MEETING WITH BIPARTISAN GROUP OF CONGRESSMEN
ON THE BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT

DATE: June 11, 1992
TIME: 7:00 a.m.
LOCATION: Cabinet Room

FROM: Nicholas E. Calio NEC

I. PURPOSE

To promote passage of a Constitutional Balanced Budget Amendment.

II. BACKGROUND

The House will begin voting on various balanced budget amendment proposals at around noon on Thursday. The final and crucial vote will be on the Stenholm/Smith Amendment, probably late afternoon. At present, we remain short of the 290 votes needed for approval.

Participants in this meeting include many of the roughly two dozen uncommitted Members, along with several key supporters. The purpose of this meeting is to build pressure on the uncommitted Members and to demonstrate your strong commitment to a balanced budget amendment.

III. PARTICIPANTS

See Attachment A.

IV. PRESS PLAN

White House press pool.

V. SEQUENCE OF EVENTS

Members of Congress will be met in the West Lobby and escorted to the Cabinet Room for the meeting with you.

MR. PRESIDENT:

Attached for your signature is a message to your 50th apologies -- we received this request very late.)

Thank you.

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

Although a half-century has passed since our days together at Andover, it sometimes seems like it was only days ago that we signed each other's yearbooks and bid each other farewell. At that time, none of us could have imagined all that lay ahead.

Ten years later, we swapped business cards and war stories at one of our first big reunions, and at our twenty-fifth, we passed family photos and compliments to one another. Now, after 50 years, we can compare EKG charts, gray hairs (for those of us who have a few left), and stories about our grandchildren.

All joking aside, as we've grown older and wiser, we have become more fully aware of how much longtime friends and acquaintances have meant in all of our lives. They are treasures of stability in this constantly changing world, and they are a blessing to us. As we look back over the years, we could line up all of our individual achievements and admire them. Yet they wouldn't stretch as far or as wide as the friendships that were forged at Andover.

I regret that I'll miss all of you at the reunion, but I will certainly be thinking of you. Barbara joins me in sending best wishes for a wonderful weekend.

SUBJECT: Don Alexander

USA Today may run a story tomorrow to the effect that Don Alexander, our Netherlands nominee, is the son of a member of the Nazi party who was imprisoned for several years after World War II. Alexander has confirmed the story to us. He never raised it with us, and it was not surfaced by State's background investigation.

I have talked with Jim Baker and relevant White House staff and will have a recommendation shortly.

CONGRESSIONAL MONITOR

Volume 28, Number 93

News From the Hill

HOUSE FLOOR: Balanced-budget debate begins.

House members began consideration yesterday of a measure (H J Res 290) proposing a balanced-budget amendment to the Constitution.

President Bush lobbied House members in support of a constitutional amendment, while Speaker Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., continued his campaign to prevent the measure from gaining the necessary two-thirds vote for passage. (See story, p. 2)

Unemployment Benefits. Late Tuesday, the House passed, 261-150, an unemployment benefits bill (HR 5260) after rejecting a GOP alternative that would have changed how the benefits were financed.

Both President Bush and congressional Democrats support the extension of an emergency program that provides additional benefits to workers who have exhausted their regular 26 weeks of coverage. The program that provides that additional coverage expires July 4.

But Democrats and Republicans differ over the scope of the benefits and how to pay for them. The Democrats' bill would finance up to 26 weeks of additional benefits for jobless workers, in part through higher taxes on employers. That provision has triggered a Bush veto threat.

A GOP motion to send the measure back to the Ways and Means Committee with instructions to revise the financing provisions was rejected by a 191-219 vote.

SENATE FLOOR: Striker replacement debate heats up.

The Senate spent most of the day debating, but took no action on, legislation that would provide job protection to workers who choose to go on strike.

The bill (S 55), which faces strong opposition from many Senate Republicans and the Bush administration, would prohibit employers from permanently replacing workers who walk the picket line.

Central to the issue is a 1938 Supreme Court decision that allows companies to hire permanent workers to do the jobs of striking employees, unless the employees are protesting unfair or unsafe labor practices.

The legislation is one of organized labor's highest priorities.

Bill sponsor Howard M. Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, said workers' main protection and leverage in collective bargaining has been "gutted" in recent years. He cited Caterpillar Inc.'s April threat to replace 12,600 striking members of the United Auto Workers union at its plants.

But opponents say the government should not dictate how businesses deal with labor and add that the bill would give an unfair advantage to labor negotiators.

Labor Secretary Lynn Martin yesterday renewed the threat of a presidential veto, saying the bill would "create an environment ripe for confrontation, intransigence and an increase in work stoppages."

The House passed a similar bill (HR 5) last July, but the margin was 39 votes short of the two-thirds majority needed to override a certain Bush veto.

HILL STAFF cuts proposed under Legislative spending bill.

The House Appropriations panel that allocates funds for congressional operations is proposing that as many as 2,300 jobs be cut from the congressional payroll in fiscal 1993.

In approving the fiscal 1993 draft spending bill for the legislative branch yesterday, members of the Legislative Branch Subcommittee said that most of the cutbacks will be accomplished by a hiring freeze and attrition. About 1,800 of those jobs are expected to come from House staffs.

House Floor: Two weeks of intense lobbying by opponents and proponents of a balanced-budget constitutional amendment will culminate today in House votes on a series of balanced-budget proposals.

Members will consider four substitute amendments to a bill (H J Res 290) proposing a constitutional amendment. The substitute amendments will be offered by Jon Kyl, R-Ariz.; Joe L. Barton, R-Texas; Richard A. Gephardt, D-Mo.; and Charles W. Stenholm, D-Texas.

All the proposals would require a balanced federal budget, but they differ over what would be included in that requirement and on congressional procedures to approve a deficit. (See story, p. 2)

Senate Floor. The Senate will vote on whether to limit debate on legislation (S 55) that would prohibit employers from permanently replacing striking workers.

The measure, strongly opposed by the administration, would overturn a 1938 Supreme Court decision. That ruling allows companies to hire permanent workers to do the jobs of striking employees, unless the employees are protesting unfair or unsafe labor practices.

Bill supporters say the ability of labor unions to negotiate collective bargaining agreements with management has been damaged by corporate threats to permanently replace striking workers.

But opponents say the government should not play a role in negotiations between management and labor. They say also that S 55 would give an unfair advantage to labor negotiators and could encourage strikes that might damage regional economies.

Higher Education: Conferees will take up legislation (S 1150) that would reauthorize the Higher Education Act of 1965, which provides financial aid to col-

Balanced-Budget Proposals Compared

In what is shaping up as the legislative battle of the year, the House today will consider a proposed constitutional amendment to require a balanced federal budget.

Members on both sides of the issue yesterday were vying for the support of the handful of members who had not made up their minds how to vote.

Speaker Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., who opposes the measure, has called today's vote on final passage of the resolution (H J Res 290) the most important of the year and predicted it would be very close. "It is right on the margin; it could go either way," Foley said.

Foley denied Republican charges that committee assignments and even chairmanships were being offered in exchange for votes against the measure. "I don't try to arm-twist people or pressure them," he told reporters.

While most of the 166 Republicans are likely to support the measure, Democrats are divided. Democrat Charles W. Stenholm, Texas, is the main sponsor, and he has the support of Democratic Caucus Chairman Steny H. Hoyer, Md.

During yesterday's daylong debate, Democrats opposing the bill argued that a constitutional amendment would not solve the nation's deficit woes. For fiscal 1992, the federal government is projected to be $399.4 billion in the red. "You don't need a constitutional amendment. . . . What you need is leadership," said Leon E. Panetta, D-Calif., the chairman of the Budget Committee. "The only way you get to a balanced budget is to make tough choices on policies," he said.

But Republicans countered that an amendment was needed because it was clear Congress and the president were not willing to make the tough choices to address the deficit without outside pressure. "We've heard every excuse in the book about why we should not approve a balanced budget," said Gerald B. H. Solomon, R-N.Y. "Let's approve this."

