Deadly Lessons: Kids and Guns

A 15-year-old brought his .38-caliber gun to school last week, stepped into the hallway outside his classroom and killed two other teenagers. As the New York City double murder showed, gun violence is on the rise in schools all over America—and the nation's children are trapped in its path. Are classrooms doomed to become free-fire zones? Teachers, principals and parents are searching for ways to keep kids safe. National Affairs: Page 22

For the Love of Robotics

From Boston to Palo Alto, a new kind of group is dotting the country. Technophiles who put together robots for fun gather to show off their creations and collaborate. They try to push the technical envelope, to spread their love of science and maybe even cobble together the next Apple Computer in their garage. Society: Page 68
