THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

DATE: July 20, 1992

TO: Phil Brady

FROM: ROSE ZAMARIA
Deputy Assistant to the President

The President has not seen. Cy called this morning to say he was going to be in town Wednesday and Thursday of this week and wants to ride back to Ohio with the President on Friday, if at all possible. Have not as yet relayed this to the President.

President George Bush
The White House
Washington, DC 20400

Dear Mr. President:

When I concluded my meeting with Ambassador Hills, July 10, I told her I would be again, and am now helping the Bush-Quayle campaign. I have had some meetings, made some calls, and talked to the staff. I also saw Bob Mosbacher and told him I would do whatever is needed or wanted of me.

I tell you this because I wanted Carla to know no matter what, I would support you. I must say the Ambassador, I think, did not understand why I was there. Not for myself, not to change policy, not to complain, but to help you and your campaign.

I brought with me Al Pace of Cleveland who lost his thirty million dollar auto stamping business because of Honda. Al was on Public Television and along with George Mathews, who has twelve foundries and he lost millions because of Toyota. We were not asking for help, but to tell Ambassador Hill our experiences. Hearing what is happening out here with the Japanese may help her in her decisions. With unemployment up and more layoffs coming, I've told you we need some "hope" for these workers. You know figures can be adjusted to what the person wants to make them, but the real figure is 7.8% unemployed.

Our mutual friend, Paul Brown, made a game plan and with all experience he made changes if the plan was not winning, he'd change the plan - I'm not saying the plan is not working or won't work but right now, it may need some adjustments.

Business and labor know what the Japanese tactics are doing to them. Al Pace in his working with Honda to buy a new punch press wanted to buy an American press for three and a half million. Honda said no, we want a Japanese press for ten million dollars. Honda doesn't want to buy American.

In the meeting I suggested she bring in Scott Whitlock of Honda and the three of us sit down and talk. Over the past year Congressmen have asked, but Honda would not accept a meeting.

I have talked to Carl Jackson and Bill Weese in Vice President Quayle's office. We used up the hour and they thought we had some points and they want to talk again. We have nothing planned for Ambassador Hill.

The plan will be working by 1995. I said if we don't get things going she won't be there in 1995 and will be looking to a new position - Carla said that's ok and I said it was not ok because if she's not in her job you will not be President and that's not fair to the American people. You are needed.

You may not like what you hear from me but I remember you saying if you have Cy Laughter as a friend you have a loyal friend. I'm not only telling you this as a friend, but as an American.

Please take another look at what is happening, you can not wait for 1995 business leaders, Congressmen, Senators, laborers and friends cannot all be wrong - Ambassador Hills has to listen to the Midwest and other regions instead of just Washington insiders.

Again I and others want to help you. Ambassador Hill was polite but I really don't think she understands what we are telling her.

Nothing was accomplished for you. Carla suggested she arrange for us to meet with Justice. I told her the Federal Trade Commission has already interview over twenty companies like ours who have been taken by Japanese firms - They believe they have a good case coming up, but we were not asking for help, we wanted to give help.

Thanks for arranging the meeting. I'll do what I can to help but Carla could make it a lot easier for all your helpers.

Sincerely,

CL/mo

c/c Carla Hills

I hope you know I'm trying to help you!

Volume 28, Number 115

This Week in Congress

After a break for the Democratic National Convention, lawmakers return to Washington this week facing a full legislative agenda.

The House will continue to work on fiscal 1993 spending bills, with a measure providing funds for the Interior Department on the floor and three others scheduled for consideration by the Appropriations Committee. House members will also consider measures to re-regulate the cable television industry and to place conditions on the continuation of normal trade status for China.

The Senate will work on a measure that would allow states to ban out-of-state refuse and will try to appoint conferees on a national energy strategy bill.

Party contests in Georgia tomorrow mark the resumption of the primary season. (See story, p. 2)

Appropriations

Interior. House members on Wednesday will take up a $12.7 billion fiscal 1993 spending bill to fund the activities of the Interior Department and the Agriculture Department's Forest Service.

Interior's budget would remain at its fiscal 1992 level of $6.2 billion, while the Forest Service would receive a $140 million boost to $2.5 billion.

The measure (HR 5503) also includes about $179 million for the National Endowment for the Arts, a frequent target of conservative members because of its past support of controversial art.

Labor-HHS. The House Appropriations Committee will consider a draft funding bill for the departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education. Only about one-fourth of the bill's $244 billion is discretionary spending and under the direct control of appropriators. The rest is for mandatory programs such as Medicare.

Commerce, Justice, State. A $22.7 billion draft measure to fund the departments of Commerce, Justice and State and the federal judiciary will also be taken up by the House Appropriations Committee.

Funds for the Justice Department and the federal judiciary account for nearly half of the measure's overall funding. Under the bill, the State Department would receive about $4 billion and the Commerce Department about $3 billion.

VA-HUD. The House Appropriations panel will dispatch its last regular fiscal 1993 spending bill when it completes work on a $65.9 billion draft bill for the departments of Veterans Affairs (VA) and Housing and Urban Development (HUD).

The measure provides $1.7 billion in funding for the space station Freedom, which is likely to be a budget-cutting target when the measure reaches the House floor.

Fiscal 1992 Supplemental. A draft fiscal 1992 supplemental spending bill that would provide funds to clean up military bases will be marked up by House appropriators tomorrow. The measure could make it to the floor by the end of the week.

The measure includes about $900 million for environmental restoration at the bases.

D.C. Spending. On Wednesday, the Senate District of Columbia Appropriations Subcommittee will mark up a fiscal 1993 spending bill for the city. The House approved its version of the bill (HR 5517) July 8. In allocating funds for fiscal 1993, the Senate Appropriations Committee approved $688 million in federal funds for the District government. The House measure provides $714 million.

Senate Floor Action

Municipal Waste. The Senate will take up legislation (S 2877) that would allow governors to ban certain out-of-state waste. The Senate is expected to debate the measure today, with a final vote likely tomorrow.

The provisions of the measure are included in another bill (S 976) that Presidential candidate Bill Clinton's strong showing at the Democratic National Convention last week is sure to hearten congressional Democrats, who will benefit at the polls if Clinton and vice presidential choice Tennessee Sen. Al Gore run a strong campaign.

Clinton's popularity reached a new high after the convention, which was marked by calls for a change in government. "People want change, but government is in the way," the Arkansas governor said during his acceptance speech. The Democratic nominee also had a message for President Bush: "If you won't use your power to help people, step aside — I will."

Political strategy was suddenly turned upside down on the last day of the convention because of independent candidate Ross Perot's startling July 16 decision to discontinue his campaign. The Texas billionaire's withdrawal sent both Clinton and Bush campaign aides scurrying to woo Perot supporters.

In one of the first polls taken after Perot's announcement, a CNN/Gallup poll gave Clinton 56 percent of the vote to 33 percent for Bush.

Clinton's strong showing was quite a reversal from just before the convention, when Clinton trailed both Bush and Perot.

Democratic lawmakers now return to Capitol Hill with renewed hopes that November will bring the first election of a Democratic president since Jimmy Carter left office in 1981. Most House members have never served under a Democratic president. Only 84 House Democrats seeking re-election this year were in office under Carter.

House Speaker Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., has promised an alliance with Clinton that Democrats have been unable to forge with Bush. "When he is elected president, we are going to see the country move forward with a legislative program that will have support in the Congress and leadership from the White House," he said. ■

Primary Poses Test for Gingrich

After a seven-week lull, the congressional primary season resumes tomorrow with elections in Georgia. With reapportionment adding a new 11th District and three retirements, the Peach State this year will elect at least four new members to the House.

Of the seven races featuring incumbents, one of the most interesting is in the 6th District, where Newt Gingrich, the minority whip and the only current Republican member of the Georgia congressional delegation, is facing a stiff primary challenge.

Gingrich barely won re-election in 1990 and is now being tested in the GOP primary by former state Rep. Herman Clark, an attorney.

Although Gingrich is better known and better financed, Clark has been able to capitalize on voter anger toward Congress, a fire that the incumbent himself helped fan. Clark has attacked Gingrich for voting for a congressional pay raise, for having overdrafts at the House bank and for various congressional perks. In April, Gingrich gave up a taxpayer-supported chauffeured car after criticism from Clark.

Gingrich's campaign has sought to portray the seven-term lawmaker as a leader striving to improve the federal government.

If Gingrich survives the primary challenge, he will probably have an easier race against the Democratic opponent in this conservative district. Democratic candidates include Tony Center and Gary Pelphrey, both attorneys, and stockbroker Ron Sifen.

2nd District. The district of Democrat Charles Hatcher was redrawn to include a majority of black voters, and he faces three black professionals in the Democratic primary. But Hatcher's biggest obstacle to keeping his seat may be his $19 overdrafts at the House bank.

Hatcher, who is white, is being challenged by state Sen. Sanford Bishop, former state Rep. Mary Young Cummings of Albany and Lonzy Edwards, a Macon lawyer and Baptist minister.

If Hatcher loses the primary, it will be an upset. He has never received less than 62 percent of the vote since being elected in 1980, and the black population, which makes up 44 percent of the district's registered voters, is expected to be splintered among the other candidates.

Jim Dudley, a doctor, and Dan Menefee, an insurance salesman, are the front-runners in the Republican primary, although the winner faces a uphill battle in this heavily Democratic district.

3rd District. David Worley, who came within 1,000 votes of unseating Gingrich in 1990 in the old 6th District, has another incumbent in his sights this year: Richard Ray.

Ray has had a more difficult campaign because redistricting left him with only about one-third of his old district.

Worley has tried to capitalize on the anti-Washington mood among voters, criticizing Ray for being one of the House's top travelers. Worley also has accused Ray of being hypocritical about franked mail, pointing out that while Ray voted to prohibit congressmen from sending mass mailings outside their current district, he has been sending mail to the voters in the new district.

For his part, Ray has attempted to portray Worley as a man "all-consumed with getting to Washington." Worley's flip-flop on the abortion issue — he now supports abortion rights after opposing them in 1990 — has also been a target of criticism by Ray.

State Sen. Mac Collins is the favorite in the Republican primary against Paul Broun, a doctor.

11th District. In the new 11th District, a black Democrat is likely to win the seat.

In a six-way Democratic primary race, state Sen. Eugene Walker and state Reps. Cynthia McKinney and Michael Thurmond are the front-runners.

Instead of using television spots, the three have traveled extensively within the district, which has a 60 percent black population.

Walker has an advantage in the race because his Senate seat represents about 20 percent of the new district's voters. He also has been endorsed by Gov. Zell Miller. But McKinney has made an issue of Walker's endorsements, saying he is part of Georgia's "good ol' boy" network.

Thurmond has steered clear of the Walker-McKinney clashes, and has instead tried to get his name and record known. Thurmond has emphasized his successful management of a tax bill in the state House that granted tax credits to those making less than $20,000 a year.

THIS WEEK from p. 1

would reauthorize the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act, the nation's main waste disposal law.

But concerned that S 976 could be stalled by disputes, Max Baucus, D-Mont., and Daniel R. Coats, R-Ind., introduced S 2877, which would allow governors to ban the waste if the ban does not breach existing contracts. States that import large amounts of waste would be allowed to freeze waste imports at their 1991 levels.

Energy Bill. Supporters of a national energy strategy bill (HR 776) will try again to break a logjam over disputed provisions in the measure. The Senate will vote on Wednesday to limit debate on the bill in an attempt to send the measure to conference.

Both the House and Senate have passed different versions of the bill, but conference work has been delayed because of House language that would make it easier for the government to build a waste dump in Nevada. There is also a dispute over a coal tax approved by the Senate Finance Committee that would be used to pay for miners' health benefits.

House Floor Action

China Trade. On Tuesday, the House will take up measures (H J Res 502, HR 5318) concerned with President Bush's decision to renew normal trade status for China.

Bush notified Congress in June that he planned to renew China's most-favored-nation (MFN) trade status for another year. The bill would disapprove the renewal. Both chambers must approve the measure to block MFN renewal, although the bill could be vetoed by the president.

The other bill (HR 5318) would require the Chinese government to improve its human rights record, trade policies and commitment to nuclear non-proliferation before MFN could be renewed.

Nuclear Waste. Also on Tuesday, House members will consider a measure (HR 2637) that would allow a nuclear waste facility in New Mexico to open.

The measure would require that before opening the facility, the Energy Department must test the site for its suitability to hold nuclear waste permanently. New Mexico would receive up to $40 million for accepting the waste.

Cable Television. Later in the week, the House will take up legislation (HR 4850) that would re-regulate the cable television industry. Introduced as a result of high cable rate increases, the measure would require that cable operators provide popular programming at reasonable prices.

The bill would also allow the Federal Communications Commission to mandate refunds to cable customers who filed complaints about cable rates being too high.

A floor fight is expected over an amendment that would give satellite distributors and other potential competitors to cable operators low-priced access to cable programming.

Bilingual Balloting. Legislation (HR 4312) that would require local communities to provide bilingual assistance to voters in areas where a large number of non-English-speaking people reside is also on the floor schedule.

Under the bill, provisions of the 1965 Voting Rights Act guaranteeing bilingual assistance during elections would be extended for 15 years. Under current law, the aid must be provided if non-English speakers make up at least 5 percent of the total population. The bill would expand these requirements to cover areas in which non-English speakers do not make up 5 percent, but number 10,000 or more.

Committee Action

Defense Budget. It will be a busy week for the Senate Armed Services Committee and its subcommittees, as committee members begin action on a fiscal 1993 defense authorization bill (S 2629).

Panel subcommittees will take their crack at the bill on Tuesday and Wednesday, with full committee consideration scheduled for Wednesday afternoon.

The fiscal 1993 budget resolution (H Con Res 287) set a $277.4 billion spending level for defense, but the House authorization bill (HR 5006) was about $7 billion under that amount. The Senate version is expected to come in somewhere between the amount in the budget resolution and the funding approved by the House.

Veterans' Drugs. The Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee on Thursday will take another stab at legislation (S 2575) that would revise the current pay schedule for nurses employed in the Veterans Health Administration.

The panel started work on the measure June 25, but got held up over an amendment that would allow the Veterans Affairs Department to buy drugs more cheaply than Medicaid customers.

Veterans' Survivors. Survivors of veterans who died from service-related causes would receive an increased monthly payment under a bill (HR 5008) the House Veterans Affairs Committee will consider on Thursday.

The survivors would receive a base amount of $750 a month. The current payment is $636 a month. The amount paid for dependents would also increase, from $71 to $100 a month per child.

D.C. Crime. A bill (HR 5520) to authorize an additional federal contribution of $30.8 million for efforts by the District of Columbia government to fight crime will be marked up Wednesday by the House District of Columbia Committee. The full House has already approved a fiscal 1993 appropriations bill (HR 5517) for the District that includes the $30.8 million. ■

Dear Godfrey:

Thanks so much for your thoughtful letter and the wonderful photo of you and Mom.

The house in Maine is making a steady recovery, but you're right, a lot of personal items were lost. Barbara and I are grateful to friends that have helped us to replace some of those precious mementos.

I'm happy, though not surprised, to hear that the reunion was a success. I wish I could have been there, but as always, time is the problem.

Barbara joins in sending best wishes to you and Margo.

Sincerely, Love from all

MEMORANDUM

TO: Jeb Bush
FROM: Rob Mosbacher
DATE: July 9, 1992
RE: Domestic Defense Corps

Thanks for visiting with me regarding the attached proposal. As I indicated, Jim Pinkerton at the campaign has been pushing a resurrection of the Civilian Conservation Corps (CCC).

Although I am more anxious to see something done than to argue over which of these two ideas is more appropriate, I would like to make two observations.

First, the CCC is not a new idea. It has positive and negative connotations for people and immediately puts off budget-types because of its potential costs. Second, the proposal I have attached is new and would be largely self-financing.

I believe the time to act is now and that some creative initiative aimed at addressing the problems facing our inner cities on a large scale is essential.

Thanks,
[Signature]

Bob Mosbacher

THE DOMESTIC DEFENSE CORPS

THE CONCEPT: To establish a new domestic defense program under the auspices of the military to help build character and instill values in low-income urban males and females, and to teach them the skills necessary to obtain meaningful employment. The Domestic Defense Corps would not be part of the regular military.

THE PROBLEM: The loss of hope and productivity among low-income, predominantly minority males, aged 12-30. Most either dropped out of school or completed school without adequate educational skills. They are unemployed, under-employed, or unemployable. Most have come from single-parent households and have few, if any, positive role models. They often lack confidence, self-esteem, discipline, or solid values. Their only independent means of income are part-time jobs, minimum wage jobs with little future, and/or crime. This group, more than any other in society, have resorted to a life of crime.

THE RATIONALE: This country will not realize its true economic potential until all segments of our society are playing a productive role. Today, there is a significant segment that is not only unproductive, but also living off law-abiding, tax-paying citizens. This nation can no longer afford either the economic or the social costs of this disconnected part of our population. We must consider bold, creative new initiatives.

THE PROPOSAL: Instruct the Secretary of Defense to begin organizing the Domestic Defense Corps. He should call upon a variety of military and non-military experts in education, training, character building, and positive reinforcement. The program must have the right mix of physical and mental challenges, discipline and rewards. The goal must be to build confidence, self-esteem, and a realistic prospect of meaningful employment. That employment may be in the regular military or the private sector. It should be tested in the top ten urban areas of the country and formally launched by January, 1993.

WHY THE MILITARY? After Desert Storm, the U. S. military once again enjoys a very good reputation with the public. The Persian Gulf War is the most recent evidence of the military's talent for training and motivating men of modest means and education. Now that the United States is reassessing its international role in general, and the military's role in particular, the opportunity exists for a fresh look at the challenges facing our country. Today, there is no greater threat facing our country than the growing violence and unrest in many of our major cities. The time has come for the military to help protect the peace at home, as well as abroad.

HOW WOULD IT WORK? There would be two levels of entry: one for those who enlisted in the program; and a second for those who were, in effect, drafted. Those drafted would consist of referrals to the program by Federal, state, or local authorities. The overwhelming majority would come from juvenile and adult courts as an alternative to prison, or other forms of punishment. Providing states and counties a positive alternative for first-time, non-violent offenders would not only free up prison space for the violent, hardened criminals, but also reduce recidivism among early offenders. The draftees would serve a minimum of two years, but have the opportunity to work their way up the ladder into the ranks of the enlisted.

Those who voluntarily enlist in the program would have higher rank and more privileges than those who were drafted. Both would live on military bases. The idea is not simply to get them out of the inner city, but to create a sense of family, or belonging. Therefore, the physical elements of the program must be challenging without being abusive, and difficult without being degrading. Athletic competition among various units could be extremely important. While the military has an abundance of experience when it comes to providing various job skills, many of the participants in this program will start several grades behind today's average volunteer recruit. Therefore, the most advanced methods and technology must be employed in bringing these people up to adequate levels of proficiency. That would include computer-based literacy training, as well as other methods.

WHO WILL PAY FOR IT? The costs would be paid by Federal, state and local governments. While the bill for enlistees would have to be paid by the Federal Government, most, if not all of the costs for draftees would be paid by contract between the referring entity and the Department of Defense. States and counties will spend in excess of $20,000 per year for an inmate. The Federal Government is entitled to that money for not only taking custody of the individual draftee, but also helping steer them away from a life of crime.

PRESIDENT BUSH'S ACCOMPLISHMENTS FOR THE OUTDOORS

- o CLEAN AIR: Proposed, signed, and began implementing the world's most protective and market-oriented clean air law that will cut acid rain emissions in half, improve urban air quality, reduce toxic pollutants by 90 percent, and help to protect the global ozone layer by completely phasing out CFCs by the end of 1995. Fostered agreements between industry and environmental groups to require cleaner-burning gasoline and improved visibility in Grand Canyon National Park.

- o AMERICA THE BEAUTIFUL: Launched a long-term campaign to expand and improve America's treasury of national parks, forests, and wildlife and recreation areas.

Since 1989, the President has doubled funding for parks, wildlife and outdoor recreation and has tripled funds to states under the Land and Water Conservation Fund. Twenty national park units and 57 wildlife refuges have been added or proposed in addition to the existing units. In total, over 1.5 million acres have been added. In addition, 2700 miles of rivers have been designated as wild and scenic and 6.4 million acres have been designated as wilderness. Also, under the Forest Service's America's Great Outdoors program, the Forest Service has reopened or upgraded campgrounds and picnic areas all across America that had previously been closed to the public and constructed or reconstructed over 5000 miles of trails.

- o TREE PLANTING: Proposed an ambitious reforestation program to plant one billion trees per year across America. In 1991, the first year of the initiative, over 25 million trees were planted or improved in urban areas. To support the rural element of this initiative, nearly $20 million will be spent in 1992 for projects cost-shared on private lands in support of tree planting and other stewardship projects. Over 20,000 individual stewardship plans have been developed for private landowners on 2.2 million acres of private forestland.

- o DOMESTIC FOREST CONSERVATION: Announced an ecological approach to the management of our National Forests and Grasslands. Through ecosystem management, an ecological approach will be used to achieve multiple-use management objectives to sustain diverse, healthy, and productive ecosystems. As an example, both the Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management have announced that clearcutting would be ended as a standard forest harvest practice.

- o FARM BILL: Signed the most environmentally-progressive farm bill ever -- the 1990 Farm Bill. It addresses wetlands protection, tree planting, pesticide use, and water quality. The President supports full funding for a voluntary "wetlands reserve" of up to one million acres established by the bill.