The last federal budget surplus, $3.2 billion, was in fiscal 1969. Under the "king of the hill" procedure the House will use, four proposals will be considered, and the last one that prevails will be the version that members will vote on for final passage.

Stenholm will offer his proposal last, and it is expected to be approved. He and Paul Simon, D-Ill. — the leading Senate proponent of a balanced-budget amendment (S J Res 18) — hammered out the details of that proposal over the past few days.

House and Senate backers of the measure compromised to come up with identical language so that a measure would not have to be sent to a House-Senate conference, where Democratic leaders would have another chance to kill the bill.

Stenholm agreed to scrap language that would have required the president and Congress to agree on an estimate of total revenues prior to the start of a fiscal year. Instead, he adopted language pushed by Simon and others that simply states that outlays cannot exceed revenues each fiscal year.

Under Stenholm's proposal, the federal government could run a deficit only if three-fifths of the members of each chamber agreed. An alternative plan being offered by Majority Leader Richard A. Gephardt, D-Mo., on behalf of the Democratic leadership would allow for deficit spending if a simple majority of each chamber agreed.

A balanced-budget amendment must be approved by two-thirds of the House and the Senate. It must then be ratified by 38 states to become part of the Constitution.

The chart compares key features of each of the four proposals:

Sponsor	General Budget Requirements	Presidential, Congressional Budgets	Deficit-Increasing Legislation	Tax Increases, Debt Increase
Kyl	Total outlays cannot exceed total revenues. Outlays cannot exceed 19 percent of the U.S. gross national product.	No provision.	Require a three-fifths majority in each chamber to approve a bill or an amendment to a bill that would cause a deficit.	No provision.
Barton	Total outlays cannot exceed total revenues. Increase in total revenues cannot exceed increase in national income.	President must propose a budget in which outlays do not exceed revenues. Congress must approve a budget in which outlays do not exceed revenues.	Require a three-fifths majority in each chamber to approve a bill or an amendment to a bill that would cause a deficit.	Require a three-fifths majority in each chamber to approve a rate of revenue increase greater than the increase in national income or to increase the federal debt.
Gephardt	Outlays (excluding Social Security payments and debt redemption) cannot exceed revenues (excluding Social Security receipts and net borrowing).	President must propose a budget in which outlays do not exceed revenues unless a "declaration of national urgency" is also submitted. Congress is prohibited from approving a budget that calls for higher outlays than the president's budget.	Require a majority in each chamber to approve a presidential "declaration of national urgency" allowing deficit-spending.	No provision.
Stenholm	Total outlays cannot exceed total revenues.	President must submit a budget in which outlays do not exceed revenues.	Require a three-fifths majority in each chamber to approve a bill or an amendment to a bill that would cause a deficit.	Require a majority in each chamber to pass a bill that increases revenues, such as taxes. Require a three-fifths majority in each chamber to approve an increase in the national debt.

ations panel — gives the Legislative Branch Subcommittee the same amount of money it appropriated in fiscal 1992: $2.34 billion. The subcommittee-approved measure contains about 1.3 percent less than that allocation.

In addition to cutting the legislative branch payroll, the spending bill would provide $53 million for free mailings for House members — a big cut from the $80 million appropriated for fiscal 1992. (The just-enacted rescission bill cut $20 million from the fiscal 1992 total.)

The subcommittee agreed to freeze at fiscal 1992 levels the budgets of the Office of Technology Assessment, the Congressional Budget Office and the General Accounting Office, three congressional support agencies.

Treasury-Postal. The House Appropriations Subcommittee on Treasury, Postal Service and General Government met behind closed doors yesterday and approved a draft spending bill for fiscal 1993. The measure includes $22.7 billion in spending, up from last year's level of $19.9 billion.

Nearly half of the money in the measure would go to the Treasury Department, the Internal Revenue Service and the U.S. Customs Service.

The bill also includes funding for Vice President Dan Quayle's office. Members debated an amendment that would have prohibited Quayle from using his budget to fund the Council on Competitiveness, which has come under criticism for its role in reviewing federal regulations. But it was withdrawn in favor of report language accompanying the bill that will be critical of the council.

Agriculture. The House Agriculture Appropriations Subcommittee yesterday completed its closed-door markup of the fiscal 1993 Agriculture spending bill. The panel, which began the markup Tuesday, said it had decided to freeze funding for ongoing programs at fiscal 1992 levels.

Energy Markup. Today, after the full Appropriations Committee approves the allocation of funds to each of the 13 subcommittees, it will mark up the first of the 13 spending bills — for energy, water development and nuclear weapons. The Energy and Water Development Subcommittee last week approved a $21.8 billion draft bill that would cut funding for the superconducting super collider by $166 million below the president's request.

SOVIET AID bill encounters little difficulty in Foreign Affairs.

Legislation that would authorize the administration to provide aid to the former Soviet republics gained easy approval from the House Foreign Affairs Committee yesterday. The measure (HR 4547), approved by voice vote, would authorize about $600 million for fiscal 1992 and 1993 to help the former republics move toward democracy.

The Senate Foreign Relations panel approved a similar bill (S 2532) on May 13.

The bill would provide a variety of economic and technical assistance, such as helping the republics dismantle weapons programs. And it would remove many Cold War prohibitions on helping the former communist nation.

Included in the measure is a $12 billion increase in the U.S. contribution to the International Monetary Fund.

The committee added a provision — offered by Henry J. Hyde, R-Ill. — that would authorize $15 million for the creation of a Democracy Corps, modeled after the Peace Corps.

The corps would provide a $5,000 stipend to volunteers who would spend two years in the former Soviet republics to help promote the transition to democracy on the local level.

Although the measure encountered little resistance in the Foreign Affairs Committee, its chance for House passage

Rep. Anthony Loses in Arkansas Runoff

Seven-term Rep. Beryl Anthony Jr., D-Ark., on Tuesday became the 12th House member this year to taste defeat, losing a close runoff election to Arkansas Secretary of State Bill McCuen.

The 48-year-old McCuen highlighted Anthony's 109 bad checks at the House bank and his vote for a congressional pay raise to overcome Anthony's 10 percentage point margin in the May 26 primary. Since neither candidate won 50 percent of the primary vote, Tuesday's runoff was needed.

In the second round of voting, McCuen captured 51 percent to Anthony's 49 percent. He will be a big favorite in November against GOP nominee Jay Dickey.

Anthony's defeat brings the list of departing members of the Ways and Means Committee to 11 — almost a third of the panel's roster.

In Arkansas' 3rd District runoff, Democrats chose John VanWinkle as their standard-bearer in November against Republican Tim Hutchinson. VanWinkle captured 58 percent of the runoff ballots to easily defeat Don Nelms.

The election calendar called for primaries in three other states Tuesday — Maine, North Dakota and Virginia. There were no congressional primaries in North Dakota.

Maine. In the 1st District, businesswoman Linda Bean captured about 46 percent of the vote in a three-way primary to win the Republican nomination. She will face freshman Democratic Rep. Thomas H. Andrews.

Virginia. State Sen. Robert C. Scott on Tuesday took a big step toward election as the first black member of Congress from Virginia in a century. In the 3rd District Democratic primary, Scott won about two-thirds of the vote to easily defeat two other candidates. He'll be heavily favored in November over GOP nominee Daniel Jenkins, who is also black.

In the 8th District, Republicans nominated environmental lawyer Kyle McSlarrow to oppose Democratic Rep. James P. Moran Jr.

And in the new 11th District, the GOP nominee is law professor Henry Butler, the son of former Rep. M. Caldwell Butler (1972-83). Butler won 32 percent of the vote to come out on top in a five-man race. Former Rep. Mark Siljander (R-Mich., 1981-87), came in a distant second, with 22 percent. The Democratic nominee is state Del. Leslie L. Byrne.

