LETTER FROM BOB MOSBACHER

Dear Mr. President and Barbara,

What a wonderful evening for Georgette and me as well as our families and close friends!

The two of you showed that warmth caring and awareness that makes you unique and the great leaders you ..... how your sense of humor fits all this I don't know - but we love it, and you.

Now if the rest of us do our job right then re-election will go well. Happily I know you will be re-elected regardless. I feel this because the American people understand more than we realize in Washington. They know what you have accomplished and will accomplish in your second term.

Good luck with the State of the Union speech. I'll be in Los Angeles with our friends doing some "spinning."

Thank you both for doing so much for so many, but thank you for making our lives better and happier personally.

Love from Georgette and me

SHERATON WASHINGTON HOTEL
12:00 P.M.

President David Clark and Executive Director Brandt Gustafson -- and let me salute your leadership of the NRB. <sup>Former Secretary Elizabeth Dole</sup> ~~Secretary~~
Dole. FCC Chairman Sykes. I see my good friend Rev. Billy Graham and Jim Dobson. Ladies and gentlemen. ~~Fellow~~
~~communicators.~~ // This marks the fifth time I have had the honor of addressing the annual convention of the National Religious Broadcasters.

A year ago we met in the first week of a struggle to protect what is right, and true. I came before you to talk of what was not a Christian or Jewish war -- not a Moslem war. It was a just war. // In the Persian Gulf we fought for good versus evil / right versus wrong / dignity against oppression. America stood fast -- so that liberty could stand tall. //

Today, I want to thank you for helping America, as Christ ordained, be "a light unto the world." Your support honored the finest soldiers / sailors / Marines / airmen / and Coast Guardsmen any Nation has ever known. // What they did in war, let us now do in peace. // Just as our forces fought to defend all that is best in America, we need you to help instill the traditional values that make life and liberty worth defending. //

Let me begin with some good news ~~for modern man~~. According to Gallup surveys, no society is more religious than the United States of America. // Seven in ten Americans believe in life after death -- eight in ten that God works miracles. Nine in ten Americans pray. And more than ninety percent believe in God. // To which I say: Thank God. //

Now, I know this is an election year. ((I don't know about Damascus -- but this Primary Season, we're seeing a lot of conversions on the road to New Hampshire.)) // ~~We hear candidates promising this, and that -- espousing policies suddenly in fashion.~~ // Today, I want to speak of values which sustain America -- values that are always in fashion. /

The first value is not simply American -- but universal. I refer to the sanctity of life. ~~You know my position -- but I'll restate it. In the words of Deuteronomy: "Let us choose life."~~ and I will stand on the side of life. // ~~We need policies that encourage adoption, not abortion.~~ //

Next comes a value which gives each life meaning: The self-reliance central to the dignity of work. // Go to the barrios of San Antonio, or the suburbs of St. Paul. There you will find people who ask for only what our forefathers had: The same opportunity which helped us brave independence / push back the wilderness / win two World Wars / and create the highest standard of living in the history of man. //

The Bible reminds us: "By thy works shall Ye know them." What we must do is give working Americans the level playing field to keep us rich in goods, and spirit. //

Tomorrow, my State of the Union Address will detail how we can nurture creativity as old as 1776 -- harness it to the needs of a new American Century. // Remember: To this day, the only footprints on the moon are American footprints. / The only flag on the moon is the stars and stripes. // The knowledge that put it there is stamped: "Made in USA." // The world looks to us to lead -- and lead we will. // ~~Tune in tomorrow, and see if you don't agree. I will announce a program to help Americans~~ <sup>can</sup> outwork / outproduce / and outcompete any Nation in the world. We must all do what we can to further that end. I will do my level best. I need your help.

The next value I speak of must be forever cast in stone. //

I speak of decency -- the moral courage to say what is right, and condemn what's wrong. // We need a nation closer to The Waltons than The Simpsons -- an America which rejects the rising tide of incivility and intolerance. //

We see this tide in the naked epithet -- and in the code words -- that play to our worst prejudices. / We see it when people ridicule religion and religious leaders -- like the group which crushed a consecrated host on the steps of St. Patrick's Cathedral. Have thy no decency, have thy no honor, have thy no respect for rights of others.

