Dear Greg:

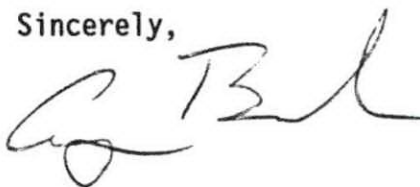

A couple of months ago the Alabama Sports Hall of Fame honored me at a dinner and they awarded me a fantastic set of golf clubs. I didn't attend the dinner, so today the honchos there came up and made an "in-person" presentation of a plaque, the clubs having been sent here some time ago.

Only today, though, did I learn that you had given the clubs.

Many, many thanks for such a very special gift. I have tried the clubs out -- they miss quite regularly around the green, but some crazy killjoy told me that it wasn't the clubs' fault. He put it this way, "Your short game stinks!!"

Anyway many, many thanks and best wishes.

Going: Elizabeth's left foot slips from the stirrup. After the fall Mrs Norma Major (left) is distraught before officials assure her that the young jockey is only winded

Galloping Major comes a cropper on her debut

THE PRIME Minister saw his 20-year-old daughter, Elizabeth, fall spectacularly from her horse as it passed the finishing line in a charity flat race at Huntingdon yesterday on her debut as a jockey, writes Susanah Herbert.

Pale and shaken but uninjured except for a stiff neck, Elizabeth Major was taken for a medical checkup in an ambulance accompanied by her younger brother, James, and her mother, Norma.

Mr Major, who saw the fall from a box, stayed calm as his daughter lay on the grass. "She's really tough," he said. "She'll be all right." Later he blamed the accident on the crowd of press photographers gathered near the finishing line. "The cameras made the horse shy," he insisted.

Mr Hugo Bevan, clerk of the course, said: "The stewards immediately held an official inquiry but there was nothing to report. She was winded, that's all — just tired. Two miles is a long way in this heat and, after she got to the winning post, gravity prevailed."

Yesterday was only the second time that Elizabeth — a trainee veterinary surgeon who enjoys riding — had ridden her racehorse, Milly Black, a four-year-old mare trained by ex-jockey Mr James Harris. She had been invited to ride in the 4.30pm Mencap Support Association Private Sweepstake by Lady Harris, wife of Sir Philip Harris. The race was held to raise money for her mother's favourite charity and each of the seven riders was asked to raise £1,000 for Mencap.

Elizabeth's horse, an outsider which was given odds of 14-1 in the hours before the race, finished sixth out of seven. Only moments before the race began, Mrs Major had backed Elizabeth to win with £3.

Until her fall, Elizabeth had been riding well at a steady gallop. The first time the horses passed the grandstand, she was a creditable fourth. She seemed to lose control only at the very end, when her elbows were flung out and she rocked from side to side before falling and rolling over several times. Then she lay still for three minutes as her horse was led away.

Mr Harris, who earlier had described the horse as "good and kind" adding "You just have to give her a kick and off she goes", said the accident "was just one of those things". Others attributed the fall to the rider's youthful nerve. "She was very worried indeed before the race," said Mr Steve Moss, of Mencap Support.

Earlier the Prime Minister told wellwishers: "She's rather nervous. She hasn't ridden before in a race like this but, of course, she hopes to win. She says it's a very agreeable horse."

"Like so many little girls, when she was small, she spent a lot of time in stables mucking out horses but she doesn't have a lot of time for riding now because her music comes first. I think she is very brave to do this."

Miss Major smiled as she was driven to the family home in nearby Great Stukeley. Her parents flew to Eastern Europe last night, with Mr Major insisting: "She's fine, absolutely fine."

POINTS TO BE MADE FOR MEETING WITH FRENCH OPPOSITION LEADER EDOUARD BALLADUR

- I want to hear your views on developments in Europe and France. Maybe we could start with European unity. You have just had a parliamentary debate on the Maastricht treaty.

U.S. PRESENCE IN EUROPE

- You have no doubt seen the press articles about U.S.-French differences, especially on European defense.
- There is no denying that we have differences of approach. I hope we can work through them in the months ahead.
- I want to share our thoughts on the U.S. presence in Europe.
- We hear from our European allies, including France, and from our new friends in the East that it is important for us to maintain a sizable troop presence.
- We agree. But we would not be making such an effort to maintain our troop levels, even in an election year, if the Europeans were not telling us they want it. It is no more important for us to retain our presence in Europe than it is for you Europeans.
- If Europe is serious about maintaining a U.S. presence, you must help create the conditions that allow us to stay.
- NATO is the only way we can justify our continued engagement. This means that NATO must have a military and political role relevant to the post-Soviet era. It must have its role in the creation of a broader European security order. And the Alliance cannot be seen to be undermined by the emergence of a European security identity.

- I fully support the emergence of European unity and a European security identity, but we must not undermine our Alliance in the process.
- This is the our basic concern with the Franco-German corps
 - that it would appear to be an alternative to NATO, rather than a complementary force.

GATT

- Jacques Delors and I had a good meeting in April on GATT. I told him clearly that I am committed to continue working hard to bridge US-EC differences on agriculture as long as it takes. Our ministers had a good follow-up meeting last week.
- I will not be put off by the approach of our elections. These trade talks are just too important for both of our peoples and for the world trading system. The United States and Europe must move together to conclude the Round.

YUGOSLAVIA

- It was our concern with the carnage and suffering in Bosnia and the renewed violence in Croatia that led us to push so hard for UN sanctions on Serbia.
- This should send a clear message to Milosevic. But the immediate task is to ensure that the full force of the UN's decision is felt by Serbia's leadership.

CLINTON SECURES PARTY NOMINATION;
PEROT FACTOR GROWS, EXIT POLLS SHOW

Bush Continues Unbeaten String Amid Discontent

Bill Clinton clinched the Democratic presidential nomination with cross-country primary victories Tuesday, while President Bush continued his unbeaten string. But as the tumultuous primary season drew to a close, many voters said they were ready to reject both candidates and defect to Ross Perot.

The polls in California showed how rapidly Perot has moved to capitalize on the weaknesses of Bush and Clinton. Voters in both parties were asked how they would have voted if Perot had been on their ballots Tuesday. Among Republicans, Perot had 46% to Bush's 42%; among Democrats, it was Perot 33%, Clinton 31% and Brown 27%.

In Ohio, Perot would have defeated Clinton in the Democratic primary had he been on the ballot, and would have taken a third of the vote against Bush, according to exit polls reported by CNN. In New Jersey, 29% of Democrats and 35% of Republicans said they would have supported Perot Tuesday.

Asked how they planned to vote in November, 36% of the Democratic voters in California questioned in the exit polls Tuesday said they would support Perot while Perot drew 42% among Republican primary voters.

Tuesday Bush called his top campaign strategists to the White House for a lengthy session in which the group split over what tactics the President should pursue. Vice President Quayle and Richard Bond, worried that the President looks too timid, are said to support a more aggressive stance against Perot. Robert Teeter urged Bush to remain "presidential," using three forays into foreign policy the next month to illustrate his handling of the responsibilities of the Oval Office.

(Dan Balz & E.J. Dionne, Washington Post, A1)

It's Almost Official: Clinton Vs. Bush Vs. Perot In The Fall

President Bush and Bill Clinton wrapped up the improbable 1992 primary season by sweeping California, Ohio and New Jersey on Tuesday, but the biggest winner may be Ross Perot. Although Perot wasn't even on the ballot, exit polls show that he was the man many people say they will support in November....

Now, Bush's top campaign aides have turned their attention to Perot. "He's the focal point of people's dissatisfaction with the economy and with some other things," Robert Mosbacher said Monday.

(Carl Cannon, Knight-Ridder)

Exit Polls Show Perot Top Choice

Bill Clinton clinched the Democratic nomination Tuesday as voting in six states ended a bruising, unpredictable primary season. But even as Clinton and President Bush swept to easy victories, exit polls showed impressive support for Ross Perot.

Bush once more had to explain Perot's surge. Said Fred Malek: "When the American people begin to seriously focus, George Bush will be the clear and obvious choice."

(Bill Nichols, USA Today, 1A)

INDEPENDENT WAVES ROCK 2-PARTY BOAT

Get ready for a campaign with an independent who's crashing the party. "It makes for a wild situation," says F. Clifton White. "The overriding theme is that the people have lost confidence in the electoral process and, to a certain extent, government itself, which is not effective, not responsive and not responsible."

"This guy is catching on because he speaks in plain language, exudes an inner confidence, seems to know where he's going and has made a lot of money," says Kevin Gottlieb, a Syracuse University political scientist and consultant. "There are a lot of holes in his message, but people aren't going to that depth."

But University of California at Berkeley political scientist Nelson Polsby says of Perot: "He'll fade, and we'll be back to a race between the Democrat and Republican, unless the media continue to pump him up."
(Richard Benedetto, USA Today, 1A)

BUSH HOPES BUCHANAN RETURNS TO FOLD

President Bush Tuesday rolled out the welcome mat for Patrick Buchanan to return to the fold. "Tonight, we extend a hand to every Republican," Bush said in a statement released hours before the polls closed in California. "Together this November, we can break the Washington lawmaking gridlock and set a new course for the next American century."

Buchanan's sister, Bay Buchanan, declared Tuesday on the Fox Television Network that Buchanan "absolutely" would back Bush "at some point."
(Helen Thomas, UPI)

BUCHANAN ALL BUT CONCEDES GOP RACE TO BUSH

MANCHESTER, N.H. -- Pat Buchanan Tuesday night virtually conceded defeat in his effort to deny George Bush the Republican nomination -- but said he'd be back in four years.

In a 15-minute speech, Buchanan attacked Bush, AIDS activists and the embattled NEA. He pledged to run again in 1996. "New Hampshire was our beginning, but Houston is not our end.... Houston is a truce line. It is not a surrender. Houston is going to be a beginning. We're never going to quit."
(Reuter)

PRIMARIES VS. POLLS

The heroine of Lewis Carroll's "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland" may be better prepared by her encounter with the Cheshire Cat than anyone else to make sense of the 1992 presidential nominating process.

Though polls and pundits depict them as walking wounded, George Bush and Bill Clinton are both grinning today, having seen the final round of primaries certify their long-conceded status as the nominees of the Republican and Democratic parties.

And yet poll after poll show Bush and Clinton struggling against the untested Ross Perot in mock trial-heats for the general election. Bush looks much weaker for the general election than he was when the primaries started back in February. And Clinton has picked up a ton of unwanted "character question" baggage that may limit his effectiveness in the fall as well.

(News Analysis, David Broder, Washington Post, A1)

WHITE HOUSE HINTS AT URBAN AID DEAL

The White House indicated Tuesday that it would accept increased spending on an urban summer jobs program that Democrats want in exchange for Democratic support of its proposal to expand urban enterprise zones, designed to lure business back to the city with tax incentives.

The Treasury Department put the cost of the enlarged program at $2.8 billion, a figure Rep. Gingrich dismissed as the work of "bureaucrats at Treasury" who "use essentially a socialist model of the economy." Gingrich and Secretary Kemp argued that the cost would be lower because jobless people who find work in businesses lured to the enterprise zones would add tax revenue and stop collecting welfare and other benefits that drain the federal treasury.

The White House said costs would not matter because the Administration would provide offsetting cuts in other programs. The White House declined, however, to provide details of either the $2.8 billion in cuts needed for the enterprise zones or the additional reductions that would be needed to add more summer jobs training.

Gingrich said Tuesday the Republicans are willing to accept a "modest" increase in summer jobs money aimed at high-need areas but the Democrats have been stalling on enterprise zones. Gingrich was pessimistic about achieving a package. "Four weeks ago, we had the riots. Four weeks from now, we have the July 4th recess. I think we're, frankly, virtually nowhere," Gingrich said.

(Ann Devroy, Washington Post, A4)

Urban Aid Tax Plan Backed But Funding Is In Dispute

Democratic and Republican congressional leaders agreed Tuesday on the need for tax breaks to help new businesses in blighted urban neighborhoods but they and President Bush were unable to settle on how to pay for them.

Their failure to resolve crucial questions about financing suggested that considerable work remains to be done before the plan for expanded "enterprise zones" can be enacted, even though California officials pressed for quick action.

"If you agree it's a good thing, then do it," said Gov. Wilson after he and other California officials met with Bush and congressional leaders. "The time to move is now."

Mayor Bradley said he stressed during the meeting that he considers it imperative to stipulate in the enterprise zone legislation that 25% of the new jobs go to people living within the affected community. Regardless, he said, "speed is critical. We have got to demonstrate to the people of our cities that the government means business."

(James Gerstenzang, Los Angeles Times, A1)

Bush Pushes For Compromise On Urban Policy Bill

With top California officials at his side, President Bush Tuesday met congressional leaders in an effort to compromise on urban policy legislation designed to avert more bloodshed like last month's Los Angeles riots. But Democrats were distinctly unsympathetic to Bush's appeal, saying it was unclear how he would pay for his plan.

Sen. Mitchell said Bush had indicated he would send Congress a separate enterprise zone proposal, instead of combining it with other approaches. Mitchell said separating out enterprise zones might lead to abandonment of other proposals that had merit.

(Gene Gibbons, Reuter)

MISSILE DEFENSE DEPLOYMENT DATE
CALLED 'VERY DIFFICULT' TO ACHIEVE

It will be "very difficult" for the SDI to deploy the ground-based system by 1997, a Pentagon spokesman said Tuesday. Spokesman Bob Hall told reporters at a Pentagon briefing that deploying a system to protect the U.S. from nuclear attack by 1996, as Congress has asked, "is very, very tight, in fact, it's not achievable... Even the '97 date is going to be very difficult."

Hall said Tuesday that while there may be "some slippage" in the program, "there still is a desire to try to be responsive" to Congress's interests in deployment. (AP, Washington Post, A4)

BUSH: 'TIME HAS COME FOR BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT'

President Bush urged Republican leaders Tuesday to beat the bushes for a balanced budget amendment, saying it's an idea "whose time has come." The leaders who emerged after an hour-long meeting in the Cabinet Room said Bush would support an amendment even if Congress does not go along with proposals requiring a super majority, or three-fifths of the vote in the House and Senate, to pass a tax increase.

Sen. Nickles said he thought it would be a "close vote" in the House. He also insisted that the amendment would not lead to large cuts in Social Security and other entitlement programs. "If you freeze spending four or five years you can balance the budget," he said. (UPI)

BYRD: BALANCED-BUDGET AMENDMENT WILL FALL

Sen. Byrd predicted Tuesday that the Senate would defeat a proposed balanced-budget constitutional amendment, a measure Congress once seemed likely to approve. The chief Senate sponsor of the proposal, Sen. Simon, conceded that his side seemed to be losing ground, and attributed the slippage to intense lobbying by Byrd, chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee.

Byrd's committee controls the spending of more than one-third of the $1.5 trillion federal budget, and Simon said that's a fact that senators who are eager to bring projects home to their states cannot ignore. Byrd, however, denied threatening lawmakers' projects. (On Capitol Hill, Washington Post, A4)

ECONOMISTS, NOBEL LAUREATES OPPOSE BUDGET AMENDMENT

More than 400 economists, including seven Nobel laureates, signed an advertisement Tuesday opposing a Constitutional balanced budget amendment. "Requiring balanced budgets in each fiscal year regardless of prevailing economic circumstances is bad public policy," said the statement signed by 447 economists. The ad will appear in Thursday's edition of Roll Call.

The signatures were solicited by Jeff Faux, president of the Economic Policy Institute, Charles Schultze of the Brookings Institution and Isabel Sawhill of the Urban Institute. Nobel laureates signing the ad were Kenneth Arrow, Lawrence Klein, Franco Modigliani, Paul Samuelson, Herbert Simon, Robert Solow and James Tobin. (David Lawsky, Reuter)

ECONOMISTS: SLOW HOME SALES NO DRAG

A slow-moving recovery seems on track, even though new-home sales were sluggish again in April. Sales of new single-family homes rose a listless 1.3% in April from March to an annual rate of 530,000, the government said Tuesday.

Evidence that the economy is accelerating came in a separate Commerce Department report, which showed a gain in the government's chief gauge of future economic activity. The index of leading indicators rose 0.4% in April from March, following a revised 0.4% gain in March. The fourth monthly increase was better than expected, led by rising commodities prices, manufacturers' orders for consumer goods, consumer confidence and declining claims for unemployment benefits. (Beth Belton, USA Today, 1B)

A HEARTY RIBBING FOR ALL

Maybe it's not so much that politics makes strange bedfellows as that bedfellows make strange politics.

Take George Bush's barbecue for Congress last night at the White House. He and Barbara Bush rolled out the red-checkered tablecloths, the baby back ribs and the ice cream on a stick for 500 of their nearest and dearest from Capitol Hill. It was another of those homespun get-togethers where everybody -- Republican or Democrat -- wraps each other in bear hugs, plants wet kisses on the little ladies and tries to leave the impression that politics is the last thing on anybody's mind.

(Donnie Radcliffe, Washington Post, B1)

THE STEALTH WEDDING

White House watchers longing for a tantalizing June wedding to whet their taste for glamour will have to wait. Dorothy Bush LeBlond isn't cooperating.

When the former Mrs. LeBlond weds Robert Koch, there will be no scenes reminiscent of past romantic conjoinings of presidential daughters. This time around, the first daughter and the first fiance will marry Saturday, June 27, in a small, private family ceremony at Damp David. It will be the first such event held at the presidential retreat. (Anne Gowen, Washington Times, E1)

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

DEMOCRATS CALL FOR PROBE OF LOAN GUARANTEES TO IRAQ

Several House Democrats called for the appointment of a special counsel to investigate whether Bush Administration officials violated the law in providing agricultural loan guarantees to Iraq before the Persian Gulf War.

Rep. Gonzalez told the House Judiciary Committee that an investigation he led has uncovered enough information of possible illegal activity to warrant the appointment of an independent counsel.

Gonzalez said the Administration has misled Congress and blocked his panel's probe of U.S. regulation of the Atlanta branch of Italian-owned Banca Nazionale del Lavoro (BNL), which processed some of the loans. BNL also was used by Iraq to secretly procure weapons.

The committee reached no decision Tuesday on whether to request the independent counsel.

Democrats Press For Iraq Aid Inquiry

Senior House Democrats signaled Tuesday that they will seek appointment of an independent prosecutor to investigate the Bush Administration's dealings with Iraq before Iraq's invasion of Kuwait. Such an investigation could be an acute election-year embarrassment for President Bush because it would probably focus on the roles of Clayton Yeutter and Robert Mosbacher.

At a Judiciary Committee hearing Tuesday punctuated by partisan wrangling, Republicans accused Democrats of trying to "criminalize" flawed foreign policy decisions and playing election-year politics in an effort to embarrass Bush.

"Some will say we're playing politics," said Rep. Brooks, "but the Administration's position only serves to inflame passions and... push the American people into deeper cynicism."

House Members Bicker Over Naming Of Special Counsel On Iraq

Partisan sniping broke out Tuesday as the House Judiciary Committee debated whether to ask for a special counsel to investigate U.S. policy toward Iraq before the Persian Gulf War.

Republican members said the Democrats were using the issue to embarrass the Bush Administration in an election year. The independent counsel law "is a political tool of this Congress," said Rep. James, contending such an appointment and investigation could turn into "just another witch hunt at the expense of the taxpayers."

At one point, James suggested that Rep. Gonzalez "perhaps should be removed" as chairman of the House Banking Committee for not holding government witnesses in contempt of Congress in earlier hearings on Iraq policy.

JUDGE JOINS CALL FOR SPECIAL COUNSEL

ATLANTA -- A federal judge Tuesday called for the appointment of a special prosecutor after the former Atlanta branch manager of an Italian-owned bank repeatedly dodged questions about how he made $5.5 billion in unauthorized loans to Iraq.

Judge Marvin Shoob tried for more than 2 1/2 hours to find out from Christopher Drogoul, the branch manager, whether any U.S. government officials or higher-ups at Banca Nazionale del Lavoro (BNL) knew of the "off the books" nature of his branch's massive loans to Iraq. Iraq used at least some of the money to arm itself militarily. The U.S. Department of Agriculture guaranteed $1.25 billion of the loans, of which $347 million is in default.

Drogoul denied any direct involvement by government or senior bank officials, but confounded the judge with vague hints that he had acted with their tacit approval. Drogoul said he would be more forthcoming with prosecutors once he had a chance to review documents.

U.S. PLANS $1.8 BILLION SAUDI MILITARY SALE

The Bush Administration intends to sell Saudi Arabia $1.8 billion worth of helicopters, missiles, rockets and small military vehicles, as well as support services for F-15 and F-5 fighter aircraft, the Pentagon announced Tuesday.

Congress has been informed of the proposed sales and has 30 days to block them, but no such action is anticipated, officials said.

COCOM EASES RULES ON EQUIPMENT SALES

Pressed by U.S. industry, Western allies and Congress, the Bush Administration has abruptly changed course and opened the way for the sale of advanced telecommunications equipment to the nations of the former Soviet Union, Administration officials said Tuesday.

U.S. allies, some of whom favored an even broader liberalization of telecommunications sales to the former Soviet Union, ratified the Administration position Monday in an all-day meeting in Paris of the 17-nation Cocom.

The U.S. and its Cocom allies also agreed to invite the newly independent states of the former Soviet empire to join in a global effort to control the spread of missile technology and nuclear, chemical and biological weapons to maverick Third World nations.

The main objections within the Administration came from the National Security Agency. It feared that allowing the former Soviet states to install advanced fiber-optics telecommunications lines would impede its ability to eavesdrop on communications there, Administration officials said.