The 12 primary defeats by House incumbents is the largest total since 1972, when there also were 12. Here's the complete list for this year.

is tied to a dispute between the House leadership and the Bush administration over how to handle certain domestic issues. The administration would like to have the aid bill enacted before next week's visit of Russian President Boris N. Yeltsin, but the Democratic leadership wants a commitment on domestic legislation, such as urban aid, before proceeding with the bill.

WORKER BENEFITS could be regulated by states in some cases.

The House Education and Labor Committee yesterday approved, by voice vote, legislation (HR 2782) that would allow states to regulate how much state contractors pay their workers and what benefits they must offer.

The measure would amend the 1974 Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA), which prohibits any state regulation of an employee benefit.

The bill would allow states to set the prevailing wage paid by companies to employees working on state-funded contracts. According to Pat Williams, D-Mont., the chairman of the Labor-Management Relations Subcommittee, the bill also would authorize the state to regulate other kinds of employee benefits, including health care or overtime rates.

Supporters of the bill argued that Congress never intended ERISA to preempt state authority in these areas. These issues "clearly are not within the original intent of ERISA," said William D. Ford, D-Mich., chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee, who was on the panel when ERISA was written.

Republicans disagreed. Bill backers are "carving the heart out of ERISA's pre-emption clause," argued Harris W. Fawell, R-Ill. They said that employers could not afford to provide benefits unless the rules for those benefits were uniform nationally.

• The committee did not take up another bill (HR 1602) that is designed to help people who are wrongly denied health insurance claims recover their money. Members are still working on the scope of the bill and may bring it up again June 30.

YEW TREE bill gets full Interior Committee backing.

The House Interior Committee approved, by voice vote, legislation that aims to ensure a regular supply of a cancer-fighting agent found in the bark of a slow-growing Western tree.

By voice vote, the committee approved the measure (HR 3836), which would require that when Pacific yew trees are harvested from federal forests they are made available to drug companies. Drug manufacturers remove from the bark of the tree the chemical compound taxol, which has been successful in fighting certain types of cancer.

The measure would also require that the yew trees be cut in such a way as to allow for their regeneration.

The legislation already has been approved by the Merchant Marine Committee. The Agriculture panel is expected to consider it soon.

FOREIGN SHIPS would have to comply with U.S. labor rules.

The House Education and Labor Committee yesterday quickly approved legislation (HR 1126) that would apply U.S. labor laws to foreign-flag vessels that frequent U.S. shores. The committee approved the measure by voice vote.

The bill would apply, for five years, the provisions of the 1935 National Labor Relations Act and the 1938 Fair Labor Standards Act to any ship that regularly transported passengers to and from the United States, or that brought cargo into or out of the United States. Those laws are the basis for all U.S. labor standards.

Labor Standards Subcommittee Chairman Austin J. Murphy, D-Pa., argued that it was time to end the "unfair double standard" that applied the laws to ships under the U.S. flag but exempted ships flying foreign flags.

Tom Petri, R-Wis., opposed the bill, saying that he was concerned that it might conflict with provisions of international law and that it might have an adverse effect on trade and cruise ships.

• In other action, the panel approved, by voice vote, a bill (S 2759) that is designed to improve services for children who are likely to have nutritional problems.

As approved, the bill would reauthorize a demonstration program to feed homeless children through the National School Lunch Program. Homelessness could be one of the factors used to determine whether a child qualified for aid under the Women, Infants and Children feeding program.

DOMESTIC PARTNERS act upheld by D.C. panel.

On a party-line vote of 3-6, the House District of Columbia Committee shot down a resolution (H J Res 480) yesterday that would have overturned a D.C. Council-passed measure. Congress had until yesterday to overturn the bill.

Under the proposal, members of non-traditional family groups, such as unmarried couples and their children, can register with the D.C. government as domestic partners, thus qualifying them for family health-benefit coverage. The employees would assume the total cost of the additional coverage for their families.

Resolution sponsor Clyde C. Holloway, R-La., led the charge against the D.C. measure, which he said would undermine family values. Legal experts also questioned whether the proposal would be pre-empted by the 1974 Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA), which regulates employee health benefits and supersedes state laws in this area.

But panel Chairman Ronald V. Delums, D-Calif., said that he was satisfied with a letter from the D.C. Corporation Counsel and the D.C. Council's general counsel that the D.C. measure would not be affected by ERISA.

Under the Home Rule Act, Congress has 30 legislative days to review all D.C. Council-passed measures. Since no disapproving resolution was signed by Congress and the president by the deadline, the measure will become law.

But Holloway indicated after the markup that he was prepared to keep fighting the D.C. measure. "We're not satisfied that this is the end," said Holloway. "This is much deeper than ERISA to me."

"DEBT FOR SCIENCE" bill aims to boost exchanges with Latin states.

Seeking to boost scientific cooperation between the United States and Latin American countries, the House Science Committee yesterday gave its voice vote approval to a bill (HR 3215) that would establish a federal program to support joint research and education exchanges.

The measure would also authorize the National Science Foundation (NSF) to pay a portion of a Latin American country's foreign debt in exchange for that nation's contribution to joint scientific research and education projects.

The program would be authorized at an annual rate of $10 million for fiscal 1992-93.

• The panel also approved, by voice vote, a bill (HR 3673) that would authorize $6 million a year through fiscal 1995 for a NSF program to develop desalinization technologies.

The measure is designed to improve both the supply and quality of water in the Southwest, which suffers from chronic water shortages.

D.C. MAYOR hears lawmakers are anxious over city's crime rate.

The chairman of the Senate subcommittee that oversees the annual federal payment to the District of Columbia government warned the city's mayor yesterday that drastic action must be taken to reduce the city's crime rate.

Brock Adams, D-Wash., chairman of the Senate District of Columbia Appropriations Subcommittee, said that D.C. Mayor Sharon Pratt Kelly should be prepared to see numerous amendments to the fiscal 1993 District of Columbia spending bill that would create stricter criminal statutes in the city. He said lawmakers are becoming fed up with the number of assaults on Capitol Hill.

The crime rate in the District is now "personalized" because so many members and staff live near the Capitol and more of them are becoming victims of crimes.

But Kelly argued that the city lacks the funds to deal with the rising crime rate because it cannot tax many of the companies and businesses in the District that use city services.

Kelly wants to levy a commuter tax on Maryland and Virginia residents who work in the city to help offset the cost of providing them with city services. "As long as this revenue is off-limits to us, there will continue to be a growing disparity between our suburbs and the District, and we are paying the price for it," she said.

The District is requesting a $655.7 million federal payment for fiscal 1993; it received $630.5 million in fiscal 1992.

MILITARY THREAT advocated for war-torn Yugoslavia.

Sen. Richard G. Lugar, R-Ind., yesterday called on President Bush to apply the threat of military intervention to strife-torn Yugoslavia.

Lugar, a senior member of the Foreign Relations Committee, said the armed conflict between Serbian militias and ethnic rivals in Bosnia-Herzegovina has gone far past the point where either economic sanctions or United Nations observers alone can be effective.

"There has to be a credible threat of the use of force to get a cease-fire that sticks," Lugar said at a news conference.

Lugar said the Bush administration should lead the United Nations and the NATO alliance in drawing up military plans and authorizing the use of force.

The world should then confront the warring factions with an ultimatum: stop fighting by a definite date, or face crushing military consequences, Lugar said.

The Foreign Relations Committee meets today to mark up a resolution (S Res 306) urging President Bush to seek U.N. action to enforce cease-fire resolutions.

Panel member Joseph R. Biden Jr., D-Del., yesterday was drafting a tougher resolution, similar to the one (S J Res 2) that sanctioned U.S. participation in the war against Iraq. The European Affairs Subcommittee that he chairs will hold a hearing this afternoon on the possibility of intervention.