~~We see it in bigotry, discrimination, and anti-~~ Semitism. / I will continue to speak out against these apostles of hate who poison our kids' minds and debase their souls. //

There is no place in America for religious prejudice, for anti-Semitism or for racial prejudice.
This brings me to a fourth value crucial to America: Belief in family -- the foundation of our strength. ~~(I admit it: I've been lucky -- a wonderful wife and five great kids. // Having helped put them through college, I remember receiving letters from them, and there would always be a P.S. at the bottom. It~~

Too often today, the family is under siege. ~~I say to you:~~

Each one of us -- parents, preachers, politicians, and teachers -

- must do our part to defend it. // I do not want one single action I take as President to weaken the American family. I want to strengthen it in every way I can. Every law that is passed should guard against weakening the family.

That is why I insisted that the child-care bill I signed in 1990 allow parents -- not bureaucrats -- to decide how to care for their children. I refused to see the option of religious-based child care restricted or eliminated. // The family is also why our education program -- America 2000 -- insists that choice include both private and public schools. AN Last week, I announced another policy to strengthen the family: Expanding the pre-school program to serve all those who are eligible -- the largest funding increase in the history of Project Head Start. when this is enacted we will be much closer to our active one of our 6 Nat'l

Finally, families will stay together only if drugs do not drive them apart. //

Winning the war on drugs means waging a war on crime. We've made the commitment. All together, the new federal budget I'll introduce two days from now will increase spending to combat crime by $1.2 billion -- to a total of almost $16 billion dollars. That's nearly 60% higher than when I took office in 1989.

My new budget provides a-half-a-billion dollars for an continued education to change behaviour.

If it doesn't fit somewhere forget it but I 'd like to try.

Attorney General, Bill Barr -- point man in this new program -- will spell out all its details. // But let me say this much right now. Weed and Seed works this way: First, we join federal, state and local forces to "weed out" the gang leaders, the violent criminals, and the drug dealers who plague our neighborhoods. When we break their deadly grip, we follow on with part two: we "seed" those neighborhoods with expanded educational opportunities and social services. But key to the seed concept will be jobs-generating initiatives such as Enterprise Zones -- to give people who call these neighborhoods home something to hope for. //

There is more to do to win the final victory in our war on drugs. But we are winning. // Over the past four years, marijuana, crack, and cocaine use has declined. What's more, today kids aged 9 to 12 are the most anti-drug group in America. The highest at-risk group remains 13 to 17-year-olds -- but last year / for the first time / 13-year-olds mirrored the behavior of pre-teenagers. //

Drugs effect a multitude of issues. They contribute to AIDS and homelessness -- shattering families and futures / hopes and dreams. / That's why -- literally -- we should thank God for the drug use decline. The drop in use doesn't just prove we were right in our assault on substance use: It shows how we can achieve drugs' unconditional surrender. //

We will triumph through tough enforcement -- and through education: Increasing awareness of the damage drugs do. // Over the last four years, more kids talked about drugs with their parents and teachers. Another force has been America's print and electronic media -- the major source of drug information and the primary "influencer" on drug use, especially among the young. // Together, they have helped reawaken America's conscience -- which, in turn, inspires America's greatness. / Later today, I will unveil our fourth National Drug Control Strategy to build on these beginnings. It will say no to drugs. It will also say yes to life. //

Let us resolve to treat the victims of AIDS and drug abuse with compassion and caring and let us redouble our efforts to help with treatment and ~~off~~ <sup>with</sup> education, ~~as these also become~~ <sup>that will</sup> ~~the victims~~ <sup>help eliminate</sup> ~~the risks <sup>involve</sup>~~

To stop drug use will require caring, and community -- above all, abundant love. / Let me tell you a story. Once, a great First Lady -- Pat Nixon -- toured a medical center and stopped to embrace a little girl blinded by rubella. For a few minutes, she talked to the girl and held her close. Later, someone told her that the child was deaf as well as blind. // Pat answered that she had known that. // "But she knows what love is," Mrs. Nixon said. "She can feel love." //

America's love is conveyed in many ways. In what we oppose: Injustice and tyranny. In what we support: The inalienable rights that include the freedom to think, dream, worship, and, yes, vote as we please. // To preserve our liberty, America once deposed a king / fought a great Civil War / five times this Century sent Americans into major battle. Yet freedom is not ours alone -- it is our most treasured export. // If you doubt freedom's victory, look to the Persian Gulf. / Look to the former Soviet Union, where those once oppressed crowd reopened

I remember an early trip to the Soviet Union by Billy Graham. He came back and reported that Faith in God was very much alive in Russia. Some headlines ridiculed him. Today we see clearly that he was right.

churches and synagogues. / Look to Eastern Europe, where Christmas carols warm the bright winter chill. // It is written:
"In the beginning was the Word." Here is the word for 1992:
Today, the times are on the side of peace -- because the world, increasingly, is on the side of God. //