- o WETLANDS: Increased funds for research, protection and enhancement of wetlands from $295 million in 1989 to $600 million in 1992. Requested $812 million for FY 1993. Began purchase of lands to implement the U.S.-Canada Waterfowl Management Plan and expanded the Everglades National Park by 106,000 acres.
- o COASTAL STEWARDSHIP: Established three new National Marine Sanctuaries, the marine equivalent of national parks, and for fiscal 1993 proposed a 46 percent increase for this program. Also, proposed creating the Nation's largest marine sanctuary, the Monterey Bay National Marine Sanctuary. The President believes that the Monterey Bay sanctuary will serve as an example of what Federal, State, and local governments can accomplish when working together.
- o WILDLIFE: Enhanced wildlife protection on federal lands and outlined a strategy to conserve biological diversity. Increased funding for Federal fisheries management by about $80 million since 1989. Requested full funding for Wallop-Breaux (Sport Fish Restoration) program to finance projects to acquire and restore fish habitat, to improve access for public use of lakes and rivers, and to conduct research into fisheries problems.
- o FY 1993 CONGRESSIONAL ACTION ON ADMINISTRATION PROPOSALS:
 - America the Beautiful: The House Appropriations Committee has reduced funding for America the Beautiful programs for FY 1993 (H.R. 5503) by about $250 million (14 percent) below amounts requested by the President. Specifically, the Committee has reduced:
 - Federal-State LWCF partnerships to support local outdoor recreation (-$32 million, 53 percent below the request);
 - The President's plan to plant one billion trees a year (-$65 million, 43 percent below the request);
 - Federal land acquisition (-$73 million, 24 percent below the request), including zero-funding for Headwaters Forest in California and Idaho recreational lands (Potlatch);
 - Targeted resource recovery at national parks facing acute natural resource problems ($10 million requested; no funding approved by the Committee);
 - Wetlands: The President's budget proposes $812 million, a 35 percent increase above last year, for a comprehensive program of wetlands acquisition, restoration, and research. But the House (H.R. 5487 and H.R. 5503) has reduced wetlands funding by $240 million, 30 percent below the requested level. For example, the House approved no funding for the Department of Agriculture's Wetlands Reserve Program to acquire voluntary easements from farmers to remove high-priority wetlands from production. The President had requested $160 million.

PRESIDENTIAL REMARKS FOR BOYS NATION VISIT

Monday, July 20, 1992

Rose Garden, 9:30 am

Thank you all, and welcome to the White House.

(Acknowledgments.)

First, let me congratulate all 96 of the outstanding young leaders here today representing 48 states. I understand that some of you've come from as far away as Anchorage, Alaska and as near as Falls Church. And Reagan Demas, you absolutely have to tell me what life is like in a place called Boring, Oregon.

But for two of you, the journey has taken you even further - from communist Vietnam. What a moving story Won Lee and Nhon Trong Nguyen [neYUN Dong NEWen] have to tell -- leaving country and culture behind to start anew in America. Your presence here today reminds all of us of America's meaning -- America's magic.

We all know that Boys Nation alumni often go on to do remarkable things. It's no secret that two of America's greatest emerging political leaders got their start in your organization. //That's right, one day you too might be a Dick Cheney, or a Lamar Alexander.//

I've held Boys Nation in high regard for many years. As Vice President -- about ten years ago, I greeted some of your predecessors in Boys Nation here in Washington. Many of you were only six or seven years old back then, but it's good to see that our younger generation continues to produce such model citizens.

You have reason to be proud of your accomplishments -- and I hope that you will continue to achieve great things for our country.

Right now, the country is focusing on some big questions -- how America can compete and win in the global economy. How we will educate our citizens for a new century. How we will open opportunity to all Americans -- preserve One Nation, Under God.

Big issues, every one. We've got to realize that the solution for every one of these challenges -- literally -- starts close to home. The question is this: Can we stop the assault on the American family -- can we strengthen the family, help parents pass on the moral code and character that sustains us as a nation.

So today, when you're focusing on college and career let me share a little advice -- from someone whose next experience with "the teens" won't come until I hold my 13th grandchild: What will matter years from now won't be what you achieve or how much you earn -- or even what honors are showered on you. What matters will be what kind of parent you've been -- what kind of children you've raised. It all comes down to family. And so today, I want to salute every Mom and Dad who isn't here - every parent back home bursting with pride -- because you are.

I also understand that while you're here in Washington, you'll be participating in your mock Congress.// No, I won't touch that one.// Just let me say I'd welcome dealing with legislators who could match your maturity.

But whether you end up in Congress or in front of the classroom or as leaders in business, your efforts and skills will be vital to our country's continued success. George Washington once challenged us to "raise a standard to which the wise and honest can repair." As a nation, our crusade is this: we must continue to defend our nation's liberty and interests, and we must continually seek solutions to our country's ills -- to refine this great democracy our forefathers created.

Let me urge you: Maintain your commitment to our country; find ways to serve your neighbors and solve the problems of your communities; continue to spread the word about the benefits of our great system of democratic capitalism; and keep your eye on the greatest prize of all: ensuring that our country remains on the cutting edge, that America continues to be the example the world holds in awe.

America is now, and will always be, the one nation that the world looks to for leadership. America is now and will always be a country whose purpose and values, whose global mission and economic success continues to be the success story of our time.

And it's no secret why: throughout our history, people like you have made it so.

America is now and will always be a rising nation. We will remain strong, we will succeed, as long as young people like yourselves continue to support and advance the values upon which our success is based.

Keep up the great work. Thank you, and God bless all of you.

AS ANCHORAGE, ALASKA AND AS NEAR AS FALLS CHURCH. AND REAGAN DEMAS, YOU ABSOLUTELY HAVE TO TELL ME WHAT LIFE IS LIKE IN A PLACE CALLED BORING, OREGON.

BUT FOR TWO OF YOU, THE JOURNEY HAS TAKEN YOU EVEN FURTHER -- FROM COMMUNIST VIETNAM. WHAT A MOVING STORY
WON LEE AND NHON TRONG NGUYEN [NEYUN DONG NEWEN] HAVE TO TELL -- LEAVING COUNTRY AND CULTURE BEHIND TO START
ANEW IN AMERICA. YOUR PRESENCE HERE TODAY REMINDS ALL OF US OF AMERICA'S MEANING -- AMERICA'S MAGIC.

WE ALL KNOW THAT BOYS NATION ALUMNI OFTEN GO ON TO DO REMARKABLE THINGS. IT'S NO SECRET THAT TWO OF AMERICA'S GREATEST EMERGING POLITICAL LEADERS GOT THEIR START IN YOUR ORGANIZATION. //THAT'S RIGHT, ONE DAY YOU TOO MIGHT BE A DICK CHENEY, OR A LAMAR ALEXANDER.//

I'VE HELD BOYS NATION IN HIGH REGARD FOR MANY YEARS. AS VICE PRESIDENT -- ABOUT TEN YEARS AGO, I GREETED SOME OF YOUR PREDECESSORS IN BOYS NATION HERE IN WASHINGTON.

MANY OF YOU WERE ONLY SIX OR SEVEN YEARS OLD BACK THEN, BUT IT'S GOOD TO SEE THAT OUR YOUNGER GENERATION CONTINUES TO PRODUCE SUCH MODEL CITIZENS. YOU HAVE REASON TO BE PROUD OF YOUR ACCOMPLISHMENTS -- AND I HOPE THAT YOU WILL CONTINUE TO ACHIEVE GREAT THINGS FOR OUR COUNTRY.

RIGHT NOW, THE COUNTRY IS FOCUSING ON SOME BIG QUESTIONS --HOW AMERICA CAN COMPETE AND WIN IN THE GLOBAL ECONOMY.

HOW WE WILL EDUCATE OUR CITIZENS FOR A NEW CENTURY. HOW WE WILL OPEN OPPORTUNITY TO ALL AMERICANS -- PRESERVE ONE NATION, UNDER GOD.

BIG ISSUES, EVERY ONE. WE'VE GOT TO REALIZE THAT THE SOLUTION FOR EVERY ONE OF THESE CHALLENGES -- LITERALLY -- STARTS CLOSE TO HOME.

THE QUESTION IS THIS: CAN WE STOP THE ASSAULT ON THE AMERICAN FAMILY -- CAN WE STRENGTHEN THE FAMILY, HELP PARENTS PASS ON THE MORAL CODE AND CHARACTER THAT SUSTAINS US AS A NATION?

SO TODAY, WHEN YOU'RE FOCUSING ON COLLEGE AND CAREER LET ME SHARE A LITTLE ADVICE -- FROM SOMEONE WHOSE NEXT EXPERIENCE WITH "THE TEENS" WON'T COME UNTIL I HOLD MY 13TH GRANDCHILD: WHAT WILL MATTER YEARS FROM NOW WON'T BE WHAT YOU ACHIEVE OR HOW MUCH YOU EARN -- OR EVEN WHAT HONORS ARE SHOWERED ON YOU.

WHAT MATTERS WILL BE WHAT KIND OF PARENT YOU'VE BEEN -- WHAT KIND OF CHILDREN YOU'VE RAISED. IT ALL COMES DOWN TO FAMILY. AND SO TODAY, I WANT TO SALUTE EVERY MOM AND DAD WHO ISN'T HERE -- EVERY PARENT BACK HOME BURSTING WITH PRIDE -- BECAUSE YOU ARE.

I ALSO UNDERSTAND THAT WHILE YOU'RE HERE IN WASHINGTON, YOU'LL BE PARTICIPATING IN YOUR MOCK CONGRESS.// No, I WON'T TOUCH THAT ONE.//

BUT WHETHER YOU END UP IN CONGRESS OR IN FRONT OF THE CLASSROOM OR AS LEADERS IN BUSINESS, YOUR EFFORTS AND SKILLS WILL BE VITAL TO OUR COUNTRY'S CONTINUED SUCCESS. GEORGE WASHINGTON ONCE CHALLENGED US TO "RAISE A STANDARD TO WHICH THE WISE AND HONEST CAN REPAIR." AS A NATION, OUR CRUSADE IS THIS: WE MUST CONTINUE TO DEFEND OUR NATION'S LIBERTY AND INTERESTS, AND WE MUST CONTINUALLY SEEK SOLUTIONS TO OUR COUNTRY'S ILLS -- TO REFINE THIS GREAT DEMOCRACY OUR FOREFATHERS CREATED.

LET ME URGE YOU: MAINTAIN YOUR COMMITMENT TO OUR COUNTRY; FIND WAYS TO SERVE YOUR NEIGHBORS AND SOLVE THE PROBLEMS OF YOUR COMMUNITIES; CONTINUE TO SPREAD THE WORD ABOUT THE BENEFITS OF OUR GREAT SYSTEM OF DEMOCRATIC CAPITALISM; AND KEEP YOUR EYE ON THE GREATEST PRIZE OF ALL: ENSURING THAT OUR COUNTRY REMAINS ON THE CUTTING EDGE, THAT AMERICA CONTINUES TO BE THE EXAMPLE THE WORLD HOLDS IN AWE.

AMERICA IS NOW, AND WILL ALWAYS BE, THE ONE NATION THAT THE WORLD LOOKS TO FOR LEADERSHIP. AMERICA IS NOW AND WILL ALWAYS BE A COUNTRY WHOSE PURPOSE AND VALUES, WHOSE GLOBAL MISSION AND ECONOMIC SUCCESS CONTINUES TO BE THE SUCCESS STORY OF OUR TIME.

AND IT'S NO SECRET WHY: THROUGHOUT OUR HISTORY, PEOPLE LIKE YOU HAVE MADE IT SO.

AMERICA IS NOW AND WILL ALWAYS BE A RISING NATION.

WE WILL REMAIN STRONG, WE WILL SUCCEED, AS LONG AS YOUNG PEOPLE LIKE YOURSELVES CONTINUE TO SUPPORT AND ADVANCE THE VALUES UPON WHICH OUR SUCCESS IS BASED.

KEEP UP THE GREAT WORK. THANK YOU, AND GOD BLESS
ALL OF YOU.

President George Bush
The White House
Washington, D.C.

Dear Mr. President:

3UR On behalf of Midshipman 1/c Robert Boehning and the whole Boehning family, I would like to thank you for the extraordinary courtesies shown Robert, his mother, and myself, in conjunction with the graduation exercises at the U.S. Naval Academy. Taking the time to visit with us afterwards, particularly in view of your time constraints, was an exceptional human touch. We truly appreciated it.

Nancy and I have voted for you every time you've been on the ballot in our area. And this has nothing to do with Nancy being first cousin to Hal DeMoss. We just identify with your views and stances. We were able to give you a little help with your 1988 election, but with Rob's illness we are understandably somewhat limited.

I have tried to help a bit with an article in the Dallas Morning News. I've taken the liberty of enclosing a photocopy. My main theme is professionalism and I decry amateurs trying to substitute themselves for professionals, whether it be medicine or politics. I don't mention anyone by name, but everyone who has read it asks me what I think of Mr. Perot. My answer is that he is an amateur!

Again, thank you for your kindness. And the best of luck in the coming campaign.

Sincerely,

Harold C. Boehning, M.D.

VIEWPOINTS

Politicians bearing brunt of anti-professional bias

HAROLD BOEHNING

There is an anti-professional bias in existence in this country, evidenced by a steady decline in esteem held by the citizenry. The "learned professions" are not spared and even are singled out for further denigration. My profession, medicine, maintains a relatively favorable position, but this is small solace when all are sliding down, much like being in the crow's nest of a sinking ship.

It is easy to blame social engineers with their schemes for big government and central planning, along with their sympathizers in the media — who exhibit a low estimate of the medical profession while holding their personal physicians in high esteem. The professions, however, have failed to sufficiently convince the populace of their primary mission — to serve the interests of their clients. This failing must be redressed, or the professions will undergo drastic changes in the years ahead.

Nowhere has the anti-professional bias manifested itself more than in politics. In fact, the term "professional politician" has become pejorative, and candidates are running for office claiming not to be politicians. This sentiment is further demonstrated by the popular move to limit terms. Such a move carried handily in a referendum during the recent Republican primary.

Before this idea gets completely out of hand, some consideration is warranted for a countervailing view. Our political system has worked pretty well over the past couple of centuries. While the system affects the present and our future, it is political and it is necessary for it to be so to work. The alternative would be a dictatorship. It calls to mind Winston Churchill's remark that "a democracy is the worst possible form of government, save for all the others."

If the system is political, then who better to work it than a professional politician. I wouldn't think anyone would want an amateur drawing up a tax law any more than he would want an amateur drawing up his will or an amateur taking out his brain tumor. There have been some notable events involving amateurs running for high office, and most have been somewhat disastrous.

Term limitation would result in a lot of greenhorns, if not rank amateurs, in office. The danger here resides with the derivative powers in the laws that are passed, especially at the federal level. Agencies write regulations based on these laws. While these regulations are published in the Federal Register and hearings are held, a lot of regulatory material is effected with little change, and some of it bears little resemblance to the laws from which it is derived.

To protect against such abuse requires an alert Congress, one which knows its intent and can ascertain that such intent is followed. A Congress of greenhorns is going to be easy prey for civil service bureaucrats, beholden to no constituency.

The idea of limiting terms is really an insult to the intelligence of the electorate, which easily can limit terms with any election. It can somewhat less easily limit terms between elections with the recall mechanism. When a politician shows exceptional ability, it would be a shame to turn him or her out because of a fixed time limit.

Should Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, be replaced with a novice? Texas has two Ph.D. economists in Congress in Sen. Phil Gramm and Rep. Dick Armey. Economic policy is not a quick fix, and it would not be well served by short terms for any of these gentlemen. The Texas delegation as a whole is quite able and should stand for approval on individual merit.

For those of us who invest in good government, it is disheartening to have an investment go down the drain when an officeholder leaves the field prematurely, whether by defeat or other reason. A constant turnover will increase the cost of getting people elected; this at a time when there are calls for decreasing the cost of elections. Incumbents, on the whole, cost less to elect than first-timers. Of course, many incumbents overstay their welcome, but who is to blame? The voters, dear one, the people who put them there.

Harold C. Boehning is past chairman of TEXPAC, the Texas Medical Association's political action committee. A former president of the Dallas County Medical Society, he is in the private practice of anesthesiology in Dallas.

ACTION

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRESIDENT

FROM: BRENT SCOWCROFT [Signature]
SUBJECT: Letter to Prime Minister Eugenia Charles of Dominica Concerning Banana Exports to Europe

Purpose

To reply to Prime Minister Charles' concerns expressed to you in your June 4, 1992, meeting with her and four other Eastern Caribbean leaders, and in a letter to you, about U.S. policy regarding tariffication of agricultural products in the Uruguay Round.

Background

Prime Minister Charles wrote to you to express her concern that our policy of pressing the European Community to agree to comprehensive tariffication of agricultural products in the Uruguay Round would, if successful, do grave damage to her country's banana exports and overall economy. She reiterated these concerns in the June 4, 1992, meeting with you, and in a subsequent meeting with USTR Carla Hills.

In our proposed reply, you tell her that you understand her concerns about the potential impact of a tariffication regime on her country. You note that it is imperative that the Europeans accept comprehensive tariffication, including bananas, if we are to get a successful Uruguay Round agreement that liberalizes trade. You add that we believe it is possible for the Europeans to move to a tariff regime and still maintain Dominica's access to their market at levels at least equal to present export levels. You reiterate our desire to be helpful and our offer to work with the Caribbean states to explore the specifics of a possible tariffication regime that protects their market access.

RECOMMENDATION

That you sign the letter at Tab A.

Dear Michael:

I am acknowledging the receipt of your July 9, 1992 letter.

At this time, I see no point in meeting. Actions have always spoken far louder than words. Rather than do what was best for the Republican Party, as I have done for over 34 years, you chose to "buck" it by running, despite the personal appeals of the Party's leadership. Your negative, misleading campaign smeared my family, my staff, my supporters, my years of dedicated public service and the Republican Party itself. You should have considered the very serious consequences of your actions beforehand. Based on this experience, I have little confidence in the credibility of your "words" and will continue to judge my opinions and availability for a future meeting on your actions.

Please be assured that I intend to continue my strong support for the Republican Party, especially the re-election of its outstanding leader and my friend, President George Bush. While I appeared to be the only one in the primary supporting the view that the election of more Republicans--at the expense of Democrats--will make a positive difference in improving our nation, I continue to believe that is still the case today.

BOWIE KUHN TO HEAD UP NEW SPORTS GROUP

WHICH WILL CONCENTRATE ON SPORTS CONSULTING AND FRANCHISE SALES

NORWALK, CT (June 29, 1992)--Former Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn and two other longtime sports executives announced formation of Sports Franchises, Inc. (SFI) today.

SFI, which will headquarter in Norwalk, CT and have satellite offices in Ponte Vedra Beach, FL and Scottsdale, AZ, will concentrate its efforts on sports franchise sales and a variety of consulting services to new and existing professional and amateur leagues, clubs and municipalities.

Kuhn, who held baseball's No. 1 executive position for nearly 16 years and presided over the sport's popularity surge of the 1970s and early 1980s, will serve as President of SFI.

His associates are Bob Richmond of Scottsdale, who also owns Baseball Opportunities which has concentrated on sales of minor league baseball franchises, and Bob Wirz of Norwalk, who served as baseball's Director of Information from 1974-85 and now operates Wirz & Associates, a sports public relations and marketing company.

Richmond and Wirz will serve as Executive Vice Presidents. Bruce Blanchard of Wilton, CT, whose career has been devoted primarily to sales and marketing positions in the corporate community, will work out of SFI's home office as Senior Vice President.

"SFI offers a wealth of experience and contacts in every aspect of the sports industry," said Kuhn. "We will represent franchise owners who wish to sell their clubs or raise new capital as well as prospective owners or municipalities seeking to enter the intricate world of sports.

"SFI will offer a broad range of consulting services both at home and internationally, varying from financial assessment and advice to executive search and sports marketing.

"We believe that if someone is looking for a 'central sports desk' which can provide advice on any business aspect of sports, we are that desk."

SFI is already working on a variety of franchise and consulting matters for both stadium and indoor arena sports.

BOWIE KUHN--In addition to serving as Commissioner of Baseball, Kuhn has practiced law in New York City for 25 years and presently heads his own consulting firm (The Kent Group) in Ponte Vedra Beach. His professional, public service and speaking activities are national and international in scope. He serves on the board of Jacksonville (FL) University, New York Medical College, Franklin & Marshall College and Northern Telecom, Ltd.

BOB RICHMOND--Divides time between Baseball Opportunities and serving as president of three professional baseball leagues--Arizona, Northwest and the new Hawaiian Winter League. He also is co-owner of the Midland Angels of the Class AA Texas League. Richmond has a law degree from the University of Oregon, is a member of the Oregon State Bar and has served on various National Association of Professional Baseball League committees.

BOB WIRZ--Started Wirz & Associates more than seven years ago and actively creates and services sports marketing programs for a variety of corporations in addition to handling publicity and public relations counseling for several sports media companies. Prior to starting his own firm he was chief spokesman for two baseball commissioners, Kuhn and Peter Ueberroth, and chaired numerous major league baseball public relations committees. His early career was spent in media work and as Public Relations Director for the Kansas City Royals.

BRUCE BLANCHARD--Is a 30-year executive with extensive experience in sales and marketing with Richardson-Vicks, a leading corporation in the worldwide consumer package goods industry. More recently, he organized a new company in the relocation services industry. Blanchard brings a lifetime of sports interest and participation along with his business acumen to the new corporation.

MEMORANDUM

DATE: July 11, 1992
FROM: Fred Steeper
RE: July U.S. National Results

THE PRESIDENT HAS SEEN 7/20

The general situation for the President's reelection campaign remains very difficult. The overall mood for change is extremely high with 79% saying the country is on the "wrong track." Perceptions of the economy, one of the major factors behind the voters' discontent, remain negative: 53% say the current economy is worse than a year ago; 82% think current economic conditions warrant the label "recession," and 59% do not believe there are any signs that we are coming out of the recession.

With this backdrop, it not surprising that 58% to 62% of the voters in the four most recent national surveys are voting for Clinton or Perot. The four national polls also show essentially a three-way tie.

The current three-way tie is the result of two trends. There has been a small, but definite, upward trend to Clinton's vote since mid-June and a corresponding downward trend to Perot's support. The President's vote has been essentially flat during this period. If the Democratic convention provides the expected plus for Clinton and the downward trend on Perot continues, Clinton will move into, at least, a first place tie with the President with Perot in third place, a few points behind the other two.

