THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

October 4, 1991

MR. PRESIDENT:

The attached two folders are related to the same subject -- the delegation to the funeral of Patriarch Dimitrios.

Please review the NSC document first. It is requesting your approval to have a "Presidential" delegation and also your signature on a condolence letter.

If you approve NSC's request for a "Presidential" delegation, Connie Horner is submitting a memo also for your approval of the individuals suggested to go on this delegation.

This delegation would have to depart Washington on Sunday evening.

Thank you.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRESIDENT

FROM:

BRENT SCOWCROFT BS

SIGNED

SUBJECT:

Presidential Delegation to the Funeral of Patriarch Dimitrios I

DECLASSIFIED
PER NSC WAIVER 1500 2021-02
By SS NARA, Date 12/4/24

Purpose

To obtain your approval to dispatch a Presidential delegation to attend the funeral of Greek Orthodox Patriarch Dimitrios I to be held in Istanbul on Tuesday, October 8.

Background

Patriarch Dimitrios I was the spiritual leader of over 250 million Eastern Orthodox Christians. Dimitrios died October 2 in the American Bristol hospital in Istanbul following successive heart attacks. The Patriarch's position in the Eastern rite is similar to that of the Pope's in the Roman rite, although he does not have a corresponding authority over the Eastern Orthodox churches, which are essentially self-governing. Groups representing the Greek Orthodox churches in the United States have begun to form to attend the funeral. Archbishop Iakovos of North America -- thought by some to be a possible successor to Dimitrios -- will be heading a delegation from New York.

An official delegation to the Patriarch's funeral carrying your personal condolences (Tab B) would be an appropriate gesture and is not likely to antagonize the Turks. Moreover, such a demonstration of sympathy would be deeply appreciated by the millions of American faithful. A list of suggested delegation members is attached at Tab A.

RECOMMENDATION

That you approve the dispatch of a Presidential delegation to the Patriarch's funeral BS

Approve 5

Disapprove 0

That you sign the letter to Dr. Archondonis at Tab B.

WASHINGTON

October 5, 1991

Dear Dr. Archondonis:

It is with profound sadness that Mrs. Bush and I learned of the death Wednesday of Patriarch Dimitrios, spiritual leader of hundreds of millions of Orthodox Christian faithful around the world and of millions of Americans. I remember him, from my meeting with him in Washington in July 1990, as a very kind and gentle man devoted to the spiritual care of his flock, and a powerful advocate of Christian unity. Mrs. Bush and I extend our condolences to you and to all of the Patriarch's friends and followers. You may be sure that he is in our prayers.

Sincerely,

Dimitrios

Attached is an alternative proposed delegation to the Patriarch's funeral.

The delegation you approved Friday, October 4, disintegrated Sunday, October 6,

(b)(6)

Unfortunately, that left only two delegates  (b)(6)  not enough to warrant the use of a military plane. It was by then too late for the delegation to fly commercially and arrive on time for the funeral.

Having coordinated with State and NSC, we now propose you approve a new delegation, comprised of people already in Istanbul for the event who, we believe, will represent you well.

The President

Dear Mr. President:

I am writing to alert you to what I consider to be a serious problem with proposed rules developed by the Office of Government Ethics. I understand that you will hear similar concerns from several other members of your Cabinet. We believe that these rules may have an adverse impact on our ability to live up to the high standards of public service you rightly have set for us. Although lawyers from my office have been working with the Office of Government Ethics and the Office of the White House Counsel on this matter, I wanted to convey my concerns to you personally.

One proposed rule, the proposed section 2635.808(c)(2), would place severe new restrictions on Cabinet members' participation in charitable activities. Specifically, the proposed section would prohibit a Cabinet member from participating in charitable fundraising activities unless he or she has been personally and actively involved in the organization's fundraising activities on personal time or had engaged in fundraising activities for the organization prior to his or her appointment. As I read this provision, for example, Honey and I could no longer participate in fundraising activities for the Race for the Cure, an event for which Vice President and Mrs. Quayle have done so much the past three years. The proposed rule seems to me -- and to every other Cabinet member to whom I've spoken -- to be completely inconsistent with the ideal of public service you and Mrs. Bush have done so much to encourage.

I am sure that the Office of Government Ethics' efforts are well-intentioned, and I certainly support the goal of ensuring that every member of your Administration adheres to the highest standards of ethical conduct. But the proposed rule seems to me to run the risk of discouraging senior officials' participation in charities at the same time your marvelous Points of Light initiative is encouraging such participation. I am sorry to trouble you with this matter. I wanted you to know, however, that I am more than willing to work with your staff and other Cabinet agencies to ensure that the final product of this process meets the twin objectives of maintaining the highest ethical standards in your Administration and increasing public officials' dedication to private sector charitable activities.

The President
The White House

Dear Mr. President:

I write to bring to your attention proposed rules by the Office of Government Ethics that would prohibit senior members of your Administration from lending their support to charitable undertakings and would unduly hinder the ability of Government scientists to pursue teaching, writing, and professional organizational activities in their chosen fields.

The proposed rules would severely restrict the ability of senior officials to participate, either personally or officially, in most fund raising activities. As you know from your own experience, fund raising is the life blood of all charitable work. The proposed rules, in effect, would prevent senior members of your Administration from setting the example called for by your Thousand Points of Light initiative and the spirit of voluntarism that you have worked so hard to foster.

Likewise the proposed rules would discriminate against Government-employed scientists by discouraging their active involvement with professional associations and writing and teaching activities that have proven to be critical elements of the careers of their peers not employed by the Federal Government. I remember vividly from my service as Chair of the President's Commission on the Human Immunodeficiency Virus Epidemic the need to attract and foster excellence in the science conducted by the Government. Imposing these restrictions on government scientists, such as those of the National Institutes of Health, can only exacerbate the acute problem the Government already faces in attracting and retaining the scientific skills needed to match the profound challenges before us.

I bring these concerns to your attention because regulations of the sort now being proposed by the Office of Government Ethics too easily can, even when well-intentioned, create mechanical prohibitions that both fail to establish meaningful and understandable standards of public morality and place at risk some of the most important virtues to which public service should be directed.

Respectfully,

James D. Watkins

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRESIDENT

FROM: C. BOYDEN GRAY cmg
SUBJECT: Charitable activities

Phil Brady shared with me a copy of Secretary Skinner's October 1 letter to you, in which he expressed concern over a provision in the proposed set of ethics standards for the Executive Branch that would prohibit a senior Federal official from engaging in fundraising activities on behalf of a charitable organization unless he was previously involved with the organization or is personally and actively involved in the affairs of the organization in a manner that involves the use of his personal time. I understand from my staff that the intent of this proposed rule was simply to prohibit a senior official from allowing the use of his name in connection with the fundraising activity, not to prohibit the official's participation in the event. As you may know, the White House and most Federal agencies, as a matter of general policy, have historically discouraged their high-ranking officials from acting as honorary chairmen for charitable fundraising efforts.

I believe the Office of Government Ethics is receptive to changing the proposed provision to accommodate the concerns that Secretary Skinner and Gregg Petersmeyer, among others, have expressed to you, as well as to me and my staff. In fact, Steve Potts is meeting tomorrow afternoon with Gregg Petersmeyer and Greg Walden of my staff in an effort to agree upon an appropriate revision to allow Cabinet members and other senior Federal officials to participate in charitable fundraising activities in their personal capacity -- and in some circumstances to allow the use of their name -- without compromising any principle of ethical public service recited in Executive Order 12674.

I'll let you know the results of our discussions before the provision is put in final form.

PERSONAL AND CONFIDENTIAL

Dear Jim:

I received a good letter from Chase Untermeyer in August, which reminded all ambassadors of the current practice of three year terms of office as their times draw nigh. In my own case, the relevant date is approximately July 1, 1992, since Taitsie and I arrived in France the very end of June 1989.

It would probably be most practical and tidier to depart here in mid-November of the re-election year, or even in early January. Frankly, I think a date soon after the election is preferable.

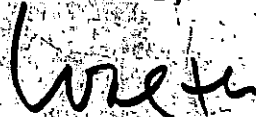

Embassy Paris is a wonderful assignment with challenges and satisfactions. I am also consistently grateful for the guidance and support you and your Department give to us. As I approach the short side of my term here I want you to know how much I appreciate personally working with you -- any place, any time, now or in the future.

I will be in Washington in December, and shall hope to discuss the above with Larry and with Connie Horner. Your views and your wishes are, of course, fundamental determinants for me.

Much love to Susan. Taitsie and I always harbor the hope of seeing you both.

Warmest wishes and many thanks.

Yours ever,

Walter J.P. Curley

Dear Mr. President:

I am writing to you regarding economic aid to the Soviet Union.

While there have been numerous proposals for financial assistance to the Soviet Union, I do not believe these serve the interests either of the United States or those Soviet people most in need. Without a functioning market economy, grants or credits are not likely to significantly improve living conditions for average Soviet citizens. In addition, Ivan Silayev, chairman of the transitional government's Economic Management Committee, has reportedly stated that new credits might have to be used to service the Soviet external debt. If that were true, U.S. credits would in effect simply be redirected to European banks.

Unquestionably, however, the U.S. has a humanitarian role to play in alleviating the Soviet economic crisis. I believe surplus U.S. military stocks of food, blankets, and medicine can be provided to the Soviets before the onset of winter. With the drawdown of U.S. forces and the dramatic reduction of the threat in Europe, large reserve stocks have become surplus to our requirements. For instance, the military has nearly 23 million MREs, 158,000 blankets, and 138,000 bottles of antibiotics on hand. Much of this inventory will become outdated in the next year and must be replaced with new production items. Aid in such a form would be a more immediate and cost-effective way of alleviating the looming Soviet crisis than cash or loans.

Thank you for your attention to this matter. I look forward to hearing your views on this important humanitarian initiative.

