PREFACE

Although millions of Americans suffer from a mental or physical handicap, there has never been a source book to collect all the information that has accumulated in the field for these afflicted people, their parents, their teachers, their therapists, and their administrators. Many of them are not aware of the great number of services that are available through various organizations, agencies, and government offices.

The Sourcebook of Aid for the Mentally and Physically Handicapped was designed to fulfill this need and thereby help individuals with handicaps of all kinds to live a fuller, less problematic, and more independent life.

The information included in this volume covers topics from careers and training to ear banks, from sources of legal information to information on national parks accessible to the handicapped, from telecommunications for the deaf to rehabilitation facilities, and so on. A complete listing of its topics appears in the Table of Contents.

I would like to thank all the offices and organizations that have contributed information for this directory. If you have any question about a service for handicapped persons that is left unanswered by this book please write to me at the following address:

ACCREDITED AGENCIES AND SCHOOLS FOR THE BLIND AND VISUALLY HANDICAPPED

Under this heading is information on the National Accreditation Council for Agencies Serving the Blind and Visually Handicapped. Also included here is a list of accredited agencies and schools for the blind and visually handicapped.

NATIONAL ACCREDITATION COUNCIL FOR AGENCIES SERVING THE BLIND AND VISUALLY HANDICAPPED*

What is NAC?

The National Accreditation Council for Agencies Serving the Blind and Visually Handicapped is the standard-setting and accrediting body in work with the blind. It is a voluntary, not-for-profit corporation that was created in 1966 by those it serves – with the help of the American Foundation for the Blind and the U.S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. NAC is endorsed and sponsored by the leading organizations of and for the blind in America.

NAC's job is to enable every blind American to get the best possible services – services that will prepare each one to get a suitable education, to obtain gainful employment, to run a household, and to remain independent.

Through its accreditation process, NAC strengthens and improves the organizations that serve blind people, and gives the public a way to identify those agencies and schools that are achieving maximum effectiveness.

NAC Sets Standards

Standards are yardsticks for measuring an organization's performance.

NAC's standards are based on the best practice in work with the blind; they are reviewed and revised periodically – by professionals and consumers – to reflect new knowledge.

Agencies and schools use the standards to seek accreditation. The standards, contained in self-study and evaluation guides, are used to plan, evaluate, and improve programs.

NAC provides information and guidance to agencies and schools that seek help in applying the standards – and NAC helps them make improvements.

NAC has service standards for workshops, schools, braille production, rehabilitation centers, and many other specialized programs for visually handicapped children and adults.

NAC has management standards for organizational structure and governance, personnel, fund raising, physical facilities, finance, and other basic administrative functions common to all organizations.

NAC Accredits Agencies

NAC gives public recognition to agencies and schools that measure up to standards. Any organization is eligible to apply for accredited membership if its main purpose is to serve blind or visually handicapped persons, and at least one of its major services is covered by NAC standards.

These are the key aspects of the process:

- The organization conducts self-study using NAC standards.
- An NAC team visits for on-site review.
- A team report notes strengths and weaknesses, and recommends specific improvements to be made.
- NAC awards or denies accreditation.
- NAC publishes a list of those organizations that have achieved accreditation.
- NAC monitors continuing compliance with standards.

*Permission to reproduce granted by the National Accreditation Council for Agencies Serving the Blind and Visually Handicapped.

The process is an ongoing one. Each organization reports to NAC yearly on the services it provides, on its financial status, and on the improvements it has made. Every five years, the organization demonstrates, through another self-study and on-site visit, that it deserves to be reaccredited.

ACCREDITED AMBULATORY HEALTH CARE CLINICS AND MEDICAL GROUPS

The Accreditation Association for Ambulatory Health Care, Inc. accredits or certifies the clinics, health services, and medical groups that provide ambulatory health care. A description of the Association and a list of its members are given below.

ACCREDITATION ASSOCIATION FOR AMBULATORY HEALTH CARE, INC.*

Purpose

The Accreditation Association for Ambulatory Health Care, Inc. (AAAHC) was incorporated in Illinois as a not-for-profit corporation on March 22, 1979, in order to continue the development of a peer-based assessment, consultation, education, and accreditation program of the Accreditation Council for Ambulatory Health Care (AC/AHC). The purposes of the corporation, as stated in its certificate of incorporation, are to organize and operate a peer-based assessment, education, and accreditation program for ambulatory health care organizations as a means of assisting them to provide the highest achievable level of care for recipients in the most efficient and economically sound manner. Specifically, the corporation is organized to do the following.

- Conduct survey and accreditation programs that will promote and identify high quality, cost-effective ambulatory health care programs and services.
- Establish standards for accreditation of ambulatory health care organizations and services.
- Recognize compliance with standards by issuance of certificates of accreditation
- Conduct programs of education and research that will further the other purposes of the corporation, to publish results thereof, and to accept grants, gifts, requests, and devices in support of the purposes of the corporation.
- Provide programs that will facilitate communication, sharing of expertise, and consultation among ambulatory health care organizations and services.
- Assume such other responsibilities and conduct such other activities as are compatible with such survey, standard setting, accreditation, and communication programs.

Eligibility

The following types of organizations are currently eligible for survey.

Ambulatory Surgery Centers
College and University Health Services
Community Health Services
Group Practices (single or multi-specialty; fee-for-service or prepaid HMOs)
Indian Health Service Clinics
Public Health Service Clinics
Uniformed Services Health Centers

Other organizations that meet the eligibility criteria may be considered for survey if the standards can appropriately be applied.

Operations

AAAHC used only active, practicing physicians and administrators as surveyors. One hundred physicians and administrators from 35 states who had been trained as surveyors for the AC/AHC program have agreed to donate their time as surveyors for AAAHC in order to continue the peer-based program they helped to build.

AFFIRMATIVE ACTION FOR DISABLED PEOPLE

Information on affirmative action for handicapped persons is given under this heading, including an overview entitled "Affirmative Action for Disabled People." Three articles with more specific information follow. The first covers affirmative action for disabled veterans and veterans of the Vietnam era, the next concerns handicapped people, and the last provides information for mentally retarded people.

AFFIRMATIVE ACTION FOR DISABLED PEOPLE

There are three programs covering the employment of handicapped people. They cover thousands of employers in the United States.

Section 503

Every employer doing business with the Federal Government under a contract for more than $2,500 must take "affirmative action" to hire handicapped people. Contracts may be for the procurement of supplies or services, or for the use of real or personal property.

"Affirmative action" covers more than hiring. It also covers job assignments, promotions, training, transfers, working conditions, terminations, etc.

Half of all the businesses in America – some 3,000,000 – are covered.

Section 504

Every institution in the United States getting Federal financial assistance must take steps to assure that handicapped people are not discriminated against in employment. Included are schools, colleges, hospitals, nursing homes, social service agencies, and many more kinds of institutions and establishments.

Section 503 calls for "affirmative action"; Section 504 calls for "non-discrimination." In practicality, there's little difference in how they affect employment for the handicapped.

Vietnam Era Veterans Readjustment Assistance Act

Every employer with a Federal Government contract of $10,000 or more must take "affirmative action" to hire disabled veterans of all wars, and all veterans of the Vietnam era. Here, too, "affirmative action" applies not only to hiring, but to all other personnel actions as well.

The Bottom Line

These three programs boil down to this:

Employers covered by any of them no longer may screen out handicapped people simply because of their disabilities. The emphasis has shifted from the *dis*ability to the ability.

Who's Handicapped?

Sections 503 and 504. A handicapped person is anyone who:

- Has a physical or mental impairment that substantially limits one or more of his/her major life activities;
- Has a record of such an impairment; or
- Is regarded as having such an impairment.

"Substantially limits" refers to the degree of disability. A handicapped person having a hard time getting a job or getting ahead on the job because of a disability would be considered "substantially limited."

"Major life activities" include communication, ambulation, self-care, socialization, education, transportation, and, of course, employment. The main emphasis is on activities that in some way affect employment.

Vietnam Era Veterans Readjustment Assistance Act. A disabled veteran is a person who has a 30% or more disability rating from the Veterans Administration, or who was discharged or released from active duty for a service-connected disability.

A Crucial Word: "Qualified"

Not every handicapped person is elibible for these three programs. A person must be capable of performing a particular job – with reasonable accommodation to the handicapping condition, if it's needed.

"Reasonable Accommodation"

"Reasonable accommodation" means making necessary adaptations to enable a qualified handicapped person to work. Such accommodation may include:

- Making facilities used by all employees accessible to handicapped people (ramps, restroom adaptations, wider aisles, etc).
- Making modifications in jobs, work schedules, equipment, or work area (simplifying a job so a retarded person can fill it; changing working hours so a paraplegic person doesn't have to fight traffic; teaching sign language to a supervisor of a deaf worker; providing a reader for a blind person).

One of the best authorities on "reasonable accommodation" is the handicapped person. This means you. Don't hesitate to make suggestions.

Identification

Some handicapping conditions are perfectly obvious; they can be seen. Others are hidden. A person with epilepsy whose seizures are under control, a person who has been treated for mental illness, a person with diabetes, or someone with a heart condition has the choice of whether or not to identify his or her condition when applying for work.

If you want the protections and opportunities of Sections 503 and 504, you will need to be identified as handicapped to be eligible. Remember that:

- The information does not have to be provided; it's up to you.
- It will be kept confidential.
- Refusal to give it will not subject a person to adverse treatment.

There is one circumstance in which identification may be required under Section 504. That's when an employer is voluntarily undertaking to increase the number of handicapped persons he or she employs.

If information about a handicap is given, confidentiality will be respected, with these necessary exceptions:

- Supervisors and managers may be informed about any work restrictions or accommodations needed by the person.
- First aid people will be informed about possible emergency treatment.

Pre-employment Exams

Under Section 503, the employer may require a pre-employment medical exam. But the results are to be used only to determine suitable placement of a person in a proper job.

Under Section 504, the employer does not have the right to give a pre-employment medical exam, or to ask whether a person has a handicap. But the employer does have the right to ask whether the person can perform tasks related to the job.

Example: A person with epilepsy cannot be asked about this condition. But if driving is a part of the job, the applicant may be asked if he or she holds a driver's license.

A medical exam may be given under Section 504 after an offer of employment has been made. If this exam reveals a disqualifying condition, the offer may be withdrawn.

What Employers have to do

Handicapped people ought to have a clear picture of what employers are required to do under affirmative action programs. Here are some highlights of these programs.

Employers must look over any physical or mental job requirements to see whether they happen to screen out handicapped people on the basis of their disabilities. If they do, these requirements have to be eliminated or modified unless they are clearly job-related and consistent with business necessity and safe performance.

If medical exams are given before hiring, they may not be used to exclude or limit handicapped people.

"Reasonable accommodation" must be made, unless the employer can show it would create undue hardship on the business.

Outreach efforts are to be made to reach handicapped people. Examples: Recruiting through State employment services and State vocational rehabilitation offices; through organizations of, and for, handicapped people; through schools for handicapped students.

The firm's affirmative action program should be publicized widely throughout the company.

An executive of the company should be named director of affirmative action and should have the backing of top management.

Not all of the above apply to all companies. They are indicative of the kinds of steps employers must take to assure full opportunities for handicapped people.

How to Look for a Job

You're handicapped, qualified, and in need of a job. How can you locate employers covered by the programs? There are several ways:

- Local public employment offices should know about Government contractors in the area covered by Section 503 and the veteran's program.
- Nearly all schools, colleges, hospitals, and institutions are covered by Section 504.

- Look over the help-wanted ads in the newspapers. Some employers mention that they hire handicapped persons.
- Most direct way: When you apply for a job, simply ask whether the company is covered by any of the programs.

When you apply, be sure you are qualified; that's a must.

About Complaints

Most employers comply willingly with affirmative action and non-discrimination programs; they know that handicapped people can be valuable additions to their work force. But there are occasions when a handicapped person feels compelled to file a complaint of discrimination against an employer. It might be a job applicant who felt he or she hadn't received equal treatment because of a disability. Or it might be a person already on the job who felt there had been discrimination in promotion or job assignment or some other personnel action. In these cases, a complaint is filed.

How To File. The complaint must be in writing. A letter will do. It should contain the following points:

- Your name, address, and telephone number.
- The nature of the handicap.
- If further medical documentation is needed, you may be asked to provide it.
- If you are a disabled veteran, you'll need documentation from VA or military service indicating your disability.
- Name and address of the organization discriminating against you.
- The nature of the discriminatory action.
- The date(s) the discriminatory action occurred.
- Any additional background information useful in evaluating the complaint.
- How you have been harmed by the discriminatory action.
- Description of any efforts already made to resolve the complaint.
- Name and address of the person to be contacted for further information.
- Copies of relevant correspondence or papers.
- Your signature.

Where To File

Section 503:
Office of Federal Contract Compliance Programs
U.S. Department of Labor
Washington, DC 20210

Section 504:
Office for Civil Rights
U.S. Department of Health and Human Services
Washington, DC 20201

Veterans Readjustment Assistance Act:
Office of Federal Contract Compliance Programs
Washington, DC 20210

What Happens Next? There are slight variations in procedure in the three programs, but this usually is what will happen next:

If additional medical or other documentation is needed, you may be asked to provide it. You will be given full details on how to go about it.

If the organization has an internal review procedure, the complaint may go there first for an attempt to resolve matters.

Then, the Department of Labor will investigate, if it's a matter covered by Section 503 or the Veterans Readjustment Assistance Act. The Department of Health and Human Services (or the appropriate funding agency) will investigate if it's under Section 504.

If the investigation shows there has been no violation, you will be informed. You have the right to ask for a review of the case.

If the investigation does show a violation, efforts will be made to encourage the employer to comply.

If this proves not to be productive, further steps can be taken to bring about compliance – leading all the way to such sanctions as terminating the employer's contract or grant.

Time Limit. Complaints have to be filed within 180 days from the date of the alleged violation. There may be exceptions if a good reason can be established.

To Conclude

Some practical final words about affirmative action and non-discrimination are given below.

- These programs offer no guarantees of a job. But they do lead to equal treatment in the labor market, with lessened discrimination caused by your handicap.
- The key word is "qualified." You won't get a job just because you happen to be handicapped. You may get a job because you are qualified.
- Looking for work isn't easy for anybody. Certainly, the difficulties are compounded when a person has a handicap. These affirmative action and non-discrimination programs may not make it easy to find a job, but they should make it easier than it used to be.

AFFIRMATIVE ACTION TO EMPLOY DISABLED VETERANS AND VETERANS OF THE VIETNAM ERA

What It Is

"Affirmative action" is the legal obligation of every employer doing business with the Federal Government under a contract or subcontract of $10,000 or more to employ and advance in employment disabled veterans of all wars, and all veterans of the Vietnam era.

This legal obligation calls for the contractor not to discriminate against any employee or applicant for employment because he or she is a disabled veteran or a veteran of the Vietnam era. It also calls for the contractor to treat qualified veterans without discrimination because of their disabilities or their veterans' status.

"Affirmative action" applies to such employment practices as hiring, upgrading, demotion, transfer, recruitment, advertising, layoff, termination, rates of pay or other forms of compensation, selection for training (including apprenticeship), job assignments, accessibility, and working conditions.

Who is a Disabled Veteran?

A disabled veteran is a person who:

- Is entitled to disability compensation under laws administered by the Veterans Administration for disability rated at 30% or more; or
- Was discharged or released from active duty due to a disability incurred or aggravated in the line of duty.

(Veterans with non-service-connected disabilities aren't eligible under this law, but may be under Section 503 of the Rehabilitation Act.)

Who is a Veteran of the Vietnam Era?

A veteran of the Vietnam era is a person who:

- Served on active duty for a period of more than 180 days, any part of which occurred between August 5, 1964 and May 7, 1975, and was discharged or released from that duty with a discharge other than dishonorable; or
- Was discharged or released from active duty for a service-connected disability if any part of such duty was performed between August 5, 1964 and May 7, 1975.

Also, the veteran must have been discharged or released within 48 months preceding the alleged affirmative action violation.

Is Every Disabled and Vietnam Era Veteran Covered?

No. As well as being a "disabled veteran" or a "veteran of the Vietnam era," the veteran also must be "qualified" for the job. That is, the veteran must be capable of performing a particular job, with – in the case of the disabled veteran – reasonable accommodation to his or her disability.

How Many Disabled Veterans?

Of the 29.5 million American veterans in the United States, 2,300,000 were active compensation cases in the mid-1970's, according to the Veterans Administration. Included are disabled veterans of World War II and the Korean conflict, as well as those of the Vietnam era (World War II: 1,700,000; Korean conflict: 154,000).

How Many Veterans of the Vietnam Era?

Veterans Administration statistics show some eight million veterans of the Vietnam era. (Of this figure, 458,000 were active compensation cases; that is disabled veterans.)

How Many Disabled Veterans and Veterans of the Vietnam Era are Covered by Section 402?

Applying the definitions of "eligible" disabled and Vietnam era veterans, about 1,000,000 disabled veterans and 7,900,000 Vietnam era veterans – or a total of 8,900,000 veterans – could be thought of as a target population for affirmative action.

Obviously, a large percentage of these nearly nine million veterans are employed, while a small percentage are "unemployable" due to the nature of their disability.

However, as of the mid-1970's, nearly 600,000 veterans were unemployed – and this figure is only for Vietnam era veterans between the ages of 20 and 34. (These figures are from the Bureau of Labor Statistics.)

By any estimate, the number of disabled and Vietnam era veterans not employed, or not getting ahead in employment, is far too high. It is the aim of affirmative action to reduce these numbers.

What Government Contracts are Included?

Included are contracts of $10,000 or more for the furnishing of supplies or services, or for the use of real or personal property including lease arrangements and construction. Subcontracts also are included.

The word "services" includes: utility, transportation, research, insurance, and fund depository.

"Construction" means the construction, rehabilitation, alteration, conversion, extension, demolition, or repair of building or highways, or other changes or improvements to real property. Also included are the supervision, inspection, ands other on-site functions involved in the actual construction.

Agreements in which the parties stand in the relationship of employer and employee and federally-assisted contracts are not considered "Government contracts" for affirmative action. Work outside the United States, contracts with State and local governments, and contracts and subcontracts for indefinite quantities are not included. There are a few other exceptions.

Affirmative Action Clauses

Each agency and each contractor and subcontractor must include an affirmative action clause in each of its covered Government contracts or subcontracts. The clause must cover the following points, among others.

The contractor will not discriminate against any qualified employee or applicant for employment because he or she is a disabled veteran or Vietnam era veteran. The contractor also agrees to take affirmative action to employ, advance in employment, and treat without discrimination disabled veterans and veterans of the Vietnam era.

The contractor agrees that all suitable employment openings of the contractor will be listed at the appropriate local office of the State employment service system, and to provide such reports regarding openings and hirings as may be required.

The contractor shall advise the employment service system, in each State where it has establishments, of the name and location of each hiring location in the State.

The contractor agrees to comply with the rules, regulations, and orders of the Secretary of Labor issued in accordance with P.L. 93-508.

In the event of non-compliance, actions may be taken according to the rules, regulations, and orders of the Secretary of Labor.

The contractor agrees to post in conspicuous places, available to employees and applicants for employment, notices stating affirmative action obligations under law.

The contractor will notify each labor union or worker representative that he/she (the contractor) is bound by P.L. 93-508, and is committed to take affirmative action to employ and advance in employment qualified disabled and Vietnam era veterans.

The contractor will include the affirmative action clause in every subcontract or purchase order of $10,000 or more, unless exempted, so that the clause will be binding on each subcontract or vendor. Such action will be taken to enforce the clause for subcontracts and purchase orders as directed.

For Larger Contractors

Within 120 days of the beginning of a contract, every Government contractor or subcontractor holding a contract of $50,000 or more and having 50 or more employees must prepare and maintain an affirmative action program that sets forth policies, practices, and procedures regarding disabled and Vietnam era veteran employees.

This program may be integrated into or kept separate from other affirmative action programs of the contractor.

The affirmative action program must be reviewed and updated each year. Any significant changes in rights or benefits must be communicated to employees and applicants for employment.

The full affirmative action program must be available for inspection to any employee or applicant for employment upon request, and the location and hours during which the program may be obtained must be posted at each facility.

Identification

To Identify or Not to Identify. The contractor must invite all disabled veterans and veterans of the Vietnam era who wish to benefit under the affirmative action program to identify themselves.

The "invitation" or notice must state that the information is voluntarily provided; that the information will be kept confidential; that refusal to provide the information will not subject the applicant or employee to any adverse treatment; and that the information will be used only in accordance with P.L. 93-508 and its regulations.

If the applicant or employer identifies himself or herself, the contractor should seek that person's advice regarding proper placement and appropriate accommodation.

None of the above shall prevent an employee from informing a contractor at any future time of his or her desire to be included under affirmative action. Nor shall any of the above relieve a contractor from liability for discrimination under P.L. 93-508.

The Notice or "Invitation." An acceptable invitation or notice by the contractor to the disabled and Vietnam era veteran can take the following form.

"This employer is a government contractor subject to Section 402 of the Vietnam Era Veterans Readjustment Assistance Act of 1974, which required government contractors to take affirmative action to employ and advance in employment qualified disabled veterans and veterans of the Vietnam era. If you are a disabled veteran covered by this program and would like to be considered under the affirmative action program, please tell us. This information is voluntary and refusal to provide it will not subject you to discharge or disciplinary treatment. Information obtained concerning individuals shall be kept confidential, except that (i) supervisors and managers may be informed regarding restrictions on the work or duties of disabled veterans, and regarding necessary accommodations, and (ii) first aid personnel may be informed when and to the extent appropriate, if the condition might require emergency treatment."

The invitation or notice goes on to ask the disabled veteran to state job skills and to describe any accommodations needed to perform the job properly and safely.

To be covered or not to be covered: It is up to the disabled and Vietnam era veteran. It is entirely the individual's choice whether to take advantage of, or not take advantage of, the affirmative action program in seeking employment or advancement in employment.

AFFIRMATIVE ACTION TO EMPLOY HANDICAPPED PEOPLE

What It Is

Every employer doing business with the Federal Government under a contract for more than $2,500 must take "affirmative action" to hire handicapped people. "Affirmative action" also applies to job assignments, promotions, training, transfers, accessibility, working conditions, termination, and the like.

The Legal Basis

Section 503 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 established "affirmative action" for handicapped people. This law was amended a year later to broaden the definition of "the handicapped."

Who's Handicapped?

A handicapped person is anyone who:

- Has a physical or mental impairment that substantially limits one or more of his/her major life activities;
- Has a record of such impairment; or
- Is regarded as having such an impairment.

Some Explanations of the Definitions

"Substantially limits" refers to the degree to which the disability affects employability. A handicapped worker having a hard time getting a job or getting ahead on the job because of a disability would be considered "substantially limited."

"Major life activities" include communication, ambulation, self-care, socialization, education, vocational training, transportation, housing, and, of course, employment. The main emphasis is on those life activities that affect employment.