BUSH FACES OPPOSITION ON RENEWAL OF TRADE BENEFITS FOR CHINA

President Bush formally asked Congress Tuesday to renew trade benefits for China for another year and immediately ran into opposition from congressional Democrats who vowed to defeat the request.

Sen. Mitchell said in a statement that Bush's "policy toward China has failed" and that "his decision is inconsistent with American values and contrary to American best interests." Mitchell is expected to join Rep. Pelosi and other critics of U.S. policy Wednesday in unveiling what Pelosi called "a more targeted approach" to imposing economic sanctions on China.

Congressional sources said the Pelosi bill will seek to apply U.S. sanctions against exports to the U.S. from state-owned Chinese enterprises but not from private enterprises in China or joint ventures in China with foreign firms. A White House official said this approach would be "unworkable" because "we'd have to have inspectors running around" trying to determine the true source of Chinese exports. (Don Oberdorfer, Washington Post, A20)

Bush Seeks Trade Benefits For China

The White House announced Tuesday that it planned to extend preferential trade benefits to China for another year, arguing that it was the best way to support economic and political reform in the world's most populous country.

Administration officials acknowledge that the Chinese have made few improvements in human rights during the past year, and in recent months have taken actions that almost seemed designed "to rub our nose in it," as one official put it.

A senior Bush Administration Asia policymaker argued, however, that this behavior was the result of a "world-class power struggle" now under way in Beijing in advance of the 14th Communist Party Congress, which will take place at the end of the year.

U.S. PLEASED PERU ELECTIONS SCHEDULED

Peruvian President Fujimori's announcement that he will hold congressional elections in October pleases the Administration, but Lima must take additional strides toward restoring democracy before the U.S. resumes normal relations, the State Department said Tuesday.

Margaret Tutwiler said the next essential step "is the development of a fair and open electoral process." She said all political voices in Peru must "have a chance" to participate in the development of new electoral law and other decisions leading to the re-establishment of democracy. "It is important that all democratic forces, including Peru's political parties have a chance to participate," she said. (Sid Balman, UPI)

RIO SUMMIT HIGHLIGHTS NORTH-SOUTH SCHISM

RIO DE JANEIRO -- On the eve of the Earth Summit, delegates Tuesday emphasized historic North-South differences over strategies to protect natural resources and combat pollution.

"There is a certain amount of posturing by developing countries to try to get us and other developed countries to contribute more funds," said William Reilly. "At this economic moment for industrialized nations, those contributions are not in the cards."

Reilly said the U.S. will not change its position on the biodiversity treaty because of the obstacles it would pose for U.S. pharmaceutical companies seeking to find cures for many modern diseases in the primeval forest of the Third World. "As the treaty is drafted, it is contrary to the interests of the U.S.," he said.

(Tuesday evening, June 2)

PRIMARIES

ABC's Peter Jennings: The long season of primary elections has finally come to and end. Nothing much has turned out the way it was originally intended. Later tonight the world will know formally that Bill Clinton has won the right in the primary process to be his party's nominee. But neither Bill Clinton nor President Bush has any reason to feel secure tonight. There were primaries today in New Jersey, Ohio, Alabama, New Mexico, Montana, and California. The polls are not closed in any of them yet, but the early picture of success for today at least is clear. It is Ross Perot.

ABC's Lynn Sherr reports the people who voted today tend to be party regulars -- Democrats and Republicans who care enough about their candidates to turn up at the polls. But across the country even they indicated a strong willingness to desert the party for the maverick campaign of Ross Perot. In Ohio, Alabama and California, according to our exit polls if Perot had been on the ballot he might have done extremely well -- even tying or beating Clinton and Bush in some cases. Among Democratic voters in California, Perot virtually ties Clinton [Perot -- 35%, Clinton -- 34%] in a hypothetical race. And the same is true among Republican voters when Perot was pitted against George Bush [Bush -- 47%, Perot -- 43%]. But when we combine the exit polling from both parties and ask about November, Perot actually beats both Clinton and Bush in California among these primary voters. Why is Perot doing so well? It has to do with the qualities voters are looking for in a candidate. California Republicans who are most concerned about the deficit strongly prefer Perot over the President [Perot -- 52%, Bush -- 35%]. In California, a state torn by riots, we asked voters why they thought that [riots] happened. The results split along party lines. The Democrats said they thought government neglect of the cities was the root cause. Republicans overwhelmingly blamed the breakdown of family values. What we're seeing in our exit polls tonight indicates that both Democrat and Republican candidates have plenty to worry about from a Perot candidacy, at least for now. (ABC-Lead)

CBS's Dan Rather: It's the final presidential primary day of campaign '92. Voting is underway in six states including California. Bill Clinton is certain to clinch the Democratic nomination tonight. President Bush had the Republican nomination sewn up weeks ago. So attention is shifting to the fall campaign and the battle against rising independent Ross Perot. Our exit polls today indicate Perot might do very well, especially in California and Ohio.

CBS's Susan Spencer: The primaries have produced nominees. They have not necessarily produced nominees that the voters like. Our exit polls tonight show the supporters of both the President and Bill Clinton are ready to walk in November in droves straight to Ross Perot. Among GOP voters the potential Perot defections were highest in California, where a whopping 41% of Republicans say they will jump to Perot [Ohio -- 35%, New Jersey -- 31%]. Among Democrats a similar trend, with Perot giving Bill Clinton the biggest headache in Ohio where 46% of Democrats are fickle, saying they prefer Perot [California -- 37%, New Jersey -- 29%]. When experts of both parties analyzed just what voters see in Ross Perot they find a lot to worry about.

(Linda DiVall, Republican pollster: "What they see with Ross Perot are three things. One, he's an outsider. Two, they see him as an action-oriented person. And three, they see him as this little guy who's not afraid to speak up and say what's wrong with the system.")

(TV coverage of President Bush on a stage waving to a crowd.) And so far the Bush campaign has found no way to effectively neutralize that appeal and seems to pin its hopes on Perot self destructing.

(Robert Mosbacher, "CBS This Morning": "Perot is a phenomenon. He hasn't been under the hot inspection that the President and Clinton have been under. And when he gets under that let's see how he does.")

Bush campaign officials continue to deny that big changes are in the works in staff, in message or in approach.

(TV coverage of President Bush shaking hands.)

Supporters don't claim that what they're doing now is working, only that it will.

(Rep. Gingrich, stakeout: "I think that what the country wants is to see the President personally engaged in things he cares about. And I think if the country sees that, he'll get reelected by an easy margin.")

Campaigning from the White House today, Mr. Bush pushed for a balanced budget amendment and for his health care package. But his thoughts seemed to be on his prospects.

(President Bush: "I really believe we can get something done. And I say that recognizing that this is a weird year. This is what they call one of the weird ones out there.")

Weird and unsettling for Mr. Bush and the Bush campaign. The days when Pat Buchanan were the President's biggest worry seem long gone indeed.

(CBS-Lead)

NBC's Tom Brokaw reports John Chancellor has been looking at what all the voters today were thinking about, and Ross Perot came up very high on their agenda.

Chancellor says as we polled voters in California, Alabama, New Jersey and Ohio, about half of those Democrats and Republicans who describe themselves as independents said they would vote for Perot in November. Significant numbers of Democrats and Republicans who voted for George Bush in 1988 told us today that they would vote for Ross Perot in November. Republicans in our poll today were asked how they would vote in November. In California there is a lot of Perot strength. [Toss-up according to the NBC video]. In Ohio it was Republican. In New Jersey it was Republican. In Alabama it was Republican.

Chancellor cont'd -- The Republicans may have a problem with abortion. Large numbers of people in our survey today -- Republicans -- said they wanted abortion kept legal. And that might be trouble for the Republicans at their convention. We asked people if the government would work better if we elect all new people this year. Democrats in all the states said elect all new people this year. Republicans generally said no. (NBC-2)

PRESIDENT'S POLITICAL SITUATION

Brokaw: President Bush, of course, wrapped up the Republican nomination some time ago. But as those California and other voters demonstrated today, his political problems in many ways are only getting worse.

NBC's John Cochran: The President is trying to do what presidents always do when they are in trouble -- look presidential.

Bush tackled a big domestic agenda today: meeting with California officials on the aftermath of the L.A. riots then talking up his health care plan. And finally, pushing for a balanced budget amendment.

(TV coverage of President Bush speaking to a crowd.)

But at the end of the day nothing much had happened, which sums up what many voters think of Bush's domestic efforts. Mayors from all over the country told him he had to get tougher with Congress.

(Mayor Bartlett of Dallas, stakeout: "I think our advice today collectively was to toughen up the articulation of the urban agenda and to force it to a vote in Congress using the considerable powers of the presidency.")

But lately Bush has tried cooperation instead of confrontation with Congress. Back in March Bush wanted a shootout with Congress to campaign against a do-nothing Congress as Harry Truman did in 1948.

(TV coverage of President Bush's March 20 address.)

But two things changed Bush's strategy: the L.A. riots and Ross Perot. Voters began to think that Perot could do more than just argue with Congress. And the riots convinced many voters that cities were drifting into anarchy. Voter confidence in Bush dropped despite a mild improvement in the economy. Today the government said its key forecasting gauge is up almost half a percent [0.4%] -- not bad but not enough for the White House to break out the champagne. New home sales were up [1.3%] but just barely. Without a strong economy, Bush is trying to look strong himself by pushing to rebuild inner cities through tax breaks for new businesses. As for Ross Perot, the Bush campaign will attack him but how hard? Take Perot's reluctance to put homosexuals in some government jobs. One of the masterminds of Bush's 1988 campaign knows what he would do with that.

(Roger Ailes: "I'd just repeat what he says. So far he says only part of the cabinet can be gay. I don't know what he's talking about -- maybe Secretary of Transportation. He doesn't want him hanging around the bus terminal.")

But Bush's campaign manager Bob Teeter does not play hardball that hard. His new idea is for Bush to have a nighttime news conference this week. But many in the White House think it's dumb to have a prime time news conference unless you have something new to say. Stay tuned. (NBC-3)

CLINTON

Brokaw: It seems as if it has been going on for years now and several lifetimes for Bill Clinton, but it was less than four months ago that the presidential primary ordeal began in the snows of New Hampshire without Ross Perot. When it ended today in sunny California and five other states Perot was very much on the minds and in the hearts of many voters as Clinton was securing the Democratic nomination. (NBC-Lead)

Jennings reports Clinton aides pushed this line today: "George Bush helped his friends in the 1980s. Ross Perot helped himself."

ABC's Chris Bury says in the days ahead Clinton plans to reach voters more directly through televised town meetings and radio talks shows. (ABC-3)

Jennings says while the campaign in California has left most people uninvolved, the people who live in south-central L.A. turned out to vote today with a message they hoped would be heard as far away as Washington and as close as City Hall.

ABC's Judy Muller says in neighborhoods devastated by last month's explosion of anger, voters went to the polls today to express themselves another way.

(unidentified man: "The only way we can make a positive change is by coming out to vote.")

For some, that positive change would include a new president. This woman came to vote for Bill Clinton.

(unidentified woman: "Seems that he cares, and he came to the areas that were most burned out.... It seems like he really cares.")

(unidentified man: "I'm hoping the politicians finally wake up and smell the coffee. Something has to be done not only here in L.A. but all across America.") (ABC-4)

CBS TOWN MEETING

Rather says we'll have much more about the presidential campaign in a special "Campaign '92 Town Meeting" tonight. We'll hear from Ross Perot and we'll be joined by Bill Clinton. Both President Bush and Vice President Quayle declined invitations. (CBS-3)

NEW AMERICA PLAN

Jennings: A couple of high-profile Californians were trying to have their influence felt in Washington today.

Governor Wilson and L.A. Mayor Bradley were both at the White House telling the President and the congressional leaders to stop talking and get on with spending more money on so-called enterprise zones. Those are the areas mostly in the inner cities where the federal government would create new jobs by offering industry tax breaks to set up shop there. Three dozen states have already set up their own version of enterprise zones. A few have been remarkably successful but what a struggle it can be in others.

ABC's Bob Jamieson reports on Chicago's west side in state enterprise zone number four the main challenge is to keep things from getting worse. Unemployment among young black men is more than 20%. And crime is rampant. Andrew Goldsmith is the administrator of the zone. In the last eight years the project's tax and loan incentives have attracted businesses which brought 4,000 new manufacturing jobs to the zone. But during the same period businesses have moved three times as many manufacturing jobs to the suburbs.

(Goldsmith: "Enterprise zones are like putting the finger in the dike.... But if you want to get rid of all that water behind the dike, you need a lot more than an enterprise zone.")

Goldsmith's experience is much like those of people running enterprise zones in the 36 other states where local governments have created them. While enterprise zones have had some success, planning director Valerie Jarrett says the Bush Administration has not placed enough emphasis on other programs aimed at crime, housing, and education.

(Jarrett: "If you have ten bullet holes in your body and the surgeon manages to patch up one hole, you're still going to bleed to death. And the enterprise zones address one hole.")

Still, city officials would recognize federal enterprise zones if Washington recognizes the idea as part of the answer, not all of it. (ABC-5)

IRAQI AID/CONGRESS/SPECIAL PROSECUTOR

Rather reports Democrats in Congress formally asked today for a special prosecutor to answer questions about alleged secret U.S. aid to Iraq before the Gulf War, including just before the war. Critics charge that Bush aides misled Congress while they funneled billions of dollars to Saddam Hussein to buy arms for Saddam's military. (CBS-5)

IRAQ LOANS/BANK MANAGER ARREST

Rather reports in Atlanta a former bank manager [Christopher Drogoul, former manager of the Atlanta branch of BNL] pleaded guilty to arranging secret loans for Saddam. But a federal judge openly questions his story suggesting that the defendant was taking a fall for unidentified higher officials. (CBS-6)

CHINA/MFN

Jennings reports President Bush has decided to extend MFN benefits to China for another year despite the fact there has been no major improvement in China's human rights record. (CBS-3, NBC-6, ABC-10)

ECONOMY

Jennings reports the sales of new homes were up 1.3%. Overall, the government's index of leading economic indicators rose for the fourth month in a row. That's up 0.4%. (CBS-7, ABC-6)

VETERANS HOSPITALS/AVAILABLE BEDS

Jennings asks how come there are so many empty hospital beds when so many people can't get into the hospital? The U.S. government spends $14 billion a year on veterans' hospitals. And while many of them are overcrowded, some of them are relatively empty. Now if veterans and their dependents are being taken care of as intended, why couldn't some of those empty beds be used for other people in need?

ABC's George Strait reports about Tuskegee, AL. The nearest hospital that will treat this car accident victim is 30 miles away. The victim died before he could get there. There is no way to know of how many people have died or been permanently injured here because there is no nearby hospital to admit them. But these kinds of medical tragedies are common in Tuskegee. On the outskirts of Tuskegee is a solution -- a well equipped hospital that is only half full but reserved for veterans. The Bush Administration proposed opening these half-filled veterans' hospitals to non-veterans. But veterans groups and their supporters attacked the idea, claiming veterans would lose their preference.

(Sen. Shelby: "We were going to open up these hospitals to non-veterans at the expense of veterans.")

The Secretary of Veterans Affairs says that's not so.

(Secretary Derwinski: "The veterans would always have priority. And no veteran would ever be denied or delayed treatment.")

Secretary Derwinski makes that promise because only two of the VA's 179 hospitals would have open to others. Still, groups like the American Legion fought the experiment.

(John Hansen, American Legion: "We weren't sure they would stop with just two hospitals or just be for a few years.")

The U.S. Senate overwhelmingly passed legislation to stop the experiment so the White House abandoned the idea.

(Frank Hill, Chairman of Macon County Comm.: "Lives are being lost while people are playing political games.")

People in Tuskegee say, once again, they have been victimized by politicians in Washington. And the community now is angry that at the first sign of political pressure the government abandons an experiment that would actually benefit Tuskegee.

(Hill: "This opportunity will have given the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services and the Veterans Affairs Department an opportunity to redeem itself.")

Instead, the government is saying while the medical needs here may be immediate, help is still 30 miles down the road. (ABC-11)

YUGOSLAVIA

Brokaw reports medical officials in Bosnia have more than doubled the unconfirmed death toll to 5,700 in three months of fighting. In Croatia, where sporadic fighting continues, the death toll now is some 10,000. (NBC-12)

EDITORIALS/COLUMNISTS

HOUSING POLICY

Washington Rightly Steps Up Testing Of Bias In Housing -- "The Bush Administration's intensified efforts to uncover discrimination in housing and mortgage-lending will target one of the more insidious realities of minority life. It's one that can be just as damaging as more overt inequities.... The Bush Administration's decision to dig more deeply into the problems of subtle racial prejudice is a welcome initiative." (Buffalo News, 5/24)

FOREIGN POLICY

Bush's Foreign Policy Gaps -- "President Bush, sagging in the polls despite preliminary signs of economic recovery, has apparently decided to base his reelection campaign on his performance in foreign affairs. 'Obviously you don't run away from your strength,' Samuel Skinner, Bush's chief of staff, told Globe's Michael Kranish. But a look at Bush's record shows that rather than initiating policies, he spent most of his term reacting to events outside his control. With the exception of the Iraq war, the U.S. largely has been an onlooker as one crisis followed another, from Tiananmen Square to the streets of Sarajevo.... If foreign policy is to be touted as his strong point, George Bush may be in deeper trouble than he knows." (Boston Globe, 5/31)

A Policy Of Appeasement And Deceit -- "As policy, the President's decision to be an ally of Iraq was a serious mistake. What's worse, he continued to pursue the policy even though it was obvious, or should have been, that he had made a mistake. Saddam Hussein was then, as he is now, an unreliable, unstable ruthless dictator with ambitions to become the dominant figure in the Middle East. Mr. Bush ignored all that, however, because of the need, he claimed in the directive [secret national security directive issued by President Bush in 1989 making it U.S. policy to curry favor with Iraq], to maintain a counterweight to Iran and to protect unspecified vital American interests.... In light of what has turned up, Mr. Bush's greatest foreign policy triumph -- the Persian Gulf War -- turns out to be something of a fraud. In effect, Mr. Bush was forced to go to war against his own policy, a policy rooted in appeasement and carried out through deceit and abuse of power." (St. Louis Post-Dispatch, 6/1)

FETAL TISSUE RESEARCH

Science, Not Stagnation -- "The White House still stubbornly stands in the way of practical fetal-tissue research to help Parkinson's patients, diabetics and Alzheimer's sufferers. President Bush's stance defies the collective wisdom of the nation's scientific and medical communities. Even the Reagan-era stalwart who instituted the 1988 federal ban on such work now decries it. Otis Bowen, former HHS secretary, says the ban was political.... Lifting the ban will...offer hope of a cure for hundreds of thousands of Americans with these debilitating diseases."

Dear Mr. President:

While I have expressed my strong disagreement with your policy regarding the Haitian boat people, I want to acknowledge and applaud some excellent decisions your Administration has made relative to that group.

✓ First, I am told that the new corps of asylum officers created and developed last year by INS Commissioner, Eugene McNary, has been sorting out the potential asylum applicants on Guantanamo in a highly professional manner. Those who are knowledgeable are impressed by their performance, particularly given the stressful environment in which they work.

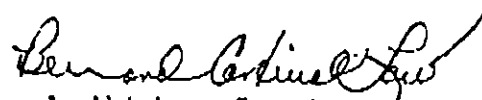

Second, the decision to simplify and greatly expand refugee processing by the U.S. Embassy in Haiti is a very welcome action. To facilitate this processing, the U.S. Catholic Conference, office of Migration and Refugee Services (USCC/MRS) will be happy to assist in the administration of this program in any way it can.

Third, I understand that those Haitians allowed in the U.S. to apply for asylum, are now to receive a one-year work authorization. This benefit will enhance the ability of USCC/MRS and other agencies to assist and resettle more quickly the Haitians brought in from Guantanamo.

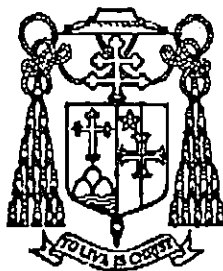

These actions will significantly ease the plight of Haitians seeking to apply for asylum or refugee status in the U.S. I congratulate your Administration for these positive decisions.

Asking God to bless you, I am

Sincerely yours in Christ,

Archbishop of Boston

CONGRESSIONAL MONITOR

Wednesday, June 3, 1992

Volume 28, Number 87

Today in Congress

Senate Floor: The Senate will continue consideration of legislation (S 1504) that would reauthorize the Corporation for Public Broadcasting for fiscal 1994-96.

The measure would allocate $310 million for 1994, $375 million for 1995 and $425 million for 1996. The corporation is "forward funded" for three fiscal years to help insulate it from political pressures.

Senators will vote on an amendment that would reduce the bill's funding levels.

Members are also scheduled to vote on an amendment by West Virginia Democrat Robert C. Byrd that would require the Federal Communications Commission to develop standards for judging "indecent programming" and to prohibit public radio and television stations from broadcasting such material during daytime hours.

House Floor: The massive fiscal 1993 defense authorization bill (HR 5006) is scheduled for consideration today.

As approved by the Armed Services panel, the $274 billion measure for the Defense Department would authorize $7 billion less than requested by President Bush. (See story, p. 4)

Unemployment Extension: Legislation (HR 5260) that would extend a federal benefits program for the long-term unemployed will be marked up first by the House Government Operations Subcommittee on Legislation and then by the full committee.

Currently, unemployed workers are eligible to receive 26 or 33 weeks of emergency federal benefits — depending on a state's unemployment level — after their 26 weeks of state benefits have run out. The emergency program expires on July 4.