Sincerely,

John R. Kasich

Big Red Lie

It was the Soviets, not the Arabs, who came up with "Zionism is racism."

On Monday last, in as fine an address as any American statesman will ever give, George Bush called for the United Nations to undo one of the most sordid acts of the age of totalitarianism: the 1975 resolution declaring Zionism to be a form of racism. In effect, it was a resolution to deny the state of Israel the right to exist.

If you would take the measure of just how monstrous that event was, you need only consult the news reports of the president's address. Without exception, so far as I know, Resolution 3379 is described as an Arab initiative.

It was nothing of the sort. It was a calculated lie of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union that began in the age of Stalin and culminated in a two-part article in Pravda Feb. 18-19, 1971, an article that asserted, among other things, "The tragedy of Babi Yar will forever be a reminder not only of the monstrous barbarity of the Nazis but also of the indelible disgrace of their accomplices and followers—the Zionists."

The author was one Vladimir Viktorovich Bolshakov, then or shortly thereafter head of the paper's international department. An English-language pamphlet followed promptly.

Today is the 50th anniversary of the massacre at Babi Yar. Just possibly the time has come when we can deal with the Holocaust—can "accept" it, "absorb" it or however it is the psychologists put it. For my part I can report that I never came near to understanding it until I encountered the Zionism resolution.

I was our U.N. ambassador at the time. The motion appeared as from nowhere in October 1975, in what is known as the Third Committee, which is to say the political committee. There had been faint rumblings of it—something floating about at the World Conference of the International Women's year, held in Mexico City that summer—but no real warning.

When the resolution appeared, our representative, Leonard Garment, spoke up hard on Oct. 3. The new Israeli ambassador, Chaim Herzog, was furious and fierce. We hadn't a third of the vote behind us. I went over and hugged him and said "—em," which was as much as I knew or understood of the situation.

We waited for State Department instructions. None came. We called Herzog. He had none either. Nor was there any outcry from the Jewish organizations in New York.

The first break finally came from William Korey, then director of the international affairs department of B'nai B'rith. He told Suzanne Garment, a member of our delegation, of the Pravda article.

After a little more digging, a historical pattern emerged. It went back as far as 1952, when Rudolph Slansky, then general secretary of the Czechoslovak Communist Party, was charged with Zionist connections, and confessed. By 1975 it had become common for Soviet television to show David Ben-Gurion's face superimposed on that of Hitler. On newsreels, footage of marching Israelis would be followed by marching Nazi stormtroopers.

The origins of this escalating campaign were complex. The disappearance of ethnic and religious attachments was central to Marxist prediction, but things weren't working out that way. The Israeli victory in the Six Day War of June 1967 generated great enthusiasm among Soviet Jews. Could the Ukrainians, they must have wondered, be far behind? Strong measures were called for.

What none could predict, certainly not a hack such as Bolshakov (now, incidentally, head of the Paris bureau) was the impact the charge would have.

At President Ford's personal direction, I lobbied vigorously against the measure when it came to the floor of the General Assembly. Herzog raised a storm of his own. A Belgian motion to adjourn almost succeeded, but on the final vote, we lost 2 to 1, and silence fell.

An Orwellian coup had occurred at the United Nations. The place that had been the embodiment of liberal expectation after

I never came near to understanding the Holocaust until I encountered the Zionism resolution.

World War II had moved toward totalitarianism: the inversion of truth, the Big, Big Lie—this was now the language of the General Assembly.

Even those who should have understood backed off from the fight. Ten days after the vote, my wife was seated at a formal dinner next to the French ambassador, who allowed that the resolution would never have passed if the American statement had not been so "confrontational." In point of fact, with that in mind, I had spoken after the vote.

After it was over, silence fell, or near silence. No one wanted to talk about Zionism and racism. The totalitarian effect took hold: Don't fight; it's hopeless. It even seems to have prevailed in Israel, where, so far as I am aware, nothing much was written.

In 1979 The President's Commission on the Holocaust visited Babi Yar in Kiev. Elie Wiesel was chairman. They were taken, as he describes it, to the "huge, ugly, blasphemous" memorial the Soviets had finally put up. He could not contain his shock, his anger. There was no mention of Jews. Now, this is Elie Wiesel, a survivor of the camps, the incomparable, unflinching witness to what totalitarianism can do, and yet he had never heard of the Pravda articles, the charge that Babi Yar was a collaboration of the Gestapo and the Zionists. Nor, evidently, had anyone with him. Like the Holocaust itself, it was somehow too horrible to know.

Now, finally, that long night has lifted. Two weeks ago, Wiesel was in Kiev, where Ukrainian President Leonid Kravchuk pledged to him that the Ukraine would vote to rescind the Zionism resolution. This past Wednesday, in Washington, Kravchuk met with senators and repeated this pledge, adding that the Ukraine had been "the" Soviet sponsor of the resolution back in 1975. This is something that appears all across what was once Soviet society: the need to face up to the lies, somehow to exorcise that past.

Presidents Bush and Kravchuk will need help. The gentlest thing to say about the U.S. State Department is that it has been indifferent to the issue from the first. I have been in the Senate 15 years now. We have enacted four statutes calling for the repeal of Resolution 3379. I have never once heard from the State Department acting on its own; never once heard of an embassy told to take the matter up with, say, Mexico, as we get into trade discussions, or say, Cameroon, during aid discussions.

The Arabs need help in this regard, too. They were not above accusing Jews of racism—such talk began to appear in their documents in the 1960s—but the Zionism resolution was not their initiative. The lead sponsor was Somalia, then a wholly owned subsidiary of Moscow. The Arabs went along, of course, but none of them whooped it up the way Guyana did—to cite one example.

Let the Arabs, then, vote to rescind now, or if they can't do that, just stay away when the matter is reconsidered. We can count on the three current Soviet votes, plus three new Baltic delegations. All of Europe will be with us. China doesn't matter. As for the nonaligned: Announce we will close our embassy in each and every country that votes no. And as for the U.N.: Do this, and you just may have a part to play in the next millennium.

The writer, a Democratic senator from New York, was United States ambassador to the U.N. in 1975 and 1976.

MEMORANDUM FOR ROGER B. PORTER

FROM: ANDREW SIEG AS

SUBJECT: Susan Page's remarks at the Kennedy School

Susan Page, Newsday's White House Correspondent, spoke at the Kennedy School on Tuesday, October 1st. In her remarks, entitled "President Bush and the Demise of the White House Press Corps," she argued President Bush exerts unprecedented control over reporting from the White House.

Ms. Page observed that the Bush team influences the press in a different (and more subtle) way than past Administrations. The Reagan White House's press strategy, for example, focused on limiting access to the President and "staging" pictures for the evening news. These efforts to control the press, however, were frequently undermined by that White House's inability to stop leaks.

In contrast to the Reagan White House, according to Ms. Page, President Bush's influence on the news is based on two factors.

- President Bush is extraordinarily accessible. In three years, George Bush has held three times the number of press conferences Ronald Reagan held in eight years. Ms. Page noted, "If you have a question, and are willing to wait two weeks, you will have an opportunity to ask the President about it yourself."
- President Bush cuts off access to Senior White House Officials. This White House staff rarely leaks, lacks the infighting of previous staffs, and is relatively junior. These factors, combined with the fact the President has made it clear he will not tolerate leaks, have made White House staff members notoriously poor sources. Ms. Page said the tight secrecy surrounding the President's recent nuclear weapons proposal again demonstrated the leak-proof nature of his White House.

By dealing with the press in this way, Ms. Page claimed, President Bush has exerted enormous influence over the content of the news. The President and his staff, in effect, present a "solid front" to reporters. Ms. Page noted that today a whole range of stories concerning the process and deliberations behind White House decision making can no longer be written. Reporters are generally unable to exploit differences between staff members to elicit material for "insider" articles.

Another effect of this "solid front" is that it forces the press to seek outside sources. With opposing viewpoints seldom emerging from the White House, Ms. Page noted that reporters must contact outside experts in order to hear conflicting views.

Finally, Ms. Page stated that Marlin Fitzwater's popularity with the White House press corps further hindered the quality of reporting. Because the press corps generally likes Mr. Fitzwater, they are unwilling to pressure him for the information they are not receiving from other staff members.

The President's Board of Advisors on Historically Black Colleges and Universities disagrees with the Justice Department's position. The Board contends that the Justice Department argument, should it prevail, would have a devastating effect on historically black colleges.

The package is currently under review at OMB.

The report discusses possible relationships between pesticide use and nitrate detections in drinking water wells. American Voters and Mideast Peace

GORDON S. BLACK CORPORATION FOR THE ARAB AMERICAN INSTITUTE

Introduction

Nearly four in five (79.4 percent) of American voters do not support Israel's request for $10 billion in U.S. loan guarantees, or believe that Congress should only provide the guarantees with conditions. The specific condition endorsed by 36.4 percent was that "the U.S. should first require Israel to stop building Jewish settlements in the occupied territories as a condition for providing these loan guarantees". This call for a settlement freeze is a long-standing policy of the Administration.

Although more Americans (36.4 percent to 26.5 percent) believe the Arab states rather than Israel are the biggest obstacle to Middle East peace, their responses to other questions indicates that more Americans agree with the Bush Administration and the international consensus than they do with Israel when it comes to specific issues.

There is strong bi-partisan support for the Administration's "land for peace" formula as a basis for resolving the Arab Israeli conflict. 50.2 percent of those polled believe that Israel should "give up the territory it occupies in the West Bank and Gaza Strip in exchange for peace with the Arabs". 26.7 percent were opposed, and 19.2 percent were undecided. It appears that the investment made by President Bush and Secretary of State Baker in bringing about a Middle East peace conference receives strong support from American voters. It further appears that voters want to see the peace process continue and would not support its disruption by partisan politicking in 1992.