Some Examples

A blind person or a paraplegic person would have "an impairment substantially limiting one or more major life activities." So would a mentally retarded person.

A person who had been in a mental hospital and had been rehabilitated would have "a record of such impairment," even though he or she is now mentally sound. So would a person with a history of heart condition or cancer.

A person who people think is handicapped – for example, a person who might seem mentally retarded but isn't – would be regarded as "having such an impairment."

Is Every Handicapped Person Covered?

No. A person must be capable of performing a particular job – with reasonable accommodation to his or her handicap.

What Government Contracts are Included?

Contracts over $2,500 for supplies or services or for the use of real or personal property, including construction, are covered. Subcontracts also are included.

"Services" include such things as utility, construction, transportation, research, and insurance. "Construction" means not only the erection of buildings but their repair, alteration, extension, and demolition. Highways are not included.

Federal grants and federally assisted contracts are not included in Section 503. They are covered by a separate provision, Section 504, of the same Rehabilitation Act of 1973.

Affirmative Action Clauses

Every Federal contractor must include an affirmative action clause in each of its contracts or subcontracts. The clause must cover these points:

- The contractor agrees not to discriminate against any handicapped person who is qualified to perform the job, and also agrees to take affirmative action to hire, advance, and treat handicapped people without discrimination.
- The contractor agrees to abide by all Department of Labor rules and regulations.
- In the event of noncompliance, the contractor will be declared in default.
- The contractor agrees to post notices of affirmative action in conspicuous places around the plant.
- The contractor agrees to notify all union or worker representatives that he/she is covered by the affirmative action law.
- The contractor includes the affirmative action clause in all subcontracts or purchase orders or more than $2,500.

For Larger Contractors

Each Government contractor holding a contract or subcontract of $50,000 or more and having at least 50 employees is required to develop and maintain an affirmative action program that sets forth the contractor's policies and practices regarding handicapped employees. This program may be kept separate from other affirmative action programs, or it may be integrated into the other programs (but if this is done, it must be identifiable and retrievable).

The program must be reviewed and updated each year. Explanations of major changes must be readily available to employees and to applicants for jobs.

Identification

To Identify or Not to Identify. All handicapped job applicants and employees who want to be covered by affirmative action will be asked to identify themselves to the contractors. They'll be told that the information is to be given voluntarily; that it will be kept confidential; and that refusal to give it will not subject the person to any kind of adverse treatment.

The Notice. Job applicants will be given this kind of notice:

"If you have a handicap and would like to be considered under the affirmative action program, please tell us. This information is voluntary. It will be kept confidential, except that (i) supervisors and managers may be informed regarding work restrictions or accommodations, and (ii) first aid people will be informed regarding possible emergency treatment."

The notice goes on to ask the handicapped person about any special skills or methods worked out to assist in performing the job satisfactorily, as well as any special adaptations needed becasue of the handicap.

To be covered or not to be covered: It's up to the handicapped person. It's the individual's choice whether to use the designation of a handicap in seeking employment or advancement in employment.

AFFIRMATIVE ACTION TO EMPLOY MENTALLY RETARDED PEOPLE

There are two programs covering the employment of handicapped people in the United States. Mentally retarded people are included in both programs.

Sections 503 and 504: Who's Handicapped?

A handicapped person is anyone who:

- Has a physical or mental impairment that substantially limits one or more of his/her major life activities;
- Has a record of such an impairment; or
- Is regarded as having such an impairment.

Some Explanations

"Substantially limits" refers to the degree of disability. A mentally retarded worker having a hard time getting a job because of his or her mental retardation would be considered "substantially limited." For example, the person might need closer supervision or an extended orientation; these might impede the chances of getting a job. Affirmative action could help.

"Major life activities" include communication, socialization, education, vocational training, transportation, housing, and, of course, employment. It must be recognized that there's more involved in the placement of mentally retarded people than the job itself. All of the person's life is involved.

Examples

"A physical or mental impairment" refers to a person who is mentally retarded and who displays some of the characteristics of mental retardation. " A record of such an impairment" refers to a person who may have no obvious traits of mental retardation – but who has been in special schools, institutions, sheltered workshops, or other facilities for the retarded. "Is regarded as having such an impairment" is a reference to people who seem to have the characteristics commonly associated with retardation, but who really are not retarded. Their appearance of retardation stands in their way. They would be protected by this part of the definition.

A Crucial Word: "Qualified"

Not every mentally retarded person is covered by Sections 503 and 504. A retarded person must be qualified to perform a particular job – with reasonable accommodation being made, if it's needed.

Reasonable Accommodation

"Reasonable accommodation" means making necessary adaptations to enable a qualified handicapped person to work. In the case of a mentally retarded person, it might include:

- A longer-than-average period of orientation for new retarded employees, to make certain they begin on the right foot.
- Special arrangements for their transportation (carpooling, central pick-up points).
- Simplified instructions, breaking the total job down to its components.
- Orientation for supervisors about mentally retarded workers.
- Modifying a job so that a retarded person can handle it.
- The job application form itself – someone available to read and explain it to a mentally retarded job candidate, as well as to help fill it out.
- Performance evaluations written so that a retarded person can understand them.

Identification

To Identify or Not to Identify. Some handicapping conditions are perfectly obvious; there is no question about them. But others, like mental retardation, are sometimes hidden. The question then is: Should mentally retarded people identify themselves as such when they apply for work?

To be eligible for the benefits of Sections 503 and 504, they will need to be identified. It should be remembered that the information is to be given voluntarily; that it will be kept confidenttial (exception – supervisors and managers may be informed about any accommodations needed by the person); and that refusal to give it will not subject a person to adverse treatment.

There is one circumstance in which identification may be required under Section 504 – when an employer is voluntarily trying to increase the number of handicapped people employed.

About Labeling. The trend in mental retardation is to avoid labeling. Yet affirmative action requires labeling. Several points should be kept in mind:

- Some retarded people will come to the employment office in the company of rehabilitation counselors, advocates, or others. No problem here; they are clearly identified.
- Some will have information in their personnel files that identifies them – attendance at special schools, participation in work activity centers, and the like. They, too, are identified.
- Some will have none of these. There are ways for mentally retarded people to identify themselves without using the words "mentally retarded" if they wish – slow learning, developmental disabilities, whatever they feel most comfortable with.

Promotions

Since "affirmative action" covers job promotions as well as job hirings, a special word is needed about promotions and mentally retarded people.

Sometimes retarded people are working at full capacity just be being on a job; promotions to more responsible jobs may be out of the question – but sometimes not.

Whenever the matter of promotion comes up, it would be a good idea to discuss it with the person's rehabilitation counselor, if he or she still can be located. If not, discussions ought to be held with an Association for Retarded Citizens' representative or with an advocate, or with anyone else able to give sound advice.

ARCHITECTURAL BARRIERS ACT

The United States Architectural and Transportation Barriers Compliance Board (A&TBCB) is an independent federal agency. Its primary goal is to ensure compliance with standards prescribed under the 1968 Architectural Barriers Act and to ensure that public conveyances, including rolling stock, can be used by handicapped persons. Its other functions are as follows.

- Propose alternative solutions to barriers facing handicapped persons in housing, transportation, communications, education, recreation, and attitudes.
- Determine what Federal, State, and local governments and other public or nonprofit agencies and groups are doing to eliminate barriers.
- Recommend to the President and Congress legislative and administrative ways to eliminate barriers.
- Establish minimum guidelines and requirements for standards prescribed under the Architectural Barriers Act.
- Prepare plans for adequate transportation and housing for handicapped persons, including proposals to cooperate with other agencies, organizations, and individuals working towards such goals.

Its Authority

The A&TBCB may conduct investigations, hold public hearings, and issue orders to comply with the Architectural Barriers Act. An order may include withholding or suspending federal funds for any noncomplying building, public conveyance, or rolling stock.

An order is final and binding on any Federal department, agency, or agent of the United States. A complainant or participant in the proceeding may have the order reviewed in Federal court.

With A&TCBC approval, the executive director may bring a civil action in any appropriate United States district court to enforce any A&TBCB final order. With A&TBCB approval, the executive director may also intervene, participate, or appear as a friend of the court in any Federal or State court in civil actions related to the Architectural Barriers Act or Section 502 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973.

How to Make a Complaint

Anyone has the right of independent access to and use of most buildings and facilities constructed, leased, or altered by or for the Federal government or with Federal funds since 1968, when the Architectural Barriers Act was passed. Whether you are physically handicapped or not, you have the legal right to make a written complaint to the A&TBCB.

Federal buildings or Federally funded facilities covered by the Act must at least meet the Federal minimum standards for access. The American National Standard Specifications for Making Buildings Accessible to, and Usable by, the Physically Handicapped (A117.1-1961; R-1971) is most widely applicable. For example, there must be audible and visual warning signals to aid blind and deaf people. There must be at least one primary entrance that is ramped or level, wide restroom doorways, and lower light switches for those in wheelchairs.

Not all Federally funded buildings and facilities are covered by the Architectural Barriers Act. It includes most post-1968 buildings designed, constructed, altered, or leased by the Federal government and most of those involving Federal loans or grants.

The A&TBCB is concerned about all barrier-related problems. It encourages and promotes access even for those buildings and facilities outside its jurisdiction, such as supermarkets, department stores, and theaters. Only written complaints are accepted. Your name won't be disclosed without your written consent.

The A&TBCB investigates every complaint it receives and uses flexibility and creativity to reach the best answer for all parties. The agency tries a friendly, informal approach to resolve complaints among the parties involved. It informs the complainant of the action it takes.

If a facility isn't covered by the Architectural Barriers Act, the A&TBCB lacks jurisdiction. It will advise the complainant that is is unable to take further action. The A&TBCB may offer suggestions for resolving the problem at the local or State level.

If the A&TBCB has jurisdiction but there appears to be no voluntary resolution, the executive director must decide whether or not to begin legal proceedings to compel compliance.

The A&TBCB executive director begins legal action by filing a citation before an administrative law judge. Parties cited have 15 days to respond to the charges. If the executive director or any party receiving a citation does not request a hearing, the judge may decide the case on the record of documents submitted.

The complainant need not be a party to or attend these proceedings. A copy of the A&TBCB's formal rules used to process the case and its status are provided each complainant.

The judge will issue a decision for the A&TBC. It may require an agency to correct problems within a specific time. The judge may recommend that Federal funds be suspended or withheld. All parties receive copies of the judge's decision.

The A&TBCB decision is final and binding on all Federal agencies. A complainant or participant may seek court review of an A&TBCB decision.

Questions about current standards and complaints about inaccessible Federally owned, leased, or funded buildings should be sent to:

CAREERS AND TRAINING

Under this heading, information is given on a number of careers that involve working with handicapped persons. A description of each career is provided, followed by information on training facilities. The careers included here are: audiologist, speech-language pathologist, occupational therapist, occupational therapist assistant and aide, physiatrist, physical therapist, physical therapist assistant and aide, rehabilitation counselor, and rehabilitation nurse. Sources of further information on each career are indicated.

AUDIOLOGIST: THE CAREER*

An audiologist is a professional concerned with normal and impaired hearing, and with the identification, evaluation, and rehabilitation of those who have hearing problems. The audiologist determines when a person has a hearing impairment, what type of impairment it is, and how the individual can make the best use of his or her remaining hearing. The audiologist determines if a person will benefit from using a hearing aid and, if so, can assist in the selection of an appropriate aid.

Audiologists also may conduct research and participate in prevention and early identification programs. These specialists work closely with other professionals in health and education, including physicians, psychologists, social workers, and educators.

The audiologist is certified by the American Speech-Language-Hearing Association.

Audiologists are concerned with hearing and hearing problems. Most provide services directly to those with hearing impairments and conduct testing programs to find hearing problems as soon as possible. They use special procedures and instruments to evaluate a person's ability to hear and decide whether a hearing aid is needed and what kind is best. Audiologists may direct audiometrists, who carry out testing procedures. In medical settings, audiologists work with physicians in finding the cause of the problem. Audiologists have a key role in training the hearing-impaired person to communicate.

Audiologists in research may develop new basic knowledge or study the practical application of what is already known. Their research may focus on any number of scientific areas. For instance, some audiologists study noise and other aspects of sound, while others focus on the physiological, psychological, or social aspects of hearing. Some audiologists study the hearing process and factors that can impair or improve hearing. They also develop and improve hearing tests, and determine whether clinical procedures are effective.

At present, about 70% of the professionals provide direct services to people with handicaps. They work in schools, hospitals, and health centers, university clinics, community centers, and private practice. Others work in teaching, clinical supervision, administration, and research positions.

How Can Audiologists Help Persons with Hearing Impairment?

Audiologists provide many specialized professional services. They screen and evaluate hearing in infants, particularly those with a high risk of having hearing impairment associated with: (1) a history of hereditary childhood hearing impairment; (2) rubella or some other fetal infection early in pregnancy; (3) defects of the ear, nose, or throat; or (4) premature birth. Audiologists also screen and evaluate hearing of nursery and school age children (screening programs are usually conducted by local and state departments of education and health) and conduct hearing conservation programs in industry and the Armed Services in order to prevent hearing impairment resulting principally from noise exposure.

Audiologists assess hearing to determine if there is a hearing impairment, the severity of the impairment, and the necessity for any auditory habilitation. They provide auditory habilitation, including speech (lip) reading, auditory training, orientation to hearing aid use, counseling, speech and language development, and conservation of normal speech and voice. They can determine if using a hearing aid will help communication and, if so, can help you obtain the appropriate aid. Many persons with hearing impairment can benefit from using hearing aids (although some are able to benefit only partially and others are unable to benefit at all from amplification).

In addition to all of the above, audiologists assess the hearing and communication problems associated with aging and provide any necessary rehabilitation to maintain good communication skills.

Where and How Can an Audiologist Be Located?

Audiologists provide services in many different types of facilities:

- Hospitals
- Rehabilitation centers
- Colleges and universities
- Public and private schools
- State and federal governmental agencies
- Private practice
- Industry
- Nursing care facilities
- Health departments
- Community clinics

To locate an audiologist in your area, contact such facilities directly or contact your health department or school district. If you are unable to locate an audiologist, write for a list of clinical facilities in your state from:

SPEECH-LANGUAGE PATHOLOGIST: THE CAREER*

Speech-language pathologists are concerned with both the development of communication skills and the disorders of speech, voice, and language. They have been called "speech therapists" and "speech correctionists," but these terms are inaccurate because they refer to only part of the work done by the professionals.

The speech-language pathologist works to prevent communication handicaps by providing speech, language, and hearing services early. These services include evaluating the communication problem and its causes. A plan for treatment is developed for each individual; it may be carried out on an individual basis or in a group; it may require that family members assist. It may include advising and counseling in addition to direct intervention activities. When other handicapping conditions also exist, the speech-language pathologist enlists the help of other professionals.

How Can the Speech-Language Pathologist Help Persons with Speech and Language Disorders?

The clinical methods used will vary depending upon the nature and severity of the problem, the age of the individual, and the individual's awareness of the problem. Speech-language pathologists provide many specialized professional services, including, for example:

- Helping individuals with articulation disorders to learn proper production of speech sounds.
- Assisting individuals with voice disorders to develop proper control of the vocal and respiratory systems for correct voice production.
- Assisting individuals who stutter to cope with their disorder and to increase the amount of fluent speech.
- Assisting individuals with aphasia to relearn language and speech skills such as word recall and the ability to produce speech sounds.
- Counseling individuals with speech and language disorders to understand their disorders and to achieve more normal communication in educational, social, and vocational settings.
- Advising individuals and the community on how to prevent speech and language disorders.
- Helping individuals understand the types and severity of communication disorders.

The Speech-Language Pathologist in the Schools Works with Children

Direct intervention services are given to children with language handicaps, which are often the basis for academic learning disabilities; chronic voice disorders; disfluency (stuttering); hearing impairment; moderate-to-severe articulation defects; and language, speech, and hearing disorders associated with cleft palate, cerebral palsy, intellectual impairment, emotional or behavioral disturbances, visual impairment, autistic behavior, aphasia, and other conditions.

Direct services are often provided to high-risk infants enrolled in school-operated child-development centers; elementary, middle, and secondary school children and youths; multiply handicapped students in regional, local, district, or state schools; and severely handicapped children in local district special schools, centers, classes, or home settings.

Direct services include identifying children with communication problems by screening, survey, or referral; assessing and diagnosing children's communicative needs and behaviors; goal-based remediation given in individual and/or group sessions; and periodic reassessment and evaluation of children's progress in achieving instructional and clinical goals and objectives.

Counseling sessions are conducted with parents to help them understand and assist in alleviating or preventing childhood language, speech, and hearing problems.

The Speech-Language Pathologist Works with Teachers

Classroom and resource teachers often cooperate in planning and implementing remediation for children with communication problems. Additionally, the speech-language pathologist may assist teachers in developing classroom activities to improve children's general oral communication skills as part of the language arts program. The speech-language pathologist aids health, science, and family life teachers in developing a curriculum for students in understanding the communication process and methods of preventing disorders. Also, the speech-language pathologist assists vocational teachers and counselors in establishing communication goals related to the work experiences of students.

The Speech-Language Pathologist Works with Administrators

In cooperation with building or program administrators, the speech-language pathologist plans for the development and evaluation of existing and new services; offers professional consultative services to aid in educational programming for various children or target pupil populations; and participates in designing and providing in-service education for teachers and staff.

The Speech-Language Pathologist Works with Other School and Health Specialists

Diagnosis and remediation of children's communicative problems often involve cooperative efforts with specialists such as audiologists, physicians, dentists, nurses, psychologists, social workers, special education teachers, and guidance counselors. The speech-language pathologist serves on school building or district-level placement committees and diagnostic/educational teams to provide comprehensive language, speech, and hearing assessments for children with special problems.

OCCUPATIONAL THERAPIST: THE CAREER*

The profession of occupational therapy is concerned with human lives that have been disrupted by physical injury or accident, birth defects, aging, or emotional or developmental problems. While physical therapy restores the use of muscles, occupational therapy translates the ability to move – no matter how limited – into activities that are personally fulfilling.

The occupational therapist puts knowledge, experience, and compassion to work in programs designed to help patients regain their well-being and their "occupations." The definition of occupation is most important. Rather than referring to a person's employment, occupation means being occupied in meaningful day-to-day living activities including work, leisure, and play.

For example, a growing infant has muscular, perceptual, and motor skills to develop; a child is occupied with building up physical and mental skills; and an adult is occupied with working to establish and maintain a satisfying and balanced life. An elderly person is concerned with maintaining his or her greatest possible fitness, strength, and independence. Whenever performance is impaired, when independence is threatened, the occupational therapist can perform valuable service.

Each patient's case is special. Full recovery may or may not always be possible. If the impairment is severe, the patient can learn to compensate by developing skills and using adaptive equipment, such as splints, wheelchairs, canes or walkers, and prosthetic devices, which make activity possible. In every case, the occupational therapist encourages patients to make the maximum effort and build upon the strengths they have.

*Permission to reproduce granted by the American Occupational Therapy Association.

Who Is The Patient?

The patient is anyone whose life has been affected by an impairment or pathology such as cerebrovascular accident (stroke), arthritis, cerebral palsy, mental retardation, spinal cord injury, amputation, trauma, burns, visual, auditory, and speech disorder, and psychiatric problems.

The patient may be a laborer or skilled worker who because of an accident has lost the ability to do his or her job; a child with delayed development who is poorly coordinated, is having learning difficulties, and may have sensory integrative and/or perception problems; a housewife with arthritis, now confined to a wheelchair, who must learn to manage her home from a sitting height; a stroke victim who must learn to speak, walk, dress, and feed him/herself again; or an emotionally troubled young adult who must gain the confidence to enter the working world and learn independence and self-sufficiency.

The above are just a few cases taken from the myriad of possible examples. Whatever the case, however mild or severe the impairment, the occupational therapist brings knowledge, optimism tempered by realistic assessment, and patience to the situation. Together, patient and therapist work to achieve the patient's maximum level of independent living by marshalling and mobilizing the patient's capabilities.

Treatment

The occupational therapist's concern is the specific problem resulting from a pathology that precludes patient independence and productivity. The therapist may work with the individual patient or with groups of patients in almost every setting. For instance, the patient who is confined to the home will be treated at home.

While a large proportion of therapists – some 40% – will be found at work in hospitals, other therapists will be found in community mental health centers, nursing homes, clinics, day care centers, private and public school systems, and home health agencies.

Together, the therapist and patient work to correct situations such as impaired muscle strength, range of motion, and physical endurance; impaired eye-motor coordination, sensory integration, and motor planning; impaired concentration, attention span, and thought organization problem-solving; and impaired visual-spatial relationships, body schema, and figure-ground discrimination.

The occupational therapist also seeks to prevent muscle atrophy, to minimize and prevent deformity, to increase pain tolerance, and to deal effectively with impairments in patient self-esteem or social relationships that may result from the patient's illness or trauma.

Treatment is as simple or complex as the situation requires. It might be supervised selected actitivies that are developmentally planned to help strangthen impaired hand and arm muscles. A child with impaired visual-spatial perceptions might work with the therapist in matching varying colored wooden shapes to corresponding shapes on a card. The patient who is having trouble adjusting to life socially could be helped to gain a more realistic approach to the world.

The occupational therapist uses appropriate guided group activities such as role playing, games, work adjustment sessions, and discussion groups. The partially paralyzed patient might learn the use of devices that permit self-sufficiency (for example, specially designed eating utensils that may be attached to a cuff placed around the wrist and hand to allow the patient with impared hand and arm muscles to feed him/herself). The amputee with a new prosthetic device – and artificial hand, hook, leg, or breast – through proper training learns the use, care, capabilities, and restrictions of the prosthesis.

In essence, the therapist explores all the possibilities in treatment. Many experienced and innovative occupational therapists will design devices and rehabilitation aids to meet the needs of individual patients.

Education

All occupational therapists have classroom and clinical educational experiences. In entry-level positions, the occupational therapist may be a registered occupational therapist (OTR) or a certified occupational therapy assistant (COTA).

The OTR has completed a four-year baccalaureate degree program and six to nine months of field work experience. The OTR may have spent the full four years in an occupational therapy program, or may have transferred to occupational therapy after two years in a liberal arts program. Course work includes the physical, biological, and behavioral sciences, and is followed by supervised field work experience dealing with conditions that are commonly met in practice.

For the person who already has a baccalaureate degree in an area other than occupational therapy, entry-level master's programs are available. Some schools may require post-baccalaureate students to have credits in human growth and development, psychology, sociology, or anthropology. The master's programs require about 45 semester credits plus six to nine months of field work experience. There are currently about 65 professional entry-level programs accredited jointly by American Medical Association and the American Occupational Therapy Association.

The certified occupational therapy assistant (COTA) is a high school graduate or the equivalent who has completed an approved program in occupational therapy. Course work focuses on human physiology and the tasks and skills used in daily life, and includes at least two months of supervised field work. At present, there are 45 such programs available.