HR 5260 would extend the program until Jan. 1, 1993, or until one month after the national rate of unemployment dropped below 6.5 percent.

Long-term jobless workers who exhaust their state benefits could collect 20 or 26 weeks of extra payments, depending on a state's unemployment rate.

The $5.8 billion cost for the program would be paid for by requiring those who pay taxes on a quarterly basis to pay a larger share of their total tax burden before April 15 and by eliminating business tax deductions for salaries paid to executives in excess of $1 million annually.

The measure enjoys the solid support of committee Democrats and is expected to win approval from both the subcommittee and the full committee.

Local Aid: Legislation that would direct federal funds to 39,000 municipalities over the next year will be taken up by the House Government Operations Subcommittee on Human Resources this morning and by the full committee later in the day.

The measure (HR 5259) would authorize $5.4 billion for the remainder of fiscal 1992 and part of fiscal 1993.

The money would be allocated according to a formula that takes into account economic factors such as local per capita income. Local governments would determine how to spend the funds.

The measure has the support of most committee Democrats and is expected to win subcommittee and full committee approval. But most panel Republicans oppose the bill, arguing that the structure of the distribution formula — which relies heavily on an area's per capita income — means that some of the areas hardest hit by the recession will not receive an adequate share of the funding.

SENATE FLOOR: Sports gambling bill passed, CPB taken up.

The Senate passed, 88-5, legislation (S 474) that would ban most types of state-sponsored sports gambling.

The bill (S 474) would not affect betting on horse and dog racing or number lotteries. Only betting on sports such as basketball, football and baseball would be prohibited.

Several states, including Delaware, Nevada and Oregon, already offer sports gambling. These established programs could continue under the measure.

The prohibition would not cover scratch games or lotteries that use a sports theme but do not involve actual games in which athletes participate.

Public Broadcasting. The Senate began formal consideration of legislation (S 1504) to authorize a nearly 50 percent increase in funding for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting (CPB) in fiscal 1994-96. The measure would authorize $1.1 billion over the three years for the CPB, which is "forward funded" to help remove it from political pressures.

The bill has touched off a sometimes sensitive debate among senators over claims by opponents that CPB exhibits a liberal bias and encourages the airing of programs considered indecent.

The CPB makes programming grants to National Public Radio and the Public Broadcasting Service.

HOUSE FLOOR: Historic Preservation Fund reauthorization OK'd.

The federal fund that provides matching grants for national historic site projects would be reauthorized under a bill (HR 4801) that passed the House by voice vote yesterday.

The measure would reauthorize the Historic Preservation Fund through fiscal 1997, with an annual funding ceiling of $150 million. Congress appropriates money out of the fund for various projects. For fiscal 1992, $35 million was appropriated for matching grants.

• House members also passed, by voice vote, a bill (HR 3905) that would authorize $5 million a year through fiscal 1996 for a council that advises Congress and the administration on historic preservation projects.

DIGITAL TAPE bill aims to help consumers, assuage industry.

The House Energy and Commerce Committee yesterday approved, by voice vote, a bill that would clear the way for widescale introduction of blank digital audio tapes in the United States.

The music industry had blocked imports of the tapes, which would allow those with digital recording equipment to make extremely high quality copies of music and other material.

Unlike conventional tapes, digital tapes retain their sound quality when additional recordings are made from a taped copy.

The bill (HR 4567) would add a royalty fee to the price of digital tapes and recording equipment that would be used to compensate music publishers, recording companies and artists for copyright infringement.

The bill would also require modifications to be made to digital tapes and recording equipment to prevent "second generation" taping, which might be sold illegally. Such tape-to-tape copying has had the music industry fearful of losing potential royalties.

Alex McMillan, R-N.C., said consumers have been "caught in the middle" of the debate between the entertainment industry and the digital tape industry. "This bill should be the end of these struggles," he said.

SECURITIES FRAUD bill moves to House floor.

Legislation that would give the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) sweeping new authority to police the loosely regulated $2.3 trillion market for U.S. government securities was approved by voice vote yesterday by the House Energy and Commerce Committee.

The measure (HR 3927) is the toughest response by lawmakers to the Salomon Brothers scandal, in which the giant New York securities dealer repeatedly violated government rules by submitting bogus and unauthorized bids for securities at Treasury auctions, dating back to 1989.

The bill would enable the SEC to require government bond dealers to exercise greater internal controls against fraud and to keep better records of trading.

Under the bill, the SEC could seek firms' data without issuing subpoenas, avoiding the risk of alerting dealers to an investigation.

The measure also would permit the National Association of Securities Dealers, a private industry association overseen by the SEC, to issue sales practice rules covering the government bond market. Currently, the association cannot set sales rules for its members.

Committee aides say they expect a floor vote on the bill this summer, but the bill's prospects are far from clear because some federal agencies oppose it.

• The committee also approved, by voice vote, a bill (HR 3047) that would lift restrictions in the Securities and Exchange Act Amendments of 1975 that prohibit money managers, such as managers of investor-based mutual funds, from using affiliated brokers to make trades on a securities exchange.

Under the 1975 amendments, money managers must use independent brokers to conduct transactions on the exchanges. Bill backers say the extra step of using an independent broker costs fund managers money and does little to ensure that investments will not be churned — traded frequently to increase a broker's commission.

The bill would require fund managers to regularly disclose to investors how often affiliated brokers conduct transactions.

BASE CLOSING land transfer bill OK'd by Energy and Commerce.

The House Energy and Commerce Committee yesterday approved, by voice vote, a bill (HR 4016) that aims to speed the transfer to nearby communities of uncontaminated lands at military bases that are slated to be closed.

The bill would require federal agencies to determine what portions of the military facilities are free of hazardous wastes and can easily be made available for community use.

Under current law, military base lands, many of which contain some toxic wastes, must be cleaned up entirely before ownership can be transferred.

Bill backers say that only small portions of many bases contain hazardous wastes and that compliance with current law would mean lengthy delays in transferring the lands.

Supporters also say the speedy transfer of land to communities will help them recover from the economic impact of losing a defense installation.

INDEPENDENT GAS station owners seek protection.

The House Energy and Commerce Committee gave quick voice vote approval yesterday to a bill designed to assist service station operators who must compete with service stations owned and operated by large refiners.

The bill (HR 5000) would bar an oil company from proposing stringent contract terms that make it impractical for an independent operator to retain a franchise to sell the company's product. The goal behind offering such terms is to convert a service station to a company-owned outlet.

The bill is in response to recent complaints that oil companies have been making unreasonable demands in franchise renewal negotiations in an attempt to squeeze out independent service station operators and replace them with more profitable company-owned stations.

Some station operators have testified before congressional panels that during contract negotiations oil suppliers have demanded that rural stations stay open 24 hours a day or keep more than one mechanic on duty.

Ron Wyden, D-Ore., said the bill will help small service stations, which he characterized as an "endangered species" because of the power large refiners have to "squeeze out" smaller competitors.

• The committee delayed marking up legislation (HR 4706) to reauthorize the Consumer Product Safety Commission.

A committee aide said the staff of the Subcommittee on Commerce, Consumer Protection and Competitiveness needed more time before full committee action. The bill will be taken up at the next full committee markup, the aide said.

CHINA MFN status gets go ahead from President Bush.

President Bush announced yesterday that he will renew most-favored-nation (MFN) trade status for China, despite congressional concerns about human rights abuses in the country.

"In making this important decision, the president stressed that it is wrong to isolate China if we hope to influence China," the White House said in announcing the renewal of the trade status.

The administration wants to "elicit a faster pace and a broader scope for human rights improvements in China. Withdrawal of MFN would achieve neither of these objectives," the statement continued.

Bush's decision to continue China's MFN status came one day before the third anniversary of the 1989 Chinese government attack on pro-democracy demonstrators in Tiananmen Square in Beijing. Congress has 90 days to try to block Bush's decision before it goes into effect.

Without MFN status, China's products would be taxed, effectively cutting off most exports to the United States. Congress has failed in the past to override Bush's vetoes of measures that would have denied the annual trade status to Beijing.

Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., who led the battle in the House against giving China MFN status, is expected to produce a new bill denying China the trade status next year.

Senate Majority Leader George J. Mitchell, D-Maine, said in a statement yesterday: "Instead of caving in to the communist Chinese leaders, the president should insist that the Chinese government demonstrate real progress on human rights...."

BUSH PUSHES enterprise zone plan with Hill leaders.

President Bush met yesterday with congressional leaders in an effort to speed action on a compromise urban policy package to help avert more riots like the one that ripped through parts of Los Angeles.

The centerpiece of Bush's inner-city aid strategy is the creation of urban enterprise zones — inner-city areas where businesses would be encouraged to locate in order to receive tax breaks.

Senate Majority Leader George J. Mitchell, D-Maine, said Bush suggested at the White House meeting that Congress act separately on enterprise zone legislation, aside from the larger urban aid package still being negotiated by the administration and Congress.

But Democratic leaders were distinctly unsympathetic to Bush's appeal, saying it was unclear how he would pay for his plan.

"The president today suggested that we break out the enterprise zones from other aspects of the discussion on an urban agenda. We are going to discuss that and get back to the president," said House Speaker Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash.

Mitchell added that White House Budget Director Richard G. Darman sent confusing signals at the meeting when he suggested that the enterprise zone program be included in the entire urban aid package.

Mitchell said final action on a supplemental appropriations bill (HR 5132) that would provide immediate aid to Los Angeles, Chicago and other cities remains a top priority. Mitchell said the bill is a high priority and hopes Congress can clear it "in the next couple of days."

IRAQ POLICY dispute sparks call for independent counsel.

Congressional Democrats are calling for the appointment of a special prosecutor to investigate whether the Bush administration broke any laws in its policies toward Iraq before the Persian Gulf War.

"I firmly believe that violations of federal criminal laws have occurred and that these violations will never be completely investigated or prosecuted unless an independent counsel is appointed," Charlie Rose, D-N.C., yesterday told the House Judiciary Committee.

Judiciary panel member Craig T. James, R-Fla., opposed the appointment of a special counsel, saying the charges were politically motivated to damage Bush before the presidential election.

Henry B. Gonzalez, Texas, and other Democrats have charged that administration officials misled Congress on its pre-war Iraq policy and that an agricultural credit program was misused to provide Iraq with loans when it was not creditworthy. Iraq defaulted on $2 billion of the $5 billion in credits it received from 1983 to 1990.

The Judiciary Committee is expected to ask Attorney General William P. Barr to request that a special three-judge panel appoint an independent counsel to look into the charges.

Judiciary Committee Chairman Jack Brooks, D-Texas, said the administration has been unwilling to cooperate with the congressional investigation into the charges.

BANK FRAUD claims need more attention, GAO reports.

Federal bank regulators must more aggressively pursue cases against former executives of failed banks and thrifts, a General Accounting Office (GAO) official told the Senate Banking Committee yesterday.

"The bottom line is that the FDIC's [Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation] and the RTC's [Resolution Trust Corporation] performance in litigating claims has not been good," said GAO Associate Director Harold A. Valentine.

According to Valentine, the FDIC has filed claims involving approximately 20 percent of the failed institutions, while the RTC has instigated cases involving about 41 percent. Both agencies have said that wrongdoing was present in about 80 percent of all failures.

Valentine cited staff shortages and weak oversight of institutions as some of the reasons that the FDIC and RTC have not pursued more cases.

Chairman Donald W. Riegle Jr., D-Mich., said that the recovery of money from former bank officials could significantly lower taxpayer costs for the S&L bailout. "A lot rides on how well the FDIC and RTC manage their claim portfolios." The RTC currently is seeking $4.5 billion in pending suits.

The panel's ranking Republican, Jake Garn of Utah, agreed but said that the FDIC and RTC must do a better job of determining which bankers were actually negligent rather than the ones "who made business decisions that were flawed."

He said that innocent directors of failed institutions have been harassed by overzealous regulators, which has led to overcautious lending practices.

SEXUAL HARASSMENT in military subject of Senate hearing.

A discussion on the treatment of women in the military, particularly at the military service academies, dominated a hearing on personnel issues yesterday before the Senate Armed Services Subcommittee on Manpower and Personnel.

In a report requested by subcommittee Chairman John Glenn, D-Ohio, and committee Chairman Sam Nunn, D-Ga., the General Accounting Office (GAO) discovered that sexual harassment at the Naval Academy, Air Force Academy and West Point occurs more frequently than is reported.

In response to a GAO survey conducted between 1988 and 1991, female academy students reported experiencing various types of verbal and visual harassment once or twice a month, including offensive posters, mocking gestures, derogatory statements about women, and comments that women didn't belong or that standards had been lowered for them.

The GAO found, however, that more extreme forms of sexual harassment, such as pressure for dates and unwanted sexual advances, appeared to be less frequent among academy students.

Barbara Spyridon Pope, assistant secretary of the Navy, told the panel that the Navy is committed to ending sexual harassment but that what really needs to change is a "cultural attitude" in the services toward women.

(HR 693) that is aimed at easing the impact on Eastern coal operations of tough new clean air regulations. The acid rain provisions of the 1990 Clean Air Act set strict limits on sulfur dioxide emissions, and many utilities are expected to switch from Eastern high-sulfur coal to cleaner-burning Western coal to comply with the law.

Much of the coal mined in the West is mined on federal land. The bill would prevent the Interior Department from issuing new coal leases on federal lands if the leases would significantly harm existing — and presumably Eastern — coal operations.

The bill is strongly opposed by panel Westerners, who say it is aimed at blocking coal development in their states.

The bill was originally part of the Interior Committee's proposed contribution to the national energy strategy bill (HR 776) but was removed after a compromise with the Energy and Commerce Committee.

• The committee will also mark up a bill (HR 3168) that would open up two federal oil shale reserves in Colorado to oil and gas exploration.

Roll-ups: The Senate Banking Committee will take another run at marking up legislation that would give investors in limited partnerships more

Defense Budget: Old Battles Rejoined

The Cold War may be over, but the "peace dividend" has yet to arrive.

As the fiscal 1993 defense authorization bill (HR 5006) comes to the House floor today, there is no longer a Soviet threat, but that doesn't mean that members are eager to make sweeping cuts in the Pentagon's budget.

As reported by the Armed Services Committee, the bill would set the fiscal 1993 defense budget at $274 billion, about $10 billion less than this year's budget. President Bush requested $281 billion.

With the economy still sluggish and defense workers already facing layoffs, lawmakers are reluctant to impose further defense spending cuts that would throw more workers out into a depressed job market.

And because budget rules bar Congress from using defense dollars for domestic programs, there is little incentive for them slash defense spending. Congress rejected bills (HR 3732, S 2399) that would have allowed lawmakers to claim a peace dividend by shifting some fiscal 1993 defense money to domestic programs.

"The peace dividend may appear in about five years, but not today," said key Senate defense appropriator Daniel K. Inouye, D-Hawaii.

Earlier this year, lawmakers floated a host of proposals to cut defense well beyond the president's request. But after members became aware of the magnitude of job losses that such cuts would require, the House and Senate agreed on a budget resolution that included a $277 billion defense figure.

Because the House Armed Services Committee marked up a $274 billion measure in advance of the budget compromise, the House has an additional $3 billion to work with if members choose.

Attempts to craft a compromise proposal to channel some of that $3 billion to defense-based programs to help America's inner cities fell through.

Ranking Armed Services Republican Bill Dickinson, Ala., may offer an amendment to increase the authorization by $3 billion, with the funds targeted at military programs.

Panel members added a $1 billion earmark for an economic conversion program that would ease job losses from defense industries. The yet-to-be-designed program would provide assistance to defense industries in converting to non-defense work.

Despite job loss concerns among members, California liberal Democrats Ronald V. Dellums and Maxine Waters plan to offer a long-shot amendment to cut the overall spending level by 10 percent, to about $250 billion.

In defending the Bush budget, administration officials have said that deeper spending cuts would mean widespread layoffs of military personnel and would hinder military readiness.

After Armed Services panel Chairman Les Aspin, D-Wis., revealed his $274 billion budget figure, Secretary of Defense Dick Cheney said: "The only way to get savings of this magnitude in a short period of time is for me to fire 300,000 active duty military people" beyond the administration's requested reduction in personnel.

But after the committee marked up the defense authorization bill, Aspin remarked: "None of those outrageous predictions are coming to pass."

Floor Fights on Tap

House leaders said they want to finish work on the bill by Friday, and that may mean quick consideration of floor amendments. At press time, the Rules Committee had not finished crafting a rule determining which amendments would be considered, but some familiar floor fights are certain to be played out again.

The House is expected to vote on a one-year moratorium on nuclear weapons tests. More than half the members back the amendment. The testing ban would be in effect as long as the states of the former Soviet Union continued their current testing moratorium.

Other amendments may have a tougher time.

SDI Funding. The Armed Services Committee approved $4.3 billion for the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI); Bush requested $5.4 billion for the anti-missile defense. Liberals were dismayed by the committee's decision to come so close to the president's SDI request.

Dellums and Barbara Boxer, D-Calif., will try to slash the total to $2.3 billion.

B-2 Bomber. Another familiar battle will involve the B-2 bomber. The committee went along with the president's request for 20 of the "stealth" bombers but would require the Defense Department to prove the plane's radar-evading capabilities and to limit costs.

Thomas H. Andrews, D-Maine, is expected to offer an amendment to restrict purchases of the B-2 to the 15 planes approved last year.

Burden Sharing. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo., and Barney Frank, D-Mass., are expected to offer amendments that may prove popular with members who say that U.S. allies are not paying their fair share of defense costs. Schroeder's amendment would scale back U.S. troop presence in Europe to 100,000 by 1995, about 50,000 less than planned by the administration.

Frank will offer an amendment to require allies to pick up a greater share of the tab for U.S. troops overseas. If the allies refuse, the amendment would cut the Defense Department's operations and maintenance budget by about $4.8 billion.

—Andrew Taylor

power to fight a reorganization, or "roll up," of their partnership.

The committee attempted to mark up the bill (S 1423) on May 21, but a parliamentary maneuver by bill opponent Phil Gramm, R-Texas, blocked consideration.

In a roll-up, several partnerships — designed as long-term, non-traded investments — are reorganized into a single publicly traded investment, usually a stock offering. Such stocks have generally fared poorly in securities markets, costing the original investors, in sum, more than $1 billion. Meanwhile, critics charge, the general partners of such deals have reaped excessive management fees and have boosted their equity positions at the expense of the limited, or non-management, partners.

The bill would ease federal proxy regulation to make it easier for investors to fight a roll-up and would require that limited partners who oppose a roll-up be given alternative compensation to the new stock offering.

Gramm maintains that most of the bill's goals have already been addressed by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

The bill has 71 cosponsors.

Gramm may offer a host of unrelated amendments on banking and securities issues that could make the markup a lengthy one.

Trade Bill: The House Ways and Means Trade Subcommittee will begin work on trade legislation that has been labeled "protectionist" by the Bush administration and is opposed by Subcommittee Chairman Sam M. Gibbons, D-Fla., because of what he believes is its anti-free-trade bias.

The bill (HR 5100) would reauthorize for five years the Super 301 section of existing trade law. That provision requires the U.S. Trade Representative to identify countries with major trade barriers to U.S. goods and target them for negotiations and possible retaliation.

The administration opposes reauthorizing Super 301 and especially dislikes bill language that would force the White House to investigate Japan, Korea and Taiwan for specific violations.

The bill is moving in spite of Gibbons' opposition because it represents an alliance between full committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., and House Majority Leader Richard A. Gephardt, D-Mo., to push Congress to take the lead on trade issues. The House Democratic leadership strongly supports this aim.

The session today will be a "walk through" to give members the chance to review the entire bill; no votes will be taken. The markup will continue next week.

Rural Health: Legislation aimed at boosting the use of telecommunications equipment to link rural doctors and academics with advanced medical and educational technologies will be marked up by a House Agriculture subcommittee.

According to bill sponsor and Conservation, Credit and Rural Development Subcommittee Chairman Glenn English, D-Okl., the bill (HR 5238) would provide grants to help rural institutions purchase advanced equipment to transmit such things as medical test results, lab slides and information to develop new curricula.

The bill would authorize $30 million to help link large hospitals with rural health-care facilities. Another $20 million would be authorized to help states link college and university classrooms and laboratories.

The measure would also offer federally subsidized loans to telephone companies to assist them in providing the new services.

The committee will also mark up a bill (HR 5237) that would make technical changes in the Rural Electrification Act. These changes are intended to enhance rural development by making it easier for small telephone and electric service co-operatives to obtain loans in order to provide services to rural areas. ■

Until he attended a CQ Budget Program,
Walter Scott thought that impoundments only happened to stray cats, dogs and cars.

Anyone can make a mistake. But attend a CQ budget program and it's unlikely you'll ever make such a glaring faux pas as Mr. Scott.

Attend Understanding Congressional Budgeting on June 9, August 17, or October 9 ($225), and you'll see how rules, procedures and politics influence the way federal funds are authorized and appropriated each year.

Clear, fact-filled lectures on current budget rules will help you follow the key steps of the congressional budget process as soon as you leave the program.

Then, with Advanced Congressional Budget Procedures, on October 26-27 ($495), you'll gain further knowledge and greater insight with detailed explanations of the congressional budget process and hands-on illustrations of the documents that drive it.

Walk through each step of the budget process and see how budgets evolve from initial consideration of the president's budget recommendation to final enactment of appropriations legislation.

When so much rides on a full understanding of the budget process can you afford to make mistakes like Mr. Scott?