In spite of negative assessments of some Palestinian reactions during the Gulf war, most American voters continue to show strong support for an independent Palestinian state in the occupied territories. 52.9 percent favor the "creation of an independent Palestinian state in the Israeli-occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip that would co-exist with a secure Israel," while 20.8 percent are opposed. This position is more expansive than the Administration's formulation of "legitimate Palestinian political rights", but once again clearly indicates that the American public does not agree with Israeli positions.

Further, the Gordon Black poll reaffirms the results of a poll conducted by Martilla and Kiley for B'nai B'rith February 4-5, during the height of the Gulf war. The B'nai B'rith poll found 58 percent favored the establishment of a Palestinian "homeland" in the West Bank, with 20 percent opposed. It is to be noted that questions on Palestinian rights that use the word "homeland" rather than "state" consistently receive slightly higher favorable responses. It is interesting to note that the B'nai B'rith poll also asked: "Many people feel that if the West Bank were under Palestinian control, Iraq or other enemies might be able to use it as a base of operations for attacking Israel. With this in mind, which of these opinions about a Palestinian homeland is closer to yours?" Despite the prejudicial wording of the question, a plurality of 44 percent still believed the Palestinians "should have" a homeland, while the negative rating ("should not have") did increase to 41 percent. The coexistence of a Palestinian state with a secure Israel appears as a desirable outcome to the Arab-Israeli conflict.

The Gordon Black poll also shows that Americans believe that the Middle East should be a topic of debate in the 1992 Presidential election. 71.8 percent think that the "Arab-Israeli dispute and attempts for its settlement" was an important issue (18.7 percent think it is "very important", and 53.1 percent think it is "somewhat important"), while 26.6 percent think it is not an important issue. Of Americans likely to vote in 1992, 29.7 percent would be "more inclined" to vote for a candidate who supports "land for peace" while only 9.4 percent would be "less inclined". 54.6 percent said that the candidate's position on Arab-Israeli peace would make "no difference". While the majority of voters will not make Middle East peace a defining issue in 1992, three times as many voters would be more inclined to support a candidate who supports "land for peace", another important indication of strong support for the Administration's peace formula.

American Voters and Mideast Peace

It is notable that this poll shows very little difference in attitude between Democrats and Republicans. What slight variations there are within the margin of error for the poll and, since most of those polled are likely to vote in 1992, this gives a good indication of attitudes on Middle East issues by party. One can fairly conclude, given the largely similar responses, that "land for Peace", Palestinian statehood, and opposition to the $10 billion loan guarantee for Israel receive consistent and strong bi-partisan support.

Comparing this poll with previous surveys, including the B'nai B'rith poll earlier referred to, indicates that support for "land for peace" and Palestinian statehood as a desirable outcome of the Middle East peace process have remained consistent over time, despite a shift in rhetoric due to the Gulf war. The major shift in on the question of Israel's loan request. Given the opposition to the request and the support for the Administration's approach to the peace process, it appears that, by pushing a confrontation with the Administration, Israel is severely testing its support in the United States and is in danger of coming into conflict with a popular President and losing that conflict.

It remains to be seen if Arab-Israeli peace will be an issue in the 1992 Presidential campaign. It has not been in the past. The poll results indicate, however, that should Israel's supporters challenge the President, the likelihood is that voters will support land for peace. Even though foreign policy issues have rarely been major electoral concerns, the Administration has invested enough in the Middle East by its leading role during the Gulf crisis and in pushing for a Middle East peace conference that there is widespread voter support for the President's policy. Members of Congress dealing with Middle East issues—in particular Israel's loan request and the Middle East peace conference—would do well to heed these results.

1. $10 Billion Loan Guarantees

Israel receives $3 billion from the U.S. in foreign aid each year. Israel is asking the U.S. government to guarantee $10 billion in loans from U.S. banks to help settle newly arrived Soviet Jews. The matter is before Congress. Please tell me which most clearly represents your position.

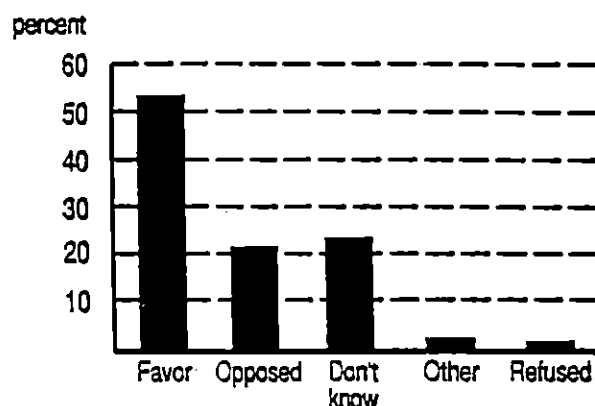

Do not provide	Provide w/ conditions*	Provide w/no conditions	Don't know	Other
43.0%	36.4%	9.7%	7.8%	3.1%

ANALYSIS: Nearly four-in-five (79.4%) of American voters do not support Israel's request for $10 billion in loan guarantees or believe that Congress should only provide the guarantees with conditions.

*The specific condition endorsed by 36.4% was that "the U.S. should first require Israel to stop building Jewish settlements in the occupied territories as a condition for providing these loan guarantees." This call for a settlement freeze is a long-standing policy of the Administration

2. Palestinian Statehood

With respect to the forthcoming peace conference, would you say you are in favor of or opposed to the creation of an independent Palestinian state in the Israeli occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip that would co-exist with a secure Israel?

Favor	Opposed	Don't Know	Other	Refused
52.9%	20.8%	23.1%	2.0%	1.2%

ANALYSIS: In spite of negative assessments of some Palestinian reactions during the Gulf War, most American voters continue to show strong support for an independent Palestinian state in the Occupied Territories.

The coexistence of that Palestinian state with a secure Israel appears as a desirable outcome to the Arab-Israeli conflict.

3. Biggest Obstacle to Mideast Peace

The Middle East and efforts to establish peace have been prominent in the news. In general, who do you think is currently the biggest obstacle to finding a peaceful settlement in the Arab-Israeli dispute?

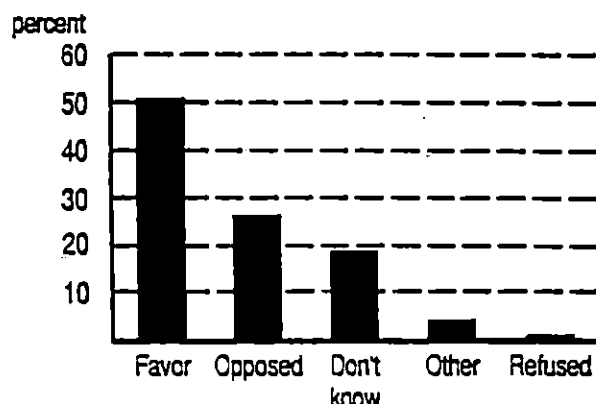

Israel	Arab Countries	Both Equally	Neither	Refused
26.5%	36.4%	14.3%	2.8%	0.8%

ANALYSIS: These results indicate that those polled felt Israel was less to blame than the 21 Arab states for the failure of progress toward a peaceful settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict. In other questions, however, those polled indicated that Israel's positions on the settlements and "land for peace" negotiations were obstacles to peace.

4. Land for Peace

The Bush Administration supports a policy whereby Israel should give up territory it occupies in the West Bank and Gaza Strip in exchange for peace with the Arabs. Are you in favor of or opposed to this concept of land for peace?

Favor	Opposed	Don't know	Other	Refused
50.2%	26.7%	19.2%	3.7%	0.2%

ANALYSIS: There is strong bi-partisan support for the Administration's "land for peace" formula as a basis for resolving the Arab-Israeli conflict. The "land for peace" concept is based on United Nations Resolutions 242 and 338, which involve the return of lands captured by Israel in the 1967 Arab-Israeli war in exchange for peaceful relations with Israel's Arab neighbors.

5. Presidential Voting/Mideast Peace

How important will the Arab-Israeli dispute and attempts for its settlement be as an issue to you in the 1992 presidential election? Will they be very important, somewhat important, or not important?

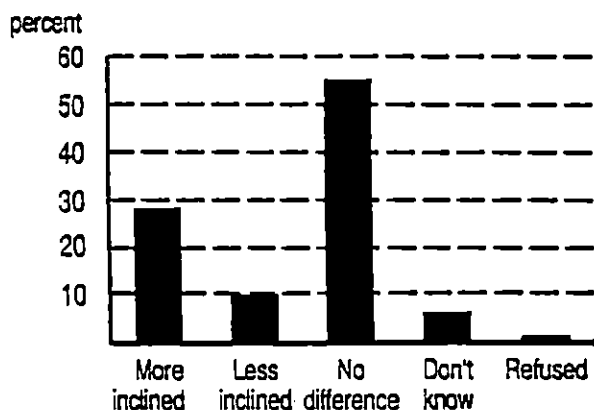

Very important	Somewhat important	Not important	Don't know
18.7%	53.1%	26.6%	1.7%

ANALYSIS: It appears that the investment made by President Bush and Secretary of State Baker in bringing about a Middle East peace conference receives strong support from American voters. It further appears that voters want to see the peace process continue and would not support its disruption by partisan politicking in 1992.

6. Presidential Voting/Land for Peace

Would you be more inclined or less inclined to vote for a presidential candidate who supports a policy of "land for peace," or will it make no difference?

More inclined	Less inclined	No difference	Don't know	Refused
28.9%	9.7%	54.6%	6.6%	0.3%

ANALYSIS: While the majority of voters will not make Middle East peace a defining issue in 1992, three times as many voter would be more inclined to support a candidate who supports "land for peace." Another important indication of strong support for the Administration's peace formula.

Methodology

The nationwide poll on public attitudes toward United States policy in the Middle East was conducted for the Arab American Institute by the Gordon S. Black Corporation of Rochester, NY.

The telephone survey was performed by trained interviewers from August 30 - September 2. The nationwide random sample was selected by random digiting and was stratified to be representative of five regions in the U.S.