This brings me to the ultimate value that sustains America, and the values I have already cited: A belief in prayer ~~and~~ ~~through prayer, in the One through whom all things are possible.~~ // No country can claim a special place in God's heart. Yet we are better as a people because He has a special place in ours. //

yes / I once asked one of my grandkids how he felt about prayer.
He said: "Just try getting through a math test without it." //

In Sunday school, children learn that God is everywhere -- but in public school they find that He's absent from class. // I continue to believe -- as do the overwhelming majority of Americans -- in the right to <sup>non-denominational</sup> voluntary school prayer. / I once again call on the Congress to pass a Constitutional Amendment ~~putting the Faith of our Fathers back in our schools.~~ //

The values I have spoken of remind us of the truth that comes on one's knees. // I believe with all my heart that one cannot be America's President without a belief in God and in prayer. ~~I also believe America will be a better place if the~~ ~~Golden Rule becomes our daily guide.~~ //

The poet Walt Whitman was once asked what made America / America. He replied, simply: "[Its] religion. Otherwise there is no real and permanent grandeur." // Let that be our essence as a people -- and our message as a Nation. Thank you for this occasion. God bless this most wondrous land on earth -- the United States of America.

Dear President Bush,

A couple of weeks ago, I received a citation from the White House, and I believe it was signed by you personally. The language wasn't very clear, but I think you were calling me a "point of light". This is a beautiful metaphor to me, and if that was what you were doing, then I thank you for it very very much.

I know how stressed out and busy you are, but you could be a real point of light yourself if you would give my favorite uncle and your old friend, Toby Hilliard, a call and tell him you are rooting for him, because he's currently very ill with cancer, and only has a short while to live...His number is: 707-433-8028 and the name of his wife is Willie!

Nellie Greene

I enjoyed the article and photo of Nellie Greene. I attend the Chestnut Hill United Methodist Church where Nellie is in training to be a deacon of the Episcopal church. What a delightful addition to the church! She is as charming in life as her picture in the Local.

Her sense of humor portrays her courage, her love of life and her belief in God. She speaks softly, yes, but she speaks wisely. She doesn't waste her words — she put them to good use and I am grateful to be close to her when I can see her thoughts on her lap board. I appreciate her strength and admire her very much.

I lift my glass to you, Nellie. May you reach your goals and many people will be blessed with your work.

Barbara Haig

Nellie Greene with the Rev. Hal Taussig.

Nellie Greene is reaching her goals

by Chris Hennessey

If you ask Nellie Greene how she likes her work at the Chestnut Hill United Methodist Church, she'll tell you that she is happier than she's been in years.

That is good to know because it would seem that Nellie has a lot to be unhappy about.

While travelling to college in 1970, Nellie and her mother were in a car accident. Nellie's injuries were severe. One of her kidneys as well as both her lungs were ruptured, her right shoulder was broken and while on the operating table she suffered two heart arrests that caused extensive brain damage.

The events that day have left Nellie legally blind. She can get around only with a walker or in a wheelchair. She can speak, but it is difficult and her voice is very soft. To communicate, Nellie prefers a plastic board with letters on one side and phrases on the other. Nellie points to letters and words and whoever is talking to her must spell them out and form the sentences.

Although the damage to Nellie's body was severe, her spirit was left unscathed. She has since graduated from Hampshire College in Amherst, Mass., (her destination the day of the accident), taken a year of post-graduate philosophy and religion at the University of Illinois and gone to Yale Divinity school. She lives by herself in an apartment in Mt. Airy.

Today Nellie is on her way to becoming a deacon of the Episcopalian Church. With the approval of her Bishop, Nellie has been allowed to train at Chestnut Hill United Methodist Church under the guidance of Pastor Hal Taussig despite the fact that she is Episcopalian, because the church is close to home.

Her training as a deacon began in September and will take about two years. She writes prayers, liturgies and sermons for the church on a computer. Her first full sermon will be presented on December 15, but because of her communication difficulties, someone else will read it to the congregation. Nellie also coordinates programming for an adult group, helps with Sunday School and the preparation of a church bulletin, Taussig said.

In a letter of introduction to the members of Chestnut Hill United Methodist, Nellie told a little about herself and her goals.

"I am a socially conscious woman who is concerned about all kinds of oppression," Nellie said.

She wrote about her ambitions within the church, "Many people have thought I had a screw loose for choosing this vocation because my disabilities are so horrendous," but, she said, "since being shoved by God and circumstance into this work, I couldn't be happier, and I know I am right where I belong."