FINANCIAL PLANNERS face added scrutiny under bill.

The head of the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) and members of a key House Energy and Commerce subcommittee yesterday promised to iron out remaining differences and agree on a bill to beef up the commission's oversight of the burgeoning financial planning industry.

SEC Chairman Richard C. Breeden told the Telecommunications and Finance Subcommittee that he supports the bulk of a draft bill that would impose new fees on financial planners to pay for additional SEC inspectors.

Capitol Hill's interest in the matter has been piqued by reports of fraud and lack of oversight in the rapidly growing industry. At present, only 46 SEC inspectors are available to police 17,500 investment advisory firms that manage $5 trillion in investments.

Last week, the subcommittee heard testimony from investors who had been bilked by their financial planners. The industry is generally supportive of the bill.

The Senate Banking Committee approved a much narrower investment advisers bill (S 2266) on May 21.

Breeden said he supported several provisions of the House measure not in the Senate bill, including a section that requires advisers to take into account a client's financial situation and investment experience when making investment recommendations.

Breeden and subcommittee Republicans said they oppose bill language that would make it easier for clients to sue their advisers to recover damages. Breeden said that the provision would lead to frivolous lawsuits and that in most cases, investors already have that right.

CHILD WELFARE programs save money, legislators say.

Investing now in programs to help children from troubled families will save government money in the long run, state legislators told the Senate Finance Committee yesterday.

Kentucky Gov. Brereton Jones, D, said most child and family welfare programs are "antiquated Model-T systems" that fail to assist the neediest children, those from broken homes who have suffered abuse.

Jones said Kentucky has a successful Family Preservation Program, which provides intensive family counseling and training for parents and children. He estimated that the program has saved Kentucky $2 million by reducing out-of-home placement costs.

Texas state Sen. Chet Brooks, D, said Congress should expand child welfare programs but only if it agrees to make funds available for the states. "Unfunded mandates, blanket transfers of responsibility and dismantling of existing funding structures" will be counterproductive to saving families, Brooks said.

Committee Chairman Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, said the panel would take into account witnesses' testimony when it considers legislation (S 4) that aims to overhaul the child-welfare system.

The measure would increase drug- and alcohol-treatment services for parents and pregnant women and expand health services for young children through Medicaid.

OSHA CHANGES urged by Jesse Jackson at Labor hearing.

Workers should be given a role in assessing workplace safety and assuring that companies comply with federal regulations, Jesse Jackson told the Senate Labor Committee yesterday.

Citing the fire that killed 25 workers at a North Carolina chicken-processing plant last September, Jackson backed legislation (S 1622) that would require employers to set up labor-management safety and health committees.

But representatives of business and the administration said they oppose the legislation.

The bill, sponsored by Chairman Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., would change the Occupational Safety and Health Act to require employers to prepare safety and health plans and to form labor-management committees to consider health and safety issues and recommend action.

The bill would allow criminal prosecution in cases in which an employer's actions lead to serious injury of a worker. Under current law, prosecution is possible only after a worker dies.

Dorothy L. Strunk, acting assistant Labor secretary for OSHA, said Bush's top advisers would recommend that he veto the bill if it passed. She said the bill would "lead to excessive conflict and litigation," increase enforcement burdens and "overwhelm" the agency.

HASTINGS APPEAL of impeachment heard in district court.

Lawyers for former U.S. District Judge Alcee L. Hastings argued before the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia on Tuesday that his impeachment was unconstitutional since Hastings had earlier been acquitted of similar charges by a criminal court jury.

But Senate lawyer Morgan Frankel maintained that the Constitution gives the Senate considerable leeway in impeachment proceedings, which are considered an essentially political, rather than judicial, process.

Hastings, Florida's first black federal judge, was convicted and removed from the federal bench by the Senate on Oct. 20, 1989. The impeachment articles charged him with perjury and conspiracy to obtain a $150,000 bribe. He was acquitted in a 1983 criminal trial.

Hastings' lawyer, Stephanie Moore, argued that the Constitution allows only judges who were convicted in criminal court to be impeached. Hastings also challenged the Senate impeachment procedure because testimony was heard by a 12-member committee rather than by the full Senate.

The Senate version of the bill would reauthorize the act for seven years, while the House bill would renew it for five years.

Both bills would expand aid eligibility for students from middle income families by raising the maximum family income level to qualify for Pell grants — the government's basic aid program for students. The House version would raise the family income ceiling from the current level of $30,000 per year to $47,000, and the Senate bill would increase it to about $42,000.

A difference between the two chambers' versions is that the Senate-passed measure would increase the annual limit on how much each student could borrow under the federally guaranteed student loan program, and the House version would not.

Both versions would eliminate a requirement, established in 1991, that all student loan applicants pass a credit check.

While differences between the two versions are substantial, there is much common ground since the intent of both bills is to expand aid for middle class families.

Unemployment Benefits: The Senate Finance Committee will mark up draft legislation to extend a federal unemployment benefits program for workers who have used up their 26 weeks of state benefits.

The current benefits extension program expires July 4. The Senate measure would extend the program through March 6, 1993.

The measure is similar to a bill (HR 5260) passed by the House on Tuesday that would provide an additional 20 to 26 weeks of federal benefits.

The Senate measure differs, however, in how the extended benefits would be financed.

The committee is also scheduled to consider draft legislation that would liberalize the Social Security earnings test to allow older, retired workers to earn more money before their benefits are reduced. The measure also includes a section that would make the Social Security Administration an independent agency.

The committee may also take up bills to reauthorize the U.S. Customs Service, the Office of the U.S. Trade Representative and the U.S. International Trade Commission.

Pornography Suits: The Senate Judiciary Committee will once again attempt to mark up legislation that would allow victims of sex crimes to sue producers of hard-core pornography.

The bill (S 1521), which has been at the top of the committee's agenda for months, would allow victims of rape, sexual abuse or other sexually motivated crimes of violence to bring a civil action against those who produce, distribute or sell hard-core pornography.

Some committee Democrats have expressed concern that the measure would infringe on the First Amendment right of free speech.

Charles E. Grassley, R-Iowa, will offer a substitute amendment that would force the plaintiff (the victim) in a case to show that the defendant knew or should have known that the sale of this material was likely to lead to violent behavior on the part of the customer who committed the sex crime.

The amendment would also require that the suit be linked to a criminal conviction for the individual who committed the sexually violent act.

According to a Republican staffer, the vote on the bill will be close, but there is good chance of committee approval.

Judicial Immunity: Legislation that would bar the awarding of court costs against judicial officers who are successfully sued for negligent actions taken within the scope of their duties will be marked up by the House Judiciary Subcommittee on Intellectual Property and Judicial Administration.

Currently, the Supreme Court interprets the doctrine of judicial immunity as exempting judges and other court officers from personal liability for damages that result from their professional actions. In 1984, however, the court ruled that such immunity does not extend to the awarding of court costs.

The bill (HR 3206) would expand judicial immunity to cover court costs, unless the judicial officer clearly acted outside the scope of his or her duties.

The bill has the support of all members of the subcommittee and is expected to win approval easily.

FBI Reauthorization: The House Judiciary Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights will mark up legislation to reauthorize the FBI.

The measure (HR 5285) would authorize $2 billion for the FBI for fiscal 1993, slightly less than the bureau's $2.1 billion request. In fiscal 1992, the bureau received $1.9 billion.

The Foreign Counter-Intelligence Division would receive $50 million less than in fiscal 1992. These funds would be rechanneled to boost manpower to fight white-collar and violent crime.

