REC'D TOO LATE TO FILE-
FILED BY BUSH LIBRARY STAFF,

call Terri

12/22/92

Mr. President:

✓ Teri Lacy called. Said she talked with Jack Fitch and everything is straightened out. It's back to the amount agreed upon $3,000 a month, with Secret Service paying a portion of it.

✓ 2) If you wait until after January 20, Jack Fitch will give you the extra 8 feet at no charge. This would push construction back to January 22 and completion around October 22. Wants to know if you want them to do that. It amounts to $14,000. Otherwise, Fitch said he would forgive some of the rent to equal that amount. This would take longer and Teri thought it would be cleaner to delay construction. Is this what you want.

✓ 3) She talked with Rich Miller about the new house. She knows you agreed not to charge them rent, but do you want to charge them for the finish out costs, which is about $45,000. She needs you to clarify this with her.

Dear Bud,

George sent me that wonderful invitation to accept that prestigious award of the Headliner's Foundation. The special appeal to me is that it bears the name of your great Dad.

My problem is I am very unclear as to what the future holds, where I'll be in the spring, what other commitments I will have made. I guess what I am saying is I cannot accept this honor at this time; but if you care to contact me later on after I return to Houston I'd be glad to hear from you.

I mean it when I say I am truly honored by the thought.

Most Sincerely,

Ag Bush

Dear Mr. President,

It is with pleasure and respect that I, on behalf of the Headliners Foundation of Texas, invite you to accept the Governor Allan Shivers Public Service Award. This tribute was inaugurated, with my father's consent and knowledge, in February 1985, just weeks after his death. The first recipient was Senator Lloyd Bentsen. In discussions with my father there were only two people whom he felt lived up to the standard he requested for this award - Senator Bentsen and yourself. The Headliners Foundation will celebrate its 10th Anniversary this spring, and I know my father, as its first chairman, would be extremely proud if you were to accept this award during this anniversary. The date for the event can be flexible according to your schedule.

The Headliners Foundation would be happy to arrange a seminar at The University of Texas on the world after the collapse of the Communist Bloc featuring you and hopefully Secretary Baker and Ambassador Strauss. We'd be happy to present a tape of such an event to the Bush Presidential Library at Texas A&M University.

We look forward to hearing from you soon. My mother, Robin and I hope you and all the Bush family have a very happy holiday season.

Sincerely,

Allan Shivers, Jr.

Barbara & George
Dear Barbara and George:

The stupid American people deserve what they're probably going to get during the next four years. How could they not return the finest couple that ever graced the White House?

I do want to correct something George supposedly said, and that was that he takes the full blame for the loss. Much of that blame has to go to the right-wing Reaganites who, unfortunately, I could not get Mr. Sununu to remove from the bureaucracy, and now I believe maybe he was one of their leaders. Nor could I get Mr. Skinner to do it. Jim indicated if you were re-elected, he would take care of that in a hurry. Unfortunately, it was too late. And the right-wingers in Congress helped contribute to our defeat.

The smart spoiled brat that ran against me as an independent from Mr. Kemp's office got put in his place regularly because I referred to the 1981 tax bill and the 1986 program as voodoo economics, because that's just exactly what it was. They overreacted with too much in the 1981 tax bill and then did nothing to cut spending, and of course heated up the economy by spending tax dollars to purchase military goods from the private sector. In 1986, they overreacted again by totally eliminating some of the important things that were included in the 1981 package. Toward the end my opponent never came around with that Kemp baloney that you can grow out of the deficit or deficits don't matter, it's how you manage them. Kemp always used to use Japan as an example, but Japan has more than enough problems at the present time.

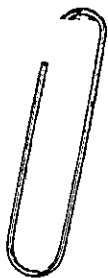

Thanks a million for the service both of you gave to this great country. I am very proud of the fact that I was part of your efforts during the last thirteen years. Best wishes for a most enjoyable future.

Sincerely,

Bill

Dear Mr. President,

It distresses me to write this letter. It should on the merits be a letter congratulating you on your re-election. Alas, America's voters did not do so. This is, of course, their right, but I feel quite strongly that they made a very profound mistake.

You have been a great President and richly deserved re-election. It has been a distinct honor and privilege to have served during your tenure as President and to have followed your leadership. You have had my support since 1980, and I have always been and remain proud and grateful for the decency, dignity, and dedication you have brought to public service.

Rest assured that you retain the affection, respect, and gratitude of every thoughtful American. Please convey the best wishes of Herb and Laura Bateman to Barbara. The two of you are very special to us and ever will be. Be of good cheer. You have served faithfully and with distinction.

Dear President and Mrs. Bush:

I wish it were possible for the Presiding Bishop, Ed Browning, and me to sit down and talk with you personally about an exciting and unprecedented mission by the Episcopal Church in St. Petersburg, Russia. The situation in Russia today, however, requires immediate care, attention and action. As the winter fast approaches at this Christmas Season, your help is critically needed.

The great and troubled land of Russia is in desperate need of medical care, supplies and equipment. There is also a serious need for food and organized systems of food distribution. In this historic and timely partnership with the Russian Orthodox Church, the Episcopal Church, through the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief, is supplying monies, expertise, supplies and equipment to establish St. Xenia's Church Medical Center and St. Xenia's Food Bank in St. Petersburg. St. Xenia's is the first of its kind for the Church. Immediate need for food, distribution facilities and systems, health care and supplies is critical.

I am writing today to ask you for a gift of $100,000, $50,000, $25,000 or a general support gift of $10,000 for St. Xenia's.

THE MOST REV. EDMOND L. BROWNING, Presiding Bishop

The Reverend Benjamin Pao
The Reverend Henry N. Parsley, Jr.

The Right Reverend Victor A. Scantlebury
Mrs. Marcia Pierce Steele
Mr. C. Robertson Trowbridge
Mrs. Ann Vest

His Holiness, Aleksy II, Patriarch of Moscow and all Russia, has recently stated that St. Xenia's is the most important ecumenical symbol between the Russian Orthodox and Episcopal Churches. Chief pastor and leader to some seventy five million Christians of the Russian Orthodox Church, the burden upon Aleksy and the Church in Russia are many and considerable. He, the Church and the people of Russia need our help today.

Amidst political instability, food shortages and great economic uncertainty, a potentially dangerous winter is ahead. We do not know what the future holds for Russia. We can say with certainty, however, that St. Xenia's provides tangible and far reaching witness of the promise of Christianity after years of failed and broken regimes. Because of St. Xenia's, Christianity is promise and hope to literally thousands in need in St. Petersburg at this winter and Christmas of 1992.

Without The Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief, St. Xenia's would not be prepared to implement a food bank and delivery program this winter in St. Petersburg, a city of some five million inhabitants. Without The Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief, St. Xenia's would not be prepared for the completion of a five-story, one hundred and fifty thousand square foot general hospital, and a two-story, twenty thousand square foot outpatient facility (picture enclosed).

Without the help of a growing number of Episcopalians and friends of the Episcopal Church from throughout the United States, The Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief would not be able to serve these immediate and tremendous mission opportunities at St. Xenia's Church Medical Center and Food Bank.

Over $400,000 is needed by The Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief by January 15th to assist St. Xenia's with food, food deliveries, medicines, medical supplies and equipment, building renovations and on-site staff needs. While great progress is being made, we need your help especially at this time. Specific need proposals and information are enclosed for your review and consideration. Please call me at my direct line in New York at (212) 922-5146 or send a fax at (212) 983-6377 if you have any questions about these proposals, or need any additional information of any kind.

You are one of a number of individuals and leaders from throughout the Episcopal Church and country that I have written by overnight mail to ask for your urgent and prayerful consideration of St. Xenia's. The Fund is hard at work meeting challenges and needs throughout our own country and the world. This has been a year of disaster, riot, famine and seemingly unprecedented human suffering at times. The Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief acts in your name. In the name of Jesus Christ. Every day- worldwide- providing compassion, care and hope.

In the words of Barry Menuez, Deputy for the Presiding Bishop's Fund, "St. Xenia's is an outstanding example of the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief's mission as one of the most responsive, efficient and compassionate ministries of Jesus Christ in the world today." Will you help? Will you send your gift of $100,000, $50,000, $25,000, or a general support gift of $10,000 today, or by January 15th so that we can move forward with our plans for the general hospital, outpatient clinic and food bank?

You, your help and prayers are critical to St. Xenia's and the Fund over these next days. Please join our efforts by sending your gift today. Thank you, and God bless you.

Please make all gifts payable to "D&FMS" (The Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society- the corporate name of the Episcopal Church). Be sure to note "PBFWR/St. Xenia's" in the memo portion of your check. And remember to contact me here in New York if I can answer any questions or supply you with additional information. A pre-paid Federal Express return mailer addressed to me here at the Fund is enclosed for your convenience.

On behalf of the Presiding Bishop, The Board of Directors and all of us here at the Fund, we wish for you and your family this Christmas and always that your hearts be filled with the hope and joy given us by God through the Holy Child.

Faithfully,

Timothy Scott Holder
Director of Development

P.S. If you are interested in seeing the work of the Presiding Bishop's Fund at St. Xenia's first hand, I would like to discuss with you the possibility of your joining a delegation now being invited by the Presiding Bishop to visit St. Petersburg in upcoming weeks. Please let me know if you might be interested in visiting Russia this winter.

OUR VIEWS

Bush

Going out as a truly 'class act'

At his speech at Texas A&M University, where his presidential papers will be housed, President George Bush gave a hallmark speech.

Wise words

■ "Our choice as a people is simple: We can either shape our times or they can shape us — and shape us, they will."
— President George Bush

Bush's foreign policy emphasis was the focus of criticism from both within and without his party. Democrat Bill Clinton honed in on domestic woes that needed attention. Conservative GOP candidate Patrick

Buchanan also advocated "America First!"