Following completion of course and clinical work, the entry-level OTR or COTA candidate must pass a national certification examination to gain credentials for practice.

Graduate programs for OTRs are also available. Many of these prepare the therapist for specialized practice, for the teaching of occupational therapy, or for beginning research. Two doctoral programs in occupational therapy are available and several others are being developed.

Of all therapists providing direct patient services, most occupational therapists work with physically and developmentally disabled persons, while others work with emotionally handicapped clients. Therapists providing indirect patient services include educators, administrators, consultants, and researchers.

OCCUPATIONAL THERAPY ASSISTANT AND AIDE: THE CAREER

Nature Of The Work

Occupational therapy assistants work under the supervision of professional occupational therapists to help rehabilitate patients who are physically and mentally disabled. They help plan and implement programs of educational, vocational, and recreational activities that strengthen patients' muscle power, increase motion and coordination, and develope self-sufficiency in overcoming disabilities.

Occupational therapy assistants teach clients self-care skills such as dressing, eating, and shaving; work-related skills such as the use of power tools; and recreational and social activities such as games, dramatics, and gardening. They also may teach creative skills such as woodworking, ceramics, and graphic arts.

Assistants must be able to teach a broad range of skills because of the wide variety of patients. They may work either with groups or with individual patients. When treating patients with diseases, assistants usually work under the supervision of professional occupational therapists. In other situations, such as organizing crafts projects for handicapped persons living in institutions, they may function independently, with only periodic consultation with professionals.

Occupational therapy aides order supplies, prepare work materials, and help maintain tools and equipment. They also may keep records on patients, prepare clinical notes, and perform other clerical duties.

Some small occupational therapy departments may consist only of a therapist and one other worker. In these cases, the assistant or aide may assume most of the duties of an occupational therapist, within the limits of his or her training.

Working Conditions

Although occupational therapy assistants and aides generally work a standard 40-hour week, they may occasionally have to work evenings and weekends. The areas where they work generally are well-lighted and ventilated, although noise levels often are high in areas where power tools are being used. Assistants are on their feet much of the time and may get dirty while cleaning equipment.

Places of Employment

Many occupational therapy assistants work in hospitals. Others work in nursing homes, schools for handicapped children and the mentally retarded, rehabilitation and day care centers, special workshops, and outpatient clinics. A small number are members of the Armed Forces.

Occupational therapy aides work in the same locations as assistants but they generally are employed in hospitals.

Training, Other Qualifications, and Advancement

Two types of educational programs prepare occupational therapy assistants – junior or community college programs that award an associate degree upon completion and vocational or technical programs. More schools are offering educational programs approved by the American Occupational Therapy Association. Most of these are two-year college programs. About one-third are one-year vocational and technical school programs. In addition, the Armed Forces operate a school to train occupational therapy assistants.

Graduates of these programs who successfully complete the written national proficiency examination are certified by the American Occupational Therapy Association and receive the title Certified Occupational Therapy Assistant (COTA).

Approved programs combine classroom instruction with at least two months of supervised practical experience. Courses include the history and philosophy of occupational therapy, occupational therapy theory and skills, anatomy and physiology of the human body, and effect of illness and injury on patients, and human development. Students also practice the skills and crafts they later will teach to patients.

Applicants for training programs must be high school graduates or the equivalent. Among the subjects recommended for high school students interested in the occupational therapy field are health, biology, typing, and the social sciences. Preference sometimes is given to applicants who have taken courses in science and crafts and have previous work experience in a health care setting.

Occupational therapy aides train on the job in hospitals and other health care facilities. The length and content of their training depend on the level of difficulty of the duties they are expected to perform.

Occupational therapy assistants and aides should like people, have good physical and mental health, and be able to establish and maintian effective interpersonal relationships. They also should have manual skills because they must teach clients how to use tools and materials.

Occupational therapy assistants and aides who work in large health facilities begin with routine tasks and may advance to more responsible ones as they gain experience. A COTA with four years of approved work experience may take the examination to become a registered occupational therapist (OTR) without completing the remaining two years of study for a bachelor's degree in occupational therapy. Those COTAs considering this path of entry to the occupational therapy profession should contact the Director of Certification of the American Occupational Therapy Association to identify the types of experience required to qualify for the examination.

PHYSICAL THERAPIST: THE CAREER*

Who Is The Physical Therapist?

The physical therapist plans and administers physical therapy treatment programs for medically referred patients to restore function, relieve pain, and prevent disability following disease, injury, or loss of body part. The work is done in hospitals, rehabilitation centers, nursing homes, home-health agencies, or private practice.

What Is Physical Therapy?

Physical therapy is a direct form of professional patient care that can be applied in most disciplines of medicine. These include neurology, neurosurgery, orthopedics, general surgery, family practice, pediatrics, geriatrics, rheumatology, internal medicine, cardiovascular medicine, cardiopulmonary medicine, psychiatry, and sports medicine.

The objectives of physical therapy are:

- The prevention of disability and pain.
- The restoration of function and the relief of pain.
- The promotion of healing.
- Adaptation to permanent disability.

Physical therapy is a vital part of the total care for patients who have problems of temporary or permanent disability or pain due to injury, disease, birth defect, or loss of limb.

Where Is Physical Therapy Practiced?

Physical therapists (PTs) function in a variety of settings within the medical community. Most familiar, perhaps, is the hospital-based therapist who may be either a member of the staff or working under contract. Physical therapists also plan, provide, and supervise direct patient care and evaluation in out-patient clinics, rehabilitation centers, home care agencies, schools, extended care facilities, geriatric treatment centers, private offices, and voluntary health agencies. In fact, they may be found anywhere there is a need for quality health care.

Increasingly, physical therapists are becoming involved in basic and clinical research activities within the framework of a team and as independent investigators. As physical therapy degree programs grow in both size and number, more and more PTs are involved in the academic community either as full-time faculty members or as supervisors of clinical education. In addition, physical therapists act as consultants, along with other members of the health care team, in local, State, and Federal health planning activities.

How Does A Physical Therapist Practice?

In keeping with the licensing laws and ethical principles governing the practice of physical therapy, patients are referred by a physician to the physical therapist for treatment.

Once the patient has been referred to a PT, the therapist will evaluate the patient's problem by testing joint range of motion and mobility, skeletal muscle strength, posture and gait, limb length and circumference, activities of daily living, pulmonary function, sensory and motor nerve conduction velocity, orthotic and prosthetic fit and function, sensation and sensory perception, reflexes and muscle tone, and sensorimotor and other skilled performance.

The results of these and other tests and examinations will be reported to the physician, and will, in many cases, assist the physician in further determining diagnosis and treatment. With the approval of the referring physician, the physical therapist will plan, provide, and monitor an appropriate patient care program using some of the following procedures: shortwave or microwave diathermy, ultrasound, infrared and ultraviolet radiations, cold, electrical stimulation (including transcutaneous electrical nerve stimulation for control of pain), massage, intermittent venous compression, iontophoresis, phonophoresis, cervical and lumbar spine traction, joint mobilization, therapeutic exercise (including the use of biofeedback), and training in the use of orthotic, prosthetic, and other assistive devices, including crutches, canes, and wheelchairs.

When Is Physical Therapy Needed?

The referral to the physical therapist can follow virtually any serious illness or injury. Physical therapy is needed post-operatively, to restore function to affected muscles and to keep the unaffected muscles strong and functional; following stroke, to help patients regain lost muscle control; after birth to evaluate the newborn for birth defects and recommend corrective actions; and before accident, injury, or illness to conduct stress tests, design exercise programs, and provide other forms of preventive health care.

Long-term physical therapy helps patients with spinal cord injuries learn the use of wheelchairs, braces, and crutches and helps amputees learn the use of prostheses.

In schools, physical therapy is used to design athletic training programs and to plan special physical education for handicapped children.

After a soft tissue injury, such as a sprain or strain, the physical therapist can show the patient how to ease the pain and prevent future injuries.

In short, as in medical practice, the PT's case load includes both serious and less serious ailments. Working with a physician, the physical therapist can help the physician restore pain-free, useful function to the patient.

Why Is Physical Therapy Necessary?

Medical science has made gigantic leaps in the area of prolonging life. New products, new techniques, and skilled physicians are saving countless thousands of lives that would have been lost only a few decades ago.

While the physicians maintains life, the physical therapist helps the physician maintain the quality of life. It is the function of physical therapy to restore the patient to his or her "old self." In some cases, such as children afflicted with birth defects, the PT may help make the patient "better than new." In others, as in geriatrics or athletic training, the PT can help maintain the patient's health. The therapist, therefore, has become a vital resource available to the physician in the total care of patients.

Always, the goal of the physical therapist is to help the patient enjoy a longer life by living it more independently or with less pain. For example:

- The patient who is paraplegic as a result of vertebral fracture and spinal cord injury needs early physical therapy to maintain joint motion in the legs and to strengthen the arms and shoulder girdle. This early therapy is essential to the success of later efforts by the physical therapist in training the patient how to transfer to and from a wheelchair, how to dress (including how to put on and remove braces), and how to walk with braces and crutches. In higher levels of spinal cord injury, walking with braces and crutches may be impracticable, but the other elements of the physical therapy program remain essential. In most instances, the program includes instruction of the patients' families in when to help and how to help the patients achieve their treatment goals.
- The survivors of stroke are often left with hemiplegia or some degree of hemiparesis. Both terms are somewhat misleading. True paralysis of the affected arm and leg rarely persists beyond the first week or two, and weakness is not the chief residual problem. By taking advantage of planned sensory input, automatic responses and stereotyped movement patterns, the physical therapist is often able to help the hemiplegic patient achieve some improvement in the skilled performance of the involved extremities. The primary goals of physical therapy in hemiplegia are maximum possible function of the affected arm, hand and leg, as well as independence and safety in walking, in sitting onto and rising from seats of all kinds (including toilet and car seats), and in climbing stairs and curbs. As in many other disability problems, early therapy is vital to preventing later impediments to success through the disuse of involved and uninvolved body parts.
- Arthritis, except in its most severe forms, is not a life-threatening problem but its pain and disability are experienced daily by many people. Not all people with arthritis are patients, and not all patients with arthritis need physical therapy. Physical therapy is essential when joint disease or degeneration has diminished the patient's ability to do things or when it threatens to do so because of an expected loss in joint motion and muscle strength. The therapy program varies with the kind and severity of the arthritis but often includes some form of heat to relieve pain and exercises to maintain or increase joint motion. Strengthening exercises are included if they pose no risk to the joint surfaces, and training in activities of daily living and the use of adaptive devices is needed for the arthritic patient who is disabled. When indicated, the physical therapist will visit the patient's home to evaluate the need for special equipment. The details of the therapy program may differ but the scope and goals are much the same for the patient who has had reconstructive surgery or surgical replacement of an arthritic joint.
- Patients who have coronary artery disease, or who show risk factors associated with coronary artery disease, are increasingly being referred to physical therapy for graded exercise stress testing and for carefully planned outpatient exercise programs. The therapy programs have been shown to improve the patients' exercise capacity and morale, and to do so safely. In a related area, physical therapy in the form of specific breathing exercises has been shown to be effective in preventing pulmonary complications following open heart surgery. Reports on these aspects of physical therapy, as well as others, have appeared in recent issues of Physical Therapy, the official journal of the American Physical Therapy Association.

The American Physical Therapy Association

The cohesive force assisting the physical therapy profession is the American Physical Therapy Association (APTA).

The twin goals of APTA are (1) to serve the public through improvement of education, practice, and research; and (2) to serve its members through identification, communication, and fellowship.

Some of the activities that foster these goals include the following.

Accreditation. APTA is recognized as an accrediting body for educational programs in physical therapy by the United States Office of Education and the Council of Postsecondary Accreditation. It is responsible for establishing standards for the programs that educate physical therapists and physical therapist assistants.

Continuing Education. Conferences, seminars, publications, workshops, and other kinds of continuing education are sponsored by the Association on a regular continuing basis.

Quality Assurance. The quality assurance program of APTA emphasizes the need for evaluating the quality of physical therapy treatments, developing the skills needed within the membership to carry out evaluations, and, in other ways, assuring the highest quality of physical therapy care possible.

Clinical Research. APTA promotes research in physical therapy through graduate education programs, fellowships in clinical research, publication of research reports, and special seminars. Methods for increasing clinical research are being developed as part of the Association's efforts to see that more effective physical therapy care can be made available to the public.

PHYSICAL THERAPIST ASSISTANT AND AIDE: THE CAREER

Nature of the Work

Physical therapist assistants and aides work under the supervision of professional physical therapists to help rehabilitate disabled persons so that they may again lead useful and productive lives. They help to restore physical functions and prevent disability from injury or illness.

Assistants help physical therapists test patients to determine the extent of their capabilities and the best treatment for them. Using special therapy equipment, they apply heat, cold, light, ultrasound, and massage, and report to their supervisors on how well the patient is reponding to treatment. Assistants help patients perform therapeutic exercises to build strength and increase motion as well as everyday activities such as walking and climbing stairs. They also help physical therapists instruct patients on the use of artificial limbs, braces, and splints.

Physical therapist aides help patients prepare for treatment, and may remove and replace devices such as braces, splints, and slings, and transport patients to and from treatment areas. They may help assistants or therapists by supporting patients during treatment. Aides care for and assemble treatment equipment, make appointments, act as receptionists, and perform other clerical duties.

Some small health care institutions, such as small hospitals or nursing homes, employ only one person besides the therapist in the physical therapy department. In this case, the assistant or aide may assume more duties within the limits of his or her training.

Working Conditions

Physical therapist assistants and aides may be required to work some evenings and weekends. Although they work in clean and pleasant surroundings, the work can be physically exhausting. They are on their feet for hours at a time and may have to move heavy equipment. In addition, they lift patients into and out of wheelchairs, position them on treatment tables, and help them stand or walk.

Places of Employment

Most physical therapist assistants and aides work in physical therapy departments of general and specialized hospitals. Others work in physicians' or physical therapists' offices and clinics, rehabilitation centers, or nursing homes for the chronically ill and elderly. Some community and government health agencies, schools for handicapped children, and facilities for the mentally retarded also employ physical therapist assistants and aides. A small number are members of the Armed Forces.

Training, other Qualifications, and Advancement

Training requirements for physical therapist assistants are not uniform throughout the country. Physical therapist assistants are licensed in 24 states, where they must be graduates of an accredited two-year associate degree program and may have to pass a written licensure examination. In states not requiring a license, some physical therapy aides can advance to assistants by acquiring the necessary knowledge and skills on the job, although most employers prefer graduates of accredited programs.

Most of the accredited programs to train physical therapist assistants are in junior or community colleges and most lead to an associate degree. Courses include history and philosophy of rehabilitation, human growth and development, anatomy, physiology, and psychology. Studies also cover physical therapist assistant procedures, including massage, therapeutic exercise, and heat and cold therapy. Supervised clinical experience is a requirement of these programs. The Armed Forces operate schools to train physical therapist assistants, but this training does not satisfy academic requirements for State licensure and no degree is awarded to graduates.

Physical therapist aides train on the job in hospitals and other health care facilities. The length and content of these training programs vary widely, depending on the level of difficulty of duties that aides are expected to perform, the particular services required by patients in the program, and the amount of time professional therapists spend in teaching trainees. Applicants admitted to physical therapist aide training programs generally must be high school graduates or the equivalent. Employers usually prefer that aides have previous hospital experience as nursing aides.

High school courses that are helpful to physical therapist assistants and aides are health, biology, social science, physical education, mathematics, and typing.

Physical therapist assistants and aides should be in good physical condition. They also need manual dexterity to adjust equipment, body coordination to assist patients, and an interest in assisting the physically handicapped. Emotional stability is important because assistants and aides must maintain a positive, bright outlook while helping patients with very difficult handicaps. Patience and the ability to recognize and appreciate slight improvements also are helpful.

As physical therapist assistants and aides gain experience, they may advance to more responsible duties with corresponding pay increases. Physical therapist assistants with an associate degree from an accredited program sometimes advance to physical therapists by earning the bachelor's degree in physical therapy. A student thinking about this option should arrange his or her associate degree curriculum carefully to correspond to the undergraduate requirements of the bachelor's degree program under consideration.

Some aides advance to physical therapist assistant or physical therapist by resuming their education and completing the academic and clinical education requirements.

REHABILITATION COUNSELOR: THE CAREER

Nature of the Work

Each year more mentally, physically, and emotionally disabled persons become self-sufficient and productive citizens. They find employment in a wide variety of occupations previously thought too complex or physically demanding for them to handle. A growing number are studying in colleges and technical schools throughout the United States. One member of the team of professionals who help disabled individuals leave a sheltered environment to lead as normal a life as possible is the rehabilitation counselor.

Rehabilitation counselors begin their work by learning about their clients. They may read school reports, confer with medical personnel, and talk with family members to determine the exact nature of the disability. They also discuss with physicians, psychologists, and occupational therapists the types of skills the client can learn. At that point, the counselor begins a series of discussions with the client to explore training and career options. The counselor then uses this information to develop a rehabilitation plan.

A rehabilitation program generally includes specific job training, as well as other specialized training the disabled person may need. When working with a blind individual, for example, the counselor may arrange for training with seeing-eye dogs. The disabled person then may spend a few months learning to cross streets and ride public transportation systems. Throughout this period, the counselor and disabled client meet regularly to discuss progress in the rehabilitation program and any problems that may arise.

Counselors also must find jobs for disabled persons and often make followup checks to ensure that placement has been successful. If the new employee has a specific problem on the job, the counselor may suggest adaptations to the employer.

Because job placement is such an important aspect of a counselor's work, he or she must keep in touch with members of the business community to learn the type of jobs available and the training required. The counselor must also try to alleviate any fears on the part of employers about the suitability of hiring handicapped individuals. As a result, counselors may spend time publicizing the rehabilitation program to business and community associations.

An increasing number of counselors specialize in a particular area of rehabilitation; some may work almost exclusively with the blind, the deaf, alcoholics, drug addicts, the mentally ill, or retarded persons. Others may work almost entirely with persons living in poverty areas.

The amount of time spent counseling each client varies with the severity of the disabled person's problems as well as with the size of the counselor's caseload. Some rehabilitation counselors are responsible for many persons in various stages of rehabilitation; on the other hand, less experienced counselors, or those working with the severely disabled, may work with relatively few cases at a time.

Working Conditions

Rehabilitation counselors generally work a 40-hour week or less, with some overtime work required to attend community and civic meetings in the evening. They may spend only part of their time in their offices counseling and performing necessary paperwork. The remainder of their time is spent away from the office, working with prospective employers, training agencies, and the disabled person's family. The ability to drive a car often is necessary for this work.

Rehabilitation counselors must maintain close contact with handicapped clients and their families over many months or even years. The counselor often has the satisfaction of watching day-by-day progress in the disabled person's fight for independence. At other times, however, the counselor may experience the disappointment of a client's failures.

Places of Employment

About 70% of the persons working as rehabilitation counselors in recent years worked in State and local rehabilitation agencies financed cooperatively with Federal and State funds. Some vocational rehabilitation specialists and counseling psychologists worked in the Veterans Administration's vocational rehabilitation program. Rehabilitation centers, sheltered workshops, hospitals, mental health centers, labor unions, insurance companies, special schools, centers for independent living, and other public and private agencies with rehabilitation programs and job placement services for the disabled employ the rest.

Training, other Qualifications, and Advancement

A bachelor's degree with courses in counseling, psychology, and related fields is the minimum educational requirement for rehabilitation counselors. However, employers are placing increasing emphasis on the master's degree in rehabilitation counseling or vocational counseling, or in related subjects such as psychology, education, and social work. Work experience in fields such as vocational counseling and placement psychology, education, and social work is an asset for securing employment as a rehabilitation counselor. Most agencies have work-study programs whereby employed counselors can earn graduate degrees in the field.

More colleges and universities accredited by the Counsil on Rehabilitation Education are offering graduate programs in rehabilitation counseling. Usually, one and one-half to two years of study are required for the master's degree. Included is a period of actual work experience as a rehabilitation counselor under the close supervision of an instructor. Besides a basic foundation in psychology, courses generally include in master's degree programs are counseling theory and techniques, occupational and educational information, and community resources. Other requirements may include courses in placement and followup, tests and measurements, psychosocial effects of disability, and medical and legislative aspects of rehabilitation.

To earn the doctorate in rehabilitation counseling or in counseling psychology may take a total of four to six years of graduate study. Intensive training in psychology and other social sciences, as well as in research methods, is required.

Many states require that rehabilitation counselors be hired in accordance with civil service and merit system rules. In most cases, these regulations require applicants to pass a competitive written test, sometimes supplemented by an interview and evaluation by a board of examiners. In addition, some private organizations require rehabilitation counselors to be certified. To become certified, counselors must pass exams administered by the Commission on Rehabilitation Counselor Certification.

Because rehabilitation counselors deal with the welfare of individuals, the ability to accept responsibility is important. It also is essential that they be able to work independently and be able to motivate and guide the activity of others. Counselors who work with the severely disabled need unusual emotional stability. They must be very patient in dealing with clients who often are discouraged, angry, or otherwise difficult to handle.

Counselors who have limited experience usually are assigned the less difficult cases. As they gain experience, their caseloads are increased and they are assigned clients with more complex rehabilitation problems. After obtaining considerable experience and more graduate education, rehabilitation counselors may advance to supervisory positions or top administrative jobs.

REHABILITATION NURSING: THE CAREER*

Rehabilitation nursing involves working with people, young and old, who are disabled. The disabilities may have resulted from injury, cardiac disease, stroke, arthritis, cancer, pulmonary disease, congenital defects, burns, or any other cause; and they may manifest themselves in a variety of ways. The person may be disfigured, paralyzed, blind or weakened, or may have a severe neurological problem. Rehabilitation nursing helps to reintegrate such people into their families and communities, and into new lifestyles, with confidence and self esteem because of their abilities and in spite of their disabilities.

The nurse is often, and logically, the leader of a team of disciplines, working with the patient toward rehabilitation. The team includes a physical therapist, an occupational therapist, a vocational counselor, a nutritionist, and any other discipline necessary in addition to the physician who directs the medical care. (Physiatrists are physicians who specialize in physical medicine and rehabilitation.)

The rehabilitation nurse may practice his or her specialty in many ways – working on a rehabilitation unit in an institution, as a consultant to the staff of other units in a facility, in a rehabilitation center, or in private practice as a consultant to facilities and institutions. The rehabilitation nurse may function in the community as an insurance nurse, a home health nurse, or one hired by various government agencies to continue and coordinate the rehabilitation of a patient after discharge.

Rehabilitation encompasses and is inherent in all of nursing. The specialty offers challenge and reward in large measure to a nurse who enjoys working with patients over long periods of time, who can see a person in terms of abilities and present realities, who does not require short-term gains for satisfaction, and who can empathize with a sense of humor!

