MR. PRESIDENT:

Attached is a proposed text of Bush-Quayle '92 brochure in New Hampshire. It would be mailed early next week to 106,000 households -- undecided Republicans and Independents and Republicans the campaign has not been able to contact.

With the exception of the response on health care, these responses have been taken from statements you have previously made. The tax and health responses have been cleared with OMB, and this was also staffed at the campaign. The Deputy Chief of Staff has reviewed this and approves.

The brochure also features a note from Governor Gregg.

Thank you.

Bush Presidential Library Photocopy

"What Are You Going to Do About Getting Our Economy Going?"

The economy is my top priority.

I accept my share of responsibility concerning the recession, but Congress's handwringing and foot-dragging has taken its toll as well.

My strategy for long-term economic growth is based on five principles. One -- it must stimulate more investment to create jobs. Two -- it must increase real estate values and home sales.

Three -- it must restore Americans' confidence they will be able to afford raising a family, educating their children, and obtaining quality health care.

Four -- it must make America more competitive in the global economy. Five -- it must control wasteful government spending and cut the deficit.

So far, we've brought interest rates down and sped up getting dollars to the states for existing federal programs.

Next week, I'll take the next step and outline a comprehensive economic action plan for 1992 in my State of the Union address.

I want Congress to put election year politics aside, break its logjam of inaction, and pass my program. I'll need your support to make that happen. With your strong vote in the primary, we will send a message to the Democrat Congress.

I hear you. I am concerned. You can count on me to provide the same kind of leadership to get this economy going as I did to win the Gulf War and the Cold War.

"Why Do You Spend So Much Time Overseas?"

Looking out for American's interests abroad is the President's responsibility. Congress, with 535 answers to virtually every question, can't deal with foreign affairs day-to-day.

We live in a global economy. When I talk with foreign leaders about new markets for American products, is it foreign policy or domestic policy?

When I meet with Latin American leaders, as I did in Cartagena, to help keep drugs out of America's schools and neighborhoods, is that foreign policy or domestic policy?

When Desert Storm reignited Americans' faith in themselves, was that just foreign policy?

No. It demonstrated our special role as the world's preeminent moral, political, economic, and military power.

Anyone who says America should retreat into an isolationistic cocoon is living in the last century, when we should be focusing on the next century, and the life our kids can in that exciting future. They should know America's destiny has always been to lead. And if I have anything to do with it, lead we will.

My most sacred responsibility as Commander-in-Chief is to keep the peace and keep America strong.

This is a more peaceful world because America was involved. We must stay involved in the world for peace and jobs.

"Why Did You Break Your Tax Pledge?"

I stood next to Ronald Reagan for eight years. He was as strongly against raising taxes as I but he had to raise taxes 12 times.

The one time I did, I was dragged kicking and screaming to the finish line. I'd sent thousands of troops to the Gulf. I did not want to shut down the government. I did not want to stop Social Security checks from being mailed.

Some good things came out of this painful process. And we capped domestic discretionary spending.

That's the key -- and the people of New Hampshire know this -- to try to control government spending.

I didn't like raised taxes. I've proposed tax cuts to stimulate the economy and tax incentives for jobs for the last three years in my State of the Union address. So that's my answer.

I saw Ronald Reagan agonize over it back in 1982, just as I agonized over it. But consider the choices: do you shut down the government -- cut off the Social Security checks, risk the supply lines to troops that we were at the time moving overseas? Or do you have to swallow something from the Democrat-controlled, tax-increase conscious Congress? That's the answer.

Over a year ago, I gave Congress proposals for economic recovery. They would end the credit crunch, increase real estate values, create more investment and jobs, and reform our schools to help our children compete in the global economy. Congress did nothing.

If my proposals had been made into law, the recession would have been less severe, millions more would be working, and America's economy would be on the mend.

Now every political lightweight is using me for a punching bag and every Congressional subcommittee which hasn't had a new idea in 50 years is talking about how we must have action now.

I will turn this economy around, but I need your help to do it with your vote on February 18. By voting for me, you'll be sending a message to Congress.

If the only thing standing in the way of your supporting me is that you don't believe I'm listening to what you have to say, try me. Let me hear from you.

I share your values. I know what you're facing. And, as President, I will get New Hampshire and America moving again.

(outside page 5 -- handwritten message from Judd Gregg fills top third of 6" x 9" page, reply card message space fills bottom two thirds)

I believe President Bush knows New Hampshire. He's gotten our message. What makes him different from all the rest of the candidates asking for our support is that -- when the chips are down -- we can count on his strong, experienced leadership.

But if you're undecided about voting for him February 18, find out more about where George Bush stands on the issues important to you.

Send this card to Washington. He'll answer your questions. Then make up your own mind.

Because New Hampshire picks Presidents, we have a special responsibility not to waste our vote. We need to do what's right. Thanks.

Judd Gregg

Dear Mr. President,

"I'm concerned about the high cost of health care. What can be done, Mr. President?"

There's nothing more frightening than a threat to a family's health. Barbara and I know what families go through.

I will soon send to Congress my proposals to help every American family cope with rising health care costs.

It will be sound and sensible reform that doesn't hurt the economy or cost jobs.

It will protect the right of American families to choose their own doctors. It will rely on market forces of competition and innovation.

It will emphasize prevention, encouraging people to keep themselves healthy as a less costly alternative to dealing with problems only after people get sick.

It will help hold down the cost of medical malpractice insurance that's keeping doctors from providing certain vital services.

There are many Presidential candidates who want the government to run our health care system, like Britain or Canada socialized schemes. They want the government to tell you what doctor to see, what drugs to use, how long to wait for operations, and whether you will even be allowed to have the operation at all!

Putting the government in charge of health care would give us all the compassion of the IRS and the efficiency of centralized planning at budget busting prices.

(outside page 7)

"What are you doing about trade?"

Protectionism shut down America's exports and brought on the Great Depression. Those who sing the siren song of protectionism are blind to history's lessons.

We are in a world economy. America became the world's largest exporter last year, when we surged past the Germans. Erecting trade barriers and starting a trade war in a recession would result in a tremendous loss of jobs and economic growth.

If we want to expand jobs, we must expand markets. Not just manage trade, but expand it.

This is vital to New Hampshire, which sells over $1.2 billion in exports a year. Around 35,000 New Hampshire jobs depend on exports. Without the big increase in New Hampshire's exports (9.4% in 1990, the last year for which numbers are available), your state would even harder hit.

We are taking a tough line with foreign trading partners. For example, on my recent trip, I won Japan's commitment to open its markets to American goods, from computers to glass to wood products to auto parts and more...markets worth over $100 billion.

America's exports are up 58% in the last five years. As President, I'm working for even more access and more exports, because it means even more jobs, jobs, jobs.

We are the leader of the Free World. We can compete with any nation, anywhere in any field we choose...if we put our heart, spirit, and intellect into meeting the challenge.

Draft 4

PRESIDENTIAL REMARKS: HEAD START

CATONSVILLE, MARYLAND
TUESDAY, JANUARY 21, 1992

Thank you: Secretary Alexander; Secretary Sullivan; Marianne Anderson; students, parents, staff, volunteers. I'm so pleased to be here with you today.

Last Friday I had the privilege of visiting the "living memorial" to Dr. Martin Luther King down in Atlanta.

Contemplating the legacy that Dr. King left for us all, I was struck again by the immense importance he placed on quality education. He called it the "passport" to a better life.

Dr. King was right. We face a great challenge today in making America a country that will lead not only in the 1990s but in the 21st century. This mission involves many things, and next week, when I deliver my State of the Union address, you'll see that we've been doing some hard thinking about how to fulfill this uniquely American destiny. One of the keys is to make sure that this generation of young Americans -- like these young people here today -- are prepared to lead.

In a word, that demands educational excellence. As many of you know, we've launched a comprehensive strategy for radically transforming America's schools. We've set high goals. And the first goal is this: By the year 2000, every American child must start school ready to learn.

For most kids, families can smooth the often difficult transition into elementary school. Other kids aren't as lucky. They need a head start. We're going to make sure they get it.

Today I'm pleased to announce that we are taking a large step toward meeting that first crucial goal. In the budget I will submit later this month, I will ask Congress for a $600 million increase in Head Start, the largest ever. These funds will allow every eligible child to have the Head Start experience before starting school. When Congress approves my request -- and I fully expect them to go along with me on this -- we will have more than doubled the program's funding over the past three years.

Of course, in education as in other fields, government is only one part of the larger solution. Real progress in America comes from strong families and communities, from committed individuals binding together in common purpose -- whether it's a church congregation opening a day care center in its neighborhood, or parents taking a little extra time to read to their children. No government program alone can guarantee that children start school ready to learn. No government program can take the place of parents and communities that nurture the children who otherwise might have been left behind.