Our current national survey, taken July 6-8 after the announcement of the 7.8% unemployment rate and before the selection of Senator Gore as Clinton's runningmate, has Perot with 32%, the President with 31%, and Clinton with 29% among registered voters.

Basic Ratings of the Candidates

All three candidates are carrying high negatives with the President's being the highest. Only 33% approve of the way the President is handling his job, and 60% disapprove. The President also has a 40% favorable to 41% unfavorable rating. Both results are more negative compared to our May national survey.

Clinton's rating is 34% favorable to 38% unfavorable. His favorable rating is six points higher than May's while his unfavorable rating is about the same.

Perot's rating is 41% favorable to 31% unfavorable. Both his favorables and his unfavorables have increased about ten points since May.

Candidate Issue Preferences

The President continues to hold a wide lead over Perot and Clinton as the preferred candidate to handle national security issues. Over 55% of the voters have greater confidence in the President on foreign policy and military matters. However, national security issues are not uppermost in the voters' minds at this point in the campaign. It is essential for the President and his campaign to raise the salience of national security issues later in the campaign.

Perot leads Clinton and the President on handling the economy and the budget deficit with over 40% choosing him and less than 30% choosing the President or Clinton. Our focus groups have told us that Perot's business background is responsible for his leads on the economy and the deficit. As these are two of the top five issues with the voters, they are the issue basis for Perot's competitive position in the polls.

Perot also has a small lead on the President, 36% to 29%, as the best person to handle crime and drugs, one of the five most important issues for the voters. This Perot advantage must be changed and put on the President's side of the ledger.

Clinton does not have any issue leads as large as the President's on national security or Perot's on the economy and the budget deficit. He does, however, have moderate advantages on health care and education, the other two issues of the five that are the most important for the voters.

Candidate Personal Qualities

The voters see "crises judgment" as the President's chief personal asset. At this stage in the campaign, they are not putting as much weight on this perception as they may on election day. The Bush campaign needs tap into this asset of the President's in late October.

Ross Perot is the plurality choice on "getting things done" and "bringing needed changes in the country." However, the negative news stories on Perot in June have hurt Perot as evidenced by 35% seeing him as "scary" and 36% seeing him as "dangerous." Less than 30% attribute these negative qualities to the President or Clinton. A surprisingly large 51% say Perot is a "potential dictator."

Clinton cannot claim any positive quality as primarily his own. Voters tend to see him as the most "likeable" of the three candidates although not as strongly as they link crises judgment to the President and getting things done to Perot. Most voters do overwhelmingly attribute one quality to Clinton, 66% say "playboy" best describes him.

Presidential Initiatives and their Political Impact

Welfare reform and an expanded role for the military against drug traffickers and illegal aliens test very favorably for their possible impact on moving voters to the President. The CCC idea tests equally well. The three items were part of a list of ten, mostly hypothetical, Presidential actions that were presented to the voters. Over 40% of the voters report they would be "much more likely" to vote for the President if he did as described by each of the three items.

Pushing for welfare reform tops the list with 52% indicating they would be "much more likely" to vote for the President if he pushed "for greater personal responsibility in welfare such as requiring the able-bodied to find work and ending the practice of giving additional money to welfare recipients who have additional children while on welfare." Obviously, this result is a green light for the President, not only to continue waiving federal welfare rules, but also for the campaign to highlight his policy in a big way.

Clinton Vulnerabilities

Clinton's "Arkansas record" represents a significant vulnerability for him and more so than some of his contemporary issue positions. (Clinton's earlier "character problems" are not included in this test.) Fourteen statements of information about Clinton were presented to the voters to measure their possible impact in people's support of him. Eight of the fourteen pieces of information represent significant problems for Clinton once they are generally known. Six of the eight involve information about Arkansas under his incumbency.

The state government's record concerning poor and foster children and its record on the environment, especially the story on the pollution from the poultry industry, are potentially the most damaging for Clinton.

Perot Vulnerabilities

Perot's use of private investigators and his cavalier remarks about the U.S. Constitution represent significant vulnerabilities for him. Over 60% of the voters say the various items we tested within these two subjects would make them less likely to vote for him. His opposition to school prayer is also confirmed by the survey results as another significant vulnerability.

Other Findings

A substantial 62% majority of Americans believe that there still are U.S. soldiers being held prisoner from the Vietnam War. Moreover, 38% hold fast to the view that the U.S. government is "covering-up" this situation rather than doing all it can to rescue the soldiers they believe are held prisoner. A 40% plurality of these voters are voting for Perot to Clinton's 32% and the President's 21%.

One demonstration of the supremacy of domestic problems over foreign policy accomplishments in this election year are the voters' reactions to the nuclear arms agreement with Boris Yeltsin in June. Asked to rate the importance of this agreement in their consideration of whether or not to reelect the President, only 33% rate the agreement extremely or very important. Sixty-four percent rate it only somewhat or not very important.

CAMPAIGN/SECRETARY BAKER

Fernandes: President Bush took a break from the campaign trail and spent the day at Camp David. Though the President was out of the political spotlight, it was shining brightly on his travelling Secretary of State.

CBS's Randall Pinkston: Secretary Baker's mission to restart the Middle East peace talks is being overshadowed by rumors that he will soon undertake a domestic mission to help President Bush win reelection. In route to Tel Aviv, Baker wouldn't deny the talk. Neither did the President's campaign strategists.

(Fred Malek, "Meet the Press": "Whatever Jim Baker does in the future I know he'll do a great job either as Secretary of State or any other role. We're going to let the President answer that question.")

Insiders are predicting it's not a question of whether Baker will come aboard but when. The most likely scenario has Baker overseeing not only the campaign but the White House operation now headed by Sam Skinner. Out West with the President, Skinner seemed prepared to make room for Baker.

(Skinner, Friday: "We've got a very tough race here, and as we said, we'll move forward; we'll do whatever's necessary.")

Top Democrats concede that Baker at the helm would be a whole new campaign.

(James Carville, Clinton campaign adviser, "Meet the Press": "Certainly he's a most skilled practitioner of presidential politics, but I think that what people have sort of caught on to is that nothing is happening.")

That's a widely held view by voters, and to counter that, President Bush wants Congress to take up his economic growth package that he says has been ignored by Democrats.

(TV coverage of President Bush walking from Marine One Sunday.)

But even top Republicans doubt the President's plan will help much.

(Sen. Dole, "Face the Nation": "It's not going to have much of an impact this year. The President ought to go with his package. Let's have a vote on it and see what happens. If the Democrats won't let us pass it, then the President's got an issue.")

That's what the President is hoping -- that criticisms of his handling of the economy can be laid again back on the Congress and not on the Bush Administration. (CBS-6)

Utley says Secretary Baker was asked today about whether he'll give up that job to run President Bush's reelection campaign. He didn't say yes and he didn't say no. (NBC-2)

YOUNG VOTERS

CBS's Bruce Morton says young people are less likely to vote than the rest of the country. Only about half are registered compared with about three-quarters of the whole population. There is apathy, indifference and a feeling many share that the system is broken.

(unidentified young woman: "Once they get into office their opinions always change anyway. I mean, Bush is what, the education president? That's a crock of ____ [CBS edited out].")

ISRAEL/SECRETARY BAKER

CBS's Giselle Fernandez: A possible breakthrough towards peace tonight in the Middle East: Secretary Baker opened a new round of negotiations with Israel's prime minister Yitzhak Rabin just hours after his new cabinet agreed to freeze planned settlements in the West Bank.

CBS's Bob Simon reports it was Baker's tenth visit to Israel but what a difference from the last nine. He was seeing a new government, a new philosophy, new possibilities.

(Baker: "I think that there is now some new opportunities presented, and I hope that we will see those reflected in movement.")

Today, he arrived hours after the new cabinet declared it would build no new settlements and review all building contracts drawn up by its predecessor. With the new mood, the Bush Administration now has a chance of recapturing some of the Jewish votes it lost when relations took a dive under Shamir. The key to that would be the granting of at least part of the $10 billion worth of loan guarantees.

(Baker: "There are new possibilities I think as a consequence of the fact that there is a new government here.")

This could be Baker's last trip here for a while; Israeli officials got the clear impression that Baker's under heavy pressure to leave the State Department and manage the Bush campaign. Getting relations with Israel and the peace process back on course would be important steps for American diplomacy and Republican politics.

(CBS-Lead)

NBC's Garrick Utley: What a difference an election can make. We're not talking about the campaign here in the U.S. but rather the recent election in Israel which brought a new government to power -- a government more willing to negotiate with Israel's Arab neighbors. That's what diplomats call an opening, and that is why Secretary Baker arrived there today.

NBC's John Dancy says Baker welcomed today's announcement about halting settlements.

(Baker: "Let me say that it will make a difference certainly with respect to the views and position of the United States.")

In Washington a group of 193 congressmen sent President Bush a letter urging him to release the $10 billion in loan guarantees. What is still unknown is exactly which settlements will be frozen. Rabin makes a distinction between political settlements and those established to anchor Israeli security lines. Baker isn't sure exactly what that means, and until it's clear, the U.S. will not agree to the loan guarantees.

REPUBLICANS ARE FIGHTING BACK
ON "IRAQGate" SCANDAL

Rep. Rose was rudely surprised when he convened a recent hearing on U.S. aid to Saddam Hussein and found a full complement of Republicans lying in wait. Outnumbered 5 to 1, Rose was harassed by interruptions, objections and sarcastic asides from the moment he rapped the gavel.

Rose is accustomed to running hearings with only a token GOP presence. But now Republicans, acknowledging they have bungled their handling of the "IraqGate" scandal for much of the year, are fighting back.

At the hearing, Rep. Coleman waved a letter signed by Rose in August, 1989 -- only a year before Saddam Hussein invaded Kuwait -- urging the U.S. government to underwrite a General Motors assembly plant for heavy trucks in Iraq.

Rose said a member of his staff signed the letter without his knowledge, but the GOP had drawn blood -- the Iraqis may have wanted the plant to assemble military vehicles.

After two days of talks with Iraqi officials here, Ekeus left for Bahrain before returning to New York to brief the U.N. Security Council on his discussions.

Col. Douglas Englund of the U.S. Army, who heads the U.N. arms inspectors here, said "There was nothing I could characterize as progress."

Presidential Remarks: BUSH/QUAYLE HEADQUARTERS
July 20, 1992
9:00 P.M.

Thank you Bob (Teeter) ... and good evening everyone.

I want to thank you for tearing away from your usual Monday night routine ... to get together and talk a little bit about the future of our great country.

I know for most of you ... Monday night is just like every other night. You're in a campaign headquarters ... making phone calls ... and talking politics.

[[And those of you in opposition research ... I know you're usually home right now watching Murphy Brown.]]

As you know ... the Democrats gathered in Madison Square Garden last week. They met in the home arena of the New York Rangers ... who haven't won a hockey championship in over four decades.

But I told Rich Bond he couldn't make any cracks about how it's going to be even longer before their nominee sits in the White House.

I took the opportunity last week to get far away from a TV screen ... and do a little fishing.

But I did get a report about what went on in New York City.

I think we should all take great pride ... that the ideas we've been espousing for generations ... are now at least being paid lip service by the other party.

Do they mean what they say? Well ... don't ask me ... I'm a little biased.

Ask an old Democrat ... another George ... by the name of McGovern.

He called this year's Democratic ticket ... "a Trojan Horse."

He said ... and I quote ... "they're much more liberal underneath ... and they'll prove it when they're elected."

Now I know I've never said this on television. But George McGovern is an incredibly insightful man! ///

Now ... of course ... this election isn't going to be decided by what we say about the other side.

What matters ... is what we have to offer the American people.

My view of America is a little different than what you may have heard last week.

I see a nation facing difficult challenges ... but also awesome opportunities.

For four decades ... we sacrificed so that America and the world could be free. Because of our sacrifice ... our leadership ... dark corners of the globe now bask in the sunshine of freedom.

The question we're facing is really simple. Can we in the U.S. compete ... now that so many other nations are playing our game?

I believe we can. And as we compete ... we can enjoy prosperity like never before ... and extend opportunity to our friends and neighbors who frankly don't enjoy it today.

It's not going to be easy ... but here's what we need to do.

First ... we have to get our economy growing ... faster.

Despite what you might have heard in New York ... we are still the world's largest economy ... and our workers are more productive than the Japanese ... the Germans ... any other nation.

But today ... too many people have worked for a company for 20 years -- only to worry that the next mail run will bring a pink slip. Too many parents have saved to send kids to college ... only to find that graduates can't find a good job. We have to create incentives for the people who create jobs.

That means reducing the deficit ... by limiting the size of government. Cutting federal spending -- and it means reigning in unnecessary federal regulation that's throwing a wet blanket on our economic recovery.

The economy: That's priority number one. Number two is to return some moral principles to this nation.

The more I sit in this job ... the more I see how right Barbara is. What happens in the White House ... isn't anywhere near as important as what happens in your house.

So we're advancing programs to help keep our families strong and growing. We want to give parents the right to choose their children's schools -- whether those schools are public, private or religious. And we want to give people on welfare the incentive to get a good job ... and stick together.

Priority number three is to restore respect for law and order.

We didn't work to create peace in this world ... to see Americans hiding behind bolted doors. It's time to end the illegality ... and put a stop to the lawlessness. ///

These are the kinds of issues we're going to be talking about between now and election day. We've got specific ideas in each area ... that will allow us to achieve America's potential.

I know a lot of people are disillusioned by politics. But tell your neighbors to listen to what we have to say ... the ideas we present to meet the challenges we face.

Let me say a word about Ross Perot's announcement last week -- about the Perot phenomenon, and what it means for Americans who care about our country's future. // A vote was taken this spring and summer. No ballots were cast. No polls opened -- but a referendum took place nonetheless.

Nobody won this election -- but politics lost.

Politics lost because it has become increasingly irrelevant to too many Americans. Because the language of politics lacks any connection to the cares and concerns people talk about around their kitchen tables. Because politics has become a word that means the opposite of progress.

My message to people disillusioned with "politics as usual" -- to people fed up and frustrated -- is simply this: don't walk away from the system. Add your voice to ours. Together we can build a powerful force for change -- a force that can take America forward.

Now, some may say: "why haven't you done something already." The truth is ... we have made important advances ... in education, the environment, child care.

But it's also true that our ideas aren't popular everywhere in Washington. They threaten some entrenched interests. They require a change in mindset that some aren't willing to make.

So they balk at these changes ... and America is hurting because of it.

Change for the sake of change isn't in anyone's interest. The changes I seek are for the betterment of your pocketbook, your neighborhood and your nation. //

To give you just one example ... I've put a short-term plan to spur the economy before Congress. If they'd pass it ... we could add a half million new jobs by the end of the year. But it's not the old government spending programs ... so they set it aside.

Ask your friends if they are tired of that kind of inaction. If they want to get rid of the deadlock in Washington ... they can start by getting rid of some deadwood in Congress.

Give me a Republican Congress ... and we'll really change things. ///

Let me close with a message from the heart.

Whether you've been with me for every campaign I've ever run ... or if you're casting your first vote this year ... I want to say thanks for the help.

Because of your incredible work in the primaries ... 2 million more Republicans turned out than 1988 ... while Democratic turnout was 2 million fewer.

This is my last time around the campaign track. But I'm glad that you are beside me in the driver's seat.

It's not going to be easy. The American people want action. With your help ... we can give the American people the kind of answers, the kind of action, they are looking for.

Think about it. If we can tear down the Berlin Wall -- we can build a strong economy. If we can lift the iron curtain -- we can bring the curtain down on immorality and indifference. If we can help people walk free through the streets of Europe -- there's no reason we can't take back our streets here in America.

That's all I'll say for now. Now I'd like to hear what's on your mind.

BUSH TO ADD 'LITTLE SOMETHING' TO ECONOMIC PACKAGE, AIDE SAYS

President Bush will renew efforts to push his economic growth plan through Congress in coming weeks, relying mostly on proposals made almost six months ago in his State of the Union address, but adding "a little something to them," Robert Teeter said Sunday.

But even Sen. Dole seemed skeptical. "The President ought to go through with his package, let's have a vote on it and see what happens," Dole said Sunday on CBS's "Face the Nation." "If the Democrats won't pass it, then the President's got an issue. If we can pass it, we may have a little breakthrough. But it's not going to turn the economy around," Dole said.

Teeter, also appearing on "Face the Nation," declined to be specific about any additional Bush proposals. Bush's "main thrust is going to be to get those economic proposals passed that he was convinced in January, had the Democrats passed them, would have stimulated the economy by now," Teeter said.

Meanwhile, top officials in both parties Sunday continued to backpedal from earlier criticisms of Ross Perot. Frederic Malek on NBC's "Meet the Press," said he did not believe Perot had "contempt for the Constitution," a charge leveled last month by Vice President Quayle. "I think the important thing is what we feel about Ross Perot and his supporters," Malek said. "We welcome his supporters." (John Wagner, Washington Post, A6)

PRESIDENTIAL CONTENDERS VIE FOR CANDIDATE-OF-CHANGE LABEL

Aides to President Bush and Bill Clinton struggled to define the two presidential contenders as candidates for change, hoping the label would help them win the bonanza of middle class voters left adrift by the sudden withdrawal of Ross Perot.

"We... know where George Bush stands, and he stands for change," Fred Malek told NBC's "Meet the Press." "His change is through reform and restructured government. The only change these people are talking about at the Democratic Convention is more spending and bigger government."

Ed Rollins predicted Clinton, at least temporarily, would be the chief beneficiary of Perot's withdrawal. "I think in the short term Bill Clinton does, he's the candidate for change," Rollins said. "I do think if the President gets back in this race and obviously starts talking about a second-term agenda that matters to the American voters, he can get some of the disaffected Republicans back."

Rich Bond labeled Clinton "the failed governor of a small state." Bond said Clinton raised taxes and user fees 128 times and charged the Clinton-Gore ticket "will cooperate with the status quo, big-spending Congress out there and help wreck this country."

George Stephanopoulos, Clinton's communications manager, responded: "When the Republican attack machine rolls out 100 days before an election, you don't sit down. You answer it. They have no economic plan of their own, so they lie about Clinton's." (UPI)

BUSH CAMPAIGN OFFICIAL
SEES 'ROLE' FOR BUCHANAN

Fred Malek said Sunday that he expects Pat Buchanan to play "a prominent role" at the Republican National Convention next month. Malek said on CBS's "Face the Nation" that speakers still have not been selected, so it is unclear whether Buchanan will be given an opportunity to speak to the full convention.

"I think Pat Buchanan has strong convictions. He's expressed them well," Malek said. "I think he'll support the President, and if and when he does that... he'll play a prominent role at our convention."

Meanwhile, Robert Teeter said Sunday that Republicans will go to the voters with their own message of change in support of the President's re-election. High on the list will be a cut in federal spending to reduce the budget deficit and changes in welfare policy, Teeter said on "Face the Nation."

He said the GOP would also stress the need to "restore the kind of traditional American values that held the society together for 200 years and that have been weakened in the last 15, 20, 30 years in this country."

(Combined Dispatches, Washington Times, A4)

BAKER DECLINES TO RULE OUT POSSIBLE MOVE TO WHITE HOUSE

SHANNON AIRPORT, Ireland -- Secretary Baker, making his first public comment since a fishing trip with President Bush, fueled speculation Sunday that he would move to the White House to shore up Bush's flagging re-election effort. Baker refused to rule out the possibility that he might soon leave the State Department.

"The President and I talked about a whole lot of things on this (fishing) trip" Baker told reporters aboard his Air Force plane. "It would not be, I don't think, realistic to think that we did not discuss this election year, and indeed we did," he said.

(Reuter, Washington Post, A6)

Signs Of Baker Job Shift Grow

JERUSALEM -- Secretary Baker -- in Israel to jump-start Mideast peace talks -- fanned speculation Sunday that he might resign to do the same thing for President Bush's re-election campaign....

"I don't know whether Jim Baker is going to come into the campaign or the White House or not," Fred Malek told NBC's "Meet the Press." "All I can say is wherever he is, whether he's at the State Department, in the White House or at the campaign, he's going to do a superb job."

Mac Stipanovich, a Republican strategist, said: "I can't foresee a circumstance in which this would look bad.... It would only speak well of the President if he wants to ask his best friend, a man everybody has tremendous respect for, someone with proven management skills, superior judgement and towering stature. Jim Baker has the absolute trust of the President."

(Johanna Neuman, USA Today, 2A)

STEEL TOWN WELCOMES CLINTON, GORE

WEIRTON, W.Va. -- He was preaching to the converted and summoning up the ghosts of victories past, a potent combination in this blue-collar town, where prosperity is measured by the price of cold-rolled steel.

Prices are down, but Bill Clinton was riding high when his traveling road show pulled into Weirton Sunday to receive accolades and advice from the steelworkers who 32 years ago gave John F. Kennedy their blessing and sent him on to victory.

Before an enthusiastic crowd of about 3,000 people gathered inside and outside the Thomas E. Millsop Community Center, Clinton and Sen. Gore fielded easy questions on health care, the environment, AIDS and what Clinton described as the need to stop "drowning the middle class."

Signs emerged both in Pittsburgh and in Weirton that Clinton has noticed Republican stirrings and criticisms that he is just another "tax and spend" liberal Democrat in moderate's clothing: "It's the only word they know how to say," Clinton told reporters in Pittsburgh. "They don't have a record they can run on; they don't have a plan for America's future. So the last refuge of their political campaign is to say their opponents are too liberal." (Guy Gugliotta & Edward Walsh, Washington Post, A6)

Democratic Nominee Says GOP Attacks Show Bush With No Vision

WEIRTON, W.Va. -- Bill Clinton said Sunday that the new Republican attacks on him showed President Bush had nothing positive to offer the nation.

"It shows how impoverished they are," said Clinton. "They have nothing to say to America. Nothing to be for. No record to run on. No vision of the future."

Sen. Dole, appearing Sunday on CBS's "Face the Nation," criticized the Democratic ticket as exceptionally liberal. "He'll sign anything," Dole said of Clinton. "The liberal Democratic members of Congress were hidden during the convention... He didn't even want any of the liberal Democrats, but I'll bet he's not against anything they're going to do the next few weeks."