But, at College Station, to a cheering crowd, Bush spoke of his great accomplishments, the signal events under his tenure in which he had a hand:

- The fall of the Berlin Wall.
- The unification of Germany.
- The collapse of communism.
- Reduction of nuclear missiles.
- The Gulf War.
- The rise of the United Nations as an effective player in the New World Order.

■ The beginning of substantive Mideast peace talks.

Despite those who tout the pointed message that it was "the economy, stupid!" that dethroned 12 years of a Republican White House, Bush goes unashamed.

His achievements will be heralded in the history books, for he surely cast a lasting image on the world stage.

It's true that America votes its pocketbook — the same adage that defeated former president Jimmy Carter.

But Bush has much to be proud of. Think of all the major events of the past decade in which he played a part.

Here's hoping that presidential pup "Millie" will not be the only one of the Bush clan to publish memoirs. With a month left in office, Bush is going out as a class act.

"Proud of its past, America must once again look forward. And we must live up to the greatness of our forefathers' ideals and, in doing so, secure our grandchildren's futures," he said. Noble words, indeed!

Isolation from world events cannot be connected with the lone superpower, however urgent our domestic needs. Only a balance can be drawn to fulfill our nation's destiny.

Monetary Policy: Malpractice At the Fed

By JAMES M. BUCHANAN
And DAVID I. FAND

The Federal Reserve system's Open Market Committee has something to ponder when it meets Tuesday. The FOMC, the Shadow Open Market Committee (the FOMC's self-appointed watchdog) and the Bush administration have all misunderstood the dramatic effects exerted on the national economy by the failure of large numbers of depository institutions (S&Ls and banks) and the imposition of more stringent capital requirements on banks. These effects are measured, economically, by the prolonged multiple-dip recession of the 1990s and, politically, by the electoral defeat of George Bush.

The government was obligated by legislative action to protect depositors of the failed S&Ls, regardless of asset values. At the same time, the Fed was obligated to insulate the economy generally (and the citizenry as taxpayers) from any deflationary or inflationary effects that may have accompanied the S&L bailout.

The guaranteeing agencies (the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. and, later, the Resolution Trust Corp.) fulfilled their obligations. Depositors did not suffer losses. Unfortunately, however, the Fed did not do its job. The economy was not insulated from the massive bailout of the S&Ls, which, in the particular form through which the bailouts were financed, imposed severe pressures on the rates of growth in relevant monetary aggregates. The Fed allowed for the lowest growth in M2 in three decades, amounting to a decline in the real M2 money supply. As a consequence, we experienced a drawn out recession and three years of a sluggish, stagnant and money-starved economy. And while Fed officials kept trumpeting that interest rates were falling, they failed to note that interest rates may indeed decline sharply — in response to a very restrictive monetary policy.

Why has the Fed allowed this extremely low M2 growth, the contraction in real M2 and the prolonged weakness in the economy? The Fed's error in 1990-92 derives from its exclusive reliance on the Fed funds rate to regulate money policy. The funds rate is the rate one bank is charged by another for borrowing money to shore up its reserves, usually overnight. The FOMC sets a target for the funds rate.

Consider the bailout of an insolvent bank. To cover the bank's liabilities, the government sells interest-bearing Treasury bonds to the public. In purchasing these bonds, the public draws down its own deposits, thereby reducing the monetary aggregates. But actual bank reserves are unchanged; the result is excess reserves, with downward pressure on the funds rate. By following a funds-rate target, the Fed then removes reserves to prevent the funds rate from falling. The result is a fall in the level of deposits.

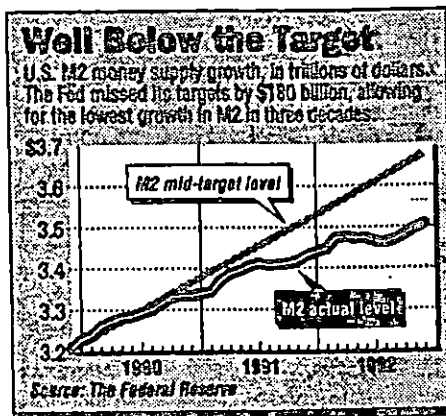

The Fed's malpractice has another component relating to the imposition of new regulations on capital requirements—the Basel Agreement and the impending FDIC Improvement Act requiring additional bank capital for interest rate risk. New regulations on bank capital put each bank under greater pressure to shrink its liabilities and assets in order to improve its capital ratios. But if each bank individually seeks to downsize its balance sheet, how can we get an expansion in money supply, broadly defined as M2 or M3? So again the result is a contraction in deposits with no reduction in reserves, resulting in a fall in the Fed funds rate. Again the Fed pulls reserves out of the system to hold its target Fed funds rate.

This problem of confusing movements or stability in the funds rate with the

Our monetary authorities do not appear to understand basic principles. Perhaps inadvertently, and subconsciously, they believe that a revealed reduction in the values of the assets that nominally back up money requires a corresponding reduction in money supply. The notion that high Fed officials could hold such a primitive view of the monetary mechanism and confuse what is appropriate and proper for an individual bank with what is desirable and necessary for the banking system as a whole is mind-boggling. By increasing capital requirements, they have effectively forced banks to further shrink both assets and liabilities—hence the lowest growth in the crucial M2 aggregate in more than three decades and an actual decline in real M2 money.

As it is, one byproduct of the whole experience may prove even more damaging than the visible effects. Indirectly, and more directly through some spokesmen, the Fed lends intellectual respectability to proposals for fiscal stimulus, proposals that, if adopted, can only expand the role of government and, in so doing, sap the wellsprings of economic progress.

Mr. Buchanan, who received the Nobel Prize in Economics in 1986, is advisory general director of George Mason University's Center for the Study of Public Choice. Mr. Fand, a research associate there, was formerly economic advisor to the comptroller of the currency.

posture of monetary policy is exactly the problem the Fed's money targets are designed to avoid. If the Fed had hit the middle point of its target ranges in 1990-92 (M2 ranges selected by the FOMC to slow inflation gradually), M2 would be approximately $180 billion larger and gross domestic product $300 billion higher. (See chart.)

MEMORANDUM FOR: THE PRESIDENT
FROM: Lawrence S. Eagleburger

1. Reactions to Israeli Expulsion of Palestinians. The 415 Palestinian deportees remain stuck in the "no man's land" between Lebanese Army and Army of South Lebanon/Israeli positions. The Lebanese Government is refusing to allow the ICRC to provide further supplies through Lebanon. The Israeli Supreme Court will continue hearing an appeal tomorrow on the question of whether deportations are legal when no country will accept the deportees. Clashes in Gaza following the lifting of the curfew over the weekend left 8 Palestinians dead. While polls in Israel continue to show strong public support for the deportations, GOI officials, in contact with our Embassy, have admitted they did not anticipate Lebanon's refusal to admit the 415, and have shown uncertainty on next steps.

2. Angola: Government/UNITA Agree on Negotiations. DAS Davidow's December 17-21 visit to Angola yielded agreement between UNITA and the Government on a six-point calendar for reactivating the peace process. Steps include verification of UNITA troop withdrawal from two key northern cities. Both cities will then be returned to government control. Face-to-face negotiations will follow, along with a joint proposal for the future role of UNAVEM, and a dos Santos-Savimbi summit. Despite this positive step, and although both sides also acknowledge that military victory is not a long-term solution, many observers feel a major military confrontation is likely soon. Continued outside mediation, especially by the U.S., and the UN, remains key to successful negotiations.

3. Mexico: Evidence Sharing on the Alvarez Machain Case. On December 18, Ambassador Negroponte spoke with Mexican Attorney General Morales Lechuga, Foreign Minister Solana, Undersecretary Rozental, and Presidential advisor Cordoba to make the point strongly that we expect the Mexicans to live up to their commitment to prosecute Alvarez Machain. Mexican officials noted that Alvarez's acquittal by a U.S. judge made his legal status ambiguous and changed the context of their earlier commitment to prosecute him in Mexico. The GOM says it has no compelling evidence concerning Alvarez's role in the Camarena murder, partly because the U.S. Department of Justice had not responded to its earlier requests for evidence. Morales wants an early meeting with Attorney General Barr to clarify the Alvarez case and the status of the "killing fields" investigation (i.e., the 1984 murder of 4 American missionaries).

SUBJECT:

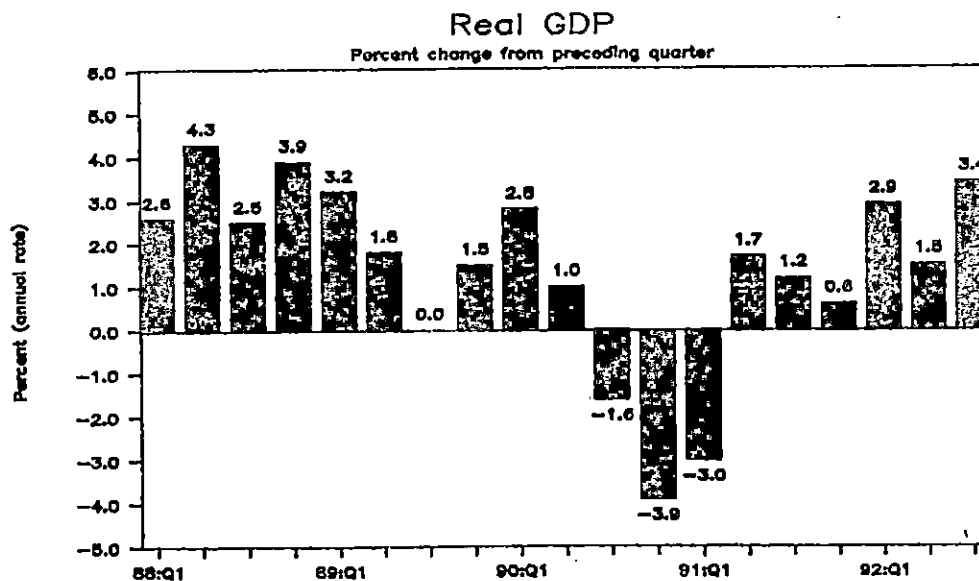

Final Estimate of Third-Quarter GDP, Commerce
Department Release, Tomorrow, 8:30 a.m.