The legislation has the support of Democratic members of the subcommittee and is expected to win subcommittee approval. ■

(AFTER PRESS LEAVES)

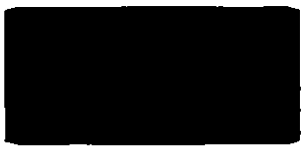

- I wanted to get all of you together to talk about an issue that's very important to me, something that I've been asking Congress for a long time to pass: an amendment to the Constitution requiring a balanced budget.
- Thanks to the hard work of Charlie Stenholm, Joe Barton, Bob Smith and others of you in this room, it looks like this is the year that we finally have a chance to make this happen. The reason we're so close to actually passing a Constitutional amendment is that we've been working on a bipartisan - almost non-partisan -- basis.

Card 2

- We're working together, shoulder to shoulder. You know as well as I do how fed up the American people are with Washington. They're tired of finger-pointing, extreme partisanship and gridlock. They want results, and they want them now.
- I know a lot of politics are being played as the votes are being counted on this, and I've heard all the stories about the special interest groups pulling out all the stops to defeat the Stenholm amendment. Let's for once rise above all that.

- I'm asking you, on a bipartisan basis, to pull together and get this done. Let's put aside our partisan differences long enough to get this amendment through. Let's give the American people the results they want on something they want, and let's do it by working together. And more important, let's do it for the interests of future generations of Americans, our grandchildren and great-grandchildren.
 - We are borrowing against their future, and that has got to stop. I am now more convinced than ever that the time has come to move a balanced budget forward.

FYI

JUST HEARD THAT PEROT'S PEOPLE ARE PLANNING MORE ACTIVITIES ON JUNE 30. THEY PLAN A HUGE RALLY OUTSIDE THE SENATE; POW FAMILIES, VETERANS, FORMER POW'S...THOUSANDS; THE VIETNAM VETERANS COALITION IS PUTTING THIS TOGETHER. THE PLAN IS FOR PEROT TO TESTIFY AND THEN GO OUTSIDE AND SPEAK TO THIS RALLY.

PEROT'S PEOPLE ARE ALSO GOING TO PACK THE HEARING ROOM.

ALL OF THIS DESIGNED TO TRASH BUSH, TRASH WASHINGTON, TRASH THE "LACK OF CARING" AND LAUNCH PEROT.

ALSO, I HEAR THAT ALL OF WASHINGTON'S MEDIA PLANS ON BEING THERE IN THE SENATE HEARING ROOM. AS THE WALL STREET JOURNAL SAYS, "IT'S OUR FIRST GLIMPSE OF ROSS PEROT".

PLEASE TAKE NOTE OF THIS SIDE-BAR ARTICLE ABOUT HOW THE POW ISSUE IS THE CAUSE OF PEROT'S CANDIDACY.

INDEED, "BUSH'S PASSIVITY ON MIA'S" IS WHY BUSH HAS LOST THIS ISSUE - AND, THUS, MANY FLAG-WAVING FORMER REAGAN/BUSH VOTERS - TO PEROT.

HAVING THE PRESIDENT MERELY MENTION THIS ISSUE AS HIS "HIGHEST NATIONAL PRIORITY" ONCE IN A WHILE ISN'T ENOUGH. WE NEED A NEW STRATEGY TO TAKE THIS ISSUE (AND THOSE FLAG-WAVERS) AWAY FROM PEROT.

THOUGHT YOU SHOULD READ THIS NEW NEW YORK MAGAZINE PIECE ON PEROT.

IT MAKES THE ARGUMENT THAT PEROT HAS CORNERED THE MARKET ON PATRIOTISM AND THAT HIS WELL-KNOWN EMPATHY FOR THE POW'S AND MIA'S IS HIS METAPHOR FOR RESCUING AN AMERICA HELD PRISONER BY LOBBYISTS AND PROFESSIONAL POLITICIANS.

ONCE WE PUNCTURE HIS HOLD ON THE POW ISSUE, WE BEGIN TO PUNCTURE THE MYTH OF ROSS PEROT.

Perot vs. Bush: Campaign or Vendetta?

Does Perot deny any personal animosity toward George Bush. "Nice man, nice family," he chirps, with all the enthusiasm he might use to compliment the cut of Bush's golf pants. Privately, Perot has told friends that Bush is "whiny and hand-wringing." Perot, an expert needler, knows how to get the president's goat. At a rally last month in Little Rock, Ark., Perot declared, "I don't have to prove my manhood by sending anybody to war." The remark, predictably, set off a seismic reaction in the White House. "The president is ready to deck him," says a campaign aide. "Where does this guy get off?" Political opponents rarely end up liking each other, but the enmity between Perot and Bush runs deep, and it started long before the 1992 presidential campaign. Indeed, the ferocity of Perot's assault makes some White House aides wonder whether they're dealing with a campaign or a vendetta.

Future clash: Part of the clash is cultural. Bush and Perot both like to race Cigarette boats, not exactly a workingman's sport. But there the similarity ends. Bush is Anglo, old money and oil. Perot is Texarkana High, overachieving and self-made. Perot has drawn his best and brightest from public education and the military. He doesn't have much respect for third-generation wealth, especially the kind that was originally amassed on Wall Street. Perot regards himself as real Texas, Bush as bogus Texas. There is no doubt that in Perot's eyes, Bush symbolizes all that is wrong with government today. Bush is the ultimate bureaucrat, too accepting of the status quo. Perot is impatient, happy to run roughshod over the bureaucracy.

Bush and Perot first ran afoul over Perot's belief that the Reagan and Bush administrations have been party to a cover-up of MIAs in Vietnam. In 1985, as vice president, Bush allowed Perot to see U.S. intelligence files dealing with the MIA issue. Bush may have hoped to co-opt Perot by bringing him on the administration team, but Perot only became more indamed. He was convinced that Richard Armitage, the Defense Department official negotiating with Vietnam, had been "compromised" by his relationship with a Vietnamese woman. Perot confronted the White House with his evidence: a photograph of the woman, bare-chested in her bedroom, with a picture of Armitage on the night stand. After investigating the charges, Bush backed Armitage. Perot was furious. He keeps the photo locked away, like an amulet, showing it to selected visitors. "A man who carries dirty little pictures in his safe. I've got problems with," says a former national security official who dealt with Perot at the time.

Political fact: Perot was so disgusted with what he saw as Bush's passivity on MIAs that he decided to help out the veep's political foe. In 1988, Newsweek has learned, he contacted Michael Dukakis's campaign, offering to share his negative critique of the GOP candidate. A Dukakis aide flew to Dallas, where Perot outlined why Bush would not make a good president because he was "weak" and didn't stand up on issues. It was the periling campaign criticize the GC (Perot says he has sweltering cattle shed in the hope that this tiny man with the raspy, piney-woods voice was going to infuse them with the sense of direction and purpose that had vanished who could say exactly when. And so far, he was doing just that.

"Raise it up again, will you please, sir?" Perot said to the veteran with the flag. As the man obliged, the crowd applauded, and Perot asked, "Can we all agree, can we all agree, that if and when this country goes to war—first commit the nation, then commit the troops?"

The audience cheered vigorously.

"Very specifically," Perot continued, "can we agree that when we send these wonderful people out on the battlefield, everybody in this country goes with them in spirit?"

The cheering intensified. "And can we finally agree," Perot went on, "you . . . never . . . leave . . . one . . . behind. . . ."

The rest of what Perot was saying was drowned out by a thunderous roar of approval. A man with a short ponytail standing behind Perot began to swing a large American flag back and forth. The fabric slowly furled and unfurled, the red and white stripes sliding up and down one another in a vivid tableau as Perot leaned down to shake the outstretched hands at the foot of the stage.

A third man on the stage began to chant, "Ross is boss! Ross is boss!" and the crowd took it up.

"Ross is boss!"

