. They say all this is about the U.S. trying to spy on Iraq. At the UN, diplomats reflect the White House view. They expect the Iraqis will back down, perhaps as early as tomorrow, and agree to let the UN inspectors' helicopters fly where they want. If they don't, the Pentagon is at least making contingency plans.

ABC's Dennis Trout reports airmen from the 82nd Airborne Division say they've been put on alert. Pentagon officials say if they need to escort UN helicopters and it doesn't work, they're prepared to go even further, involving U.S. troops in what they call inspection by force. But they hope today's signals will be enough to convince Saddam Hussein to cooperate. (ABC-2)

NBC's Tom Brokaw: President Bush said today he is plenty fed up with Saddam Hussein, and he has now reactivated the military option if the Iraqi leader does not meet all the requirements of the cease-fire on nuclear weapons.

NBC's Fred Frances reports the CIA informed the President UN inspections would not assure that all of Iraq's arsenal would be found. One source said the intelligence reports look like traffic reports, because Saddam is moving equipment by trucks so often.

(Lt. Gen. Thomas Kelly, retired: "Saddam Hussein is not trustworthy. He will not comply unless he feels pressure to comply. It's my opinion that the pressure will be sufficient, but it's got to be there.")

On White House orders, the Pentagon crafted a plan to put that pressure on -- Operation Determined Resolve. (NBC-Lead)

NBC's John Cochran: The President and his men were quick to say they are not saber-rattling, that this is not the start of Desert Storm II. Unless, of course, Saddam Hussein wants a replay.

(TV coverage: President Bush at Grand Canyon.)

The President didn't even want to talk about it, preferring instead to concentrate on the glories of the Grand Canyon. Bush wanted to downplay his decision, hoping to avoid alarming either the public or allies overseas. But finally, Bush and his aides said UN resolutions require Saddam to permit UN helicopters to patrol safely on inspection missions.

(Scowcroft: "Now, if the UN helicopters fly there in a non-permissive environment, then they need some kind of protection, and that's what it is.")

(President Bush: "I don't believe it'll come to that. I don't think you do and I don't think the Defense Department does. So this is what we would call prudent planning. He's not going to question our resolve on this. He may be testing and probing here and there, but he knows better than to take on the United States of America in a shootout.")

Arizona senators here with Bush gave him full backing to deal with Saddam.

Cochran continues:

(Sen. DeConcini: "I think it's an opportunity to finish the job if we have to.")

(Sen. McCain: "It shows again how totally untrustworthy this guy is. And unfortunately, I don't think we're going to see a real settlement of that country until he's out of there.")

(DeConcini: "This Democrat, at least, would support the President taking whatever force is necessary.")

And DeConcini wasn't the only Democrat supporting Bush.

(Kennedy: "I think this is a very serious action that Saddam Hussein has taken and I think the response has been appropriate.")

(Sen. Dole: "If that doesn't work, it may be necessary to have the next message delivered by the United States armed forces.")

At the UN, Iraq's beleaguered ambassador did his best for Saddam, calling the charges against him a tempest in a teapot.

(Amb. Al-Anbari: "This is not the first time that Iraq was subjected to -- terrorize the Iraqi people. But I believe there's no justification whatsoever for it.")

On Monday, President Bush will be at the UN, arguing that UN resolutions should be upheld, that the U.S. should not let Saddam Hussein get away with violating those resolutions.

Brokaw discusses the issue with Cochran:

Brokaw: Do they think this situation can ever be resolved in that part of the world as long as Saddam Hussein is alive?

Cochran: Probably not. Of course, they hope the Iraqi military will do President Bush's job for him. The President is well aware that a lot of people in this country want George Bush to take out Saddam Hussein. But when George Bush goes to the UN on Monday, he'll also say that this should be a world of laws, and Bush feels he can go beyond those UN resolutions. (NBC-2)

CBS's Dan Rather: President Bush is threatening Saddam Hussein again. Mr. Bush said today that he will send American warplanes back to the gulf if necessary to force Iraq to comply with terms of the UN cease-fire. Part of the background is the story that CBS News Pentagon correspondent David Martin broke on this broadcast last night, that U.S. Air Force planes had been fired on over the weekend from inside Iraq.

CBS's David Martin reports on the latest developments.

(President Bush: "He's not going to question our resolve on this. He knows better than to take on the United States of America in a shootout. So there's no point threatening. We'll just do a couple of things and then make certain demands, and we think they'll be complied with.")

The Pentagon also plans to send Patriot missiles to protect Saudi air bases.

(Secretary Cheney: "It's a prudent course for those of us in the Defense Department to be involved in planning for contingencies, and that's exactly what we're doing.")

Iraq's UN ambassador sounded like he is at least willing to talk.

(Amb. Al-Anbari: "If anyone would like to reach really a constructive agreement, it is possible.")

President Bush doubts any action will ensue.

(President Bush: "I don't think it'll come to that. I think the man will see that we are very serious about this and he will do what he should have done in the first place.")