But in Head Start, we've found a government program that works to strengthen communities and families for the future. Time has proved that Head Start brings out the best in us. Last year, more than 800,000 Americans gave of themselves by volunteering in a Head Start program. You can see it right here at the Emily Harris Head Start program, where the entire staff, including volunteers, make sure their young pupils get the skills that will stand them in good stead the rest of their lives. They learn about getting along and sharing with others, about independence and self-confidence.

Every parent here knows that Head Start is more than education. It provides hot meals, and ensures that children receive immunizations and access to needed social services, health and dental care. Dr. Louis Sullivan, whose department does a such splendid job in administering Head Start, knows from personal experience the importance of nurturing the body as well as the mind.

Most of all, Head Start is about family. Head Start couldn't be the success it's been without the direct involvement of parents. Governing councils give parents the opportunity to set the program's direction. Head Start brings parents into the classroom -- and into the learning process. They attend child care workshops; they learn how to prepare well balanced meals. All of these serve to reinvigorate those family values that are the true key to a happy, wholesome, productive life.

Head Start works, but it's not perfect. We're committed to making a good program better. Over the past three years we've made sure these increased funds best serve the needs of families. We've made Family Service Centers part of Head Start to provide substance abuse counseling and job training for parents who need them. We've encouraged every Head Start program to offer adult literacy classes for Head Start parents.

But our greatest challenge lies in ensuring that when children leave Head Start, ready to learn, they enter an educational system where they can learn. We're helping with a head start; let's make sure that they cross the finish line, too, prepared to be leaders of the next century.

I'm proud to be here, and I'm honored that you've shared your fine work with me today.

Dear Ms. Hewell:

It was with considerable puzzlement that we received the news that President Bush's handwritten note card to President Menem was not in the envelope sent to Ambassador De Rozas last week.

We have talked with all the people who were responsible for processing the card without finding it or determining how it might have been mishandled.

We continue to hope that it will be found.

Until then, it seems best to send you a photostatic copy to insure that, at least, President Bush's thoughts be communicated in a timely fashion to President Menem.

Many Texas incumbents unopposed in primaries

By Todd J. Gillman

Staff Writer of The Dallas Morning News

Texas will send three more representatives to Congress next year, but as the filing deadline passed Friday it became apparent that the delegation may not look too different.

All 27 Texas congressmen filed for re-election, including 12 Democrats and five Republicans who escaped challenge in the March 10 party primaries.

Analysts said that the power of the officeholders, such as their strong name identification and ability to raise large amounts of money, probably scared off many opponents.

"It's just so difficult to tackle an incumbent," said Allan Saxe, a political scientist at the University of Texas at Arlington. "If they're doing their job right, they've got a great organized cadre of voters that they can pull out."

Rob Mosbacher, a Houston Republican who is chairman of a Texas group favoring term limitations for politicians, said challengers need about $1 million to unseat a congressman.

"It is an extremely uphill climb," Mr. Mosbacher said, adding that "96 percent or more of the House has gotten re-elected in recent years, and it's not because people are 96 percent happy. It's because the deck is stacked so much in favor of the incumbents, they feel they have no choice."

Critics say limiting terms will just drive out the good lawmakers along with the bad, instead of leaving those decisions to the voters and create a system run by bureaucrats.

Friday was the last day to file for a spot on the March 10 primary ballot.

Texas' three new congressional districts, added in Dallas, Houston and South Texas because of the state's population increases, are designed to boost the state's minority representation. The current 27-member delegation has four Hispanics and one black.

Three candidates won a free ride to the U.S. Capitol — by the deadline, no one else of either party registered to run for these seats.

They were U.S. Rep. Henry Gonzalez, D-San Antonio; U.S. Rep. Bill Archer, R-Houston; and Frank Tejeda, a Democratic state senator from San Antonio.

Democrats dominate the current delegation with 19 of 27 seats.

"I think we're going to have a good Democratic year," said Ed Martin, state Democratic executive director. But he said that he doesn't expect any of the eight GOP incumbents to be unseated.

Karen Hughes, executive director of state Republican Party, said that, based on name strength in U.S. Senate and presidential races, her party ought to control nearly half the House delegation, not just eight seats.

Still, Ms. Hughes predicted tough races for Democratic incumbents Jim Chapman of Texarkana, Charles Wilson of Lufkin, Bill Sarpalius of Amarillo and Albert Bustamante in San Antonio.

Mr. Martin called that prediction "fantasy," and he dismissed Republican complaints about the district map, saying that it protects the current partisan balance.

Mr. Sarpalius drew no primary opposition in District 13.

Two Republicans who formerly held that seat — Amarillo lawyer Beau Boulter and Pampa rancher Bob Price — are among four candidates battling for the right to challenge Mr. Sarpalius in November.

The new 30th district in the Dallas area pits Democratic state Sen. Eddie Bernice Johnson against Democratic challenger Adolph Hauntz. Lucy Cain faces Kelvin Malone on the Republican side.

In another Dallas area race, 3rd District Republican incumbent Sam Johnson, who took office last year, faces a challenge from fellow Republican David Corley. A Plano accountant, Mr. Corley sought the 3rd District nomination last year when then-Rep. Steve Bartlett resigned to run for mayor of Dallas.

Two powerful delegation members face challenges — Jack Brooks, D-Beaumont, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee; E. "Kika" de la Garza, D-Mission, chairman of the House Agriculture Committee; and J.J. "Jake" Pickle, D-Austin.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: Follow Up to Your Address to the Senior Executive Service

Two years ago, you addressed the SES career service members at Constitution Hall. At that time you strongly encouraged America's young people to pursue careers in public service. I recall also your asking us at the first Cabinet meeting at Blair House to hire women and minorities.

Following your address, we undertook an aggressive recruitment program at EPA to attract the kind of talented and committed young people in which you can take special pride. I want you to know that we are meeting your expectations. We recently completed a survey of some 160 new entrants to EPA, learning the following about these young public servants:

- ° Ninety-six percent of those interviewed said they had joined EPA principally because of a chance to do something worthwhile. Forty-four percent said salary was a very important factor. The public service opportunity matters to our new hires.
- ° Our workforce is becoming more committed to making decisions based on risk rather than theory or ideology. The great majority of our new employees said they were attracted to EPA because of its commitment to scientific research and risk-based decision making.
- ° We have a diverse workforce. The 160 new entrants surveyed come from 137 universities all across the country. Of the 160, 50 percent are women and 20 percent are minorities.

We have good success attracting minorities and women at the entry level. Our challenge is attracting them at mid and senior levels. To enlarge the pools of minority professionals at more senior levels, we are building solid working relationships with a number of colleges and universities through our Minority Academic Institutions Task Force. We also helped launch the Environmental Science and Management Fellows Program at Tufts University for mid-career minority professionals.

Bill

William K. Reilly

P.S. Of our 3000 new hires during the past 3 years 35 percent are minorities. Minorities constitute 10 no. a. of management here.

Jerry Blakely whom you may know from his part in donating the property for President Reagan's library is my partner in this business. He told me that he was scheduled with yourself and others at the White House for lunch yesterday and noted that I should drop you this personal note of greetings along with a request that if it were at all possible my wife and I would very much appreciate greeting you personally this afternoon. We will certainly be cheering you on at the dinner this evening. Sincerely

I'm back!!! On the same subject.

I was sorry to see Yang getting into the Devroy, Poast Editor mde today. They made a good trip to Atlanta a failure- hard to see hopw they could do it; but in focusing on the benediction from Coretta's preacher daughter (she has no child~~en~~ Coretta tells me) they managed to do that which I thought they'd find very difficult.

In comes Charlie Bartlett's memo- I send it JUST FYI. I think he is ~~wrote~~ about the change in the way speeches etc are reported. In Yang's story there was no mention of what I actually said (I think that;s accurate)

Anyway- I feel better now-blowing off steam. Reminds me of the story of the guy in the field praying to the Lord. "M<y crops are dead, my wife has left me, my daughter is sick-what is it Lord?"

The clouds part- a voice comes down from Heaven "Son, There is something about you that ~~pass~~ses me off!"

I fear there is something about me that has that effect on some at the Post.

Memo to the President
from Charley Bartlett

Reading the transcript of all your talks in New Hampshire, I was very impressed by what you had to say and by the way in which you covered the tender points. I was also impressed by how badly the trip was reported, particularly by Dowd and Devroy. There was a time, not too long ago, when Presidents had the advantage of having what they said fully reported. The idea then was that the President's ideas were important and should be conveyed as accurately and fully as possible to the public. These reporters were clearly more concerned with conveying their own impressionistic views of the day; the aim is clearly to make the reporting lively and punchy.

This current style of reporting is what gave validity to the Reagan practice of focussing on a single theme and stressing it again and again. It seems to me that what has been missing in your communications on domestic matters has been a single theme frequently repeated. The best remedy, it seems to me, will be a focus on a single theme to which you can append your range of initiatives.