Nellie explained that a deacon's job is to try to nurture, strengthen and connect faith to everyday life at home or in the workplace. "That is what attracts me," she wrote, "I'd like to be a bridge on two or three levels — between clergy and clergy, between clergy and lay people and between able-bodied people and people with disabilities."

She also asked in her letter that people not be shy or anxious around her because of her condition. "I am comfortable with myself, and I really want you to be comfortable with me."

Nellie has a way of putting people at ease upon first meeting. She is quicker to smile than most people and has an admitted and obvious sense of humor. During the interview for this article, Nellie began shaking and apologized for it. When asked if she was nervous, she spelled out on her board, "Too much coffee."

Nellie has added much to the church, Taussig said, "Her sensitivity and her intelligence, plus her understanding of the church is inspiring to our people."

"She shows us other ways of being human."

October 25, 1991

Dear Nellie:

Because our nation's greatness will be measured less by our wealth than by our willingness to help others, I am delighted to have learned of your generosity and hard work in behalf of your fellowman.

You have earned the admiration of your friends and neighbors through your commitment to the values that have made our nation great -- duty, sacrifice, and a patriotism that finds its expression in voluntary community service. Your efforts to help so many others illustrate how each of us can make a difference in the lives of others, how each of us can be a shining "Point of Light" in our community. I commend you for your achievements.

Barbara joins me in wishing you continued success and every happiness in the future. God bless you.

Sincerely,

GEORGE BUSH <sup>A</sup>

Mrs. Bush, in N.H., talks 'about George'

By Laura A. Kiernan
CONTRIBUTING REPORTER

PETERBOROUGH, N.H. — Barbara Bush campaigned in New Hampshire yesterday, signing autographs, visiting with schoolchildren, and dining with senior citizens, even as she downplayed her campaign role as "mostly talking about George."

But she ended her campaign swing through the rain-chilled Monadnock region with an unusually detailed political pitch in support of her husband.

Mrs. Bush told about 200 people at the town hall here that while the "pressure mounted" during the Gulf War, "the only thing that remained steady, calm and sure was George Bush." The theme was woven throughout her remarks all day.

"With the same man handling the economic crisis facing our country today, with the same steady skill and the same care. I guarantee you, he'll get the same results," she said.

Barbara Bush acknowledges an admirer across the room during her lunchtime visit yesterday to a senior citizens center in Keene, N.H.

The Bush campaign team has long considered Barbara Bush's warm style an invaluable asset on the campaign trail, and her popularity was evident yesterday in the crowds who came out to see her despite the icy weather. Asked repeatedly about her husband's decline in popularity, she insisted that she had not been asked to take on extra duty to shore up his ratings.

Asked about the anniversary this week of the US Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion, which her husband wants overturned, Mrs. Bush said. "I treat that like all other issues, I don't answer it."

And she said parents and schools must do a better job with the nation's children.

"We've got to get our people back to teaching children that it's very important to have discipline, in all honesty to wait, to abstain," Mrs. Bush told reporters at the town hall here.

"We've got AIDS, we've got teenage pregnancy and its very important that we really educate our children," she said. "We're doing a lousy job as parents."

FIRST LADY CAMPAIGNS FOR BUSH IN NEW HAMPSHIRE

KEENE, N.H., Reuter - President Bush's wife, Barbara, predicted Thursday during a day of campaigning in this economically hard-pressed state that her husband will grapple with the recession as he did the Gulf War, with a steady hand.

Mrs. Bush was a surrogate campaigner for her husband who made a quick day-long trip last week to Hampshire where he faces a spirited challenge from Republican conservative columnist Pat Buchanan in the Feb. 18 presidential primary.

She suggested Bush would find a solution to economic woes with the same confidence he showed in the war against Iraq.

"During the Gulf War, the only thing that remained steady and calm and sure was George Bush," she said. "In dealing with the economy, I feel sure he'll get the same results."

The recession and loss of jobs in this northern state are the top issues here in both the Republican and Democratic primaries.

During her day, Mrs. Bush drew about 200 supporters to the Town Hall in nearby Peterborough in a picturesque mountain area and earlier posed during a severe ice storm in front of a historic colonial coach in Dublin, N.H..

She also shook hands with shoppers at a mall and had lunch with about two dozen elderly people at a senior meal center.

Mrs. Bush had planned to read to first graders at a school, but school was canceled because of the storm.