Martin continues:

The President has set no deadline for Iraq to comply. But if Saddam continues to stonewall, Pentagon officials say it would take less than a week to begin the escort operation once the President gives the order. (CBS-Lead)

Rather discusses the issue with retired Gen. Michael Dugan:

Dugan: I think that the U.S. has maintained since last August great credibility by our policy and by our military steps in this region of the world. And I think that President Bush means to maintain that same degree of credibility today. I think, as he said, he's fed up and he means to shut this off. Will it lead to outright hostilities? Perhaps not, but we need to have the clout and we need to have the will to employ that clout, if necessary, to maintain that credibility. (CBS-2)

Rather discusses the issue with CBS's Bob Simon and Allen Pizzey:

Simon: When the Americans beat the war drums against Iraq, it is music to Israeli ears. The Israelis have been leaking intelligence reports about how much of Saddam's arsenal remains. They like reminding anyone who might have forgotten that they, the Israelis, are in the firing line if and when Saddam opens fire again. But most important, the Israelis would like to see more American anger directed toward Iraq right now, and less toward Israel. The loan-guarantee crisis was not resolved by the Baker visit. There are signs, in fact, that it could be escalating. Gunfire in the gulf would provide a diversion from this, if only temporarily.

Pizzey: [The development] doesn't hurt [chances for a peace conference] very much, but it doesn't help. The Arab leaders don't particularly want to see American troops in action again, because that might smack of vindictiveness against Saddam, and their own people wouldn't like that.... They, the Arab leaders, would like to see Saddam humiliated. They don't want the peace process interfered with, but none of them are going to go on the record and say, "Let's go and get Saddam," even if they want the U.S. to do it. (CBS-3)

PRESIDENT'S TRIP

Jennings reports President Bush today unveiled plans for a program to reduce infant mortality. It's called Healthy Start and intends to target money at 15 areas, most of them inner cities. (ABC-10)

Jennings: When he was elected, Mr. Bush promised he would be the environmental President, and today he went to the Grand Canyon. It was a trip that critics charged was nothing more than grandstanding.

ABC's Ann Compton: This morning, there was only a slight haze drifting through the Grand Canyon, so the south rim was a picture-perfect spot for President Bush to claim an environmental victory. (TV coverage: President Bush at Grand Canyon.)

But on many days, smog from a nearby power plant makes it impossible to see across to the canyon walls just two miles away. The President wanted to showcase a deal his Administration negotiated with environmentalists to cut dangerous emissions from the plant by 90 percent.

Compton continues:

(President Bush: "These agreements illustrate a crucial element of our Administration's vision for America's future. And before I go further, I just have to ask some of the critics out there: How's this for the vision thing?")

What President Bush failed to mention is that the largest share of the plant is owned by the U.S. government. And the deal came only after years of legal suits by the environmentalists. And with every picture here a potential campaign commercial, his critics were quick to cry foul.

(Sen. Gore: "Anyone who sees George Bush as the environmental President at the Grand Canyon ought to look closely for Elvis, alive and well, rafting by on the Colorado River.")

The President's purpose today was to stake out his political strategy. He promised to negotiate future arguments and to avoid what he called the kind of Hatfields and McCoy's feuds with environmentalists. (ABC-11)

Brokaw: President Bush was travelling today as candidate Bush, eager to appear as interested in domestic issues as he is in foreign policy. Today, the issue was the environment, and the President was photographed in front of a suitably spectacular background -- the Grand Canyon. The occasion was an agreement to reduce emissions at a nearby power plant, one partly owned by the federal government. The President likes to call himself an environmentalist, but is he?

NBC's Jim Miklaszewski: During the 1988 campaign, candidate Bush talked a good game on the environment.

(President Bush, 1988: "I'm an environmentalist.")

And he appeared to get off to a fast start. He blocked the construction of a Colorado dam project, which would have spoiled the pristine countryside. Bush, through the Clean Air Bill, moved to reduce acid rain, and got rave reviews for appointing a committed environmentalist, William Reilly, to head the EPA. Despite all that, some environmentalists hardly give the President a passing grade.

(David Gardiner, Sierra Club: "On a whole range of issues, it appears as if the initial hope that we had, that President Bush would be a good environmental President, has in fact fallen short.")

His critics claim that in attempting to reach some kind of balance with the economy, he's more concerned about saving jobs than saving the environment. Those critics charge Bush's energy policy favors energy development over energy conservation and would open Alaska's wildlife refuge to oil and gas exploration.

(John Maddy, League of Conservation Voters: "This is a President who thinks that we need to pump more oil and gas in this country, mine more coal, build more nuclear-power plants, just consume more energy.")

But Bush today brushed off his critics.

(President Bush: "You've heard about the progress. We got the clean air, we got business to clean air, we're signing an agreement today, progress is being made.")

And in the delicate balance between man and nature, the environment and jobs, the White House is convinced that jobs will win out with the bulk of the voters.