Undergraduate rehabilitation education is included in the curriculum of most schools. Some, however, offer a very limited experience. ARN and those in rehabilitation education throughout the country are constantly working to improve the rehabilitation experience for nursing students. For this reason, the curriculum of a specific school may be changing and we suggest you contact the institution you are most interested in to find the one that would offer you the most.

The Association of Rehabilitation Nurses (ARN)

ARN is an international organization of nurses who work with the ill and disabled, helping them reach their optimum level of function. These nurses, highly qualified by education and/or experience, provide their expertise to clients in a variety of settings and under the auspices of many different agencies, including hospitals, rehabilitation centers, long-term care facilities, insurance companies, and community agencies.

ARN was founded in 1974 to advance the quality of rehabilitation nursing service throughout the community by offering educational opportunities to promote an awareness and interest in rehabilitation nursing and to improve the expertise of personnel on all levels, and by facilitating the exchange of ideas in rehabilitation programs. Since that time, the organization has grown steadily, providing educational opportunities and membership benefits on local, regional and national levels.

The Association has established itself as the representative organization for professional rehabilitation nurses, and has become involved in legislative and professional issues affecting the specialty of rehabilitation nursing.

CATHOLIC SCHOOLS FOR THE DEAF

Under this heading, an explanation of the International Catholic Deaf Association is provided, as well as a list of Catholic schools for the deaf and a list of information services or clearinghouses that can supply additional information.

THE INTERNATIONAL CATHOLIC DEAF ASSOCIATION*

History

The International Catholic Deaf Association, Inc. was founded in July 1949 in Toronto, Ontario, Canada, by prominent Catholic deaf people from Buffalo, Detroit, and Toronto. This first Congress of the Catholic Deaf in both Canada and the United States worked with ten priests to lay plans for an International Organization. James Cardinal McGuigan, then Archbishop of Toronto, gave the project his approval. From these initial efforts evolved the International Catholic Deaf Association (I.C.D.A.) as it is today.

What is the I.C.D.A.?

The I.C.D.A. is an international organization of Catholic deaf people in the United States, Canada, and other countries. Its membership comprises local chapters and individual membership.

Purpose

The purposes of the I.C.D.A. are:

- To promote the development and share the responsibility of church work in their local diocese with all Catholic deaf people to unite the Catholic deaf so that programs can be carried out to help all the deaf.
- To aid local chapter chaplains and provide missionaries to work among the Catholic deaf.
- To provide good spiritual, social, and recreational programs for the deaf in their own diocese.
- To foster more Catholic schools and religious education programs for deaf children to provide them with religious training.
- To sponsor a Mission Fund, whose finances are used to enable missionaries, priests, sisters, and others to promote the spread of Catholic religion among the deaf.

I.C.D.A. is an international organization of deaf people that cooperates with other organizations to improve the living standards of all the deaf by helping to pass beneficial legislation, by educating people in business and industry to the capability of the deaf person as an employee, by cooperation with various government agencies, and by promoting public awareness.

Chapters are encouraged to arrange Sunday Masses for the deaf in the local areas with the liturgy presented in the sign language. Chapter chaplains provide bible study and inquiry forums for adult deaf where the Catholic and non-Catholic deaf may improve their knowledge of the Catholic religion.

CERTIFIED HEARING AID SPECIALISTS (AUDIOLOGISTS)

Included below is an explanation of what a person with hearing loss should do and what a Certified Hearing Aid Specialist is. A list of Certified Hearing Aid Specialists (or Audiologists) also is given here.

NATIONAL HEARING AID SOCIETY*

A person with a hearing loss should follow these procedures:

Obtain a medical examination for a hearing loss, preferably from a medical ear specialist (called an otolaryngologist or otologist). Your family physician may help you locate one in your area. He can advise you about whether your hearing loss can be treated medically or surgically, or whether to consider a hearing aid.

If you have had a medical examination, and a hearing aid is indicated, you may use the list of members of the National Hearing Aid Society (below) to locate a qualified hearing aid specialist near you. He or she will test your hearing, assist you in the selection and fitting of a hearing aid, make needed adjustments, fit an earpiece, instruct you in the care and use of your hearing aid, and counsel you and your family to assist you in adjusting to your hearing loss and the use of your hearing aid. Periodic office visits or house calls may be arranged to assist you after your hearing aid is fitted. If you have any questions whatsoever about your hearing aid, discuss them frankly and openly with your hearing aid specialist.

For help or for information about hearing aids, hearing loss, or hearing health care, call the toll-free Hearing Aid Helpline, (800) 521-5247, or write to:

National Hearing Aid Society
International Headquarters
20361 Middlebelt
Livonia, MI 48125
(313) 478-2610
Contact: Director

Washington Office
(202) 457-1040

CHOOSING A HEARING AID SPECIALIST*

Choosing a hearing aid specialist is one of the most important decisions a hearing impaired person can make. Since a hearing aid cannot be prescribed like eyeglasses, proper hearing aid fitting is highly dependent on the judgment and skill of the hearing aid specialist. Your hearing aid specialist will not only test your hearing, and select and fit the hearing aid that will help you best, but he or she also offers support, encouragement, counseling, and instruction while you learn to use the hearing aid to best advantage.

What it Means to be a Certified Hearing Aid Audiologist

The title, Certified hearing aid audiologist, is granted only to those hearing aid dealer/specialists who have met exacting requirements established by the National Hearing Aid Society.

Experience. The applicant must submit proof of two years actual experience, with supervision, in the fitting of hearing aids.

Education. The applicant must complete the NHAS Basic Course in Hearing Aid Audiology, or an equivalent approved course.

Examination. The applicant must pass the comprehensive NHAS certification examination or an equivalent approved examination.

Endorsement. The applicant must submit references from three persons: his/her employer, a physician (preferably an otologist), and a qualified person in the hearing aid field. They affirm that the applicant is competent to make the required hearing analysis, take ear impressions, and adjust a hearing aid and earpiece to carry out their functions.

The applicant must also submit character references, as well as financial references from his or her bank and suppliers.

All references are thoroughly checked by the National Hearing Aid Society.

Ethics. The applicant must pledge, under oath, to abide by the NHAS Code of Ethics, and must also submit all advertising for a period of 30 days prior to application as proof of ethical advertising practices.

Evaluation. On successful completion of these requirements, the applicant's name is published in a bulletin to the NHAS membership for comment. The application is then sent to the National Board for Certification for review and evaluation. All Board members are certified members of NHAS, and come from various areas of the United States and Canada, to provide broad geographical representation. Certification is granted only by majority approval of the Board.

EASTER SEAL SOCIETIES FOR CRIPPLED CHILDREN AND ADULTS

Included here is information about Easter Seals, as well as a listing of the state and local Easter Seal societies across the country. In each state, the state society is listed first, and then the local societies follow. An asterisk indicates that a society is a local service member of the The National Easter Seal Society. FACTS ABOUT EASTER SEALS*

The National Easter Seal Society, whose origin dates back to 1919, pioneered in identifying needs of physically handicapped people and in providing rehabilitation services.

Last year, Easter Seal societies across the country provided services to over 500,000 individuals. The Society also continued its role as a leading advocate for the rights of handicapped citizens.

Rehabilitation

Easter Seal services are delivered through 1,124 state and local affiliates across the country. These services – tailored to meet existing community needs – include physical, occupational, and speech therapy; audiological training; vocational counseling; speech, hearing, physical, and vocational evaluation; counseling and screening; home and sheltered employment; special education programs; social clubs; day and residential camping; transportation; referral; and follow-up.

Easter Seal centers treat people with disabilities due to any cause: cerebral palsy, muscular dystrophy, multiple sclerosis, stroke, speech and hearing disorders, amputation, blindness, accidents, arthritis, or birth defects.

Advocacy

As an advocate for equal rights of people with disabilities, the Easter Seal Society works with Federal, State, and local governments to improve the environment for handicapped citizens. Through its governmental affairs office in Washington, D.C., the Society maintains contacts with Federal agencies, responds to legislators' requests for information, and presents testimony before Congressional committees.

The society also conducts educational programs for parent and self-help groups, people in business, educators, and volunteers, which are aimed at eliminating environmental and attitudinal barriers and creating recognition for the capabilities of handicapped people.

Research

The Easter Seal Research Foundation awards grants to finance investigation into the causes of disabling conditions or into the rehabilitation of disabled people. The Foundation also assists Easter Seal affiliates in undertaking their own service-related research and encourages them to join with a university or medical school in collaborative research projects.

In general, the Foundation finances initial exploration of promising ideas or small pilot studies to the point where they can generate other funding sources.

Grants totaling more than $4 million have been made to researchers at universities, medical schools, hospitals, and other research institutions since 1956.

Education

The National Easter Seal Society's Information Center maintains a comprehensive collection of resource material for consumers, students, and professionals on subjects ranging from counceling, education, and therapy to housing, recreation, and travel for disabled people.

In addition to its reference collection, the Information Center also produces and distributes an extensive list of helpful, free or low-cost books and pamphlets. Titles of available materials are listed in a free publications catalog. They cover such areas as activities of daily living, barrier-free design, learning disabilities, recreation, safety, sexual adjustment, social/psychological aspects of being handicapped, speech and hearing, stroke, and vocation/employment.

The Center's resources are open to the public for on-site use, or through mail or phone inquiry.

The Center also publishes a professional journal, Rehabilitation Literature, containing original articles, abstracts, and reviews. Issued ten times a year, the journal provides a source of current bibliographies and reprints on rehabilitation topics.

The National Easter Seal Society's professional education program includes scholarships for graduate study in speech pathology and audiology.

A public education project begun by the National Society in 1975 – "National Handicapped Awareness Week" – has been increasingly successful in generating public recognition of the abilities of handicapped people and gaining support for the elimination of barriers.

EMPLOYMENT INFORMATION

A variety of different types of employment information are included under this heading. First, CETA, an employment and training resource for disabled young adults, is explained. Next, careers for the homebound, or home study educational opportunities, are discussed. Following this, information is given regarding the employment of mentally restored persons in the Federal service, and the employment of persons with mental retardation or with physical impairments in the Federal services. Federal job information centers in the country are then listed, followed by human resource development coordinators, who are good sources of information about available jobs for handicapped persons. An explanation of the procedure for processing complaints of discrimination is also included, as well as a list of State employment security agencies, which can provide information about unemployment insurance and disability benefits.

CETA: AN EMPLOYMENT AND TRAINING RESOURCE FOR DISABLED YOUNG ADULTS

About CETA

CETA programs provide special training and employment for people who meet the eligibility criteria of the programs. Each program has different criteria for determining eligibility. The CETA law was first passed by the Congress in 1973. In late 1978, Congress extended the program for another four years.

CETA is overseen by the United States Department of Labor. This agency sets the guidelines that each of the individual program operators is obliged to follow. The actual training or employment programs are administered by local groups called "CETA Prime Sponsors." These groups receive money from the Federal program and use it for training and employment programs for the area's residents who need them. Since employment problems differ from one location to another, CETA gives each local authority (Prime Sponsor) the flexibility to decide what type of program it needs most.

CETA Amendments

When Congress renewed the CETA law in 1978, the Department of Labor prepared new regulations. These regulations made some basic changes that increased CETA's potential for handicapped youth. The most important change was in the definition of who is an "economically disadvantaged person." In the past, handicapped individuals had to have incomes below certain levels. Now, an individual with a disability that presents a barrier to employment and who can benefit from CETA services may be considered eligible.

The new definition of who is economically disadvantaged states that "economically disadvantaged means a person who is . . . (1) a client of a sheltered workshop; (2) a handicapped individual; (3) a person residing in an insitution or facility providing 24 hour support such as a prison, a hospital or a community care facility; or (4) a regular outpatient of a mental hospital, rehabilitation facility or similar institution."

With this change, disabled youth may be considered eligible; they may not have to meet low income requirements. In addition, the new CETA regulations go on to define a handicapped person as "any person who has a physical or mental disability which constitutes a substantial barrier to employment and can benefit from CETA services provided, as determined by the Prime Sponsor." There appears to be a great deal of local determination; the Prime Sponsor is the key. Remember, programs are designed for the community by each local Prime Sponsor. Since CETA's definition of "handicapped person" depends upon the Prime Sponsor's appreciation for the employment potential of handicapped people, the best way for parents, educators, groups of disabled people, and others to maximize this program for disabled youth is by involving themselves with the local Prime Sponsor.

Fortunately, the CETA law makes involvement of the public easy. It calls for Prime Sponsors to establish planning councils. These planning councils help Prime Sponsors decide what sort of CETA programs the local area needs most. The new regulations require that the Prime Sponsor "shall appoint to its planning council [among others] . . . representatives of handicapped individuals." The representatives also "shall have voting priviliges." And representatives from "interested education and training agencies and institutions" are required to be involved on these planning councils.

For more information on CETA or for the address of your area's Prime Sponsor, write or call your local mayor's office or county government. Or write to:

CAREERS FOR THE HOMEBOUND— HOME STUDY EDUCATIONAL OPPORTUNITIES

Who are Homebound People?

They are individuals who would like to get out and attend residential educational institutions or go to work, but, because of society's barriers and because there is a lack of accessible transportation, cannot take advanatge of community educational resources or educational programs and activities. Home study education – sometimes known as correspondence or independent study – serves as a way of developing, utilizing, and maximizing the diverse talents and skills of those who choose or prefer to learn at home.

Why Home Study?

Home study instruction affords many and varied opportunities to learn a skill, train for various types of jobs, or create a meaningful avocation. Study by mail allows one to pursue an education at one's own pace, on one's own time, away from the competitive pressures of a classroom and freed from the bondages of space and time. More than 500 subjects – ranging from accounting to yacht design – may be studied by mail.

Home study has led to meaningful employment and careers for many people. Some 40 million Americans have studied by correspondence since 1900. Each year some four million people study by correspondence. Without it they might not have engaged in educational and vocational development. Home study may be taken by persons with varied educational achievements – those without a high school education, those who have completed high school, and those who have a college background.

Choosing Home Study Courses

Where available, assistance may be obtained from educational, vocational, or rehabilitation counselors or agencies. County agricultural agents may be resoucres for some. Still others may have to rely upon themselves. There are a number of recommended steps for choosing a home study program:

1. Assess and determine your goals and objectives, the resources available to you (financial, time, etc.), and your interest in the subject field to be pursued. See a counselor if one is available.
2. Seek specific courses of study leading toward fulfillment of your objectives by consulting the resources suggested here.
3. Contact a number of accredited schools that offer the courses you wish. Obtain information relating to content of the courses, materials required, level of instruction, fees, etc. Both the National Home Study Council and the National University Extension Association have directories of their accredited or member schools.
4. Enroll in the course of your choice.

Are Schools That Offer Home Study Courses Accredited?

The Accrediting Commission of the National Home Study Council, which is listed as a "nationally recognized accrediting agency" by the United States Office of Education, conducts a national accreditation program for both private and non-private home study schools.

In order to meet NHSC accreditation standards, each home study school must have a competent faculty, offer educationally sound and up-to-date courses and provide satisfactory educational services. In addition, schools must demonstrate student success and satisfaction, advertise courses truthfully, and be able to deliver high quality education.

The National University Extension Association (NUEA) publishes a listing of regionally accredited university and college Independent Study Division of NUEA member institutions that offer primarily academic courses by correspondence.

EMPLOYMENT OF MENTALLY RESTORED PERSONS IN THE FEDERAL SERVICE

Policy

It is the policy of the Federal Government to provide equal employment opportunity for qualified persons who have been restored to mental health in all positions where they are able to perform the job duties efficiently and safely.

Program

The Office of Personnel Management (OPM) conducts a vigorous program for applicants who are handicapped, working through its central office in Washington, D.C., and through each of its 10 regional offices and more than 60 area offices across the country.

Much of the progress of the program has been accomplished through the provisions of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (P.L. 93-112, as amended), which require Federal agencies to develop and implement affirmative action program plans for hiring, placement, promotion, and retention of handicapped individuals. To facilitate employment, Federal agencies may use either competitive or special appointing authorities. Realistic physical standards, based on the actual tasks of a position, require that applicants possess only the minimum medical qualifications necessary for safe and efficient performance of the duties of a particular position. Reasonable accommodation may also be considered in determining an applicant's ability to perform the duties of a job.

The Agency Coordinator

In order to ensure that all handicapped applicants receive full employment consideration, Federal agencies designate Coordinators for Selective Placement in each of their installations that have an employment office. The coordinators provide advice and counsel concerning employment and work with hiring officials to make sure that handicapped applicants and employees receive full consideration for all employment and promotion opportunities.

Avenues to Employment

Competitive Appointments. Most Federal employees, including those who are handicapped, obtain their jobs competitively, through the following procedures.

An applicant applies for and establishes eligibility on an OPM register, either by passing a written test (special testing is available for severely handicapped individuals) or by having his/her experience and education evaluated by OPM. When filling a vacancy, an agency requires a list of qualified people from the appropriate OPM register. Finally, the agency may interview and select for the vacancy.

Special Appointing Authorities. Although the overwhelming majority of employees in the Federal Government obtained their jobs through competitive procedures, there are many others for whom the ordinary procedures will not function fairly or accurately. To assist individuals who have been restored to mental health, Federal agencies may use alternative appointing authorities to ensure that such people gain work experience and confidence.

The 700-hour trial appointing authority gives mentally restored individuals an opportunity to demonstrate their ability to perform the duties of a position. Applicants must meet the minimum qualifications standards (including taking and passing a written test, if required). This is a temporary appointment, which may lead to either an excepted position under the Schedule B, section 213.3202(k) authority or a competitive appointment through the regular procedures.

The Schedule B, section 213.3202(k) excepted appointing authority is for mentally restored persons who (1) have a documented history of mental illness that was treated within the previous two years, (2) are unemployed, and (3) have been certified directly to a position by a State vocational rehabilitation or Veterans Administration counselor. Applicants must meet the minimum qualification standards (including taking and passing a written test, if required). This appointing authority provides employment of up to two years and includes the time served under the 700-hour trial appointment. Individuals wishing to continue in Federal service must be appointed through the appropriate competitive examination procedure(s) or be eligible for other noncompetitive appointing authorities.

Accomodations on the Job

When Federal agencies hire a person who is mentally restored, every effort is made to accommodate the individual to ensure that he or she can perform to full potential and ability. Agencies may, for example: (1) modify job duties, (2) restructure work sites, and (3) alter work schedules.

How to Apply

Persons considering Federal employment under this special appointment program should first contact their State vocational rehabilitation or Veterans Administration rehabilitation counselor before contacting Federal agencies to find out if they are or would be eligible for consideration under this appointment. For answers to questions regarding employment in the Federal Government, you can visit, write, or call the nearest Federal Job Information Center (FJIC) (also listed under this heading – Employment Information).

Other Information

Some agencies in the Federal Government are exempt by law from these procedures. For a listing of these agencies (e.g., the United States Postal Service), contact the nearest FJIC.

Applicants may also need to complete physical and vocational rehabilitation processes that will enable them to meet basic qualifications. Individuals who need this assistance should contact their State Office of Vocational Rehabilitation. Veterans with service-connected disabilities should contact the Veterans Administration. Pamphlets describing application procedures and information prepared specifically for veterans with service-connected disabilities may be obtained from the FJIC.

EMPLOYMENT OF PERSONS WITH MENTAL RETARDATION IN THE FEDERAL SERVICE

Policy

It is the policy of the Federal Government to provide equal employment opportunity for qualified persons with mental retardation in all positions where they are able to perform the job duties efficiently and safely.

Program

The Office of Personnel Management conducts a vigorous program for applicants who are handicapped. Much of the progress of the program has been accomplished through the provisions of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (P.L. 93-112, as amended), which require Federal agencies to develop and implement affirmative action programs for the hiring, placement, promotion, and retention of handicapped individuals. To facilitate employment, Federal agencies may use either competitive or special appointing authorities. Realistic physical standards, based on the actual tasks of a position, require that applicants possess only the minimum medical qualifications necessary for safe and efficient performance of the duties of a particular position. Reasonable accommodation may also be considered in determining an applicant's ability to perform the duties of a job.

The coordinators provide advice and counsel concerning employment and work with hiring officials to make sure that handicapped applicants and employees receive full consideration for all employment and promotion opportunities.

Special Appointing Authorities

Although the overwhelming majority of disabled employees in the Government obtain their jobs through competitive procedures, there are many others for whom the ordinary procedures will not function fairly or accurately. To meet the needs of those who are mentally retarded, an agency uses special appointing techniques.

The Schedule A, section 213.3102(t) excepted appointing authority is for persons who are mentally retarded and have been certified directly to a position by a State vocation rehabilitation (VR) counselor as being competent and capable of performing the duties of the position.

Conversion to Competitive Service

After two years of successful performance in a continuing position, an employee serving in the excepted service under Schedule A, section 213.3102(t) may be noncompetitively converted to a competitive appointment upon the recommendation of his or her supervisor.

Accommodations on the Job

When Federal agencies hire a person with mental retardation, every effort is made to accommodate the individual to ensure that he or she can perform to full potential and ability. Agencies may, for example: (1) modify job duties, (2) restructure work sites, and (3) alter work schedules.

How to Apply

The Office of Personnel Management provides Federal job information through a network of Federal Job Information Centers (FJICs) throughout the United States. For answers to questions regarding employment in the Federal Government, you can visit, write, or call the nearest FJIC (also listed under this heading – Employment Information).

Other Information

Some agencies in the Federal Government are exempt by law from these procedures. For information about these agencies (e.g., the United States Postal Service), contact the nearest FJIC.

Applicants who have mental or physical inpairments may need to complete physical and vocational rehabilitation processes that will enable them to meet basic qualifications. Individuals who need this assistance should contact their State Office of Vocational Rehabilitation.

Pamphlets describing application procedures and information prepared specifically for veterans with service-connected disabilities may be obtained from the FJIC.

EMPLOYMENT OF PERSONS WITH PHYSICAL IMPAIRMENTS IN THE FEDERAL SERVICE

Policy

It is the policy of the Federal Government to provide equal employment opportunity for qualified persons with physical (includes visual and hearing) impairments in all positions where they are able to perform the job duties efficiently and safely.

Program

The Office of Personnel Management (OPM) conducts a vigorous program for applicants who are handicapped. Much of the progress of the program has been accomplished through the provisions of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (P.L. 93-112, as amended), which require Federal agencies to develop and implement affirmative action program plans for the hiring, placement, promotion, and retention of handicapped individuals. This is a temporary appointment, which may lead to an excepted position.

The Schedule A, section 213.3102(u) excepted appointing authority is for severely physically handicapped persons who have: (1) successfully completed a 700-trial appointment, or (2) have been certified directly to a position by a State VR or VA counselor.

A Conversion to Competitive Service

After two years of successful performance in a continuing position, an employee serving in the excepted service under Schedule A, section 213.3102(u) may be noncompetitively converted to a competitive appointment upon the recommendation of his/her supervisor.