Dear Sherrie:

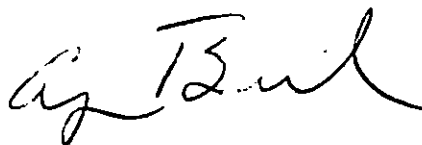

You have brought extraordinary achievement and personal warmth to your service on my staff. We have worked closely together on many important projects in the last several months, and I have always valued your guidance and advice.

It is therefore with deep regret that I accept your resignation as Assistant to the President. In the last several months we have worked to formulate an economic growth package, a response to our urban problems, passage of a balanced budget amendment, and other initiatives. You have been a key part of those initiatives, and you have performed with distinction in directing our message to the American people.

I understand the personal sacrifice you are making, and please know that Barbara and I have only the highest admiration for your professionalism, integrity, and personal loyalty to my Administration.

Best wishes.

Sincerely,

The Honorable Sherrie Rollins

WASHINGTON

June 3, 1992

Dear Mr. President:

I have been honored and privileged to serve in your Administration during these challenging times. The remarkable leadership you have provided in leading America at home and abroad has always been an inspiration to me. I have tried during my tenure here to introduce the ideals and programs of this Administration to as many people as possible. I have always sought to make a difference in helping to present your initiatives. I take great pride in the successes you have achieved during your first term and I wish you the greatest success during your second term.

It is with much regret, that I now find it necessary to submit my resignation. This is particularly difficult because of my deep affection for you and your family. But due to personal circumstances, I believe that the best interests of the Administration are served if I leave the White House at this time. Needless to say this is a most difficult decision for me. And I make it with the full knowledge that service in your Administration has been the highest honor of my life.

I firmly believe your reelection is crucial for the future of the Nation and I stand ready to help in any way I can.

Faithfully yours,

Sherrie S. Rollins

TALKING POINTS: UNITY BREAKFAST
LIVE FROM OEOB STUDIO
WEDNESDAY, JUNE 3, 1992 \ 1:10 P.M.

02 JUN 3 A 9: 47

- 0 THANK YOU GOVERNOR WILSON FOR THE INTRODUCTION AND FINE JOB AS B\Q CHAIRMAN.

- 0 CONGRATULATIONS TO GOP CHAIRMAN JIM DIGNAN ON A SUCCESSFUL UNITY BREAKFAST AND FOR PRESIDING OVER A STRONG STATE PARTY, WHICH WILL BRING VICTORY TO THE ENTIRE GOP TICKET THIS FALL.

- 0 CONGRATULATIONS TO U.S. SENATE WINNERS, JOHN
SEYMOUR AND BRUCE HERCHENSOHN.

- 0 CONGRATULATIONS TO ALL REPUBLICAN CANDIDATES WHO HAVE COME HERE TODAY IN UNITY AND SUPPORT OF THE WHOLE TICKET.

- 0 THERE ARE SO MANY SPECIAL FRIENDS AND REPUBLICAN LEADERS GATHERED AT THIS BREAKFAST, BUT A SPECIAL
THANKS TO GOOD FRIEND AND CO-CHAIRMAN JACK FLANAGAN.

0 BIGGEST DEBT OF GRATITUDE GOES TO THE OUTSTANDING CALIFORNIA ACTIVISTS WHO MADE CALIFORNIA A REPUBLICAN STATE. ALL OUR GOP VICTORIES HAVE BEEN MADE POSSIBLE BY THE TIRELESS, ENTHUSIASTIC WORK OF THE GRASSROOTS WORKERS.

0 LET ME ASSURE YOU, WE NEED YOU ONCE MORE. CALIFORNIA IS MY NUMBER ONE PRIORITY AND WE CAN ONLY WIN WITH YOUR CONTINUED SUPPORT. I WANT TO TELL YOU HOW IMPORTANT CALIFORNIA IS TO BARBARA AND ME. THE PEOPLE OF CALIFORNIA HAVE LED REPUBLICAN PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES TO VICTORY IN FIVE OF THE LAST SIX NATIONAL ELECTIONS. I AM PROUD TO HAVE BEEN PART OF THREE OF THOSE ELECTIONS. I AM PROUD TO HAVE BEEN THE RUNNING MATE TO PRESIDENT RONALD REAGAN IN 1980 AND 1984. AND IN 1988, I WAS DEEPLY HONORED WITH YOUR SUPPORT IN MY OWN ELECTION AS PRESIDENT.

- 0 I AM PROUD TO JOIN YOU THIS MORNING TO THANK YOU FOR YOUR SUPPORT AND CONGRATULATE YOU FOR COMING TOGETHER IN UNITY. YOU HAVE BEEN THROUGH HARD-FOUGHT PRIMARIES AND NOW IS THE TIME WE NEED TO ALL PULL TOGETHER AND GO FORWARD AS ONE, UNITED AGAINST OUR REAL FOE -- THE DEMOCRATS.
- 0 THE PEOPLE OF CALIFORNIA ARE KNOWN FOR LEADING THE REST OF THE NATION IN INNOVATIVE WAYS IN POLITICS, THE ARTS, AND ABOVE ALL ELSE, YOUR STRONG COMMITMENT TO THE PRINCIPLES OF INDIVIDUAL RESPONSIBILITY, FREEDOM, AND OPPORTUNITY.
- 0 BUT I ALSO KNOW THAT CALIFORNIANS ARE FRUSTRATED. YOU SEE MUCH OF OUR NATION ON THE ROAD TO ECONOMIC RECOVERY, YET CALIFORNIA IS STILL IN THE MIDST OF TOUGH TIMES.
- 0 BELIEVE ME, I'M FRUSTRATED TOO. TOO MANY AMERICANS THINK THE COUNTRY'S OFF TRACK.

0 I UNDERSTAND THAT IT'S NOT JUST THE DAY-TO-DAY
GRIDLOCK HERE IN WASHINGTON, BUT THE BIGGER
PROBLEMS WE FACE AS A NATION:

- A SPIRALLING BUDGET DEFICIT THAT SAPS
OUR ECONOMIC VITALITY,
- OUR CITIES THAT HAVE ALL TOO OFTEN
BECOME FLASHPOINTS FOR DESPAIR AND VIOLENCE,
- AND ONE THAT GOES TO THE HEART OF SO MUCH OF WHAT IS WRONG WITH SOCIETY
— TODAY: THE DETERIORATION OF THE AMERICAN FAMILY.

0 IN THIS ELECTION, WE NEED TO BE TALKING ABOUT BIG IDEAS IF WE ARE TO WRESTLE WITH BIG PROBLEMS.
THAT'S EXACTLY WHAT I'LL BE DOING.

- TAKING OUR PROPOSAL FOR A BALANCED
BUDGET AMENDMENT TO THE PEOPLE.
- FIGHTING FOR OUR NEW AMERICA PLAN TO BRING HOPE AND CONFIDENCE BACK TO THE PEOPLE OF OUR CITIES.
- AND PUTTING THE FUTURE OF AMERICA'S FAMILIES FIRST ON THE NATION'S AGENDA.

0 THESE ARE BIG IDEAS. BUT I'LL NEED YOUR HELP.

0 I BELIEVE THAT ULTIMATELY THIS ELECTION CONTEST WILL COME DOWN TO:

1. WHO'S THE BEST CANDIDATE WITH THE
VALUES, THE QUALIFICATIONS, AND THE IDEAS FOR THE JOB?
2. WHO DO YOU TRUST TO MAKE THE HARD
DECISIONS AND LEAD THIS COUNTRY FOR THE NEXT FOUR YEARS?

0 PETE AND JIM, WE ARE LOOKING FORWARD TO SPENDING
MORE TIME IN CALIFORNIA DURING THE NEXT FEW MONTHS. TO THOSE OF YOU IN THE AUDIENCE --
CALIFORNIA'S GREAT GRASSROOTS WORKERS --WE KNOW THAT TO KEEP OUR STRING OF VICTORIES ALIVE, WE MUST HAVE YOUR ACTIVE PARTICIPATION. LEST THERE BE ANY DOUBT, WE ARE READY FOR THIS FIGHT, AND WITH YOUR HELP, WE WILL WIN.

TALKING POINTS - BIPARTISAN WHIP GROUP FOR THE BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT

- I've been a strong supporter of a balanced budget amendment for a long time. In fact, it was the very first proposal I asked the Congress to pass when I became President. Requiring the federal government to live within its means is the single most important step we can take now to secure the future of America.
- So I'm very pleased that we're finally going to have a chance, this month, to put the question to a vote in Congress. There are still many opponents of real budget responsibility on the Hill, so we've got our work cut out for us.

card 2

- The bipartisan group around this table includes many longtime supporters of a balanced budget amendment, and I'm grateful for their leadership. We may not agree on every point of strategy, but I think we do agree on this:
- It's time for the federal government and the Congress to adopt, once and for all, the discipline that every American family already understands: You can't spend more than you take in. You can't treat the Federal Treasury like an unlimited line of credit at the corner cash machine.

TALKING POINTS FOR
BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT COALITION

REVISED

- Thank you all for being here. I'm in between meetings, but I did want to stop by a few minutes.
- Yesterday, I met with the Republican Leadership and just now I met with Joe Barton, Charlie Stenholm and a bipartisan group of our core supporters on the Balanced Budget Amendment.
- They know where I stand on the issue and I wanted to be sure that you do too. I want a Balanced Budget Amendment. We can't keep treating the federal Treasury like a cash machine.
- I support and will work for a 3/5 requirement for a tax increase.

Card 2

But -- and let me be clear -- if we do not get the votes for that requirement, I support the Stenholm version. I think it would be a shame to throw this golden opportunity away. Joe Barton and Bob Kasten agree with me on this point.

That brings me to my final point. We are really in a fight here and we need your help. I know there is a diversity of opinion among you about what would be the best result. Whatever the reason for that, I believe there is great support for a Balanced Budget Amendment outside the beltway. But we can't get the votes if you do not join us in this effort.

We are making an all-out effort. I apologize for having to run but I did want to ask for your help. I hope you'll all join in.

Dear Mr. President and Mrs. Bush:

I want to tell you about a wonderful evening that my wife Jennifer and I recently had with your son Neil and his lovely wife Sharon.

Jennifer and I were honored to co-chair a Karitas Foundation fund-raiser in New York. As we became increasingly involved in this event, we were moved by the desperate needs of so many children. Our admiration for the Karitas program has grown tremendously. We believe it is an outstanding example of what can be accomplished when the private sector and community-based self-help programs are involved.

Neil and Sharon were extremely gracious hosts and made memorable speeches that greatly complimented the strong family life that they cherish. Their involvement with Karitas and their commitment to that organization bears testimony to their appreciation of such values.

As the parents of three children, we can appreciate the pride you should enjoy in the accomplishments of Neil and Sharon.

With warm regards,

Sincerely,

Mark and Jennifer Broxmyer

MEMORANDUM

DATE: May 28, 1992
RE: Public Opinion on Vice President Quayle

The public generally approves of the job Dan Quayle is doing as Vice President, in spite of mixed feelings they have about him personally and about his ability to handle the job of President if called upon. The Vice President remains personally popular among Republicans, especially among strong Republicans, older Republicans, and more religious voters.

People's opinions of the Vice President have remained essentially unchanged through most of his term of office. Recent measures of favorability toward the Vice President, the public's perception of his capability of handling the job of President, and of the job he is currently doing as Vice-President are all similar to those taken in 1989.

In January of 1992, 39% of those asked said they have a favorable opinion of the Vice President, 46% say unfavorable. The Vice President has special appeal among Republicans, especially self-described strong Republicans and Republicans who attend church on a regular basis. Also, unlike the President, whose favorability has been relatively consistent across all age groups, Vice President Quayle is much more popular among older voters (especially senior citizens) than he is among younger voters. All groups, however, still rate President Bush more favorably than they do the Vice President.

One sign of the Vice President's general popularity with older voters is that among non-Republicans, the group that rates him the most favorably is senior citizen women. Among non-Republicans, though, all groups give the Vice President more unfavorable ratings than favorable.

However, a 52% majority of adults believe that Dan Quayle would not be able to handle the job of President if something were to happen to President Bush, while only 36% believe he would be qualified. This perception, though, breaks clearly along party lines, with 50% of Republicans, but only 22% of Democrats expressing confidence in his ability. Conservatives also have some degree of confidence in the Vice President, with 47% saying he could handle the job, and 40% saying he could not. Among conservative Republicans, 55% say he could handle the Presidency.

In spite of their views on his ability to handle the Presidency, a majority of the public (50%) approves of the job Dan Quayle is doing handling the Vice Presidency. The Vice President's job approval has dropped slightly since a peak of 57% last October, but it has generally remained near the 50% level over the last three years.

The public is also sympathetic to what they see as the unfair treatment the Vice President has received by the media. A majority (56%) believe the news media has treated him unfairly, while only 34% say the treatment he has received has been fair. Sixty percent say that all questions about his military service have been answered to their satisfaction, while only 35% say they still have doubts.

The result of these mixed feelings seems to be that Vice President Quayle has little positive or negative impact on people's overall presidential ballot support. In a split sample test last December, "Bush and Quayle" received the same amount of support on a generic presidential ballot question as President Bush alone.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRESIDENT

FROM: CLAYTON YEUTTER
SUBJECT: BENNO SCHMIDT LUNCHEON

Mr. President, Lamar Alexander provided the following background for your luncheon tomorrow:

1. Schmidt will head the Edison Project, a for-profit corporation that hopes to raise more than $2 billion to start 1,000 break-the-mold schools within the next three to four years.
2. Whittle has recruited a star-studded team in addition to Schmidt, including Checker Finn, who is a member of your Education Advisory Committee, and John Chubb of Brookings, who did the pioneering work on school choice.
3. Whittle was already controversial with educators because of his Channel One, a "Today Show" for high school kids, which is shown in 8,000 high schools and includes advertising.
4. This new Edison Project will be extremely controversial with the public school people.
5. You may want to recall these points about your own New American Schools Development Corporation.
 - A. The Corporation was formed at your request and is raising $150-200 million to fund design teams that will help communities create break-the-mold New American Schools.
 - B. Your New American Schools Development Corporation includes all schools, not just private schools.
 - C. Nearly 700 of the most creative design teams in America have formed to compete for the $200 million. The Corporation will announce the first winners at its meeting on July 7. More than 120 public school districts are a part of the various design teams.
 - D. Ann McLaughlin is the new president and chief executive officer of the New American Schools Development Corporation. She begins her work July 1. Tom Kean is the chairman of the board.

- E. The New American Schools Development Corporation and the Edison Project are on parallel tracks. Both see the need for break-the-mold New American Schools. The main difference is that the Edison Project is a for-profit corporation; the New American Schools Development is a nonprofit corporation creating design teams that will help all schools break-the-mold, including public schools.
- F. Insofar as we know, Whittle Corporation does no business with the federal government and does not plan to. It does not plan to be a competitor for the New American Schools Development Corporation funds.
- G. Lamar Alexander did some work for Whittle for about a year when he was a private citizen after he was governor. David Kearns was on the Board of Time Warner, which owns a part of Whittle. Therefore, Lamar and David generally do not comment publicly on the Whittle Enterprises.
- H. Attached is a Wall Street Journal article from today about Whittle's plan, which explains things pretty well.

Whittle's Lesson Plan for the Public Schools

Christopher Whittle plans to commercialize America's classrooms, and he's not apologetic about it, either.

"Absolutely," he sees schooling as a business like any other, the only qualification being government's commitment to making it "available to all." With the profit-seeking instructional concerns he aims to open beginning in 1996 — 200 at first, 1,000 thereafter — Mr. Whittle thinks he can show how to succeed where many public schools fail. He wants to do it within the bounds they face.

That means capping per-pupil charges at about $5,500 annually, and taking all comers (sort of). The education establishment laughs derisively and, now that Yale's Benno Schmidt has been added to the Whittle operation, nervously. The temple of basic learning, off-limits to unsanitized enterprise during more than a century as America's formative social institution, is about to be ventilated.

Business World

By Tim W. Ferguson

The inveterate entrepreneur with his seeming web of substantial allies in business and government is only one prong of the assault. All the while, a political movement for vouchers and parental choice advances. "We are more about choices than choice," Mr. Whittle's line goes. "Some critics of this are going to try to pull us into that debate. I am resistant to that."

"With that said, I think we're going to become very important to those who are leading the choice debate. They will probably use what we are doing as an important part of their arsenal."

Of course Mr. Whittle would be happy to take vouchers. Right now, the financial cushion is thin. His planned $5,500 charge isn't really comparable with the average public-school expenditure, he says, because the Whittle schools must allow maybe a 15% return for their investors, must carry building costs and pay taxes, and must generate about a 20% internal subsidy for scholarships so that no poor applicants are denied, voucher or no. In actual operating costs, "we're probably going to have to bring this in at around $3,500" per pupil annually, closer to what parochial schools spend.

At that cost, Mr. Whittle is looking to be technologically current. (His opening order for personal computers, he estimates, will initially amount to 20% to 30% of the product market, suggesting an alliance with a maker is in order.) The Whittle schools may stay open nearly year-round and 12 hours a day with a staggered schedule to assist working parents.

That's part of Mr. Whittle's intent to customize for the sake of the customers (parents), which the public schools seem incapable of doing. In return, he wants after-hours support for his schools' efforts. "One of the things I've thought of from time to time is that though we'll have no entrance requirements for the kids, we might have for their parents," he says.

That's a difference with the public schools as they normally exist today. The bare fact that Whittle enrollees will have sought out the new schools, often at a personal cost, indicates a level of commitment. What about the prerogative to expel malcontents? "We haven't figured out our position on that yet," he says. "Obviously it's very difficult. The public schools basically don't, and our feeling is that we want to approach that position, but I'm not sure what we're going to do."

Public school standards themselves could be raised, courts and legislatures willing. Compulsory attendance laws and a body-count funding mechanism are what stick old PS 39 with the passive and the delinquent, but those could be changed. After all, Mr. Whittle maintains that his program is the "private research and development arm of the public schools." Only if, 15 years out, "we in fact have created a fundamentally superior approach and there's absolutely no reaction in the public schools to it" will their existence be threatened.

A classic example of ossification on the government side is the notion that a school must have a traditional campus, with rows of classrooms, an auditorium and a big playground. That's expensive and inflexible as enrollment patterns change. In fact, "school" can be anywhere, including maybe the home.

The Whittles are wrestling with the issue.

"This is a question that worries me a great deal," says Mr. Whittle. "It's part of the old model that feels almost inescapable. We all have this sense that you must have a physical facility. I want us to question that. One of my fears is that we're not going to be radical enough in that regard." Though buildings of some sort now appear inevitable, they may not be ones used full time by the Whittle schools, he says. And yes, "the Resolution Trust Corp. has already contacted us" about its multitude of seized office space that could be leased.

In fact, site selections are the challenge that looms nearest, according to Mr. Whittle. In order to open in fall 1996, "we hit the first serious capital wall in 18 months, when land and real estate commitments have to be made." At that point, development costs move from the tens of millions

"into a different category." In order to satisfy financiers, "we need to have a demonstration of parent buy-in at that point." If the schools expect matriculation by age four, as they might, that'll require some toddler applications.

Pressure groups won't like much of what they hear out of Whittle's Knoxville headquarters, but the founder says experience to date with Channel One, his advertiser-supported entry of televised news to public-school classrooms, encourages him to think powerful resistance to change can be overcome.

"I actually find the people in the trenches, the teachers and the principals that go to work every day, to be quite open," he says. "The lesson of Channel One is that the national groups condemned it, while local groups adopted it in great numbers. Forty percent of middle and high schools in the U.S. are on line."

For all the pizzazz that Mr. Whittle's latest effort promises, its success likely rides on whether, as he believes, most parents in the applicant pool do care enough to make the program work, especially if he's going to be Pollyannish about the schools not having to punish.

The clincher, however, is that Whittle's approach isn't the sum of the alternatives. Once the path is broken, others may see profits in proprietary schooling. Children learn in all settings, and those with a gift for reaching them at play — say, Walt Disney Co. — may choose to extend the franchise. Even McDonald's, the favorite eatery of kids the world over, now plans to teach about nutrition(!). Will reading and counting be next?

"We're not saying that our system is going to be the only one," Mr. Whittle says. "I actually envision that 20 years from now there are going to be several major national providers. Each will have a different design. The parents will have wide choice."

Christopher Whittle

===== WHITE HOUSE '92 =====

*11 HAM 'N' ED'S WATCH: ROLLINS REPORTEDLY ON BOARD

NBC's Keith Morrison cited "A Bush Administration official" who said GOP strategist Ed Rollins, Reagan's '84 manager, "has indeed agreed to sign on with the Perot campaign, to manage that campaign, in fact" ("Today," NBC, 6/3). Asked on "CBS This Morning" if he was going to work for Perot, Rollins: "I'm not really prepared to get into that." On his attraction to Perot: "I think he's for change ... he has great appeal to a lot of voters out there who don't feel the process works for them ... he's a can-do kind of guy, and that's the appeal." Rollins said he will decide on whether to work for Perot in "the next day or so" and that it's a "tough decision" to make because he's been a "party person for so long." Rollins on Bush: "I think he's got about two to four weeks, and if there's not real movement, and if the economy recovers and he doesn't start to get some of the credit for it, it's going to be a very long fall for him" (6/3). The WH confirmed that Rollins' wife, Sherrie, who served in the Bush admin. as head of the WH Office of Public Liaison, resigned her position today (HOTLINE sources, 6/3).