In that connection I enclose some notes taken by my assistant, Yanina Karasak, on testimony by Isabel Sawhill of the Urban Institute at a Teddy Kennedy hearing this Thursday. It occurs to me that her phrase "human resources investments" could become a resonant theme totally consistent with what you have advocated to date in terms of education, voluntarism, etc.

She makes the point that the future lies in the quality of the work force. One of her important points is that the increase in income inequality over the past two decades is NOT due to tax policy but to the growing inequality in the labor market where higher pay has been and is being offered to the better educated and more experienced workers.

I don't see how a theme focussed on developing our people can fail to turn the mood. This is an era of self-improvement and we get depressed when we contemplate the people who aren't making it, the homeless and the urban black young.

RE: Your memo of January 15, 1992

We are now considering some re-organization in the White House that will hopefully do that which you suggest in paragraph one.

You might be right about a commission for financial regulatory reform; but I hate to study the darn thing more. I think the comprehensive bill represents the answer. Maybe we can do better on getting it through Congress, though this year is going to be hell on getting anything positive done.

Regarding Federal District Court, Ohio. I'll pass that along to Boyden Gray who works with Justice on all this. Walinski sounds good. Also, I'll tell our glass ceiling woman about Carol Cox Waite. Columbus, Ohio -- that one has been conveyed to Kathy Super, my scheduler.

ASSOCIATION of BANK HOLDING COMPANIESTHOMAS LUDLOW ASHLEY
PRESIDENT730 FIFTEENTH STREET, N.W., WASHINGTON, D.C. 20005
(202) 393-1169

January 15, 1992

TO: President BushFROM: Lud Ashley

1. Glad to have you back.

2. Unless you have a secret pact or a magic wand, there will be problems getting your growth package through a hostile Democratic Congress whose election-year strategy will be to pin the economy on you. Reports on the content of your package indicate it will include proposals that involve several departments -- Treasury, HUD, HHS, etc. This raises management problems in the Administration as well as in Congress, where multiple committee jurisdictions will be involved on both sides of the Capitol.

Would it make sense for you to establish a special White House task force to be in charge of the management of the economic package, headed by someone like Barber Conable or Bill Frenzel who would have Cabinet rank? If that person were to be responsible only to you, and was supported by top people in the relevant departments, I think prospects for getting the several components of the growth package through Congress expeditiously would be much enhanced. It would demonstrate to the public and to Congress that you are giving growth initiatives special priority through a command structure that gives undiluted attention to the task and keeps you much more directly involved in the process than through the usual delegation of authority to department heads.

A 3. If you're up for another gratuitous suggestion, it would be that you give some thought to calling for the establishment of a bipartisan blue-ribbon commission, such as those that dealt with Social Security reform and defense base closures, to craft a comprehensive new regulatory framework for the nation's financial services industry. Legislation to reform the banking system has been considered by Congress every year since 1981, and yet no broad-gauged reform bill has passed or is remotely likely to be enacted in the near future. Last year's legislative debacle, despite overwhelming agreement that the existing bank regulatory system needs to be fixed, demonstrated once again that Congress simply isn't organized in a way that allows it to come to grips with the complexities of bank reform and to craft a comprehensive solution. You know the reasons: the manipulation of conflicting jurisdictional claims to stall and even kill consideration; interest groups intent on preserving their corner of the market; fear of political backlash from another thrift-type bailout; etc., etc., etc. In effect, the commission would use 1992 to build a consensus for a comprehensive bank reform package for 1993 and beyond and to develop coherent strategies for getting that package enacted. The success of the Social Security and Defense Base

Closure commissions is attributable to the crucial strategy of having the commissions' final report submitted to the Administration for approval and then to Congress under a "take it or leave it all" provision. In effect, this process circumvents the jurisdictional impediments and parliamentary procedures which have proved fatal to bank reform over the past decade. In my view, Congressional leadership understands the need for bank reform and might welcome this kind of commission as more feasible than the kind of Congressional reorganization that is needed before comprehensive bank reform can be considered expeditiously and without prejudice by that body.

4. There's been a vacancy for nearly two years in the Federal District Court, Northern District, Western Division that Justice is now moving to fill. Of the people on the short list, Richard Walinski is the man. He's the top guy at Cooper, Straub, Walinski and Cramer, one of the best law firms in Ohio. He's a good Republican, a brilliant lawyer in the eyes of his peers, a fine human being and would be a very popular choice both in the business community and the large Polish-American populace in Northwestern Ohio.

5. Apparently there is an invisible line known as the "glass ceiling" which exists in corporate (and other) America which prevents a woman from rising to the top. Last year's Civil Rights Act established a Presidential commission on the glass ceiling to be chaired by the Secretary of Labor to study this and to make recommendations as to how to break the glass or whatever. You appoint six to the Commission, and my candidate — Carol Cox Wait — wants to be one of the six. She should be. She is president of her own company (Carol Cox and Associates, Inc., Washington, D.C.), as well as President and Executive Officer of the Committee for a Responsible Federal Budget. As a Board member of that Committee, I've known Carol for ten years or so and she is a remarkable person. Among those who would happily testify in her behalf are such other Board members as Roy Ash, Jim Lynn, Jim Miller, Pete Peterson, Bob Kerr, Arthur Levitt, Leland Prussia, Elmer Staats and Paul Volcker.

6. I don't know what your schedule looks like for May 14-16 but Columbus, Ohio, is going to be the principal site of festivities celebrating the 500th Anniversary of Christopher's trip to the New World. There are all kinds of events and activities scheduled throughout the spring and summer, which is one reason my Association of Bank Holding Companies is holding its Annual Meeting there in mid-May. It might be a good trip for you.

I am sure John Sununu reported and you are aware that my friends and I not only voted for you in the primary, but assisted you in your victory in New Hampshire, working then and throughout the rest of the 1988 campaign primarily with Lee, and as a Senior Advisor to your Transition Team.

Since Lee's tragic illness and death, I attempted to be of service to you by offering help to John Sununu -- who frankly was not interested. I never knew if I was being sent a message from you.

Now it seems to me that your tremendous accomplishments are being undermined by tough politics at a time when Lee and others are sorely missed. Bob Teeter, who sees this thing right, suggested that I might be of assistance.

Frankly, like you, I miss Lee and I miss the inclusiveness that he brought with him. Some people like the trappings of government, some people like the action of politics. Like Lee, I prefer the action and, like Lee, I'm good at it, as you know.

Tough times require tough people, and these are tough times. Your record deserved to go unchallenged in the Republican Primary and deserves four more years to win the battle on the domestic front as you have won it on the world stage.

WASHINGTON

Dear Taro:

Thank you for your letter marking the end of your tenure as Foreign Minister. Your devotion to U.S.-Japan relations has served both countries well, and I am certain that your continuing contributions as Chairman of the Japan-U.S. Parliamentary Association will help us achieve even more.

I agree fully with the sentiments you expressed in your letter. There is no question that we need to continue our close consultation as we step up to new challenges in the post-Cold War period. I am pleased that we achieved the Tokyo Declaration during my recent visit to Japan, and I am encouraged that we have set out a productive course of cooperation in our Action Plan. We have set the foundation for unprecedented U.S.-Japanese cooperation in the future.

Thank you for the kindness and consideration you conveyed in your letter. Barbara and I wish you all the best.

Sincerely,

His Excellency Taro Nakayama
Chairman
The Japan-U.S. Parliamentary Association

MINISTRY OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS
TOKYO, JAPAN

Translation

November 5, 1991

Dear Mr. President,

With the resignation of the Kaifu Cabinet on November 5, I stepped down as Minister for Foreign Affairs.

The world has experienced tremendous changes during the two years of my tenure. I devoted myself to the promotion of Japan-U.S. relations with your support and cooperation over the past two years. These were really challenging but worthwhile two years.

The Gulf Crisis has proved that the world confronts various uncertainties in the post Cold War period. The tasks that our two countries face in today's rapidly changing world is numerous, and the need for us to further cooperate to deal with them is greater than ever. I believe, however, that the joint efforts by our two countries can resolve whatever problems we might encounter in the future.

I

The President
The White House
Washington, D.C. 20500
U. S. A.