Dole called Gore, "as liberal as Ted Kennedy and George Mitchell, Sen. Dodd and the liberals in the Congress. He's right up there at the top." (Steven Komarow, AP)

Clinton, Gore Talk About Jobs, Economy As Bus Trip Rolls Through W.Va.

WHEELING, W.Va. -- Day Three of the Clinton-Gore "buscapade" found the Rhodes scholar and the senator's son -- Ivy leaguers both -- in hard hats watching giant ladles pour molten ore into a fire-belching furnace at Weirton Steel Corp.

If there's a thread stretching along the highways from Camden, N.J., across Pennsylvania and to West Virginia's panhandle, it is: us -- the Democrats, the regular, middle-class guys who want change -- vs. them -- the look-out-for-the-wealthy, special-interest Republicans who want the status quo.

"The regular guys and their families who play touch football and miniature golf have been failed by the government under Bush and Quayle," Sen. Gore said. "When the wealthy and powerful, those with special connections or influence need something, Bush and Quayle move into high gear. But the folks who live ordinary lives, work hard, scrimp and save, look after their kids, they can't get anything from the Bush and Quayle approach."

Speaking to a crowd of more than 2,000 people in Carlisle, Pa., on Saturday, Clinton said, "The crowd that's running Washington today has had 12 years to test their economic theory and it's failed. Their idea is to keep taxes low on the rich and the special interests, keep them high on the middle class, balloon the debt, get out of the way and all those people with the money will all of a sudden, miraculously make decisions that are good for us."

Clinton Hits 'Knee-Jerk' Liberal Label

WEIRTON, W.Va. -- Bill Clinton said Sunday that a Republican effort to smear him with the liberal label "shows how impoverished they are."

"They'll try to frighten you about us," Clinton said in Weirton. "They'll bring back every old buzz word they ever thought of to say about anybody running against them. They'll tell you we're too liberal and we're too young and we're too this and we're too that and we're too the other thing," he said.

Despite wildly cheering crowds at each stop so far, the 17-vehicle motorcade has been confronted with pro-life demonstrators throughout this swing through small-town America.

In a cable TV linkup from Wheeling, W.Va., to audiences in three cities, Clinton backed away from his earlier statement that he would pick pro-choice judges. "I have no intention of giving judges a litmus test," he said.

PEROT VOTE TILTS TO CLINTON
Democrat Leads Poll 56%-34%

Bill Clinton is enjoying the best post-convention polling bounce of any presidential candidate since 1968, when such measures first began.

Clinton's support doubled after last week's Democratic Convention and Ross Perot's exit -- from 28% to 56%, according to a USA Today/CNN/Gallup poll conducted Friday and Saturday.

Perot's departure played a significant role in the increase: 43% of Clinton backers had been leaning toward Perot. President Bush got only 34% of voters in the poll of 755 registered voters, down 1% from the previous poll, suggesting he got no Perot bump at all.

"The convention was a home run for Clinton," concedes Republican pollster Glen Bolger. "It gave him the credibility he was looking for."

DEMOCRATIC TICKET RIDING RATINGS SUCCESS

Bill Clinton, faced with voter doubts about his presidential mettle, effectively used last week's Democratic convention to erase many of them.

A USA Today/CNN/Gallup Poll, taken as Clinton hit the road riding a wave of post-convention adulation, finds him gaining in most places where he lagged. He's solidly ahead in all regions of the country, even the South, where President Bush was strongest. He's picking up a majority of the crucial independent vote, and winning back white male voters. He seems to have brought home most Democrats who have been voting Republican in five of the past six presidential elections. Nine of 10 Democrats support Clinton.

Republican pollster Neil Newhouse asserts the poll measures Clinton's "high water mark," as the now-two-man race unfolds before a still highly volatile electorate. "There's only one direction for him to go now, and that's down. But I think you can make the case that George Bush is the underdog in this race," Newhouse said.

Indeed, Republican insiders say Bush needs a huge bump from his convention in August if he expects to be in the ballgame on Labor Day.

"George Bush is now a bitter taste in many voters' mouths," says Democratic pollster Alan Secrest. "They know him well, and it will be a lot more difficult to resuscitate him than it was in 1988."

ANALYST: TRADERS DON'T TRUST CLINTON

Bill Clinton may be about as middle-of-the-road as a Democratic presidential nominee could be -- especially on issues related to business and finance. But Wall Street still is pulling for George Bush.

"(Wall Street traders) don't think he's anything horrible, but they just don't trust him," Mark Melcher, political analyst for Prudential Securities, says of Clinton.

And despite his moderate cast, Clinton also talked last week about enhanced health care, which to some smacks of national health insurance, and hinted at using government to help create jobs. All that "sounds like no budget deficit reduction," says Robert Brusca, economist at Nikko Securities. "With Bush, you at least know there won't be any great new domestic spending. But with Clinton, there are concerns," Brusca adds. (James Kim, USA Today, 1B)

BUSH TASK FORCE IN '81 TARGETED OIL-TANKER RULE AFFECTING FIRM THAT WAS AN INVESTMENT PARTNER

In August 1981, Vice President Bush unveiled a hit list of federal regulations that his Task Force on Regulatory Relief had targeted for review. Among them: a pending Coast Guard measure that would outlaw single-hull oil tankers.

What Bush didn't say was that the oil-barge company leading the fight against the regulation was also one of his investment partners at the time -- Hollywood Marine Inc. of Houston. Together with James Baker and Robert Mosbacher, Bush had become a partner in a barge venture managed by Hollywood Marine.

The regulation would have been devastating to Hollywood Marine, ultimately sending nearly half of its barge fleet to the scrap heap -- including four barges in which Mosbacher held an interest. Under pressure from the White House, the Coast Guard withdrew the regulation, which would have required all oil-tanker barges to have double hulls.

PUBLIC HOUSING ILLS LEAD TO QUESTIONS ABOUT HUD

PHILADELPHIA -- When federal housing officials took over day-to-day control of the Philadelphia Housing Authority in May after 13 years of documenting its stunning mismanagement, nearly everyone here welcomed the move.

The question on the minds of many people here and in Congress is why HUD, which provides almost two-thirds of the agency's annual budget of $150 million, did not take this step years ago.

The takeover, only the eighth in the Housing Department's history, comes as questions are being raised about its supervision of the government's $6.2 billion-a-year public housing program and, in particular, its monitoring of 21 large urban housing agencies, including Philadelphia's, that it considers troubled.

RU-486 BATTLE MOVES TOWARD CONGRESS

The fight to overturn a U.S. ban on the French abortion pill RU-486 continues Monday, with a challenge planned in Congress. Rep. Schroeder says she will introduce a bill Monday that would allow women to bring the abortion pills into the country for personal use.

The federal government allows cancer and AIDS patients to bring small quantities of some unapproved drugs into the country for their own use, and women should be able to use the same exemption, Schroeder says.

"I find it shocking because it's abortion, and we have such a political court, they say you can't bring it in for your personal use," she said.

SURVEY: CRIME WORST IN WEST

The West has the most crime, the Northeast the least, a new survey says. The Justice Department's National Crime Victimization Survey, released Sunday, found 29% of Western households were crime victims last year, compared with Northeast, 19%; Midwest, 23%; South, 24%. Nationwide, 24% of households reported a crime in 1991, unchanged from a 1990 survey.

Differences in East and West are most dramatic in assault, theft, burglary. Rape, robbery and car theft rates are similar. Criminologists attribute regional differences to several factors, including a shift in population to the South and West, where residents tend to be transient or newer to an area.

REPORTS: 'MURPHY BROWN; TO SEEK REVENGE AGAINST QUAYLE

NEW YORK -- Coming this fall to a television screen near you: Dan Quayle vs. Murphy Brown, Part II. The fictional TV journalist will respond to the Vice President's criticism of her decision to bear a child out of wedlock in the season premiere of her CBS-TV show, two newspapers reported Monday.

Diane English, the show's creator, told the New York Times that Quayle will "absolutely be mentioned by name." But no one connected with "Murphy Brown" would tell the Times or the Miami Herald what the show would say about Quayle.

David Beckwith told the Times the Vice President had not attacked single mothers. "The genius of the Hollywood elite," Beckwith said, "is to twist what he said to try to get people to believe their version of what he said."

BAKER SAYS ISRAEL RAISES PEACE HOPES

JERUSALEM -- Secretary Baker, launching an effort to restart the Middle East peace process, said Sunday night that the election of Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin has opened new possibilities for progress in Arab-Israeli peace talks and resolving the Bush Administration's dispute with Israel over $10 billion in U.S. loan guarantees.

Before Baker arrived in Israel, Rabin's cabinet took a step toward braking the expansion of settlements by declaring that decisions made by the former government but not yet implemented would have to be approved by the new government.

Baker hinted that Rabin's reversal of Yitzhak Shamir's policy of filling the territories with Jewish settlers will prompt President Bush to support the loan guarantees for absorbing immigrants from the former Soviet Union. Baker also said Rabin's promise to accelerate negotiations on limited self-government for the 1.7 million Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza should encourage the Arab side in the peace talks to be more forthcoming.

But, while his tone was more optimistic than at any time since the peace talks began last October, Baker cautioned that Rabin's promises to reverse many hard-line Israeli policies does not mean the stalled negotiations will suddenly pick up speed. He made clear that Washington is not ready to give Israel a green light on the loan guarantees until Rabin spells out more clearly his views on the future of Jewish settlements.

Baker Welcomes New Israeli Peace Bid

JERUSALEM -- Secretary Baker said Sunday he would tell Arab leaders Israel's new government was serious about limiting Jewish settlement in occupied lands.

Baker met Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin for 90 minutes just hours after the Israeli Cabinet suspended all new Jewish settlements pending further study. Baker said, "I am quite confident that we will be able to make the point with the Arab countries and Arab representatives that I will be sitting down with a government that is serious about limiting this question with respect to settlement activity."

Sunday's decision puts on hold at least 10 new Jewish settlements which had been planned over a period of 10 years. Those decisions will now be put to a cabinet review.

In Washington, a bipartisan group of 193 congressmen sent Bush a letter vowing to help win passage for a loan guarantee package if Bush proposed it. "We urge you to submit such a package expeditiously and to support its enactment this session of Congress," it said.

It remains to be seen if Rabin can bridge the gap between his own view on settlement and the American demands for a total freeze. Baker hinted to reporters on his plane from Washington that the U.S. position may be flexible.

Baker Says Arabs Should Yield Next

JERUSALEM -- Secretary Baker said Sunday that now that the Israelis had a new government that was signaling a willingness to compromise, it was time for the Arabs to do the same.

Baker said on his way to Israel that the loan guarantee proposal that the Administration made to the Shamir government "remained on the table -- certainly it does." But in a joint news conference with Rabin after their first round of talks Sunday night, Baker said Rabin's new settlement policies "will make a difference with respect to the views and position of the United States, because as you know we have had as our firm policy position for many years the view that settlements do not promote peace."

Baker seemed to be laying the groundwork with the Arabs for their accepting a deal between the U.S. and Israel that would allow Israel to engage in some very limited settlement activity. American officials will probably tell the Arabs that this is something they should accept, that it is much better than they ever would have gotten from Shamir and it comes on top of the fact that Rabin is clearly interested in making progress in the peace talks in ways Shamir was not.

As much as Bush Administration officials want to give the loan guarantees to Rabin, though, the same officials note they cannot simply drop all of their conditions -- otherwise the Palestinians would probably bolt from the negotiating table.

ISRAEL'S RABIN SAYS ARABS REFUSE HIS PEACE GESTURE

JERUSALEM -- Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin said after his first meeting with Secretary Baker that he was discouraged Israel's Arab enemies had refused his offer to exchange visits in search of Middle East peace.

"I believe that the best way is to have a meeting between the leaders of the countries that are in a state of war to bring an end to it," Rabin said. "The fact that they have refused... is not an encouraging sign."

ADMINISTRATION PREFERRED 'IRAQ PAPERS' UNDER WRAPS

On June 12 of last year, Commerce Secretary Robert Mosbacher met with key aides to confront the contents of a three-ring binder that threatened to tarnish the Bush Administration.

As Commerce officials gathered that day, on the table before them was the binder filled with potentially damaging documents: presidential orders mandating favorable treatment for Iraq, interagency records raising alarms over technology sales to Baghdad, a memo invoking the name of the White House in overruling Defense Department objections to the export of computers to an Iraqi military facility.

The following account shows how the Administration systematically sought to keep some of its most sensitive Iraq papers under wraps, while trying to avoid a full-blown confrontation with Congress.

REPUBLICANS ARE FIGHTING BACK
ON "IRAQGATE" SCANDAL

Rep. Rose was rudely surprised when he convened a recent hearing on U.S. aid to Saddam Hussein and found a full complement of Republicans lying in wait. Outnumbered 5 to 1, Rose was harassed by interruptions, objections and sarcastic asides from the moment he rapped the gavel.

Rose is accustomed to running hearings with only a token GOP presence. But now Republicans, acknowledging they have bungled their handling of the "Iraqgate" scandal for much of the year, are fighting back.

At the hearing, Rep. Coleman waved a letter signed by Rose in August, 1989 -- only a year before Saddam Hussein invaded Kuwait -- urging the U.S. government to underwrite a General Motors assembly plant for heavy trucks in Iraq.

Rose said a member of his staff signed the letter without his knowledge, but the GOP had drawn blood -- the Iraqis may have wanted the plant to assemble military vehicles.

IRAQ SAYS IT WILL LET 'NEUTRALS' SEARCH FOR WEAPONS DOCUMENTS

NICOSIA, Cyprus -- Iraq offered Sunday to let arms experts from what it called "neutral" countries visit a building that U.N. weapons inspectors have been trying vainly to enter for two weeks. The Iraqis have barred the U.N. team, charging that its American members are spies.

The official Iraqi news agency, monitored in Nicosia, said the new Iraqi position was conveyed to U.N. envoy Rolf Ekeus, chief of the U.N. commission overseeing efforts to eliminate Iraq's weapons of mass destruction.

TO GAIN ACCESS FOR ARMS INQUIRY

BAGHDAD -- Iraq sent a senior U.N. envoy away empty-handed Sunday, citing sovereignty and security as reasons for its latest refusal to allow U.N. arms inspectors into its Agriculture Ministry.

"The Iraqi position is fundamentally unchanged," Rolf Ekeus, head of the commission to eliminate Iraq's weapons of mass destruction, said before he left the country.

After two days of talks with Iraqi officials here, Ekeus left for Bahrain before returning to New York to brief the U.N. Security Council on his discussions.

Col. Douglas Englund of the U.S. Army, who heads the U.N. arms inspectors here, said "There was nothing I could characterize as progress."

U.S., RUSSIA LAY GROUNDWORK FOR JOINT SPACE FLIGHTS

MOSCOW -- A Russian could fly aboard a U.S. space shuttle next year, an American could live aboard the Russian space station Mir for five months, and a U.S. shuttle could dock with Mir as early as 1994 under plans developed by a team of U.S. space officials who have just completed a tour of rocket factories and other facilities in Russia and Ukraine.

The U.S. delegation, led by NASA chief Daniel Goldin, met with dozens of Russian officials, scientists and engineers during the six-day visit to work out details for implementing cooperation in space with the states of the former Soviet Union.

At week's end, the Russian and U.S. teams announced that the joint space flights will focus primarily on coordinating biomedical research in preparation for future space exploration. Goldin said Mir will be used as a "logical stepping stone" for research on the planned U.S. space station Freedom....

But the Administration also is trying to pacify the U.S. aerospace industry, which is suffering its own post-Cold War shrinkage. Some companies, particularly launch services, have complained that the Russian initiatives, which include launch services at bargain rates, will cost them business.

SENATOR REACHES OUT TO SOMALIA

Sen. Kassebaum tries again Monday for a firsthand look at the devastation of the African country of Somalia, where drought, famine and war threaten more than 4 million people.

Kassebaum tries to visit a relief center in a Somalia town across the border from Kenya, after canceling a planned visit Sunday to Somalia's capital, Mogadishu, for safety concerns.

Tens of thousands have died in Somalia since the outbreak of tribal warfare in 1991. "Nothing in the world is as bad," says Andrew Natsios of AID.

Kassebaum's delegation is looking for ways to get food and medical supplies past an armed, hungry, competitive militia to the rural villages where the aid is most critically needed, says Natsios.

COLD WAR CONSENSUS ON REFUGEE AID EBBING DESPITE RELENTLESS NEED

The Cold War consensus that brought 1.5 million refugees to this country since 1975 is crumbling, a victim of the collapse of communism and shrinking federal resources, while the number of refugees in the world is climbing.

Federal help for refugee resettlement, which peaked at $900 million a year in 1981, has declined steadily and may be only one-third that amount next year.

The Administration's budget request calls for $227 million for refugees in fiscal 1993. That is down from $410 million in the current fiscal year. It includes a plan to stretch dollars by agencies, rather than through the states. The plan is angrily denounced by the states, which argue they will have to pick up the costs if the private agencies fail to keep the refugees off the welfare rolls.

Hill-watchers predict Congress will push the Administration's funding request to about $350 million, but "it's going to be tough," one congressional staff member said. "Refugees now have to compete with other worthy programs, like Head Start," another aide said, and advocates for the first time do not have the advantage of a foreign policy link. Instead they can appeal only to humanitarian impulses and international cooperation.

(Sunday evening, July 19)

ISRAEL/SECRETARY BAKER

CBS's Giselle Fernandez: A possible breakthrough towards peace tonight in the Middle East: Secretary Baker opened a new round of negotiations with Israel's prime minister Yitzhak Rabin just hours after his new cabinet agreed to freeze planned settlements in the West Bank.

CBS's Bob Simon reports it was Baker's tenth visit to Israel but what a difference from the last nine. He was seeing a new government, a new philosophy, new possibilities.

(Baker: "I think that there is now some new opportunities presented, and I hope that we will see those reflected in movement.")

Today, he arrived hours after the new cabinet declared it would build no new settlements and review all building contracts drawn up by its predecessor. With the new mood, the Bush Administration now has a chance of recapturing some of the Jewish votes it lost when relations took a dive under Shamir. The key to that would be the granting of at least part of the $10 billion worth of loan guarantees.

(Baker: "There are new possibilities I think as a consequence of the fact that there is a new government here.")

This could be Baker's last trip here for a while; Israeli officials got the clear impression that Baker's under heavy pressure to leave the State Department and manage the Bush campaign. Getting relations with Israel and the peace process back on course would be important steps for American diplomacy and Republican politics.

(CBS-Lead)

NBC's Garrick Utley: What a difference an election can make. We're not talking about the campaign here in the U.S. but rather the recent election in Israel which brought a new government to power -- a government more willing to negotiate with Israel's Arab neighbors. That's what diplomats call an opening, and that is why Secretary Baker arrived there today.

NBC's John Dancy says Baker welcomed today's announcement about halting settlements.

(Baker: "Let me say that it will make a difference certainly with respect to the views and position of the United States.")

In Washington a group of 193 congressmen sent President Bush a letter urging him to release the $10 billion in loan guarantees. What is still unknown is exactly which settlements will be frozen. Rabin makes a distinction between political settlements and those established to anchor Israeli security lines. Baker isn't sure exactly what that means, and until it's clear, the U.S. will not agree to the loan guarantees.

(NBC-Lead)

ABC's Barrie Dunsmore reports this trip is different. This is the first time Secretary Baker is dealing with an Israeli government which is willing to give up some occupied territory in exchange for peace. That removes a major impediment to the peace process and greatly improves U.S.-Israeli relations.

(Prime Minister Rabin: "Thank you for readiness to take part in the continuation and the acceleration of the peace process and the improvement in the relationship between our two countries.") Baker seems almost eager now to provide the assistance of loan guarantees.

(Baker: "We now have a government here who is serious about limiting this question with respect to settlement activity.") President Bush clearly wants to mend his fences with American Jews and to find a new foreign policy success to improve his sagging popularity. That is why many Israeli and American observers see this trip as Baker's last as Secretary of State and his first as George Bush's likely next campaign manager. (ABC-3)

PRESIDENTIAL POLITICS

ABC's Forest Sawyer: Old-style presidential politics waited until Labor Day to campaign. The new style: don't even stop to catch your breath. Governor Clinton and Sen. Gore have already logged 500 miles in their post-convention bus tour, riding a new wave of popularity all along the way. President Bush has countered by scheduling campaign stops in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Missouri. What helped spur all this courtship frenzy is voters -- millions of them who lost their candidate when Ross Perot bowed out, and may be out shopping for another one.

ABC's Chris Bury reports the Bush-Quayle campaign, sensing danger in Clinton's bounce in the polls since the convention, has sent surrogates out on the trail to rain on his parade. Just as the buses reached Pittsburgh last night, Secretary Martin was in town telling reporters Clinton and Gore were really liberals repacked in a conservative box.

(Martin: "They're beautifully wrapped, but when you get to that bottom little box -- the core -- it's empty.")

(Clinton: "These people have had their chance. They can't run on their record; they can't run on their vision. All they can do is run out of town.")

ABC's Jack Smith says the two campaigns were trading shots today with Republicans insisting the President is really an agent of change.

(Rich Bond, "Brinkley": "George Bush has had a reform-and-change oriented agenda in many areas: health care, education, legal reform. But he couldn't get it through the Congress because they wanted to obstruct it because of partisanship.")

(George Stephanopoulos, Clinton campaign communications manager, "Brinkley": "They have no economic record to run on. They have no economic plan so they blame Congress... They have no economic plan of their own so they lie about Mr. Clinton's.")

Other Clinton advisers said Perot supporters angry about the recession would turn to them.

(Jame Carville, Clinton campaign senior adviser: "They'll be for us. For those that want the status quo, those that are satisfied, those that think that Washington is working fine, they got the candidate George Bush.")

And some Republicans today admitted George Bush is vulnerable.

(Sen. Dole: "When people are out of work and unemployment is high and things aren't looking particularly good for people, they're going to be frustrated and take it out on the person on top, and that's President Bush.")

(TV coverage of President Bush walking from Marine One on south lawn Sunday.)