Two callbacks were made to all households not initially reached.

The overall national sample of 400 completed interviews has a margin-of-error of plus-or-minus 5. Sampling error margins for sub-groups are higher.

Limited weighting was utilized to make the sample representative by age, gender, party, and region according to the actual electorate.

Below are the numbers of interviews conducted overall and among major subgroups.

Category	Number interviewed	% of Sample
Overall	400	100.0
Certain to Vote in 1992	337	84.2
Republicans	148	37.0
Democrats	155	38.7
Independents/Other Parties	70	17.5
18-34	108	27.0
35-54	157	39.2
55-Plus	134	33.5
Men	192	48.0
Women	208	52.0
Northeast	98	24.5
Southern	94	23.5
Great Lakes	67	16.7
Central	59	14.7
Western	82	20.5

Separate polls were conducted in Iowa and New Hampshire during the same period. Total samples for each state were 350, also selected by random digiting. margins-of-error for these statewide samples are plus-or-minus 5.5 and higher for sub-groups within each state.

Limited weighting was utilized to make the samples representative by age, gender, and party within each state according to the actual electorates.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

A PROCLAMATION

Our children's state of health is, in many ways, a measure of our success and character as a people. Thus, on Child Health Day, we reaffirm our commitment to helping every American youngster enjoy the best possible start in life -- beginning with high quality health care throughout pregnancy for expectant mothers and extending through each child's formative years.

In recent decades, we have made important progress toward the goal of better child health. For example, early immunization has virtually eliminated some childhood diseases, and, with increased vigilance on the part of parents and public health officials, it has the potential to conquer several others. A variety of educational programs and support services -- both public and private -- have encouraged more and more pregnant women to protect the lives of their unborn children through proper nutrition and prenatal care. The United States Child Nutrition Programs, including the School Lunch and School Breakfast Programs, have helped to bring healthy, well-balanced meals to millions of youngsters. Nevertheless, we know that we still have much work to do.

Statistics show that many children die or suffer permanent disability as a result of injuries -- injuries that could be prevented. In fact, the Department of Health and Human Services reports that more youngsters ages 1 through 19 die from injuries than from all other causes of death combined. In 1988 alone, injuries claimed the lives of more than 22,000 children. These injuries may be the result of accidents or physical abuse and other crimes.

Fortunately, we are finding ways to reduce the risk of accidental injury among children. Scientific research and advances in technology have enabled us to develop safer toys and flame-retardant clothing, as well as child-proof packaging for medicines and toxic chemicals. Growing public awareness of safety issues has led to protective legal measures, such as State statutes that require child passenger restraints in motor vehicles. Local initiatives requiring the use of bicycle helmets, fencing around swimming pools, and certain safety standards for playground equipment are also helping to reduce the risk of childhood injury. Of course, the success of these and other measures requires our vigilance and cooperation as parents and neighbors.

If we are to protect the lives and health of our Nation's children, then we must also redouble our efforts to stop the scourges of child abuse, drunk driving, and other crime. A stable, loving home and a safe, nurturing environment are essential to every youngster's physical well-being and emotional development.

Government cannot replicate the love and commitment of parents; neither can it fulfill their primary responsibility in caring for their children. However, public officials, parents, and physicians -- as well as educators and other concerned Americans -- can work together to promote the health and safety of our Nation's youth. Today, let us renew our resolve to do just that. Precious lives depend on it.

The Congress, by joint resolution approved May 18, 1928, as amended (36 U.S.C. 143), has called for the designation of the first Monday in October as "Child Health Day" and has authorized and requested the President to issue annually a proclamation in observance of this day.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, GEORGE BUSH, President of the United States of America, do hereby proclaim Monday, October 7, 1991, as Child Health Day. I urge all Americans to join me in renewing our commitment to protecting the lives and health of this Nation's youngest citizens.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand this seventh day of October, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and ninety-one, and of the Independence of the United States of America the two hundred and sixteenth.

TEXT OF A LETTER FROM THE PRESIDENT TO THE SPEAKER OF
THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES AND
THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE

October 7, 1991

Dear Mr. Speaker: (Dear Mr. President:)

I am transmitting with this letter a report to the Congress: Verification of Nuclear Warhead Dismantlement and Special Nuclear Material Controls, as required by section 3151 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1991. The report reflects the views of a Technical Advisory Committee on the subject defined by Congress: on-site monitoring techniques, inspection arrangements, and national technical means that might be useful to verify the dismantlement of nuclear warheads, a ban on the production of plutonium and highly enriched uranium for nuclear weapons, and the disposition of these materials recovered from dismantled nuclear warheads.

A distinguished panel of Government and nongovernment technical experts was assembled, according to Federal Advisory Committee Act guidelines, to serve as the Technical Advisory Committee under the requirements of the Act. They have summarized their findings in the unclassified Executive Summary, and approve the material presented in the classified full report, initially prepared by the Department of Energy. The Technical Advisory Committee had full independence in expressing their expert opinions on these matters. The Committee was chaired by Ambassador C. Paul Robinson who served as the U.S. Ambassador to the Nuclear Testing Talks.

The mandate to the Committee in the legislation was challenging. It is difficult and potentially misleading to evaluate verification issues in isolation from the details of a potential agreement. Since there are no such agreements drafted, the adequacy of the verification measures could only be discussed in broad and general terms. That said, the report makes clear the difficulties and risks involved. As the Advisory Committee reports, the United States could not effectively verify the number of existing warheads or the amount of special nuclear material currently on hand. We likewise could not have high confidence in discovering clandestine warhead or special nuclear material stockpiles. In addition, the report notes the extreme difficulty of monitoring the many potential paths in which nuclear warheads or special nuclear material could be produced.

The Committee charter was limited to the assessment of technical verification arrangements and techniques, and therefore their report does not address the broader national security implications of the possible outcomes defined in the legislation. The Committee was in unanimous agreement, however, that for any controls regarding warhead demilitarization or special nuclear material production, maintenance of an effective and modern nuclear deterrent must not be compromised.

Sincerely,

GEORGE BUSH

THOMAS (UPI) -- President Bush brushed off charges of sexual harassment against Clarence Thomas and said he expects the Senate to confirm him Tuesday. "He still has my full confidence," Bush told reporters at the White House. "In my view, he will be and should be confirmed, quickly." Asked if he was concerned about the allegations by Anita Hill, a former aide to Thomas at the Education Department and EEOC, Bush said, "not in the least."

(AP) -- ...Anita Hill...scheduled a news conference at the University of Oklahoma to elaborate on her charges.... Sens. Nunn and Lieberman, who had announced their intention to vote for Thomas, said they wanted to know more about the allegations. "We will look at the FBI report," said Lieberman's aide Kathie Scarrah. She said the senator had not seen Hill's written allegations to the Senate Judiciary Committee before he announced his support. Nunn said...he was reconsidering.... Sen. Metzenbaum said he believed a delay of the Senate vote "is definitely something that should be discussed," said a spokeswoman, Nancy Coffee. Metzenbaum called the accusations "very serious, very disturbing."

(CNN Headline News) -- Sen. Specter said he confronted Judge Thomas about the allegations over the weekend, and Thomas very forcefully denied them.

ARMS CUTS (Reuter) -- Sen. Nunn said the U.S. needed to be cautious in considering new Soviet arms cut proposals due to instability in the Soviet government. "We cannot behave now as if everything is going to be in the hands of this leadership from now on," he said on NBC's "Today." "I am cautiously optimistic. But I think we have to be somewhat apprehensive about the long-term stability of the Soviet Union.... You have to have weapons not only in numbers that are adequate, but also that can survive a first attack."

(AP) -- ...Other arms experts agreed that the Gorbachev moves go beyond even the deep, unilateral cuts that President Bush announced. "More has been done in the past eight days...(than) in the last 40 years," said Stan Norris, a senior staff analyst with the National Resources Defense Council.... "Gorbachev basically responded to every one of the moves that the White House put on the table and added a few good ideas of his own," said Jack Mendelsohn, deputy director of the Arms Control Association.

(Beijing/Reuter) -- China welcomed the decision by President Gorbachev to order sweeping cuts in tactical nuclear weapons.

(Tokyo/Reuter) -- The new Soviet commitment to nuclear arms reductions clears the way for the U.S. to withdraw all its nuclear weapons from South Korea, a North Korean Foreign Ministry spokesman said.

SOVIET AID/EC (Luxembourg/AP) -- EC finance ministers tentatively approved $2.4 billion in food and medical aid for the Soviet Union to help deal with possible shortages this winter. Dutch Finance Minister Wim Kok said the EC would ask the U.S., Canada and Japan to provide additional funds for a total Western aid package of more than $7 billion. That amount is far below what Soviet officials say is needed.

(Luxembourg/Reuter) -- The EC agreed in principle to offer the USSR $1.525 billion in new credits to buy food, Wim Kok said.

YUGOSLAVIA (Zagreb/UPI) -- Warplanes of the Serb-dominated air force bombed at least two targets in the Croatian capital of Zagreb this afternoon, hitting part of a building that houses the offices of republic President Tudjman, witnesses said.... No casualties were immediately reported.

(Zagreb/AP) -- ...Croatian President Tudjman...asked other countries for help. "It is necessary for the international community to demonstrate its military might," he said. He told reporters that on Friday, he asked the U.S. to send its Sixth Fleet into the Adriatic, where the Yugoslav navy is blocking Croatia's main ports. He said he had received no response.

(Moscow/Reuter) -- President Gorbachev threw his weight behind efforts to halt the bloodshed in Yugoslavia with a tough warning to the Yugoslav army not to attack Croatian cities. A strongly worded message, delivered by the Soviet Foreign Ministry on Gorbachev's instructions, said Moscow was alarmed by the bloodshed and damage a new assault would bring.