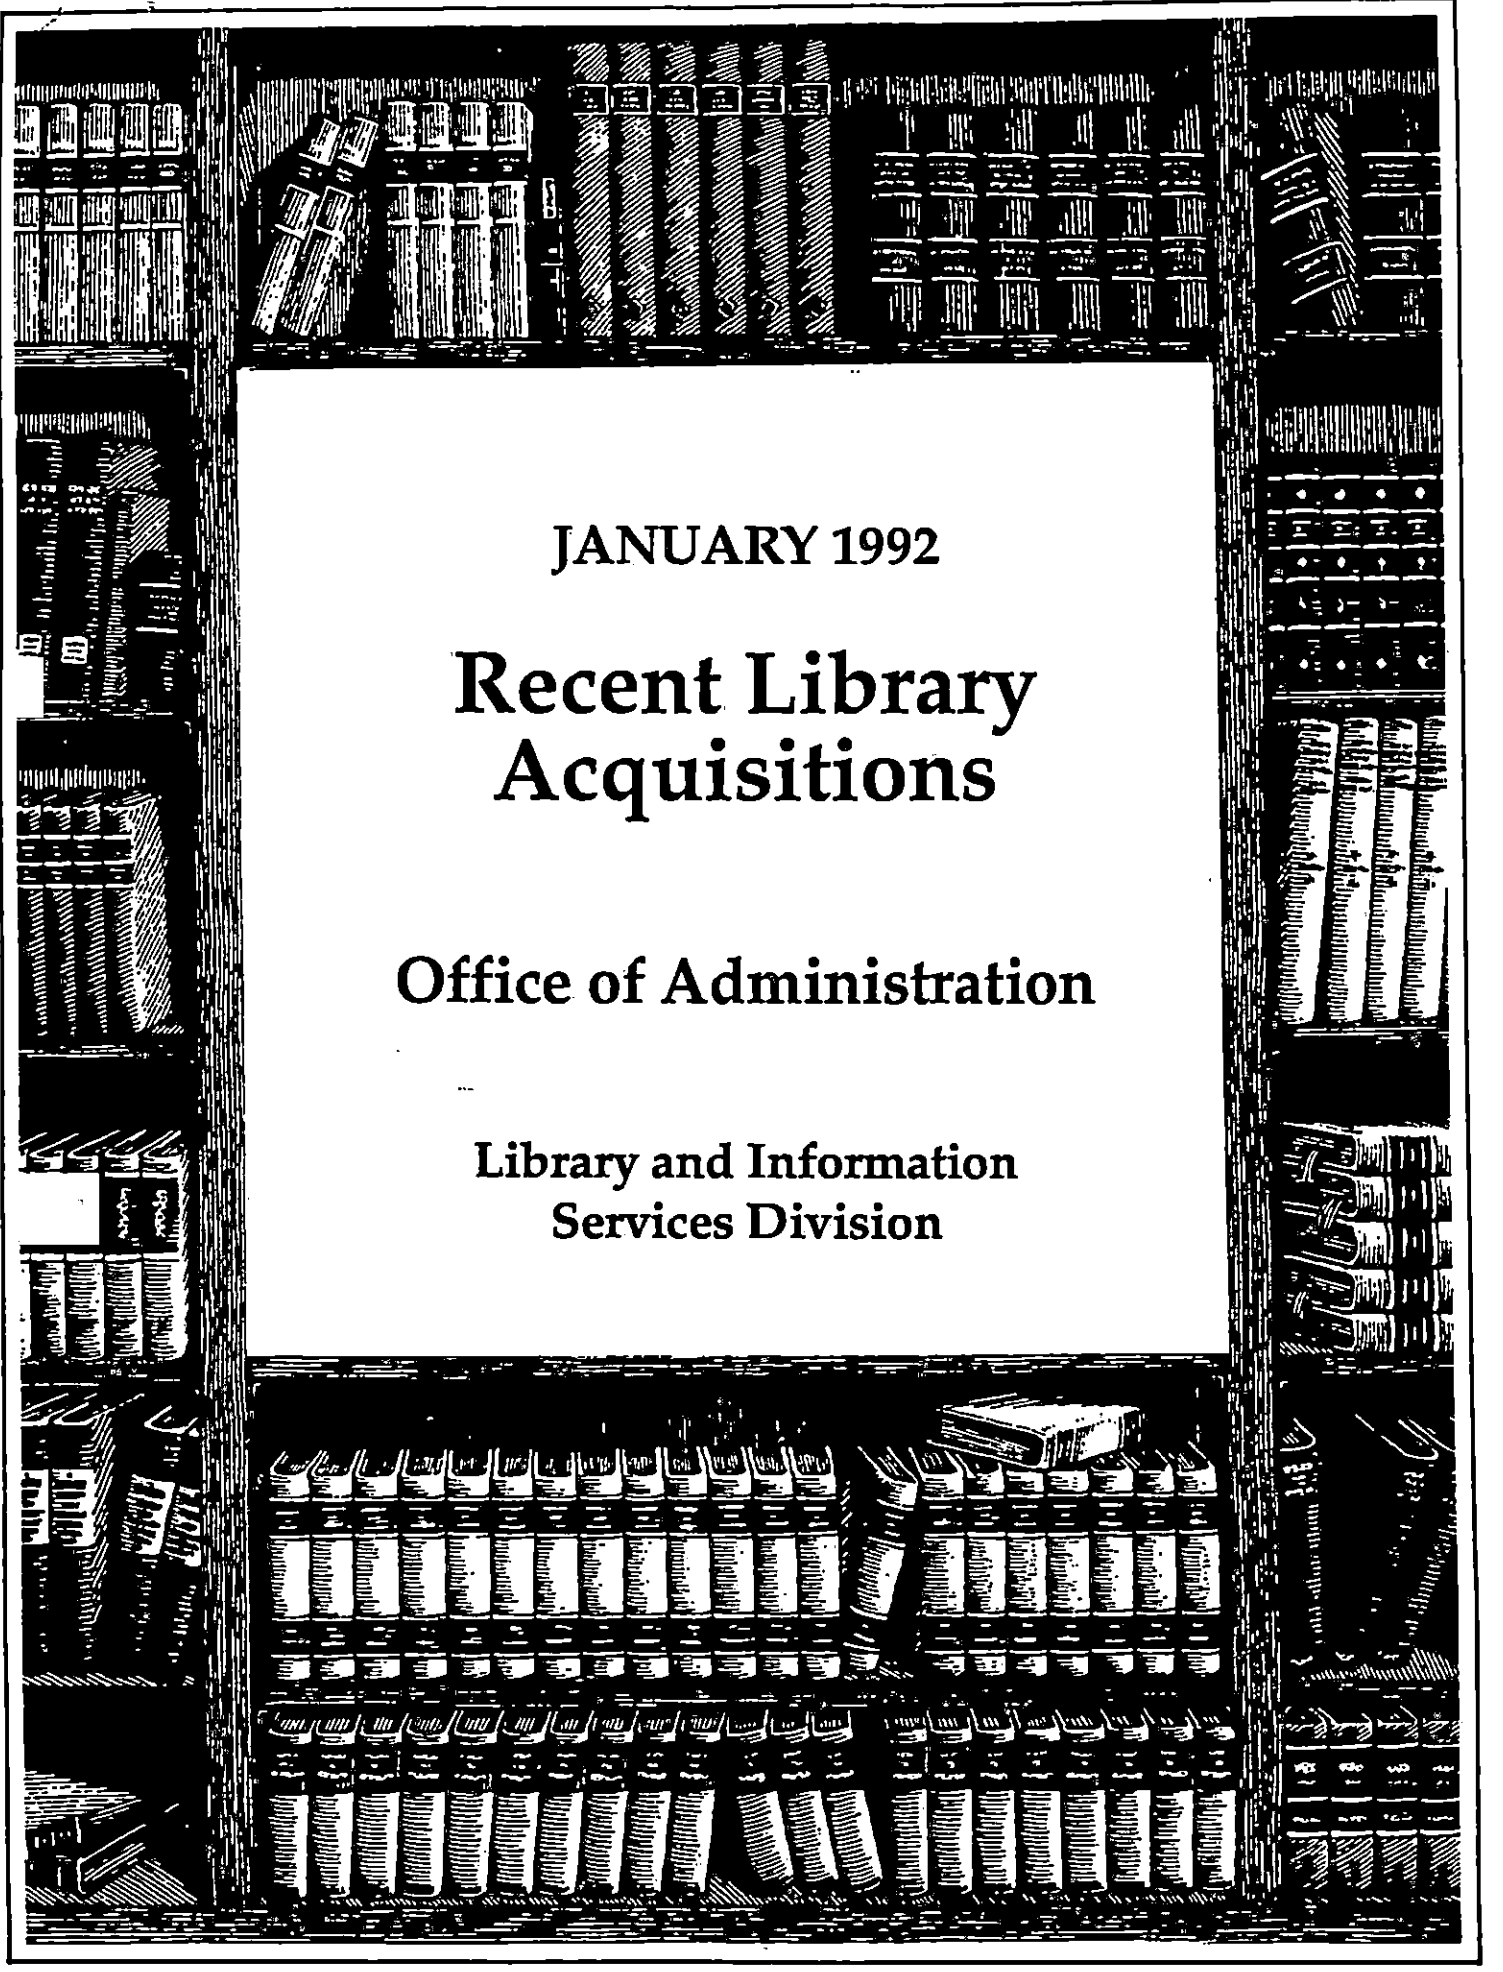

I have great expectation for your continued interest in enhancing Japan-U.S. relations. For my part, I will do my best to promote the relations as Chairman of the Japan-U.S. Parliamentary Association.