But with the President and his advisers reportedly still divided over an economic package, Bush campaign aides today stuck to attacks on Clinton as a man with a liberal agenda.

(Fred Malek: "To pour more money into government, to create bigger government and to create bigger bureaucracies, and to spend money on programs that just aren't working, that's what Bill Clinton is proposing.")

The emerging Republican strategy is apparently to smear Clinton as an old fashioned tax-and-spend Democrat while Democrats tar George Bush as the Herbert Hoover of the 1990s, whose only domestic agenda is reelection, and the attacks have started early this time.

(ABC-Lead)

Fernandez reports Bill Clinton and his entourage were on the road again today, rolling through Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Ohio on a search for swing votes.

CBS's Richard Threlkeld says Clinton did some counterpunching, replying to Republicans who have been attacking him as too liberal.

(Clinton: "It shows you how impoverished they are; they have nothing to say to America, nothing to be for, no record to run, no vision of the future.")

Late today in Wheeling Clinton raised doubts about his stand on abortion. Earlier this month he said he would impose an abortion-rights litmus test on justices he would appoint to the Supreme Court. But today on that subject he said, "I have no intention of giving somebody a test."

(CBS-5)

NBC's Bob Kur reports still more big and enthusiastic crowds greeted Clinton and Al Gore as they began trying to deflect Republican attacks that already have begun.

(Clinton: "They'll tell you that we're too liberal and we're too young and we're too this and we're too that and we're to the other thing. I'll tell you what: We're too much for the American people for their taste, and we will give a government back if you'll give us a chance to do it.")

On local news three hours before Clinton pulled into Pittsburgh, Secretary Martin was on all the stations painting a liberal label on the new ticket.

(Martin: "How can you have a platform that increases spending, increases taxes, increases the deficit, and say you want to go in a new direction. We have heard that for years.")

(Clinton: "That's the way the Republicans run their campaign. All they know how to do is bad-mouth people personally and say they're liberal.")

(NBC-4)

CAMPAIGN/SECRETARY BAKER

Fernandez: President Bush took a break from the campaign trail and spent the day at Camp David. Though the President was out of the political spotlight, it was shining brightly on his travelling Secretary of State.

CBS's Randall Pinkston: Secretary Baker's mission to restart the Middle East peace talks is being overshadowed by rumors that he will soon undertake a domestic mission to help President Bush win reelection. In route to Tel Aviv, Baker wouldn't deny the talk. Neither did the President's campaign strategists.

(Fred Malek, "Meet the Press": "Whatever Jim Baker does in the future I know he'll do a great job either as Secretary of State or any other role. We're going to let the President answer that question.")

Insiders are predicting it's not a question of whether Baker will come aboard but when. The most likely scenario has Baker overseeing not only the campaign but the White House operation now headed by Sam Skinner. Out West with the President, Skinner seemed prepared to make room for Baker.

(Skinner, Friday: "We've got a very tough race here, and as we said, we'll move forward; we'll do whatever's necessary.")

Top Democrats concede that Baker at the helm would be a whole new campaign.

(James Carville, Clinton campaign adviser, "Meet the Press": "Certainly he's a most skilled practitioner of presidential politics, but I think that what people have sort of caught on to is that nothing is happening.")

That's a widely held view by voters, and to counter that, President Bush wants Congress to take up his economic growth package that he says has been ignored by Democrats.

(TV coverage of President Bush walking from Marine One Sunday.)

But even top Republicans doubt the President's plan will help much.

(Sen. Dole, "Face the Nation": "It's not going to have much of an impact this year. The President ought to go with his package. Let's have a vote on it and see what happens. If the Democrats won't let us pass it, then the President's got an issue.")

That's what the President is hoping -- that criticisms of his handling of the economy can be laid again back on the Congress and not on the Bush Administration. (CBS-6)

Utley says Secretary Baker was asked today about whether he'll give up that job to run President Bush's reelection campaign. He didn't say yes and he didn't say no. (NBC-2)

YOUNG VOTERS

CBS's Bruce Morton says young people are less likely to vote than the rest of the country. Only about half are registered compared with about three-quarters of the whole population. There is apathy, indifference and a feeling many share that the system is broken.

(unidentified young woman: "Once they get into office their opinions always change anyway. I mean, Bush is what, the education president? That's a crock of ____ [CBS edited out].")

Maybe that's why so many like the new guy -- the outsider -- Perot. Young voters are a valuable prize, numbering over a fifth of the electorate. The trick for the Bush and Clinton campaigns will be to get them registered and reel them in. (CBS-9)

AIDS CONFERENCE

Fernandez reports the 8th international conference on AIDS got underway in Amsterdam.

CBS's Edie Magnus reports AIDS activist opened the conference by protesting against countries that restrict the entry of people infected with the virus -- chief among them is the U.S.

(crowd chanting: "George Bush has got to go!")

It was the Bush Administration's refusal to lift the ban on travel and immigration which provoked conference organizers to move this year's meeting out of the U.S. to Amsterdam. (CBS-4)

ABC's George Strait reports the delegates were told that while 30 to 110 million people world-wide are expected to be infected with the AIDS virus by 2000, the amount governments are spending to control the epidemic is going down. The conference chair says that is because health is not a high enough priority.

(Dr. Mann, conference chairman: "Health has not become a central, defining principle of local, national and global purpose. Why has no government and no society been called to account for failures in health?")

Dr. Mann calls this a conference of hope not despair. He says the people here know how to control the AIDS epidemic if only their political leaders would let them. (ABC-8)

NBC's Robert Bazell says as this conference opened, the delegates got a large dose of political rhetoric. At the opening session one speaker after another denounced the U.S. ban on travel to the U.S. One reminded the audience about Magic Johnson and the Olympic games in Barcelona.

(Richard Rochon, Act-Up: "If the games had been in the U.S. and Magic held any other citizenship, he would not be allowed to compete.")

Tomas Fabregas, a Spanish man with AIDS, promised to fly to San Francisco on Saturday.

(Fabregas: "George Bush, I challenge you to stop me at the border as I attempt to return to my home in America.")

Utley says the National Commission on AIDS is an independent group appointed by the President and Congress. Here with us is Donald Goldman, one of its members. Recently your commission criticized the Bush Administration for lack of leadership. What's the problem?

Goldman: There's just been a tragically insufficient response is the unanimous and reluctant conclusion of the commission. It doesn't only have to do with the allocation of resources, which is insufficient, but even on things that wouldn't cost anything, there has simply been a lack of leadership and a lack of planning.

Utley: ...What specifically would you like to see the Administration do?

Goldman: The President hasn't spoken on AIDS since March of 1990 in any kind of public arena. We're talking about the greatest public health catastrophe of the century, and the Administration is treating it as business as usual. (NBC-8)

IRAQ/NUCLEAR INSPECTIONS

Fernandez reports Iraq said today it would allow experts from so-called neutral countries to enter a building from which U.N. inspectors have been barred for two weeks. It's believed the building contains documents on Iraq's ballistic missiles program. (CBS-2)

BOSNIA

Fernandez says in Bosnia-Herzegovina heavy fighting is reportedly disrupting the cease-fire that was to have gone into effect there tonight. (NBC-12, ABC-4, CBS-3)

RICHARD PETTY/JULY 4

ABC's John Snyder reports Richard Petty has dedicated his final season to his fans, some of whom like sharing his spotlight. (President Bush, July 4: "This President comes to greet a king: Richard Petty -- one of the great Americans. Richard, I'm proud to be at your side.") (ABC-10)

ABC -- THIS WEEK WITH DAVID BRINKLEY

Moderator: David Brinkley. Panel: Sam Donaldson, George Will.

Guests: Hamilton Jordan; Ed Rollins; Rich Bond; George Stephanopoulos, Clinton campaign communications manager.

Guest: Hamilton Jordan.

Brinkley: ...We have heard a number of explanations of why Ross Perot decided to quit. What is your reading of it?

Jordan: I cannot get into Ross Perot's head, but I have accepted his decision as presented and respect it....

Guest: Ed Rollins.

Brinkley: ...Why did he quit?...

Rollins: My sense is Mr. Perot enjoyed the movement. I think he believed the polls. He thought he was going to be elected by being very unconventional,...and all of a sudden he saw the wisdom of Hamilton and I, who are arguing you had to do this in a more conventional way, and it was just really against the grain. He didn't like the scrutiny. He obviously had some very tough decisions to make, and I think he just realized it was going to be a very tough, long campaign, as is every presidential campaign.

Will: ...He is out of the race. Who benefits?...

Rollins: I think in the short term Bill Clinton does. He's the candidate for change. I do think that if the President gets back in this race and obviously starts talking about a second-term agenda that matters to the American voters, he can get some of the disaffected Republicans back.

Will: ...Why is the President 20 points behind?

Rollins: I think that Bill Clinton has come back from a very rough start early on. I think that he had a very, very good convention. I think he is advocating change, and I think people are looking for an alternative to the present Administration.

Will: Why are they looking for an alternative to the President?

Rollins: I think they liked George Bush a year ago. I think they don't see an agenda for the future, and unless he starts addressing future domestic economic needs, he's going to have a great deal of difficulty.

Guest: Rich Bond.

Brinkley: ...Describe for me the politics of the Ross Perot withdrawal....

Bond: I think it's going to prove to be a big boost for George Bush in his reelection. I think it is going to prove to be a very big boost for the prospects of big Republican gains in the Congress. The fact of the matter is I have never thought that the Perot movement and the change movement was directed singularly against George Bush. I think it's a disaffection with government from the school board level on up through the federal government. And with the Perot people now, as they have been talking about in the last couple of days, focused on the Congress, they're going to find out that what George Bush and the rest of us have been saying is totally true. And that is the Democratic Congress has had obstructed for three-and-a-half years George Bush's programs, and if you make the change in Congress, you will have a changed country.

Will: ...A great many people think that this is going to be a very negative campaign focusing on character: "Is Mr. Clinton the kind of person you want to have as President?" Would it be fair for the Clinton people to say the following: "Well, we accept that character is important, but you shouldn't lie. That's a sign of bad character. And the President made one great promise in 1988, and it wasn't true. That is, 'Read my Lips. No new taxes.'" Is that a fair line of attack, and is that a character question?

Bond: I don't think it's a character question because I think it comes back to what George Bush tried to do in an honorable fashion at great, great sacrifice to himself, to the Republican party, and to the American people:... get the deficit under control, and...keep the government working. The price the Democrat majority in Congress made him pay was to raise taxes.... So I think if you take this in perspective, you will see that George Bush only raised taxes because the Democrats forced him to do so by the weight of their power in Congress....

Donaldson: Let me ask you about someone who at the moment is missing from the Bush campaign but we're told may be there shortly -- James A. Baker. Would you welcome him? Do you think he should come on board and help direct the campaign?

Bond: ...I've been around long enough to know when a President says that he is keeping his options open -- the fact of the answer at this point in time is it's George Bush's decision to make. Sam Skinner and Bob Teeter who are running the Bush campaign in the White House are good men. They are my friends, and I am on their team.

Guest: George Stephanopoulos

Brinkley: ...Does your Mr. Clinton have an answer to this [America's economic future] -- something precise and something well-thought out and something substantial? And if so, when might we hear about it?

Stephanopoulos: He absolutely does, and the American people have already heard about it. He has put out his economic plan, putting people first. The fact is that George Bush is a failed President. He's got the worst economic record since Herbert Hoover. He's raised taxes on working class people for the last 12 years -- the Reagan and Bush record -- and he has put capital ahead of people. The governor's got an investment plan that's going to put our people first.

Will: You just heard Mr. Bond from the Republican side oozing contentment from every pore, saying that Dukakis was ahead and then he disappeared, and is counting on you to do so. What does your campaign think the lesson of the Dukakis collapse was, and how do you combat it?....

Stephanopoulos: What you learn is when the Republican attack machine rolls out 100 days before an election, you down sit down, you answer it. Look at what Mr. Bond, Dan Quayle, Jay Garn, and the Republicans have done just in the last three days, since Mr. Clinton surged ahead in the polls. First of all, they have no economic record to run on. They have no economic plan. So they blame Congress,...and they lie about Mr. Clinton's....

Donaldson: ...Social Security, Medicare -- is he for cutting those?

Stephanopoulos: The governor has said what we must do with Medicare is make sure that we restrict benefits to the very high income people -- over $125,000. He's also mentioned raising the tax rate on Social Security for the upper income people, but he doesn't think you should means-test Social Security....

Will: Two quick questions: Debates: how many do you want, and have you given any thought to the format?

Stephanopoulos: We've accepted the proposal from the presidential commission on debates. We hope George Bush will, too.

Will: Perot voters: where are they going? Do you benefit? A lot of people say you lose in the long run because the South and West, where you must break the Republican lock, he would have divided the basically Republican white conservative vote.

Stephanopoulos: This election is about change. With Perot being out of the race, it is crystal clear now. There is one candidate for change -- Bill Clinton -- and one candidate for the status quo -- a failed President George Bush.

POLITICAL DISCUSSION

On Perot's withdraw, joined by Hodding Carter:

Carter: ...Speaking to a reality, most of those folks out there supporting him [Perot] are desperate for someone. The trick in this election...is going to be whether or not either of these two candidates can hold a fraction of those millions because believe me, most of them didn't vote four years ago, and if these two guys can't do something to attract them, and I do not see how George Bush can, they're not going to vote this time. -more-

Donaldson: They [Perot supporters] have got to go someplace. And maybe some of the Reagan Democrats will go to Clinton, absolutely. But I think the hard core conservatives...have no choice but to either stay home or vote for George Bush. And I think a lot of them will reluctantly go back to Bush.

Brinkley: ...Where are they going now, the Perot followers?...

Donaldson: ...With Perot dropping, I think it's a net plus for Bush from that standpoint.

Brinkley: ...This is the first election where the majority of voters will be suburbanites....

Will: I think what it means is that the Democrats have a problem.... It's a hard audience for them to address because the Democratic party for 50 years has been the party of energetic, ameliorative government. That is helping people who think they need help from government. A suburbanite, by and large, is someone who feels he's on the ladder on upward mobility, and the government is more an impediment and hindrance than a help.

On Secretary Baker's possible assistance in the Bush campaign:

Brinkley: Is Secretary Baker going back to run the Bush campaign?...

Will: I think so -- to run actually the Bush White House.... There, being no meaningful distinction in an election year anyway. But there's a great unhappiness not just with the campaign but with the White House the campaign reflects.

Donaldson: ...He has to go back. He has to help his friend George Bush out. And he has to look after himself too. And he's going to Israel to help solidify that portion of the American vote. I have no doubt that Israel is now, under the new Rabin government, going to get some portion of the loan guarantees that this Administration would not grant them under the Shamir government. That will help with votes here in the United States. And once he finishes that, if he has a future, Jim Baker, and he wants to be President -- he's going to get George Bush re-elected. So he'll leave the State Department,...and if he's successful he'll come right on back.

NBC -- MEET THE PRESS

Moderator: Tim Russert. Panel: Elizabeth Drew, David Broder.

Guests: Fred Malek; James Carville, Clinton campaign senior adviser.

Russert: ...Mr. Malek, when is Jim Baker coming over to run your campaign?

Malek: ...I don't know whether Jim Baker is going to come into the campaign or the White House or not. All I can say is wherever he is, whether he's at the State Department, in the White House, or at the campaign, he's going to do a superb job....

Russert: Does your campaign need Jim Baker?

Malek: I think this campaign is rolling along just fine. I think President Bush has a clear agenda for the future. He feels very, very confident about it....

Russert: ...We've seen over the last couple of days both governor Clinton and President Bush begging Perot voters to come over to their side. It's sort of interesting, I think, to the voters -- Vice President Quayle said that Mr. Perot was a temperamental tycoon who had contempt for the Constitution. Rich Bond, your party chairman, said that he was vague, mysterious, authoritarian, risky, wild, reckless, and functionally paranoid. How are the voters supposed to believe anything when your Vice President and party chairman say this about Mr. Perot and then say you want his support?

Malek: Let me make three points on that. First of all, if you went back to the Democratic convention, their own keynoter, Zell Miller, was very critical of Ross Perot.... The second point is that you have never heard George Bush say anything nasty, critical about Ross Perot.

Russert: You're disavowing Vice President Quayle and Mr. Bond's comments?

Malek: ...And thirdly -- I'm not disavowing anything. What I'm saying is George Bush...has been very clear on this, and -- Russert: But wait. We now have a situation where you're saying Bush didn't say it, but Quayle and Bond did. Were Quayle and Bond telling the truth about Perot?

Malek: I think the important thing is what we feel about Ross Perot and his supporters.... We welcome his supporters. We think he's made a contribution to the political process by getting millions of volunteers involved in the process. We hope to win their loyalty over the coming months. We think we will. We think they, like we, believe in smaller government, less spending, less taxes, change by reforming and restructuring government programs, not by making government programs bigger.

Carville: ...I agree with one thing -- it's time for a change in this country, and I cannot believe that Fred Malek actually sat there and said that this country was on the right track. And these Republicans are talking about whether Jim Baker is going to come back and run the campaign. The American people are saying, "When are we having somebody come in to run the country?" I mean, that's what this election's about, not running the Republican campaign. Ross Perot gets out. The first reaction of the White House is, "This is good. Now we can carry Texas and Florida." Our first reaction is, "This is good. It lets us talk about change."... There were two change candidates and one status-quo candidate in the race. Now it's down to one change candidate and one status-quo candidate....

Drew: ...Mr. Malek,...could you just tell us...what are the first three things he will do when he is re-elected, if he is?

Malek: There are three deeply held beliefs the President has. First of all, we need to get sustained economic growth, and you're going to get that by balancing the budget and creating more economic incentives for growth so we can create more jobs. Secondly, we do need a restoration of fundamental values in this country, and that's going to come through welfare reform, through reinstituting prayer in schools, through educational choice on the part of parents and a host of other things of this type.... And thirdly, we need to secure our streets and our neighborhoods.... We have made the world safe; we now need to make our streets and neighborhoods safe and secure. So there will be renewed emphasis on law and order.

Broder: ...Mr. Malek, Bob Teeter said there'll be no excluding anybody in our campaign. As you saw, there were many gay-rights advocates in the Democratic convention. Are they welcome in the Republican convention and in the Bush campaign?

Malek: Our campaign is inclusive, and anybody who has a sharing of our beliefs of economic growth, job creation, fundamental values, and law and order is welcome.

POLITICAL DISCUSSION

On the budget deficit:

Drew: ...They [Bush and Clinton] aren't confronting the budget deficit. Mr. Clinton did not in his long acceptance speech, and Mr. Malek says that Mr. Bush wants to eliminate the deficit, but he's very far from that in anything that he's proposed.

On Perot's withdraw:

Drew: ...I think when you get down to it state by state, this [Perot's withdraw] helps Bush.

CBS -- FACE THE NATION

Moderator: Bob Schieffer. Panel: David Gergen, Michel McQueen.

Guests: Sen. Dole, Robert Teeter.

Schieffer: ...Mr. Teeter, I read in the morning paper that the Bush campaign is trying to jump start itself by coming up with some new economic proposals of some kind and by making plans to paint Bill Clinton as a tax-and-spend liberal. Let me ask you first about the economic proposals. Have you come up with any yet, and what would they be?

Teeter: The President's had economic proposals before the Congress since January. He's had seven different proposals up there -- a package to stimulate the economy and get economic growth back. They're still there. He's still strongly for them. I think he's going to renew his efforts to try and get those passed. He may adjust them or add a little something to them over these next couple weeks, but his main thrust is going to be to get those economic proposals passed....

Schieffer: Senator Dole,...is that going to be enough?

Dole: It's a start. I think if we'd started to have done it two or three months ago it might have been much more effective. It's not going to have much of an impact this year. But I do think the President ought to come forth, ought to be very strong. In fact, there may be some things he could add. Whether it's a first-time credit for home buyers, whether it's a passive loss for real estate or whether it's repealing the luxury tax, there are a lot of good ideas out there -- enterprise zones. The Democrats might support some, but the President ought to go with his package.... If the Democrats won't let us pass it then the President's got an issue. If we can pass it we may have a little breakthrough, but it's not going to turn the economy around. I think it's not that big a deal.

Schieffer: ...Let's talk about Ross Perot. What does that mean? He's out of the race now. The Bush people were going around early in the week saying they thought it would benefit them. The polls suggest that it's benefiting Bill Clinton. How do you see it shaking down?

Teeter: I think in the long term that it will benefit us. The polls are very temporary. We've had two big news events in the last week -- the Democratic convention and Ross Perot deciding not to run. I think that we've all been through this before and seen these polls go up and down in the middle of the summer, and it'll be after we get through our convention a month or so from now and that first part of September before we'll see where this race really starts.

Schieffer: ...I think the major thing [campaign factor] will be economics. We just heard Mr. Teeter say that they hope to have some economic proposals, but if I heard you correctly, you were pretty much saying, "We're going to repackage what we've already got." There's not going to be anything especially new. Is that enough?

Gergen: I don't think it will be enough. We also heard Bob Dole say earlier that it was not all that much of a big deal -- the package that was up there. So I think when Bob Teeter said they may have some new elements in the package, that points in a direction that will help the President a great deal more than repackaging the old elements....

Schieffer: ...Can you win this election without going negative against Bill Clinton?... Many people think that despite all the talk about the economic plans and all of that, that what you're really planning is a replay of 1988.

Teeter: ...We're not planning a replay of any previous campaign. Every campaign is a unique element of itself. One of the things we will do in this campaign that we'll do in every campaign is try to sharpen the contrasts and the differences between the candidates. That's important to do. And I think there's a lot of definition to what a negative campaign is. But certainly one of the things we'll try and do, and I think that you and the press will try and do, is to sharpen the differences and the contrasts between the two candidates, and in this case, I think it'll be easy. There are very big differences and very big contrast....

Schieffer: What's your definition of a negative campaign?

Teeter: I think that a negative campaign -- there can be a legitimate negative campaign if the things you're talking about on your opponent are his record, they're part of the public record, they're honest, and they're relevant to the race or the job that you're running for. The personal kinds of attacks -- things that don't have anything to do with the job you're running for -- then I don't think they are.