SPENDING THAT $100M: According to AP reports, Perot "is willing to ante up an amazing $5 million -- each ... nearly $250,000 a week" to Rollins and Jordon to co-manage his presidential bid. Dem media consultant Ray Strother who turned down a Perot offer: "You wouldn't believe" the money involved. Dem pollster Harrison Hickman: "It shows Perot's as serious as a heart attack." Dem media consultant Bob Squier: "$5 million almost certainly would be a record" (Orin, N.Y. POST, 6/3). Dem strategist Bob Beckel, a close associate who has worked with Rollins, called the N.Y. POST report an "outrage" and said FEC reports will show Rollins will make less working for Perot than he does right now. Beckel said he talked with Rollins this a.m. and that Rollins was on his way to TX (HOTLINE interview, 6/3). Perot, asked about the $5M report: "When you're spending your own money, you don't do things like that" (NBC, 6/3).

LAST NIGHT: Rollins, last night on CNN's "Crossfire," asked if he is presently working for Ross Perot: "No, I am not working for Ross Perot now." Rollins on if he will: "That's a question that's still very much in doubt." Support Perot over Bush? Rollins: "If I work for Ross Perot, I will support Ross Perot." Rollins on rumor Perot offered him $300K a month: "If he did, I'd be working for him" ("Crossfire," CNN, 6/2). But...

CLUE: Larry King said he saw Rollins in the airport Monday on his way to Dallas ("Larry King Live" 6/2).

CLUE: WASHINGTON POST's "Reliable Source" reports former Carter strategist/manager Hamilton Jordan "was indeed sighted roaming around Perot's Dallas headquarters yesterday" (6/3).

CLUE: Rollins remarks, when asked whether Perot might be another Carter, were kind and gentle toward his potential odd-couple partner: "Carter ran a brilliant campaign in 1976, to get the nomination and to win the election" ("Crossfire" CNN 6/2).

TWO-WAY TALK: Bush manager Fred Malek on if Rollins would be a "deserter": "Ed Rollins has been a very loyal Republican, he's pledged his loyalty to George Bush. I'd be highly surprised, if Ed Rollins accepted this kind of position." Clinton national chair Mickey Kantor on Jordan: "Ham's a friend and a good guy can do what ever he wishes, it's a free country" ("Larry King Live," CNN, 6/3).

*12 PEROT: DOMINATES THE NEWS ON CLINTON'S BIG DAY

SAMPLING OF HEADERS AND LEADS: Cleveland PLAIN DEALER header: "Don't look back: Perot is waiting" (6/3). HOUSTON CHRONICLE's Hines: "Strong voter interest in [Perot] dominated" (6/3). K.C. STAR's Hood: "Politics as practiced by both parties may be virtually irrelevant in this year's chaotic race" (6/3). N.Y. NEWSDAY's Page: "The real winner" (6/3). W. TIMES' Moss and KNIGHT-RIDDER's Cannon: "The biggest winner" (6/3). N.Y. POST header with big picture of Perot: "Ross Shows He's The Boss" (6/3). N.Y. DAILY NEWS editorial header: "Another triumph for none of the above" (6/3). N.Y. TIMES' Toner: "Both parties ended their primary season under the long shadow of Ross Perot ... whose own efforts to get an early release from the Navy in his youth have so far failed to attract the attention that has distracted Mr. Clinton" (6/3). USA TODAY header: "Independent waves rock 2-party boat" (6/3). In Gloucester Co., NJ, one of the few localities which tabulated write-in votes, write-ins accounted for over 25% of GOP voting -- at least half of which were confirmed for Perot. County officials will finish tabulating the votes today (GLOUCESTER CO. TIMES, 6/3). PHILA. INQUIRER notes NJ statewide reports of 4-8% write-ins for Perot, although they were only counted in a handful of counties (6/3). NBC's Tom Brokaw: "If there is anyone, anywhere who doubts that this is a 3-man race for the presidency, then they should talk to presidential primary voters from [NJ to CA] ... because Ross Perot is their first or second choice for the fall election" (6/2). ABC's Peter Jennings: "The big news today is really being made off the ballot and the specter for both ... parties is Ross Perot" (6/2). Dem strategist Bob Beckel: "If you look at the exit polls Perot gets liberals -- he gets conservatives; he gets rich people -- he gets poor people; he gets hard hats -- he gets white collar workers; if he can develop a message to keep all those people together he ought to be president" (CBS, 6/3).

CBS TOWN HALL: A taped interview with Perot (CBS's Dan Rather said Perot told him he went to bed too early to be interviewed live) ran on CBS' "National Town Meeting." Perot, asked "who is Ross Perot": "Probably the easiest way to get that information is to read Ken Follet's book 'On Wings of Eagles.'" Rather: "On the deficit, be specific. What would you do to reduce the deficit?" Perot: "There's a lot of waste out there and I have a team working on that right now. I wish I could be very specific tonight. Within a very short period of time, I can be specific." Rather: "Would you consider raising taxes?" Perot, after a three-second delay: "I do not want to raise taxes. ... That's like giving narcotics to an addict." Rather: "Can I quote you as saying 'Read my Lips. No new taxes?'" Perot: "No. You can't ever quote me saying anything that stupid" (6/2). He appeared on NBC's "Today." On 6/2 results: "It shows the creativity and the initiative of the American people ... The American people are now telling Washington what to do." Perot, asked about the possibilities of asking Jeanne Kirkpatrick, Peter Ueberroth, Jesse Jackson, or Lowell Weicker to be VP candidate: "I can't get into any specific names ... If I start down that list, it's a minefield." After NBC showed a clip of Marilyn Quayle accusing Perot of trying to "buy the Presidency," Perot said, "I find it fascinating that grown men are hiding behind their women ... If they have anything to say, why don't they step out front and say it themselves. If they want to get in the ring, come on in the ring and we'll have it and get it on. But no, no, they're afraid to do that. They send their women out to do it for them." NBC's Katherine Couric: "Last week you did alienate a number of voters by saying you would ban homosexuals from certain jobs in your cabinet and that you favor a ban against homosexuals in the military." Perot: "You've completely misstated my positions. That was completely misstated. I have said again and again that what people do in their private lives is their own business. I have had homosexuals working for me. They were brilliant people, did outstanding work. We have never interfered with people's private lives. I was asked a very specific question about appointing a known homosexual to a cabinet position. And I had frankly never thought about it. I told Barbara Walters 'Probably not' because it would be so controversial." Couric: "Has your position changed, then?" Perot: "I don't want to destroy anyone." Perot cited the confirmation processes of Thomas and John Tower and "how destructive that process can be." Couric: "So your position stands, you would not put a known homosexual ..." Perot, interrupting: "No, no. You've misstated my position." Couric: "I don't understand your position, I guess is the bottom line, Mr. Perot." Perot: "Here's the good news -- The American people do" (NBC, 6/3).

QUOTABLE, NOTABLE: Gerald Ford told the Natl Press Club 6/2 "if the election were held today ... I don't think any of the three would get the 270 electoral votes" (AP/N.Y. TIMES, 6/3). Stanford's Martin Anderson on prospects of Perot "fading" as the campaign wears on: "He is fading right now like the exhaust of a nuclear-tipped intercontinental ballistic missile" (K.C. STAR, 6/3). USA TODAY runs analyses by pollsters Gordon Black (a Perot believer) and Gallup's Larry Hugick (a skeptic) on Perot's strength side by side -- each offering figures to support their position (6/3). GOP analyst Kevin Phillips: "The two parties have become nothing more than conduits for vested special interests, and for money, and the voters have caught on to that" (B. GLOBE, 6/3). CA pollster Mervin Field on CA exit polls: "These are partisan voters. Perot's appeal is even stronger among independents. And if there is anything to the idea that he has appeal to the disgruntled and the non-voters, his margin would be even wider" (SAN JOSE MERCURY NEWS, 6/3).

13 CLINTON: CLINCHES FIRST BALLOT WIN, BUT DOUBTERS REMAIN

"Defying those who had written his political obituary, a battered" Clinton "clinched the [Dem] nomination ... but the primary season ended with voters even more angry and dissatisfied than when it began" (Page, N.Y. NEWSDAY, 6/3). Clinton "still is trying to overcome the candidate who most threatens his bid for the [WH] -- himself" (Clifford, N.Y. NEWSDAY, 6/3). Clinton: "It's been a long fight. I think the American people are going to start fresh tomorrow. ... I've got one opponent who says he'll do whatever it takes to hold on to the White House. Then there's another person running who says he'll spend whatever it takes to get to the [WH]" (mult., 6/3). COPLEY's Condon noted Clinton's "very real difficulty in winning over a skeptical electorate" (6/3). WASH. TIMES header: "Big victories put Clinton over the top" (6/3). BOSTON GLOBE's Robinson: "Like Pyrrhus after his costly triumph ... Clinton might wonder whether victory was worth the toll" (6/3). Balto. SUN header: "Clinton gains the delegates he'd needed; Perot casts shadow over primary sweep." SUN's Witcover notes, "Capturing a presidential nomination usually raises a candidate in public esteem heading into his party's convention, but this time [Bush and Clinton] have arrived at this point as political damaged goods" (6/3). While writing Clinton's in "big trouble," PHILA. DAILY NEWS' Sandy Grady notes he's the "first Democrat to win the 10 biggest primaries" (6/3).

VICTORY NIGHT: Clinton, from last night's speech: "I've got one opponent who says he'll do whatever it takes to hold onto the White House, then there's another person who'll spend whatever it takes to get the White House" ("GMA," ABC, 6/3). "Tonight, with this delegate count we can put the forces of status quo and short term greed on notice, the party's over, we're in for a change, we want our country back" (CBS, 6/3). Clinton: "I am tired of seeing the people who work hard and play by the rules get the shaft. And tonight, with this delegate count, we want to put the forces of the status quo and short-term greed on notice that the party's over, we're in for a change, we want our country back" (NBC, 6/3). Clinton also appeared on CBS' national town meeting last night. On what he would do between now and Dem convention: "I'm going to try to do more of what we are doing tonight -- answering voters questions directly ... I've got to develop some way of reaching directly to the American people." CBS' Dan Rather noted that Bush and Quayle declined invitations to participate and Ross Perot was interviewed "but he wasn't going to stay up past what he said was his regular bed-time to take the calls." Clinton thanked the callers for "giving me a chance to talk directly to them" (6/2). NBC's Andrea Mitchell introducing video of Clinton CA victory speech: "a calculated appeal to angry, middle-class voters who are now flirting with Ross Perot." NBC's Tim Russert: "Bill Clinton has a fundamental problem. The American people have made up their minds about him. And he's become almost irrelevant in this campaign. ... This campaign, at this stage has, become a referendum on the character and temperament of Ross Perot" ("Today," NBC, 6/3).

PEROT AND OTHER 3-WAY THOUGHTS: COPLEY's Barabak: "A pint-sized Texas billionaire managed to overshadow the biggest political achievement of Clinton's life, just as Ross Perot eclipsed him throughout the [CA] primary" (S.D. UNION-TRIBUNE, 6/3). CBS' Richard Threlkeld on the Clinton camp: "Right now, Ross Perot has them bewitched, bothered, and bewildered" (6/2). DALLAS MORNING NEWS' Sam Attlessey writes, "Clinton is either considered a joke or an almost afterthought among many Texans and is in danger of slipping to fourth in the state behind Mr. Bush, Mr. Perot and undecided" (5/31). N.Y. DAILY NEWS header: "Clinton is Dems' man; But Perot steals thunder" (6/3). ABC's Peter Jennings: "The Clinton campaign up until now has pretty much tried to ignore the challenge from Ross Perot, but now the campaign is beginning to focus. Today, Clinton's aides were pushing this line -- George Bush helped his friends in the 1980s, Ross Perot helped himself" (6/2).

MIXED TALK ABOUT THE NOMINEE-APPARENT: ABC's Chris Bury in CA: "Today Clinton dismissed talk that his continued trouble at the polls would prompt a move to dump him at the convention. After all, Clinton notes, he has bounced back from trouble before and hopes to do it again" (6/2). NBC's Andrea Mitchell: "Clinton will be celebrating tonight, ... but he'll still be trying to figure out how to get his campaign back on track. ... Much to his frustration, Clinton is viewed as just another politician" (6/2). BOSTON GLOBE's Loth: "Clinton's relief ... seemed almost palpable" (6/3). GLOBE's Frisby: "He came beaming out of the interview room with an extra bounce in his stride. After a month of peaks and valleys, ... Clinton flashed a victory smile" (6/3). GLOBE's Wilkie runs a lengthy, generally favorable profile of Clinton (6/3).

VEEP WATCH: Clinton on naming a VP before the convention: "It's possible, but I am not committing to it" (CNN, 6/2). PHILA. DAILY NEWS' Grady, proposing Rockefeller, Bradley, and Kerrey, calls Clinton the likely "veepstakes winner" over Bush, "stuck with Dan Quayle," and the uncertainty of Perot's pick. His "crystal ball" further reveals Clinton as the likely "winner" among the 2 (3?) conventions, Perot the "winner" in fall debates, and Bush the "winner" in the "October stretch" (6/3).

*14 BUSH: WRAPS UNDEFEATED PRIMARY SEASON, BUT DOUBTERS REMAIN
COPLEY's George Condon writes, "Bush is in more trouble than any other incumbent president since ... Taft in 1912." Taft finished third behind Wilson and Roosevelt. The "defections from Bush's base are striking. No incumbent president has carried a shakier base into the general election in the modern era." Bush has the "unwavering" support of pro-lifers -- "but there is not much else out there right now ready to stay with the President, and that lack of a base is why Bush likely has not hit bottom in the polls even after the most precipitous one-year drop ever recorded by an elected president" (S.D. UNION-TRIBUNE, 6/3). W. POST header: "Bush Continues Unbeaten String Amid Discontent" (6/3). Bush, in a WH statement: "With an unbeaten string of primary victories behind us, I will continue to present my credentials and ideas to the American people. This November, we can break the Washington lawmaking gridlock and set a new course for the next American century" (mult., 6/3). ABC reported a Bush written statement: "There will two questions foremost in the minds of voters. Who has the best ideas for America? Who do you trust to lead?" ("GMA," 6/3).

TELL ME NO EXIT POLLS: Bush NJ chief/ex-NJ Gov. Tom Kean: "I don't think it means a thing. The exit polls the year I won for governor all said I lost" (PHILA. INQUIRER, 6/3).

TV: NBC's Tom Brokaw: "Bush ... wrapped up the [GOP] nomination some time ago, but as those [CA] and other voters demonstrated today, his political problems in many ways are only getting worse." NBC's John Cochran: "The president is trying to do what presidents always do when they're in trouble -- look presidential. Bush tackled a big domestic agenda today ... but at the end of the day nothing much had happened. Which sums up what many voters think of Bush's domestic efforts." Cochran on Bush strategist Bob Teeter's idea to have Bush hold a prime time news conferences: "Many in the [WH] think it's dumb to have a prime time news conference unless you have something new to say. Stay tuned" (6/2). CNN's Charles Bierbauer: "With the primaries over, the Bush campaign is not cresting so much as crestfallen" (6/2). NBC's John Cochran: "This is a demoralized [WH]. The Bush campaign has what one disgusted senior staffer calls the DBD strategy --- the day-by-day strategy. In other words, make it up as you go along. ... [Bush] himself is unhappy with the way the campaign has not coalesced" (6/2). Jack Germond: "The more the President campaigns, the worse his numbers" (CNN, 6/3). CBS ran a clip of Bush urging to get his proposals passed: "I really believe we can get something done, and I say that recognizing that this is a weird year. This is what they call one of the weird ones out there" (6/2).

TO DEBATE PEROT? Bush manager Fred Malek and Clinton chair Mickey Kantor appeared on CNN's "Larry King Live." Malek: "There's a big difference between an exit poll in June and a vote in November. ... I can see why Mickey Kantor's talking about a 3-man debate, because his candidate is running a weak third right now. ... We're way too early to address debates. ... George Bush will debate any candidate very successfully because he has the experience." Malek on the campaign: "We're going to run on his record. ... No Willie Hortons" (6/2). N.Y. NEWSDAY's Page: "Malek for the first time said Perot would be included in fall televised debates if his support remained strong" (6/3).

*15 BUCHANAN: BACK TO THE SCENE OF THE REVOLT

BOSTON GLOBE's John Milne reports Buchanan "left California, where his politics of voter protest had been hijacked by independent Ross Perot, and returned Tuesday night to New Hampshire to launch a long-term conservative movement aimed at taking over the Republican Party." Buchanan: "We have not gone to Houston to swear fealty to King George. We have gone to build this little rebellion into a revolution that will take back our party." The crowd of 1,000 "packed" the Manchester hall where he first spoke as a candidate in '91. Buchanan manager Bay Buchanan, asked if there would be an endorsement of Bush: "We'll endorse the nominee of our party. Pat stands by that." She added he is undecided about '96: "Pat is still thinking about 1992." Buchanan aides said they were trying to hold together their 76 delegates "and are negotiating for a chance to deliver a prime-time speech to the upcoming party convention." Milne notes it was Reagan's '68 convention speech "that vaulted him into the leadership of the conservative movement." Buchanan on Perot's opposition to foreign aid and Washington: "That sounds familiar." Bay Buchanan: "Without question, we started a revolution, and Perot is the beneficiary of that revolution" (6/3). W. TIMES' J. Jennings Moss reports Buchanan said "that he would work for GOP victories in the fall, but he did not specifically endorse the president" (6/3).

16 BROWN: MOVEMENT GOES BEYOND PRIMARY SEASON

L.A. TIMES' Jonathan Peterson reports, "It was a symbolic prize, seemingly irrelevant to the Democratic Party's presidential nomination, one last, tumultuous moment in the campaign journey of 1992." But Brown's "strong challenge" to Clinton in CA "was viewed as a great victory by the Brown faithful, a whooping, enthusiastic crowd" that gathered at Brown's Santa Monica HQ. Brown to reporters last night: "We influence, we shape, and we're going to affect the destiny of politics in this country for a long time to come." The campaign "was focusing as much on influencing the party platform as on any primaries." Brown manager Jodie Evans: "This is almost like a new beginning today" (6/3). Brown appeared on NBC's "Today" On why he won't immediately declare support for Clinton: "Because we've got a lot of time. We've got a convention." On Clinton's chances of beating Bush and Perot: "They're tough. ... You've got Perot absorbing a lot of the opposition and then you have Bush standing there for the status quo protecting the way it is. And the Democratic nominee can very easily get squeezed in the middle having to divide all those who are dissatisfied and want more fundamental change than George Bush is offering." NBC's Bryant Gumbel gave him a farewell thank-you, to which Brown responded one more time with his 800-number (6/3). Last night on CNN, Brown on Perot: "Ross Perot is now an idea. It's an icon in people's minds. ... It's more of a hope." Brown on if he'd run with Perot: "No, because I don't believe that the joining of financial power and political power is consistent with the ideals of this country" (CNN, 6/3).

17 BUSH: WHITE HOUSE COMES UP WITH URBAN AID PACKAGE

"After weeks of internal wrangling," the Bush administration produced an estimated $2.3 billion urban aid package. Bush's initial $1.8B plan was widened to include 125 enterprise zones, and ended a "tug of war" between HUD Sec. Jack Kemp and OMB officials. The plan was announced at a WH meeting with Bush, Kemp, Gov. Pete Wilson (R-CA), L.A. Mayor Tom Bradley (D), Rebuild L.A.'s Peter Ueberroth and Cong. leaders. The plan "appeared to have discouraged all sides of the debate" over Urban plans (Wessel/Harwood, W.S. JOURNAL, 6/3). "In an election year switch," Dems spoke out on the costs. House Majority Leader Richard Gephardt (D-MO): "The President didn't say how they were going to pay for it." Bush aides "refused to provide details." WH spokesman Marlin Fitzwater: "Cost is not a real factor in this argument." Boston Mayor/U.S. Conf. of Mayors pres. Ray Flynn (D) continued to "push for a still larger" package, calling the proposal "Just a Bone. Where's the beef?" (Kranish, BOSTON GLOBE, 6/3). House Min. Whip Newt Gingrich (R-GA) "was pessimistic" about passing any plan before July 4th recess: "I think we're frankly, virtually nowhere" (Devroy, W. POST, 6/3).

EXTENSION OF CHINA MFN STATUS: "Arguing that it would be the best way to support economic and political reform," the WH notified Congress that Bush plans to extend "Most Favored Nation" status for China. This week marks the three year anniversary of the Tiananmen Square massacre, and the announcement "immediately drew protests." Rep. Stephen Solarz (D-NY), House Asia subcmte chair: "Nothing has changed in China or in Washington." Solarz added Bush "apparently agrees with the philosopher Hegel that if theory and fact disagree, so much for the facts." Sen. Maj. Leader George Mitchell (D-ME) called the announcement "a classic example of continuing a failed policy." WH spokesman Fitzwater said Bush "stressed that it is wrong to isolate China if we hope to influence China. Maintaining a constructive policy of engagement with China has served U.S. interests." WH officials "aknowledged that the Chinese have made few improvements in human rights during the past year," and have recently taken actions that seemed to "rub our nose" in continued MFN support (Friedman, N.Y. TIMES, 6/3). Congress has 60 days to pass a bill to block MFN status. The WH promises a veto of such a bill, and is "cautiously optimistic that their opponents can't muster the votes" needed to override. Expecting a "new round of debates", Fitzwater said that Bush has "made clear to the Chinese that their respect for internationally recognized human rights is insufficient" (Seib, W.S. JOURNAL, 6/3).