The 1992 Campaign

Republicans

Bush Forces Plan to Unveil Big One: Don't Waste Vote

By R. W. APPLE Jr.

Special to The New York Times

CONCORD, N.H., Jan. 25 — Ron Christian, the tax collector in the town of Peterborough, southwest of here, is a George Bush man. He voted for Mr. Bush in the Republican Presidential primary four years ago and thinks he has "done a good job in the White House," especially in the Persian Gulf war.

"But I'd be interested in hearing what George is going to do for the economy in general and for jobs in New England in particular," he said on Friday as he waited for Barbara Bush to arrive for a campaign appearance. "He let the economy get away from him. It's important for him to come to New Hampshire to talk to us."

Voters like Mr. Christian trouble former Gov. Hugh Gregg, the Bush campaign's 74-year-old eminence grise, who is the father of the current Governor, Judd Gregg, the President's state campaign manager. speech writer, ought to get 40 percent. Representative Newt Gingrich of Georgia, a conservative Republican who was here the other day to campaign for Mr. Bush, put Mr. Buchanan's probable vote even higher, at 45 percent.

All of those figures are part of the expectations game, as it has come to be known. The Bush forces do not want the impression to take hold that a strong but unsuccessful Buchanan showing constitutes a moral victory over the arrayed power of the White House and the state's Republican leaders. But there is no doubt that Mr. Buchanan has made striking progress here.

Tom Rath, a former State Attorney General who ran Senator Bob Dole's losing campaign against Mr. Bush in 1988, says the President needs to turn the challenger's argument on its head. Mr. Buchanan urges New Hampshire voters to "send a message" of discontent; Mr. Rath wants Mr. Bush to ask them to send a message of support in his battles with the Democrats in Congress on economic issues.

Bush Spurns Debate

"I need your vote as a political mandate" — that's the approach," Mr. Rath said, "because Congress is much less popular than he is."

Mr. Bush has been in New Hampshire once, apologizing for the state of the economy and promising to do better. He has ignored invitations to debate Mr. Buchanan, and he will return to the state, where pavement-pounding politics is a tradition, only twice more, on Feb. 12 and 15. Mr. Buchanan will be in New Hampshire six days out of seven between now and the primary, on Feb. 18.

For the most part, the job for Mr. Bush will have to be done by surrogates like Mrs. Bush, Mr. Gingrich, Vice President Dan Quayle and Jack F. Kemp, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, and by radio and television commercials. The first television advertisements went on the air this weekend, 30-second messages featuring the President declaring earnestly: "We've known each other for a long time. This state has gone through hell. I've seen the pain in people's eyes, and I'm determined to turn this state around."

Mrs. Bush's Comforting Words

Mr. Bush and his aides are trying to reconnect. They are trying to attack the notion that he has forgotten New Hampshire in its hour of need after it propelled him toward the White House by giving him a much-needed victory in the 1988 primary.

Buchanan is making an impression with personal politics.

Describing her husband as "a spectacular President" and admonishing those who have lost their jobs to "hang in there, do the right thing and don't panic," Mrs. Bush said in Peterborough: "I was and I am in awe of the way that he handled the gulf crisis and himself. The same man is handling the economic crisis — with the same steady nerves. I assure you that you will get the same results."

But hard-hit people here want specifics, not just warm fuzzies.

Several voters interviewed in the last few days said they would wait to see what Mr. Bush had to say in his much-ballyhooed State of the Union Message on Tuesday night, exactly three weeks before the primary. One of them, a Milford antique dealer, expressed the conviction that "unless he does something really surprising, really bold, people will let him have it."

Buchanan as a Protest

The candidacy of Patrick J. Buchanan, the conservative columnist and broadcaster, provides an ideal vehicle for a protest vote, and Mr. Gregg said that Mr. Buchanan "will do extremely well, not because of what he says but because of all the discontent and because they all know Pat from TV."

Judd Gregg is willing to concede Mr. Buchanan 30 percent of the vote, simply on the basis of the exuberant support of The Manchester Union Leader, the state's biggest and most idiosyncratic newspaper. Former President Richard M. Nixon says Mr. Buchanan, who worked for him as a White House

Some who might support Bush in the fall won't in the primary.

Mr. Buchanan is trying to encourage that reaction. He predicted last week that the President's proposals would be "anemic and pathetic."

Governor Gregg said "it was a mistake" for Mr. Bush to accept higher taxes in a budget deal with Congress, and he conceded that the deal made the President's road here rockier.