Schieffer: Were you really proud to be a part of the '88 campaign?

Teeter: I think it was a good campaign; we won.

Gergen: It is considered legitimate to sharpen differences, and I think as the Bush campaign does that in the next few weeks, we'll see the Clinton lead -- this big artificial lead -- diminish a great deal.... But I think the issue for the Republicans...is whether they can get beyond that and prove somehow or convince people that a second Bush term will be better than the first. And I think the burden here is the Bush campaign is saying, "Look, we haven't made as much progress as we wanted in the first term because we've had a Democratic Congress." Everybody assumes and everybody thinks the Congress is going to continue to be Democratic in the next four years. How do you convince people it's going to be better if the Congress remains Democratic?

Gergen: ...Would you like to see some new elements in an economic package?

Teeter: There will be some new elements.

Gergen: But you'd like to see it?

Teeter: ...Yes, I certainly would.

Schieffer: ...What is the President's message?...

Teeter: I think that the most important element of the message...is that we have got to make some fundamental changes in this country in order to compete in this rapidly emerging world economy that we all see. And the first and foremost among those is to get rid of this budget deficit -- it's to begin to cut federal spending and reduce the budget deficit. The second one is to restore the economic growth in this country through some of the things he's already proposed and others he probably will propose in this country.... Secondly, it is to restore the kind of traditional American values that held the society together for 200 years and that have been weakened in the last 15, 20, 30 years in this country. And third, to make the country safer for people here as well as we've made the world safer from nuclear war.

THE McLAUGHLIN GROUP

Moderator: John McLaughlin. Panel: Fred Barnes, Chris Matthews, Eleanor Clift, Morton Kondracke.

On the impact of Perot dropping out of the race:

Barnes: ...The initial impact [of Perot withdrawing] was one of an outburst of hypocrisy like you rarely see even among top politicians in America.... Ultimately this is going to help Bush, although maybe not immediately because it turns it into a traditional Republican-Democratic presidential race.... Bush now will try to lock up the South as his base and the Southwest and the mountain states.... Clinton has an advantage in California and all along the Pacific coast and the Northeast.... They will fight over the industrial heartland....

Clift: I think marginally it [Perot's withdraw] helps George Bush. But Ross Perot has done his job, and his job helped Clinton -- he's made the country realize how much they don't want to reelect George Bush.... I think that Bill Clinton has presented himself as a credible alternative, and I think the voters are going to take a look at him. I think he benefits in the long run, and he gets a chance to run against the Bush record without the diversion of Ross Perot. And there's lots to damn George Bush and his record.

McLaughlin: ...Will Perot endorse either Clinton or Bush?

Barnes: No, he won't endorse either one, but that is a problem for Bush; he doesn't hate Clinton but he hates Bush....

Clift: Ross Perot blessed the new Democratic Party; he said it was revitalized. I think that's a code word blessing of the Democrats. I think he has opened the door to his supporters to support Clinton.

Kondracke: ...Why after the two of them [Bush and Clinton] go kissing his feet -- rushing to the phone to lather him up -- would they [Perot supporters] trust either of the other candidates?

McLaughlin: ...Come November, how is that vote going to split up?

Barnes: I think about 60%-65% will go to Bush.

Clift: I think the exact opposite.

Matthews: Of the people that would have held on and stuck with Perot to the end,...most would have gone to Bush. This is a bad thing for Bush what happened yesterday.

Kondracke: ...It all depends on how the campaign goes. These people want change, but it's possible that George Bush could actually represent change.

McLaughlin: The answer is one-quarter stays at home, one-quarter votes for Clinton and one-half votes for Bush.

INSIDE WASHINGTON

Moderator: Gordon Peterson. Panel: Charles Krauthammer, Carl Rowan, Tina Gulland, Tom Oliphant.

On Clinton's bounce:

Peterson: ...Can Bill's bounce last?

Rowan: ...Well, when George Bush made up 17 points on Mike Dukakis, he wasn't presiding over the great economic tragedy that he sits on today, and he still had to use the Willie Horton ploy. I think they're going to have a heck of a time making up this difference.

Krauthammer: It can last, but it doesn't have to; Clinton only has to win by one. But as one high-ranking Republican strategist said to me yesterday, when the President's reelect numbers are in the 30's, as they are now, it's the challenger's race to lose.

Gulland: It's a new Bill Clinton, but just wait until that new Clinton meets the new recreated George Bush done courtesy of James Baker.

On the impact of Perot dropping out of the race:

Krauthammer: ...I think the larger phenomenon here is this: Perot managed to pry away people who were naturally inclined to go to Bush. And now that Perot is out, it's not clear that...these people are going to return. So, it's quite possible that even though the three-way race originally scrambled everything, when we're back to a two-way race now it might actually hurt Bush in the end even though it looks originally that it might help him.

On Republican dirty tricks:

Rowan: ...On Wednesday I had a session with Ron Brown. He told me that they are absolutely convinced that George Bush is behind this right-wing group that is trying to pull off another Willie Horton stunt -- that they are harassing the family of a dead woman, trying to come up some evidence that Clinton had some kind of affair with her. They say they fully expect dirty tricks beyond anything they did with the Willie Horton.

Gulland: I think that's true, and that's why when Charles talks about this macho Texas rivalry between Perot and Bush, the Democrats had really, no matter what their new spin is, wanted that to continue so that Bill Clinton could begin his own base and that the guns couldn't be turned on Clinton. And that's what's happening this weekend.

On Secretary Baker's possible assistance in the campaign:

Peterson: But before they get dirty, don't they have to do something else -- the Bush people?

Oliphant: Absolutely, they've flown out West to have the meeting. What's going on is they're basically telling him that if he really wants to sound general quarters in August, he'll be doing it from the bottom of the ocean. It's got to get into action now. And in President Bush's condition, he just cannot go negative now. This is a person whose reelection number is thirty at best.... And until his...people think more highly of him, he just does not have a platform from which to do this. The first ads are positive, by the way, for the end of this month.

Peterson: So, Baker's back in the White House?

Oliphant: As a practical matter, especially given the way he helped Bush stage his reaction on Thursday, I would already refer to Jim Baker as the chairman of President Bush's campaign, and the only question is whether he actually takes a title.

Peterson: Can he do the job?

Gulland: He's got a great track record, and if you take a reading by how frightened Democrats on the floor of that convention were despite the euphoria leaving the convention, yeah, he can do the job.

Oliphant: ...It [Perot's withdrawal] does leave two things in its wake which will I think determine how the election actually ends in November -- two voids I would call them. One, that we're mad as hell; government doesn't work, politics stinks. The other void: the economy is in the toilet heading toward the sewer. Whichever of these two candidates fills that void, which Perot helped open, wins the election.

On winning Texas:

Rowan: ...I think Texas is in play. I think we underestimate this whole force of area pride and loyalty. You've got a guy who comes from right at the Texas border, and you got a George Bush who's a phony Texas resident....

REDEFINING MOMENTS

Political scientists say the conventions no longer serve any purpose. The media say they no longer make news. Yet despite the worst ratings ever, the convention transformed Bill Clinton -- and the Party. Although Gallup and L.A. TIMES found only about half the voters tuned in, the Dems got defined. (#15-20)

TV MONITOR (#21)

???? OVERLOOKED ????

NEWSWEEK's CW joins the praise of DNC Chair Ron Brown for his pick of NYC as convention site. One reason: "Only two delegates mugged." Of course the wide-spread convention rumor had one such incident occurring on the floor of the Garden.

*1 RE-THINKING TWO-WAY: THE OLD MAP'S BACK -- OR IS IT?

S.F. EXAMINER's Jacobs: "What had been a Rubik's Cube now becomes a traditional chess board ... About the only assumption everyone agrees with today" is Clinton can't win without CA. Bush dep. manager Mary Matalin on Gore's green appeal: "They think they can win [CA] by sending [Gore] out there. But everything the tree hugger says on the environment hurts him in [MI] and other Midwestern states." Bush can "probably" win without CA, but would need TX, FL, and several of PA, OH, MI, IL. Clinton must win the Northeast, while Bush "probably gets most" of the Old South -- although Clinton-Gore "can do well" in NC, MO, KY, AR, and TN (7/19). Bush chair Bob Teeter: "When you look at the states where Mr. Perot was doing well, and you look at the states we need to carry, then there's no question that in the long term it will benefit us" ("Face the Nation," CBS, 7/19). Elizabeth Drew: "When they get to it state by state, this helps Bush." David Broder: "[Dems] have a real shot at [CA]." With CA going Dem, "there is at least the potential for Clinton putting together an electoral majority" ("Meet the Press," NBC, 7/19). Bush ad maker Mike Murphy said the campaign is "looking at a variation of the original one-on-one game plan that concentrates on 8-12 swing states" -- e.g. MI, IL, OH, NJ (Paolantonio, PHILA. INQUIRER, 7/19).

NAUGHTY? EXAMINER's Jacobs: "Experts expect the fall campaign to be one of the nastiest of modern times, with Bush starting out well behind and Clinton mindful of the price [Dukakis paid] for not fighting back" (7/19). Bush manager Fred Malek repeated the Bush-Quayle line on running against Clinton: "We have no intent of pursuing any kind of personal campaign." David Gergen: "The arguments of '88 [are not] going to be as persuasive this year. Republicans are going to have to come up with something much more powerful." E.g.: "They can govern with a [Dem] Congress, because nobody thinks that the Republicans are going to take over both chambers" ("M/L," PBS, 7/17). NBC's John Chancellor: "In a two-way race, throwing garbage works" (7/17). COPLEY's Condon: A negative campaign will "have the biggest impact" on ex-Perot backers, who "may now either stay at home or cast protest votes for Perot" (S.D. UNION-TRIBUNE, 7/19).

OR NICE? ROLL CALL's Kondracke: "In spite of the public's disaffection, this actually could prove to be a first-rate campaign, as the country deserves at the outset of the post-Cold War era. We are more than halfway there, with the [Dem] party renewed and revived and Ross Perot out of the way. Now, the President has to prove he's not 'brain dead' -- unless, of course, he is" (7/20).

OTHER THEMATIC THOUGHTS: NEWSWEEK's Klein says it's "change" (Clinton) vs "trust" (Bush). The "subtext of the Bush argument will be if they can't trust him to tell the truth in [AR], how can you trust him in the [WH]." But the "most potent GOP trust issue of all -- the idea that [Dems] can't be trusted to stand up to communism -- is dead." Bush "will have a harder time rebutting Clinton's change argument. When the president poses as the anti-Washington candidate, he just looks silly ... Clinton may be able to handle 'trust' better than Bush can handle 'change'" (7/27 issue). Sen. Min. Leader Bob Dole: "My view is that 'change' is the most overworked word I've heard in the past 30 days. ... The people in my state are fairly sophisticated, and the change they want is dealing with the deficit. I think that's why they attached to Ross Perot" ("Face the Nation," CBS, 7/19).

BUSH ANGLING: NEWSWEEK's McDaniel: "The bottom line: Perot's departure made Clinton more vulnerable. ... Perot's presence had threatened to strip the gears of the GOP's attack machine." The 3-way-inspired concern about "A" attacking "B" helping "C" had "paralyzed GOP planning -- so much so that ... Teeter had never turned in an official strategy document" (7/27 issue). RNC chair Rich Bond offers the Bush-Quayle line on Perot's exit: "It absolutely helps George Bush and it kills Bill Clinton" ("One on One," 7/18). U.S. NEWS' Borger sees a "classic escalation strategy" for Bush, first calling Clinton a "liberal masquerading as a centrist, a failed small-state governor who has inflated his mediocre record." Also likely: Attacks on the "cultural and media elite [for trying] to foist a mediocre, liberal governor on the country." The "next level of attack will resurrect more sensitive questions about Clinton's character," including the draft, inhaling, and "as a final resort, his alleged marital infidelity" (7/27 issue). BOSTON GLOBE's Lehigh: "Bush appears to be lagging in the effort to consolidate his base. ... Clinton -- having veered to the populist left in the primaries -- now moves back toward the center, where presidential races are won, and Bush will first have to detour rightward" (7/19). Analyst Stu Rothenberg: "If the November election is solely a referendum on the president and the status quo, Bush is headed for trouble. But if the Republicans succeed in making the contest at least partially a vote of confidence on Clinton and [Dems], then the president has a much better chance" (ROTHENBERG POLITICAL REPORT, 7/17 issue).

CLINTON ANGLING: FT. WORTH STAR-TELEGRAM's Hutcheson: "Although Clinton and Gore have already tried to reach out to moderate and conservative voters," analysts agree Perot's exit means Dems "will have to cast an even wider net ... On the other hand, many [Dems] are optimistic that the bulk of Perot's supporters will [go] Clinton, if for no other reason than to punish Bush" (7/17). KNIGHT-RIDDER's Boyd: "They can no longer hope to win with 40 percent ... Democrats say the Clinton-Gore message remains the same. The key words are still 'change' and 'middle class'" (PHILA. INQUIRER, 7/19). Norfolk VIRGINIAN-PILOT's Eure & Edds: "For Southern Democrats, a weeklong honeymoon of confidence came to a jarring end ... Now, they can only hope that the Southern white voters who were attracted to Perot will stay disaffected, giving Democrats a chance to win them back" (7/17).

POLL POSITIONING: Dukakis '88 pollster Tom Kiley: "I can't help but think how much it feels now like it did in 1988, when we sensed this same emerging consensus for change." BOSTON GLOBE's Robinson reports GOPers and Dems alike said "circumstances make overtaking Clinton a much more formidable task for Bush" than Dukakis. "Indeed, in the face of Clinton's latest surge, many of the GOP's most widely respected voices have privately concluded that, barring some unexpected development, Bush is likely to lose." Conservative activist Gary Bauer: "The economy is so bad, and there is so much anger at Bush and his policies, that if the Republicans can persuade voters to leave Clinton, they're likely to go fishing." GOP pollster Glen Bolger: "For an incumbent, what you see is what you get. The undecided voters are unlikely to break for him unless his opponent becomes entirely unacceptable." Therefore, Bush "will seek to raise enough concerns about Clinton's character and record ... to drive voters away from him" (7/18). Dem pollster Peter Hart "said his polls show a record-high 63 percent of the voters could still shift their loyalties." Hart: "Usually you are playing for a group of 20 to 30 percent by the time you hit July 4th" (Condon, COPLEY/S.D. UNION-TRIBUNE, 7/19). Balto. SUN's Berger: "This election is really up to the economy, over which Mr. Bush has little control and Mr. Clinton none" (7/18).

*2 PEROT: NOW, WAIT JUST A MINUTE ...

Ross Perot appeared on CNN's "Larry King Live," taped with Barbara Walters on ABC's "20/20" and was interviewed by NEWSWEEK's Maynard Parker. CHICAGO TRIBUNE's Worthington writes Perot "left the door open to being a power broker in the campaign, with his legions of supporters providing a possible swing vote" (7/18). Balto. SUN's Baer: "Perot raised the threat that he would stay a factor in it after all." He "went so far as to suggest that he would draft a platform and endorse candidates in House and Senate races" (7/18). Perot made a move "to launch his volunteers as a powerful force in the upcoming election." But, "for the most part, Perot was on the defensive when pressed about why he deserted his backers without a fight" (Mashek, BOSTON GLOBE, 7/18). NEWSDAY's Firestone suggested that Perot "hadn't ruled out becoming a candidate" (7/18).

FROM "20/20": Barbara Walters: "Is there any possibility that you would change your mind and re-enter?" Perot: "I don't see a possibility unless I thought it was good for the country." Walters: "Let me give you a scenario. ... Something comes up that discredits Bill Clinton. Something happens with ... Bush. You might then come into the race again?" Perot: "Well, this is all up to the volunteers." Walters: "But you don't rule it out." Perot: "We could rule it out in just a few days. ... [If the] volunteers feel the appropriate thing to do is to take the name off the ballot. The name is off the ballot and you cannot get it back on. And I will leave that in their hands." Walters: "You're leaving the door open a little bit, though." Perot: "I don't mean to. I am convinced that when they think it through, they will agree that this ... can only be disruptive. But I'm a believer in letting all the good ideas be discussed and debated fully" (7/17).

FROM CNN: Larry King: "What if you're on the ballot in 48 states on November 3rd?" Perot: "What if? Now I'm on the ballot." King: "And you're not going to endorse Clinton or Bush." Perot: "And neither one of them has responded to the will of the people." King: "Then what?" Perot: "Well, I'm going back to my volunteers." King: "Are you saying you want them to vote for you if you're unhappy with Clinton or Bush?" Perot: "No. ... We will meet again. See, we kind of do an unnatural thing. ... We get together, talk about it, and say, what is best for the country." King: "What if they said to you, we hear Clinton's promises, we hear Bush's statements, we're unhappy, we don't know where to go, let's vote for you, Ross, and let's see what happens on November 3rd?" Perot: "I'm an engineer. I'd say all right, let's look at the facts. If you launch a huge protest vote for me, who have you put in the White House? ... We'll have enough data around then to have a really good indication -- who will you put in the White House? Then just make sure that's who you want to put in the White House." Later, King: "You can't stop someone from voting for you." Perot: "That's right." King: "In a sense, you're still sort of hanging that leaf out." Perot: "That's the magic, Larry." King: "We've got an alternative."

Perot: "We have a protest vote and that could take one of the two of you through the tank." King: "If [Bush or Clinton] don't satisfy your people, your people should protest vote for you?"

Perot: "They have an option" (CNN, 7/17).

MORE: Perot: "I would urge each of the volunteers ... to stay together as a unit because there they have a voice" ("20/20," ABC, 7/17). On the movement as a 3rd party: "We have everything in place for the third party. It's an easy natural thing. ... I will provide them any kind of help and leadership they want me to. ... Now they have an interesting piece of leverage. ... They will have both candidates giving them their full attention." Perot said yes to a convention: "We will have a long meeting [with the state coordinators] and kick these ideas around and figure out what will best serve this country" ("Larry King," CNN, 7/17). Perot's parting shot: "It's safe to say that any effort was rejected with revulsion by the message-senders in Washington. I threatened the status quo. The lobbyists, all the people with inside contacts -- everyone in Washington felt threatened" (NEWSWEEK, 7/27 issue).

*3 PEROT VOTERS: WHO GETS 'EM

Perot met with about 40 state leaders for two and a half hours and "said he would help finance their continued campaign to reform American government." The volunteers dubbed themselves "freedom fighters" and considered names for their movement -- including "Voice of the Eagle" and "Freedom's Voice" -- but made no final choice. But "volunteers downplayed the notion of a third party" (LaGesse, DALLAS MORNING NEWS, 7/19). Perot told the volunteers "that by sticking together their influence on national political races was greater than ever. ... Most said the possibility was remote but that Perot indicated a reluctant willingness to be drafted" if Bush and Clinton "are not responsive to the concerns of the Perot camp." Perot volunteer Duane Herrington: "He said he'll still be the crazy aunt in the basement," ready to emerge unexpectedly. AK state coordinator Donna Gilbert: "I still think Ross Perot can be president. I'm not going to give up on him" (Steven Reed, HOUSTON CHRONICLE, 7/19). CA backer Jack Brodbeck: "We're going to get this organization in motion, and it's going to last for years. Only this time, Ross is going to be behind the movement, not in front of it" (Firestone, N.Y. NEWSDAY, 7/19). "Perot's decision is final: He won't play but he won't leave the field." The coordinators "were confident that they could salvage the remnants of their former campaign into an effective citizens lobbying group" (Smith, COX/ATLANTA CONSTITUTION, 7/20). Perot HI chair Orson Swindle: "We can keep this movement together because I think the movement is basically bigger than Ross Perot. The people rallied behind Ross because he represented what they think" ("GMA," ABC, 7/20). The coordinators decided to continue backing Perot "on a state-by-state basis and planned to stay in touch wit each other while trying to organize nationally. ... But it remained unclear whether Perot would be their quarterback, coach or mascot" (AP/PHILA. INQUIRER, 7/20).

THE FIGHT FOR THE MOVEMENT: U.S. NEWS' Borger: "The showdown now focuses on Perot's political malcontents" (7/27 issue). TIME's Kramer on the bidding war: "Bush and Clinton reacted like political ambulance chasers" (7/27 issue). BOSTON GLOBE's Trausch on records of Perot petition-signers: "The only thing Republicans and Democrats will do with a list of voters who are up for grabs is put them on the mailing list and ask for money" (7/18). DNC Chair Ron Brown: "All the data we've seen is that Perot supporters are moving in large numbers to Bill Clinton" (N.Y. NEWSDAY, 7/18).

BUSH LINE: Bush: "I have a message for anyone who supported Ross Perot, and any American who identifies with that frustration that brought them together, I hear you, and you've come true loud and clear." VP Quayle after meeting with Perot supporters in Louisville: "They're let down, they're frustrated, and we want to reach out and to talk with him." NBC's John Cochran: "Quayle refused to repeat his accusation last month that Perot is a 'temperamental tycoon' who has contempt for the Constitution. But later Quayle offered a negative assessment of Perot as presidential material" (7/17). CBS' Wyatt Andrews: "Quayle headed South ... wading into safe mostly white audiences in a direct appeal for Ross Perot's old support." Quayle: "To vote for change, let's have a Republican Congress ... that's the way that we can change America" (7/17). NBC's Tim Russert pressed Bush manager Fred Malek to comment on earlier statements on Perot by Quayle ("temperamental tycoon") and RNC chair Rich Bond ("authoritarian, risky.") Russert: "How are the voters supposed to believe anything when your vice president and party chairman say this about Mr. Perot and then you say you want his support?" Malek: "The important thing is what we feel about Mr. Perot and his supporters. And let me tell you this: we welcome his supporters. ... We think they, like we, believe in smaller government, less spending, less taxes, change by reforming and restructuring government programs, not by making government programs bigger" ("Meet the Press," 7/19). Bond: "I have never thought the Perot movement and the change movement was directed singularly against George Bush. I think it's a disaffection with government from the school board level on up through the federal government. And when the Perot people now ... focus on the Congress, they're going to find out that what George Bush and he rest of us have been saying is totally true: that it is the Democratic Congress that has obstructed for three and a half years George Bush's program, and if you make the change in Congress, you will have a changed Congress" ("Brinkley," ABC, 7/19). Mark Shields: "Ambulance-chasing lawyers look like moral giants compared to President Bush's men. ... This is the kind of hypocrisy that gives politics a bad name" ("Capital Gang, CNN, 7/18). BOSTON GLOBE's Oliphant: "If it wasn't clear that the president really will do whatever he thinks it takes to get reelected his smarmy effort to fake affection for Perot should end the remaining doubts" (7/19).