18 PEROT: VP CHOICE "FREIGHTED WITH SYMBOLISM"

WALL ST. JOURNAL's Shribman writes Perot's VP choice "is by some measures more difficult, and even more freighted with symbolism" than Clinton's selection because it "will provide an early clue of not only how he will campaign but of how he might govern." Retiring Rep. Vin Weber (R-MN): "This decision will define him more than anything else." TX Dem chair Robert Slagle: "If he wants a fairly prominent name he's going to have to find someone disaffected from the two parties." Govs. Lowell Weicker (I-CT) and Doug Wilder (D-VA) "would consider offers from Perot." Weicker "finds the notion appealing" and people "close to" Wilder, who is prohibited by state law to serve another term, "won't dismiss the prospect." Ex-U.N. delegate Jeane Kirkpatrick "clearly would welcome an overture" from Perot "but those familiar with [his] thinking say he is swiftly backing away from her." Retiring Sen. Warren Rudman (R-NH) "has signaled in strong language he isn't interested" but "the Perot forces still find him attractive." Perot "forces" are also "intrigued" by broadcaster/ex-LBJ aide Bill Moyers (6/3). N.Y. DAILY NEWS calls Moyers "a vice-presidential possibility with Bill Clinton" in a story about a tentative "60 Minutes" fall profile on Moyers (6/3). PHILA. DAILY NEWS columnist Sandy Grady writes Jeane Kirkpatrick "by most accounts is Perot's leading candidate" but as a "hard-line ideologue" from the Reagan WH, she "could dim [Dem] enthusiasm. Her crotchety academic style doesn't mesh with Perot." Grady adds: "Too bad [Rudman] gave Perot a cold shoulder" (6/3). Ex-Surgeon Gen. C. Everett Koop, mentioned as a possible Perot VP, "does not plan to formally comment" on the health care proposals of the candidates: "But if you want to see things change you should get to the least likely candidate -- get Ross Perot and convince him of what's right and then see what happens. The other guys would have to respond" (Balto. SUN, 6/2).

MISSOURI MISERY: An internal battle among MO Perot volunteers has led new state coord. Sandy McClure to throw out the first 100,000 petition signatures and kick off a new petition drive. Some organizers of the first Perot drive "are trying to resurrect enough of those original petitions to quickly file them with state officials" as their "aim is to foil" the new group.

Ex-coord. Kevin Laughlin said he "still had hope" his petitions could be saved but McClure said the new drive "is going like gangbusters." McClure hopes to have more than the 22,000 signatures by Perot's 6/27 birthday. Signatures have to be submitted by 8/3 and accompanied by a letter from Perot stating his support. McClure and her backers "ousted" Laughlin from his position because "he mishandled the first drive and failed to cooperate with Perot leaders elsewhere." Laughlin said he fears the controversy will hurt Perot in MO (Mannies, St. LOUIS POST DISPATCH, 6/3).

NAVY BLUES: Perot "now contends that all three of the explanations he has given for seeking an early departure from the Navy are correct." In '55 Perot said the Navy's "amoral atmosphere of cursing and promiscuity offended him." In a 2/28/71 N.Y. TIMES MAGAZINE piece Perot said "he felt smothered by the military bureaucracy" and earlier this year he told NEWSWEEK a senior officer told him "to divert ship recreation funds to decorate his cabin." Squires said Perot will not comment further but added: "What seems to be getting lost ... is that he didn't exert any influence to try to get out and he didn't get out" (Garrett, W. TIMES, 6/3).

OP-EDS: In a PHILA. INQUIRER op-ed, Trudy Rubin writes Perot is "selling a tantalizing dream" while Donald Kimelman contends Perot supporters are "informed, sane and know what they want" (6/3). N.Y. TIMES' Anna Quindlen writes, Perot "is a tabula rasa for a nation that feels no one has given so much as a pen. ... I just can't see how it makes him a good President" (6/3). Ex-W. POST reporter Marilyn Berger confesses that despite her background of neutrality she is "not only supporting [Perot] but supporting him publicly and even volunteering my time to to help him" (W. POST, 6/3).

YOU CAN MAKE BOOK ON THAT ONE: Warner and Signet "are tripping over themselves to release quickie books" on Perot including a re-release of Ken Follett's "On Wings of Eagles" (Balto. SUN, 6/3).

*19 MORNING TV: PARTY CHAIRS HIT TWO OF THREE A.M. TALKS "CBS This Morning" and ABC's "Good Morning America" hosted RNC chair Rich Bond and DNC chair Ron Brown. Brown on exit polls: "It's one thing to tell an exit pollster what you might do November, another thing to walk into a voting booth and pull a lever to demonstrate who you want to be president of the United States." On how seriously the Dems consider Perot: "We're going take him seriously, he obviously represents a level of protest vote ... absolutely he's going to be taken on now, that's the point." ("CBS This Morning," 6/3). But on ABC, Brown said of Perot: "He hasn't faced a single voter in a single state ... nobody can credibly run for president of the United States without telling people who he is or what he believes in ... all these exit polls don't mean a thing ... so far he's only qualified in twelve states" (ABC 6/3). Brown, on Clinton's shortage of funds: "Obviously you can't buy the American people ... we're not going to spend as much as George Bush and probably not as much as Ross Perot, but we've got a better candidate." To be considered a candidate of change, Brown said Clinton must "articulate a message, that resonates with American people, that says change is about more than liking change ... it's about who can implement change" (ABC, 6/3).

BOND: Bond on exit polls: "These polls are fairy tales right now. Ross Perot hasn't faced a voter in a single state, he hasn't offered a stand on a single issue, he offers very vague propositions of principles which are contradictory ... I take the Perot factor very seriously". On Clinton vs. Bush: "[Clinton] has been the failed Governor of a small state, and it's silly for Ron Brown to sit here and try to assert that he's the agent of change. If people want another Jimmy Carter, they can vote for Bill Clinton" ("GMA," 6/3). On Bush's chances: "There's 9 in 10 chance that George Bush will be elected president of the United States with a new Republican Congress." On the GOP's pro-life platform: "I personally support the Republican party platform on abortion, I would not encourage any change. I think we've had a principled stand, but the thing to remember is that there is no litmus test, in the Republican party, on this or any other issue" ("CBS This Morning," 6/3).

PUNDIT TIME: W.S. JOURNAL's Al Hunt on Perot: "Both Bush and Clinton now realize that he is for real ... Both will have to go after him ... Both will try to use surrogates. Bush will try to paint him as a closet liberal. Clinton's people will try to paint him as a sunbelt Republican." NBC's Andrea Mitchell on Perot: "After a while he will do fewer and fewer of those interviews. [He will] buy time, go on television, have a talk show, do a satellite hookup, make it appear that he is accessible, but he won't really be accessible for the tough questions." Mitchell on Perot's chances of winning: "50/50 winning, and a better chance he will throw it to the House." Al Hunt on Perot: "I don't think he will self-destruct, and I think he's got a 40% chance of being the next president." Tim Russert: "I think if the election were held today he'd be the President of the United States" ("Today," NBC, 6/3). William Bennett: "I actually right now think it less likely for Perot to win, though it's possible, than for Clinton to win ... If and when Perot collapses, September, October, a larger share of his vote goes to Clinton than to Bush." Bennett on the Bush admin.: "What are their ideas? ... They almost seem to have lost the fight, lost the interest in the fight." S.F. EXAMINER's Chris Matthews called public support for Perot "an infatuation. It's like you meet a new girl or a new boyfriend or something and you don't want to hear anything bad about them." ABC's Hal Bruno: "Where Perot is drawing his greatest support ... is from Democrats who voted for Reagan and Bush in the '80s and most of all from the independent voters, who have been the great swing group in the last three elections" ("GMA," ABC, 6/3).

*20 IRAQGATE: CALLS ALL AROUND FOR SPECIAL PROSECUTOR

Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez (D-TX) at the 6/2 hearings: "Only an independent counsel could perform a disinterested review of the matters raised in this extraordinary case." Rep. Jim Ramstad (R-MN) in response to Gonzalez and being concerned about the importance of finding out the facts: "I'm equally concerned that this hearing not degenerate into a partisan political fracas. I get the feeling, I'm about to watch a professional wrestling match." Rep. Toby Roth (R-WI) who calls Gonzalez the "partisan ringleader" on there being enough time spent on the issue: "I do have faith in our Justice department. Once we no longer have faith in our Justice Department, we might as well close up shop." Rep. Charles Schumer (D-NY) responding to the charge that this is partisan politics: "If we wanted to keep it partisan, we'd keep it in the Congress and have hearing after hearing and have the Democrats throwing brickbats." Schumer also added: "The independent counsel would likely come up with his decision after election day" ("MacNeil/Lehrer," PBS, 6/2). CBS' Dan Rather reported the arrest the BNL-Atlanta manager of an Atlanta banker who pleaded guilty to providing loans to Saddam Hussein. He also reported that a Judge is suggesting the banker might be covering for someone else (6/2). Reps. Pat Schroeder (D-CO) and George Gekas (R-PA) were hosted on "FOX Morning News." Schroeder on the need to appoint a special prosecutor: "I think the government's not a fungus. It can thrive out in the sunshine. ... There has been enough information revealed by the Banking Committee, through [Gonzales] to create more than a reasonable doubt, and I think the way to get to the bottom of it is to get a special prosecutor and have him start digging. ... We're talking about whether or not this has been covered up. And if it has been covered up by the administration, I don't think there's any way the Justice Department's going to reveal that in a political year" Rep. Gekas: "Here we go again, another special prosecutor, another $50 million. ... We don't need a special prosecutor, especially when it's considered that this is an election year and this is another way for the Democratic leadership to get at President Bush's throat" (6/2).

MORNING NEWS: Federal Judge Marvin Shoob, accepting guilty pleas on 60 of 347 counts from Atlanta BNL-branch manager Christopher Drogoul, called for a special prosecutor to investigate how Drogoul was able to make $5.5 billion in "unauthorized loans to Iraq." Drogoul, asked by Shoob if high-ranking officials had approved of his actions: "I would honestly have to say no, with provisos" (LaFraniere, W. POST, 6/3).

===== SENATE WATCH =====

*21 COLORADO: CONSIDINE WINS NOMINATION; CAMPBELL EDGES LAMM

At the CO GOP convention 5/30, ex-state Sen. Terry Considine (R) "swept up" 53% of the delegate vote over four other contenders, thus avoiding an 8/11 primary challenge. His nearest competitor, ex-Amb. to Bahrain Sam Zakhem (R), fell short of the 30% needed to automatically qualify for a primary. Zakhem received 20% "despite recent setbacks, including a grand jury probe that probably eroded his support." Zakhem, and other defeated GOPers businessman Doug Fain, state Rep. Ken Chlouber and John Donley, all "pledged to back Considine, despite nagging worries among party officials," that his pro-life stance may give the Dems "an edge" in the fall. Considine said he'll begin campaigning for the general election next week: "It is our responsibility to win this Senate seat and set a new direction for the country ... and to reform Congress so it works for the people instead of being the ruler of the people" (Gavin, DENVER POST, 5/31). At the CO Dem convention, Rep. Ben Nighthorse Campbell (D-03) defeated ex-Gov. Dick Lamm (D) by 20 votes in a "spirited" fight. Campbell: "It shows that we're on a roll ... I'm really proud of it." '90 Sen. nominee Josie Heath (D) failed to get the 30% required to automatically get on the ballot. But she has launched a petition drive. To gain a ballot spot, Heath must collect 10,591 signatures, divided evenly among CO's six CD's, by 6/5. Heath spokesperson Janet Wise said the drive is "over halfway." At one point during the assembly, Heath left the hall to gather signatures at local supermarket. Lamm doubted Campbell's narrow victory "makes any difference at all. The big thing has to do with whether Josie stays in the race and gets her petitions. That is much more significant than first line or second line" on the ballot. Lamm added that Heath would hurt him more than Campbell. Lamm has been criticized by Hispanic groups for his support of "English only" laws, and "was greeted with some protests." But he vowed "I will make waves, I will shake things up, I will defy expectations" (Anderson, D. POST, 5/31).

*22 SENATE "A": IN THE CLEARING STANDS A BOXER

Rep. Barbara Boxer (D-06) had a "comfortable victory" over "better-known" LG Leo McCarthy (D) and "better-financed" Rep. Mel Levine (D-27). Levine: "This is clearly the year of the woman. There is a tidal wave here." McCarthy: "I got caught in a tidal wave without a surf board." Both Dems endorsed Boxer in her race against "conservative" ex-TV commentator Bruce Herschensohn (R). Herschensohn defeated Rep. Tom Campbell (R-12) in a "bitterly fought" GOP race where the candidates "duked it out in half a dozen debates and in increasingly testy TV spots" (Wilkinson/Stall, L.A. TIMES, 6/3). Exit polls found abortion to benefit pro-life GOP candidates as GOP voters said the issue "was a major influence in their balloting." Campbell "ran as Republican who favors abortion rights" while Herschensohn is pro-life (Skelton, L.A. TIMES, 6/3).

TV: Boxer was hosted by NBC's "Today" and ABC's "Good Morning America." Boxer on her 143 House bank boingers and whether it will be an issue in the fall: "No candidate is perfect ... There are such stark differences between the candidates. I think those differences will overshadow these other issues" ("Today," NBC, 6/3). Boxer will campaign with "B" seat Dem nominee ex-S.F. Mayor Dianne Feinstein. Boxer: "I think we're going to make a great team." ("Today," NBC, 6/3).

*23 SENATE "B": A REPLAY OF THE '90 GUBERNATORIAL RACE?

Sen. John Seymour (R) is "far less formidable than" Gov. Pete Wilson (R) and ex-S.F. Mayor Dianne Feinstein "is a much more seasoned politician now" but the race between them "is already shaping up to be a replay" of the Wilson/Feinstein '90 gov. race. "Although Seymour strategists would rather play it down -- and Feinstein loyalists would probably rather forget it -- the similarities between now and then are too striking to dismiss." Seymour is a "pro-choice 'moderate conservative' in the Wilson mold" and indicated in his victory speech that "he will portray Feinstein as a big-spending liberal" like Wilson did. Feinstein "in turn will accuse Seymour of a lack of stature, much as she attacked Wilson's largely undistinguished" Senate record. Feinstein: "I ask you to replace a senator who isn't with a senator who will be." Seymour "fired back with equally stern remarks" and highlighted her raising taxes and leaving a deficit as S.F. mayor. Feinstein and Seymour "are both closing in on the political middle" and "traditional" Dem/GOP issues "may be less compelling than" gender issues. Seymour "did not take a pro-choice stance until 1989" and voted to confirm Clarence Thomas. CA pollster Mervin Field: "Seymour, who flip-flopped on abortion, is going to be in all kinds of trouble" (Johnson, S. F. CHRONICLE, 6/3). Feinstein, in victory speech: "Californians have spoken loudly and clearly, and sent the whole country a message: The status quo must go" ("CBS This Morning," 6/3).

===== TV MONITOR =====

*27 THIS MORNING: ABC's "GMA" and "CBS This Morning" hosted RNC chair Rich Bond and DNC chair Ron Brown. CBS also hosted GOP strategist and Dem analyst Bob Beckel. NBC hosted Jerry Brown, Ross Perot, and CA Senate nominee Barbara Boxer. Boxer also appeared on ABC.

LAST NIGHT: ABC, NBC, CBS and CNN led with the primaries. PBS' "MacNeil/Lehrer" led with Bush's decision to extend MFN status to China. "M/L" focused on the dealings of the Bush admin. with Iraq with Rep. Charles Schumer (D-NY) and Rep. Toby Roth (R-WI). CNN: "Crossfire" hosted Rollins and ROLL CALL editor Jim Glassman. "Larry King Live" hosted Bush manager Fred Malek and Clinton chair Mickey Kantor. CBS presented "Campaign '92: A National Town Meeting," a live, viewer call-in program. ABC replaced "Nightline" with "One Day in America" (6/2).

BOUNCERS: NBC's Bob Kur offered a rhyme on the House Bank, as used by challengers in their ads. Video excerpts were included: "The old House Bank alas is no more/thought the scandal it has spawned has started a war./It's fought day after day, on the air,/by challengers giving incumbents a scare./Lowrey and Weber, Wylie and Smith,/they called it quits rather than get hit with this./Feighan and Davis, Hertel and Mrazek/knew that escaping would take more than magic./31 House check-bouncers in all/preferred retirement to taking a fall./This is the year of high voter fury,/bouncers Hayes and Hubbard got their verdicts early./Here's another veteran who lost, after learning how much bad checks can cost./In the House leadership, Bill Alexander was high,/but after an ad, it was a quick bye-bye./As Porky Pig says, 'that's all folks'" (6/2).

TSONGAS: Paul Tsongas on stumping for Clinton: "I will be involved in ... the Clinton campaign." On Perot: "If the election were held today, I think Ross Perot would be the president. He's got five months to go and, in my opinion, those five months benefit Bill Clinton." On his convention role: "The convention gives me an opportunity to tell the delegates that the country is ready to move in a different direction. ... I need to make my point and I intend to do that" (CNN, 6/2).

VOICES FROM NEWARK: ABC replaced "Nightline" with a special entitled "One Day in America." ABC's Ted Koppel: "Deep feelings from the voters" in Newark, NJ, Newark, OH and Newark, CA (6/2).

HA!: NBC's Jay Leno on politics: "He's rich, he's Texan, he hasn't taken a stand on any issues -- but enough about George Bush." On Bush: "President Bush is out there campaigning. Says he wants to get out there and finish what he started -- what was that, the back nine?" ("Tonight," 6/2). Dave Barry on Perot: "You just want to get him in a headlock and give him a noogie, just to let him know that you like him both as a person and as a billionaire" ("GMA," ABC, 6/3).

But Bush's campaign manager Bob Teeter does not play hardball that this week. But many in the White House think it's dumb to have a prime time news conference unless you have something new to say. (NBC-3)

CLINTON

Break! It seems as if it has been going on for years now and several lifetimes for Bill Clinton, but it was less than four months ago that the presidential primary ordeal began in the snows of New Hampshire without Ross Perot. When it ended today in sunny California and five other states Perot was very much on the minds and in the hearts of many voters as Clinton was securing the Democratic nomination. (NBC-Lead)

Teetings reports Clinton aides pushed this line today: "George Bush helped his friends in the 1980s. Ross Perot helped himself." ABC's Chris Bury says in the days ahead Clinton plans to reach voters more directly through televised town meetings and radio talks shows. (ABC-3)

Teetings says while the campaign in California has left most people uninvolved, the people who live in south-central L.A. turned out to vote today with a message they hoped would be heard as far away as Washington and as close as City Hall.

ABC's Judy Miller says in neighborhoods devastated by last month's explosion of anger, voters went to the polls today to express themselves another way. (unidentified man: "The only way we can make a positive change is by coming out to vote.")

For some, that positive change would include a new president. This woman came to vote for Bill Clinton. (unidentified woman: "Seems that he cares, and he came to the areas that were most burned out.... It seems like he really cares.")

(unidentified man: "I'm hoping the politicians finally wake up and smell the coffee. Something has to be done not only here in L.A. but all across America.") (ABC-4)

CBS TOWN MEETING

Rather says we'll have much more about the presidential campaign in a special "Campaign '92 Town Meeting" tonight. We'll hear from Ross Perot and we'll be joined by Bill Clinton. Both President Bush and Vice President Quayle declined invitations. (CBS-3)

RIO SUMMIT HIGHLIGHTS NORTH-SOUTH SCHISM

RIO DE JANEIRO -- On the eve of the Earth Summit, delegates Tuesday emphasized historic North-South differences over strategies to protect natural resources and combat pollution.

"There is a certain amount of posturing by developing countries to try to get us and other developed countries to contribute more funds," said William Reilly. "At this economic moment for industrialized nations, those contributions are not in the cards."

Reilly said the U.S. will not change its position on the biodiversity treaty because of the obstacles it would pose for U.S. pharmaceutical companies seeking to find cures for many modern diseases in the primeval forest of the Third World. "As the treaty is drafted, it is contrary to the interests of the U.S.," he said.

BUSH FACES OPPOSITION ON RENEWAL OF TRADE BENEFITS FOR CHINA

President Bush formally asked Congress Tuesday to renew trade benefits for China for another year and immediately ran into opposition from congressional Democrats who vowed to defeat the request.

Sen. Mitchell said in a statement that Bush's "policy toward China has failed" and that "his decision is inconsistent with American values and contrary to American best interests." Mitchell is expected to join Rep. Pelosi and other critics of U.S. policy Wednesday in unveiling what Pelosi called "a more targeted approach" to imposing economic sanctions on China.

Congressional sources said the Pelosi bill will seek to apply U.S. sanctions against exports to the U.S. from state-owned Chinese enterprises but not from private enterprises in China or joint ventures in China with foreign firms. A White House official said this approach would be "unworkable" because "we'd have to have inspectors running around" trying to determine the true source of Chinese exports. (Don Oberdorfer, Washington Post, A20)

Bush Seeks Trade Benefits For China

The White House announced Tuesday that it planned to extend preferential trade benefits to China for another year, arguing that it was the best way to support economic and political reform in the world's most populous country.

Administration officials acknowledge that the Chinese have made few improvements in human rights during the past year, and in recent months have taken actions that almost seemed designed "to rub our nose in it," as one official put it.

A senior Bush Administration Asia policymaker argued, however, that this behavior was the result of a "world-class power struggle" now under way in Beijing in advance of the 14th Communist Party Congress, which will take place at the end of the year.

U.S. PLEASED PERU ELECTIONS SCHEDULED

Peruvian President Fujimori's announcement that he will hold congressional elections in October pleases the Administration, but Lima must take additional strides toward restoring democracy before the U.S. resumes normal relations, the State Department said Tuesday.