Real GDP rose 3.4 percent at an annual rate in the third quarter, a downward revision from the 3.9 percent rate reported last month. Private analysts had expected the estimated rate of growth in the third quarter to be unchanged at 3.9 percent.

The smaller growth estimate resulted largely from downward revisions to the change in business inventories and net exports; the largest upward revisions were in nonresidential fixed investment and in Federal Government purchases. The final estimates show that personal consumption expenditures, investment spending, and government purchases made positive contributions to real GDP growth in the third quarter. Net exports declined, partially offsetting the increases in the other components.

Inflation, as measured by the GDP fixed-weight price index, was 2.1 percent at an annual rate in the third quarter. The implicit price deflator increased at a 2.0 percent annual rate.

The graph below shows that real GDP growth has been on an upward trend over the past year and a half, but the growth pattern has been uneven.

Memo to the President
from Charley Bartlett

You and Barbara were tremendously good to have us all in on Sunday for the super party. You have been great to do it every year through the years, so many years that it has almost come to be like a club of warm people bound together by a heartfelt fondness for you both.

I have a thought about the opportunity for you to make a talk that would be the domestic equivalent of the talk you made in Texas. It occurs to me that if it is done right, it can be an important embellishment to your presidency and to the Republican party, which seems to me to be drifting perilously to the right.

Ossie Day has talked to me about the plan being hatched by Justin Dart and his community to create a George Bush Award for service to the disabled and to make you the first recipient. I met today with Ossie and Justin Dart and we agreed that this could be the perfect background for a speech in which you could set out your concept of the role that government should play in people's lives.

Back in Ike's time in 1956, Arthur Larson got the Library of Congress to dig out a great Lincoln quote that could set the tone of your approach. He said in Springfield in 1858: "If something needs to be done for the people, other things being equal, let it be done privately. But if it must be done, and it cannot be done privately, and only the government can do it, then let the government do it."

If you were to make a moving talk along those lines (drawing on the great talk you made to the NAACP in 1988) and if Marlin were to push the media into treating the speech as important (perhaps you would let him tout it as an effort to balance the rightwing extremists), I think it would be enormously helpful in repairing the damage of the campaign and reestablishing you as a centrist conservative.

Justin says he can get an appropriate crowd together to fill the East Room in a very short time and that is probably where it ought to be done in early January. There is no time to arrange a dinner and the White House is after all the bully pulpit.

FROM THE PRESIDENT

THE WHITE HOUSE BULLETIN

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1992 -- 12:15 PM EST

SINCE THE MORNING PAPERS:

- o A Libyan Boeing 727 airliner crashed en route from Benghazi to Tripoli today, killing all 158 passengers aboard. The Libyan government is now investigating claims the airliner collided in midair with a Libyan military jet, causing the wreck.
- o South Korea and Vietnam re-established diplomatic ties today after 17 years of estrangement. Officials from the two countries signed treaty papers in Hanoi.
- o Three more ministers resigned Boris Yeltsin's cabinet today following the resignation of one yesterday. Today's resignations include the minister of foreign trade and two key deputy ministers.
- o Financial news as of 12:15 PM EST:
 - DOW (30 Industrials): Up 1 point to 3313 on a volume of 132 million shares.
 - The GDP grew 3.4 percent during the third quarter, according to the Commerce Department's final revision. The figure is lower than the 3.9 percent growth shown in the first revision just before the November election, but is still the highest growth of any quarter during the Bush Administration.

IN THE WHITE HOUSE AND AROUND TOWN:

- o President-Elect Bill Clinton will likely announce his foreign policy team this afternoon, report knowledgeable sources. The Bulletin will again publish an afternoon update covering the Clinton press conference. According to a variety of Democratic sources, it appears the Clinton foreign policy team will be led by: Warren Christopher as Secretary of State; Rep. Rep. Les Aspin as Secretary of Defense; Madeleine Albright as Ambassador to the UN, with Cabinet rank; Anthony Lake as National Security Advisor; and James Woolsey as the Director of Central Intelligence. A few other parts of the foreign policy team may also be announced today, possibly including the choice of Thomas Pickering, who previously served as UN Ambassador, for Deputy Secretary of State. Also Samuel Berger, a Clinton campaign and transition advisor on foreign policy, may be named Lake's top deputy at the National Security Council.
- o President-Elect Bill Clinton is considering a plan for a high-level, two-day January gathering of his Cabinet-designates, his top White House advisors, and those who held these position in years past to discuss how to improve the process of governing, knowledgeable sources have told the Bulletin. Following on the apparent success of his economic conference, Clinton is said to have tentatively agreed to the two-day session, which will probably be held in Washington, D.C. According to the plan, which one source said the President-Elect had agreed to, Clinton and Vice President-Elect Al Gore will be joined by Clinton's Cabinet-designates and those he has selected to be his top White House advisors in a two-day session of informal panel discussions with a bipartisan group of Cabinet Members and senior White House advisors from previous Administrations. Three organizations will likely sponsor the event: The Institute of Public Administration, The Aspen Institute, and The Center for the Study of the Presidency. Initially, Clinton advisors are said to have tentatively decided to hold the event at the Wye, which is an Aspen Institute retreat in Maryland. It appears Washington will be the choice now, however, said one source, because of the need for Clinton's Cabinet choices to be near Capitol Hill for consultations with Members of Congress prior to their confirmation votes. According to one source: "The discussions we will have will not relate to policy. Rather, they will relate to how to implement policy and how to move the government forward." The source added the discussions will focus on "more than organization and include the process of how a president and his top people can encourage and lead the government in moving forward with legislation and presidential policy." The sources report both Democrats and Republicans will be invited to the gathering, with the goal being to include those who have played senior roles in past presidential administrations. One source said some from Capitol Hill who have also had executive branch experience will likely be invited as well. According to another source, although the list of participants is far from complete, the type of people likely to be invited include: former Reagan White House chief of staff Ken Duberstein; former Carter White House chief of staff Hamilton Jordan; and former Cabinet Member Donald Rumsfeld.

- o Those counting on Senator Lloyd Bentsen to serve as a conservative check on health care reforms such as global budgeting from his seat at the Treasury Department may be in for a surprise, according to Democratic Senate sources who say Bentsen's reputation for seeking consensus and his efforts last year to pass a modest "consensus package" of reforms was a matter of pragmatism, and did not reflect Bentsen's beliefs about where reform should be headed. One knowledgeable Democratic Senate source familiar with health issues told the Bulletin that "the only reason [Bentsen] introduced [the more modest reforms] was because that's all he thought he could get through the Bush Administration. With Bill Clinton in the White House, it's a whole different universe," adding that Bentsen favors cost-controls such as global budgeting. A health care analyst familiar with Bentsen's record expressed surprise at such a notion, saying Bentsen has not favored highly regulatory solutions in the past, but may recently have become convinced that such action is necessary. According to the analyst, Bentsen opposed an amendment to the Budget Resolution last year, introduced by Senator Pete Dominici (R-NM), which would have imposed an entitlement cap on Medicare and Medicaid along the lines that OMB Director Darman had outlined in the President's budget. According to the analyst, Bentsen argued against the cap on Medicare and Medicaid because "you can't simply keep hitting those two programs because it would only exacerbate cost-shifting. In other words, if you keep ratcheting down on Medicare, providers are going to charge private payers more." This argument, the source said, seems to indicate that Bentsen believes "you've got to go to something more system-wide." One source pointed out that President-Elect Clinton, for whom Bentsen now works, argued throughout his presidential campaign that, when it comes to health care financing, "you can't push down on one side of the balloon without pushing it up somewhere else. That acknowledgement appeals to a system-wide approach to controlling costs."

- o The GOP effort to scrutinize President-Elect Clinton's nominees has been overblown, according to Senate Republican sources who say that the normal scrutiny afforded nominees will be observed, but that there is no organized effort to "get even" for what they believe was the brutal treatment of some Republican nominees at the hands of Democratic Senators and their staff. One Senate Republican source told the Bulletin: "Senator Dole probably made a mistake -- got a little carried away [when he spoke in terms of a tough confirmation process] -- because strategically, if we do come out in opposition to someone for legitimate reasons, it will make it easy for the Democrats and the media to say 'the Republicans said they are going to attack, and now they are doing it.'"

Republican Senators, according to a source who will be involved in the confirmation process, "believe what they have been saying for years -- that the President should be able to pick his own team and to be served by officers who share his ideas. A nominee shouldn't be refused confirmation simply because you disagree with their ideas." While agreeing with that general statement, another source warned that "some Senators are of the mind that Clinton's actions and the people he is surrounding himself with are not being looked at critically by [the press], and so the only critical look the country may ever get [before the Clinton Administration is officially in place] might have to come during the confirmation process." Asked for an overall prediction, one source familiar with the organizational aspects of the confirmation process said: "I think most Republican Senators believe what happened to John Tower was way beyond the bounds of what the confirmation process should be about, and so you won't see any organized effort to imitate it. Individual Senators may voice particular concerns they have, but don't look for an organized or orchestrated effort. I can predict right now what the headlines will read: 'Republicans Fail to Carry Through on Threat.'"