CLINTON LINE: BOSTON HERALD's Battenfeld writes the "folksy image" of the Clinton-Gore bus tour is a "blatant appeal" for Perot voters (7/19). Three NY Perot directors Mitch Lifflander, John Zaubler and Thomas Hoving stood along side Clinton and Gore at the NYC rally kicking off the bus-tour, urging other Perot supporters to back the Dem ticket. Hoving: "All those people who thought Ross Perot had guts -- and he don't -- must ask who does, and who is the best choice for leadership? That is Bill Clinton" (COPLEY/S.D. UNION-TRIBUNE, 7/18). CBS' Dan Rather: "Gov. Clinton, campaigning, said he would not rule out offering a cabinet position for Ross Perot" (7/17). Gore said the campaign had been "overwhelmed" with phone calls and telegrams from Perot backers offering their support (N.Y. DAILY NEWS, 7/18). Clinton strategist James Carville: "Voters have a choice between the change gang ... and the same gang" ("Capital Gang, CNN, 7/18). Carville: "Perot gets out. The first reaction of the White House is ... this is good; now we can carry Texas and Florida. Our first reaction is, this is good; it lets us talk about change.

... There were two change candidates and one status quo candidate in the race. Now it's down to one change candidate, one status quo candidate ("Meet the Press, NBC, 7/19). Clinton Commun. dir. George Stephanopoulos: "With Perot being out of the race, it's crystal clear now: there's one candidate for change, Bill Clinton; one candidate for the status quo, a failed president, George Bush" ("Brinkley," ABC, 7/19). W.S. JOURNAL's McQueen & Birnbaum: "By judging by the crowds along the route of the thousand-mile bus trip, the campaign is meeting with mixed success in winning them over" (7/20).

VOTE COUNTING: Perot pollster Frank Luntz said their numbers suggest Clinton may benefit more from his exit, with Perot backers breaking 50% for Clinton, 30% for Bush, and 20% not voting." Bush chair Bob Teeter disagrees: "These are people who have basically been ours" (W. POST, 7/18).

NO BUTTS: Harlem Rev. Calvin Butts switched his endorsement back to Ron Daniels, a black educator running as an independent, following Perot's withdrawal (N.Y. TIMES, 7/20). Butts said he was not likely to endorse Clinton, "even as the 'lesser of two evils'": "I don't believe that Bill Clinton is going to be any better than George Bush" (N.Y. TIMES, 7/20). N.Y. DAILY NEWS' Caldwell: "Do not blame Calvin Butts. He saw a chance at something daring, and he did the right thing" (7/20).

*4 PEROT: ANATOMY OF A FAILED CAMPAIGN

Perot co-managers Hamilton Jordan and Ed Rollins appeared on ABC's "This Week with David Brinkley." Asked why he thought Perot decided to quit the race, Jordan cited the reasons given in Perot's 7/16 press conference: "I believe he had probably misread what had happened. I think he really thought he was on a course to being a disruptive factor in the election and did not want to do that, and got out for that reason. ... what he told us is what he believed." Rollins, asked if Perot turned out to be a "cheapskate": "He spent a tremendous amount of money on grassroots activities that may in the final analysis not matter for the general electorate. He had great difficulty moving from retail politics to wholesale politics, and I think that's really where the system broke down. ... I know a lot more about Ross Perot than I did when I started. ... What I saw in the last 45 days indicated to me that the temperament was probably not quite right to be the president." On possible regrets: "I've paid a pretty heavy personal price in the sense of my wife having to leave her job, I've lost my business, obviously many of my former friends are no longer friends. But I think, when I look back on it, at least I took a chance on changing a system. ... I can vote for President Bush, but I certainly don't think I will be invited to participate in any Republican activities anywhere" (7/19). Writing in NEWSWEEK, Rollins: "I've been in campaigns before when I didn't know what a candidate was going to say. I've never been in a campaign when I didn't know where a candidate was. ... When I came in, it was a petition drive. When I left last Wednesday it still was" (7/27 issue).

BUSTIN' LUCE: Perot chair Tom Luce "could barely disguise his fury with Rollins, saying that his efforts to blame Perot for his own failures represented 'politics at its worst'": "There is obviously a temperamental difference between Ronald Reagan and Ross Perot. He is not quite as manageable. He is not able to be scripted" (Broder, L.A. TIMES, 7/20). On NBC's "Today," Rollins said Perot "was certainly very naive about American politics, certainly underestimated how tough a business it was, and the first time shots started getting fired at him, he didn't like it very much." On Perot as "kingmaker": "There's hundreds of thousands of people that worked for him very hard, in many cases much harder than he did. Today, I don't think he is a big factor in American politics. I think his supporters will pick some other candidate." On whether his GOP bridges are burned: "Unfortunately they are. I think in my heart and soul I went into this for the right reasons ... I got up every day and worked 15 hours a day for change. Unfortunately our candidate didn't do the same" (NBC, 7/20).

INSIDE STORY: Many chronicle the campaign's final days. NEWSWEEK cover story: "The Quitter: Why Perot Bowed Out." Fineman, Clift, et al. write the campaign "began to come unraveled" after Perot's NAACP address: "He was hurt and confused by the attacks on his credibility and character, and he was frightened by the possibility that his family would be sucked into the vortex of an increasingly mean-spirited campaign" (7/27 issue). W. POST's Mintz & Von Drehle: "Perot quit because he could not stomach politics: the hired guns burnishing his image, the junk mail, the scrutiny by the press, the pounding from opponents, the sugar-coating of hard truths. The question, in the end, was whether he was ever truly a candidate" (7/19). Campaign insiders describe Perot "as a man obsessed with his public image who began to lose interest in the contest when faced with a barrage of critical news reports" (Holmes, N.Y. TIMES, 7/18). DALLAS MORNING NEWS' Jackson gives a day-by-day account of the end (7/18). S.F. EXAMINER's Matthews reports Perot "micromanaged his campaign," citing the fact he did 6 straight appearances on NBC's "Today" without doing CBS or ABC (7/18). Evans & Novak cite one adviser who asked Perot if he knew of Madonna, then adding: "Ross, she's a multi-million dollar star. But she doesn't schedule her own events. She doesn't rent the bus. She doesn't book the hall and get the band. She doesn't write the script. She hires people to do all these things, and she just performs" (W. POST, 7/20).

ECONOMIC PLAN: CHICAGO TRIBUNE's Neikirk writes the Perot campaign had developed a 5-year plan to balance the federal budget that would have raised taxes on gasoline, trimmed Social Security, and cut spending "in virtually every federal endeavor." Sources said the plan "spared no sacred cows." A Perot advisor "said it would have been more detailed than the economic plan" put out by Clinton. The plan was prepared by ex-Carter budget official John White (7/18). The Perot sources "expected [the plan] would become a lightning rod for criticism and cause Perot's standing in the polls to drop even further." Jordan: "There would have been a firestorm. After 30 to 40 days, people would have realized he was giving them the truth. ... But it certainly had its political costs" (Isikoff, W. POST, 7/18). L.A. TIMES' Chen & Ellis write, although Perot is out, "his prescription for a national economic recovery still may become something of an agenda-setter" in the campaign. One Perot adviser said the Tsongas plan "doesn't cut as deeply as Perot's" (7/20). W.S. JOURNAL's Murray writes the plan "would have alienated dozens of powerful interest groups and surely created a political firestorm" (7/20).

*5 PEROT: A LOOK BACK, AND, FOLKS -- IT AIN'T GONNA BE PRETTY Monroe (LA) NEWS-STAR editorial: "H. Ross Perot, the quitter" (7/17). MIAMI HERALD editorial: "Until yesterday, millions of Americans hailed him as the one man who could restore grandeur to America's symbolic but molting eagle. Today those believers, stunned, are trying to decide whether he is instead an owl -- or maybe just a chicken" (7/17). BOSTON GLOBE's Trausch: "Not only did the man on horseback head for the barn, but he left his supporters standing around wiping their shoes" (7/18). Molly Ivins: "Perot would prefer to have us believe that he is not eaten up with the kind of clawing, persevering ambition it takes to win. But a coach would say he just didn't have enough want-to" (mult., 7/18). BOSTON GLOBE editorial: "What will not be a Perot legacy is any prescription for dealing with the economic woes that were the motivation for his planned candidacy" (7/17). BOSTON GLOBE's David Nyhan: "The next plutocrat from the dreadnought class of the ultra-rich should read Perot's epitaph: 'He can buy it -- but he can't take it'" (7/17). PHILA. INQUIRER editorial: "All hat and no cattle" (7/18). KNIGHT-RIDDER's Carl Cannon compares Perot's candidacy to Dallas Cowboy Ed "Too Tall" Jones' boxing career: "Stiffs nobody heard of gave him all he could handle" (MIAMI HERALD, 7/18). N.Y. TIMES' definition: "Per-ot (puh-ro) v. 1. to give up, esp. when faced with opposition, after rousing millions to a popular cause. ANT. see PERSIST" (7/19). Note sent to Dallas from VA volunteer Mark Adams on ballot certification letter: "Ross, I kept up my end of the deal" (RICHMOND TIMES-DISPATCH, 7/19). Mike Royko: "When [businessmen] sense that the end is near, they do a Perot. Or they run into a courtroom and file for bankruptcy and ask a judge to protect them from the bill collectors" (N.Y. DAILY NEWS, 7/19). K.C. STAR's Rich Hood calls Perot a "fraud": "The only good thing he brought to this campaign was the speed with which he revealed that unsavory fact" (7/19). NEWSWEEK's CW gives no arrow, crossing out Perot's name: "Now here's the beauty part: Billionaire skinflint scams own worshipers. We just love it" (7/27 issue). PHILA. INQUIRER's Polman, writing to Perot as a spurned "sweetheart": "You blew through my life like a summer squall across the prairie, and I don't even have a ring to show for it" (7/19). U.S. NEWS' David Gergen: "As much as Perot energized our politics by the way he started, he diminished it -- and himself -- by the way he quit" (7/27 issue). BOSTON GLOBE's Olpihant: "Not since [VP] George Bush promised never to raise taxes while having no intention of keeping his pledge for more than a year, has someone done as much deep damage to what's left of people's faith in the political process" (7/19).

*6 CLINTON: BOYZ ON THE BUS

"Buoyed by the adrenaline rush of their nominations," Clinton and Gore kicked off their six-day eight-state bus tour with a rally outside of NYC convention headquarters 7/17. Accompanied by their wives, Hillary and Tipper, the team began with "an overt appeal" to Perot supporters. Clinton: "We're going to go back to the heartland of America and into the hearts of Americans. ... We're going to talk to people who were for Perot, the people who are Democrats the people who are Republicans, the people who have given up and dropped out, and build a coalition to reclaim our country's heritage" (Frisby, BOSTON GLOBE, 7/18). Clinton's 1st stop was the NJ T-pike, where the 8-bus caravan "tied up traffic for three miles, possibly costing the Democrats more votes than were gained" (COPLEY, 7/18). NJ Gov. Jim Florio and Rep. Rob Andrews accompanied the caravan from NY to NJ (ARKANSAS DEMOCRAT-GAZETTE, 7/18). Clinton used a stop at the Camden GE plant to highlight his economic plan, "especially its proposals to retain workers" (CHICAGO TRIBUNE, 7/18). Sen. Harris Wofford and LG Mark Singel joined the candidates in PA (Balto. SUN, 7/19). Yesterday, Clinton "was ready with a response" to GOP attacks, particularly those from UT Sen. Jake Garn: "It shows how impoverished they are. They have nothing to say to America, nothing to be for, no record to run on, no vision of the future" (N.Y. TIMES, 7/20).

NOTES FROM THE ROAD: "The trip has been like a tour of Small Town U.S.A. movie sets, through hamlets that all seem to end with 'ville,' or 'town'" (Milligan, N.Y. DAILY NEWS, 7/19). PHILA. INQUIRER's Seelye notes, "Clinton is drawing unexpected and unplanned-for throngs. Events are stretching two hours beyond their allotted time to accommodate the crowds" (7/19). The crowds have been "overwhelmingly white and working class, but campaign sources said that aides are working behind the scenes to add more influential minorities to the campaign team" (Frisby, BOSTON GLOBE, 7/19). MEDIA GENERAL's Goldberg: "Gore proved to be a stronger speaker than Clinton at many stops" (7/19). Trailing behind the lead bus were several buses and vans carrying dozens of staff members, reporters, photographers and TV crews. By tonight, the "buscapade" will have driven about 1,000 miles, continuing through OH, KY, IN, IL, and ending in St. Louis on 7/22 for "a series of rallies and televised town meetings" (CHICAGO TRIBUNE, 7/18). COX NEWS' Shepard: "Clinton appears to be having more fun than at any time before in his roller-coaster campaign" (ATLANTA CONSTITUTION, 7/20). DEMOCRAT-GAZETTE's Lilleston reports, at the first sight of Clinton and Gore in WV, "the people squealed the same high-pitched, teenage-girl squeal that rock stars got in the early 1960s" (7/20). USA TODAY's Nagourney: "If there is one thing that a political convention does, it is to turn a presidential contender into a celebrity" (7/20). N.Y. TIMES' Ifill, COX's Shepard, L.A. TIMES' Decker and W. POST's Gugliotta & Walsh all make JFK comparisons. Shepard notes Clinton and Gore are retracing some steps Kennedy made in a similar '60 tour (CONSTITUTION, 7/20). Decker writes the two "have been doing their best to look like a '90s version of [JFK and RFK], tossing around a football for the television cameras and jogging after church Sunday morning" (L.A. TIMES, 7/20). Louisville COURIER-JOURNAL's Cross reports Clinton said "that he hoped to keep campaigning by bus": "It's a lot more real than just flying around ... and stopping at the airports" (7/20).

THIS MORNING IN AMERICA: Clinton on the bus trip: "What we have to do is keep reaching out to people to where they live, we have to keep reaching to communicate directly with people and really hammer on the issues. ... If we can sustain that energy for four more months we can win in November" ("GMA," ABC, 7/20). Al Gore on voter frustration: "Bush and Quayle have somehow convinced this country that we lost this capacity for change but the American people are tired of excuses, delays ... the job of the president is not to point his finger and blame, the job of president is to lead" ("CBS This Morning," 7/20). Hillary and Tipper appeared on NBC's "Today." Tipper Gore: "We're saying the government will work for the people again and people are responding, we're having crowds that are way beyond what we expected." Hillary Clinton: "Changing America can be an adventure, it can bring hope back." Hillary, on the expected tone of the GOP campaign: "I really wish everybody in the Republican operation would re-read Lee Atwater's article in 'LIFE' magazine before he died, when he regretted the kind of negative campaigning he'd been a part of ... and really called to all of us to love each other a little more" (7/20).

FROM THE CAMERA BUS: ABC's Chris Bury: "Unlike Dukakis in '88, Clinton is determined not to blow his lead by taking time off after the convention. ... What really drives this bus tour, of course, is the campaign's quest to get on television" (7/17). ABC's Ron Claiborne said Clinton's message is "designed not just to appeal to Democrats and disenchanted Republicans, but to former supporters of Ross Perot, who are now left stranded" (7/17). NBC's Bob Kur: "What Clinton hopes to do is keep the focus on economic growth. ... [His] plan is more simple than paying for it, but there is little time for complexities as the campaign rolls through the heartland" (7/19). NBC's Andrea Mitchell: "Now that it is a two man race again, Clinton has to shift back to the old electoral map. He needs to get back the Reagan Democrats, moderates who deserted the party in 1980. ... They are trying to appeal to the middle class swing voter, the people Clinton was targeting in his acceptance speech" (7/17). NBC's Garrick Utley quoting Hillary Clinton: "It is kind of like being on a rock tour." Mitchell added, "The caravan found or produced a Perot supporter who didn't mind having Tipper Gore re-label his vehicle." [Video of Tipper Gore putting Clinton bumper stickers over Perot bumper stickers] (NBC, 7/18).

*7 CLINTON: MORE SPEECH REAX

TIME's Michael Kramer writes, "Clinton's success in [NYC] was the product of three carefully plotted moves": 1) "The creation of a platform that moves the Democratic Party unambiguously to the political center." 2) "The 14-minute biographical film ... began the arduous task of creating empathy for a candidate carrying enough political baggage to fill a container ship." 3) "The acceptance speech itself -- well crafted and eloquently delivered, if a bit long -- was most significant for its contemptuous strikes at Bush" (7/27 issue). N.Y. NEWSDAY's Bruning writes, "analysts generally gave [Clinton] high grades for content and delivery. They liked his clarity, his thoughtfulness, his stabs at humor. But they also thought he could use an editor -- or an alarm clock" (7/18). N.Y. TIMES' Quindlen: "Clinton broke the fourth wall, the barrier between the actor and the audience, the scribe between the glib circumlocutions and the stump speech and the yearning in ordinary Americans for recognition in the commonplace crisis of their lives" (7/19). COX NEWS' Baxter called it "the rhetorical equivalent of a Grateful Dead concert" (ATLANTA CONSTITUTION, 7/20). W. TIMES header: "Clinton repeats 1988 mistake with speech length" (7/18). N.Y. TIMES' Kolbert notes none of the nets "chose to air the bulk" of Clinton's biographical film, "preferring instead to offer their own versions of [Clinton's] biography. Thus, at the same time PBS viewers were watching Chelsea Clinton practice batting with her dad, CBS viewers were being treated to surveillance film that got Mr. Clinton's half brother, Roger, arrested on drug charges, and ABC viewers were listening to some reporters from Arkansas accuse Mr. Clinton pandering" (7/18). U.S. NEWS' Cooper: "Clinton has begun to explain how his biography might make him a great leader. But he'll need to do more" (7/27 issue). N.Y. POST's Jeff Greenfield: "too long, too clunky, sounding at times as if it had been written by a committee eager to include everything" (7/20). W. POST Richard Cohen: "Clinton may have what it takes to be a great president, but not to give a great speech." The speech "was not written for history or even to be read" (7/20). Under header "Behind Enemy Lines," ex-Reagan/Bush speechwriter Peggy Noonan: "a weak cup of coffee, somewhat stimulating but essentially insubstantial. ... Clinton has survived a great deal this year. But one wonders: At the core, where it counts, what is there?" (NEWSWEEK, 7/27 issue). NEWSWEEK's Joe Klein: "In a week when Ross Perot broke a million hearts" and Bush was gone fishing, "Clinton was there, solid, persistent, maybe even dependable" (7/27 issue).

MISCELLANY: NEWSWEEK's CW gives Clinton up arrow: "We'll have that 'First 100 Days' memo on your desk by morning, Mr. President." Hillary also gets an arrow up: "Great makeover but still a tough cookie. CW betting on Barbara to win image bake-off" (7/27 issue). U.S. NEWS' cites concern in Clinton's camp over who's in charge. "At present, the Clinton campaign has many chiefs." Among them national chair Mickey Kantor, commun. dir. George Stephanopoulos, DGA exec. dir. Mark Gearan and Hillary Clinton. Kantor, "one of the few middle-aged advisers in the thirty-something entourage, is considered the only one who could assume a James Baker-like role as both chief strategist and consigliere. But sources say Kantor rejects authority, and, as a result, all key decisions ultimately have been approved by Clinton himself." One aide: "It's a mess" (7/27 issue). Clinton's repeated references during his speech to Hope, AR, not Hot Springs, as his hometown "have mildly irked some Spa City residents" (ARKANSAS DEMOCRAT-GAZETTE, 7/18). Ex-AR beauty queen Sally Miller Perdue reiterated her claim on "Sally Jesse Raphael" that she had an affair with Bill Clinton. Anna Lessenby, one of the four people Perdue says know about the affair, also appeared on the program. Lessenby said she never saw the two together and would vote for Clinton (DEMOCRAT-GAZETTE, 7/18). 8 AR delegates who attended the convention said they were "duped" into attending the show. Tickets were sent to them with explanation that Raphael wanted to talk to them about "the real Bill Clinton" (DEM-GAZETTE, 7/28). AR GOP chair Sheffield Nelson once again called on Clinton to resign and "let our state have a full-time governor" (DEM-GAZETTE, 7/18). On courting the young, U.S. NEWS' Barone notes, "It is hard to see how Bush can win a majority of over-50s without utterly discrediting Clinton" (7/27 issue).

WE'RE IN THE MONEY: On the same night Clinton delivered his acceptance speech, in which he criticized "the stranglehold of special interests have on our elections," he took "a limousine uptown to a $1,000 to $5,000-a-plate fund-raiser." Organizers estimated they took in $4M for the Party, "which will in turn use most of it to help Clinton" (Demick, KNIGHT-RIDDER, 7/19). The FEC awarded a $55M subsidy to the Clinton camp 7/17 "to help pay the bills through election day" (N.Y. TIMES, 7/19).