Margaret Tutwiler said the next essential step "is the development of a fair and open electoral process." She said all political voices in Peru must "have a chance" to participate in the development of new electoral law and other decisions leading to the re-establishment of democracy. "It is important that all democratic forces, including Peru's political parties have a chance to participate," she said. (Sid Balman, UPI)

Bush Pushes For Compromise On Urban Policy Bill

With top California officials at his side, President Bush Tuesday met congressional leaders in an effort to compromise on urban policy legislation designed to avert more bloodshed like last month's Los Angeles riots. But Democrats were distinctly unsympathetic to Bush's appeal, saying it was unclear how he would pay for his plan.

Sen. Mitchell said Bush had indicated he would send Congress a separate enterprise zone proposal, instead of combining it with other approaches. Mitchell said separating out enterprise zones might lead to abandonment of other proposals that had merit.

MISSILE DEFENSE DEPLOYMENT DATE
CALLED 'VERY DIFFICULT' TO ACHIEVE

It will be "very difficult" for the SDI to deploy the ground-based system by 1997, a Pentagon spokesman said Tuesday. Spokesman Bob Hall told reporters at a Pentagon briefing that deploying a system to protect the U.S. from nuclear attack by 1996, as Congress has asked, "is very, very tight, in fact, it's not achievable... Even the '97 date is going to be very difficult."

Hall said Tuesday that while there may be "some slippage" in the program, "there still is a desire to try to be responsive" to Congress's interests in deployment.

(AP, Washington Post, A4)BUSH: 'TIME HAS COME FOR BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT'

President Bush urged Republican leaders Tuesday to beat the bushes for a balanced budget amendment, saying it's an idea "whose time has come." The leaders who emerged after an hour-long meeting in the Cabinet Room said Bush would support an amendment even if Congress does not go along with proposals requiring a super majority, or three-fifths of the vote in the House and Senate, to pass a tax increase.

Sen. Nickles said he thought it would be a "close vote" in the House. He also insisted that the amendment would not lead to large cuts in Social Security and other entitlement programs. "If you freeze spending four or five years you can balance the budget," he said.

(UPI)

BYRD: BALANCED-BUDGET AMENDMENT WILL FALL

Sen. Byrd predicted Tuesday that the Senate would defeat a proposed balanced-budget constitutional amendment, a measure Congress once seemed likely to approve. The chief Senate sponsor of the proposal, Sen. Simon, conceded that his side seemed to be losing ground, and attributed the slippage to intense lobbying by Byrd, chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee.

Byrd's committee controls the spending of more than one-third of the $1.5 trillion federal budget, and Simon said that's a fact that senators who are eager to bring projects home to their states cannot ignore. Byrd, however, denied threatening lawmakers' projects.

INDEPENDENT WAVES ROCK 2-PARTY BOAT

Get ready for a campaign with an independent who's crashing the party. "It makes for a wild situation," says F. Clinton White. "The overriding theme is that the people have lost confidence in the electoral process and, to a certain extent, government itself, which is not effective, not responsive and not responsible." "This guy is catching on because he speaks in plain language, exudes an inner confidence, seems to know where he's going and has made a lot of money," says Kevin Gottlieb, a Syracuse University political scientist and consultant. "There are a lot of holes in his message, but people aren't going to that depth." But University of California at Berkeley political scientist Nelson Polsby says of Perot: "He'll fade, and we'll be back to a race between the Democrat and Republican, unless the media continue to pump him up." (Richard Benedetto, USA Today, 1A)

BUSH HOPES BUCHANAN RETURNS TO FOLD

President Bush Tuesday rolled out the welcome mat for Patrick Buchanan to return to the fold. "Tonight, we extend a hand to every Republican," Bush said in a statement released hours before the polls closed in California. "Together this November, we can break the Washington lawmaking gridlock and set a new course for the next American century." Buchanan's sister, Bay Buchanan, declared Tuesday on the Fox Television Network that Buchanan "absolutely" would back Bush "at some point." (Helen Thomas, UPI)

BUCHANAN ALL BUT CONCEDES GOP RACE TO BUSH

MANCHESTER, N.H. -- Pat Buchanan Tuesday night virtually conceded defeat in his effort to deny George Bush the Republican nomination -- but said he'd be back in four years. In a 15-minute speech, Buchanan attacked Bush, AIDS activists and the embattled NEA. He pledged to run again in 1996. "New Hampshire was our beginning, but Houston is not our end.... Houston is a true line. It is not a surrender. Houston is going to be a beginning. We're never going to quit." (Reuter)

PRIMARIES VS. POLLS

The heroine of Lewis Carroll's "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland" may be better prepared by her encounter with the Cheshire Cat than anyone else to make sense of the 1992 presidential nominating process.

Though polls and pundits depict them as walking wounded, George Bush and Bill Clinton are both grinning today, having seen the final round of primaries certify their long-conceded status as the nominees of the Republican and Democratic parties.

And yet poll after poll show Bush and Clinton struggling against the untested Ross Perot in mock trial-heats for the general election. Bush looks much weaker for the general election than he was when the primaries started back in February. And Clinton has picked up a ton of unwanted "character question" baggage that may limit his effectiveness in the fall as well.

MEMORANDUM FOR HON. SAMUEL SKINNER
CHIEF OF STAFF
THE WHITE HOUSE

SUBJECT: TODAY'S BRIEFING

DATE: WEDNESDAY, JUNE 3, 1992 - 11:45 AM EDT

SINCE THE MORNING PAPERS:

- o The last remaining Western hostages held in Lebanon may be released soon, reports today's Teheran Times. The paper says all preparations for the two Germans' release have been made following a meeting yesterday between Iranian President Hashemi Rafsanjani and an envoy of German Chancellor Helmut Kohl.
- o French President Francois Mitterrand announced today he will put the Maastricht Treaty to a referendum in his country, as well, following Denmark voters' rejection of the treaty yesterday.
- o Financial news as of 11:45 AM EDT:
 - DOW (30 Industrials): Up 4 points to 3400 on a volume of 99 million shares.
 - Factory orders rose 1.0 percent in April, following a 1.9 percent increase in March.

IN THE WHITE HOUSE AND AROUND TOWN:

- o Hamilton Jordan and Ed Rollins are reportedly headed for the Ross Perot presidential campaign. During this morning's White House senior staff meeting, it was announced that Rollins's wife Sherrie will resign from her position as Assistant to the President to avoid any awkwardness presented by her husband's decision. Ross Perot, during an interview with CNN that will be aired later today, said of Rollins and Jordan: "If they come aboard, they will come aboard to bring experience in running a world-class campaign. This will not be a conventional campaign, but we have a relatively small amount of time between now and November, we do not have time to climb up the learning curve on all the blocking and tackling that has to take place, all the rules, the regulations and what have you. ... They will not be my handlers, they will not get me up in the morning, dress me, give me words to say, tell me what to do and where to go. That's not their role. Their role is to bring the experience of what's involved in the massive campaign, and in terms of getting it organized and making it work."

The reaction within Republican circles to Rollins's decision is one of surprise and anguish. Republican National Committee Chairman Rich Bond told the Bulletin: "I'm very saddened by this situation because I consider Ed Rollins a close personal friend. However, I don't want to focus on Ed Rollins. I want to focus on Ross Perot. Ross Perot says he's not a politician, but he goes around hiring experienced politicians. If he thinks he knows the country so well, then why is he hiring people who have been ultimate Washington insiders? This is just another example of Perot's fundamental hypocrisy." According to other GOP strategists, Rollins's move will add instant credibility to Perot's campaign, but this immediate boost will fade as Rollins's lack of organizational skills becomes evident. Another effect of Rollins's decision, report White House officials this morning, is that the current round of press stories on White House disarray will be given a boost by Sherrie Rollins's departure. According to one strategist familiar with Rollins's abilities: "It buys Perot some credibility in the little inside game that is going on right now. ... And it is bad for George Bush that a prominent Republican officially jumped ship." According to the strategist, however: "The inside joke is: 'The one person who could bankrupt Ross Perot is Ed Rollins.' Ed is a smart, savvy guy. But he cannot take his instincts and translate them into a practical application within a campaign. ... He is best at what he has been doing, just general comments, being good copy." The strategist added: "He did not run the Reagan re-election campaign. Stu Spencer, Lee Atwater, and Jim Baker ran that. ... The problem is Ed is not a good team member. He says what he wants to whom he wants, and that can hurt a campaign." According to another GOP strategist and Rollins friend, Rollins's presence in the Perot campaign will enhance Perot's credibility with the political press corps and assist his ability to attract other experienced campaign professionals. "But come September 1," said the source, "Rollins and Perot will be at each other's throats."

- o Ross Perot denied a New York Times report this morning that he plans to spend in the multiples of $100 million on his presidential campaign. During an interview to be aired on CNN at 2:00 pm today, Perot said: "That's not true, that's not true. When you're spending your own money it kind of clears your head. This is a trick on their part to try get donors to give more. I will spend whatever it takes to run a world-class campaign. I will not throw money away because I am spending my money." When asked for his reaction to Marilyn Quayle's recent comments that were critical of Perot, Perot responded: "Well, you notice these fellow all have their wives fighting me and they are all hiding behind them. I say, 'Look, guys, if you have anything to say, come on, get in the ring. Let's get it on.' I don't expect to see them."
- o President Bush and Governor Bill Clinton swept their parties' presidential primaries in California, New Jersey, Ohio, Alabama, Montana and New Mexico. The cumulative results were enough to give Clinton more than the 2,145 delegates needed to secure the Democratic nomination. His closest race yesterday was in California, where he beat former Governor Jerry Brown 44 percent to 40 percent. President Bush won easily in each of yesterday's contests, ending the primary season by preserving his unbeaten streak against Pat Buchanan. The President's closest primary contest was also the Nation's first: the February 18 New Hampshire primary.
- o In the California Senate primaries, television commentator Bruce Herschensohn beat Rep. Tom Campbell for the GOP nomination by a margin of 39 percent to 36 percent. Palm Springs Mayor Sonny Bono placed third with 17 percent. Rep. Barbara Boxer won the Democratic primary by beating Lt. Governor Leo McCarthy 43 percent to 31 percent. Rep. Mel Levine came in third with 22 percent. Herschensohn and Boxer will square off in November for the right to succeed retiring Democrat Alan Cranston. In the state's other Senate race, former San Francisco Mayor Diane Feinstein beat State Comptroller Gray Davis by a margin of 58 percent to 33 percent. She will face Republican incumbent John Seymour, who beat Representative Bill Dannemeyer by a margin of 51 percent to 27 percent.
- o California Republican Congressman Bob Dornan easily defeated former Superior Court Judge Judith Ryan in yesterday's GOP primary by a margin of 60 percent to 40 percent. Ryan's effort was assisted by NARAL and other pro-choice groups who mounted independent expenditure campaigns on her behalf. NARAL reportedly spent about $100,000 in its effort. In other US House primaries in California, GOP incumbent Robert Lagomarsino was defeated by Michael Huffington, 49 percent to 42 percent, in the state's 22nd Congressional District. In District 36, Joan Milke Flores defeated former first-daughter Maureen Reagan by 34 percent to 31 percent. And, in the recently re-drawn 51st District, incumbent Randy Cunningham easily defeated incumbent Bill Lowery by a margin of 52 percent to 16 percent.

- o British Prime Minister John Major will travel to Camp David on June 6 for two days of discussions with President Bush. According to a White House spokesperson: "They'll undoubtedly discuss a wide range of bilateral issues, but the three primary ones are the Rio conference, which they're both attending in the following week; and the Economic Summit at Munich; and the GATT talks."
- o The question being asked around the White House water cooler this week is who the sources were for the weekend barrage of press reports claiming Sam Skinner's job as chief of staff was in jeopardy. While those with knowledge of the issue all deny the reports' main premise -- that Bush-Quayle campaign general chairman Robert Mosbacher told President Bush it was time for Secretary of State Jim Baker to replace Skinner -- many in the White House and at the campaign are wondering who the sources were for the stories and what was their purpose for planting more reports of disarray. Some believe the President's low standing in recent polls has contributed to an atmosphere of near panic among the less experienced and patient Bush advisors, which in turn has resulted in the recent genre of press articles. "Everybody has to vent their frustrations a little bit," said a White House official. "Anytime you are executing a plan and our numbers in the polls are not going in the direction we would like them, you are going to have some frustration and disappointment." White House and campaign officials predict that as long as the President remains in a weak political position these sorts of news stories will crop up from time to time, but they hope that with an improving economy the internal morale will increase. "I don't know what Mosbacher had to say to the President, but whatever it was, in my view, is totally irrelevant," said another White House official. "The President just does not share that viewpoint. I don't sense any dissatisfaction whatsoever on the President's part with the way Sam is handling his responsibilities. So, in my judgement, it is a non-issue. [Washington Post reporter] Ann Devroy just loves to write these kinds of articles, so if she can find someone else who will make Mosbacher-like statements two weeks from now, or three weeks from now, you'll probably see another front-page story, but it will very likely have the same level of veracity and validity that this one does."

As for where the reports of Mosbacher's comments came from, campaign officials are pointing their fingers at White House officials, and vice versa. According to a Republican strategist: "I think it came partly from people close to Mosbacher and it was kicked along by the campaign. The most interesting thing about the Post story Saturday and the Times story Sunday was that they totally blame the White House and not the campaign." The strategist added: "I don't disagree that the White House is more important, but the fact is Mosbacher is more upset with Teeter than he is with Skinner and it was striking that the whole story was spun against the White House."
- o While President Bush may support ideas like the summer job program the Senate attached to its version of urban renewal legislation, he will not declare an "budget emergency" to pay for them, according to one Administration official. The official told the Bulletin that the Administration's definition of "emergency" includes the idea that a need arises that is "severe, unforeseen, and temporary. And however important these programs are and however supportive the President may be, [the Democratic Congressmen] are asking him to wreck the budget deal and trample over the definition of an emergency, which is something they know he is unlikely to do." According to the official: "The Senate added [to the Administration's $450 million request] an additional $1.5 billion for things like summer job youth programs and other things the President had put into his 1993 budget program. What they were doing was putting that in for 1992, and leaving it up to the President to declare an emergency to fund those things. It appears to be a frontal assault on the whole budget agreement in an attempt to broaden the definition of what is an emergency. The idea is to make the President look bad for not funding these programs, even though he supports them, because he would have to bust the budget agreement to do it their way." One Hill source said of the Democratic move: "This is the kind of maneuvering that generally goes unreported or is referred to generically as gridlock. When the Administration proposes something, the [Democratic] Leadership throws up procedural roadblocks or an amendment that is very predictably unacceptable to the President. Hence, a lot of our pessimism."

- o Senator George Mitchell is being singled out by White House officials as the principal obstacle to passing enterprise zone legislation. According to one White House official, President Bush called yesterday's meeting between Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley, California Governor Pete Wilson, and Congressional Leaders in an effort to come to agreement on the single issue of enterprise zones, which is considered to be among the least controversial of the President's urban renewal package. "Enterprise zones are supported by liberals, conservatives, mayors, governors, you name it," said one White House official who added "this is a no-brainer. It means jobs." According to the official, Wilson and Bradley came to Washington "on the day of the California primary, which ought to tell you something about how seriously they are taking all this, but the Democratic Leadership, Senator Mitchell in particular, gave no real indication that they had any intention of doing anything that might make the President look good, including moving forward on enterprise zones. Mitchell in particular seems to be the one who people were pointing the finger at as the true partisan roadblock there." Another White House official said that "Mitchell seems determined not to let the President win one, even if it is to his benefit as well. I get the sense that Gephardt wants to move on something because the House is in such low repute right now that Members want to accomplish something. But Mitchell's house is not in as bad a shape, and so he can afford the luxury of not accomplishing anything." A Republican source on Capital Hill agreed, saying of the Democratic efforts: "Gephardt appears to be sincere in his efforts to produce a signable bill, but he doesn't have too many horses behind him. As far as we can see, Gephardt is acting in good faith. But Mitchell is out for every pound of the President's political flesh that he can cut nearest to his heart. Mitchell is a very effective operator and probably has the capacity to kill any bill he wants to. It may yet be the case that the exit polls from the primaries will convince some Democratic Senators that the public is sufficiently disgusted with Washington's inability to act that they should break ranks and support the package. As it stands now, I think Republicans and Democrats in the House and the Republicans in the Senate are ready to work toward signing a bill. The rest is up to Mitchell." According to Administration and Hill officials, yesterday's White House meeting rendered little hope that enterprise zone legislation will be passed this year. According to one Administration official: "it's been weeks since the President proposed a package and there's been virtually no movement on it, despite the White House's efforts. That's the reason the President called the meeting. The President was willing to say: 'Okay, if you can't move this whole package, is there some area of commonality, because we're holding the cities hostage while there is this political gridlock.'" One White House official concluded that "there is pessimism, but that doesn't mean we won't continue trying."
- o The contract dispute between rail worker unions and major rail carriers appears to be heading down the same path as a similar labor dispute last year which resulted in a strike followed by a congressionally imposed settlement, according to Administration officials. According to one official, the Presidential Emergency Board (PEB) which President Bush appointed to draw up a settlement, issued a proposed settlement last Thursday which has angered both the unions and management. "Both sides are pretty upset," according to Federal Railroad Administrator Gilbert E. Carmichael, "so I suppose [the PEB] did a good job." According to Carmichael: "The way the law is written, the President hired the Emergency Board and they have rendered their decision. Right now, we're in a sort of breathing period. I hope they'll come to an agreement." One Administration official predicted that "the two sides started out so far apart that I don't know anybody who really thought an agreement would come without a strike. If Congress follows the same course it did last year, they will determine that a rail strike amounts to an intolerable situation economically and so they will codify the PEB recommendations as a way of ending it."
- o Democratic presidential hopefuls are peddling their political wares on the late night comedy talk show circuit this week. Gov. Jerry Brown appeared Monday night on The Dennis Miller Show (Miller has said he supports third-party candidate Ross Perot), while Gov. Bill Clinton is being taped in an appearance on Arsenio Hall's post-prime-time program this evening.

Gibbons has been serving as Deputy Associate Director for Natural Resources and Hezir has been serving as Deputy Associate Director for Energy and Science. The two associate directors combined have over 30 years of experience at OMB, and will be joining former colleagues Michael O'Bannon and Ernest Robson to form the EOP Group.

POLITICAL ANALYSIS:

This morning, the Bulletin invites Charlie Cook, political analyst and columnist for Roll Call, to discuss the bases of the Democratic and Republican Parties as they will affect the 1992 presidential election.

BULLETIN: How would you describe the base of the Democratic Party?

COOK: You would look to the most loyal voters in an election where swing voters go the other way. Both Jimmy Carter and Walter Mondale got 41 percent of the vote against Ronald Reagan. I suppose that would be a relatively good figure to use when quantifying the size of the Democratic base.

Of those voters who make up that base, they are made up of Blacks, Hispanics, people who did not graduate from high school, people with household incomes under $10,000, union households, Jewish households, and liberals.

BULLETIN: Are these voters regionally concentrated?

COOK: Neither the Democratic nor the Republican base are regionally concentrated.

BULLETIN: How loyal is the base -- who shows up to vote?

COOK: It depends on the group. Hispanic voters and voters under 30 years of age have the lowest turnout. They are, relatively speaking, a minor part of the coalition.

BULLETIN: Who has the highest turnout?

COOK: Middle-aged, white union members and liberals have very high turnout rates.

BULLETIN: How large is the Republican base?

COOK: We really don't know because they haven't had a real wipeout since 1964, when Barry Goldwater got 38.5 percent of the vote. But that's been too long ago to draw any significant meaning from. But very generally speaking, Democrats have a base vote of about 41 or 42 percent and Republicans have a base vote of about 38 or 39 percent. They build on their bases from there. Of the swing voters, over the last 20 years, the swing voters have been quite predisposed to vote for Republicans because they have been southern white conservatives, northern urban ethnics, and suburbanites who have left the city and the Democratic base.

BULLETIN: What about swing states?

COOK: You could draw a rough sort of belt that stretches across New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Illinois, Missouri. The belt through those states constitutes a very large portion of the electorate. New York is in the Democratic base. Florida and Texas are in the Republican base. California is easing over into the Democratic base.

I should say that all this arithmetic may be rather immaterial. You may really have to throw all electoral history into a cocked hat this year. It doesn't mean anything.

BULLETIN: Are the bases irrelevant to keeping the Perot challenge at bay?

COOK: There are elements within the bases of both parties who have grown alienated both from the leadership of the parties and with the political process. It's not just a matter of the bases holding firm and the swing voters being up for grabs. That's entirely too simplistic. You've got between 30 and 40 percent of the electorate that is just completely turned off.

BULLETIN: Should Clinton and Bush resist the urge to rush back into the arms of their loyal base?

COOK: That is both simplistic and presupposes that there is much of a loyal base. Bush's base and Clinton's base is not necessarily the traditional base of their party. Older people -- people over 65 -- are some of the angriest people out there. They are also some of the most loyal Democrats normally, and some are bailing out for Perot. And some loyal conservatives who would normally fall decisively into the Republican camp -- white conservative males -- are sitting in the Perot or undecided column now.

BULLETIN: How would you advise Clinton and Bush strategists to deal with Perot, as regards their party bases?

COOK: I would be watching the swing voters. I would be focusing my research on swing voters, and would be doing a second set of research on the base to make sure that nothing I was doing for the swing voters would alienate important elements of my base. But the base vote just isn't going to get you elected this year. To become too preoccupied with your base in this environment is too passive and defensive a strategy.

BULLETIN: So where does Bush go?

COOK: I don't think there is anything the White House or the Bush campaign can do to alter the impression voters have of George Bush. That's a closed book. The election will turn on whether Clinton or Perot can reach a threshold of acceptability where enough voters become comfortable enough with the idea of either one of them as President. So what the Bush campaign has got to do is to define Clinton and Perot in a way that voters do not find acceptable.