- o Clinton's pick for Energy Secretary is receiving praise from unlikely quarters for a Democratic nominee -- the current Republican Administration and the energy industry. Yesterday, Clinton tapped Hazel O'Leary, executive vice president for corporate affairs at Northern States Power, to be his Secretary of Energy. Because O'Leary entered the speculation game late in the process, following a trip to Little Rock on Friday, analysts are still trying to appraise the choice. Surprisingly, some of the greatest praise for O'Leary is coming from those who might normally line up against a Democratic Energy Secretary. "I am impressed by her," a senior Bush Administration official at the Energy Department told the Bulletin. "She has been around, knows a lot of people in the energy industry, will not come with a specific agenda of promoting one fuel over another, and the fact that she has private sector and government experience is very good." When asked to predict O'Leary's ability to fend off what many believe will be a strong environmental tide from powerful quarters within the Clinton Administration, the official responded: "She is a savvy executive, who probably would not have taken the job if she had not been assured that she would have an equal voice at the table. She is articulate and knows how to handle herself in board rooms." The official explained, however, that much more will be known of O'Leary's future impact once the other personnel choices for the Energy Department become public. "A lot will depend on her appointments and whether she gets a lot of say in who she picks," said the official. "Does she get to pick knowledgeable people from the energy industry or does she get people dictated to her? I do not believe she is a lady who will put herself in a position where she would not have control over who is working for her. [To be successful], she will have to have people at the assistant-to-the-secretary level and below who are able and willing to go toe-to-toe at all those endless meetings and do the hard work necessary to provide the ammunition for those people at the top."

Those in the electric utility industry are very pleased by the choice of O'Leary, said one of their representatives. "We are kind of excited," said the source. "We got somebody who is very, very bright, who knows government exceedingly well, and who knows our industry." Another source representing the overall energy industry commented: "Some folks in industry like her because she has been in industry, others think she is sort of a second-tier person." The source added, however: "Some people also say an electric utility is not really a business, it is just a regulated monopoly."

- o Clinton's negative reaction yesterday to pressure from women's groups concerning the makeup of his Cabinet came because he feels some of the groups' leaders are judging him prematurely, reports Clinton spokeswoman Dee Dee Myers. Myers told the Bulletin this morning: "So far he has only appointed two white men to the Cabinet and two women, one white and one black," and that the Cabinet is not yet filled. Myers added that the controversy also serves to downgrade the roles that EPA Administrator Carol Browner and CEA Chairman Laura Tyson will play in the Clinton Administration, saying Clinton plans to sit Browner at his Cabinet table even before he pushes for legislation to change EPA to department rank. "Laura Tyson, as Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisors, has a big job; a very important job never held by a woman before." added Myers.

A number of women are said to be under consideration for inclusion to the Clinton Cabinet, and according to one unconfirmed report to the Bulletin this morning, former Congresswoman and Democratic vice presidential nominee Geraldine Ferraro has been approached recently by the Clinton transition team regarding her interest in being considered for the Secretary of Transportation post.

- o GOP Governor John Ashcroft has made a decision on whether to run for Chairman of the Republican National Committee and will announce it "right after the first of the year," according to a Ashcroft spokesman. From all indications, the Governor will seek the post. The election will be decided when members of the Republican National Committee gather in St. Louis in late January. Bob Ferguson, the Governor's spokesman, told the Bulletin this morning that Ashcroft was waiting until early January before making the announcement because many members of the committee would like a month to reflect on the direction the GOP should take. "I actually think that there is plenty of time to mount a successful campaign and that many members of the committee will respect and appreciate the fact that they weren't pounced on the week after the election," said Ferguson, adding that any announcement now "might get lost in the holiday clutter." Asked to assess Ashcroft's chances, Ferguson suggested the Governor had broad-based support. "Calls started coming into this office the day after the election encouraging him to get into the race and those calls have continued. He is getting support from state chairmen, from his fellow Governors, from committee members, and from a number of individuals who have a history of activity in the party." Ferguson added: "John Ashcroft is committed to the 'big tent' philosophy of the Republican Party in that [he is] going to build bridges, build coalitions, and find ways for a wide variety of viewpoints and opinions to coalesce and work productively for the Republican Party."

POLL WATCH:

- o A CNN/USA TODAY/Gallup poll conducted December 18-20 shows:
 - 67 percent approve of the job Bill Clinton is doing.
 - 16 percent say the economy is good, 34 percent say it is fair, and 47 percent say it is poor.
 - While 30 percent say they are more confident in Clinton's ability to handle the economy following last week's economic summit, 61 percent say the summit was mostly talk.
 - 64 percent have no clear idea what actions Clinton will take to improve the economy.
 - 65 percent view Clinton as a Democrat with new ideas.
 - 32 percent say Clinton's Cabinet picks are outstanding or above average. Bush's Cabinet picks in 1988 were viewed as outstanding or above average by 23 percent.
 - 49 percent approve of the job George Bush is doing as President.

MANDATE FOR CHANGE -- FAMILY POLICY:

This morning, the Bulletin invites William Galston to discuss "A Progressive Family Policy for the 1990s," his contribution to the Progressive Policy Institute's new book, Mandate for Change, a policy roadmap for the incoming Clinton Administration written by analysts in and around the Democratic Leadership Council, which Clinton has chaired. Galston, who served as issues director for Walter Mondale's 1984 presidential campaign, is a Professor of Public Affairs at the University of Maryland, and currently heads up President-Elect Clinton's transition group on national service,

BULLETIN: What is wrong with the family as regards the larger social well-being of America?

GALSTON: The American family today faces two principal sets of problems. One set of problems is economic. Family incomes have stagnated. The incomes of families headed by younger adults -- people under 30 -- have plummeted. Incomes of many workers, particularly those with a high school education or less, in real terms, have declined very sharply in the past 20 years, making it necessary for more and more family members to work longer and longer in order to maintain a middle-class way of life. This has had profound effects on the inner life of families, the availability of family time, stress on family members and so forth. So the first principal task of family policy is to do something about the economic squeeze. There are different policies advocated in Mandate for Change: alterations in the tax code in the direction of giving larger credits to families with younger children; expanding the earned income tax credit to take care of working poor families; and other measures.

The second large set of problems confronting American families might be called cultural or moral. These are issues having to do with family structure, personal responsibility, and parental responsibility. Some of the economic stress on families stems from the erosion of family structure during the past two or three decades -- the relentless rise in the percentage of single-parent-headed households is strongly correlated with families and children in poverty and a host of other social problems. There has also been an epidemic of parents, in effect, abandoning their families; refusing to pay either some or all of the child support that they owe. This has further contributed to the impoverishment of custodial parents and minor children. For problems like that, we need a much more coordinated assault on teen pregnancy than we now have. We need a much stricter system of paternity establishment, child support enforcement and, I believe that it's high time to begin a national discussion with the people who are responsible for children's media -- particularly children's television -- about their responsibilities to children and family in a free society.

BULLETIN: To what extent do you think the problems of American families are becoming problems for American government?

GALSTON: To the extent that non-custodial parents don't honor their responsibility to their children after divorce, that imposes burdens on the public sector. The point of departure for family policy is that, to the maximum extent possible, parents ought to take responsibility for their children, and the point for public sector activity is to support parents and assist them in discharging their responsibility, not to substitute for them. Now, obviously, there are circumstances under which the public sector has to substitute for a functioning family, but it ought not to do so unnecessarily.

BULLETIN: What else can Washington do to change the present situation?

GALSTON: The government can act through the tax code and in other ways to relieve economic pressures on families, particularly younger families with minor children. Secondly it can use the various instruments of persuasion available to the Federal Government to try to make some progress on family structure and family responsibility issues. I personally favor an all-out, high-tech, glitzy media-based campaign against teenage pregnancy, making use of entertainers, sports figures, MTV, you name it, all designed to drive home the simple point that children shouldn't be having children and that having children prematurely is, in many cases, to forfeit all hope of opportunity and upward mobility.

LAST LAUGHS:

- o Jay Leno: "Did you know that the Republicans and the Democrats worked together during the filming of [this] week's special, 'Christmas in Washinton'? Well, they had to work together, really. I mean, the Republicans couldn't come up with three wise men, and the Democrats couldn't find a virgin, so they had to pool their resources." (NBC The Tonight Show)
- o Jay Leno: "Everybody celebrates a little differently, and that's to be expected. In most homes you find your gift under the tree, but in Al Gore's house, the tree is your gift." (NBC The Tonight Show)

U.S. ACCUSED OF RETREATING IN TRADE TALKS

BRUSSELS -- France and other European countries Monday accused the U.S. of backtracking in world trade talks and expressed deep pessimism that a global accord can be achieved by the time the Bush Administration leaves office.

"There has been an American retreat on all fronts," declared France's Roland Dumas, who said the U.S. recently revoked earlier concessions at the Geneva trade negotiations and now is pressing for greater advantages in key sectors such as industrial tariffs and financial services.

"The Europeans can attempt to place the blame on the United States, but all fingers point back to the French, who have made no secret of their goal to hold hostage the entire world trade system to get past their March election," said the assistant U.S. trade representative, Kathleen Lydon, in Washington.

(William Drozdiak, Washington Post, E1)

ALLIES POISED TO SEIZE 4 MORE KEY SOMALI SITES

MOGADISHU -- After 12 slow days of gathering forces and supplies, the U.S.-led military mission to rescue Somalia is now poised to seize control of this nation's "famine belt" from the warlords and freelance looters who have starved 300,000 of their countrymen to death.

With nearly 10,000 allied troops now on the ground, senior officers said Monday in interviews that the next week will see nearly simultaneous thrusts into four major centers of desperation: Beledweyne, Oddur, Baarheere and Gialassi. Another four have already been seized: Mogadishu, Bela Dogle, Baidoa and Kismaayo. Those eight cities are the hubs in this operation's strategy of humanitarian relief. Each will become the base for a large military force that will seek to impose order and expand outward with aggressive patrols and food deliveries into the countryside.

Senior civilian and military officials announced in a not-for-attribution briefing that Mogadishu's two principal warlords, Mohamed Farah Aideed and Ali Mahdi Mohamed, will finish withdrawing all their heavy gun vehicles by Tuesday and leave them under guard in cantonments outside the city.

Somalia Task Force Launches Christmas Push

MOGADISHU -- Hundreds of U.S. marines drove out of the Somali capital at dawn Tuesday to extend Operation Restore Hope further into the famished Somali interior by Christmas.