Special Accommodations

Testing. When appropriate, OPM uses special examination procedures for applicants who are physically handicapped to ensure that their abilities are properly assessed and that they are not discriminated against because of their impairments. Special testing arrangements are determined on an individual basis depending on the applicant's disability. For example: (1) readers, examinations in braille, tape, or large print for visually impaired competitors; (2) interpreters for test instructions, modifications of parts of test for hearing impaired competitors; and (3) extra time to complete the test for motor-impaired persons.

Accommodations on the Job. When Federal agencies hire a person with a physical impairment, every effort is made to accommodate the individual to ensure that he or she can perform to full potential and ability. Agencies may, for example: (1) provide an interpreter service for the hearing impaired, (2) utilize readers for the visually impaired, (3) modify job duties, (4) restructure work sites, and (5) alter work schedules.

How to Apply

The Office of Personnel Management provides Federal job information through a network of Federal Job Information

PROCEDURES FOR PROCESSING COMPLAINTS OF DISCRIMINATION

The employee or the applicant contacts the Equal Employment Opportunity (EEO) counselor within 30 calendar days of the alleged discriminatory action. The counselor has 21 calendar days to attempt informal resolution and to issue of letter of final interview. The employee or the applicant may file a complaint with the EEO officer (or other appropriate agency official) if informal resolution cannot be effected, within 15 calendar days after the final interview with the EEO counselor or after 21 calendar days from the first "attempt to" contact the counselor about the matter if no informal resolution is effected.

The EEO officer advises the Director of Equal Employment Opportunity, who assigns an investigator from a unit of the agency other than that in which the complaint arose. An investigation is conducted. The complainant is given a copy of the investigative file. The EEO officer provides opportunity for informal adjustment.

If adjustment is not made, the EEO officer notifies the complainant by letter of the proposed disposition, advises the complainant of his or her right to a hearing or a decision without a hearing.

If the complainant does not reply within 15 calendar days, the EEO officer may adopt the proposed disposition as the decision of the agency, providing he/she has been delegated this authority. Otherwise the complaint is forwarded to the agency head (or designee) for agency decision. If the complainant asks for a hearing, the agency requests the EEO Commission to assign an EEO complaints examiner to conduct a hearing.

The complaints examiner reviews the file and if the file is complete, schedules and conducts a hearing. If the file is incomplete, the complaints examiner may remand the complaint to the agency for further investigation before conducting the hearing.

The hearing is transcribed verbatim. The complaints examiner makes findings, prepares an analysis, and recommends a decision; then these are forwarded, along with the complaint file, to the agency head (or designee).

The head of the agency (or designee) makes a final agency decision, based on the file, giving the complainaint a copy of the complaints examiner's recommended decision and verbatim transcript of the hearing. If the agency rejects or modifies the recommended decision, it must state in its decision its reasons and provide a copy to the complainant.

The complainant has the right to appeal to the EEO Commission's Office of Review and Appeals within 15 calendar days of the agency decision. The complainant also has the right to file a civil action in Federal District Court within 30 calendar days of the agency decision.

If the complainant appleas to the Office of Review and Appeals, he or she may file a civil action in Federal District Court if not satisfied with the decision in the appeal. The complainant may file a civil action in Federal District Court if a letter of final action on the complaint is not issued by the agency within 180 days of filing or if final action is not taken on an appeal to the Office of Review and Appeals within 180 days of filing.

Note: The complainant has the right to be represented by a person of his or her own choosing at any stage in the presentation of a complaint, including the counseling stage.

HEARING IMPAIRMENT AND HEARING AIDS

Under this heading, facts about hearing and hearing aids can be found. Questions new hearing aid users ask are answered. In addition, a list of the state chapters of the National Hearing Aid Society is given (the individuals whose names appear are presidents of their state societies, and they are useful sources of up-to-the-minute information about hearing and hearing aids; their telephone numbers were not available, so please write to them) and sources of information about hearing aids and hearing health care are listed.

FACTS ABOUT HEARING AND HEARING AIDS

Causes and Treatment of Hearing Impairment

There are many conditions that can cause hearing impairment. A buildup of wax in the ear, an ear infection, and prolonged exposure to a noisy environment are only a few examples. Below, these and other conditions that can cause hearing impairment are described, and an explanation of the method of treatment for each is given.

Outer Ear. The outer part of the ear or the auditory canal may be incompletely or partially blocked. This condition often can be treated surgically by widening the existing canal, or by opening a canal if the passageway is completely blocked.

An accumulation of wax can block the external canal, preventing sound from entering. Periodic removal of the wax by a physician usually will solve this problem.

An infection of the skin tissues that line the canal walls can cause itching and rawness. This condition, called external otitis, may lead to more serious infection unless treated. The condition can be cleared up by a physician with the aid of the proper medication.

Middle Ear. The tissue lining of the middle ear may be infected. In otitis media, pus forms and settles in the middle ear cavity, and may cause a hearing loss. If properly treated, the loss is likely to be temporary.

The mastoid bone marrow and tissue can also become infected. This condition is called mastoiditis. Treatment usually requires medication and, in some cases, surgery.

The eardrum may be ruptured. A rupture or perforation of the eardrum can have a variety of causes, including extreme air pressure changes in the external canal, pressure from accumulated middle ear fluid against the eardrum, or accidental injury. Rupture of the eardrum can produce hearing impairment and may damage the tiny middle ear bones. Sometimes a torn eardrum can heal naturally, but if it leaves a thickened scar, a mild hearing loss may result. A substantial rupture may require surgery. After surgery, hearing is improved in many cases. A totally missing eardrum may cause a significant impairment. Reconstruction of the eardrum may improve hearing and prevent infection.

The tiny bones in the middle ear may become immobilized. This condition is called otosclerosis. In otosclerosis, deposits form between the stapes bone and the oval window, restricting or immobilizing the chain's lever action. Significant hearing impairment usually follows. Surgery is helpful in many cases. Hearing impairments of this nature, caused by blockage of the passage of air or impairment of the mechanical movement of the outer or middle ear, are called conductive impairments.

Inner Ear. In the inner ear, the delicate nerve mechanisms that convert mechanical energy – the movement of the fluid in the cochlea – into nerve impulses can be easily and permanently damaged in a variety of ways. The result is called a sensori-neural or "nerve" impairment. Some of the more common causes are birth defects, illnesses with high fever, the impact of a very loud sound (which may cause immediate and incurable impairment of hearing), exposure to damaging but less intense sounds (which may cause a gradual impairment over a period of time – and since there is usually no associated pain, this type of impairment may pass unnoticed at first), drugs such as quinine and some of the antibiotics, the aging process (which may lead to a hearing problem called presbycuses – a gradual decline in hearing ability, especially for high-pitched sounds), German measles (which may affect the hearing organ of the unborn child if the desease is contracted by the mother during the first few months of pregnancy), Meniere's disease (which produces increased amounts of fluid in a portion of the inner ear, causing head noises, nausea and dizziness, and hearing impairment – a condition that may often be alleviated by medical and/or surgical treatment), vascular problems or injuries to the head (which may damage the inner ear structure), and, occasionally, tumors (which may block nerve impulses traveling along the nerve that connects the cochlea to the brain).

In many sensori-neural impairments, the only effective solution is a hearing aid, along with auditory training and lipreading. In some severe impairments, lipreading itself may be the most effective solution, possibly assisted by the use of a powerful hearing aid. In some cases of profound sensori-neural impairment, however, a hearing aid may be of little value. Some people with defective hearing have both conductive and sensori-neural impairments.

Effects of Hearing Disorders

Conductive Impairment. Your first warning of a conductive impairment may be a subdued quality in the sounds you hear. Familiar sounds will not seem as loud as they once were, and less intense sounds may not attract your attention at all. The quality of sound may be about the same, but the loudness or intensity will be reduced.

Sensori-Neural Impairment. If the sound of words seems undiminished but you have trouble understanding what is being said, especially in a noisy environment, you may be suffering from a sensori-neural impairment. You may be unable to hear high-pitched sounds such as the ticking of a watch, the dripping of a faucet, or the high notes of a violin. You may also hear a continuous "hissing" or "ringing" as a background to the real sounds in your environment. Words may have a rumbling, "fuzzy" quality, and you may think that people are mumbling or slurring their words.

In a sensori-neural impairment, the hair cells in the larger end of the cochlea often deteriorate first. Since they are the ones that respond to high frequency waves in the cochlear fluid, high-pitched sounds tend to be the first to fade.

Some sensori-neural impairments act as though a steep barrier had been placed across the path of hearing. Sounds too weak to penetrate this barrier may be severely reduced or inaudible; sounds loud enough to penetrate it may seem abnormally loud. This effect is called "recruitment."

Recruitment becomes a serious problem when the barrier is so high that the only audible sounds are those that are disturbingly loud. In some severe cases of recruitment, hearing aids may not be tolerated. In other cases, the aid may be modified or adjusted so that loud sounds are not amplified as much as soft sounds, and the overall effect is acceptable.

Hearing Impairment in the Very Young

Effects of Hearing Impairment. Some children are born with defective hearing. Others may develop a hearing impairment through illness or an accident, but in either case the earlier the diagnosis can be made, the better.

Lack of hearing can interfere with a child's ability to learn to talk. Speech develops as a direct result of hearing, and the child whose hearing is impaired usually has difficulty learning to speak. Worse, the child has difficulty learning the meaning of words and acquiring a vocabulary.

Detecting Hearing Disorders in Children.

Even a minor, undetected hearing problem can distort a child's whole personality. Frequently a child who has been regarded as dull or mentally retarded is found to be hard of hearing, but normally intelligent. "Slowness," "inattention," "poor attitude," "refusal to participate in group activities," "mumbles his words" . . . these harsh judgments often conceal a quite different problem: defective hearing.

It is often difficult for a parent to recognize the signs of poor hearing. But if a child does not "sound as if he is trying to talk" by the time he is a year old, an examination by a qualified ear specialist (otologist, otolaryngologist, or otorhinolaryngologist) and a subsequent evaluation at a hearing clinic, if indicated, would be a good investment.

If a hearing disorder is discovered, the chances are good that a solution can be found. Today, very young children can receive special educational assistance and be fitted with hearing aids – with results that are often spectacular. The child becomes more alert and cooperative; his learning ability improves; his pleasure in living increases; he becomes more interested in the world around him; he is more alive.

What You can do About a Hearing Impairment

The Food and Drug Administration (FDA) has established national standards for the provision of hearing aids. These regulations are intended to assure that, before you purchase a hearing aid you receive quality hearing health care and accurate information essential to the safe and effective use of a hearing aid.

If you have a hearing impairment and would like to get help, here is important information about what to do and whom to see before you buy a hearing aid.

Family Doctor. If you follow this procedure you should consult your family doctor first. Since hearing can be impaired by so many unexpected ailments, your doctor may feel a physical examination is necessary. If the doctor finds no physical ailment he or she can treat, you may be referred to an ear specialist.

Ear Specialist. An ear specialist is a licensed physician who specializes in diseases of the ear and is medically trained to identify the symptoms of deafness in the context of your total health. The specialist also is qualified by special training to diagnose and treat hearing impairments. Such physicians are also known as otolaryngologists, otologists, and otorhinolaryngologists.

This specialist will seek to determine the cause of your hearing problem and may be able to restore some or all of your hearing ability through medical or surgical treatment. In some instances, the ear specialist may also dispense a hearing aid if you need one.

Audiologist. If medical or surgical treatment is not indicated, or if treatments have been completed, the ear specialist may refer you to an audiologist for audiological testing, and for recommendations concerning a rehabilitation program. An audiologist is professionally trained in the testing, rehabilitation, and counseling of people with hearing disorders. (In some states, audiologists must satisfy specific requirements for license.) If the tests reveal that the use of a hearing aid may benefit you, the audiologist will recommend a particular type of hearing aid for you and may then refer you to a hearing aid dispenser or dispense the hearing aid him/herself.

Hearing Aid Dispenser. A hearing aid dispenser is any person, partnership, corporation, or association that sells, leases, or rents a hearing aid to hearing-impaired individuals. The dispenser may be an ear specialist, audiologist, or office dispenser.

Hearing aid dispensers provide a variety of services that include testing hearing for selecting and fitting hearing aids, motivating prospective users to try amplification, making impressions for ear molds, counseling hearing-impaired persons on adapting to a hearing aid, and repairing damaged hearing aids. In most states, hearing aid dispensers are licensed.

Before a dispenser can sell you a hearing aid, you must present a written statement signed by a licensed physician stating that your hearing impairment has been medically evaluated and that you may be a candidate for a hearing aid. If you choose to waive the medical evaluation, the dispenser must advise you that the waiver is not in your best health interest. Dispensers are not allowed to encourage you to use this waiver.

Dispensers are also required to provide you with a copy of a user instructional brochure before they sell you a hearing aid. This brochure contains information about good health care practices and about the proper use and maintenance of the hearing aid. Dispensers must allow you time to read this brochure and must discuss its contents with you.

In most areas, the problems of diagnosis and selection of a hearing aid are greatly simplified by the presence of a speech and hearing center associated with a hospital or university, a community health clinic, or a private speech and hearing clinic. Here you will find a wide range of services, which may include an examination by an ear specialist; various types of hearing tests and a hearing aid evaluation by an audiologist; and auxiliary services such as lipreading, counseling, and vocational guidance if your hearing problem interferes with your work.

The Hearing Aid

A hearing aid system consists of a tiny microphone that picks up sound waves from the air and converts them into electrical signals, an amplifier that increases the strength of the electrical signals, a battery that provides electrical energy to operate the hearing aid, and a tiny loudspeaker called a "receiver" that converts the amplified signals back into sound waves and directs them into your ear through a specially fitted ear mold.

By increasing the intensity of the sound as it enters your ear, a hearing aid helps to offset your hearing impairment. In some aids, the amplified signal is fed into a bone conduction receiver, a device that sets up vibrations in the bone behind the ear. This type of aid is not widely used, but if the outer ear was never fully formed, or if there is a severe ear infection with drainage problems, it may be the most practical solution.

The ear mold itself is an essential feature of the hearing aid system. It provides support for the aid, and directs the amplified sound into the ear canal with high efficiency – if it fits properly. If it does not fit properly, it may cause whistles and squeals, or produce local irritation and soreness. Ready-made ear molds are available, but in order to achieve a good fit it is worth the trouble and expense to have a mold custom-made to the exact shape of your ear.

"In-the-ear" aids fit directly in the ear canal, supported by the ear shell itself. These models have no external wires or tubes, and are very light in weight. They have a volume control, but may have no tone control. Generally they are useful if the hearing impairment is mild. For a moderate impairment, they may prove successful when used with a carefully fitted ear mold.

"Behind-the-ear" models are housed in small curved cases that fit nearly behind the ear. They can cope with losses ranging from mild to severe. The microphone, amplifier, and receiver are all housed in the hearing aid case, connected to the ear mold by a short plastic tube. Some models have a tone control as well as a volume control, and some come equipped with a telephone pickup device.

"Eyeglass" models are similar to behind-the-ear models, except that the device is built into an eyeglass frame. Bone conduction hearing aids are also available in the "eyeglass" style.

"On-the-body" models have larger microphones, amplifiers, and power supplies enclosed in cases that can be carried in pockets or attached to clothing. They are more powerful, and the controls may be easier to adjust. The external receiver attaches directly to the ear mold, and is powered through a flexible wire from the amplifier. In some models, a variable tone control enables you to strengthen or diminish, selectively and at will, sounds from different parts of the spectrum.

Monaural hearing aid systems are those of any type that provide amplified sound for one ear only.

A binaural hearing aid system consists of two complete hearing aids – microphone, amplifier, and receiver: one for each ear. For some people, the binaural system increases the directional sense, helps to separate wanted sounds from unwanted background noise, and may increase the pleasure of hearing.

The CROS (Contralateral Routing Of Signal) or "cross-over" systems places the microphone beside the poor ear and feeds the amplified signal to the better ear. This system may improve hearing by eliminating "head shadow"; that is, it prevents the head itself from blocking off sounds from the better ear. In some designs, the sound is carried to the ear canal by a plastic tube alone, eliminating the ear mold. This leaves the good ear partially open and permits some sound to reach it directly.

Recent experiments have shown that the CROS system may help make speech more understandable to people who have a high-frequency impairment in both ears.

Excellent results have also been obtained in some cases by the use of a BICROS system. It consists of two microphones – one above each ear – which send signals to a single amplifier. The output from the amplifier goes to a single receiver, which delivers sound to the better ear through a convention ear mold.

High-frequency emphasis aids are available for people who have a hearing impairment only for the highest octaves of the speech range. For them, speech is audible, but they are unable to distinguish words readily. High-frequency emphasis hearing aids are made with just a clear plastic tube, which carries sound into the ear. Sound of lower frequencies, where the hearing remains normal, reach the ear directly through the open-mold fitting.

Selecting a Hearing Aid

Under FDA regulations, any dispenser of a hearing aid must provide you before purchase with a user instructional brochure on good hearing aid health practices and proper use and maintenance of the hearing aid. The brochure states that a medical evaluation prior to the purchase of a hearing aid is in your best health interest and recommends that children with a hearing impairment be directed to an audiologist for additional assessment and testing following the medical evaluation.

When you buy a hearing aid you should not be overly influenced by price, except for the practical limitations of your pocketbook. You may need an expensive aid, but, on the other hand, you may find maximum satisfaction with an aid that sells for half the price.

In selecting a particular aid, you must take a major part of the responsiblity. Hearing tests and expert judgment can determine the type of aid you need, but your own personal feeling about the quality of sound the aid offers should be a major factor in making the final choice. Furthermore, only you can judge its comfort, convenience, and benefit.

Bear in mind that you may need a month or more to adjust to wearing the aid. The instructional brochure will advise you to inquire about the availability of a trial-rental or purchase option program. Many manufacturers and hearing aid dispensers allow you to wear a hearing aid for up to 30 days so that you can decide on the hearing aid you want. Take advantage of such trial programs.

Remember, too, that you are buying not only an aid, but also a set of services, including mechanical and electronic adjustments, counseling in the use of the aid, maintenance throughout the warranty period, and repairs when they are needed. So it is wise to consider quality of service as well as quality of the merchandise.

How to Listen

If your impairment is a mild one, you may be delighted with your hearing aid from the very beginning. Suddenly, listening is easy again, and your fear of gradually being shut off from the world is relieved. The adjustment period may last only a few hours.

But if your hearing impairment is more severe, particularly if it developed gradually over a long period of time, the absence of sound may have become a familiar part of your everyday world, and the use of a hearing aid may in the beginning be an unpleasant or even shocking experience. There is a great confusion of sound, and many of the individual sounds at first may seem meaningless.

Hearing aids are designed to emphasize the sounds of speech. Some sounds that lie outside the frequency range of speech may sound altered and seem unfamiliar. It takes practice to select what you want to hear from all these strange sounds.

Some unwanted sounds may seem excessively loud. People with normal hearing learn to block out or adjust to loud, unpleasant noises. Without quite knowing how they do it, they "turn off" traffic sounds on a noisy street so that they can hear a conversation or filter out the confusing echoes in a church and listen to a sermon with perfect understanding. When you begin wearing a hearing aid, you may have to learn how to do this all over again.

If you find that sounds continue to be unpleasant after a reasonable trial period, you should have the dispenser check the aid. It may have some design fault that exaggerates the noises around you to an unbearable degree; you may be using more amplification than you need; or the mold may not fit properly, possibly because you are not inserting it the right way.

Your dispenser should have the patience and skill to help you through the adjustment period as you become accustomed to wearing your aid, but here are some suggestions that may make this period easier for you.

Begin with a Comfortable Volume Level. In the beginning, keep the volume at a level that feels comfortable for your ears even if you miss a few words. As you adjust to using the aid, you can gradually increase the volume.

Begin with Easier Hearing Challenges. Treat yourself to easy listening during the first few days or weeks. Don't be dismayed if at first you cannot understand low voices or hear a conversation perfectly in a noisy room. Stand close to and face the person to whom you are talking, and don't be afraid to ask people to speak more distinctly.

Don't Overtire Yourself. If the aid begins to make you feel nervous or tired, turn it off or remove it. In a few weeks you probably will be abled to wear it from morning until night without fatigue or nervousness.

Re-Learn the Trick of Concentration. Because of your hearing impairment, you may have forgotten how to concentrate on the "sound environment." Make a conscious effort to pay close attention to conversations, to music, to the quality of the sounds within your new hearing range. You will soon find that you are coming closer to nature, and to the people around you.

Don't Be Afraid to Ask for Help. Your friends and loved ones have a stake in helping you adjust to the hearing aid. You might ask them to touch your arm or make a gesture to attract your attention before they speak to you during the first few days. Ask them to speak slowly, clearly, and distinctly in a normal conversational tone. Shouting only makes it more difficult for you to hear.

Hearing in Noisy Places. You may be discouraged when your first try to follow a conversation where there is a high level of background noise. Be patient. You probably can learn to separate speech from background noise, or one voice from a number of voices around you. If your impairment is severe, however, even the best of hearing aids may not help you much in a noisy room.

Hearing in Public Halls. In a church or auditorium, sit near the front and turn up the volume on your hearing aid as much as possible without making the background noises uncomfortably loud. You may miss some of the words the first time around, but do not be discouraged. Listening with a hearing aid is often a skill that must be acquired.

Listening to Hi-Fi or Television. Recorded or broadcast speech and music may present something of a problem. The double distortion – in your TV or hi-fi and in your hearing aid – may make music and voices sound "canned" or artificial. Again, give it time. If your aid has a tone control, try different settings. Sit eight or ten feet away from the speaker; listen to the rhythm and pace of the sound. Soon you will be able to follow the action and the meaning with greater ease.

Listening Over the Telephone. If your hearing aid has a telephone pickup switch, move the switch to "T" before using the telephone. The important thing to remember is that the telephone receiver should be close to the hearing aid microphone, rather than to your ear. You also may have to turn up the volume when you use the telephone switch.

If your hearing impairment in the unaided ear is not too great, you may find it more practical to have the telephone company install an amplified phone. These are quite efficient, and you can control the loudness to suit your need.

Listen with your Eyes. Your eyes can contribute much to understanding speech. Many people receive only partial benefit from a hearing aid and need to supplement their listening with lipreading. Watch the lips, facial expressions, and gestures of the person you are listening to. Even if you have only a moderate hearing impairment, a course in lipreading may well be worth the time, effort, and cost.

Consider the Environment. Hard walls, ceilings, and bare floors reflect sound. Draperies, carpets, upholstered furniture, and open windows and doors absorb sound. Outdoors, sound is soaked up as if by a sponge. Adjust the volume control of your hearing aid, and your hearing habits, to the environment. Eventually you will find a volume setting that will be comfortable for you under most conditions.

Be Patient. Patience is the watchword in learning to use a hearing aid. As your mind adjusts, noise and meaning will slowly sort themselves out, and within a month or two you will be using your hearing aid with maximum effectiveness.