LAST LAUGHS:

- o Jay Leno: "Today is primary day in California, and of course, the big news: he's rich, he's from Texas, he hasn't taken a stand on any of the issues -- but enough about George Bush." (NBC The Tonight Show, 6/2/92)
- o Jay Leno: "Ross Perot also said he's going to create a whole new tax system by starting with a blank sheet of paper. So, I guess he'll be able to use the same sheet of paper President Bush has for his economic plan." (NBC The Tonight Show, 6/2/92)
- o Dennis Miller: "Bush is defending his systematic disemboweling of ecological proposals for the Rio summit, and announced that while in Rio, he will personally demonstrate a new car that burns EPA regulations for fuel." (The Dennis Miller Show, 6/2/92)

Schedule

Today: Mrs. Perot appears on the "Today" show on NBC.

Tomorrow: No schedule available from published or electronic sources.

News

- * Perot offered to buy a Caribbean island to help the Government catch drug smugglers, according to two newspapers. The newspapers, quoting a former Customs Service official and a 1981 memorandum, said Perot proposed establishing a network of profit-making businesses, one of which, an aircraft refueling station, would be operated by Perot-financed commandos who would be informers for the Customs Service. Frank Chadwick, a former special agent in charge of the service's Houston office, said he had discussed the plan with Perot. (The New York Times, 5/31)
- * "Perot has said he did not know what he would say until King popped the question. Yet Perot had said virtually the same thing in a public appearance in Nashville two weeks earlier. And for at least eight months before that, had held dozens of conversations about running for president with two disparate, if little known political activists who had independently taken upon themselves the job of pushing him into the race." (The Washington Post, 5/31)
- * Gary Trudeau: "This is what is happening in Dallas, where can-do un-candidate Ross Perot has been overseeing the lightening of his towering ignorance. Recently emerging from five minutes of seclusion and study, Perot has now declared that the traditional means of measuring intentions -- thoughtful positions -- are sullied trappings of a discredited profession. Hereafter, Perot informs us, only his principles will be made available for public inspection." (The New York Times, 5/31)
- * Meg Greenfield: "I realize Perot is a different guy, with different talents. They are not interchangeable, either, but Perot is talking now about his intentions the way Carter did. It didn't work then, and it won't next time." (The Washington Post, 6/1)
- * William Safire: "Why, after nearly four decades, did Ross Perot feel he needed to present a new justification for leaving the U.S. Navy. And is Perot now telling the truth -- or is he defaming the man who was his commanding officer to cover up his original reason for seeking a hardship discharge." (The Washington Post, 6/1)
- * Edward Grimsley: "Another reason for his popularity is that he does not put on airs. When he opens his mouth, people forget he is rich. Why, he talks exactly like Bubba, with the East Texas twang. Many image-conscious rich people with political ambitions would have hired speech experts to polish a voice and accent like Mr. Perot's. But like Popeye, whom he slightly resembles, Mr. Perot is what he is." (The Washington Times, 6/1)

- * Ron Brown on Perot's "20/20" appearance: "I thought his remarks were ridiculous and they show he's not a man of great tolerance. I think his remarks are the beginning of the unraveling of his campaign." (AP, 6/1)
- * Perot on why he belonged to country clubs that excluded Blacks and Jews: "Well, interestingly enough, they don't exclude Jews and they were sensitive when I resigned. They don't exclude blacks, but they don't have any." (ABC's "20/20", 5/29)
- * Perot on Clarence Thomas: "I would have urged the President to come forward with a more capable person." (ABC's "20/20", 5/29)
- * Ohio University Poll: A telephone poll of 589 Ohio adults was conducted from May 17-21:

Men		Women
Perot	37.4%	Bush	37.6%
Bush	36.5%	Perot	25.8%
Clinton	15.7%	Clinton	18.5%
Undec.	10.0%	Undec.	18.8%

The poll's margin of error was +/-4% (AP, 6/1)

- * More than 115,000 signatures have been collected in Maryland. 16,771 signatures were gathered last week, helped by a Memorial Day drive on the Ocean City boardwalk.... Alaska on Friday became the 11th state to put Perot on the November ballot.... Idaho became the 10th state earlier that day.... Supporters in Nebraska plan to turn in petition signatures on June 15. Perot needs 2,500 signatures for ballot access.... More than 100,000 people have signed petitions to get Perot on the ballot in Georgia.... 4,500 people were at the Arkansas State House Convention Center on Saturday where Perot accepted the nomination of a group that plans to add his name to the presidential ballot as an independent in November. (AP, 6/1)
- * Perot is now officially on the ballot in Tennessee, Utah, Delaware, Maine, New Jersey, Kentucky, Wyoming, Florida, Texas, Alaska and Idaho. (AP, 6/1)

News

- * "Perot presents himself as a straight shooter, but his basic approach to being challenged is what might be called the Big Deny technique. Does anyone seriously believe that Perot, who had been through four years at Annapolis, later wanted to leave the navy because he couldn't stand the profanity? This is on about the same level as Bill Clinton's 'I didn't inhale' idiocy, but the comics barely touched it. There are at least a dozen such areas that cry out for more scrutiny, from his claim that his General Motors winnings went into an escrow account (according to NBC News, it didn't) to his claim that he never made unauthorized trips to Southeast Asia on the POW/MIA issue (convincingly rebutted by The New York Times) to his claim that he never tried to intimidate the publisher of the Ft. Worth Star-Telegram with dirty pictures (what's the publisher's motive to make it up?) to the gumshoes he denies sending to check out Sen. Warren Rudman, and on and on. Some are just little political fibs that would be harmless if he didn't claim to be a nonpolitician. At last week's Orlando satellite hookup, Perot said yet again, 'I don't have any handlers.' This comment came the same week Perot weighed hiring two of the country's most discredited handlers, Hamilton Jordan, whose standoffish ways wasted major chunks of Jimmy Carter's presidency and Ed Rollins, who as Ronald Reagan's campaign manager urged his candidate to say nothing substantive during the 1984 campaign, thereby dooming Reagan's second term." (Newsweek, 6/8)
- * "Yes, he has consorted with lobbyists -- probably has even bought them alligator shoes. Yes, he enjoys expensive toys. No, he is not so much the country boy that on summer afternoons he runs barefoot between his Remingtons. But still, behind that golden collar pin bobs an Adam's apple baked under Texarkana's sun. Ross Perot is the same prickly little guy who broke his nose breaking horses. He is a populist -- the genuine article." (Fortune, 6/15)
- * "Perot was such a hit when he addressed the National Governors' Association five years ago that the chairman told him he ought to run for President. The Chairman? Bill Clinton." (Fortune, 6/15)
- * "Perot's support is broadest among men, political independents, those earning more than $25,000 a year and the college educated. Perot does particularly well with middle-aged voters." (The Washington Post, 6/2)

- * CBS News Poll: 1,347 randomly selected adults were interviewed May 27-30:

Bush	35%
Clinton	27%
Perot	26%

1,017 of those surveyed are registered voters. (AP, CBS, 6/2)

- * Washington Post/ABC Poll: 1,003 randomly selected adults were interviewed May 27-31:

Perot	34%
Bush	31%
Clinton	29%

The margin of error is $\pm 3\%$ (The Washington Post, 6/2)

- * California Poll: The non partisan, San Francisco based Field Institute surveyed 1,355 registered California voters between May 27-30:

Perot	38%
Bush	25%
Clinton	25%

The margin of error is $\pm 2.8\%$ (AP, 6/2)

- * Richard Cohen: "One wonders about such a man. I wonder about a guy who proclaims himself a moral man and yet belonged to a country club that by his own admission had no Jewish or Black members. He quit, he told [Barbara] Walters, not in any moral repugnance but mostly because he was running for president and it was 'obvious that this was, you know, not the right thing to do.' He said he had only joined in the first place for the kids' sake -- so they could have a 'safe place for them to swim.' A safe place to swim? Perot clearly has blacks and Jews confused with sharks." (The Washington Post, 6/2)
- * Cokie Roberts: "Ross Perot offers his supporters the opportunity of involvement. Instead of surrounding himself with political consultants, he recruits armies of volunteers to circulate petitions, answer phones, collect contributions -- to act. Obviously, he can afford it. He doesn't have to pay someone to calculate which TV spots will work because he can buy whatever time he needs to get his face into the family room." (The New York Times, 6/2)

- * Jeane Kirkpatrick: "I agree with whoever thinks that Perot and I can be a great team. It's true that I'm more experienced than he is in the political field. I definitely know more than he does about foreign affairs." (New York Daily News, 6/1)
- * Supporters in Little Rock, Arkansas have filed the paperwork needed to get Perot on the November ballot. (AP, 6/2)

FROM THE PRESIDENT

H. Ross Perot on the Issues

Defense Policy and Gulf War

"Any time we've got a single man on the battlefield, I don't care if it's Grenada -- you know, I don't care how little or how big it is, when an American boy goes out there to fight for us, we automatically have a 10 percent tax surcharge kick in.... You know the best solution always, if the guys that got us into wars had to go fight them, that could be a sobering thought too.... Old guys get us into them, young men fight them." (National Press Club, 11/17/88)

"We're there because we have no energy policy. We're there because we've made a series of huge mistakes. We cannot correct our -- let's call them all 'honest mistakes.' You and I make them every day. Well, we're at the point now where we have to deal with them, but you don't have to deal with them with human lives.... Now we've got too many people in the desert. We don't need that many people in the desert. We're spending a half a billion dollars a day. We don't need to spend $15 billion a month to keep Kuwait out of -- to keep Iraq out of Saudi Arabia. We've got massive overkill.... Now, I'd like to get them home early. I think we can get them home early. I think we can resolve it diplomatically and I think, if necessary, we can resolve it surgically. But we can't get into this High Noon stuff that we're headed toward." (Donahue, 1/8/91)

"Could I make -- if we don't like Saddam Hussein why did we spend ten years creating him, giving him weapons, giving him billions of dollars? We've got $2 billion of taxpayer-insured loans that we'll have to eat as taxpayers, we've got a pattern here. We create these bad boys to do our dirty work, we lose control over them, and then we have to take them out. Noriega was the first, Hussein's the second, I like [journalist Karen Elliot House's] view [that we are making a new mistake supporting] Assad -- Syria, that's even worse.... Let's see, if -- if we conclude that Karen is right [that the Middle East will continue to be unstable], it will always -- see, Solomon couldn't stabilize the Middle East, in the recorded history of man the Middle East has never been stabilized, I don't know why we think we're going to do it. We want the oil to flow.... Now then, if we've created a monster there, which is everybody's assumption, we've got four problems: nuclear, chemical, bacteriological, and Hussein. Well, we can take out the first three surgically, the Israelis showed us how to do it, we showed the world how to do it in Libya -- it doesn't take 430,000 troops -- now you're down to the last person. My first suggestion is -- and again you don't need 430,000 troops to do that -- my first question is who will replace him, where is George Washington when we need him?" (NBC, Today, 1/14/91)

"I am absolutely satisfied that the embargo would have worked given time. I think there's all kinds of evidence around that -- see, this was a one -- one-sided war. It's like a boxing match where only one boxer showed up. This guy never fought." (PBS, MacNeil-Lehrer Newshour, 3/14/91)

"We rescued the Emir of Kuwait. Now if I knock on your door and say I'd like to borrow your son to go to the Middle East so that this dude with 70 wives, who's got a minister for sex to find him a virgin every Thursday night, can have his throne back, you'd probably hit me in the mouth." (The Washington Post, 3/23/92)

"And the point is, the whole thing is if you've got to have somebody that periodically every time he gets embarrassed has to prove his manhood -- for example, you spend ten years creating Noriega, then he gets out of line and you have to take him out, right? Ten years creating Hussein, take him out.... We were still giving this guy huge amounts of money and weapons and technology three months before we started the build-up in the desert. We had this strange phenomenon. We had a supercomputer going through a Brazilian front company after we had troops in the desert. If you doubt this, just read The New York Times. It's all there.... I've said it once already. You don't need 500,000 troops in the desert.... And when you run into a situation like that, just handle it surgically and move on with life. But don't put all these wonderful people at risk for a nut." (Donahue, 3/24/92)

"Well, we did recover Kuwait for the emir, but he ran like a rabbit when the war started. He never touched it while it was dirty, and he would not come back into his own country until enlisted men from ordinary homes all over the United States cleaned up his palace and reinstalled his gold faucet fixtures. Now, let me say this. If I'm ever running the store and you see American enlisted men rebuilding a palace for an emir -- you know, just have me shot and call it a mercy killing because, I mean, I've lost it. Seriously, seriously!... We spent 10 years creating Saddam Hussein; we gave him billions. Our current president's fingerprints are all over giving him the billions, all the way up to the spring of -- before the August when we put the troops in the desert." (CBS, 60 Minutes, 3/29/92)

"If anybody in your audience is interested, there's a litany of ten years where Vice President Bush, then President Bush, spent billions of dollars of taxpayer money to create Saddam Hussein, give him his nuclear, chemical, and bacteriological capability, and made him our bad boy of choice in the Middle East. Then, on July 25th, he gave him permission to take the northern part of Kuwait." (interview, KXAS-TV5, Dallas, 4/29/92)

DATE: May 29, 1992
RE: Follow-up on Memorial Day Conversation

Mr. President:

It was great to see you over Memorial Day. As we discussed, the following is what I believe we need to do to turn around the public perception of the Administration's handling of domestic issues.

I have some experience in this, since in 1990, I came from 18 points behind in August to win by three. I never really felt I was off the defensive, however, about our economic and budget problems. I fear that if we do not develop a better way to articulate your plan for America's long-term economic recovery, none of the other themes will have their desired impact, and you will be on the defensive in the Fall.

People need to know you care about their current plight, and that you have a plan to fix it -- because you do! And you ought to be proud of it.

You are getting a "bum rap" on "the vision thing" on domestic policy, and I am convinced the problem is not what you have proposed but that the message has not been packaged well. Even though you have made a number of worthy and compelling proposals, there has been no overarching "theme" that describes your plan to bring America back in the 1990s. As a result, the public has been convinced by the media that you have failed to lead on domestic issues, when nothing could be further from the truth.

Between now and this summer, I believe we need to have a concise description about the steps you would take over the next four years to ensure America's economic prominence and well being. Along the way, we can enumerate the proposals you have made which Congress has failed to pass, as well as urging people to send to Congress only those who are willing to help you pass both your past ideas and your new ones (I am not sure that just bashing Congress works unless you can give specifics about what you believe has to be done that Congress is not now doing). Most importantly, we need to have a catchy phrase describing what it is you have been trying to do and what you believe has to be done during your next term to put people back to work and increase America's standard of living (I think it was Pat Caddell who said to Gary Hart that it didn't matter how many great ideas he had if he couldn't summarize them in a catchy phrase on a bumper sticker!).

I have attached the "five criteria" which you discussed both in New Hampshire and in your State of the Union address (without any long lasting media attention, unfortunately). The reason these criteria are so important to our American domestic agenda is because of what has happened in the world:

1. Creation of the New World Order:

As you have so appropriately discussed on many occasions, the world has changed. The break-up of the Soviet Union and the changes in Eastern Europe reflect a victory for freedom, democracy, capitalism, and free market forces. Combined with those changes, over the last six or eight years we have seen a true globalization of the economy, with fierce competition from Europe as well as the Pacific rim. Our competitive position has been eroded due to enhanced skills in the workforces of our developed nation competitors such as Germany and Japan, and an explosion in the number of unskilled jobs now able to be done in developing countries.

2. Reduced American Competitiveness:

Because of this New World Order, we are having trouble competing with Japan and Germany for high skilled jobs and lesser developed countries are now able to do the lower skilled jobs at lower wage rates than we could or should pay ($1.00 per day vs. $4.25 per hour!). This has resulted in American corporations downsizing and laying off significant numbers of white collar workers for the first time. This trend is scaring middle class America to death and worrying them greatly about the future. In addition, there are fewer and fewer low skilled jobs but a lot of lower skilled workers and an educational system which is putting out more and more lower skilled workers every year. (Your youth apprenticeship initiative is a major step forward. I hope you will read my comments on the attached sheet).

3. Down economic cycle:

The upheaval in our changing economy has only been exacerbated by the normal down economic cycle we have been going through. The combination of the two events, however, means that people want someone to tell them how it is all going to get better.

In order to address these changes and the resulting challenges we face domestically, you have proposed a number of reforms which have not received the attention they deserve. They all seem to fit quite nicely under the "five criteria" you outlined back in January.

Again, it seems to me that we need to design a strategy for convincing the public that you have a domestic agenda for now and for the next term; that you feel strongly about it; and that the agenda has always been there even if the thematic and/or rhetorical articulation has been missing.

We could begin the process with friendly media types or through op-eds and guest columns that reiterate the "five criteria" under an overarching vision of American Opportunity in the New World Order (Norm Ornstein referred to it as the New American Order in a recent New York Times Magazine article) with specific proposals outlined under each point. I don't have all the specifics, but it would look something like this:

1. Stimulating investment necessary to create jobs.
Investment Tax Credit, expensing for small businesses, capital gains tax rate, R&D tax credit, enterprise zones.
2. Stopping the slide in real estate values and increasing home sales.
IRA's for first time home buyers, passive losses for developers, limited tax credits for home buyers.
3. Making affordable the costs of raising a family, educating children, and obtaining health care.
Increase standard personal exemption, welfare reform, health care vouchers, IRA's for college costs, expanding government student loans, H.O.P.E.
4. Increasing America's capacity to compete in a global economy.
Antitrust and product liability changes, new bilateral and multi-lateral trade agreements, America 2000, youth apprenticeship, Job Training 2000.
5. Controlling wasteful government spending and bringing the deficit under control.
Maintain 1990 budget agreement, line-item veto, balanced budget amendment.

Mr. President, as you can see, there is no justification for all of the criticism you are taking about a lack of a domestic agenda. You should be on the offensive on these issues, not on the defensive. I am convinced that if we put our minds to it, we can have the right simplified domestic theme to describe the agenda you have set forward to restore economic opportunity, jobs, and American competitiveness.

Until we change the current perception on the domestic agenda, I fear the other themes will fail to move the electorate. With the proper economic theme, though, it should be easy to tie those issues into family values, the global economy, and your preeminence in global affairs. That done, the 1992 Presidential race becomes no contest!

Sorry this memo is so long, but you have made so many important proposals for the future well being of this country, I am convinced there has to be some way to better package the message. I stand ready to help.

THE FIVE CRITERIA

I will announce the specifics of my economic growth plan — a plan for now and the future — in my State of the Union Address. That plan, and any other credible plan, must pass five tests:

One: It must stimulate the investment necessary to create jobs.

Two: It must stop the slide in real-estate values and increase home sales.

Three: It must give Americans confidence that they will be able to afford the costs of raising a family, educating their children, and obtaining health care.

Four: It must increase America's capacity to compete in a global economy.

And five: It must control wasteful government spending and bring the deficit under control.

YOUTH APPRENTICESHIP: KEEPING OUR PROMISE TO AMERICA'S YOUTH

By John R. McKernan, Jr.

For decades, the American system of education has been hailed as the best in the world. Our college graduates set the world pace for knowledge and skills.

But our education system has not kept pace with the dramatic changes in the workplace and economic markets over the past 30 years. As a result, too many of our youth are forgotten -- nearly half graduate from high school ill-prepared for work. At the same time, other nations have harnessed the power of a well-trained workforce to give their citizens prosperity and opportunity.

Maine's Center for Youth Apprenticeship will build the well-educated, high-skills workforce we need to ensure a new century of prosperity here at home. As business decisions are made on the basis of workforce skills, youth apprenticeship offers us a fresh new approach to training that will revolutionize the way we teach our children.

Our Center will manage a Maine Youth Apprenticeship Program (MYAP) -- offered in 20 percent of Maine high schools in 1993 and statewide by 1997 -- and will also include a research arm that can serve as a resource to other states. The research division will develop curriculum, and ensure that Maine's program incorporates the best aspects of apprenticeship plans worldwide.

Maine's Youth Apprenticeship Program includes aspects of the German and Danish apprenticeship systems that have prepared students well for centuries. We draw liberally from business experience and business needs, to make sure that students are trained for jobs that will actually exist. Jobs specialists from the Jobs for Maine's Graduates program will provide career preparation and training for apprenticeships in the 9th and 10th grades, and build youth guilds, similar to those in the German system, so that apprentices will always have peer support whether in school or at work.

MYAP will offer a three-year apprenticeship beginning with the 11th grade and culminating in a one-year certificate from one of Maine's Technical Colleges. By combining weeks of intensive workplace training with an extended-length school day, we will ensure that students meet the high standards demanded of all Maine high school students -- while training them with a skill.

Youth Apprenticeship

By offering the advantage of one year in college at no cost to the student, we also ensure that MYAP graduates have the opportunity to extend their education as a second-year student at a technical college, or through links with our University system. Our program provides students with the opportunity to learn an occupational skill while continuing with education.

In a world where 85 percent of all jobs will require high skills -- but less than half of our students plan to attend college -- youth apprenticeship offers a new approach that can break new ground in educating the workforce of the next century.

I hope that our unique, Americanized youth apprenticeship design will be considered by other states, and that together we can bring greater opportunity to future generations of Americans.

THE PRESIDENT

June 3, 1992

Dear Mayor Heine:

Just a quick note of thanks for a great day in Lynwood. The round-table discussions were very informative and I was impressed by all the things the Sheriff's Recreation Center has done for the children.

You've got a good group out there.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,