The marine convoy is going first to Baidoa to reinforce French and American forces already there before fanning out toward other desperately needy towns. Mark Thomas, spokesman for the U.N. Children's Fund (UNICEF), said multinational forces were planning to reach Bardere, Jalalaksi and Hoddur by Friday, Christmas Day.

French soldiers, backed by two U.S. attack helicopters which lit up the night sky with flares, shot and wounded three Somali gunmen Sunday after a technical fired on their observation post south of Baidoa. Seven other attackers fled.

U.N. CHIEF SKEPTICAL OF RAPID U.S. PULLOUT

U.N. -- Secretary-General Boutros-Ghali said Monday that despite Washington's insistence for a rapid pullout of U.S. troops from Somalia, he still is not prepared to endorse such a move until security conditions in the famine- and violence-wracked country can be better evaluated.

In a 22-page report to the Security Council that he described as a "conceptual plan," Boutros-Ghali said his discussions with U.S. officials, while "useful," have brought to light "certain differences" of approach concerning the timing of any withdrawal.

The secretary general also reiterated his belief that U.S. forces should gain control over all of Somalia and not just those areas where the famine is most severe. He said that if Somalia's armed gangs retreat to areas outside of U.S. control, the objectives of the international effort will not have been achieved because the gangs could resume their harassment at a future date.

In an effort to bridge the gap with Washington on some points, Boutros-Ghali suggested that rather than carry out a complete disarmament, U.S. troops should focus on heavy weapons by either concentrating them in certain areas for observation or destroying them.

Boutros-Ghali Wants U.S. Troops To Disarm Somalis

U.N. -- Secretary-General Boutros-Ghali again called for a wider and longer U.S. involvement in Somalia than originally envisioned by Washington, saying American troops should fan out throughout the country to disarm warlords and gangs.

In a lengthy report to the Security Council late Monday, Boutros-Ghali spelled out his differences with the U.S. and rejected a request from Washington to plan immediately for U.N. troops to replace American forces when they begin to withdraw.

In his report, Boutros-Ghali, however, did propose a possible role for an expanded U.N. peacekeeping operation that would take "forceful action as may be required to neutralize armed elements which attack" relief facilities. He said that such a force would need a substantial number of troops and suggested that the U.S. supply logistics units even after their main troops are withdrawn.

SOMALI CLAN LEADER CALLS FOR PEACE CONFERENCE, ELECTION

HODDUR, Somalia -- Mohammed Noor Shakar, one of Somalia's most powerful clan leaders, has called for peace negotiations between warring factions leading to regional then national elections -- but only after U.N. forces have disarmed gunmen plaguing Somalia.

Shakar, who joined other clan leaders several weeks ago at a meeting with U.S. special envoy Robert Oakley to discuss the rehabilitation of Somalia, said Monday that anarchy could not be stopped until weapons are confiscated by U.N. forces.

But U.S. officials in Somalia and in Washington have said on numerous occasions that they would disarm Somali gunmen only if they posed an immediate threat.

U.N. Chief Faults U.S. Again on Disarming Somalis

By PAUL LEWIS

Special to The New York Times

UNITED NATIONS, Dec. 21 — The United Nations Secretary General has again criticized the Bush Administration for being reluctant to disarm fully all the warring factions in Somalia.

In a report to the Security Council, Secretary General Boutros Boutros-Ghali also turned down an American request to start planning a new United Nations peacekeeping force to take over the safeguarding of relief convoys as the American troops withdraw.

Although the United States has indicated in recent days that it plans to conduct more disarming as its forces increase in Somalia, his letter shows that the Secretary General is still not satisfied that Washington is prepared to establish the "secure environment" for relief work throughout the country that he believes it promised when the Security Council authorized the dispatch of troops. "It would be a tragedy if the premature departure of the United Task Force were to plunge Somalia back into anarchy and starvation and destroy the fragile political progress of recent weeks," he wrote.

Mr. Boutros-Ghali quoted from a letter sent to President Bush on Dec. 8 in which he said that the United Nations could not hope to bring about reconciliation in Somalia unless the American-led force confiscated the heavy weapons of the organized factions and disarmed irregular forces and gangs. He also called on the American force to deploy all over Somalia and make a start clearing away mines and munitions, instead of confining its operations to the south.

The Secretary General refused to begin talks on a peacekeeping force to take over after the Americans leave. He reported that the United States began pressing for such planning to begin at a meeting here on Friday. But Mr. Boutros-Ghali said that the American force had been in Somalia for just 10 days and that it was "too soon to make an evaluation of its success in establishing a secure environment for humanitarian operations."

"At this stage, therefore, I am not in a position to offer the council a specific and concrete plan for the transition to continued peacekeeping operations," he wrote. He also criticized the United States for suggesting that the United Nations needed to send just a classic lightly armed peacekeeping force to take over.

Mr. Boutros-Ghali said if the United States insisted on pulling out prematurely, he would be inclined to recommend "the first peace-enforcement operation to be carried out under United Nations command."

Such a force, he says, would require "a considerable capacity for enforcement," implying that it should be large and heavily armed. It would also need to be dispatched under Chapter 7 of the United Nations Charter, which allows the Security Council to use military might to enforce its orders, he said.

But he wondered whether the Security Council would be willing to authorize such a military operation "at a time when both the organization's ability to manage such operations and member states' readiness to finance them have been stretched almost to the limit by the huge expansion of peacekeeping during 1992." Mr. Boutros-Ghali also wondered whether enough members would commit sufficient forces to what would clearly be a dangerous and sensitive operation.

Unhappy About Their Wages, Zairian Troops Stage Mutiny

KINSHASA, Zaire, Dec. 21 (Reuters) — Zairian troops have mutinied in the central town of Kisangani, arresting the regional governor and going on a looting spree, residents said today.

Residents arriving in Kinshasa said soldiers had begun systematically stripping the town, 750 miles north-east of Kinshasa, the capital, on Sunday night. The state radio said soldiers in the town were unhappy with their pay and were blaming their commander. It said army chiefs were appealing for calm but gave no further details.

The central African country has lurched from one political crisis to another for three years.

Serbia's Enigma: An Aloof Leader Who Stoked Fires of Nationalist Passion

By JOHN F. BURNS
Special to The New York Times

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia, Dec. 21 — On the ruined walls of towns and villages across Bosnia and Herzegovina that have been devastated by "ethnic cleansing," one word, "Slobo," appears again and again, scrawled in spray paint by the Serbian fighters who have swept through, terrorizing inhabitants and razing homes.

For those who have made his name a totem of their cause, it seems no matter that "Slobo" — Slobodan Milosevic, the President of Serbia — has never visited the battle zone, nor even their wounded fighters. As the political patron of Serbian nationalism, and as the head of the Serbian Government that has given the arms and money Bosnia's Serbs have needed to carry out their killings, Mr. Milosevic is a hero above all others among the forces who have seized two-thirds of Bosnia as an exclusive Serbian domain.

Today, those fighters and their supporters in Serbia were celebrating what seemed likely to be a victory for Mr. Milosevic in Sunday's presidential election. If the trend in early returns is sustained, Mr. Milosevic will have defeated Milan Panic, the Serbian-American millionaire who was his principal rival, on a platform that has prompted many in Serbia to fear that Mr. Milosevic may yet widen the war.

Mr. Panic's associates were issuing statements today alleging that the election was rigged, but Mr. Milosevic's associates said that the returns would strengthen the Serbian President and stiffen his resolve in meeting increased Western pressures for an abandonment of the militarist policies he has pursued since the break-up of Yugoslavia began last year.

During the election campaign, which was conducted as the United States and threats Serbia would not abandon what he called "our great solidarity with Serbian people outside Serbia."

"This country has many times in its history endured the challenge of foreign threats," he said. "Now, we are called upon once again to decide whether we will stand up, or go down on our knees and become a new Balkan colony. So I tell you: We will never surrender Serbia."

He attended his closing election meetings to the accompaniment of rhythmic chants of "Slobo! Serbia!" and sat through lengthy speeches that ascribed to him almost mythic qualities. For Mr. Milosevic, this was not new. In Belgrade, portraits have appeared depicting the stocky, almost cherubic-looking Serbian leader as a medieval knight like those who fought, and lost, Serbia's watershed battle against the invading Turks in Kosovo in 1389.

Leader Who Plays On Ancient Fears

The invaders went on to make Serbia and Bosnia an outpost of the Ottoman Empire for nearly 500 years, fostering the embattled political psychology among Serbs, and in particular the fear of Muslims that Mr. Milosevic has exploited in building his political career.

According to former associates, this represents a sharp break with his attitude during the years when he was working his way up through the Communist Party apparatus. Then he aligned himself with Titoist orthodoxy, which outlawed nationalism.

Until three years ago, Mr. Milosevic, as Serbia's Communist Party chief, had little popular following. But after

BUSH LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

During the election campaign, which was conducted as the United States and other Western nations reviewed a range of military options designed to restrain Serbian offensives in Bosnia, Mr. Milosevic vowed never to turn away from a policy of "great solidarity with the Serbian people outside Serbia." This is a term he has used in the past to describe the use of military force in support of "ethnic cleansing" and other practices that have been condemned by the Western powers as atrocities.

Despite Carnage, Little Remorse

Already, these policies have caused the deaths of at least 150,000 people in Bosnia and Croatia, and have driven at least 1.6 million people from their communities as refugees. But while Mr. Panic described the conflict as "an intolerable tragedy" and vowed to end it, Mr. Milosevic, who is 51 years old, appears to have been unmoved by the consequences of his actions.

In part, this has been a matter of personality, since even his close associates describe the former Serbian Communist leader as dispassionate, cool and unrattled even amid the growing international condemnation of Serbia and its leaders.

On Wednesday, Secretary of State Lawrence S. Eagleburger named Mr. Milosevic among possible war criminals whom Mr. Eagleburger said should face trial on charges relating to atrocities committed in the Balkan fighting.