PRISONER/ISRAEL (Tyre, Lebanon/Reuter) -- Israel freed a Lebanese prisoner in south Lebanon and handed him over to the International Committee of the Red Cross. A committee official in Beirut said he believed the release of 28-year-old George Yazbek, who had been held for more than three years, was not related to the U.N.-brokered hostage-for-prisoner swap.

TRADE/INDIA (New Delhi/UPI) -- U.S. Trade Rep. Hills urged India to adopt tougher patent laws but it was not clear if high-level talks led to substantial progress.... "I thought we had a very good mutual airing of our views on intellectual property," Hills said.... "You know, I don't think that we are so far apart."

SANCTIONS/ANC (Johannesburg/UPI) -- The ANC will meet later this month to consider lifting all sports, cultural, academic and tourism sanctions against South Africa and change its conditions for ending economic sanctions, a published report in Johannesburg's Business Day said, quoting unnamed ANC sources.... ANC spokesman Gill Marcus confirmed the report, but stressed that the recommendations were just that.

IRAN-CONTRA (CNN Headline News) -- The independent prosecutor in the Iran-contra case has brought criminal charges against former Assistant Secretary of State Elliot Abrams. A spokeswoman for the prosecutor said Abrams will be charged with two misdemeanor counts of withholding information from Congress.

DOUBLE JEOPARDY (UPI) -- At the request of the Bush Administration, the Supreme Court agreed to decide if the Constitution's prohibition against double jeopardy is being too stringently applied by some federal courts.

ABORTION (UPI) -- The Supreme Court declined a chance to define what steps can be taken by state and federal judges to keep peaceful anti-abortion protesters from obstructing access to health clinics without violating their First Amendment rights. ###

THOMAS ALLEGATIONS (Norman, Okla./AP) -- A former aide to Judge Thomas who accuses him of sexually harassing her said today she wants the Senate to carefully consider his behavior. If the members of the Senate carefully consider and investigate, said Anita Hill, "then I have done what I am obligated to do. But until that happens, I think then that none of us have done our jobs."... Hill said she never used the term "sexual harassment" in her affidavit to the Judiciary Committee. She said she was not alleging that he violated the law, although she said she felt personally that Thomas' actions created a "hostile environment."

(Norman/UPI) -- Anita Hill denied that her accusations were part of a plot to scuttle his nomination. Hill said she would have kept the matter to herself if the Senate Judiciary Committee had not sought her out while investigating rumors of sexual harassment.... Hill refused to comment on whether Thomas should be named to the Supreme Court.

(AP) -- ...Sen. Mitchell said he expected the Thomas vote to occur as scheduled [6 p.m. Tuesday]..., and called the allegation "a serious charge" and said "each senator ought to have the maximum amount of information available" about the allegation.... Sen. Hatch called the disclosure an attempt to "smear the judge." Hatch suggested that a committee member -- whom he did not name -- violated Senate rules by leaking the information to the news media.... Sen. Dixon said he would support a delay of the vote, but doubted it could be arranged.... "If there is nothing new in the FBI report and nothing else happens, I think you have to give him the benefit of the doubt," Dixon said. "...There is no clear evidence."... Representatives of the NAACP, the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Lawyers Committee for Civil Rights Under Law and some women's groups -- all opponents of confirmation -- said they would meet with Sen. Mitchell to seek a delay.

(Reuter) -- ..."...The Senate will vote on Judge Thomas' nomination Tuesday evening," Sen. Biden said in a statement. "I see no reason why the addition of public disclosure of the allegations -- but no new information about the charges themselves -- should change this decision."

(UPI) -- ..."If these charges are true," said Sen. Mikulski, "everyone should agree that Judge Thomas should not be a justice on the Supreme Court."... Sen. DeConcini, the lone Democratic Thomas supporter on the Judiciary Committee, said Thomas has more credibility than his accuser and the charges do not warrant a change in his vote.

ABRAMS/IRAN-CONTRA (Reuter) -- Elliott Abrams, a former assistant secretary of state, pleaded guilty to twice lying to Congress during the Iran-contra investigation. The plea was part of a plea bargain agreement with the special prosecutor.

(AP) -- ...One charge accuses Abrams of not telling the Senate Foreign Relations Committee what he knew about Oliver North's secret network to resupply the contras, and the second contends Abrams covered up his solicitation of $10 million from the country of Brunei for the contras. -more-

LOAN GUARANTEES (Jerusalem/AP) -- Prime Minister Shamir leveled his sharpest attack so far on President Bush's delay of immigration aid.... "We were told that (granting the guarantees) would anger the Arabs who have always opposed the immigration of Jews to the land of Israel," Shamir said.... "The pain and disappointment are especially great that the U.S. Administration has, this time, decided to take a measure which is harmful to the deepest fundamentals of the Jewish and Zionist consciousness."

CONFERENCE/SHAMIR (Jerusalem/UPI) -- Prime Minister Shamir reaffirmed Israel's intention to participate in a Mideast peace conference, but warned neighboring Arab states that "they are not doing us any favor" by coming to the negotiating table. Shamir...said his government would enter into peace talks cautiously and was especially wary of pressure from the U.S. to make concessions to the Arabs.

SETTLEMENTS/PERES (Jerusalem/Reuter) -- Labor Party leader Shimon Peres said Prime Minister Shamir's settlement policy had put Israel onto a collision course with its guardian ally, the U.S.... "For us, the relations with the United States are first and foremost a security issue, not just an economic issue," Peres said. "It was, is and I hope will be one of the state of Israel's most important, central assets."

IRAQI NUKES (U.N./AP) -- The No. 2 man in the Iraqi Atomic Energy Commission, Dr. Jaffar Dhia Jaffar, is the mastermind of Iraq's secret $10 billion nuclear weapons program, according to a confidential U.N. report. The report, obtained by the AP, drew on Iraqi personnel records seized in Baghdad by U.N. inspectors who were detained by Iraqi officials for five days.... The report was prepared by Hans Blix, head of the IAEA.

HOSTAGE/IRAN (Christopher Connell, AP) -- The Iranian government has freed an American engineer, Jon Pattis, imprisoned for five years on charges of spying for the CIA, U.S. officials said.

ANGOLA/PRESIDENT (Christopher Connell, AP) -- Angolan rebel leader Jonas Savimbi told President Bush the peace process was "going well with some few problems" as Angola steers toward democracy.... Savimbi asked Bush to keep up the U.S. support for the peace agreement.... Savimbi...said he told the President "we felt that the (election) process is going well with some few problems." But he added that the problems are unlikely to "delay the process. And the President was happy to hear that."

S. AFRICA (South Bend, Ind./Reuter) -- South African black leaders urged U.S. businesses Monday to draw up an investment blueprint for the inevitable time when political stability and racial equality arrive in their country. "Our freedom should not take too long.... South Africa is a relatively large market," ripe for investment, Thabo Mbeki, the ANC's director of international affairs, said.

BUSH-QUAYLE AUDIT (AP) -- President Bush's 1988 presidential campaign overcharged reporters $358,899 for air fare and travel expenses and should be ordered to pay the money back, federal auditors said.

Italians boot the bias

America's Italians, gathering
in Washington,

WASHINGTON — The moment Kenneth Ciongoli — South Philly boy-turned-Vermont doctor — joined the gala of 3,000 Italian Americans, his chiseled, serious face melted like winter breaking up on the White Mountains.

Gone was the WASP reserve he employs as director of neurology at the University of Vermont Medical School. He was sitting at a table laden with Italian wines and waters, laughing and kissing and hugging old friends. He was telling family stories that nearly brought him to tears.

He was even pronouncing his name differently, the old, rich, difficult way: Chi-ON-go-li.

"In Vermont the WASPs can't handle that," he said. "It has to be 'See-on-GOLi.'"

Sipping Bolia and Lavazza and Pellegrino and a long drink of pride, he was saying things like, "Everything beautiful that you see has an Italian root." And, "We are the masters of Western civilization."

And why not?

Saturday's black-tie dinner at the Washington Hilton, high point of a two-day conference hosted by the powerful National Italian American Foundation (NIAF), was spectacular proof to many here that Italian Americans had arrived.

President and Mrs. Bush were on hand to launch the 500th anniversary celebration of the most influential Italian in history — the most influential human being, by some accounts here: Christopher Columbus.

Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia sat on the dais, along with former Democratic vice presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro and a battalion of Italian American congressional power.

Actor Sylvester Stallone and NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue were honored: the latest in a long line of sports and entertainment heroes. And a roster of post-Iacocca Italian American business leaders was present: the CEOs of Northwest Airlines, Dow Chemical and Kmart; the presidents of the New York and Philadelphia Stock Exchanges.

"This is a pridefest," Ciongoli said, his face

Nation's Italians unite to give the boot to stereotypes

ITALIAN, from 1-E glowing. "You'll bust your buttons here in Italian pride. But it's somewhat misleading. This is the elite."

Just 48 hours earlier, Ciongoli's dark eyes had clouded with anger over negative portrayals of Italian Americans in American culture.

"We are the people of Petrarch and Palladia, of Michelangelo and da Vinci," he said. "... We Italian Americans are doctors and lawyers and college professors and businessmen, and on TV all you see is gangsters, slobs and buffoons. And we've let it happen for too long."

Ciongoli, 48, is a prototypical new Italian American activist, long a rarity in his culture. An Ivy League-trained professor (graduated from the University of Pennsylvania), a successful doctor, husband, father of five and chairman of Vermont's Columbus celebration, he is sharing in the American Dream in ways unthinkable to his immigrant great-grandparents, who ran a grocery on Passyunk Avenue a century ago. Yet he is increasingly frustrated by what he perceives as lingering forms of discrimination.

And, unlike past generations of Italian Americans, who endured bigotry by working harder and striving to assimilate, Ciongoli and others are fighting back with noisy public relations and quiet pressure politics, techniques long employed by American Jews, blacks, women, Indians and gays.