Care and Maintenance

Temperature. Avoid high temperatures. High heat in the glove compartment of a car on a hot day, exposure to the blast from a hair-dryer or to direct summer sun, or too close proximity to a radiator can damage a hearing aid amplifier and cause batteries to deteriorate.

Moisture. Keep your hearing aid dry. Even perspiration can cause damage. If you have trouble with excessive perspirtion, you can purchase silica gel from your hearing aid dispenser. Place the aid and a fresh package of silica gel in a plastic bag overnight, and the aid will be dry by morning.

Batteries. Keep several spare batteries handy, but buy only a few at a time. They tend to lose their strength as they age.

Store batteries in a cool, dry place. If you keep them in the refrigerator, let them warm up to room temperature and wipe them with a dry cloth before you inset them into the aid.

If you carry spare batteries in your pocket or handbag, wrap them in plastic to avoid accidental contact with metal objects.

Remove batteries from your aid at night. They will last longer. Occasionally, a defective cell may leak, and removing the cell daily permits you to examine it and take it out of service before it damages the aid.

Keep battery contacts bright and clean. Poor contacts mean loss of power, and may cause a "frying" noise in your aid. If the contacts in the aid itself become corroded, ask your dispenser to clean them.

If you notice a sudden decrease in battery life, ask your dispenser to check your aid. Excessive drain on the battery usually means a defective aid.

Remove dead batteries from your aid immediately; otherwise they may leak and cause damage.

When you replace a battery, be sure the contacts of the battery match the markings on your aid.

Avoid the use of rechargers unless you use batteries that the manufacturer labels as being rechargeable.

Ear Molds. Keep the ear mold clean. If the opening becomes clogged with wax, clean it gently with a toothpick or pipe cleaner.

At frequent intervals, the mold should be detached and washed with soap and water or with a prepared cleaning fluid recommended by the dispenser. Be sure the mold is dry before it is reconnected. One drop of liquid can block the passage of sound and might also damage the aid. Do not use alcohol as a cleaning agent, since it may dry out the material and cause it to crack. Never use carbon tetrachloride, or cleaning solutions containing this chemical, to clean your ear mold.

Tubing and Cords. If you have a behind-the-ear or eyeglass type of aid, the tubing will have to be replaced at intervals.

If you have a body-worn aid, the cord will eventually wear out or develop a short and have to be replaced. Avoid twisting the cord or bending the tubing.

Protect the Aid from Hard Knocks. A hearing aid is a delicate mechanism. Avoid dropping it or bumping it against hard objects.

Hair Spray. Do not use hair spray while wearing the aid. The spray may cause damage to the microphone.

Removing the Aid. Develop the habit of turning the switch to the "off" position before you remove the aid. When the switch is in the "on" position, the battery is discharging whether you are wearing the aid or not.

Repairs. Do not attempt to repair the hearing aid yourself. Only an expert can service it. In this regard your hearing aid is like your watch or radio. If it is not functioning properly, ask your dispenser for assistance.

Emergency Repairs You can Make

Here are a few "home remedies" you can safely try which may save you a trip to the dispenser.

If the Hearing Aid does not Work at All. Try a fresh battery. Check the battery to see if by mistake you have connected the "+" contact of the battery with the "-" contact in the aid. Check the tubing. If the tube is bent too sharply, it may be blocking the sound. If your aid has a telephone pickup, check the switch. You may have it set in the "T" position. If you have a body-worn aid, try a spare cord. The old one may be broken or shorted. Check the ear mold. It may be plugged with wax.

If the Sound from the Aid is Weaker than Usual. Try a fresh battery. Check the tubing to see if it is bent, and the ear mold to see if it is clogged. If the aid has been exposed to extreme cold, it may not work properly. Let it come to room temperature. Try refitting the ear mold. The aid may be whistling at a frequency you cannot hear. Ask your doctor to see if you have excessive wax in your external ear canal.

If the Aid "Goes On and Off" or Makes Scratchy Sounds. Work the switch back and forth. Sometimes dust or lint will interfere with electrical contacts. On body-worn aids, try removing and inserting the plugs connecting the receiver to the aid. If the problem persists, try changing cords.

If the Aid Makes a Whistling Sound. Remove the aid. If this increases the whistling sound, put your finger over the opening in the ear mold. If the whistling stops, the problem may be improper insertion of the ear mold or a poor fit. Reinsert the ear mold carefully and try the aid again. If the whistling persists, consult your dispenser.

Questions New Hearing Aid Users Ask

"What can I do about wind and noise?" You will gradually learn to protect the microphone from the direct blast of the wind, but it will always be troublesome. A wind screen may help. Ask your dispenser for one for your particular type of aid.

"Why does the ear mold hurt my ear?" You may not be inserting it properly, or it may need to be refitted. Discuss the problem with the dispenser who fitted the mold. Do not accept an ear mold that hurts.

"Should I wear my aid full time?" You don't have to, particularly if you have a very mild hearing impairment. But if you want to get the most benefit from the aid, you will wear it as much as you can within the limits of comfort and convenience.

"Why does my hearing aid make background noises louder?" A hearing aid amplifies every sound within range of the microphone, including background noise. You will probably be able to train your mind to block out the noise and concentrate on speech and the meaningful sounds you want to hear. If noise continues to bother you, discuss the problem with your dispenser. When your aid is adjusted properly, you have the best chance of separating speech you want to hear from unwanted background noise. It is also possible – though not likely – that your hearing impairment is of a type that makes it impossible for you to adjust to amplified sound.

Some hearing aids are designed especially for people who may be distressed by sudden high-level sounds. These aids are said to provide "compression," "clipping," or "limiting." (These processes differ somewhat.) The maximum intensity is controlled. This has the effect of permitting higher amplification to be used to bring low-level sounds into the range where you hear them more clearly. This may have the effect of making background noise more prominent.

"Why do people raise their voices when they see my hearing aid?" It is natural for people to try to help you. If you ask them to speak in a normal, conversational tone they will quickly forget that you are wearing an aid.

"Can I do anything to reduce clothing noises in my body-worn aid?" Try wearing soft, unstarched garments in contact with the aid. A hearing aid carrier garment may reduce the noise considerably. If the noise is too troublesome, consult your dispenser.

"My aid feels bulky behind my ear." A behind-the-ear aid may feel bulky at first, because you are not used to it. But it is quite light, and has been contoured to fit your ear, so you will probably get used to it in a few days.

"I feel a fullness in my ear when I wear my aid." You may be feeling the air trapped between the tip of the ear mold and your eardrum, or you may have wax in your external ear canal. If the sensation continues to bother you, the dispenser can probably alter the mold and relieve the problem.

"How can I overcome my embarrassment when I wear my aid?" After a little while you will probably regard your aid as one of your most valued possessions, as essential as eyeglasses to those who have problems with vision. Once you discover the advantages of your aid, you'll forget it is there – except when you stop to appreciate the listening benefits it provides you.

Hearing Aid Costs

Hearing aids come in many types, designs, and styles. Some are simple instruments that do a straightforward job of amplification; others provide a variety of special features such as a telephone pickup and adjustable tone and volume controls. They range in output from tiny in-the-ear models, suitable for people with mild impairments, to powerful body-worn aids for people with severe impairments.

Hearing aid prices vary widely, depending largely on the type of aid, the number of special features incorporated in the design, and the services provided by the dispenser. The price may include the cost of fitting the ear mold, rent of the unit during the trial period, service during the warranty period, and, generally, continuing advice throughout the life of the aid.

This great diversity of prices and designs emphasizes the need for the best advice available in your area. First, be sure that a hearing aid is what you need. Then, before you spend your money, make sure that you are getting the most for your hearing aid dollars.

Battery Costs. Battery costs depend in part on the type of aid and in part on the way the aid is used. The cost of single hearing aid battery is not large; but if you use your aid constantly during waking hours – and you probably should – the cost of replacement batteries can become a substantial item in the course of a year. Ask your dispenser to give you an estimate of battery cost and expected battery life, under normal use, for the various aids you are considering.

To protect your batteries and get maximum service from them, follow the suggestions for battery care above (under Care and Maintenance). If you purchase batteries from other than the dispenser of hearing aids, be sure they are designed for transistor service and application to hearing aids.

Warranty. Before you complete your purchase, reach a definite agreement with your dispenser about the details of the transaction. Is the cost of fitting the ear mold included in the price of the aid? Will the dispenser help you adjust to wearing the aid during those critical first few weeks? How long will free service be provided? Will the dispenser help you with problems if they develop as you wear the aid under varying conditions? Will you be given a written warranty? Your warranty is your basic agreement with the manufacturer, and it should be backed by your dispenser.

If a disagreement should arise that cannot be solved by direct negotiations with your dispenser, you can write to the president of the Hearing Aid Dispensers Association in the state in which the hearing aid was purchased. Nearly any dispenser will provide you with the name and address of the president of the state association. The Association will refer your complaint either to the Ethics Committee Chairman or the Grievance Committee Chairman. You should receive a prompt acknowledgment of your letter, and your complaint should be handled in a reasonable length of time. If there is no state association, you can write directly to the National Hearing Aid Society at 20361 Middlebelt, Livonia MI 48152, (313) 478-2610.

Where to Direct Complaints. In most states, dispensers are now licensed. Complaints can be directed to the State Hearing Aid Licensing Board, in care of the State Capitol; your State Attorney General; or your Consumer Affairs Office. If you have difficulty with your audiologist, you can write to the American Speech and Hearing Association or to the state licensing board.

If dispensers misrepresent or fail to observe the conditions that have been established by the Food and Drug Administration for the sale of hearing aids, you should contact your local FDA District Office. The address and telephone number of the District Office in your area can be found in the telephone book.

One of the public service programs offered by the Better Hearing Institute (a nonprofit educational organization) is a toll-free hearing helpline. This service provides assistance to hearing field professionals, consumer affairs personnel, law enforcement officials, and consumers in handling questions, suggestions, and complaints about hearing impariment, hearing help, hearing aids, and hearing aid services. The telephone number for Hearing Helpline is (800) 242-8576.

Financial Assistance

Financial assistance is sometimes available for those on limited budgets who need hearing aids. Your dispenser or a local hearing center or clinic may be able to tell you if assistance is available locally. If not, you may call your local Community Chest or other social service organization, or your State Vocational Rehabilitation or Public Health Department, or you may write to:

Office of Deafness and Communicative Disorders
Rehabilitation Services Administration
Department of Health, Education, and Welfare
Washington, DC 20201

In some states, the Medicaid program offers assistance to those who qualify.

The Veterans Administration furnishes hearing aids to veterans who have met the necessary requirements for eligibility and entitlement to such care. For further information as to their individual status, veterans having a hearing disability should contact their nearest VA office or hospital.

HUNTINGTON'S DISEASE

A description of Huntington's Disease is given below, as well as the address of a source of further information, the Committee to Combat Huntington's Disease.

WHAT IS HUNTINGTON'S DISEASE?*

Huntington's disease (HD) affects the nervous system and muscles of the body. It is a devastating illness passed on from parent to child.

Individuals usually develop HD symptoms between the ages of 35 and 45. Less frequently, symptoms appear during childhood and after 60 years of age. The disease progresses very slowly after the initial onset of symptoms. Permanent loss of brain cells gradually leaves the patient more and more dependent on others for help with daily activities. Death usually results 10 to 20 years after the onset of symptoms, as a result of such complications as pneumonia, heart failure, or infections due to the weakened condition of the body.

Hereditary Aspects of Huntington's Disease

HD is caused by a genetic defect. If either parent has the HD gene, each son and daughter has a 50:50 chance of inheriting the disease. Those who inherit the HD gene will develop the disease if they live long enough. Until symptoms appear, family members are considered "at risk."

If the offspring does not inherit the HD gene, then he or she will not have the disease and HD will not reappear in future generations. Unfortunately, parents may pass the HD gene to their offspring before their own symptoms appear. If a parent dies before the age when his or her symptoms would have appeared, it gives the wrong impression that the disease has skipped a generation.

When identical twins are born to an HD parent, the disease affects either both twins or neither twin because identical twins have the same heredity. If twins are not identical sometimes one has HD and the other one does not.

All offspring has a 50% chance that they will not receive the HD gene from a parent afflicted with the disease. Unfortunately, one cannot know for sure until age 60 or 70 whether one (and one's descendants) is free of the disease.

Physical Symptoms

HD can be difficult to diagnose, as symptoms are often mistaken for Parkinson's disease, multiple sclerosis, epilepsy, and even alcoholism. The typical picture of HD is a combination of physical and mental or emotional symptoms. The physical symptoms, which often come first, are sometimes attributed to nervous fidgeting. These may appear as involuntary movements such as jerking, twisting, and spasms of the muscles of the face, tongue, neck, trunk, arms, and legs. As physical symptoms become progressively worse, difficulty speaking or loss of speech and trouble swallowing may result.

The physical symptoms of Huntington's disease in children are different from the symptoms found in adults. Rather than the excessive jerking movements experienced by most adults, children may become ridgid, resulting in rather limited muscle movement. Since seizures are often a symptom of HD in children, the disease is sometimes incorrectly labeled as epilepsy.

Mental or Emotional Symptoms

Although the physical symptoms usually appear earlier, family members may first begin to notice personality or emotional changes in an HD patient. These changes may include indifference, dullness, irritability, poor judgment, loss of memory, shunning of responsibilities, breaking of promises, and carelessness about personal looks and habits. The more drastic changes are many times mistaken for schizophrenia, hysteria, depression, mania, or extreme nervousness.

Sometimes the emotional changes may be less severe, perhaps a change from a cheerful disposition to an irritable, moody, or obstinate personality, or the reverse.

Every member of the family is affected by the stress of living with an HD patient. Those family members at risk carry an additional burden.

*Permission to reproduce granted by the Committee to Combat Huntington's Disease and the National Huntington's Disease Association.

Diagnosis

At the present time, there are no effective means for detecting HD before symptoms appear. HD is diagnosed on the basis of clinical symptoms and family history. Cooperation between family members and the physician is extremely important.

Treatment

There is no effective cure for Huntington's disease, but several medications can provide some relief for the abnormal movements and mood disturbances created by the disease. For some patients, these drugs can be quite helpful; for others, they seem to have little effect.

How Many have Huntington's Disease?

No one knows exactly how many people in the United States have HD. Accurate statistics are difficult to obtain because patients are often misdisgnosed and some HD families deny the existence of HD in their family. It becomes very painful to admit to themselves that they have the disease and even harder to tell those people close to them about their illness. Also, the physician might list pneumonia or heart failure as the cause of death without mentioning Huntington's disease.

INDEPENDENT LIVING PROGRAMS

Independent Living Programs are community-based programs that have substantial consumer involvement. They provide directly or coordinate indirectly through referral those services necessary to assist severely disabled individuals to increase self-determination and to minimize unnecessary dependence on others.

Among the services that may be provided are housing provision, attendant recruitment and training, peer counseling, activities of daily living skills, advocacy, and transportation. The coding system describes the services offered by various programs. (States without such programs are not included in the list below.)

INFORMATION SOURCES

Included under this heading are sources of information that will be helpful to persons working with the disabled or persons who are handicapped. First, data base vendors are listed. Then information and data banks for the handicapped are provided. Information services are covered, as well as national information centers for persons seeking specific information relating to this field.

DATA BASE VENDORS

Three major commercial organizations that offer access to on-line data bases are described below. These on-line data bases contain machine-readable records that give bibliographic information on documents in defined subject areas. A user's computer terminal is linked to the vendor's computer system via telephone allowing a user to search selected data bases in an interactive mode. A search strategy, formed by combining key words (or subject descriptors), is used to scan the data base. Documents of interest may be displayed for review, or printed off-line (saving expensive connect-time) and mailed.

The organizations listed offer training courses in using the data bases.

LEARNING DISABILITIES

Information on learning disabilities, including facts about learning disability and information on the Learning Disabled Adult Committee, is provided below.

ASSOCIATION FOR CHILDREN WITH LEARNING DISABILITIES*

Learning Disability — What is it?

Learning disabilities occur in many forms — visual, auditory, motor control, communication, logic, and so on. Effective correction must include a total approach to the educational, physiological, psychological, and medical needs of the individual child.

The Federal Government has defined learning disabilities in Public Law 94-142 (The Education of All Handicapped Children Act) as follows.

> Specific learning disability means a disorder in one or more of the basic psychological processes involved in understanding or in using language, spoken or written, which may manifest itself in an imperfect ability to listen, think, speak, read, write, spell, or to do mathematical calculations. The term includes such conditions as perceptual handicaps, brain injury, minimal brain dysfunction, dyslexia, and developmental aphasia. The term does not include children who have learning problems which are primarily the result of visual, hearing or motor handicaps, of mental retardation, of emotional disturbance or of environmental, cultural, or economic disadvantage.

Each child, adolescent, or adult with a learning disability is unique; each shows a different combination and severity of problems. A learning disability person is an individual who has one or more significant deficits in the essential learning processes.

The learning disability person is usually considered to have near average or above average intelligence. However, for some reason (sometimes known, sometimes not) there is a gap between potential and achievement.

Symptoms of Learning Disability

The symptoms of learning disabilities are a diverse set of characteristics that affect development and achievement. It is important to note that some of these symptoms can be found in all children at some time during their development. However, a learning disability person has a cluster of these symptoms which do not disappear with advancement in age. The most frequently displayed symptoms are short attention span, poor memory, difficulty following directions, inadequate ability to discriminate between and among letters, numerals, or sounds, poor reading ability, eye-hand coordination problems, difficulties with sequencing, disorganization, and numerous other problems that may affect all of the sensory systems. An expanded list of symptoms is included below.

Performs differently from day to day.
Responds inappropriately in many instances.
Restless; can't stay interested in anything very long; easily distracted.
Says one thing, means another.
Difficult to discipline.
Doesn't adjust well to change.
Immature speech.
Doesn't listen well or remember.
Can't follow multiple directions.
Forgets easily.
Has difficulty telling time and telling right from left.
Has trouble naming familiar people or things.
Has difficulty sounding out words.
Writes poorly.
Reverses letters or places them in incorrect sequences — for example, "d" for "b" and "gril" for "girl."
Reads poorly if at all.
Poorly coordinated.

*Permission to reproduce granted by the ACLD, An Association for Children with Learning Disabilities.

Has trouble understanding words or concepts.
Late speech development.
Late gross or fine motor development.
Impulsive.

A child is not necessarily learning disabled if he or she exhibits only a few of these symptoms, since most children show some of them at one time or another. However, a child who has a cluster of these problems needs further examination of his/her possible disability.

How Widespread is the Problem?

Many experts believe that there are between 5,000,000 and 10,000,000 (5 to 10 million) children suffering from some type of learning disability. Percentage of incidence ranges from a conservative 2% estimate (which would include only the most severe cases) to a broad-based 20% of the total school age population. Recent research indicates that undetected learning disabilities may be the chief problem of a large number of children who do not do well in school. This group would include those children and youths with disciplinary problems and those termed "underachievers" and "dropouts." There is insufficient research to confirm the present number of adults with learning disabilities.

Why a Person Has a Learning Disability

There is no known simple, general explanation why a person has a learning disability. What should be focused upon is the formulating of a positive plan of action and seeing that plan implemented at school, home, and the community. This plan should include a competent diagnosis, sound educational planning, and treatment of the individual with regard to his or her strengths and weaknesses.

Hyperactivity — What is it?

The term hyperactive has become widely used and is widely misunderstood. Much controversy surrounds it. The correct medical terminology is hyperkinetic syndrome. Hyperactivity is often used interchangeably with hyperkinesis. Hyperkinesis describes a condition in which the individual displays a high degree of physical activity that has no purpose plus a significantly impaired attention span. The person is unable to control motion and/or attention. Many physicians have described hyperkinesis as a treatable illness characterized by involuntary behavior and learning problems in a child whose brain maturation is delayed. These physicians feel that the marked tendency of a number of these identified children to improve as they grow older supports this contention.

Cautions

The Health, Education, and Welfare report cautioned that the vitality of childhood should not be confused with the very special problems of the child with a hyperkinetic behavior disorder.

Adults who become frustrated with a child's behavior that does not always meet with their standards can easily exaggerate the significance of the child's occasional short attention span or restlessness and label the child hyperactive. Children should be viewed in terms of a developmental sequence: A toddler is more active, restless, and distractable than a school-age child; the younger child is more distractable than the adolescent. It also must be understood that hyperactivity exists in children with no learning problems.

Symptoms of Hyperactivity

A hyperkinetic person:

1. Fidgets and is restless.
2. Is inattentive.
3. Is hard to manage.
4. Can't sit still.
5. Is easily distracted.
6. Has low frustration tolerance.
7. Is irritable.
8. Is undisciplined.
9. Is clumsy.
10. Is a poor sleeper.
11. Has emotional lability (quick shift of moods).
12. Is socially inept.

Youngsters usually do not suddenly become hyperkinetic. The signals are evident early in the child's life. They are not children who just move a lot because of their age, or nervousness or anxiety stemming from a specific cause.

Diagnosis

Diagnosis of this condition should be conducted by competent professionals — a physician, a psychologist and/or a psychiatrist. This disorder is now more frequently diagnosed than ever before because more is known. Nevertheless, some uncertainty still exists. All suspected hyperkinetic children should receive a comprehensive medical and psychological assessment.

Dyslexia

Dyslexia, or specific language difficulties, is a term used to describe those children and adults with average or above average intelligence who have severe difficulty in reading, writing, spelling, and sometimes math. At each turn of learning the language, whether it be speech, reading, spelling, or writing, these individuals experience severe difficulty and require specialized teaching appropriate to their nature and needs, if they are to make the best use of their native intellectual ability.

Some of the more obvious characteristics of dyslexia may be any combination of the following.

1. Severe difficulty in learning and remembering the printed word or symbol.
2. Reversals of letters or improper letter sequencing (e.g., b for d, was for saw).
3. Bizarre spelling errors.
4. Illegible handwriting.
5. Poorly written composition.

Fortunately, very few people exhibit all of the characteristics of a true dyslexic, but they have enough in common to distinguish them as a group with unique educational needs.

Many professionals today use the term dyslexic to include specific language difficulties or the more broadly encompassing term learning disability. The dyslexic person experiences severe language difficulties. Given appropriate diagnosis with proper therapy, dyslexic students can learn.

Learning Disability Persons and Their Social Perceptions

Despite the fact that most professionals agree that social adjustment problems are common among many individuals who have learning disabilities (LD), this area has not received much attention. The focus of a learning disability is usually in a learning situation, but the consequences are rarely confined to school or work. Many areas of life are affected, including the role of LD persons in their families, relationships with friends, non-academic functioning such as sports or dancing, and certainly self-image and confidence to handle daily situations.

Some persons with learning disabilities may observe less in their social environments, misperceive more, and may not learn as easily from experience as their friends do. Some children may exhibit an immaturity and social ineptness due to the learning disability. Like many of us, LD persons want acceptance, but their eagerness may cause them to try too hard in inappropriate ways.