Mr. Milosevic answered in less than a day. Traveling first to Kosovo, the region of southern Serbia where a million ethnic Albanians are agitating for independence, then to Nis, a Serbian industrial city nearby, Mr. Milosevic offered what appeared to be an oblique justification for "ethnic cleansing" when he said that the Albanian majority in Kosovo had been its first practitioners, by encouraging an exodus of Serbs over the past decade.

He went on to declare that despite all as Serbia's Communist Party chief, had little popular following. But after he traveled to Kosovo in 1989 and made a fiery speech about the rights of Serbs, he unleashed a wave of nationalist feeling. Fear of this resurgent nationalism fueled independence movements in four of the other five Yugoslav republics, which had no desire to trade a Communist yoke for a Serbian one.

In 1990, with Yugoslavia beginning to break up, Mr. Milosevic rode the nationalist wave to victory in Serbia's first post-Communist election. From there, it was a short step to the policies that led to war in Croatia and Bosnia.

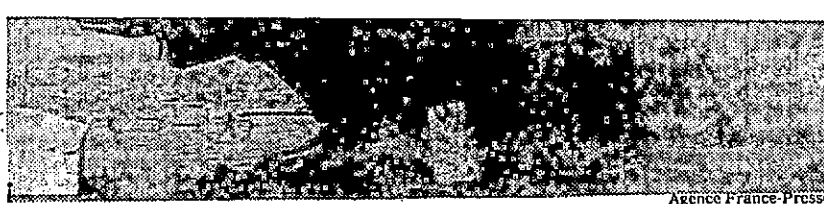

By conventional standards, the two years since the last election have been a disaster for Serbia. The collapse of the Yugoslav economy, coupled with the stringent economic sanctions imposed by the United Nations, have idled more than 60 percent of the Serbian work force and fostered an annual inflation rate of about 10,000 percent.

But Mr. Milosevic, who rarely appears in public except at election time, appears not to have shared the pain felt by many Serbs. During the election, he addressed crowds of unemployed workers in industrial cities devastated by the economic collapse and congratulated them on "increasing production, puzzling some local officials."

At rallies where thousands had been bused in by his Serbian Socialist Party, a new version of the old Communist Party, he stared stony-faced as cheers washed over him, and looked uncomfortable when he was asked to take tea and make small talk with voters. But perhaps the strongest signal to his character has been his attitude toward the war in Bosnia.

Contemptuously rejecting the American war-crimes charges, Mr. Milosevic held to a posture he has adopted from the start of the Bosnian conflict, denying any responsibility for the Bosnian war despite the release of transcripts of telephone conversations between Mr. Milosevic and Radovan Karadzic, the Bosnian Serb leader, that implicate Mr. Milosevic. Western diplomats say their intelligence reports show similar involvement.

Agence France-Press

The early results in Sunday's presidential election indicate that Slobodan Milosevic, the President of Serbia, will retain power and continue his drive to make Bosnia an exclusive Serbian domain. In

Is It Dishonesty, Or Self-Delusion?

Mr. Milosevic's denials of what those around him know as fact is one facet of a complex personality. Warren Zimmermann, the former American Ambassador to Yugoslavia, who was withdrawn in May as a gesture of protest against the Serbian offensives in Bosnia, told associates after a series of bitter encounters with the Serbian leader that his most prominent character trait was dishonesty.

"Warren used to say that he was astonished by the man's ability to lie with a look of total sincerity on his face," a Western European diplomat said.

Others describe this differently. "Many people who have dealt with him recently speak of him as disconnected from reality," said Ivan Jankovic, a Belgrade patent lawyer who followed Mr. Milosevic through law school at the University of Belgrade in the 1960's.

A man who worked with Mr. Milosevic for years, and agreed to discuss the Serbian leader on condition that he not be named, said, "He decides first what is expedient for him to believe, then he believes it."

Those who look for explanations for Mr. Milosevic's behavior beyond the tangled world of Balkan politics often cite his childhood. He was the son of a Serbian Orthodox priest from Montenegro, a region known for engendering fierce nationalism among its Serbian inhabitants. Both his parents committed suicide while he was still in his teens, as did an uncle.

Growing up in Pozarevac, about 50 miles south of Belgrade, he was known as a disciplined, humorless loner. He married his childhood sweetheart, Mirjana Markovic, now a professor of Marxist-Leninist theory in Belgrade, who shared his Communist orthodoxy.

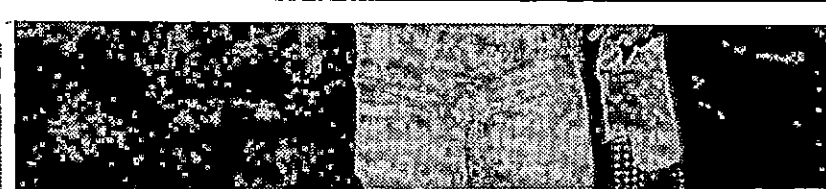

"He was incredibly disciplined, and took Communism with deadly earnestness, even when everybody else thought it was a terrible bore," one former law classmate said.

Another man who helped Mr. Milosevic as he ascended the Communist hierarchy in Belgrade said that he had never met a man who was more assiduous in developing contacts to promote his own career, and less loyal to those who helped him.

"He's a man who makes no friends," this former associate said. "There is only one thing that matters to Sloba Milosevic, and that is Sloba Milosevic."

Visitors Are Few At Walled Mansion

The sense that the Serbian leader is walled off from those around him is strong. Neighbors in Dedinje, the affluent Belgrade suburb where Mr. Milosevic lives in a mansion that was confiscated by Communist authorities from a prominent Jewish family that died in the Holocaust, say that few visitors ever pass through the wall of bomb-proof steel that surrounds the house. Associates say that Mr. Milosevic has few pastimes, preferring to spend nights and weekends working on Government papers than socializing.

Vreme, the weekly news magazine that has been one of Mr. Milosevic's strongest critics, has noted that he has done few of the things that are routine among wartime leaders elsewhere, such as visiting the wounded.

"He's responsible for the war, and he's shown almost no interest in its victims," one Western diplomat said. "It's one thing for him to show no compassion for Muslim victims of the war, but he doesn't even show any feeling for the Serbs who have been killed or wounded."

But even Mr. Milosevic's harshest critics concede that he has been extraordinarily shrewd in building up his domestic political base. For most of the time since the Kosovo speech in 1989 he has outmaneuvered his political opponents and the diplomats who have attempted to constrain the Serbs.

For months, envoys have elicited what they believed were undertakings from Mr. Milosevic to halt "ethnic cleansing," to stop Serbian forces from seizing more territory in Bosnia, and to place Serbian heavy weapons under United Nations supervision. None of these things has happened, and so far, at least, Serbia has escaped direct Western military intervention.

Will Russia Resume An Old Alliance?

Although the United States and other

Western nations have hinted recently that they may meet any new Serbian aggression with direct military action, some opponents see signs that Mr. Milosevic has concluded that the United States and its allies have no willingness for a military confrontation. Mr. Milosevic is said to have concluded that despite its condemnation of Serbian aggression, Russia will block any United Nations approval of military involvement by outside powers.

Associates of Mr. Milosevic say he believes that the conservative challenge to Boris N. Yeltsin, the Russian leader, will lead to the emergence of a nationalist government in Russia that will revive Moscow's 19th-century alliance with Serbia, to the point of aiding Serbia militarily if a wider Balkan conflict erupts.

Diplomats say the Serbian leader may be caught in his own strategy, with the nationalist feelings he has stoked driving Serbia into war, and the war heightening nationalist passions, to the point that he cannot turn back.

"It's become a vicious circle," said Mr. Cerovic, the columnist for Vreme. "I just can't imagine that a man who could start all this will suddenly resign and go to live on the money he and his associates are supposed to have put into banks in Cyprus, or that he will somehow begin to act more reasonably. The world should realize that when dealing with Slobodan Milosevic, there is no reasoning. He understands only violence and force."

the Bush Administration, the main purpose of such a move would be to signal Mr. Milosevic that after giving the Serbs 15 days' warning, London remains wary of moving that quickly. Some British defense officials, worried that the enforcement of the ban on military flights would lead to Serbian retaliation against British peacekeeping forces in Bosnia and in-ground troops. The Bosnians, he said, could defend themselves if they received infantry weapons and if Western aircraft attacked Serbian positions.

But Washington and its allies are reluctant to take sides. Having reversed its earlier opposition to sending describing the election as "riddled with flaws and irregularities." They estimated that at least 5 percent of eligible voters, mostly young people who were expected to support Mr. Panic, were unable to vote because their names were not on voting lists.

The observers said the campaign had been "tainted by shameless propaganda in the state-run media, especially television, that exclusively supported the government party and either ignored or distorted the message of the opposition."

In campaign speeches, Mr. Milosevic has pledged to continue defending the interests of all Serbs, including those outside Serbia. This policy has led him to support Serbian forces besieging cities and carrying out ruthless "ethnic cleansing" in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Warnings From Abroad

Many foreign governments, abandoning their normal neutrality on foreign elections, had bluntly warned that a Milosevic victory could be disastrous for Serbia. They urged voters to make what Moscow and Washington described in a joint statement as "the correct choice."

Mr. Panic, who was born in Belgrade but has lived most of his life in California, pledged to end the war in Bosnia, establish multiparty democracy and take all steps necessary to end economic sanctions imposed on Yugoslavia by the United Nations. Serbia and Montenegro are the only republics remaining in the Yugoslav federation.

Preliminary official results suggested that Mr. Milosevic would also retain control of the Serbian parliament. His Socialist Party is likely to form a coalition with the ultra-nationalist Radical party, which also surprisingly won according to the official tally. The Radical leader, Vojislav Seselj, like Mr. Milosevic, has been listed by the United States as a possible war criminal.

A Determined Prime Minister

It was still unclear whether Mr. Milosevic and his allies would win control of the federal Parliament. If they do, they will have the power to force Mr. Panic from his position as Prime Minister.