"But that's history," he said. "What we have to do now is convince Republicans and independents — the people who can vote in our primary — that there is only one real Republican candidate for President. You may be unhappy about how things are going, probably are, but only one guy on the ballot can straighten it out."

Pushing a Wasted Vote

Such comments are part of an effort to make New Hampshire Republicans believe that a vote for Mr. Buchanan is a wasted vote. For the moment, the message is implicit. But before the campaign is over, a member of the President's brain trust said, "You're going to see commercials that say, 'New Hampshire picks Presidents. Don't throw away your vote on someone who has no chance of being elected.'"

There are already radio commercials in which former Senator Gordon J. Humphrey and Senator Bob Smith extol Mr. Bush's conservative credentials, which Mr. Buchanan derides. "I fought side by side with this conservative President," Mr. Humphrey says.

In the end, Mr. Bush's greatest asset may be the organization that he and the Greggs, his longtime supporters, have been putting together and nurturing here since 1978. Despite a late start this time, the Bush forces have signed up coordinators in every one of the state's 300-odd towns and wards, and they have the support of most members of the Legislature, too.

Mr. Buchanan's supporters will turn out come snow or high water, politicians here say; the danger to Mr. Bush is that his less highly motivated backers will stay home, thus magnifying the impact of his challenger's vote. The Gregg organization should help to overcome that problem, as it did four years ago against the challenge of Mr. Dole.

Just to make sure that everything is working as expected, the campaign has planned what it calls a "Bush blitz" next weekend. Mr. Quayle will speak to hundreds of volunteers from all over the state, and they will then go door to door, trying to recruit undecided voters — a major logistical exercise that demonstrates how seriously political professionals like the Greggs take Mr. Buchanan's challenge to Mr. Bush.

Mrs. Bush Visits Housing Project in Furniture Capital

By PAUL NOWELL

Associated Press Writer

HIGH POINT, N.C. (AP) — Barbara Bush on Friday made her second visit in a week to the heart of North Carolina furniture country, but refused to say if she planned more shopping after a visit to a public housing project.

"That's personal," Mrs. Bush snapped when asked if she planned to buy furniture for her storm-damaged Maine oceanfront home. "I draw the line at the door of the Kennebunkport home. That's it."

High Point is the self-styled furniture capital of the world. More than 60 percent of all the furniture made in this country is produced within 200 miles of this city of about 70,000.

On Jan. 17, Mrs. Bush made an unannounced visit to a Lexington Furniture Industries showroom. The Bushes are looking for furniture to replace items lost in a late October storm.

Mrs. Bush later reimbursed the government for her flight to North Carolina on an Air Force executive jet at the customary rate of first class commercial airfare plus $1, her spokeswoman said.

But Friday's trip to High Point apparently was to be billed to the government because she was on official business and spent nearly two hours at the Beamon Courts Housing Project.

Her press secretary, Anna Perez, had said she planned to visit "one of the furniture offices" before leaving town but did not plan to look at any more furniture.

Mrs. Bush preferred to talk about housing and youth programs.

She sat in the bleachers along with members of Brownie Troop 481 and 300 other school-age children at the Leonard Street Recreation Center as representatives of about 10 local youth groups described their work.

Later, Mrs. Bush visited Ruth Scotton, 61, a widow who has raised six children in public housing. The women chatted in Mrs. Scotton's tiny living room while reporters listened from the kitchen.

They talked mostly about living in public housing and Mrs. Scotton's 10 grandchildren. When Mrs. Bush asked if she had any complaints, Mrs. Scotton said she couldn't think of any.

"I think you must be the only American" without some complaint, Mrs. Bush joked.

Later, Mrs. Scotton said Mrs. Bush made her feel at ease.

"I felt so comfortable with her," she said. "She's a wonderful lady, a wonderful human being. I felt I could tell her anything. I felt her honesty. I like real people."

As Mrs. Bush's entourage was leaving the housing project, police officers were seen arresting a young man about 100 yards away. Officers said the man was arrested on an outstanding trespassing warrant after officers recognized him.

HIGHPOINT NORTH CAROLINA

Barbara Bush returns, will visit project

By Scott Sexton
STAFF WRITER

For the second time in the past seven days, Barbara Bush will visit High Point.

Exactly one week after a furniture shopping trip brought her to the city, the First Lady returns to visit the Beamon Court housing project Friday morning.

Her trip is aimed at promoting youth-oriented programs in the nation's housing projects, said Ken Martin, executive director of the High Point Housing Authority.

"As long as I've been in the business - for more than 25 years - I've never seen an administration so interested in the youth," Martin said. "President Bush and Secretary Jack Kemp (of the Housing and Urban Development department) have done an excellent job.