Behaviors

Common behavior characteristics of learning disability individuals are:

An inability to read and interpret the environment and people.
An inability to adequately interpret their problems and needs.
Little thought about the results of their actions; poor judgment.
Poor impulse control.
A need for immediate gratification.
Inability to set realistic priorities and goals.
Inappropriate conclusions due to deficient reasoning ability.
Illogical reasons for their actions – sometimes even contradicting what was previously stated.
Inability to develop meaningful social relationships with others; usually these children are loners.
Inability to draw appropriate conclusions due to poor reasoning.
Childish and bossy behavior.
An overabundance of frustration resulting in disruptive behavior.

Treatment

The treatment of this problem of inept logic is not easily accomplished. Competent professional help from a variety of disciplines on an ongoing basis is a necessity to help the individual and society to deal with this lack of social perception.

Advice for Parents

How can I find out if my child needs special education services? Before it can be determined whether or not a person has a learning disability, the following steps should be taken.

1. Schedule a thorough visual, hearing, and medical examination to see if the suspected learning disabilities are related to any of these areas. Once the child's visual, hearing, and medical condition have been determined, you may need to take the next step, which is to:
2. Approach the school district and request a careful assessment of the child's intellectual ability and academic achievement. This testing is done at no cost to the parent.
3. Obtain a written report containing conclusion and recommendations of the evaluation team.
4. If you believe the school has failed to adequately identify the student as one who requires special services, you may require a due processing hearing.

If I disagree with the results of the evaluation, do I have any other option? If you are dissatisfied with the school's evaluation service, you may wish to get an independent evaluation for the student. This should be performed by a competent diagnostic service. Under some circumstances, the school will assume the cost of such an evaluation. If you desire the evaluation, you should write to the school and request that they pay for this service prior to arranging for the testing services. A refusal to pay for the evaluation may be an issue for a due process hearing.

Eligibility for special education services. Once a diagnosis is made and it is felt that the student needs special education services, an individual educational plan is written.

What is an individual education program (IEP)? The IEP is a written agreement among all parties clearly setting forth a statement of what will be provided for the student.

What must the IEP contain? The IEP must include the following.

- The present levels of performance.
- The annual and short-term learning goals; i.e., how much the student is expected to learn over a certain period of time.
- The special education program and related services that will be provided to accomplish these goals.
- The extent to which the student will participate in regular education programs; i.e., when, where, and how much time he/she will be with non-handicapped students.
- When special services will begin and how long they will last.
- When and how the effectiveness of the plan and the student's performance will be evaluated.
- Evaluation must be done at least annually.

What other related services are available to my child under Public Law 94-142? Depending upon the student's unique needs, one or more of the following related services should be provided for in the IEP.

Audiology and speech
Psychological services
Medical services for evaluation and diagnostic purposes
Physical and occupational therapy
Early identification
Social work services
Counseling services
School health services
Parent counseling and training
Transportation

Who participates in the IEP conference? One or both parents; the child, if appropriate; a representative of the public school who is qualified to provide or supervise the provision of special education in the area of suspected disability; the child's teacher; a member of the evaluation team who is knowledgeable about the evaluation procedures and is familiar with the results of the child's evaluation; and any other individual who the parents or the agency feel is important to the best interests of the child.

What should the parent do to be sure an appropriate IEP program is being planned for the child? Provide the school with a complete background of your child's needs and abilities based upon your observations, review beforehand your child's school record so that only the most current data is used in setting educational goals, and be aware of the school's reasons for recommending placement.

How will you know when the IEP meeting is being held? The school officials must notify you in advance of such a meeting and provide you with a convenient time and place. You should be present at all meetings.

All IEP's must be reviewed annually. A parent can request a revision of the IEP before the annual review date. However, this can only be done after the program has been in effect for a reasonable length of time.

How can I evaluate my child's IEP? A written copy of the IEP must be given to the parent. It should be examined to determine if:

- It states the goals and objectives for your child that were agreed upon in the IEP conference.
- The goals and objectives are stated in a manner that is understandable to you.
- The goals and objectives are stated in concrete terms so that progress can be measured by clearly observable signs.

If I am dissatisfied with my child's IEP, what should I do? If you become dissatisfied with any stage of the IEP development or with the final results, you should immediately request a due process hearing. This hearing must take place within a reasonable length of time (45 days).

How soon can I expect my child's IEP to become effective? The child's IEP must take place within 30 calendar days. Every school district is obliged to provide the services specified in the IEP.

What facts shall I look for in determining whether the recommended placement meets my child's needs? By talking with administration and by observing the class, look for the following information.

- Class size. Most states have no requirements for class size. However, the number of students in a class must be manageable enough so that your child's program can be reasonably implemented.
- Class arrangement. Are students placed according to age or grade, or by disability?
- Pupil-teacher ratio. The law does not specify any requirements. However, the parent's concern should focus on whether or not the IEP can be implemented.
- Classroom atmosphere. What kind of control is there? Is there organization and structure? Is there good rapport between teacher and students?
- Curriculum offerings.

- Related services. Is speech, adaptive P.E., etc., available? How much and how often is it given?
- Methods and materials. Are there special methods or materials that are used to deal with the child's specific disability?
- Type of program. Does the type of program offered meet the needs of your child?
- Amount of time. Is the time spent in a given program adequate for the child's specific problem?
- Grading system. Will the same grading system be used to evaluate the child in the special education class as is used for the other children in the system or district?
- Who will evaluate the child? Will it be the responsibility of the regular teacher to evaluate progress or will the special education teacher do this?

Remember: Every student should be educated in the least restrictive placement possible.

How should I approach the school district regarding disagreements, evaluation, IEP's, and educational placement? Try to settle the issue by going through proper channels and talking with the teachers, the principal, the director of special education, and the superintendent. Follow this up by sending a letter to the school officials stating your complaint. If you feel they are uncooperative, promptly request a due process hearing. It is mandated by law and represents an important channel for formally resolving any dispute regarding a child. If you cannot persuade the local school system to comply with the law, contact your local ACLD chapter, a community advocate, neighborhood legal services, or another attorney to help you decide whether to request a hearing.

What is the process for obtaining a hearing? Notify your school district and the State Department of Education in writing that you are interested in a hearing on your child's eligibility for special services, program placement, IEP, etc. State your complaint and indicate the name of the school district and the names of the persons involved in the original decision. Keep a copy of your letter and any response that is made to it. (The hearing must take place within 45 days from the time the letter was sent or that the problem was pointed out to the school officials.)

What rights do parents have regarding hearings? Parents may bring to the hearing any lawyer, community advocate, professional, or any other person who can help in representing both the parent and the child. You can present information about the child's needs, including the results of independent testing. You can require that particular school officials attend the hearing and you have the right to question them. You can prevent the introduction of any records or evidence that has not been made available to you at least five days before the hearing. You can open the hearing to the public; otherwise, it is closed. Finally, your child can be present if you desire.

How should I prepare for a hearing? Obtain an independent evaluation. Seek help from someone who knows about the rights of children and who is not emotionally involved in the proceedings; i.e., a community advocate group, parent groups, neighborhood legal services, or the local ACLD chapter. If you do not belong to a parent organization, join one! There is strength in numbers. Do request copies of your child's records, and have any statements corrected that are inaccurate, unfair, or misleading. Organize in a chronological sequence whatever school documents, health records, or notes on meetings with school personnel that may be important to your case. Obtain a copy of the IEP if there is one, and obtain a copy of your school district's plan for special education services.

Who is responsible for arranging the hearing? The school district has the responsibility for arranging the hearing. It must take place at a time and place convenient for you, the parent. You must also be informed beforehand what legal and other services are available to help you with the hearing.

If I am not satisfied with the decision made at the state level review, to whom can I appeal? If the state level decision is unsatisfactory, the next recourse would be civil action in the appropriate State or Federal court, where judicial review is conducted. This process is restricted to a review of the local school system hearing.

College Information

People with learning disabilities can be found on many campuses, ranging from local community colleges to major universities. Some schools are particularly interested in students with learning disabilities, providing specific programs and assistance for those with special learning needs. The number of these specialized facilities is growing. For further information, write to the Association for Children with Learning Disabilities.

College Board Testing for Learning Disability Students. There is an arrangement that can be made so that learning disabled students can take college board admission tests under special conditions such as extended time, separate test rooms, a reader, or a person to whom answers may be dictated and recorded. You must make such arrangements far in advance. Write:

Tax Information

If you are a parent of a handicapped person, you have several possibilities for claiming deductions and/or tax credits in addition to the former standard deduction, which has now been replaced by a flat amount the law calls the "zero bracket amount."

The manner in which the medical expense deduction rules apply to special schooling costs for children with learning disabilities is the subject of two recent revenue rulings:

The first ruling involved tuition fees paid by a taxpayer for a child's education at a special school. The child had severe learning disabilities, and the child's doctor recommended that the child attend a special school having a program designed to educate such children. The IRS concluded that the tuition costs paid by the taxpayer were deductible under Code Sec. 213. Not only was the school a "special school" as defined by the regulations, the child's disability was the principal reason for his or her being there.

The second ruling concerned not only tuition fees but tutoring and transportation expenses as well. Under the facts of the ruling, a taxpayer sent his or her dyslexic child to a special school. The taxpayer incurred tuition, tutoring, and transportation costs in connection with providing treatment for the child. The IRS concluded that, to the extent such expenses were primarily for and essential to the medical care of the child, they were deductible under Code Sec. 213, 8926.

The Internal Revenue Service Publication 17, Your Federal Income Tax, is updated annually and contains complete information about exemptions, medical deductions, and tax credits. In addition, two specific IRS publications are helpful: 502, Deductions for Medical and Dental Expenses, and 503, Child Care and Disabled Dependent Care. These are available at any IRS office.

LEARNING DISABLED ADULT COMMITTEE*

The purposes of the Learning Disabled Adult Committee are as follows.

- Better educational opportunities for learning disabled adults in vocational, college, and university training.
- To encourage the development of alternative education programs for youth in every school system; to demonstrate to administrators that all persons do not learn in the same way and must be given varied opportunities to learn.
- To promote public awareness of the need to provide more adult rehabilitation in the area of basic skills training and survival techniques. Hundreds of learning disabled adults who were passed over during their school years can be helped, and must be helped if they are to have any measure of success.
- To bring to the consciousness of all taxpayers the enormous amount of money being spent by some state colleges and universities on basic edcuation which should have been provided to these individuals in the elementary and secondary schools. History must not repeat itself. Each taxpayer is paying twice for what did not occur during early school years. There could be a third payment if the learning disabled adult becomes another unemployment statistic.
- Labor: Employer and employee must become aware of the fact that these are capable, intelligent, physically able persons who with some degree of understanding can become highly productive members of the nation's work force. As handicapped individuals, they must be given the same opportunities under the law (Section 503, 504 Rehabilitation Act of 1973) that have been afforded other handicapped individuals.
- To develop social opportunities and contacts through the formation of local and state groups within the ACLD structure.

YOUR RIGHTS AS A DISABLED PERSON

Are you disabled? Or are you the parent or guardian of a disabled child?

If so, Federal law is on your side. As a physically or mentally disabled person, you have the same right as anyone else to:

Education
Employment
Health care
Senior citizen activities
Welfare

and any other public or private service that United States tax dollars help to support.

If you are otherwise qualified – for a job, college, welfare, or other activity or service – your disability doesn't count. That's the law. It's Title V, section 504, of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (Public Law 93-112). Remember: Your rights are protected by section 504 if your employer, school, college, hospital, or other service provider receives Federal assistance. That means Federal money, services, or property. If you're not sure your employer must comply with section 504, ask your supervisor if the activity receives Federal assistance. If the answer is "yes," your rights are guaranteed. If you're not sure your college, hospital, social service agency, or other place that provides services to you must comply with section 504, ask your service representative if the activity receives Federal assistance. Again, if the answer is "yes," your rights are guaranteed.

If you are the parent or guardian of a physically or mentally disabled child, you have the right to demand that your Federally assisted local public school system provide a free education appropriate to your child's needs. That's the law. In fact, it's two laws – section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act, and the Education for All Handicapped Children Act (Public Law 94-142). Again, Federal assistance is the key. If the public school district in which you live benefits from the use of Federal funds, services, or property – and nearly all public school districts do – your disabled child's right to a free appropriate education is assured.

Is Your Disability Covered?

In its section 504 regulation, HEW identifies a handicapped person as anyone with a physical or mental disability that substantially impairs or restricts one or more of such major life activities as walking, seeing, hearing, speaking, working, or learning. A history of such disability, or the belief on the part of others that a person has such a disability, whether this is true or not, also is recognized as a handicap by the regulation. Handicapping conditions include, but are not limited to:

Alcoholism*
Cancer
Cerebral palsy
Deafness or hearing impairment
Diabetes
Drug addiction*
Epilepsy
Heart disease
Mental or emotional illness
Mental retardation
Multiple sclerosis
Muscular dystrophy
Orthopedic, speech, or visual impairment
Perceptual handicaps such as dyslexia, minimal brain dysfunction, and developmental aphasia.

Your Right to Employment

As a disabled job applicant or employee, you have the same rights and benefits as non-handicapped applicants and employees. Your ability, training, and experience must be considered. Your disability must not be considered – unless it keeps you from doing the job adequately.

An employer receiving Federal assistance may not discriminate against you in recruitment, advertising, or processing of applications for employment. You can't be required to take a physical examination before a job is offered. You may be required to take a physical examination after the job is offered if the examination is required of other applicants. (This provision is to prevent discrimination against persons with such hidden disabilities as heart disease and epilepsy that would be revealed in a physical examination. It is also to keep employers from requiring a physical examination for handicapped job applicants only – a common practice in the past – then denying them a job because they failed to pass the examination.)

In addition, you may not be discriminated against in hiring, promotion or demotion, transfer, layoff, or rehiring; job assignments or career ladders; or leaves of absence, sick leave, training programs, and other fringe benefits.

Once you are hired, your employer is required to take reasonable steps to accommodate your disability unless they would cause the employer undue hardship. That may mean supplying, for example:

- A reader if you are blind and the job includes paperwork.
- An interpreter if you are deaf and the job requires telephone contacts.
- Adequate workspace and access to it if you use a wheelchair.
- Minor adjustment in working hours if you are required to visit a methadone clinic daily.

*The United States Attorney General has ruled that alcoholism and drug addiction are physical or mental impairments that are handicapping conditions if they limit one or more of life's major activities.

Your Right to Health Care

Hospitals are the largest group of health care providers affected by the section 504 regulation. As a disabled person, you are entitled to all medical services and medically related instruction available to the public. Hospitals receiving Federal assistance (including Medicare payments) must take steps to accommodate your disability.

Among other things, hospitals must:

- Provide an emergency room interpreter or make other effective provisions for deaf patients.
- Treat the physical injury of a person under the influence of alcohol or drugs.
- Admit disabled persons to natural childbirth, antismoking, and other public service programs of instruction.

Federally assisted long-term health care facilities may operate separate programs for different physical disabilities and mental disorders. For example, a sanitarium for patients with lung disease is not required to have a mental health program for a patient with lung disease and an emotional disorder. On the other hand, the institution may not exclude a person with lung disease who also has other handicaps.

If your disabled child is in a long-term health care facility, the facility and the local public school district are jointly responsible for providing a free appropriate education for your child.

If you are a Medicaid patient, your private physician must have an office physically accessible to you, treat you in a hospital or your home, or, if this is not possible, refer you to another physician whose office is accessible, after conferring with you.

Services provided to you as a Medicare patient in a Federally assisted hospital are covered under section 504; services provided by a private physician are not.

Your Right to Social and Rehabilitation Services

As a disabled person, you have the right to participate in vocational rehabilitation, senior citizen activities, day care (for your disabled child), or any other social service program receiving Federal assistance on an equal basis with nonhandicapped persons. For example, you may not be denied admission because you use a wheelchair and need access to classrooms, recreation areas, or buses, or be excluded from vocational training because you are blind, mentally retarded, or paralyzed and may need more training for paid employment than students with other disabilities.

Your Right to Education

As a disabled young person or adult, you have the same right as anyone else to go to college or enroll in a job training or adult post-high school basic education program. The college, job-training, or adult basic education program you select must consider your application on the basis of your academic and other school records. Your disability is not a factor.

A college or training program may not, for example:

- Ask you to take a pre-admission test that inadequately measures your academic level because no special provisions were made for the fact that you are blind, deaf, or otherwise disabled.
- Inquire about any disability before admitting you, unless it is trying to overcome the effects of prior limitations on enrollment of handicapped students, and you are willing to volunteer the information.
- Limit the number of handicapped students admitted.

Colleges are not required to lower academic standards or alter degree requirements for you. But, depending on your disability, they may have to:

- Extend the time allowed for you to earn a degree or substitute one elective course for another.
- Modify teaching methods and examinations so you can fully participate in a degree program.
- Provide braille books or other aids for you if they are not available from other sources.

These section 504 protections apply to all public and private education institutions receiving HEW assistance.

Your Disabled Child's Right to Education

No later than school year 1978-79, your state and local school district must provide under section 504 an appropriate elementary and secondary education for your physically or mentally disabled child. This public education must cost you no more than it costs parents of non-handicapped children.

This is true no matter which of the following education settings you and your public school district decide is best for your child.

- A regular public school classroom.
- A special education public school program.
- A residential school if the public school has no appropriate program.
- An appropriate education in a hospital if your child is receiving long-term patient care.

Your public school district must provide an education for your child regardless of the type or severity of his or her disability.

Priority attention must be given, first, to disabled children receiving no public education and, second, to the most severely handicapped children in each disability group who are currently receiving an inadequate education.

The Education for All Handicapped Children Act says you and you public school district should work together in the interest of your child's education, happiness, and physical and emotional well-being. The school district must develop – with your advice and consent – an individualized education program for your child and give you in writing:

- A statement of learning goals it will try to help your child reach.
- A list of special aids that will be provided, such as braille books if your child is blind or a high desk if your child uses a wheel chair.
- A schedule to review periodically your child's progress and, with your consent, make program revisions as needed.
- An explanation of your rights of due process under the law, which include your right to written notice from the school of major changes proposed in your child's program of program location.

LIBRARIES AND LIBRARY SERVICES

Under this heading is information on the following: books for blind and physically handicapped individuals, international interlibrary loan, Recording for the Blind, Inc., and regional and subregional libraries for the blind and physically handicapped. The national office of Recording for the Blind, Inc., which can provide information about the recordings available through the organization, is located at 215 E. 58th St., New York, NY 10022. The library listing includes the regional library for a particular section of the country first, and then the subregional libraries serving the same geographical area.

BOOKS FOR BLIND AND PHYSICALLY HANDICAPPED INDIVIDUALS

A free national library program of braille and recorded materials for blind and physically handicapped persons is administered by the National Library Service for the Blind and Physically Handicapped (NLS), Library of Congress. With the cooperation of authors and publishers who grant permission to use copyrighted works, NLS selects and produces full-length books and magazines in braille and on recorded disc and cassette. Reading materials are distributed to a cooperating network of 56 regional and more than 100 subregional (local) libraries, where they are circulated to eligible borrowers. Reading materials are sent to borrowers and returned to libraries by postage-free mail. Established by an act of Congress in 1931 to serve blind adults, the program was expanded in 1952 to include children, in 1962 to provide music materials, and again in 1966 by Public Law 89-522 to include individuals with other physical impairments that prevent the reading of standard print.

Eligibility

Anyone who is unable to read or use standard printed materials as a result of temporary or permanent visual or physical limitations may receive service. A recent survey indicates that as many as two million persons with some type of visual impairment are eligible and another million with physical conditions such as paralysis, missing arms or hands, lack of muscle coordination, or prolonged weakness could benefit from the use of reading materials in recorded form.

Book Collection

Books are selected on the basis of their appeal to a wide range of interests. Bestsellers, biographies, fiction, and how-to books are in greatest demand. The national book collection currently contains more than 25,000 titles. Each year about 1,900 titles are mass-produced for distribution through network libraries. Another 700 titles recorded on tape or transcribed into braille by volunteers are circulated in more limited quantities. Titles expected to be extremely popular are produced on flexible disc in several thousand copies and circulated to borrowers within several months of their publication in print form.

Magazines

Seventy magazines on disc, on cassette, and in braille are offered through the program. Readers may request free subscriptions to Harper's, U.S. News, National Geographic, Consumer Reports, Good Housekeeping, Sports Illustrated, Jack and Jill, and many other popular magazines. Current issues are mailed to readers at the same time the print issues appear, or shortly thereafter.

Special Equipment

Playback equipment is loaned free to readers for as long as library materials are being borrowed. Talking book machines are designed to play disc-recorded books and magazines at 8 rpm and 16 rpm; cassette book machines are designed for cassettes recorded at 15/16 ips and the standard speed of 1 7/8 ips as well as on two tracks and four tracks. Available accessories for playback equipment include earphones and pillowphones. An auxiliary amplifier for hearing impaired persons is available from NLS on special request.

Music Services

Persons interested in music materials may receive them directly from the Music Section of NLS. The collection consists of scores in braille and large type; textbooks and books about music in braille, large type, and in recorded form; elementary instruction for piano, organ, and guitar on cassette; and other instructional materials in recorded form.

Volunteer Services

Free correspondence courses leading to certification in braille transcribing (literary, music, and math braille) and braille proofreading are offered. Voice auditions and informal training are given to volunteer tape narrators. During fiscal year 1978, nearly 500 volunteers became braillists, braille proofreaders, or tape narrators through the NLS program. Thousands of volunteers throughout the NLS program. Thousands of volunteers throughout the United States produce books for libraries and readers. Approximately 3,000 Telephone Pioneers, senior or retired telephone industry workers, contribute their time and skills to the maintenance and repair of playback equipment. Volunteers repaired 75,000 talking book and cassette book machines in 1978.

Information Services

Questions on various aspects of blindness and physical handicaps may be sent to NLS or to any network library. This service is available without charge to individuals, organizations, and libraries.

Research and Development Projects

Research efforts are directed toward reducing costs for books and equipment, speeding delivery of reading materials to borrows, and improving the quality of materials and services. Current research projects involve application of the most advanced computer technology to rapid and economical braille production; design of a single unit (called a combination machine) to play both cassette and disc recordings; and development of a braille output capability for the Kurzweil Machine, a reading aid that scans a printed page and automatically converts it to speech.

For Further Information

Ask your local public librarian for more information about the program and how to apply for service.

INTERNATIONAL INTERLIBRARY LOAN

The National Library Service for the Blind and Physically Handicapped (NLS/BPH) of the Library of Congress lends recorded and braille books to foreign libraries and agencies serving blind and physically handicapped readers. Music scores and instructional music materials are also available in braille, large print, and recorded formats. United States Federal law prevents the lending of books or machines directly to readers who are non-citizens of the United States living outside the United States.