Wishing for the continued health and happiness of you and your family,

Sincerely yours,

/s/

Taro Nakayama
Minister for Foreign Affairs of Japan

Dear Charlie:

The grey suiting with only a modest amount of polyester shine is a fine looking unit; and it may well send a message of confidence and recovery. Your man, our man, Lopez is starring these days. Many Thanks.

As to ms. Sawhill's approach. I don't like her and Kennedy's answers, I do like her Human Resources Investement phrase. Kennedy would totally gut the Defense budget and forget about the domestic spending caps, too.... a no go, one that would send the interest rates skyrocketing.

Since your letter the Post did to me in Atlanta that which they did in N>H>. The M>L>King event went very well, but Yang settles on the prayer of a Coretta's daughter to make it all negative-AT least the NYT repeated a little of what I said-just a little. This is an ugly time and I fear it will stay that way all year. "never complain-never explain!!" however. your comment on that are 'right on' -

The economy will turn. I will propose more sensible stimuli and I shall overcome.

I need friends though, so keep the memos coming.

Love to martha.

Dear Steve,

Only after I left did I read that nice letter you passed on to me. I enjoyed my brief stay there at the end of an hectic day. I felt the day went well and the Rotary event was nice icing for the cake.

I did indeed see Jerry Blakely in D.C. He is terrific.

Many thanks for your good letter, your hospitality, and your words of support.

Forgive me for trying my new self-typed computer technique on you.

As owner of the Sheraton Portsmouth I'd like to welcome you to Portsmouth. As a supporter and neighbor of yours at Goose Rocks Beach for the past thirty-five years or so, I would like to personally extend my best wishes for a successful visit.

Jerry Blakely whom you may know from his part in donating the property for President Reagan's library is my partner in this business. He told me that he was scheduled with yourself and others at the White House for lunch yesterday and noted that I should drop you this personal note of greetings along with a request that if it were at all possible my wife and I would very much appreciate greeting you personally this afternoon. We will certainly be cheering you on at the dinner this evening. Sincerely

SUBJECT: Follow Up to Your Address to the Senior Executive Service

Two years ago, you addressed the SES career service members at Constitution Hall. At that time you strongly encouraged America's young people to pursue careers in public service. I recall also your asking us at the first Cabinet meeting at Blair House to hire women and minorities.

Following your address, we undertook an aggressive recruitment program at EPA to attract the kind of talented and committed young people in which you can take special pride. I want you to know that we are meeting your expectations. We recently completed a survey of some 160 new entrants to EPA, learning the following about these young public servants:

- Ninety-six percent of those interviewed said they had joined EPA principally because of a chance to do something worthwhile. Forty-four percent said salary was a very important factor. The public service opportunity matters to our new hires.
- Our workforce is becoming more committed to making decisions based on risk rather than theory or ideology. The great majority of our new employees said they were attracted to EPA because of its commitment to scientific research and risk-based decision making.
- We have a diverse workforce. The 160 new entrants surveyed come from 137 universities all across the country. Of the 160, 50 percent are women and 20 percent are minorities.

We have good success attracting minorities and women at the entry level. Our challenge is attracting them at mid and senior levels. To enlarge the pools of minority professionals at more senior levels, we are building solid working relationships with a number of colleges and universities through our Minority Academic Institutions Task Force. We also helped launch the Environmental Science and Management Fellows Program at Tufts University for mid-career minority professionals.

Bill

Dear Sam:

I am enclosing herewith a Memorandum recommending the topics and themes of two speeches that I believe the President should give before the end of January. I hope you will turn it over to one of your bright special assistants, have him or her read it and see if there is anything in either speech which may be of help.

Happy New Year!

SUBJECT: Two Proposed Speeches the President Should Give Within Two Days of Each Other: One on Foreign Policy, the Other on an Economic Plan for Recovery

✓ It is important to the country, the Republican Party and things about which you and I have a special and common interest that President Bush be re-elected and by a substantial margin. "Every President in trouble -- the only kind we [ever had] was surrounded by battalions of inside advisors, but like a ✓ man facing a serious operation, he usually felt the need for a second opinion." Reston, Deadline p. 162 (1991) Please accept those herein as a second opinion from the disinterested mind of an "outsider."

The President, on Tuesday, January 28th, as he has already promised, has to devote a large segment of his State of the Union address to the economic situation and what programs he will recommend to Congress and the American people to get us out of the current recession. This will and should take up the majority of the speech.

However, I think it is essential that two days before the State of the Union address the President gives a speech directed mainly to foreign policy. At the end he would say explicitly that 48 hours hence he will devote the major part of his State of the Union to the economic situation.

My reasons for the recommendation that he first give a speech directed to foreign policy issues include:

1. What has happened in Europe and the Soviet Union in the last twelve months represents a major U.S. victory.

2. Too often Americans, led by the press, say: "Don't talk about what you did for me yesterday, but what are you going to do tomorrow?"

✓ 3. The Administration should not be misled by the press and Democratic leadership to direct the present debate away from one of the President's strengths and an area in which his success has been phenomenal. In modern history there has been no other political leader who has had such widespread contacts with other world leaders or has formed such successful coalitions.

4. One of the reasons for our economic problems today is that American political leadership from President Truman on felt that the United States must invest substantial financial assets in building a strong defense and providing aid throughout the world in order eventually to cause the Soviets and Chinese to back down.

5. We have had a degree of success more than anyone imagined and yet our success is being treated as if it were ending an epoch with a whimper and not a big bang.

I will try to outline an approach for such a foreign policy speech but first, I suggest that its setting is of some importance. It should be held under joint sponsorship by the AEI, The Heritage Foundation, Brookings and those universities which have major foreign policy centers. The reason is that one theme of the speech should be that scholars and foreign policy experts have to think anew to develop U.S. policies for the "new world order."

The points that the President may wish to make and the themes of such a foreign policy speech could be as follows:

1. Soon after Potsdam and the surrender of Japan, it became clear that the Soviets would not be content to withdraw their troops to their original boundaries. In fact, just before the Japanese surrendered, the Soviets, contrary to President Truman's desires, invaded Manchuria. It was also clear that Western Europe had been devastated and in the absence of quick economic revival and activities that would promote democracy there was the threat that all of Europe would fall under yet another totalitarian regime or regimes that would have extreme socialism or Communism as their theoretical economic base.

2. The first major threat to the newly established world peace after the surrender of Japan was the Soviet's threatened invasion of Greece and Turkey. President Truman announced the Truman Doctrine drawing a line. If the Soviets moved beyond that line, they could expect U.S. counteraction. President Truman, General Marshall, and Dean Acheson along with Senator Vandenberg, a Republican Senator from Michigan, and other Republicans and leading Democrats in the Senate correctly took the position that politics ended at the U.S. borders and we should have a bipartisan foreign policy.

3. Those of us over 45 remember some of the exciting world events of this post-World War II era, including:

- a. The Airlift to break the Berlin Blockade;
- b. The Marshall Plan;
- c. Eisenhower's recall from the Presidency at Columbia University to make a survey of Europe and his wonderful speech which inducing the Congress to authorize the placement of six divisions in Europe;
- d. Kennedy's sending U.S. troops to run the Communist blockade into Berlin and his "I am a Berliner" speech at the Berlin wall;
- e. The Cuban Missile Crisis;
- f. Reagan's renewal of tactical nuclear weapons in Europe; and
- g. Ford's recapture of the Maraquez (obviously, your people can think of better instances).

4. The U.S. also -- admittedly educated by that farsighted Frenchman, Jean Monnet -- thought that Europe ought to think in terms of economic union which led to the Treaty of Rome establishing the European Economic Community and thereafter creating the European Free Trade Association, the joint fruits of which today are the European Common Market, hopefully effective by the end of this year (1992).

The above part of the speech should recall some of the great issues and events from 1947 to 1990 in Europe, dramatically as Edward R. Murrow would do. Names of those who played key roles should be used since even though institutions are more important than human beings, outstanding human beings nevertheless have the power to transform and enrich what institutions pass on to succeeding generations. And we need leaders today who are other than basketball stars and singers. Finally, it is important to recall that those who render public service are often exciting and important figures.

5. Every American President from Truman, Eisenhower, Kennedy, Johnson, Nixon, Ford, Carter and Reagan and the overwhelming majority of Members of Congress thought that in addition to solving our problems at home it was essential we remain strong in Europe and throughout the world to offset the challenges by the Soviets.

6. It is interesting to look at the federal budgets for each of the years since 1947 and see that _____% of our Gross National Product was devoted to defense and thus _____% of each year's budget was devoted to defense: These are the figures (produce two charts). The similarities are striking.

✓ 7. At the same time it was important to help Japan (which also had been devastated by the war) to regain its economic vitality and also to hold down the threats of intrusion into neighbors' territory in that part of the world. China under the Communists became a more potent threat and at times purported to be on cooperative terms with the Soviets. The U.S. devoted lives and fortune to preserving South Korea and preventing the Communists from trying to take over Japan; as well as fighting a war in Vietnam.