T THAT MOMENT, IT BECAME quite clear just how thoroughly Perot has cornered the market on patriotism in this campaign. Every presidential campaign is, on a fundamental level, an appeal to patriotism in one form or another. It fails or succeeds to the extent that the candidate can define the state of the nation and engage the voters in his attitude toward it. Since the definition is always metaphorical, the pageantry and symbols used to create it are an essential part of this process. They create the emotional bond between him and the voters. Jack Kennedy forged this bond with his appeal to idealism and youthful vigor. Jimmy Carter did the same in 1976, in the aftermath of Watergate, with his appeals to moral purity and asceticism. Ronald Reagan's themes, "Make America Great Again," in 1980 (during the hostage crisis), and "Morning in America," in 1984 (after he pumped up the economy with deficit spending), both wallowed in patriotism. Michael Dukakis's defeat in 1988 was due in no small part to his inability to find a theme that would ignite patriotic emotions.

This year, both Bill Clinton and George Bush have had similar difficulties creating the impression that a vote for them is a vote for the country. Their campaigns lack emotional logic. As a result, suitable symbols elude them. Clinton's most appropriate backdrop is a black church. Whenever he appears in front of a flag, he merely reminds voters of his still not entirely explained efforts to evade the draft; he seemed almost out of place with his hand over his heart at a Memorial Day ceremony in a cemetery. Bush's exploitation of patriotic imagery in 1988 was so cynical, so orchestrated and calculated, that it would probably backfire if he served up the same material again. "He went to one too many flag factories," jokes Clinton's adviser James Carville. Furthermore, if Bush invokes his role as commander in chief during the Gulf War, he will remind people that Saddam ("Worse than Hitler") Hussein is still in power and that his own administration was funneling money to Iraq just before the invasion of Kuwait.

In short, Bush and Clinton are caught in a theme gap. And it is into this gap that Perot has stormed. Not only that, he has seized it and is now occupying it as if it were some sort of strategic pass into the very heart of the country—which in a sense it is. Perot, from the rescue of his employees in Iran to his assault on the GM bureaucracy to his comment that the United States should have assassinated Saddam Hussein, has always favored commando tactics. It's this existential stance, his pugnaeous defiance, and not his fortune that is responsible for his mythic stature. And the campaign he has constructed is similarly self-mythologizing: The country is the prisoner, held hostage by lobbyists and professional politicians, and he and the American people together will create a commando team to rescue it. "It's patriotic to be for him, because he has the true interests of Americans at heart," Amy Hines, a Perot volunteer from Orlando, told me after the rally was over. "He wants the people involved," her friend Judy Caldwell said. Added a third friend, Ginny England, "We've lost America."

If the country has been lost by politicians, it requires an anti-political man to recover it. He becomes the true patriot. This is Perot's central metaphor. The ultimate anti-politician, Perot not only has no political experience, he also professes to have no political ambition and to abhor the very idea of holding political office. The presidency, Perot told Barbara Walters, is a "brutal, dirty, thankless job." All in all, he would rather not leave Dallas and be "stuck" in Washington, as he frequently characterizes the prospect of four years as the most powerful leader in the world. This pose, the Reluctant Warrior, is an American archetype as old as George Washington. It has always had particularly strong roots in Texas, as witness Robert Caro's depiction of Coke Stevenson, the Texas governor who would rather have been out on his ranch but was needed, time and again, by the people to save them from bad politicians. The Reluctant Warrior is the only man who can do the job, and his reluctance is the badge of his own purity of motive.

In a further variation on anti-politics, Perot, as part of his rhetorical strategy, campaigns by telling people he doesn't want them to vote for him and gives them reasons why they shouldn't. "Not everybody ought to vote for me," he told the crowd in Orlando when explaining his position on the Gulf War. "If you don't have the stomach for it, then let's not try," he said when discussing his plan to pay off the debt.

But nothing more clearly illustrates Perot's anti-political wizardry than his ability to explain as an act of patriotic self-sacrifice his willingness to spend upwards of $100 million to get himself elected. "At the highest levels, they are now saying that I am going to buy the election and that that's obscene," he told the crowd in Orlando, which heartily booed this insidious characterization. "I responded to the national press yesterday, and I said that's the deal I made with you [the people], that if you wanted me to run as your servant, I would run a world-class, properly financed campaign, and then finally, with a burst of lack of finesse and tact since I don't have any handlers, I said, 'You know, just put it down this way: I'm buying it for the American people.' That's it."

WITH HIS FLAMING HAIR AND Gogol-esque nose, his brisk, military bearing, his rounded and starched Warren Harding collars and gold collar bars, Perot is easy to caricature. But he's a complex person, by far the most complex of the three candidates, and it is hard not to have a complicated reaction to him. He is, in part, goofy, to use a word he likes to employ. He presents an almost unbelievably contradictory mixture of innovation (electronic town halls), nativité (ambassadors abroad serve no purpose), paranoia (then-Assistant Secretary of Defense Richard Armitage was part of a Vietnamese conspiracy that concealed information about MIAs), shrewdness (persuading the federal government to build the $200-million Fort Worth airport), and puritanical intolerance (forbidding adultery among his employees).

But despite a certain capacity for devious behavior, Perot is not essentially a cynical person—if anything, he's messianic. He has an empathetic side that Bush clearly lacks and that Clinton, who shares it, too, often buries in dry policy disquisitions. Perot's concern for MIAs and POWs is the most obvious example of his emotional empathy, but, as his work on behalf of the Texas school system indicates, it extends to the underprivileged as well. "He has genuine compassion for people who are not well off," says Felix Rohatyn, who once served on the board of PDS, the computer company Perot sold to CIM, and has been proposed by Texas Monthly as a potential Treasury Secretary for Perot.

A few years ago, Rohatyn recalls, the Municipal Assistance Corporation had a surplus of $600-million that he was thinking of using to build new schools. "One day I got a call from Ross," he says. Perot suggested that if Rohatyn was going to build schools, he should make them small, because children feel insignificant and alienated in large, impersonal buildings. "I had gotten a lot of calls about the politics of spending this money," Rohatyn says. "But Ross was the only one thinking about what would be good for the kids."

It's Perot's ability to connect emotionally that is responsible for the very powerful bond between him and his supporters. Because of it, Perot rallies have a genuine exuberance that, together with their rugged spontaneity, sets them apart. In Orlando, it was hard not to be moved when the horrible band broke into an energetic rendition of "America the Beautiful" and the veterans thrust their flags aloft. "I cried, absolutely, and I've never done that before," Cindy Sirka, a Perot volunteer, said afterward.

Also, in a year when voters commonly complain that Clinton is driven by personal ambition and that Bush wants to keep his job because it's fun being a world leader, Perot knows how to make his supporters feel that his campaign is about them. When cornered after the rally by reporters, Perot climbed back up on the stage and said he would answer the questions in front of the entire crowd so it would be of some use to his supporters. He leaned down to the roiling group of journalists and cameras off to one side of the stage, cupped a hand behind one of his huge ears to listen to the shouted questions, then returned to the microphone. "The question is 'What should we do about Haiti?'" Perot told the crowd, which shouted back all sorts of answers. Several people urged sending in U.N. troops. "See," Perot told the reporters, "let's be interesting, see, they have the answer." And the crowd, feeling that Perot was quite literally giving it a voice, roared.

Only connect: There is a powerful bond with his st

Virtually all of Perot's supporters use the word straightforward to distinguish their man from the other candidates. Bush, many of them feel, is politically evasive, denying the recession ("Everyone blames Bush for the recession, and that's unfair," Jay Leno said recently, "I even in the country when it happened") and responding to L.A. riots with a quick tour of slums that one aide was in the Washington Post as having called "a ghetto du jour." Although it's unfair, Clinton has come to be seen personally evasive—about the draft, about marijuana, issue of marital infidelity, which he will discuss only w references to "problems" and the fact that he's "not p Perot, his supporters insist, does not evade. "I'm so ex because he seems so honest. He has no reason to lie to already got his billions," said Sandra Walters, a receipt from Jacksonville who had traveled in a caravan down Orlando for the Perot rally. "What people are looking someone to give them an honest answer," said John P Vietnam veteran who voted for Bush in 1968. "Perot what he thinks."