Miklaszewski continues:

The President's visit here had all the trappings of a campaign stop, and this backdrop, a campaign manager's dream. But his critics claim the President has to go a lot further than the Grand Canyon to bridge the gap between his promises and his actions, and live up to his claim as environmental President. (NBC-4)

Rather: Mr. Bush made a reelection campaign stop in Arizona today, framed around a photo opportunity.

CBS's Susan Spencer: The White House machine loves a good backdrop, and to restate his commitment to the environment, the President picked a lulu -- posed at the rim of the often smoggy Grand Canyon to hail a landmark agreement that will cut the annual pollution here by 90 percent.

(TV coverage: President Bush at Grand Canyon.)

(President Bush: "Our Administration has crafted a new, common-sense approach to environmental issues, one that honors our love of the environment and our commitment to growth.")

The Grand Canyon pact typifies the Administration's favorite approach -- negotiation, compromise, consensus, ending with a package environmentalists, and especially business, can buy. But even critics admit, it certainly beats the last go-round.

(Fred Krupp, Environmental Defense Fund: "In the Reagan Administration, business had a virtual veto power over what the Administration did.")

The White House encourages comparisons with Reagan and revels in photo-ops of this President flopping around the national parks.

(TV coverage: President Bush visiting national park.)

Environmental leaders are not very impressed.

(Gardiner: "Disturbingly, it seems as if he's moving further and further away from being the environmental President the longer he stays in office.")

(Maddy: "We measured his decisions on air and water and public lands and across the board on environmental protection, and we gave him a grade of D.")

On specifics, the President does get some high marks. Environmentalists praise his push for the Clean Air Act, for agreements on acid rain, and less-polluting gasoline. They laud the appointment of William Reilly to head the EPA, and the ban on the import of ivory. But the Ds and Fs go to policies to redefine wetlands, to open more to development, to allow drilling in the Arctic wilderness, to White House resistance to tighter fuel-economy standards, and to its support of more nuclear energy.

(Maddy: "What's happening is Bill Reilly is giving sound advice of making good, strong environmental-protection initiatives a priority for the Environmental Protection Agency, and he's getting overruled in the White House.")

(Director Reilly: "Have you ever encountered an Administration that environmentalists were happy about? I come from the environmental community. I'm very familiar with the fact that if the hurdle is here and the Administration gets over it, the next hurdle will be higher.")

Environmental groups say Mr. Bush asked for such scrutiny by his stated goal of becoming the environmental President, a title they say he doesn't deserve so far, despite all the pretty pictures.

OZONE LAYER

ABC's Ned Potter reports the latest report from the EPA had stunning news. The EPA, which rarely sounds alarmist, says the ozone problem is twice as bad as anyone expected.

(Director Reilly: "Ozone depletion is in the top category of threats to health in the environment. For the United States and the rest of the world, we should act as if the ozone-depletion situation is an emergency. We should pull out all stops.")

(Michael Oppenheimer, Environmental Defense Fund: "It isn't just a question of less ozone over Antarctica. It's less ozone over the United States and Western Europe, all of the developing countries, all the developed countries.")

The pressure is on industry to find a solution. Environmentalists say more research also is needed. (ABC-12)

ISRAEL/SECRETARY BAKER

Jennings reports Secretary Baker is in Damascus tonight. For almost six hours, he talked to President Assad about the Middle East peace conference. Neither side had anything to say when their talks were over. (NBC-10, ABC-4)

ABC's Dean Reynolds reports sources in Jerusalem say Prime Minister Shamir's government would collapse if he were to freeze settlements. So, they say, Shamir would be more than ever a prisoner of the settlement movement. Tonight, Defense Minister Arens rejected a halt on settlements and said Jews should have the right to live wherever they want. For the moment, Shamir's aides are telling him his countrymen are likely to support him in this battle because, as one official put it, Israelis don't like being pushed around. (ABC-4)

SOVIET UNION/YELTSIN/SALAYEV

Jennings reports President Yeltsin cancelled meetings and went home after suffering chest pains. His staff says he's not seriously ill, just very tired. His aides say he plans to be back at work for at least part of the day tomorrow. (CBS-8, NBC-8, ABC-5)

Jennings reports Russian Prime Minister Salayev has been appointed prime minister of the Soviet Union. He will be in charge of trying to repair the economy. He met in Moscow today with Secretary Brady and Chairman Greenspan. (ABC-6)

YUGOSLAVIA

Brokaw reports shelling in Zagreb marked the latest cease-fire agreement in Yugoslavia. While ground forces rested during the day, air raids continued over several cities. (NBC-9)

RECESSION

Jennings reports that according to the Federal Reserve Board's latest survey of business conditions, the recovery remains weak and uneven. Consumer spending has not picked up, and the Fed says there are troubling signs that the rebound in the housing industry is losing steam. (CBS-5, NBC-5, ABC-8)