8. The U.S. sought no territory or domination. Our objective was only that other nations live within their borders and that governments hopefully adopt some form of democracy and economic system based upon private ownership. We constantly devoted time and negotiations to those objectives. Some of our successes:

- a. Various arms control agreements;
- b. Various agreements to cease fighting in many areas of the world;
- c. Israel-Egyptian accord; and attempts to cause Israel and its Arab neighbors to settle their differences peacefully;
- d. Trying to eliminate apartheid in South Africa; and
- e. The Belgian Congo.

9. There were other threats to civility and peace occurring in the world, most notably Iran and Iraq and South Africa, where we pushed hard to bring about peaceful and desirable change.

10. Finally, when Saddam Hussein madly threatened its neighbor, Kuwait, we organized a world-wide effort to stop that and forced Hussein to retreat to his borders.

11. Anyone who surveys this 44 year history will recognize:

- a. That the forces of liberty, democracy and private capitalism, or at least economic systems similar to the United States, have prevailed in the main struggles.
- b. Of course, we made mistakes along the way and in certain instances spent more than we should.
- c. The efforts and philosophy outlined above were a common theme of each President from Truman on.

12. It was a very costly effort which is one of the principal reasons that our public federal debt which was _____ in 1947 is now _____.

13. But we and the Western world have prevailed and I will not waste your time describing the cost to us and the world if we had failed. No American ever measures liberty in terms of dollars. But even more important, no American has had to face the problem of how to revive the United States after a devastating atomic attack, nor have we ever been occupied for years by a foreign power.

14. In the course of our world involvement and leadership, economic factors began to play a much greater role. Perhaps we did not fully recognize this force after 1947 as soon as we should have. For people everywhere began to realize that a healthy diet, a good education, housing, and other desirable standards of living depend upon the ability of a nation to be productive and provide meaningful employment for all its people.

15. We now have many new foreign policy circumstances facing us, some issues are clear:

- a. What changes, if any, should be made in NATO?

- b. What is the appropriate U.S. troop level in Europe and Asia?
- c. How do we continue to provide for the development of the European Common Market, and fully support it, yet make sure that our commitment and sacrifices over the years are recognized so that U.S. companies are not adversely affected?
- d. How do we persuade Japan to open up its markets to us as we have to them?
- e. How do we make sure that Japan treats us fairly for providing its defense shield and keeping the oil lanes open for their ships?
- f. Should we reexamine the defense and armaments restriction in the Japan and German constitutions in light of the Persian Gulf events?
- g. What is the correct defense posture in the Pacific, in Southeast Asia and in Europe?
- h. How do we increase the wonderful economic association and friendship with our close neighbors Canada and Mexico?
- i. Are special threats caused by governments unduly based upon religion such as in Iran and, perhaps Algeria?
- j. What changes, if any, should there be in the United Nation's structure?

(There are, of course, others which should also be listed.)

Our State Department, of course, has kept abreast of the issues and has done planning. However, it would be misleading the American people to say that we had documents that predicted a year ago that the Berlin Wall would come down, that the Russian troops would be removed from Eastern Germany and throughout Eastern Europe without an armed struggle. Even more, no one had drawn up memoranda that predicted the enormous changes in the political structure of the Soviet Union -- from totalitarian state to commonwealth of independent countries.

Sam, you now see why I recommend the audience I do for such a speech. The President would urge scholars to spend the next 60 days thinking through these issues, helping the State Department "Keep the world safe for democracy," and reviving the U.S. foreign economic position. The President could say that Jim Baker and Larry Eagleburger have already directed the State Department to become active in this process, and Brent Scowcroft has been working night and day.

(I would have the President continue)

I don't think I have to justify to an American audience which has gained so much from our American University system that even American Presidents need the advice of scholars before directing the country to new approaches in foreign policy. If there is any doubt, there's a wonderful story that James Reston tells in his memoir, DEADLINE:

"To relieve his frustrations in office, Acheson grew dahlias and took up cabinetmaking at his farm in Sandy Spring, Maryland, where he built a workshop for himself and a studio for his lovely wife, Alice, a talented painter. Sally and I went to dinner with them once, and Alice showed us a handsome new table he had brought into the hall of his Georgetown house. Mrs. Acheson explained: 'He likes to make these things. When he completes one, it either stands or falls. It's not like a foreign policy; he doesn't have to wait twenty-five years to see how the thing comes out.'"

As Truman with the help of Marshall and Acheson thought through the Marshall Plan and as George Kennan and others thought through containment and as _____ and _____ thought how you go about controlling nuclear weapons, I now urge scholars and State Department experts to think through new issues. Concurrently we are now increasing our attention to the economic situation some of which has been caused by our nation's extreme commitment to foreign policy issues since President Roosevelt recognized that we could not stay out of World War II. We hope those who we helped (especially Germany and Japan) will recognize the tremendous contribution we have made to their economic revitalization.

We also hope along with Congress that the Nation will work towards bettering our schools and create more job opportunities and develop plans which will cause our growth rate to move at least to 5 percent a year. Those issues I will talk about in detail two days from now, but I thought it important for the American people to realize that by risking our lives and fortunes over the past forty-four years we have accomplished for the first time in our modern history a world that is no longer threatened by the forces of Communism, or Nazism, or Franco Fascism or Tojo militarism.

II

The Economic Part of the State of the Union Address

Our Founding Fathers created a nation based upon the assumption that private free enterprise and the capitalistic system was the best guarantee for a free and open society. Free people, if permitted to be productive and not unduly restrained by government, offered, they believed, the best hope (1) of creating the wealth of a nation and (2) a political system in which democracy and a free open society would develop. A rereading of the history surrounding the adoption of the First Ten Amendments to the Constitution, which I did in preparation for my remarks at Madison's House at Montpelier, Virginia the other day, makes that crystal clear.

Certainly, events in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe over the past five years reaffirm the validity of what our forefathers believed in which is what just about every political leader who ever has risen to prominence in the United States believes in as well.

Nonetheless, from the beginning national leaders urged the Congress often to take steps which would promote the economy. I urge you to re-read The State of Manufacturing In The United States In 1789 by Alexander Hamilton in which he talks about the government help in building roads, canals and turnpikes in order to make the private economic system more viable.

Today, because of the Second World War and its 44 year aftermath which I outlined in a foreign policy speech two days ago, the U.S. has what is for all of us an undesirable public debt. In addition, we have a political understanding which is just about universal that increasing taxes will be counterproductive. We also know that there are many unmet needs. I have tried to devise a program which would not increase the public debt, not call for increased taxes and which will help us to repair more quickly our infrastructure and will also help us to develop more quickly our most valuable resource, the minds and educational and technological ability of our young. At the same time, I have determined to avoid the present popular thought in Congress that all of our problems can be avoided by drastically cutting the Defense Budget. The Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the Secretary of Defense are examining every way possible to reduce the Defense Budget. This Nation, however, has on at least three occasions in my memory risked disaster because it reduced its defenses too low, too fast. In World War I we were saved because France and Great Britain held the line until we were armed. In World War II Great Britain alone held the line until we were re-armed. In Korea only the brilliant military maneuvers of General MacArthur and the courage of the Marines, Air Force, Army and Navy were able to hold the line until the foolish cuts at the end of the Second World War could be reversed.

I have, as a young fighter pilot and later, as CIA Director and Ambassador to the United Nations and to China, and now as President of the United States, seen the advantage of having adequate military forces as a way of demonstrating to the enemy that the American people intend to remain free. Our Nation also has a duty of a productive return to civilian life to those who volunteered when the security threat was greater. I hope the Congress, and the American People agree that we have seen too vividly the effect of awesome military power to avoid war so we should not ignore recommendations of our Defense leaders, in which I include the Chairman and the Committees in the Congress which deal with such issues, and instead cut foolishly our Defense Budget.

These are the steps I intend to recommend to Congress:

✓ 1. In the last session of Congress we passed a Highway Bill, The Intermodal Surface Transportation Efficiency Act of 1991, which provides for the expenditure of $153 billion over the next five years. I will not increase that amount, but will try to get the money spent more quickly without increasing the annual appropriations. The plan I suggest is as follows:

✓ Congress has set forth the amount authorized in each of the next five years. Without stepping up the level of disbursements in any year, Congress can give assurance that such authorizations will be honored. States and cities can therefore pledge this commitment against bonds issued by them and underwritten by private concerns. Thus, for example, if a state could build a highway or a bridge in two years but under present law the appropriations cover five years, nevertheless the money will be there to be spent in the two years.

If done properly and without undue Congressional restraints, this program should create employment for _____ persons per year; _____% of which will be new jobs. Such programs should be developed in such a way as not only to get the trained blue collar and skilled tradesmen back to work but also create new first time job experience for the poor. Such programs, moreover, will create additional activity in financial institutions, giving them opportunities to make loans to help rebuild the nation's infrastructure. Additional financial actions will also be created by the proposals I made in point 3, as they will cause the private sector to invest more heavily in productive capital facilities.