So far, most Perot supporters are not bothered by t revelations that he asked his father to arrange an early discharge from the Navy because it was a "Godless organization" but later explained that he wanted to n because the military was too bureaucratic. Then, in a Newsweek interview, he said it was because a superior had asked him to behave unethically. After all, they Korean War was over in 1955, when Perot began to a discharge. He wasn't, they say, merely trying to stay out of a war—to have his hide—as they believe Clinton was when he evaded the draft by joining the ROTC. "He wasn't trying to avoid going to war or to escape from personal danger," said Jonathan Corder, a former graduate student who is unemployed and was wearing a cross to cross T-shirt.

Nor do many Perot supporters seem fazed by his attempt to use political influence to pressure the Federal Aviation Administration to build the mammoth Fort Worth airport that is surrounded by the land his family owns. To them, his various deals and projects merely testify to his ability to get things done. "He's a businessman," Sandra Walters explained somewhat impatiently. "Businessmen are going to do what it takes, without being a crook, to get the job done."

Convinced that he is right, Perot rarely apologizes, retreats, or backs down. This, as has been said, may make him a dictatorial leader, but it is also the source of his charisma. Unlike the Democrats who have tried to downplay their initial opposition to the Gulf War, Perot has remained unapologetically opposed to that adventure. Not only that, but he portrays his opposition as a patriotic gesture, belittling Bush and skillfully invoking the old wimp issue, for having committed troops unnecessarily. "I will not go to war to prove my manhood at the expense of the young people in our country," he told the crowd, adding a little later, "We want to be strong as a horse as far as anybody touching us. If and when we have to respond, we want to be able to respond. But to just try to do up an occasional Super Bowl with smart bombs going down straight like we saw on cable news, forget it."

He was similarly unapologetic about the view, expressed in Barbara Walters, that he wouldn't want avowed homosexuals in his Cabinet. But, as he cannily explained it to the crowd in Orlando, this was out of concern for the abuse in which homosexuals would be subjected by homophobes during confirmation. "The Clarence Thomas Anita Hill hearings went through my head," he said. "The hearings of John Tower for Secretary of Defense went through my head. And I realized if we ever did anything like that, the people over there at the confirmation process would destroy that person forever, and it would be a huge point of controversy in a government where we all need to work. That's the reason I said it." A person's sexual orientation, he said, is not an issue for him: "I have never gotten involved and never asked a prospective employee in my life whether or not they were homosexual. . . . Whereas if I had wanted to know, I would have asked."

Perot's rhetorical style, unabashed patriotism, net worth and private jets and business background have together led many people to assume that he's a staunch conservative. And he does have right-wing supporters, such as the supply-side economist Jude Wanniski. But while Perot hasn't worked out all his positions, and while he has contradicted himself over the years on issues like raising taxes, he does (contrary to the popular impression) have positions. And many of those positions are classically liberal. To start with, he's in favor of a woman's right to choose abortion and has been quoted favoring certain types of gun control and limits on entitlements for those who can pay their own way—issues that even many Democrats are afraid to tackle.

And while Perot may not have issued the sort of multiple-point white-paper policy statements that Clinton's staff likes to crank out, he has made comments that indicate he has firm views on important topics—many of which are similar to Jerry Brown's. Perot believes in cutting the defense budget substantially by eliminating the virtually free military protection America provides Japan and Germany. He wants to increase funding for education. He believes in a national industrial strategy that would use, among other things, occasional governmental subsidies to promote industries like consumer electronics and products like high-definition television. He also believes in certain forms of protectionism to prevent American corporations from relocating factories to Mexico. He's opposed to junk bonds, leveraged buy-outs, hostile takeovers, and the Reaganomic policies that allowed the rich to amass so much more of the national wealth in the past twelve years. "I'm a Democrat, and at least as of now I'll support the Democratic nominee," says Rohatyn, who nonetheless thinks Perot might not make such a terrible president. "Ross would be a gamble but a gamble worth taking if the main parties can't convince the voters they might to be elected. It's interesting. I think it could work."

THE CONVENTIONAL WISDOM THESE DAYS IS THAT Perot is going to self-destruct: his act will wear thin, people will tire of him just as they did of Brown and Pat Buchanan and Paul Tsongas. That may be true. The polls after last week's California primary showed his negative ratings rising. If Perot wants to sustain his all-but-declared candidacy, he will have to avoid the mistakes George Bush made in the primaries in 1980, when, after a surprisingly good showing that indicated he had got the attention of voters, he failed to address the issues and sank to defeat.

But the current wisdom on Perot may also simply represent wishful thinking on the part of the major parties and the established media. The hostility toward Perot on the part of so many Washington journalists is amazingly vehement, considering the reasonableness of many of Perot's ideas and the paralysis of government. They seem to feel almost personally threatened. But after all, for years their persistent complaint has been that the primary process is degenerating, that the photo-op campaign hop is meaningless, and that politicians spend years running for president and are scandalously beholden to the interest groups that fund them. Since Perot promises to change all that, he is, for the media priests who hate him, the fulfillment of the old Chinese curse "May your fondest wish come true."

Perot's candidacy promises to be different from that of any other independent. His support, for one thing, is much more broadly based. Former Carter adviser Hamilton Jordan and former Reagan adviser Ed Rollins will help build on the bipartisan coalition that is forming around him and manage the grassroots revolt he has inspired. Which, at the moment, is nothing short of astonishing.

"Was this one of those slick political events where you pay a thousand bucks to get your picture taken with the man?" Perot asked the crowd in Orlando as the rally was drawing to a close.

"No!"

"Was it phony?"

"No!"

"Was it real?"

"Yes!"

"Why did I bring it up? We've got to keep it real till November. Right?"

The audience erupted. For while the persona Perot projects may or may not be real, the desperate yearning for salvation is

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
UPON DEPARTURE

Andrews Air Force Base, Maryland

7:50 A.M. EDT

THE PRESIDENT: Well, today I travel to Rio de Janeiro to join our 100 heads of state at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development. Informally, the Rio meeting has been called the Earth Summit. But I want to focus for just a minute on the official name. I think it's critical that we take both those words -- environment and development -- equally seriously, and we do.

On the environment, America's record is second to none. No other nation has done more, more rapidly -- to clean up the water, the air, or preserve public land. No other nation has done more to advance the state of technology that promises cleaner growth.

We are proposing to double forest assistance. No other nation has put in place stricter standards to curb pollution in the future. We've done a great deal, and we are determined to do more.

But let me say up front: I am determined to protect the environment, and I'm also determined to protect the American taxpayer. The day of the open checkbook is over. I will go to Rio with a series of sound proposals designed to foster both environmental protection and economic growth. And I'll sign a climate convention that calls for sound action -- like increased energy efficiency and cleaner air.

And I'll offer technology cooperation, because I believe American technology can help clean up the world's environment. And I'll propose to share U.S. science, the most advanced in the world, to increase understanding of these complex issues. And I'll bring my Forests for the Future Initiative -- the most concrete and effective plan for dealing with the pressing problems of deforestation of all those that have been proposed at Rio.

And, finally, I go to Rio with a firm conviction: Environmental protection and a growing economy are inseparable. No matter what some people may want to pretend, they are inseparable. It is counterproductive to promote one at the expense of the other.

For the past half-century, the United States has been a great engine of global economic growth. And it's going to stay that way. Every American knows what that means for us. What many may not know is that the world also has a stake in a strong American economy. Right now, one-half of the developing countries' exports of manufactured goods to all industrialized nations are sold -- yes -- in the United States of America. And a weak economy in this country would harm workers in other nations and cut their export earnings to a trickle. Nations struggling to meet the most elemental needs of their people can spare little to protect the environment.

Many governments and many individuals from the U.S. and other nations have pressed us to sign a treaty on what's called "biodiversity." And I don't expect that pressure to let up when I reach Rio. The treaty's intent is noble -- to ensure protection of natural habitat for the world's plants and animal life.