Mr. Panic has said that if he is forced from office, he will remain in Yugoslavia and continue his drive for political change. "I'm not going anywhere," he said after casting his ballot on Sunday, "and I'll fight them. They must go."

A clean sweep by Mr. Milosevic might also lead to the resignation of Dobrica Cosic, the President of Yugoslavia. Mr. Cosic said in an interview before the election that he would quit if the elections did not produce a federal government committed to "change along democratic and civilized lines." He had previously said that he considered Mr. Milosevic antagonistic.

President Cosic's departure would leave Mr. Milosevic in unchallenged control of Yugoslavia.

A Gloomy Outlook

If the early voting trend is not reversed, and if Milosevic forces do not yield to demands for a new election, this deeply divided land could become even more polarized. Opposition parties showed during the campaign that they were able to mobilize hundreds of thousands of supporters, and they may call for mass protests, if not now, then in the months ahead.

The possible international results of a Milosevic victory are, if anything, even more ominous: new sanctions against Yugoslavia, perhaps including blockades; a cutoff of international telephone service, and the closing of foreign embassies.

Several foreign politicians have said in recent days that if the Serbian government does not radically change its policies, they favor bombing raids or other military attacks to force such changes. These attacks may be directed against Serbian positions in Bosnia or against military targets in Serbia, which has thus far been spared the carnage of war.

U.S. Reports 'Irregularities'

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21 — The State Department said today that "significant irregularities" in the elections had been reported by observers from the United States and other Western countries.

The department spokesman, Richard A. Boucher, said the most notable irregularities concerned voting lists.

"Many voters were excluded from the voting because their names did not appear on electoral lists," he said. But he said it was not clear whether these exclusions were deliberate.

For the Bush Administration, the main purpose of such a move would be to signal Mr. Milosevic that after months in which open Serbian violations of the United Nations ban have gone unpunished, the West is finally prepared to take action, a senior official said. By doing that, Washington hopes to make credible its warnings to the Serbs not to move on Kosovo or Macedonia, officials said.

Actually in recent days, the fighting in Bosnia has diminished, in part because of the onset of very cold weather, but also, diplomats in Belgrade say, because the Serbian authorities wanted to improve their image at the time of the elections. Cyrus R. Vance and Lord Owen, the heads of a joint United Nations-European Community peace initiative, are pinning their hopes on a negotiated solution by trying to use the diminished fighting as a way of bringing about a stable cease-fire in Bosnia.

Artillery the Main Weapon

In the absence of a cease-fire, enforcing the flight ban would provide a measure of protection to the Bosnians, as it would stop the Serbs from using helicopters to resupply their troops, conduct reconnaissance missions and if Bosnian Government reports are to be believed, fire rockets at Government positions. But it would do nothing to stop the Serbs from attacking the Bosnians with artillery, mortars and tanks, which have been the main killing mechanism.

And limited though it is, there is even broad disagreement among the Western nations over when to enforce the flight ban and how much force to use.

The Administration is pressing for the ban to be enforced before Mr. Bush leaves office. But while Defense Secretary Dick Cheney has talked about ban on military flights would lead to Serbian retaliation against British peacekeeping forces in Bosnia and interfere with their effort to ship food and medicine, reportedly favor a warning period of about 30 days, which would mean that no action is taken until the Clinton Administration takes office on Jan. 20.

Mr. Cheney has also talked about the possibility of enforcing the ban by bombing Serbian airfields, which Pentagon officials say would be the simplest and most effective way to neutralize the Serbian aircraft. The British favor combat air patrols to deter the Serbians from flying—and thus to avoid the need to stage attacks.

Appeal by Bosnia

Asserting that the United States can help defend the Bosnians without involving itself in a costly land war, Haris Silajdzic, the Bosnian Foreign Minister, said in an interview that his Government was not seeking Western

But Washington and its allies are reluctant to take sides. Having reversed its earlier opposition to sending arms to the Bosnians, the Administration has all but dropped its push to lift the arms embargo in the face of Western European opposition.

As the United Nations works on a resolution authorizing the enforcement of a flight ban, the Security Council will also have to take into account the views of the Russians, who may be protective of the Serbs, as well as those of Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali, who has reportedly been wary of taking military steps to enforce the ban.

But the United Nations will have to weigh the growing cost of inaction, as well as the likelihood that pressure for tougher action will increase once President-elect Bill Clinton takes office. While Mr. Clinton has said he understands the British concerns, he has also taken a more aggressive public stand on Bosnia than Mr. Bush, even suggesting the possibility of air strikes.

6 Planes Carrying Food Elude Sarajevo Siege

SARAJEVO, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Dec. 21 (AP) — Six planes carrying food and medicine landed here today, ending a three-week suspension that began when gunfire hit an American plane.

Rough weather prevented most of the 18 flights planned for today from landing, United Nations officials said. They said two British planes had made it to Sarajevo from Zagreb, the capital of Croatia, and two American and two French transports had arrived from the Croatian port of Split.

Residents of Sarajevo, besieged by Serbians for more than eight months, have been suffering from lack of heat, electricity and water, as well as severe food shortages. Doctors at the main hospital said at least one patient had died from the cold. Broadcasting an appeal for food, a Bosnian radio station said a 4-year-old and an 11-year-old at the hospital had died from hunger. The report could not be confirmed. The radio said other children had suffered drastic weight losses.

MEMO

TO: President George Bush
FROM: John Hanford, Office of Senator Richard Lugar
DATE: December 22, 1992
RE: Meeting at 11:00 AM today to discuss Noah's Ark

Senator Bob Dole, Elizabeth Dole, Senator Richard Lugar, and I will be meeting with you today for the purpose of discussing ways in which our government may be able to verify and locate the reported existence of Noah's Ark on Mt. Ararat in Turkey. Vice President Quayle may also participate in the meeting.

EVIDENCE FOR THE ARK

Dr. Melville Grosvenor, the late editor of National Geographic, once wrote, "If the Ark of Noah is ever discovered, it would be the greatest archaeological find in human history, the greatest event since the resurrection of Christ, and it would alter all the currents of scientific thought."

It is extraordinary to think that an enormous wooden ship has survived under ice, in petrified form, high atop a mountain where the Bible reports that it came to rest 5,000 years ago. Yet, a number of historical and eyewitness accounts report that the Ark has been sighted and even visited during periods of significant melt-back of the glacier ice on Mt. Ararat. These accounts are extraordinarily consistent in their description of the vessel's appearance, and those who have reached the Ark's interior describe rooms and fences remarkably well-preserved.

One of the best attested historic accounts began with a Russian pilot's sighting of the Ark in 1915. This prompted the Czar of Russia to dispatch 100 men who successfully climbed to the Ark, where they measured and photographed the artifact. Unfortunately, the official reports of this expedition were lost, when, only a few days after they were presented to the Czar, his government fell to the Bolsheviks.

The best evidence available today comes from U.S. military personnel who report having sighted or photographed the Ark while on reconnaissance flights or having seen such photos, now in government files. Gregor Schwinghammer, an Air Force pilot stationed in Adana, Turkey during the late 1950s, reports seeing the Ark during F-100 missions with the 428th Tactical Flight Squadron. A former Air Force pilot dropping freight in Eastern Turkey for the CIA in the early 1960s reports sighting the Ark. Also, F-4 reconnaissance pilot, Al Shappell, reportedly photographed the Ark on a 1974 mission sent over Mt. Ararat to examine more closely the artifact, which had allegedly been noted on satellite photos.

Also in 1974, Air Force Col. Walter Brown was summoned to the CIA by Director William Colby and directed to disclose his knowledge of the Ark to Colby's assistant, Howard Schue. Dr. Brown is an especially credible authority on scientific matters related to this issue, having graduated from West Point and earned a Ph.D. in Mechanical Engineering at M.I.T., while a National Science Foundation Fellow. He has served as Chief of Science and Technology Studies at the Air War College, tenured professor at the Air Force Academy, and Director of the U.S. Army Benet Research Engineering and Development Laboratories in Albany, N.Y.

Additional military personnel stationed near Turkey or with the Strategic Air Command have reported seeing reconnaissance photographs which clearly showed the Ark protruding from ice on Ararat.

HOW OUR GOVERNMENT CAN HELP

There are three ways in which our government, at your direction, can facilitate the possible discovery of the Ark.

First, reconnaissance photographs, reportedly in government files, could establish the exact location of the Ark.

Secondly, an object with the size, configuration, and organic make-up of the Ark should, by some accounts, be identifiable through the use of remote-sensing satellite imagery, utilizing ice-penetrating capabilities. In this connection, we understand that our satellite capabilities must be protected. However, it is our hope that information on such a large object could be conveyed in a "sanitized" and private manner, without inappropriate or public indications of our technical capabilities. Side-looking airborne radar (SLAR) images from the SR-71 archives might be particularly useful in this regard.

Thirdly, the Turkish government has, at times, made it difficult for expeditions to gain access to Mt. Ararat, and Kurdish forces near the mountain have posed a security risk. Quiet, behind-the-scenes assistance by our government on behalf of an important American expedition could potentially alleviate these problems.

SUGGESTED COURSE OF ACTION

It is our hope that your personal interest and involvement in this matter will facilitate the necessary assistance from our intelligence agencies, provide, once and for all, for a resolution of this age-old question, and, possibly, result in one of the most extraordinary discoveries of our time.

It is our suggestion that this entire process be handled with complete confidentiality and out of the public's view, and for this reason we have requested that our meeting with you be kept off of your public schedule. It would be our intention to work directly with you, Bob Gates, and other intelligence officials and not to involve staff. Also, if the presence of the Ark on Mt. Ararat is confirmed, we believe that this fact should not be announced publicly.

We advocate this course of action for two reasons. First, this will most carefully safeguard relevant intelligence information and national interests. Secondly, we also believe that this has a distinct advantage in allowing for the eventual confirmation and discovery of the Ark "on the ground," without unnecessary complications from local interests. If the Ark can be located with our government's help, then quiet steps can be taken to enable a ground expedition to succeed in actually uncovering the Ark.