✓ 2. I will direct the appropriate people in my Administration to see that government, federal, state and local governments will increase the expenditures for education by ten percent in order to accelerate our improvements in the Kindergarten through 12th year school system. In this process, I urge officials to take a look at all persons who will be released from the Armed Services to see whether or not their talent can be used effectively and productively in the educational system.

✓ 3. I believe that most thinking Americans will agree that when the private sector thinks that new investment and new research are worthwhile, new facilities are built and increased employment thereby results. Thus, every schoolboy knows that a special rate for capital gains, a provision that allows accelerated depreciation on certain types of investment and deductions of the cost for major research efforts are incentives to economic growth. I will propose all three of these and work with my economic advisors so that these incentives will produce a net increase in revenue rather than decrease.

✓ These first three recommendations, if enacted into law, will improve the education of our children and cause the modernization of our manufacturing and transportation facilities.

2 A special concern to me is created by news reports that some college graduates are finding it hard to get their first post-college job. I realize that industry to become more efficient and more productive has to restructure which sometimes results in job layoff. But I think it is short-sighted not to bring the new high school and college graduate into the work force. I have directed my Secretaries of Labor and of Commerce to study this issue in detail and report to me in sixty days with recommendations of how to solve or reduce the problem and I will then develop programs to accomplish the correct result.

✓ 4. I have also directed my Trade Representative and the Secretary of Commerce to tell me what steps have to be taken so that our trade deficit in each of the next three years will be reduced by one-third. I will take the steps to see such reductions are accomplished.

5. Next, the Congress and the Administration spent over a year trying to come up with a banking bill, at the end of which time we took care of only the shortfall in the FDIC too much stuff on this insurance and the S&L provisions and made some changes which increased regulation of our banks. But, in the main, the Congress rejected the Administration Proposals which would have strengthened our banks, permitted them to grow and compete with the foreign banks and would have made our banks more profitable. The banking industry has a lot to do with creating the wealth of our nation and making us competitive abroad. I've urged my Secretary of the Treasury to develop a bill that will do what we set out to do and I will then engage in meetings with the key congressional committees relative to the passage of this bill and if I cannot persuade them of the merits of this bill, I will take my case to the American public.

6. We also recognize there has been a fall-off in the real estate market -- I will urge the adoption of fiscal policies for the real estate industry -- to encourage them to take risks again. (Describe how this is to be done)

7. We have the most efficient agricultural system in the world but still certain nations do not have enough to feed themselves. Other nations have foolish protectionist policies that do not permit our agricultural goods and commodities to come into their market. I will never become "protectionist" but do not believe American agricultural interests should become "patsies" in the world markets. I will use all of my powers to open these international markets to American farmers.

8. Finally, one cannot be attuned to the American Industrial System without realizing that women and minorities still do not get their fair share of opportunities as easily as others do. As I have demonstrated, I will resist quotas even though some of my advisors tell me it will be politically costly for me. On the other hand, I urge all of our officials and those in the private sector as well -- to make employment decisions that include the poor and the disadvantaged -- assure women and minorities that they will get their fair share of employment.

I have set goals. I would like to see the growth rate increase to 3 1/2 percent to 4 percent per year and unemployment come down each month. I will watch closely. If they don't, I will be back to talk with you ninety days from now. As we crank up this tremendous productive machine I hope that Congress does not become counterproductive by enacting foolish regulatory laws or imposing more unreasonable costs on small business. I hope also that all employees, public and private, increase their productivity even more and realize the quality of what they turn out often makes up the difference between a U.S. sale or a foreign sale.

Employers, banks and the investment bankers should direct their efforts towards creating new industries, new technologies, not the buyout craze that marked the Eighties.^{1*}

¹ I assume the speech will have a section on medical care, but I am even more unqualified to correlate that part than those I have attempted to draft here.

I was delighted to get your letter; and, yes, Bob Teeter did tell me of your offer. He also told me that he, too, wanted you involved. All these campaign decisions are properly being handled by Bob Teeter, Fred Malek, and Bob Mosbacher. I urge you to stay in touch with them.

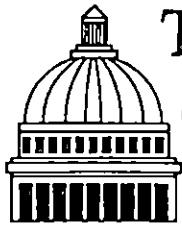

I was pleased with my initial foray into New Hampshire. This economy has just got to turn around and it will. Until then I will continue to take a pounding. Dear Mr. President,

I am sure John Sununu reported and you are aware that my friends and I not only voted for you in the primary, but assisted you in your victory in New Hampshire, working then and throughout the rest of the 1988 campaign primarily with Lee, and as a Senior Advisor to your Transition Team.

Since Lee's tragic illness and death, I attempted to be of service to you by offering help to John Sununu -- who frankly was not interested. I never knew if I was being sent a message from you.

Now it seems to me that your tremendous accomplishments are being undermined by tough politics at a time when Lee and others are sorely missed. Bob Teeter, who sees this thing right, suggested that I might be of assistance.

Frankly, like you, I miss Lee and I miss the inclusiveness that he brought with him. Some people like the trappings of government, some people like the action of politics. Like Lee, I prefer the action and, like Lee, I'm good at it, as you know.

Tough times require tough people, and these are tough times. Your record deserved to go unchallenged in the Republican Primary and deserves four more years to win the battle on the domestic front as you have won it on the world stage.

I would like to be a part of that fight, in fact, I miss being a part of it. I've had several conversations with Bob Teeter and he suggested that I could be useful and should drop you this note offering my help. If you'll have me I'd like to pitch in and do my part.

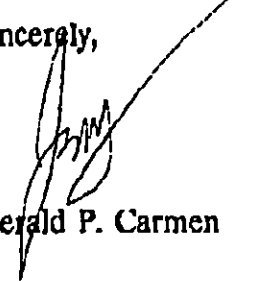

The New Hampshire situation frustrates me because I believe I can be so helpful there

Pine Needles Selected

THE USGA has accepted an invitation from Pine Needles Resort, in Southern Pines, N.C., to be host to the 51st U.S. Women's Open, scheduled for the summer of 1996.

Peggy Kirk Bell, winner of the USGA's Bob Jones Award for distinguished sportsmanship in golf, was instrumental in the selection of Pine Needles.

A member of the 1950 Curtis Cup team, she has achieved recognition as LPGA Teacher of the Year (1961) and Professional of the Year (1981).

Pine Needles, which was designed by Donald Ross and first opened in 1927, has been the site of two previous USGA championships, the 1989 Girls' Junior and the 1991 Senior Women's Amateur.

Honors and Awards

THE International Association of Golf Administrators has awarded its Distinguished Service Award to USGA President C. Grant Spaeth. It recognizes his contributions to golf, including his 14 years of service on the USGA Executive Committee.

The Metropolitan Golf Association is proud to present its 1991 Distinguished Service Award to Ann Beard, Chairman of the USGA Women's Committee. It acknowledges her distinguished service to golf, consistent with the valued standards and honorable traditions of the game.

The National Golf Foundation has awarded the 1991 Herb Graffis Award to the late P.J. Boatwright, Jr., former USGA Executive Director of Rules and Competitions. Named for the NGF's co-founder, the award has been presented annually since 1977 to recognize outstanding contributions in preserving the true spirit of the game.

The NGF also presented two other awards. Kerry Graham, the president of the LPGA Teaching Division, was named the recipient of the 1991 Joe Graffis Award. This honor, named after the NGF's other co-founder, salutes outstanding service and dedication to the educational advancement of golf.

And the Joe Jemsek family, of Burr Ridge, Illinois, was selected to receive the 1991 Jack Nicklaus Family Golf Award, acknowledging substantial contributions made to the game that exemplify the ideals of golf and family.

Top Pro

JOE JEMSEK, a former member of the USGA Executive Committee, has been named PGA Golf Professional of the Year for 1991. A Class A professional, Jemsek operates eight Chicago-area golf courses, among them the Dubsdread course at Cog Hill Golf Club, in Lemont, Illinois, which was the venue for the 1970 and 1989 Amateur Public Links and the 1987 Women's Amateur Public Links Championships.

It's nothing new for U.S. Presidents to invite victorious sportsmen to the White House to offer congratulations. It adds a new twist, however, when the President's grandfather was the one who established the competition. Thus, it was a special occasion when President George Bush lauded the victorious efforts of the 1991 Walker Cup team during their recent visit to the White House. After all, the Walker Cup was established by the President's maternal grandfather, George Herbert Walker, who served as USGA President in 1920.

EMBARGOED FOR RELEASE
UNTIL JANUARY 19, 1992

January 18, 1992

The President today recognized the volunteers of Fresh Start Surgical Gifts, Inc., of Encinitas, California, as the 671st Daily Point of Light for the Nation. More than 150 Fresh Start volunteers make a difference in the lives of hundreds of children throughout the country who are afflicted with physical deformities.