What are Italian Americans so mad about? Here's just a sampling of slurs and slights that had many at NIAF's conference and gala seeing red-

From "GoodFellas": The foundation says the preponderance of such mob movies contributes to unfair images of Italians.

green-and-white:

- The raft of mob movies, from The Godfather Part III to television's Mafia Princess. Critics hail some of these as artistic, "convincing" portrayals, but FBI statistics show that less than one-tenth of 1 percent of the nation's 20 million Italian Americans have criminal involvement.

"Sure, the Mafia's a problem, but where's the proportion?" Ciongoli said. "Where's our Avalon? Where's Hollywood's broad, sensitive human story of the Italian American experience?"

The NIAF and Sons of Italy have refused to honor Italian-American actors and directors such as Robert DeNiro, Francis Ford Coppola and Martin Scorsese, who they say are helping to perpetuate the myth.

- Television's Italian American sitcom buffoons, bagmen and bums, such as Carla, the promiscuous waitress on Cheers, and Vinnie, the shifty, sex-crazed friend of brilliant WASP teen doctor Doogie Howser.

Italian Americans, so proud of their fashion and style, are infuriated by their depiction as fat men in T-shirts who eat with their hands and as wise guys in red shirts and white ties. "The truth is, this is the culture of Armani, Valentino, Versace,"

Ciongoli said. "I mean, c'mon!"

- Discrimination in the Ivy League — or so says Ciongoli, who is stumping campuses from Harvard to Penn, asking admissions directors why Italian Americans have the lowest enrollment of any ethnic group.

The reason, he alleges, "is that 10 to 12 percent of the class is set aside for legacies, who are WASPs and Jews. Thirty to 35 percent is set aside for blacks, Hispanics and Asians — in effect, federal quotas. And 10 to 15 percent are athletes, who are often African Americans. So an Italian American starts out competing for less than 40 percent of the seats."

- Bigotry in business and politics. Every wealthy Italian businessperson or politician is instantly linked to the mob.

"We're still excluded from the elite, from the highest ranks of New York corporate banks, law firms, insurance companies," says Salvatore Zizza, a New York businessman and multimillionaire who sits on the NIAF board.

- Columbus, the Gangster. A roomful of national leaders of the Columbus celebration despaired of the revisionist view of Columbus as destroyer of the New World's environment and native peoples — in short, another Italian gangster. Only 36 percent of Americans, said U.S. Rep. Frank J. Guarini (D., N.J.), even know Columbus was Italian.

R.W. Apple, Washington correspondent for the New York Times and a panelist Friday at a conference on Italy and Italian Americans, said Italians on both sides of the Atlantic were maligned by the media.

Italy is perceived as a politically ludicrous nation of artistic, fun-loving pasta-eaters. In fact, Italy is an emerging technological and trade giant that trails only Germany as a European economic power.

In 1983, when Italy joined Germany and Great Britain as the third European power to allow U.S. missiles on its soil, it was a "major, major" development in Western defense, said Apple, yet the news was largely ignored by U.S. media. "Italy as a major power?" he scoffed sarcastically. "C'mon. Be serious."

Why have Italian Americans let stereotypes form without a fight? Italian Americans have never felt their very existence threatened, as have Jewish and black Americans. As a result, said Guarini, they don't organize easily. "Get three Italians together and you have a new club," he joked.

Yet Italian Americans are organizing as never before. Zizza and Robert Blancato, an NIAF lobbyist, visited the White House Friday to have a chat with the head of personnel for chief of staff John H. Sununu. The message, said Zizza, was blunt: "Fifty-three percent of Italian-Americans voted for Bush. You have to give us something."

"We're finally doing what the Jews, Hispanics and blacks have been doing for years," said Blancato. "And it's working."

The Sons of Italy, a much larger, grass-roots group, is even more vigilant than the NIAF on media issues, often working with the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith. The group won an apology from Billy

Crystal after it bought a full-page ad in Variety excoriating the actor/comedian, who cracked at the Academy Awards that if an Italian-American had purchased Warner Bros., its famous lion could no longer roar — "It would take the Fifth."

And when New York columnist Pete Hamill described Italian Americans in Bensonhurst — where a black youth was killed in 1989 — as "Guidos" in "Guidoville," the Sons fired off 5,400 phone calls and telegrams in six hours. Hamill's newspaper has promised the Italian American group equal space in this and all future Italian American issues.

Despite such efforts, some Americans still need consciousness-raising — the President of the United States, for example.

Bush told an unfortunate joke Saturday night: "Today will perhaps go down in history," he cracked, what with Gorbachev's nuclear concessions and now "an Italian American national dinner that will be over before midnight." Sure, last year's dinner went on and on, with every Italian having his say, but an uncertain murmur swept the crowd Saturday night. Not much laughter.

And earlier, the much-beloved Barbara Bush praised Italian Americans for their "greatest gift" to America — love of family. Sure, Italians love their families, but this was precisely the condescension Italian academics and journalists had devoted an entire day to criticizing: the "fun-loving family, food, pasta" myth.

You could almost hear Carl Fescosoldo, New England oilman and amateur historian, author of The Proud Italians, who at a Saturday breakfast listed a few other Italian contributions he says got left out of the WASP-dominated American history books: "Like roads, law, government, accounting, written language, as well as how to shave and eat with a fork. Italians civilized the British, and the British aristocracy and royalty know this well. But the WASPs in America have no idea. They're ignorant of their own history."

Barbara Bush Receives Award

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Italian-American Foundation at its annual dinner Saturday presented First Lady Barbara Bush with its lifetime achievement award for humanitarian service.

Rep. Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., who chaired the black-tie event attended by some 3,000 prominent Italian-Americans, said Mrs. Bush was "the unsurpassed leader on literacy in America and indeed the world. ... She is an inspiration to our country."

Mrs. Bush, who attended the dinner with President Bush, has been an active promoter of literacy since entering the White House.

Among others at the dinner were actors Sylvester Stallone and Ernest Borgnine, comedians Dom DeLuise and Joe Piscopo, Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia, former Democratic vice presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro, Palm Springs Mayor Sonny Bono, NFL Commissioner Paul Tagliabue and Italian Foreign Minister Gianni De Michelis.

Stallone, Tagliabue and De Michelis also received awards from the foundation.

Mrs. Bush spoke of the importance of family values, referring to the movie "Moonstruck" and its final scene where the Italian family sat around a table and toasted family life. "Well, we Bushes feel the same way."

Bush, in obvious good humor, referred to Soviet President Michael Gorbachev's speech earlier in the day outlining plans to reduce the Soviet nuclear force.

"Today may be a day that lives in history. We had a very positive response from President Gorbachev reducing nuclear weapons and we're at a National Italian-American dinner that might be over before midnight," Bush said.

He also joked about former singer Bono's plans to run for a Senate seat in California, home of former actor and President Reagan.

"What makes Sonny think an entertainer from California can succeed in national politics?" Bush asked.

It looked like a Francis Ford Coppola party scene—a sea of round tables loaded with wine; hundreds of raven-haired lovelies in sexy sequined gowns and dashing gents in tailored tuxedos; and a few gangly teens scurrying about—all set to the big band sounds of Sidney's Orchestra. The only thing missing Saturday night was Talia Shire.

In fact, it was the 16th annual National Italian American Foundation dinner at the Washington Hilton—this year marking the official kickoff for the quincentenary of Columbus's discovery of America.

And what a lineup! President and Barbara Bush, Sylvester Stallone. A virtual Who's Who of politics, big business and show business. Even Christopher Columbus XX (the only living direct descendant of the explorer). It was enough to keep cameras clicking and camcorders humming all night.

There was National Football League Commissioner Paul Tagliabue—"the man who gives us so many memorable Sunday afternoons in front of the TV when we should be out cutting the grass," said President Bush to the nearly 3,000 guests.

There was Italian Foreign Minister Gianni De Michelis, on hand to receive the U.S.-Italy Friendship Award. Sen. Pete Domenici. Reps. Nancy Pelosi and Connie Morella.

"Celebrities like . . . Ernest Borgnine, Oscar winner," said the president, "and a couple of fellows who'd give Michelangelo's 'David' a run for his money—Sly Stallone and Joe Piscopo."

(Ah, excuse me, Mr. President. It's Pis-co-po.)

"And, of course, that monument to Mom's cooking that swept through the White House the other evening at a state dinner, Dom DeLuise."

That DeLuise, always clowning around. First, he tried to lift some of the dinner silver. Then he sprinkled the dais with "holy water" from his goblet.

"Can you imagine," asked the president, "all the people at a stuffy state dinner dealing with that guy?"

And there was Sonny Bono, former Cher partner and current Palm Springs, Calif., mayor and U.S. Senate contender. "I just have one question for him," said Bush. "What makes Sonny think that someone from the California entertainment industry can succeed at national politics?"

The audience roared.

"Sonny, a little advice for you. If you want to practice debating, skip over Connie Morella, who's sitting next to you, and go a couple of seats down to Geraldine Ferraro. And be ready, it's tough. I've been there. I know."

Politics, however, wasn't the theme Saturday night. No, as is the way at any true Italian festa, black-tie gala or around Mama's kitchen table, talk was of famiglia, faith and making the most of everything afforded to you.

Stallone, upon receiving the NIAF Career Achievement Award for Entertainment, recalled the spirit of his grandfather, Sylvester, who arrived at Ellis Island in 1928 from Bari, in southern Italy.

"I am here because of my grandfather's effort to settle in a country . . . a mystical place called America, where [his] children and all the children that followed could and would be given the opportunity to seek the dream. Not any dream, but the American dream . . .

"When I wrote 'Rocky,' it really wasn't about a fighter. It was about a fight. A quest to have the opportunity in your lifetime to rise and fall by your choice on your own terms. 'Rocky' was a philosophy that my grandfather, without putting it into words, lived by until his dying day. He had faith in a higher ideal, an unwavering sense of family unity, and that the eternal fire that burns in the soul of every man can never be totally extinguished."