ABORTION: N.Y. TIMES' Barringer reports Clinton aides, such as ex-CoS Betsey Wright, call Clinton's history with abortion a process of "evolution," while Nat'l Right to Life spokesperson Nancy Myers calls it "pretty slippery." Clinton and Gore "have clearly shifted their emphasis on abortion-related issues" and Ayers traces their stances on the issue (7/20). NBC's Bob Kur on Clinton's road trip: "Anti-abortion activists show up almost everywhere and [7/19], during a broadcast to several religious congregations, Clinton responded to a priest who questioned the candidate's abortion rights position." Clinton: "I just think that my job as president and your job as priest are two different jobs." Kur: "Abortion is one of the issues where there's a clear difference between Clinton and Bush and that difference is expected to be highlighted throughout this campaign" (7/19). CBS' Richard Threlkeld: "In Wheeling, Clinton raised doubts about his stand on abortion." Threlkeld on what Clinton said of litmus tests. He reported Clinton "said, quote, 'I have no intention of giving somebody a test'" (7/19)

*8 GORE: RUNNING-MATE AND NAVIGATOR

KNIGHT-RIDDER's Huckshorn asks, "So what if Al Gore keeps upstaging Bill Clinton?" GOP pollster Linda DiVall on Gore's speech: "Gore did look more presidential." A woman's fundraiser: "You remember Barbie? Well this is Ken and Ken." A "likely rivalry" could develop between Clinton and Gore, "whose nearly identical qualifications, could create friction and jealousy." DiVall: "Gore is too good a politician to take the limelight away from Clinton." GOP pollster Bill McInturff: "If Al Gore was all that spiffy, he would have done a whole lot better in 1988" (7/19). A "special GOP hit team" on hand at the Dem Convention indicated some of Gore's clean air initiatives "will be attacked as economically harmful" -- and described one that will "rob jobs" from coal miners. They also hit Gore's '81 opposition to Reagan's placement of Pershing II missiles in Europe -- a "thrust widely credited with helping force Soviet officials to engage in serious arms control talks." GOP rhetorical preview: "I'd rather have a President who knows nothing about foreign policy than one who listens to Al Gore" (L.A. TIMES, 7/20). Germond & Witcover examine how Gore as VP "will help put the president's legislative program over on Capitol Hill" (Balto. SUN, 7/18). NEWSWEEK's CW gives Gore an up arrow: "Don't tell Al Gorgeous white guys can't dance. What time is it? Your time" (7/27 issue).

FACE THE NATION's Bob Schieffer asked Sen. Bob Dole (R-KS) to compare Quayle and Gore. Dole: "Well, personally, I like both of them. I think they're both good people. But Al Gore is a liberal and Dan Quayle is a conservative, so the American people have a real choice" (CBS, 7/19).

*9 CONVENTION: HUNGOVER AND HAPPY

Under header "Reborn to Win, the Democrats Party On," N.Y. TIMES' Rich & Dowd write, "Gone was the exciting, unruly street theater that had helped the Democrats lose five of the last six elections" (7/19). TIMES' Carlson writes, the convention "was a Norman Rockwell tableau that could persuade older voters that the first all-baby-boomer ticket won't ignore them, signaling that while they may be the younger generation, they are still the type to bring the grandchildren home for the holidays. Bush's campaign staff back in Washington, wowed by the display, was hit with the realization that Clinton and Gore are prepared to fight for every bit of schmaltzy turf this time around" (7/27 issue). PHILA. INQUIRER header: "Democrats got their act together." Subhead: "Instead of squabbling, they tried something different: Orderliness" (7/19). W. POST editorial: "The Democrats seem to be in better shape heading into the ring than they have been for a long time" (7/19). NEWSWEEK's CW rates Cuomo an arrow up: "Gracious, powerful at the podium. But watch your back Bill. Sometimes he can't stop himself." Jackson is down: "I ... am ... nobody. For now. Moving speech but it's moving you into party's past. Get a real job." Jerry Brown gets arrow down: "Hogged coverage, dissed sis by doing CNN while she addressed delegates. Go back to Calcutta." Ron Brown gets arrow up: "Party chief helps tame Jesse, Mario. New York City choice clicks: Only two delegates mugged." TV nets get arrow down: "Pundit overload. Honey, find C-Span so we can see what's really going on" (7/27 issue). COPLEY NEWS' Barabak calls Clinton a winner who has "much reason to gloat." Gore is a winner for his "yeoman's work throughout the week touching all the bases while Clinton was regally secluded working on his address." Bush and Perot are losers (7/18).

MR. CHAIRMAN: Dems are "praising" DNC chair Ron Brown, "as a star who kept his poise, kept peace among party factions and made the [DNC] an independent force in politics" (Nolan, BOSTON GLOBE, 7/19). "As he basks in the glow of a wildly successful" convention, Brown "is contemplating what to do when his four-year term expires later this year. Friends say he's hoping for a Cabinet post in a Clinton Administration." A source close to Brown says he wants to be Sec./State (TIME, 7/27 issue). N.Y. TIMES' Ayres reports Brown's emergence "as perhaps the most dominant convention figure" (7/20).

RATINGZZZ: Nightly viewership of the convention on the Big Three declined 17% from '88. About 23.5 million viewers each night watched the convention on the networks while 1.78 million watched it on CNN (Greppi, N.Y. POST, 7/20). L.A. TIMES reports 28.1 million tuned into the networks for Clinton's acceptance speech and 5.6 million watched him on CNN and PBS. ABC won the convention ratings game with 5.5 million viewers for all 4 nights, CBS was 2nd with 5.2M and NBC trailed with 5.1M. Ratings were not available for MTV, Comedy Central, Spanish television stations or C-SPAN (7/20).

*10 BUSH: ON THE ATTACK; "L" WORD RETURNS

"In a surprisingly early attack" on the Dem ticket, President Bush "charged" Clinton and Gore "come from the left wing of the party despite their moderate political rhetoric." Bush, "breaking his own promise to ignore" Clinton until after the GOP convention, quoted George McGovern, who said Clinton and Gore "are much more liberal underneath and will prove it when they're elected." The "attack" by Bush "appeared to be aimed at offsetting" Clinton's "bump" in the polls. Bush-Quayle chairman Bob Teeter "said the GOP never expected to be this far behind in the midsummer polls" (Bedard, W. TIMES, 7/19). The speech, at BYU in Salt Lake City "was billed as non-partisan" but "had the unmistakable air of a political rally." Bush "made a strong pitch for an all-Republican Congress" and "touted his campaign's 'family values' theme and vowed to 'break the gridlock' in Washington" (Sirica, N.Y. NEWSDAY, 7/19). Sen. Jake Garn (R-UT), who gave the opening remarks for Bush, and "dismissed" Clinton and Gore as "pretty boys" adding they "have spent their entire waking moments since they were teen-agers planning and plotting their political careers. Neither of them have held a real job" (W. TIMES, 7/19). Garn "denounced" Clinton for enrolling in ROTC to avoid the draft and said he would have "disagreed" with Clinton but "still would have respected him" had he "openly avoided the draft by fleeing to Canada": "We don't need those kinds of politicians in either party" (N.Y. TIMES, 7/19). Manager Fred Malek: "It's not up to us to attack the draft record, to bring it out. ... It's already a matter of public record and the voters can decide for themselves" ("Meet the Press," NBC, 7/19). Clinton/Gore spokesperson Dee Dee Myers on the draft issue: "He put himself back in the lottery. He drew a high number. I think the American people know that." Bush-Quayle spokesperson Torie Clarke: "If George Bush is going to be judged on his record, you can be damn sure Bill Clinton's record and what he has done in the past will be fair game as well" (Marcus, W. POST, 7/19). BOSTON GLOBE's Kranish reports Bush's "appearance in Utah had been scheduled when the Bush campaign had concern that Ross Perot had a chance to win the traditionally Republican state" (7/19). BYU spokesperson Margaret Smoot said of the supposedly non-partisan rally, "We wanted President Bush, we got candidate Bush." Smoot also "said that the White House had wanted a full-blown Republican rally on campus -- complete with elephants, fireworks and skydivers -- but that the university had limited it to speeches" (REUTERS, 7/19). The 2-pronged effort "to restart" Bush's "sputtering campaign" hopes to raise his "dismal" approval ratings with a new push on the economy and "blunt" Clinton's "surge by redrawing him as a high-taxing, high-spending liberal" (Rosenthal, N.Y. TIMES, 7/19).

GOING TO THE HEARTLAND: ABC's Carol Simpson: "Shaken by the latest poll results, President Bush made an appearance ... before an audience guaranteed to give him a hero's welcome." ABC's Brit Hume on Bush's BYU appearance: "[Bush] found today something he's rarely seen this rocky political year -- a large and cheering crowd. ... Senior Bush political advisers said this was his best event yet and it seemed to be. ... But they also said they never expected him to be this far behind, even in the aftermath of the [Dem] convention" (7/18). NBC's Jim Miklaszewski: "The Bush campaign is running scared. ... One Bush aide said, they never thought Bush would be this far behind, and they expect it to get worse. ... Despite some renewed vigor today, Bush sounded at one point as if his heart just wasn't in it. ... Bush aides believe that Perot has not set out to save his own hide and reputation and not some political movement" (7/18).

INTERNAL BICKERING, EXTERNAL ATTACKS: ABC's Jack Smith: "With [Bush] and his advisers reportedly still divided over an economic package, Bush campaign aides ... stuck to attacks on Clinton as a man with a liberal agenda. ... The emerging [GOP] strategy is apparently to smear Clinton as an old-fashioned, tax-and-spend Democrat, while [Dems] tar George Bush as the Herbert Hoover of the 1990's whose only domestic agenda is re-election" (7/19). NEWSWEEK's Conventional Wisdom gives Bush a down arrow, "waist-deep in doodoo, hyper tension city, gotta unleash Chiang. Message: Hellllp!" (7/27 issue).

BAKER: Under header "Signs of Baker job shift grow" USA Today's Neuman reports top aides Dennis Ross, Robert Zoellick and Grace Moe "are expected to leave with Baker." Baker on whether he and Bush discussed politics: "It would not be realistic to think that we did not discuss this election year. Indeed we did." Signs pointing to "a potential Baker departure" include State Dept. spokesperson Margaret Tutweiler as well as deputy spokesperson Richard Boucher, both on the Mideast trip with Baker so that Boucher "would step in if Tutweiler accompanied Baker to the White House" (7/20). TIME's Duffy writes, "if anyone at the White House had doubts that George Bush was in trouble, the President's visit to last week's All-Star game must have dispelled them." Bush was booed as he walked to the pitcher's mound, "not exactly the image he wished to convey to roughly 22 million television viewers." Duffy adds scenes like these "have sent Bush tumbling in the polls and fueled speculation" Sec./State Jim Baker will "put aside his diplomatic portfolio and bail out his old friend once again" (7/27 issue). Campaign "insiders said a Baker transition" from the State Dept. was "under active consideration and seemed likely to happen next month" (Holland, REUTERS, 7/19). Bush's "top lieutenants were busy fending off" questions about a possible Baker return but "they declined every opportunity to say 'no'" (Molotsky, N.Y., TIMES, 7/20). U.S. NEWS' Walsh writes, Bush "friends and allies warn that his administration is hanging by a thread." Bush though, "remains strangely becalmed -- willing to gamble that 1992 will turn out to be the same kind of campaign as was 1988." Bush "has insisted all along that only tactical shifts are necessary." Along with Baker joining the campaign, "senior officials expect" ex-VP Bush CoS Craig Fuller "to take a leave of absence" from his lobbying job to "serve as senior counselor" and Barbara Bush will "camp out" in CA, "to promote the theme of traditional values." Many GOP strategists "think these moves won't be enough." "Several senior advisers and Bush friends" have urged the president to "immediately formulate a compelling message for the next four years." Among the ideas "under consideration" are large, unilateral budget cuts through use of a "line item veto" to "provoke a constitutional fight with Congress" (7/27 issue). Cal Thomas writes, "George Bush Jr. fired the manager of his Texas Rangers baseball team because he thought the club was too far out of first place. ... President Bush had better make his own managerial change now and put Jim Baker in charge" (W. TIMES, 7/19). Manager Fred Malek on Baker: "Whatever Jim Baker does in the future, I know he will do a great job either as Secretary of State or any other role." Bush/Quayle chair Robert Teeter: "We're going to let the President answer that question." CBS' Randall Pinkston: "Insiders are predicting, it's not a question of whether Baker will come aboard, but when. The most likely scenario has Baker overseeing not only the campaign, but the White House operation now headed by Sam Skinner." Skinner: "We've got a very tough race here. ... We'll do whatever is necessary" (CBS, 7/19). ABC's Hal Bruno: "Baker will be coming to the White House sooner rather than later. The plot is to have him take a leave of absence from the State Dept. and have Larry Eagleburger be the acting Secretary of State and Baker be in the White House, not in the campaign. ... They need somebody there who has a peer level with the President who can talk to him on-on-one and Jim Baker can do that who also has superb knowledge of politics so it's going to happen before the Republican convention" ("GMA," ABC, 7/20).

HOMEWARD BOUND: "Hoping to focus on the boom of the 1980's rather than the bust of the early 1990's" the GOP convention will kick off with a foreign policy speech by Ronald Reagan on the opening night of the convention. RNC chair Rich Bond said Reagan will be "talking about the journey that he's taken through America and through the world and how he has helped shaped, along with George Bush, those changes and how much they mean to us everyday Americans." The RNC invited all three GOP ex-presidents, with Reagan the first to accept. Richard Nixon "already declined" and Gerald Ford "has yet to say if he will attend" (HOUSTON CHRONICLE, 7/17). "The daily press conferences by the GOP 'truth squads'" have "clearly given the Democrats something to think about." DNC chair Ron Brown "made it clear the Democrats will not assume the traditional posture of lying low" during the GOP convention. Brown: "Clearly there will be an awful lot of campaign activities during the Republican convention, so you'll be hearing a lot from Democrats." Asked if there would be activity in Houston, Brown: "There will be people all over the country" (Kiely, HOUSTON POST, 7/19). Bush-Quayle manager Fred Malek on Pat Buchanan: "Pat Buchanan has strong convictions. He's expressed them well. I expect that he will support the president and I expect that he'll have a role at the convention. ... I don't know whether he'll speak or not. We haven't really addressed that yet" ("Meet the Press," NBC, 7/19). Operation Rescue's Terry Randall said his group will "have mostly demonstrations, but also rescues" in Houston during the GOP convention (Pope, HOUSTON CHRONICLE, 7/19). GOP convention spokesperson on the Dem convention "revealing" 2 "professional" balloon drops planned for the GOP convention: "I think their balloon drop looked pathetic" (Root, HOUSTON POST, 7/19).

MUD WATCH: Floyd Brown's Gennifer Flowers phone line generated $38,000 in the 36 hours before it was temporarily halted (HOUSTON POST, 7/19).

QUOTABLE: Bush-Quayle political dir Mary Matalin on Clinton: "You cannot define yourself by being all things to all people. ... He's a pastel watercolor with all the hues running into each other. There are no hard edges to this guy" (N.Y. TIMES, 7/19).

*11 BUSH: THE IRAQ PAPERS; AND OTHER ISSUES OF THE DAY

L.A. TIMES' Frantz & Waas report on "how the Administration systematically sought to keep some of its most sensitive Iraq papers under wraps, while trying to avoid a full-blown confrontation with Congress." The TIMES uses "previously undisclosed" records and documents released from congressional committees, and interviews to "describe a history of assistance to Baghdad dating back to the early days" of the Bush admin. The records show after Rep. Doug Barnard (D-GA) asked the Commerce Dept for its records in order to see if they "had been lax in monitoring exports to Iraq" Bush advisor Robert Mosbacher "monitored" information coming out of Commerce. The records also indicate a WH "debate" on information protected by Executive privilege, and "a plan was broached for having Mosbacher risk a criminal contempt charge by refusing to turn over material." Author Terry Eastland: "One thing that now occurs in the post-Watergate era is the fear of an impeachment effort, not because someone has done anything wrong, but because someone else could present a theory of a kind of conduct that will be regarded as impeachable" (7/19). Bush was "warned" in '89 by CIA officials "that failure to approve" a $1B "agricultural loan guarantee program to Iraq would create further tensions in American-Iraqi relations." The warning came in a CIA brief which also contained warnings about the Atlanta branch of the Banca Nazionale del Lavoro. "At the same time" officials at the Agriculture and State Depts. were "warning their superiors" Iraq was "paying for its weapons programs with loans" from the Atlanta bank. A senior administration official said, "although there were a lot of suspicions that the loans were being used to fund those networks, I don't think we had a comprehensive picture of the B.N.L." (Sciolino, N.Y. TIMES, 7/19).

"LITTLE SOMETHING": Bush "will renew efforts to push" his economic growth plan through Congress "relying on proposals he made almost six months ago" in the State of the Union speech, but adding "a little something to them" according to campaign chair Robert Teeter. "Even the [WH's] chief Senate ally" Min. Leader Bob Dole "seemed skeptical": "Let's have a vote on it and see what happens. ... If we can pass it, we might have a little breakthrough. But it's not going to turn the economy around." Teeter and Dole, appearing on CBS' "Face the Nation," 7/19 "declined to be specific" about Bush's proposals, but Teeter said Bush was "convinced ..." had the Democrats passed them, [they] would have stimulated the economy by now." Clinton communications dir. George Stephanopoulos, appearing on ABC's "Brinkley" said Bush was trying to "divert attention" from his economic record: "So they blame Congress. Blame, blame, blame" (Wagner, W. POST, 7/20).

JOBS, JOBS, JOBS: The WH "plans to make a big push on an updated version of its growth package" which Bush outlined in his State of the Union address. The "strategy is to throw Democrats in Congress on the defensive" for failing to act on Bush's proposals, but some officials "say that significant new elements must be added" to the plan. HUD/Sec. Jack Kemp: "The Republican Party cannot defend the status quo, which is Latin for 'the mess we're in.'" The "renewed push" on an economic proposal "appears to be a victory" for Quayle and Council of Economic Advisors chair Michael Boskin, who have "asserted that playing Pollyanna on the economy would hurt" Bush's re-election. An unnamed WH official: "We have been right on this issue. We shouldn't accept the blame. We should remind people that we have had a growth agenda. We're much better off reminding people that we haven't had cooperation in Congress" (Greenhouse, W. POST, 7/19). Teeter: "[Bush's] main thrust is going to be to get those economic proposals passed that he was convinced, had the Democrats passed them, would have stimulated the economy by now, would have gotten us some stronger economic growth, and we would not have had the unemployment we have" ("Nation," CBS, 7/19).

12 QUAYLE: RUMOR MILL A'CHURNIN'

N.Y. POST's Orin reports Bush dumping Quayle rumors are the "hot buzz in the political world, but the catch is, only among Democrats." Dem pollster Harrison Hickman: "If I were Quayle, I'd be nervous. ... You've got to think if Quayle walked into the Oval Office and offered his resignation, Bush wouldn't say no." Although rumors even designate possible replacements -- JCS Chair Gen. Colin Powell, HUD/Sec. Jack Kemp or Sec./State Jim Baker -- GOPers "insist there's no way the president will do anything of the sort." CoS Sam Skinner: "Nothing to it" (7/20). Skinner on rumors Bush was "once again ... suffering from an unidentified health problem": "There's no basis whatsoever." On rumors Quayle "would quit the vice-presidency in a effort to boost" Bush's effort: "Not that I know of, I'm sure it isn't true" (COPLEY, 7/18). TV: CBS' Wyatt Andrews: "Quayle may be jump starting the [GOP] campaign ... but there remain rumors, he won't be on the [GOP] ticket come August." Quayle: "That's the President's decision, and I will do exactly what the President wants, and the President has addressed that issue a number of times" (CBS, 7/17).

TV BASHES BACK: "Murphy Brown" creator Diane English said the first show of the season will open with a "swipe" at Quayle: "All I can say is I'm really happy, because it's going to be a hell of a lead in to my new show" (Graham, USA TODAY, 7/20).

*13 CONNECTICUT: BURNHAM WINS PARTY BACKING; STILL FACES PRIMARY

The CT GOP convention endorsed state Rep./Gulf War vet Chris Burnham 7/19, but businessman Brook Johnson won 38% of the delegates -- more than the 20% needed to force a 9/15 primary. The 782-479 vote for Burnham "is only the first hurdle the badly underfunded candidate must overcome." Johnson has been airing TV ads for several weeks and is starting a bus tour of 30 CT towns 7/21. "Political operatives rate his chances of beating Burnham as good." Johnson didn't address the convention "but he showed strength among the party leaders," including Reps. Nancy Johnson (R-06) and Gary Franks (R-05). B. Johnson: "I can't tell you how many people came up to me and said, 'I was with Chris Burnham today; I will be with Brook Johnson tomorrow.'" Burnham "promised to walk across the state and wage a grassroots campaign" (Spivack/Waldman, HARTFORD COURANT, 7/19). Johnson has said he is willing to spend $4M of his own money to defeat Sen. Chris Dodd (D), "while Burnham says he hopes he can raise" $2.5M (Hanrahan, NEW HAVEN REGISTER, 7/19). N.Y. TIMES' Johnson writes "some party members said that sparks raised by the fight" between Johnson and Burnham could be "the only hope of raising name recognition of either man to put him within striking distance" of Dodd. Also, last week Gov. Lowell Weicker (I) sent a letter to members of his "tiny" A Connecticut Party, "urging them to endorse" Dodd. Weicker's party controls the top ballot line and would allow Dodd to be on the ballot twice (7/19).

*14 ILLINOIS: WILLIAMSON CLAIMS DIXON VOTERS

Atty Rich Williamson (R) predicted supporters of outgoing Sen. Alan Dixon (D-IL) "will cross party lines in large numbers to support" him. Williamson: "An awful lot of Dixon Democrats are going to feel a lot more comfortable with Rich Williamson and his conservative philosophy than with Carol Moseley Braun, an ultraliberal from the Chicago machine." Williamson charged Cook Co. Recorder of Deeds Braun (D), "would be the senator for the special interests of women and blacks and Chicagoans, while he would represent the interests of everyone equally" (Gauen, ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH, 7/17). Williamson also said Perot's withdrawal will help him: "Braun and myself will receive greater scrutiny, and she will not be able to withstand the questioning that must eventually occur" (Williamson release, 7/18). CHICAGO SUN-TIMES' Neal reports Dem "strategists are concerned that Braun may be spending too much time" outside IL and Dem "politicians are concerned that Braun may be more interested in preaching to the converted than in expanding her political base." Neal writes, "Her campaign is in more disarray than Ross Perot's was Thursday. ... Braun ought to be focusing on the place where the votes are" (7/17).