Nearly 75 doctors, nurses, and other medical professionals not only waive their fees but, with support from throughout the San Diego area and the children's home communities, also cover all costs related to reconstructive surgery -- including medicine, laboratory fees, and pre-and post-operative care. Due to the complicated nature of these operations, the children are transported free of charge to Fresh Start's facilities, where they are housed, fed, and cared for tenderly by community volunteers. Two area hotels, the Del Mar Hilton and the Radisson, offer free rooms to patients' families while their children undergo treatment. Bilingual residents and students from the University of California, San Diego School of Medicine volunteer to translate between the doctors, the patients, and their families.

Fresh Start's volunteer surgical staff treats young people throughout the year during sessions that begin every six weeks. Their efforts have given several hundred children from across the United States, as well as some from Mexico, South America, and Romania, a new and more positive outlook on life.

The President salutes the volunteers of Fresh Start Surgical Gifts for exemplifying his belief that "From now on in America, any definition of a successful life must include service to others."

Video Guide Shows Black Youth How To Succeed

an entire generation of Black youths. The time has come to devise new programs and strategies to counter the negative influences that threaten not only Black youths but also the future of American cities. We must now act to motivate, guide, promote self-awareness and build self-esteem among America's Black youth."

"It is particularly important that the Guide to Black Excellence features persons who have achieved success in a variety of fields including business, entertainment, and education," states Mrs. Eunice W. Johnson, secretary-treasurer of Johnson Publishing Company, Inc. "This video guide demonstrates to young people that there is no limit to what they can achieve in any area."

Linda Johnson Rice, president and chief operating officer of Johnson Publishing Company, Inc., and Tom Conrad, president of Conrad & Associates, Inc., are executive producers of the series. "We feel this series is especially significant for Black youth in their formative years because it features Black achievers to whom they can relate," states Mrs.

After luncheon, syndicated newspaper columnist Carl Rowan congratulates Secretary-Treasurer Johnson and President Rice.

While Publisher Johnson observes, First Lady Barbara Bush congratulates Mrs. Eunice W. Johnson, JPC secretary-treasurer, at a private White House meeting. Mrs. Bush also welcomes Maxima Corporation Chairman and CEO Joshua I. Smith, who is in the series.

Director Dr. James Comer are also featured. Award-winning actor Avery Brooks is the narrator.

The EBONY/JET "Guide to Black Excellence" was launched at a press conference and luncheon in Washington, D.C., attended by leaders in education, communications and government, followed by a private White House meeting with Mrs. Barbara Bush. Focusing on entrepreneurship, leadership, and entertainment and the arts, the three-videotape series includes accompanying guidebooks for parents, educators and young people created with the advice and consultation of Dr. James Comer and Dr. Edward Joyner, also a director of the Yale University Child Study Center.

During luncheon reception, President Rice greets Dr. Franklin L. Smith, superintendent of the Washington, D.C., public schools.

The EBONY/JET "Guide to Black Excellence," produced by Johnson Publishing Company, Inc. in association with Conrad and Associates, Inc., was created, according to Johnson Publishing Company, Inc. Publisher and CEO John H. Johnson, because, "We are losing everything you read in American books and the media, despite almost everything they tell our children in America, the tradition of excellence is a tradition unmatched by any other American group. It is a tradition of education and skills acquired by superhuman efforts... It is a tradition of doing more with less, of winning races with handicaps... It is a tradition, not to mince words, of supermen and superwomen who had to be twice as good and run twice as fast."

He added that EBONY/JET "Guide To Black Excellence" video series "calls us back to that tradition and tells us that Black children have always responded and will always respond to great and redemptive teaching in a climate of love and expectancy."

Corporate sponsors for the project are The Coca-Cola Company, The Prudential, Saturn, Sprint, and Xerox. Mr. Conrad points out, "It is critically important for American business to play a role in helping Black youths overcome the many obstacles in their path to success. I believe what attracted the corporate sponsors was that through hard work and a long-range focus on goals, those spotlighted represent true role models who should inspire Black youths throughout the country to demonstrate the excellence that exists within them all."

WALTER SCOTT'S

Personality Parade

Q. George Bush has been described by many as a first-rank President when it comes to foreign affairs but as an out-of-touch patrician who can't empathize with the common man's plight during economic hard times. How does Barbara Bush respond to this criticism of her husband?—D.E., Nashville, Tenn.

A. It makes the First Lady see red. "Nobody suffers more than George over the economy," she has said. However, while Mrs. Bush publicly blames the Democratic-controlled Congress for her husband's woes, in private she concedes that much of his image problem resides with staffers who have failed to portray him as a caring individual. She is hopping mad—and demanding that something be done—so look for a kinder, gentler George Bush on your nightly TV news shows.

A Little Rain and Frogs With Wings

When George Bush talks, people listen. But they're not always sure what he wants to say. Here, from the New Hampshire hustings, are some of the first examples of BushSpeak in the '92 campaign:

IRA WYMAN FOR NEWSWEEK

A way with words: Campaigner Bush

On the recession: "The guy over there at Pease—a woman, actually—she said something about a country-Western song, you know, about the train, a light at the end of the tunnel, I only hope it's not a train coming the other way. Well, I said to her, well, I'm a country-music fan. I love it, always have. Doesn't fit the mold of some of the columnists, I might add, but nevertheless—of what they think I ought to fit in, but I love it... But nevertheless, I said to them you know there's another one the Nitty Ditty Nitty City—that they did. And it says if you want to see a rainbow you've got to stand a little rain. We've had a little rain. New Hampshire has had too much rain. A lot of families are hurting."

On having faith: "Somebody said... we prayed for you over there. That was not just because I threw up on the prime minister of Japan either. Where was he when I needed him? But I said, Let me tell you something. And I say this—I don't know whether any ministers from the Episcopal Church are here. I hope so. But I said to him this. You're on to something here. You cannot be president of the United States if you don't have faith. Remember Lincoln, going to his knees in times of trial in the Civil War and all that stuff? You can't be. And we are blessed."

His wife: "Everybody's talking about where's Barbara, we miss her very, very much. And I told her I didn't need her here, I was not going to throw up. How many people here have had the flu?... I'd like a loan because it cost a lot to dry-clean a suit over there in Japan and the prime minister had a nice expensive one."

His health: "So don't feel sorry for—don't cry for me, Argentina. We've got problems... and I am blessed by good health."

His opponents: "I am sick and tired... of these carping little liberal Democrats jumping all over my you-know-what."

On extending unemployment benefits: "If a frog had wings, he wouldn't hit his tail on the ground. 'If.' Too hypothetical."

Bush to Propose $500 Million Rise In Budget for Head Start Program

By ROBERT PEAR
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18 — President Bush will propose an increase of more than 23 percent in Federal spending for preschool children in the Head Start program, and he will expand it to combat illiteracy and unemployment among parents of children enrolled in the program, Administration officials said today.

In his new budget request, to be submitted to Congress in 10 days, Mr. Bush will seek an increase of more than $500 million for the popular program, which now serves 621,000 children at a cost of $2.2 billion this year, the officials said.

The increase would be the largest since creation of Head Start in 1965. But it is less than what supporters of the program, including many Democrats in Congress, say is needed to guarantee access to Head Start for all children eligible on the basis of family income. The Democrats and other advocates of the program would increase the Head Start budget by $1 billion a year, to reach a total of nearly $8 billion by the end of 1997.

'A Tremendous Increase'

Wade F. Horn, the Federal Commissioner for Children, Youth and Families, said today that the extra money sought by Mr. Bush would permit more children from low-income families to enroll in Head Start. At present, he said, 60 percent of the eligible children enter school having had at least one year of Head Start.

Sarah M. Greene, executive director of the National Head Start Association, which represents parents and teachers of children in the program, said she had heard that Mr. Bush would seek "a tremendous increase" in spending for Head Start. But she said she did not know exactly how much the President would request.

In contrast to the estimates by Federal officials, Ms. Greene said "1.4 million children eligible for Head Start are not being served" because the program reaches only 28 percent of the two million youngsters eligible under Federal laws and regulations.

Mr. Bush is expected to announce some of his plans on Tuesday, when he visits a Head Start center in Catonsville, Md., outside Baltimore. The trip is meant to show that Mr. Bush, running for re-election in the midst of a recession, cares about domestic issues and social problems — that, as he said this week in New Hampshire: "I care. We're trying."

Nine out of 10 children in Head Start come from families with income below the official poverty level, which was $13,359 for a family of four in 1990. Children in Head Start receive instruction intended to foster their intellectual and emotional development. They also receive health-care services and well-balanced meals. Research has shown that children in Head Start perform better on preschool achievement tests than comparable children not enrolled in the program, and in later years they do better in school.

Mr. Horn, a child psychologist, said the Administration was shifting the emphasis of Head Start to make it "a two-generation program" that serves parents as well as children in low-income families. Thus, he said, the Government wants to have an adult literacy program in every Head Start center in the country by the end of this year.