The U.S. has better protection for species and habitat than any nation on Earth. And no one disagrees with the goal of the treaty, but the truth is, it contains provisions that have nothing -- nothing to do with biodiversity.

Take just one example. The private sector is proving it can help generate solutions to our environmental problem. And the treaty includes provisions that discourage technological innovation, treats them as common property though they are developed at great cost by private companies and American workers. We know what will happen: Remove incentives and we'll see fewer of the technological advances that help us protect our planet.

My Forests for the Future Initiative will offer real assistance -- real assistance to protect habitat. A down payment of $150 million in new U.S. assistance toward the goal of doubling worldwide funding for forests. It invites developing countries to propose their best plans for forest conservation, and it encourages innovation like biotechnology that will help us protect biodiversity worldwide.

I cannot speak for actions other nations may take. But this I promise: I will stand up for American interests and the interests of a cleaner environment. And if the United States has to be the only nation to stand against the biodiversity treaty as now drawn, so be it. I believe deeply in protecting our common environment, and I will proudly present in Rio the U.S. record that is second to none anywhere in the world.

So thank you all very much; and off we go to Rio. And may God bless our great country. Thank you.

POOL REPORT #2

From the Airport to the Presidential Palace

June 11, 1992

The President and Mrs. Bush arrived at Tocumen International Airport at 11:30 a.m., and were greeted thereby Ambassador Deane Hinton and the Panamanian Chief of Protocol. Among those accompanying Bush were Skinner and General George Joulwan, Commander of the Panama-based U.S. Southern Command. The Presidential party flew on immediately in Marine One and a fleet of Southern Command helicopter to Paitilla International Airport, where President and Mrs. Endara awaited them on an elevated platform.

President Endara wore a blue business suit, while his wife wore a low-cut white cocktail dress, a sheer white jacket, and very high heels. President Bush's suit was gray; Mrs. Bush's dress was a very proper red with white green and yellow polka dots, and matching red handbag. As the Endara's strolled out to meet the Bushes, President Bush greeted his counterpart with a warm "How's it going?" The two couples stood in marked places on the platform. As a white-uniformed (but non-military) band placed national anthems.

The delegations from each of the countries filed past the presidents, and Bush greeted each of the Panamanians warmly. To Billy Ford he said, "Hello, Billy. How are you, my friend?" and introduced the official to Mrs. Bush as simply: "V.P." To an unidentified Panamanian Economic Minister, Bush offered words of praise, "Going well," he said. "I wish we could do as well."

The 12-minute motorcade route from the airport to the Presidential Palace was lined with thousands of well-wishers. Panamanians near the airport waved hands and handkerchiefs and the crowd grew steadily more dense and demonstrative as the convoy neared the site. Many along the route there waved American and Panamanian flags and some wore tee-shirts and carried signs proclaiming the "Encuentro de Amigos." Not all the onlookers were enthusiastic and some appeared no more than curious. But there was no sign whatsoever of opposition or protest. The motorcade route along Panama Bay including palm trees wrapped in red, white and blue bunting; one plaza included dancers and musicians in native costume and the hood of Bush's limousine was speckled with yellow chrysanthemums by the time it paused at the Palace door. The Palace is a three story Spanish-style structure built around a small courtyard open to the sky. Its ground-level fountain was populated by three white herons who seemed aloof to the Presidential parties as they rushed out of the heat upstairs into air-conditioned rooms upstairs. In a brief photo opportunity, Presidents Bush and Endara posed in formal yellow chairs in an all yellow ante room. Asked if he were troubled by security concerns, Bush said: "All I saw is a great warm feeling of friendship for our country, and I was very moved by it."

You heard the toasts and you'll get a transcript but you didn't see the ornate Salon los Tamarndos in which is was held. Bush and Endara sat side-by-side at a head table while white jacketed waiters poured champagne for perhaps 30 guests. The rooms cavernous 30-foot ceilings with crystal chandeliers allowed room for enormous murals on each of 4 walls depicting native Panamanian scenes. What was remarkable about the art work was that most of the women seemed to be nude but the men for some reason wore shorts.

Pool Report # 1 -- Air Force One to Panama

Trust you have the text of the departure ~~statement~~^{we're}. On board ~~was~~ Mrs. Bush, Scowcroft, Marlin, Aronson, Grady and Michael Deland, chairman of the White House Council on Environmental Quality. (Excuse the typing, it's a little bumpyyyyyy at the moment)

Bush popped back in sweats and stocking feet before we left Andrews. Grabbing Marlin by the shoulders, he told us: "Don't listen to anything he says about the president." Then he was gone.

Marlin, commenting on the Post story on Yugoslavia, said it was basically correct but added that there was no sign of any immediate action by the White House ~~and that there was no sign of any immediate action by the White House~~

On Panama, he said "Everything's the same" when he was asked if any changes had been made in the president's schedule there. Aronson made the same point when he came back about half way through the flight. Despite the demonstration and violence, he said 80 to 90 percent of the Panamanian people approve of the U.S. presence ~~and that they~~ and supported Operation Just Cause. "The fact that students demonstrate in Latin America against a U.S. president is an old story," he said, trying to downplay the protests. He said some of the demonstrations were probably instigated by Noriega supporters. He also said the violence and demonstrations are not representative of the Panamanians' views in general. Asked if the protests and the killing of the American indicates that Panama's democracy isn't working very well, Aronson said: "No one suggested that landing troops in Panama would turn it into Switzerland."

On the death of the American soldier, Aronson called it "a terrible thing." He suggested that the shooting and other violence directed at ~~the American military personnel in recent days may have been carried out by terrorists.~~

"If it was what it appears, it was some kind of terrorist act," he said of the shooting.

He said there was never any consideration "in any serious way" given to skipping the Panama stop.

"You can't allow terrorists to determine the schedule of the president," he said.

POOL REPORT-----6-11-92

PRESIDENT'S CONGRESSIONAL BREAKFAST, THE CABINET ROOM

President postponed his departure for Panama and Rio long enough to hold another meeting with congressmen pushing passage in vote June 11 on the BALANCED BUDGET. About 12 attended including ^{leaders} HH Pros of both parties.

In the group were at least three members who have not yet made up their minds how they will vote. Rep. Robin Tallon, D/, S. C., said after the breakfast that he might vote for the BB amendment to the Constitution today and then urge the legislature in his state to vote against it. This was in response to a plea being made to all the members by Rep. Joe Barton, R., Texas, who said such a vote today would let the question advance "to the people" so that they could work their will. He meant in the ratification process on the Constitutional amendment. a tactic the pros are using to get the BB passed in the House. Two-thirds vote required here today.

The President was asked at the breakfast who and why were the forces organized against the BB amendment. He was reminded that these included both leading business groups ^{such as the U. S. Chamber of Commerce} and health organizations. He said "we are not here to blame any one" but to convince ~~exp~~ members that we do not want to pass this debt ($4 trillion in national debt and $400 billion in deficits this year) on to our children.

Seated on the President's left was Rep. Charles Stenholm, D., Tex/, the leader of the movement to pass the BBA and the man who came very close to ^{passing it} ~~passing it~~ last year. He predicts the vote will be very close today.

The President said he thought the BBA would provide the much needed discipline for both Houses of Congress against greater spending of money we do not have, ~~xxxxxx~~

The President was then asked if "we" would be sending troops to the Balkan countries., namely Yugoslavia, etc., and he said that America must and would send humanitarian aid but added that the decision had not yet ~~xx~~ been made. But are not the people over there starving now? he was reminded. He said that the U. S. would send ~~xx~~ help but supplied no more details.

Lower press office has list of congressmen and officials present. Also, may later have transcript of what President said at breakfast. Members went outside to see him off and some came to stake out. Sarah McClendon, McClendon News Service.