In summary, we believe that there is sufficient evidence to warrant a careful and confidential inquiry into our government's ability to facilitate the discovery of Noah's Ark. We appreciate your setting aside time to meet with us, and we look forward to discussing this extraordinary issue with you.

NEW YORK, N. Y. 10017

December 22, 1992

The Hon. George H. W. Bush
President of the United States
The White House
Washington, D.C.

Dear Mr. President:

As the "Leader of the Free World", you have the unique opportunity to "suggest" an equitable multinational -- preferably European -- response to the outrages in the former Yugoslavia.

While clearly the dominant power, the United States should not be the primary provider of assistance worldwide. And just as clearly the Europeans should now be the primary provider of assistance in establishing the "New World Order" in Europe.

Furthermore, the recent U.S. intervention in Somalia should be considered as an exception to the rule that the countries of each region of the world should accept the responsibility for maintaining the peace and security of their region. And, neighboring African states or the OAU should now be encouraged to pick up the primary responsibility for their region.

For more than 45 years, our nation has devoted enormous resources to the defense of Western Europe in the face of Soviet tyranny and aggression. Our contribution was designed, in part, to allow European nations to respond in concert to regional conflicts. It seems, however, that the Europeans have taken advantage of our willingness to carry the principal burden of providing resources and personnel both in Europe and elsewhere. They remain less than willing to share equitably the burden in Somalia and in their own regional struggles.

The most recent example was the vote on Friday at the 47th Session of the UN General Assembly when on the resolution on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina which we supported all of our European NATO allies abstained! See the attached Recorded Vote.

Perhaps in the remaining days of your Presidency, you can re-establish the principle of regional responsibility by suggesting an all-European response to the outrages in the former Yugoslavia.

Warmest personal regards.

Sincerely yours,

1:30 P.M. NEWS UPDATE

BOSNIA/PRESIDENT (Helen Thomas, UPI) -- Four Central European foreign ministers warned that unless President Bush takes the lead in a more forceful crackdown against hostilities in the former Yugoslavia, Bosnia-Herzegovina "will disappear." After their meeting with Bush, each of the ministers -- Alois Mock of Austria, Krzysztof Skubiszewsky of Poland, Geza Jeszencky of Hungary and Demitriz Rupel of Slovenia -- said the President had made clear he intended to act on the question of Serbian aggression, including enforcing the "no-fly" zone.

START II (Reuter) -- Presidents Bush and Yeltsin held their second telephone conversation in two days Monday to try to nail down a treaty making deep cuts in strategic nuclear weapons, U.S. sources said. The anonymous sources said the discussion dealt mostly with START-2. "It was basically a continuation of the previous day's discussion," one source told Reuters. "The two presidents tried to clarify some issues and keep the process going."

USAIR/BRITISH (London/UPI) -- British Airways PLC said it has terminated the conditional agreement, signed in July 1992, for the carrier to invest $750 million in USAir. "The decision," British Air said, "was taken after the U.S. government had given a clear indication that this particular transaction would not be approved without unwarranted and unilateral concessions by the U.K. government under the two countries' bilateral air services agreement." British Airways said it intends "to continue to have discussions with USAir on alternative relationships."

CUBAN PILOT (AP) -- A former Cuban air force pilot who snatched his wife and two sons from a highway east of Havana and flew them to freedom, got a warm welcome from President Bush at the White House. "A wonderful president, a wonderful family," said Orestes Lorenzo. "We are really proud to meet the President, to meet his family, to spend a few minutes there. I told him how we did it, how we came to the U.S."

RECESSION (AP) -- The nation's economic output during the July-September quarter registered its best showing [3.4%] in nearly four years, the Commerce Department said, as a private non-profit group formally declared the recession over. The Business Cycle Dating Committee of the National Bureau of Economic Research said it delayed its decision until today because the Commerce Department report on the GDP showed that the economy finally had surpassed its pre-recession peak. That means any future slump will be considered a new recession rather than a continuation of the old one.

FRANCO-GERMAN ALLIANCE (Brussels/Reuter) -- NATO members agreed on military links between a new Franco-German corps and the alliance. Negotiations between the NATO military command and the French and German chiefs of staff led to an agreement that the corps can be used as part of alliance forces to defend member states and in wider peacekeeping missions.

The White House

Washington, D.C. 20500

Dear Mr. President:

The Leukemia Society of America has asked me to invite you to be the 1993 Leukemia Society of America Service to Mankind Awardee at its annual awards and fund raising dinner in Houston, Texas in the Spring of 1993.

Every year the Houston Chapter of the Leukemia Society of America honors someone in public life whose personal commitment to his fellow man has served as a model for others. I am sure that the people of Somalia are grateful for the courage you have shown in responding to their needs. There is no one whose career has done more to uplift others than your own, Mr President.

We hope that you will be able to accept our invitation and join the list of outstanding Houstonians, such as your friend Ben Love, who have been so honored at our annual Service to Mankind fund raising dinner for the Leukemia Society of America. The funds generated by this dinner will be applied to the salary support of young investigators supported by the Leukemia Society of America. We will be happy to schedule this dinner to accommodate your needs.

I hope that you and your family have a Merry Christmas and a prosperous New Year.

Sincerely,

MEETING WITH CENTRAL EUROPEAN FOREIGN MINISTERS

DATE: December 22, 1992

LOCATION: Oval Office/Cabinet Room

TIME: 10:00 - 10:30 a.m.

FROM: BRENT SCOWCROFT *BS*I. PURPOSE

To hear the views of these concerned Central European states on the crisis in the former Yugoslavia

II. BACKGROUNDKEY POINTS

- The United States has played an active and prominent role in the effort to defuse this crisis as the Eagleburger trip showed.
- Our priorities are to see the humanitarian operation succeed and prevent spillover of the conflict.
- Through enforcement of sanctions and the no-fly zone, we want to draw clear lines for the Serbs.
- We are willing to advocate lifting the arms embargo on the Bosnians, but most in Europe and the UN are firmly opposed.

These Ministers come to see you mostly so that their governments can be seen as doing something in this crisis and defuse domestic criticism in their home countries that they have been largely invisible in the international management of a crisis so close to home. For our part, we want to be especially sensitive to the nervous new democracies of the region.

Their agenda may include specific proposals for further action on no-fly, arms embargo, or sanctions, but you should take their appeal as a general call for continued American engagement. Following last week's forceful U.S. role in Stockholm, Geneva, and Brussels, it will not be hard to make the case that we do not need urging in this regard. It may be worth reiterating some specifics: Advocacy of a no-fly enforcement resolution in the UN, continuous political

POINTS TO BE MADE FOR MEETING WITH CENTRAL EUROPEAN FOREIGN MINISTERS

- I know that this conflict in the Balkans is making you extremely anxious, given the region's history.
- We are especially concerned that the new democracies in the region, including those represented here today, are not damaged by the conflict.
- You follow this crisis closely, so I don't need to tell you how active we've been. But our efforts alone aren't enough.
- Secretary Eagleburger has just returned from a full schedule of consultations and Ministerials in Europe. Yugoslavia was at the top of his agenda.
- We had three main objectives in mind:
 - Win agreement among our European friends that the time has come to get an enforcement resolution to stop the violations of the no-fly zone;
 - Explore ways that we might step up our humanitarian aid efforts to avoid a catastrophe this winter; and
 - Gain agreement to issue a stiff warning to Milosevic to avoid provoking violence in Kosovo.
- We're pleased with our discussions. I'd like to ask Secretary Eagleburger to elaborate.

FINE FIREARMS 1993

Firearms engineered to perfection for shooting enthusiasts.

FROM STURM, RUGER and COMPANY, INC.

Every firearm in this catalog is made in America by American workers. We hope you take as much pride in their craftsmanship and unmatched value as we do.

The smell of gun oil and leather, the feel of polished steel and wood, and the first faint eastern light of a fall day are the stuff of dreams. Good dreams.

If you feel, as we at Ruger do, that there is a certain visceral instinct which only hunting can fill, you must bend your efforts to preserving this oldest of all pastimes. True hunters are the real conservationists of the world, husbanding game and wilderness to feed not just the body, but the spirit as well.

It is not enough to merely care for our hunting heritage, we must make every effort to pass it on to our heirs. We must all actively strive to impart to members of the next generation the wonder, awe, and deep satisfaction that comes from days and nights spent in the fields and forests. As the world becomes ever more complicated and development crowds out wilderness opportunity, we should all go the extra mile it takes to give our sons and daughters the chance to experience hunting in all of its aspects.

At Ruger we remain dedicated to the preservation of shooting sports in America, and take every opportunity to further the gun owner's viewpoint. This support takes the form of time and effort in public appearances and meetings with elected officials, as well as monetary outlays to pro-gun causes. To assure the future of the great American tradition of shooting, we must all be willing to contribute our time, effort, and financial support, and here at Ruger we lead by example.

We also continue to pioneer new and innovative designs and methods of manufacturing world class firearms. By combining years of corporate experience with the very latest technological advancements, we are able to produce unrivaled firearms at prices allowing anyone who is interested to experience the pride which comes from owning the best. Over time that may be the greatest contribution Ruger can make to the continuation and growth of shooting sports.

SUGGESTED RETAIL PRICES

Sturm, Ruger and Company is returning to the practice of listing suggested retail prices for our products. We feel this information is an aid to our customers in examining our products.

Sturm, Ruger and Company does not sell firearms directly to consumers. Ruger products are stocked and sold by thousands of independent retailers in the United States and in many foreign countries. We believe there are many benefits in purchasing firearms from a specialty gun store where you can receive the advice and knowledge of an experienced dealer.

Cover: Ruger's new fixed-sight New Model Blackhawk Vaquero, available in a blued model with a color case finish on the cylinder frame, or an all stainless-steel model. See page 28.