"They feel it's extremely important to keep the children upwardly mobile and involved in activities. And we believe that's the key to getting kids out of public housing."

Martin said High Point is hosting the First Lady's visit because the city has long been recognized as an innovator in youth programming.

Some of those programs will be showcased in a welcoming ceremony at the Leonard Street Recreation Center.

"This is something totally new for us," said Gretta Bush, director of the Leonard Street center. "It really took us by surprise."

Helping make the necessary preparations to accommodate the First Lady and her entourage has taken its toll, Gretta Bush said. "Anticipation hasn't set in yet. We're all too tired to get excited just yet."

Unlike the First Lady's first visit, Friday's stop isn't being shrouded in a veil of secrecy.

Word of her presence in the area last week didn't get out until a group of local pre-schoolers happened upon a presidential jet during a field trip to the Piedmont Triad International Airport. Officials at Lexington Furniture Industry later said Barbara Bush stopped by to shop for furniture for the family's Kennebunkport, Maine vacation home.

Instead, Friday's visit is being highly publicized to promote the administration's interest in youth programs.

Bush Spends 2 Hours In Church

ARLINGTON, Va. (AP) — President Bush, an Episcopalian who often gets in and out of church in less than 30 minutes, spent more than two hours worshipping at a black church here Sunday.

The president, Barbara Bush, daughter Dorothy LeBlond and several top administration officials attended a morning worship service at Lomax A.M.E. Zion Church that stretched into early afternoon.

"My understanding is the story has gone around that our president of the United States likes to worship at least once a year in a good, warm, African-American congregation," said Bishop J. Clinton Hoggard.

Noting that Bush had visited two other AME churches in previous years, Hoggard quipped, "It seems to me after three times he ought to be ready to join."

Bush, in the fourth pew, joined in the general laughter.

"It just might be that he would do us good — but we could do him a whole lot of good," added the bishop.

The church, founded the year after the Civil War ended, was filled to capacity by 350 people, with 100 others listening in the basement. Bush's party included Dr. Louis W. Sullivan, secretary of health and human services, Andrew Card, newly nominated for transportation secretary, and Chase Untermeyer, director of the Voice of America.

The service featured spirited singing by two choirs, scripture readings, prayers, a sermon by the Rev. Thaddeus Garrett, a one-time Bush aide, and a few words in the pulpit from the president himself.

Bush related that a delegation of mayors last week told him the major problems "with our cities can be related to the decline in the American family."

"Amen," voices in the congregation said.

"I salute Lomax for what you do to strengthen the American family," said Bush.

To the children in the congregation he added, "I know you probably wonder whether there's more fun outside than in Sunday school or in the church, but ... you're learning the value of family — church family, personal family — And never underestimate it's importance.

"We feel a part of this service today," said Bush. "I know that sometimes when a president comes to visit, it is a bit of a pluperfect pain. ... Thank you for a warm welcome."

Party Animals

■ All that bad news in New Hampshire isn't keeping President Bush in at night. He'll slip on his tux tonight and slide into the 79th annual Alfalfa Club Dinner at the Capital Hilton—Washington's last all-stag event. When asked yesterday about the political correctness of the men-only affair, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater answered as he does every year: Bush "believes these clubs are totally appropriate." So there.

And on Thursday night, Bush and his wife, Barbara, dropped by a belated surprise birthday party at the Capitol Hill Club for former Bush press secretary Pete Teeley. Said Teeley: "They move around parties like that. They blend in. If it wasn't for the Secret Service, you wouldn't notice any difference."

The East Room piano, being worked on at the Steinway Restoration Center.

Chronicles

A Fine Way To Treat A Steinway

By Sarah Booth Conroy
Washington Post Staff Writer

The Bush administration will play no sour notes from now on.

The ornate East Room piano, dedicated to performance at the White House 54 years ago, wasn't at home to celebrate its recent anniversary. Like others in their golden years, it was off at a rejuvenation clinic—Steinway & Sons Restoration Center at its Astoria, Queens, factory.

The piano, removed on Nov. 18, was back at the White House Friday. In the meantime, a plainer but serviceable mahogany piano has been sitting in for the house grand.

"Rex Scouten, the White House curator, told me the White House had 150 events between Thanksgiving and now," said Schuyler Chapin, Steinway vice president. "He was just as happy not to have to move this fancy one."

How the White House acquired the piano in the first place was recalled by Chapin, son-in-law to the late director and chief engineer Theodore Steinway.