Tagliabue, recipient of the Special Achievement Award for Sports and Business, related how his father impressed upon him the importance of education: "Don't work like a donkey pulling a cart," Tagliabue said, quoting his father in a lyrical accent. "Use your head."

"Don't get me wrong, though," he continued. "[My father] was not against hard work. In fact, sometimes my brothers and I thought that he thought that a lot of sweat could cleanse your soul!"

Barbara Bush, who received the foundation's Life Achievement Award for Humanitarian Service in honor of her work for literacy, spoke of the contributions Italian Americans have made to U.S. culture.

"Perhaps your greatest gift of all is your triumphant, indomitable love of family," she told the crowd. "You know, that's what I loved about the movie 'Moonstruck' when I saw it both times. Remember the last scene when everyone sat around the table and drank a toast to the family? Well, we Bushes feel the same way."

Marriage and family may not be in store, though, for 23-year-old Jennifer Flavin and her beau, the 45-year-old Stallone. The model and the movie star have been together for 3½ years now. Everything is "going so well," Flavin said before the dinner. But "he doesn't want to, ah, I don't think he'll ever get married again."

Does it bum her out?

"Uh, yeah, a little," she said quietly. "I just try not to think about it."

Kimberly Driscoll isn't facing the same dilemma. The 22-year-old blond beauty—also a model—was there with her fiancé, comedian-bodybuilder Piscopo. They plan to make it official "in about a year," she said. There's even a family theme to this love story: She used to be his son's babysitter.

Ah, amore.

MEANWHILE, uptown Friday night, Commerce Secretary Robert Mosbacher and his flame-haired wife Georgette hosted a dinner party in their fine-feathered Fifth Avenue aerie.

Who came? Oh, just King Juan Carlos and Queen Sofia of Spain, the Mosbachers' guests of honor. Bob and his majesty are such good friends, and have sailed together, and against each other, for over 30 years.

(The Mosbachers and their majesties were the expected guests of President and Mrs. Bush at Camp David yesterday, if you were wondering what the Bushes did instead of being there when Elizabeth Taylor became Mrs. Fortensky in California.)

Among those the Mosbachers invited to dine at home with the king and queen were Donald and Catie Marron, Carroll Petrie, Placido and Marta Domingo, Ezra and Cecile Zilkha, Linda Wachner, Lou and Debbie Dobbs, Pepe and Emilia Fanjul, and Prince Bandar, the Saudi Arabian ambassador to the U.S.

The hostess wore a short black Valentino dress, and served baked potatoes and caviar to start, followed by beef Wellington and blueberry pie with vanilla ice cream. Add for pizzazz an American jazz quartet and Georgette's sister, Lynn Paulsin, who took Polaroid pictures for the souvenir-minded guests.

Protocol wouldn't allow a proper photographer, you see, and the king and queen, who are considered a fun couple as far as royal sorts go — have you ever dined with Princess Margaret? — were expected to be amused.

As you may recall, King Juan Carlos will receive the 1991 Humanitarian Award given by the Ellie Wiesel Foundation for Humanity at the Plaza Hotel tonight.

Appropriating History to Serve Politics on TV

By WALTER GOODMAN

TELEVISION

Bush's skill at appropriating history for politics. Page C16.

The television campaign for the reelection of George Bush has made it onto network prime time. On Wednesday the President saluted the 25th Annual Country Music Association Awards on CBS, and last night he introduced "The Heroes of Desert Storm," an ABC movie. These doses of positive politicking were enough to stir nostalgia for frankly dishonest negative commercials.

At the awards show, Mr. Bush was naturally placed up front, among the superstars of country music. There the scion of New England aristocracy was seen from time to time giving signs of enjoying the laments of the lovelorn, the unlettered, the losers from out there.

The tuxedo did not help, but the message being put forth, a corrective to all those pictures of the President on vacation while so many are out of work, was that beneath the dress-up duds pumps a regular guy's sympathetic heart, in tune to the dreams of just folks. Here was a rebuttal to charges by Democrats that the President does not know where ordinary people live. Some of them live in the Grand Ole Opry, and Wednesday night Mr. Bush was with them.

Last night's appearance was more active. In what may be a new stage in television's domination of politics, the President of the United States delivered the come-on to a docudrama.

"The Heroes of Desert Storm" was preceded by a cautionary announcement: "Tonight's film is based on true stories and interweaves news footage and dramatizations with actors and actual participants. To achieve realism, no distinction is made among the elements." Just like 30-second campaign spots.

As it turned out, most of the news sections — bomb hits through cross hairs, destroyed vehicles, press conferences — could be spotted as the real thing by anybody who spent time with CNN during the Persian Gulf war, and the rest of the two-hour soap was so fake that it made the commercials seem like slices of life. This product told a lot less about the war than about the producers' opinion of their consumers. The script was approved by the White House.

Mr. Bush, speaking before what looked to be a portrait of Gen. Andrew Jackson and a military flag, entered into the spirit of the evening with a barrage of clichés. "What counts," he declared, "is not what we have but what we are." He spoke of "causes worth fighting for, even causes worth dying for," of "the principles we hold dear" and of "that last full measure of devotion." Hearing Lincoln's resounding phrase put to the service of a made-for-the-tube heartstring tugger was enough to sink the heart.

But it was also in the service of Mr. Bush himself. In the course of his boilerplate tribute to the men and women who fought in the Persian Gulf, he evoked "those who led us in time of war," mentioning Washington, Jackson, Grant, Lee, Eisenhower and MacArthur. It cannot have escaped the attention of many viewers that four of these six military leaders became President. Mr. Bush, who reappeared on the program in news clips as head of the coalition against President Saddam Hussein of Iraq, was assuming the role of a President who became a military leader. (Although the movie was cobbled together with the cooperation of the Defense Department, Gen. H. Norman

Bush introduces a docudrama about the war in the Persian Gulf.

Schwarzkopf was not heard from, but the Administration was further represented in news sections by Secretary of State James A. Baker 3d and the White House spokesman, Marlin Fitzwater.)

Mr. Bush in person went so far as to evoke the battles of New Orleans, Bastogne, Inchon and Normandy. By this battle-dropping, his war against an outmatched enemy that scarcely fought back was elevated to the invasion of Nazi-controlled Europe. The quick victory that has left a defeated dictator in power somehow found a place beside the long struggle that destroyed Hitler. There on screen was President Bush delivering a speech after Iraq's invasion of Kuwait that likened Saddam Hussein to Hitler. Why not George Bush as Franklin D. Roosevelt?

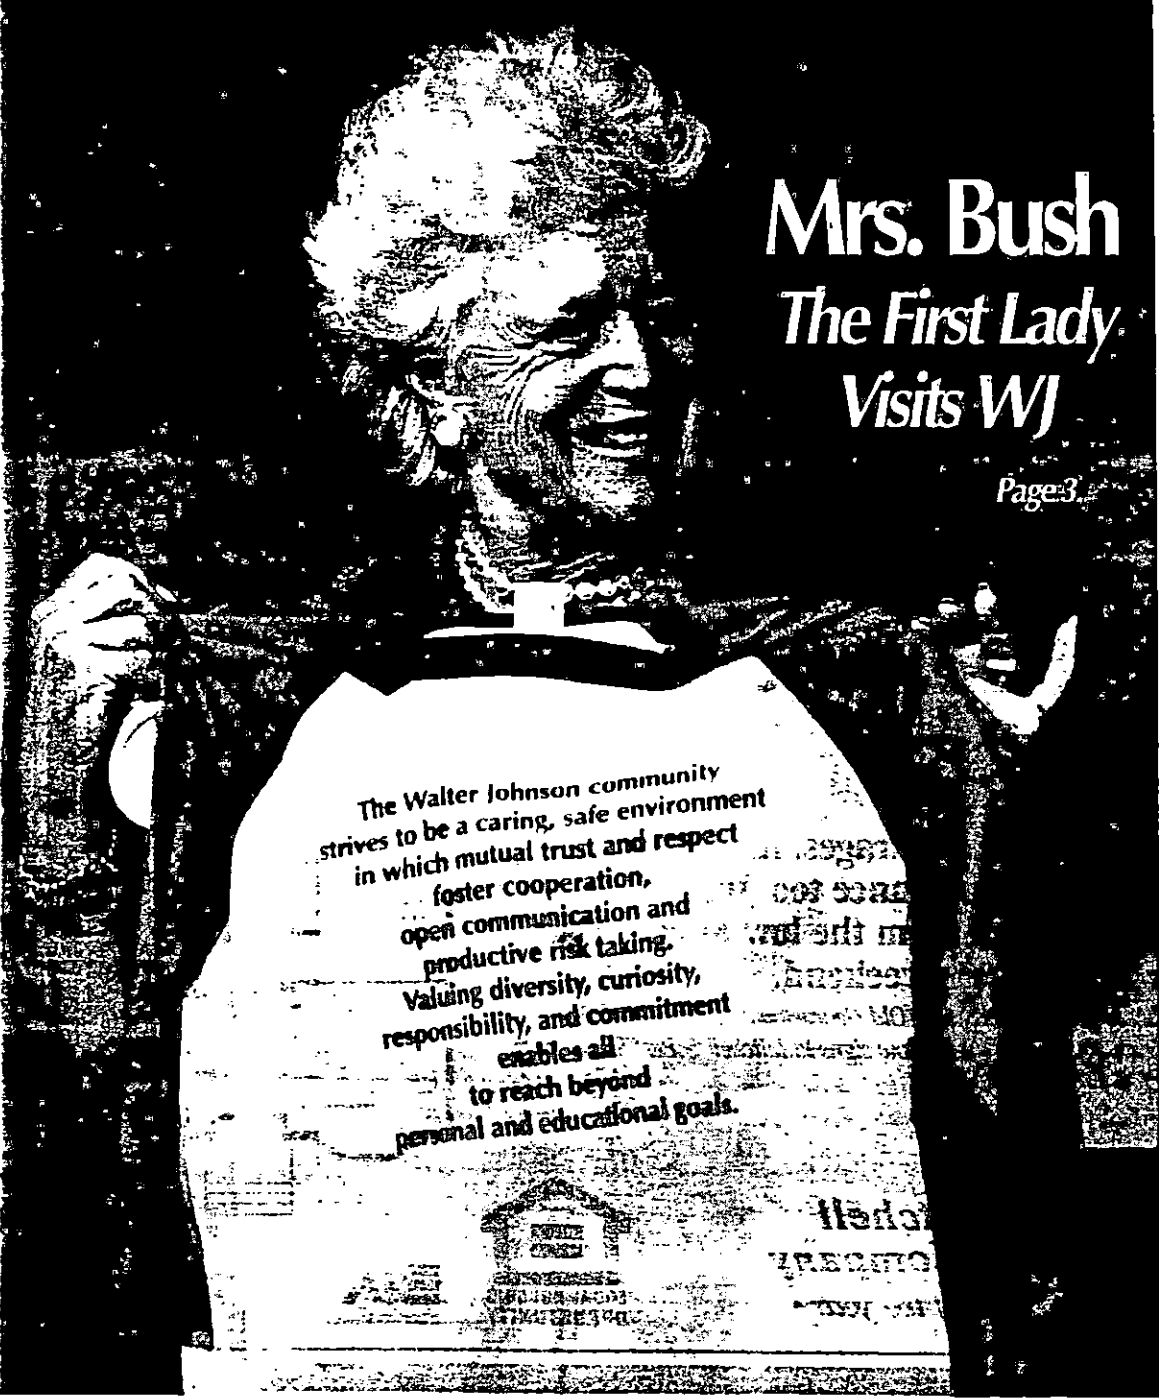

The signal to any rival in 1992 who might dare to question the war is that criticism will be treated as a slur upon all the little guys and gals descended to in the evening's show, the memories of Eisenhower and MacArthur and American greats from George Washington to George Bush.

That early warning about the program's technique of not distinguishing between reality and dramatization can be applied to Mr. Bush himself. Was this the real George Bush on screen, lending the Presidency to a crass exercise in jingoism, a shameless exploitation of the grief of people who lost sons and daughters in the gulf and some cunning self-celebration, or was it just the performer for the campaign season?

Lifetime Memory: 1st Lady's Visit

By Doug Hernan
Almanac Staff Writer

The kids were getting restless last Thursday. But that's understandable—they were waiting for the first lady.

The Secret Service had swept their classroom for suspicious devices at Walter Johnson High School, and a throng of reporters and camera crews were waiting in the back.

The 11 freshmen tried to look busy, hammering out compositions on their computers, but 20 minutes was enough, and they began to squirm and grumble.

And then she arrived: Barbara Bush, in all her grandmotherly splendor, wearing a royal blue suit and trademark costume jewelry.

She peered over each student's shoulder, asked questions about the work in progress, smiled and gave a few encouraging words, like "Oh so, you know what you're writing about."

The teen-agers were clearly beside themselves.

"I was nervous, but it was cool, you know, meeting the president's wife and all that," said Chris Krueger, 14. "She was real nice."

"I'll remember this for the rest of my life," added classmate Elliot Postell, 14. "I'll tell my kids."

Bush visited at the request of William F. McCrady, a teacher at the Walter Johnson Learning Center, which enrolls 86 students with learning disabilities from Bethesda, Potomac and Rockville.

"I just thought that this was the type of thing that's right with education and that we ought to show it off," McCrady said.

The first lady apparently thought so too. "I wish every school had this," she said while she chatted with four articulate students.

"Certainly, nobody can hear these four young people and not believe the future is in very good hands," she said.

The Walter Johnson Learning Center began in 1978 and is the oldest of the six in the county school system's middle and high schools. The program offers small, special classes to students in subjects they need, but its emphasis is on placing children in regular classrooms and encouraging them to participate fully in Walter Johnson's athletic teams and after-school activities.

"It's really great here, because it's not a separate part of the school," said Robin Smith, 16, a junior in the learning center program who has run track and served on the pompon squad at Walter Johnson.

Barbara Bush's son, George Jr., had dyslexia, and her visit to Walter Johnson was part of an effort to end stereotypes about people who can't learn without struggling.

"A dyslexic person or a person with a learning disability is not dumb," Bush said.

First lady pays a visit to WJ center

Hoping to learn more about programs for learning disabled students, first lady Barbara Bush paid a visit to Walter Johnson High School in Bethesda last week to tour the school's learning center.

One of six learning centers in the school system, the Walter Johnson center teaches students academics while helping them form good study skills, develop socially and plan their careers.

Bush visited the school at the invitation of William McCrady, a learning center resource specialist. Her visit included a tour of the learning center's computer lab and a chat with students and teachers about the learning center concept.

Richter: 'She talked to every student, she was wonderful'

by Karen M. Jorgensen
Staff Writer

First Lady Barbara Bush came to Bethesda last week and a group of Walter Johnson High School students lost no time in telling her about their classes.

Visiting the school Thursday, Bush talked with a group of ninth-graders in a computer-assisted writing class and participated in a forum with four other students, all part of the school's Learning Center program. She also met with the Learning Center staff for a private discussion about the program, which is geared to secondary students with learning disabilities.

"You must be an exceptional school district," Bush said at the end of her visit. "No one could hear these four students and not think the future is in good hands."

Walter Johnson is one of six regional centers for students in grades six through 12 with learning disabilities. Students in grades nine through 12 are enrolled in programs at Walter Johnson, John F. Kennedy or Watkins Mill high schools. Programs for sixth-, seventh- and eighth-graders are provided at Tilden and E. Brooke Lee middle schools and Montgomery Village Intermediate School.

Bush began her visit with a stop in the classroom of teacher Marilyn Richter and reading specialist William McCrady.

The ninth-graders were working on their first writing assignment of the school year, preparing the first draft, having the draft edited by themselves, their peers and teachers, and revising and rewriting.

"For point of view, we've talked about your book," Richter told Bush, referring to "Millie's Book," the account of life in the White House that Bush wrote last year as "dictated" to her by first dog Millie.

"She talked to every student," Richter said later of the first lady. "She was wonderful."

The four students who participated in the public discussion with Bush—sophomore Lydia Pagan, juniors Robin Smith and Spencer Herold and senior Cynthia Gutierrez—all said they supported the Learning Center concept and that there are more similarities between them and their mainstream classmates than differences.

"We're just like the rest of the students at Walter Johnson," said Smith. "We have to learn the same things, just in different ways."

The four students all have different learning disabilities and all participate in both Learning Center and mainstream classes. The Walter Johnson Learning Center has operated since 1978 and now serves 86 students from southwestern Montgomery County.

Students are enrolled in the Learning Centers only after discussions between parents and the school staff. The Learning Center concept offers an interdisciplinary approach to learning combining academic performance, study strategies, social-skill development and career planning.

Learning Center students receive special-education services where needed in addition to participation in regular classrooms and extra-curricular activities.

Bush has been active in promoting literacy programs during her years in the White House and said she has an interest in all aspects of education.

In addition to her projects publicizing literacy and learning disabilities, Bush said she has now become interested in the problems of pregnant mothers and programs to ensure they are alcohol- and drug-free and also that their babies receive the necessary immunizations and medical treatment.

"I've always been interested in total learning," Bush said. "I'm interested in them all. Your brain grows every time you learn something."

"I'm interested in the first nine months and then in all the months that follow."

Her interest in learning disabilities is both personal and public. The Bushes' eldest son has dyslexia.

"Our boy was lucky," she said. "He had a mother and father who cared and teachers who knew what to do." He knew he had to compensate for his problems and that made him work even harder, Bush said.

Everyone has a stake in education, Bush said.

"You can't say, 'What happens in school doesn't affect me because I don't have children in school.' We have better schools when we have local people involved in the schools," she said.

One way everyone can get involved, she said, is through the various public-private partnerships.

She specifically cited the Marriott Corp. for its Mentor Program, which includes students in the Walter Johnson Learning Center. The program pairs students with a Marriott employee, offering the student a chance to learn about the employee's work and also have an older person to talk with.

Education is a partnership, she said, because 91 percent of a child's time is spent out of the classroom.

"I believe first in the family, then in the schools," she said.

Camp visit is a big honor

CHATTERBOXING: The Monday issue of Newsweek had a story saying that President George Bush was reluctant to appoint Commerce Secretary Robert Mosbacher to head his campaign for re-election because his wife, Georgette, is too flashy. The president was more than a little upset when he read it and promptly invited Robert and Georgette to Camp David this weekend; King Juan Carlos and Queen Sofia of Spain also will be there. An invitation from the president to the White House is an honor, but to be invited to Camp David, especially when royalty is in attendance, is the biggest plum of all. I remember during Bush's inaugural week everyone expected Georgette to come in and try to be the social queen of Washington. I'm sure she disappointed them, because they couldn't find anything to write about her except that she walked her dog at night outside the hotel. . .

PULL CORD TO STOP PRESS: For those of us who have been wondering when President George Bush will make the long-rumored announcement about Secretary of Commerce Robert Mosbacher's appointment as his '92 campaign chairman and chief fund-raiser, it may not be the done deal we thought it was. Especially since Newsweek reports "one reason for the delay is what sources close to Bush call the 'Georgette factor.'" Uh, oh. Exactly what does that mean, you ask?

Well, hold on to your designer hats, folks. Unidentified sources told that magazine, "Bush is worried that Mosbacher's flashy, couture-clad wife, Georgette, would lend his campaign an image of '80s excess that GOP candidates want to avoid." And that's not all. "A senior Bush official" is quoted as saying, "The president loves Bob and Georgette. But he's worried they bring a rich-socialite image to his campaign." There you have it. . .