On Dec. 12, 1936, Steinway official Henry Junge wrote President Franklin D. Roosevelt that when the company reached piano No. 300,000 (all pianos are numbered), it would like to give it to the White House.

A free piano was sweet music to the Roosevelts. FDR liked design. Eleanor liked music. Chapin remembers that when he was general manager of the Metropolitan Opera, Mrs. Roosevelt would always be glad to have tickets. Anyway, Theodore Steinway, a son of the original owner, shared with the president an interest in philately.

So Steinway and his son John took to Hyde Park two big suitcases holding three models for the piano. Roosevelt in short order picked the one that was to be built, and he and Steinway switched over to stamps.

New York architect Eric Gugler designed the case. The standard nine-foot concert grand was stretched another seven inches to accommodate the elaborate decoration—Chapin has one of the mock-ups on his apartment wall. The Honduran mahogany was embellished by artist Dunbar Beck in gold leaf, showing various American folk dances (remember this was the '30s and folk art was in style). The legs, giant gold-leaf eagles—perhaps a tribute to Roosevelt's National Recovery Act logo—were modeled by sculptor Albert Stewart.

"Many presentation pianos are awful. They look like weighted sepulchers," said Chapin, dean emeritus of Columbia University's School of the Arts. "But I like this one."

On Dec. 10, 1938, Theodore Steinway brought the piano to the White House and made a two-minute speech. He explained that his father had come to this country in 1849 from Germany. Steinway was giving the piano, he said, in "thanksgiving" for his family's being permitted to make their homes and their lives here "and to pursue their work with happiness and contentment."

Pianist Joseph Hoffman played the first concert for the choice audience. In the next half century, Artur Rubinstein, Rudolf Serkin, Van Cliburn, Marvin Hamlisch and Harry Truman were among the many famous ticklers of the ivories of No. 300,000.

A piano that lives as hard a life as the White House piano—especially during music lover Jimmy Carter's administration and the Bushes' nonstop state dinners—needs its innards worked on from time to time. Steinway technicians fuss over it periodically, but this time it really needed a thorough going-over.

"Of course, the White House kept it tuned, but it hadn't had a real overhaul in 12 years," said Chapin. "We began to hear from artists that it was too much of a chore to play it," complaining about its heavy action and stiffening of the joints. "They said they had to lean on it to play," said Chapin. "And some insisted on having another Steinway to play in concert."

Ron Connors—"one fussy man," according to Chapin—oversaw the renovation: new strings, new hammers and a new action. Its ivory keys, a rarity in this day of plastic, were re-polished. And the artwork on the case was touched up.

Steinway did the work free. For anyone else, Chapin said, the job would cost about $15,000, a bit more than the new cut-rate, machine-made Steinway-engineered piano, the Boston, made in Japan and sold here for about $13,000.

A new standard Steinway concert grand, without a custom case, costs about $60,000.

After its repair, the White House piano was on display in the Steinway showroom on 57th Street in New York for almost a month.

Didn't the Bushes want a brand-new piano? Nope, said Chapin. "Steinway offered them a new one several years back, but everybody liked this one so much, they decided to keep it."

The first golden Steinway, No. 100,000, was given to President Theodore Roosevelt in 1903. The company also booked artists into the Executive Mansion to perform.

Old 100,000 was sent to the Smithsonian and was displayed for many years in the First Ladies exhibition, but that great crowd-pleasing exhibit has been shut down for renovation.

The Chronicler worried about what had happened to the gold-leaf rococo instrument, described by Chapin as a giant wedding cake of a piano. The piano will be on display at the March 28th reopening of the exhibit, but no one would promise it would stay on view.

Steinway is still counting—in its Hamburg, Germany, and Queens factories, the pianos are up to No. 521,000.

That time again

Get out your glad rags. Now that the holidays are over and everyone is back to business, the gala circuit is cranking up again.

The National Coalition for Cancer Research's party honoring the 20th anniversary of the National Cancer Act features one of the more diverse set of honorees. Some of the names are the expected ones — Health and Human Services chief Louis Sullivan and breast-cancer activist Marilyn Quayle. Also joining in will be former Sen. Ralph Yarborough, who introduced the bill, Sens. Joseph Early, Ernest Hollings and Teddy Kennedy, and, for the requisite Hollywood glitz, Lili Tartikoff. She's the wife of Brandon Tartikoff, who as former head of NBC, encouraged the network's prime-time shows to incorporate cancer plot lines before it was fashionable. He was prompted by his own successful battle with cancer.