Braille books in the NLS/BPH collection are in standard Grade Two braille. NLS/BPH recorded books are on cassette (Phillips cassettes, predominantly four-track and 15/16 ips) and on disc (predominantly 8 rpm). Special playback equipment is needed to read these recorded books, which are recorded at a slower speed than commercial material. NLS does not produce textbooks for students or research materials for professionals except for the music materials cited above; emphasis is on recreational reading material, mainly fiction and general nonfiction.

Materials sent on international loan may not be duplicated because NLS/BPH has secured copyright permission with the understanding that reproductions are for the use of United States citizens and residents. Requests for books should be directed to the Network Services Section and requests for music materials should be directed to the Music Section, National Library Service for the Blind and Physically Handicapped, Library of Congress, Washington, DC 20542. Interlibrary loan forms will be supplied upon request. Materials must be posted back six weeks from the date of receipt.

Machines are available for purchase by libraries or agencies that serve eligible blind or handicapped individuals. For information on obtaining a special cassette player (which does not record), in quantity only, contact Vice President of Home Entertainment Operations, Telex Communications Inc., 501 1st Ave., NW, Rochester, MN 55901. For information concerning a personal purchase of a cassette recorder/player or a talking-book disc machine, contact American Printing House for the Blind, 1839 Frankfort Ave., Louisville, KY 40206.

REGIONAL AND SUBREGIONAL LIBRARIES FOR THE BLIND AND PHYSICALLY HANDICAPPED

In cooperation with a network of regional and subregional libraries, the Library of Congress provides a free library service to persons who are unable to read or use standard printed materials because of visual or physical impairment. Books and magazines in recorded form (talking books) or in braille are delivered to eligible readers by postage-free mail and are returned in the same manner. Specially designed phonographs and cassette players are also loaned free to persons borrowing talking books.

This list contains the addresses, telephone numbers, and names of librarians in charge of each of the regional and subregional libraries in the network. The regional library or libraries listed under each state provide a full range of library services to handicapped readers. In many states, readers receive talking books through subregional libraries, which are local public libraries having collections of current materials and direct access to the resources of their regional libraries. In addition, they offer their handicapped readers reference and reader's advisory services.

For further information or application forms, write to the library serving your area. Within each state, the regional library is listed before the subregional libraries.

MENTAL RETARDATION

Below is an explanation of mental retardation – what it is, what it is caused by, and whether it can be cured or ameliorated. Next appears a list of private residential facilities for the mentally retarded and a list of state associations for retarded citizens and state mental retardation program directors, as sources of additional information.

MENTAL RETARDATION: WHAT IS IT?

What is Mental Retardation?

Mentally retarded persons are those who mature at a below average rate and experience unusual difficulty in learning, social adjustment, and economic productivity. The most generally accepted technical definition describes mental retardation as "significantly subaverage general intellectual functioning existing concurrently with deficits in adaptive behavior, and manifested during the developmental period." In terms of IQ, mentally retarded individuals score below 70. This means that the measured intelligence of 97% of the general population is greater than that of mentally retarded persons. All areas of abilities are affected, and the condition exists from childhood.

Mental retardation is not a disease, nor should it be confused with mental illness. Mentally retarded children grow into mentally retarded adults; they do not remain "eternal children." The big difference is that they learn more slowly and with much greater difficultly than other people.

How Prevalent is the Condition?

Mentally retarded persons constitute one of the largest single handicapped groups in America. They include more than six million persons, and slightly more than 100,000 newborn children are likely to be added to this group each year unless far-reaching preventive measures are discovered and employed. Today, one out of every ten Americans has a direct involvement with the problem by virtue of having a mentally retarded person in his or her family.

Mental retardation is four times more common than rheumatic heart disease and nine times more prevalent than cerebral palsy. It affects 15 times as many people as total blindness and 10 times as many children and adults as polio did before research provided the Salk vaccine.

Who are the Potential Victims?

Mental retardation can strike individuals of every race, religion, and nationality, and every educational, social, and economic background. Some of our nation's leading figures have had mentally retarded family members. As a matter of fact, hereditary components are known to account for only a fraction of the cases of retardation.

What are the Causes of Mental Retardation?

Mental retardation can be caused by any condition that impairs development of the brain before birth, during birth, or in the early childhood years. Well over 250 causes have already been discovered, but they account for only about one-fourth of all known cases of mental retardation. In three-fourths of the cases, the specific cause remains unknown.

Some of the most common causes include the following.

Genetic Irregularities. These result from abnormality of genes inherited from the parents, or from disorders of the genes caused during pregnancy by infections, over-exposure to x-rays, and other factors. Inborn errors of metabolism that may produce mental retardation, such as PKU (phenylketonuria), fall in this category. Chromosomal abnormalities have likewise been related to some forms of mental retardation, such as Down's syndrome ("mongolism").

Problems During Pregnancy. Malnutrition, as well as german measles, glandular disorders, and many other illnesses of the mother during pregnancy frequently result in a child being born retarded. Physical malformations of the brain or other organs originating in prenatal life may also result in retardation.

Problems at Birth. Extraordinarily prolonged labor, pelvic pressure, or hemorrhages – any birth condition of unusual stress – may injure the infant's brain. Any reduction in the supply of oxygen to the infant's brain during birth can impair mental development, too, as can Rh factor incompatibility between mother and child, if not promptly treated.

Problems After Birth. Childhood diseases such as whooping cough, chicken pox, measles, meningitis, scarlet fever, encephalitis, and polio can damage the brain, as can accidents, such as a blow to the head. Glandular imbalance or malnutrition may prevent normal development, while substances such as lead and mercury can produce irreparable damage to the brain and nervous system.

Environmental Factors. The President's Committee on Mental Retardation has concluded that 75% of our nation's mentally retarded citizens come from urban and rural poverty areas. In addition to malnutrition, lead poisoning, disease-producing conditions, inadequate medical care, and other health hazards associated with poverty situations, children in disadvantaged areas are likely to be deprived of many common day-to-day experiences of more fortunate youngsters. Recent research suggests that such understimulation can result in irreparable damage and can serve as a cause of mental retardation.

What are the Degrees of Mental Retardation?

About 89% of mentally retarded persons are mildly retarded and, in many respects, quite similar to their non-retarded peers. They differ primarily in rate and degree of intellectual development. While still young, their retardation is not readily apparent, and these children are not usually identified as retarded until they enter public school. With proper education and training, these individuals can enter the competitive labor market and the mainstream of daily community life.

Moderately retarded persons, who comprise about 6% of the mentally retarded, are more obviously handicapped. Their retardation is usually apparent before school age. However, appropriate educational opportunities throughout the developmental years can prepare these individuals for satisfying and productive lives in the community.

The remaining 5% of retarded persons are severely or profoundly retarded. In addition to obvious intellectual impariment, they frequently have other handicaps, such as cerebral palsy, epilepsy, blindness, or deafness. Recent technological advances have demonstrated that most severely retarded persons can learn to care for their basic needs. They also can perform many useful work activities, with supervision, and can otherwise adapt satisfactorily to normal patterns of life.

Can Mental Retardation be Prevented?

Recent scientific developments have led some authorities to conclude that 50% of the cases of mental retardation could be prevented if current knowledge were fully implemented. Unfortunately, many of the known preventive approaches are not yet in wide use. Obviously, there is an urgent need not only to implement what is already known, but to discover means of preventing those many causes of mental retardation for which effective prevention is still unknown. Examples of specific approaches to prevention include these:

- Damage due to Rh-factor incompatibility can be prevented by blood exchange in the infant at the time of birth and special immunization of the mother.
- Quick treatment in cases of lead poisoning or, preferably, action to prevent children from eating paint containing lead can also be effective in preventing some cases.
- Measles vaccine – developed to combat rubella – can help if widely used.
- Early detection and dietary treatment, if effective, in some forms of inborn errors of metabolism, such as PKU and galactosemia.
- Improved nutrition of pregnant women and young infants can reduce the dangers of retardation from malnutrition.
- Surgical techniques have proven effective in preventing retardation resulting from accumulation of cerebrospinal fluid in the brain (hydrocephalus) and premature fusion of the cranial sutures (craniosynostosis).
- Better pediatric care, including antibiotics that control the high fever formerly associated with many of the dangerous children's diseases, also works to limit mental retardation.

Can Mental Retardation be Cured?

Mental retardation has been defined traditionally as an irreversible condition. However, recent advances in technology have been such that there are strong indications that it may be possible within the foreseeable future to significantly enhance intellectual functioning and to reverse certain deteriorative processes. In the light of these positive indications, the National Association for Retarded Citizens has begun to actively encourage the scientific community to seek cures for disorders and conditions involved in mental retardation through the application of current, and development of new knowledge and technology.

Can Mental Retardation be Ameliorated?

Almost all mentally retarded individuals have the capacity to learn, to develop, and to grow. The great majority can become economically productive, fully participating members of society.

All retarded children and adults need the same basic services which other human beings need for normal development. These services include education, vocational preparation, health services of all types, recreational opportunities, religious services, and many more. Unfortunately, many retarded persons have been denied access to these services or have been provided with inappropriate services, often at exorbitant costs to their families.

In addition to basic generic services, many retarded persons need specialized services to meet extraordinary needs. Examples include vocational rehabilitation, sheltered workshops, work activity centers, diagnostic and evaluation centers, day training, preschool classes, and all types of residential services. Traditionally, many of these services have been unavailable or of questionable quality.

PRIVATE RESIDENTIAL FACILITIES FOR THE MENTALLY RETARDED

National Association of Private Residential Facilities for the Mentally Retarded (NAPRFMR)*

Eligibility Requirements, NAPRFMR Member Agencies and Homes. Facilities serving primarily persons who are mentally retarded and developmentally disabled are eligible. Licensing, certification, or approval must be obtained in the home state (if required by the state). (Facilities in California, Iowa, Minnesota, and Pennsylvania must apply for membership through the formally affiliated state association in that state.)

MULTIPLE SCLEROSIS

Under this heading can be found information on multiple sclerosis – what it is, when it occurs, and what services are available. For information on the chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society nearest you, write or call the national office at the address shown below.

WHAT IS MULTIPLE SCLEROSIS?*

The lay public knows very little about multiple sclerosis, the "mysterious crippler of young adults." Too often, it is confused with muscular dystrophy, a muscular disease which has its inception in childhood and is largely hereditary.

Multiple sclerosis, or MS, is often a disease of tragic consequences, primarily because it attacks young men and women in the prime of life, those who are just starting careers and families. It attacks the central nervous system and is usually first diagnosed between the ages of 20 and 40.

An estimated 500,000 Americans have MS or related disorders, and an estimated two million family members are affected by its heavy economic burden, because a great many people who have MS are unable to work.

The disease attacks the myelin sheathing of the central nervous system, destroying it in patches which are replaced by scar tissue that interrupts and distorts the flow of nerve impulses. Resultant symptoms, which may not be present in all cases, depending on the site of damage to the nervous system include:

Paralysis
Numbness
Double vision
Foot dragging
Bladder or bowel problems
Loss of balance
Extreme weakness
"Pins and needles" prickling
Loss of coordination
Speech and hearing difficulties.

Spontaneous remissions (during which symptoms improve, or there is no further progress or symptoms) are common. Remission might last for months or years. MS, however, is usually progressive, with a series of unpredictable attacks, each usually causing further disability. As yet, its cause is unknown, there is no specific treatment, and nothing is known about prevention. Some symptoms can be alleviated by good medical management.

WHEN MULTIPLE SCLEROSIS STRIKES*

When a person is diagnosed as having MS, the patient or the family should promptly get in touch with the local chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society. The Society has over 150 chapters and branch chapters throughout the country – in every state of the Union and the District of Columbia – and the patient and community service programs provided by the Society are supported and maintained directly by the local MS chapters.

Services provided by the chapters may vary from community to community due to local resources and other factors. Chapter activities are designed to complement other community services. If the scope of community programs does not include a particular supportive service important to MS patients, then the chapter will make every effort to fill that void.

*Permission to reproduce granted by the National Multiple Sclerosis Society.

WHAT PATIENT SERVICES ARE AVAILABLE?*

While the services provided by each chapter vary, many of the following programs are available in a majority of Society chapters.

Information, Counseling, and Referral Service

All chapters provide information about MS and offer guidance and direction for patients and their families to other community services. These local organizations could be governmental agencies, such as the Office of Vocational Rehabilitation, or voluntary groups interested in some specific area of aid to the handicapped.

Medical Equipment Loans

The loan of medical equipment is available to MS patients when a doctor's prescription calls for it and its cost is not covered by other community sources or provider groups.

Medical Advisory Committee

A Medical Advisory Committee composed of community leaders in medicine and other health professionals guides the chapter and MS persons and their families.

MS Clinics

The National Multiple Sclerosis Society chapters support over 80 MS clinics, many of which are associated with university medical schools.

The MS Home Care Course

Sponsored jointly by the National Multiple Sclerosis Society and the American National Red Cross, The MS Care Course is a new, comprehensive training program for family members and friends who are caring for an MS person at home.

Swiming Programs (Group Aquatics)

Many chapters, in conjunction with local service organizations, provide recreational and therapeutic swimming programs for persons with MS.

"Talking Books"

For patients experiencing reading difficulties, "talking books" are available through local chapters from the United States Library of Congress.

Vocational Rehabilitation

MS chapters work closely with local vocational rehabilitation agencies to help patients receive training and services that will equip them for employment or reemployment. This often requires learning new vocational skills to accommodate the increasing limitations of the patient's physical capabilities.

Psychological Counseling

Many chapters have programs of individual or group counseling for both patients and their families to assist in understanding and coping with the often significant psychological and emotional aspects of multiple sclerosis.

Informational and Educational Services

Most chapters sponsor special MS symposia, workshops, and seminars at which leading medical and psychosocial professionals offer the latest information on MS research and patient care. Experience has indicated that as patients and their families learn about the disease, anxiety is often reduced, and they are better able to deal with the inevitable uncertainties of this unpredictable disorder.

Social/Recreational Support

Chapters provide a variety of programs designed to help patients develop new friendships and to counteract isolation and loneliness. These services can vary from "rap" groups aimed at offering patients and their families mutual support and encouragement, to friendly visits and telephone reassurance programs. Many chapters support bowling or camping trips, parties, and other social functions designed to stimulate the involvement of people with MS. Patient newsletters are another form of communication often available.

Visiting Nurses

A number of chapters support visiting nurse agencies and homemaker-home health aid services for those MS patients who need it. In some communities, these services are provided by other local agencies.

THE NATIONAL MULTIPLE SCLEROSIS SOCIETY

The National Multiple Sclerosis Society was founded in 1946 with two basic purposes: to provide patient and community services for MS persons throughout the country, and to support research to find the cause and cure for multiple sclerosis. All of the Society's programs — research, professional education, public information, and community and patient services — are supported entirely by voluntary contributions.

The Society's program of community and patient services is administered by the local chapters under the guidance of the National Office. These programs are continually being reviewed and expanded in order to ensure the best possible quality of life for MS patients.

MUSCULAR DYSTROPHY

A brief description of muscular dystrophy is provided under this heading. For the address of the Muscular Dystrophy Association clinic nearest you, please contact the national office, the address and telephone number of which is given below. The Association can also supply fact sheets on the following: amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, malignant hyperthermia, Friedreich's ataxia, myasthenia gravis, periodic paralysis, adult progressive spinal muscular atrophy or Aran-Duchenne disease, Charcot-Marie-tooth disease or peroneal muscular atrophy, benign congenital hypotonia, myotonic dystrophy, Werdnig-Hoffmann disease or infantile progressive spinal muscular atrophy, Kugelberg-Welander disease or juvenile progressive spinal muscular atrophy, the CPK test, and plasmapheresis.

WHAT IS MUSCULAR DYSTROPHY?*

Muscular dystrophy is the general designation for a group of chronic, hereditary diseases characterized by the progressive degeneration and weakness of voluntary muscle. This discussion considers muscular dystrophy as a general disease category and then describes its specific forms.

At What Age Do Signs of Dystrophy Appear?

Contrary to the widespread notion that muscular dystrophy is an exclusively childhood disorder, clinical onset may occur at any point in the lifespan. The different types of the disease vary in the age at which muscle wasting becomes manifest and in the muscle groups first affected. The most common form of muscular dystrophy strikes children between the ages of two and six.

Does the Rate of Progression Vary?

Degeneration of muscle in muscular dystrophy is a continuing process, with considerable variation in its rate and severity among the different forms of the disease. As a rule, it can be said that the earlier the clinical signs appear, the more rapid the progression and the more widespread and disabling the deterioration.

As muscles deteriorate, patients become weaker. In the severe forms of the disease, patients lose the power of ambulation and are confined to wheelchairs, and eventually to bed. In such cases, they are finally unable to carry out the simplest activities of everyday life. They cannot combat intercurrent infections, and death usually results from respiratory disease; it also may be precipitated by involvement of heart muscle.

How is a Diagnosis of Muscular Dystrophy Established?

The age of onset, distribution and severity of muscle weakness, and the pattern of inheritance indicated by a family history provide essential information in the diagnosis of muscular dystrophy. Because other neuromuscular disorders are not always distinguishable from various forms of muscular dystrophy on clinical grounds alone, a diagnosis of dystrophy may require direct evidence of muscle degeneration. Examination of muscle biopsy is the most definitive procedure for confirming the presence of such degeneration. Seen microscopically, dystrophic muscle has a characteristically abnormal appearance, showing wide variation in fiber diameter and infiltration with fat and connective tissue. Electromyography is also a valuable diagnostic tool, as is the measurement of various serum enzymes.

Is Muscular Dystrophy Always Inherited?

It is now well-established that all forms of muscular dystrophy are hereditary conditions, with the genetic defect transmitted by one parent in some forms of the disease and by both parents in other types. However, there are many cases of muscular dystrophy in families with no known history of the disease. The thesis of a high spontaneous mutation rate in Duchenne dystrophy, which has been advanced to explain these sporadic cases, is now being questioned by certain investigators.

How Does Inheritance Work?

Within the necleus of each human cell, there are 23 pairs of chromosomes, one of each pair derived from the father, the other from the mother. The basic units of heredity, the genes are located in matching positions on each chromosome of a pair. These corresponding genes are known as alleles and, together, they determine the inherited characteristics of the individual human being.

One allele may have greater influence than the other in determining a particular characteristic. The allele with greater influence is called dominant, the one with lesser influence recessive. For a recessive characteristic to gain expression, a "double dose" of two recessive alleles is necessary.

This rule appllies to all traits transmitted on 22 of the 23 chromosome pairs within the nucleus of the cell, the so-called autosomes. But in the remaining pair, the one whose genes determine whether we are born male or female – the sex chromosomes – the situation is different. That is because these chromosomes themselves are different, as indicated by their symbols: XX for the female, XY for the male.

In the female, every cell nucleus includes two X-chromosomes, one derived from the mother, the other from the father. In the male, every cell nucleus includes only one X-chromosome, derived from the mother, and a shorter Y-chromosome, derived from the father. The Y-chromosome has room for fewer genes than the X. Perhaps as a result, most of the genes on the X-chromosomes find expression in the male, even those that are recessive.

The genes for two types of dystrophy – Duchenne muscular dystrophy and Becker muscular dystrophy – are located only on the X-chromosome and are contributed by a clinically unaffected female parent to the XY pairing. The other muscular dystrophies are transmitted autosomally and may be either dominant or recessive.

What Causes Muscular Dystrophy?

The basic defect in any hereditary disorder resides in the patient's genetic material. In muscular dystrophy, through pathogenetic processes that are not completely understood, the genetic defect finds expression in the biochemical and structural degradation of muscle cells. Extensive research has established numerous biochemical abnormalities in muscular dystrophy, but these appear to be secondary to the disease process rather than its immediate cause. Among the abnormalities are defects in the surface and interior membranes of the muscle cell, as well as in the surface membranes of the blood cells. Such evidence suggests to many researchers that generalized membrane defects are implicated in the pathogenesis of muscular dystrophy.

Is There Any Treatment for Muscular Dystrophy?

At this time, there is no known treatment that will arrest or reverse the dystrophic process, but medical management can increase mobility, maximize independence in daily activities, and ease the patient's discomfort. The use of orthopedic devices and physical therapy, for example, can keep patients ambulatory longer, minimize crippling contractures, and prevent or delay curvature of the spine.

Can Laboratory Tests Detect Carriers of Muscular Dystrophy?

Levels of the enzyme creatine kinase (CPK) and certain other enzymes are significantly elevated in the blood serum of female carriers of Duchenne dystrophy. Laboratory tests measuring the serum levels of these enzymes are 70 to 80% effective in identifying the carrier state in Duchenne muscular dystrophy. There are no tests at the present time for carrier detection in other types of dystrophy. Carrier testing for Duchenne muscular dystrophy is available at Muscular Dystrophy Association clinics.

What Research is Being Done?

The Muscular Dystrophy Association (MDA) supports a massive research effort aimed at developing ways to prevent, treat, and cure muscular dystrophy and to precisely define the disease in biochemical terms. Current MDA research projects involve more than a hundred scientific specialties. Among the areas under investigation are the physiology of muscle contraction; the structure and function of cellular and intracellular membranes; the ultrastructure of muscle; nerve-muscle interrelationships; and the underlying biochemistry and neurobiology of muscle disease.

Directly related to patient care is research, now underway by the MDA's Task Force on Drug Development. The Task Force has organized a search for pharmacological agents that will arrest or even reverse the progression of muscular dystrophy and other neuromuscular diseases as well. Clinical and preclinical trials of potential therapeutic agents are in progress.

What are the Specific Forms of Muscular Dystrophy?

The following descriptions summarize the major characteristics of the various types of muscular dystrophy.

Duchenne Muscular Dystrophy. Clinical onset of Duchenne muscular dystrophy typically occurs in boys between the ages of two and six, and occasionally soon after birth. The disease starts so insidiously that it may go unnoticed for many months or even years. The child may have difficulty climbing stairs and rising from sitting or lying positions. There is a tendency to fall frequently. Later, the child may develop a waddling gait. Serum levels of creatine kinase (CPK), a muscle enzyme, are elevated in Duchenne muscular dystrophy even before clinical signs of the disease appear. These high CPK levels in blood serum are a consequence of abnormal muscle cell membrane function, which results in the loss of CPK and other enzymes from dystrophic muscle.

A distinctive characteristic of Duchenne muscular dystrophy, although not invariable, is the seeming enlargement (pseudohypertrophy) of calf muscles, caused by deposition of fat and connective tissue.

Progression is rapid with no remission and is marked by wasting of proximal muscles – particularly in the pelvic girdle – followed by involvement of the pectoral muscles, and finally of all muscle groups. In this, the most common and severe type of muscular dystrophy, few patients survive their early 20's. Antibiotic therapy and other advances in dealing with pulmonary complications have been major factors in extending life expectancy.

The hereditary pattern in Duchenne muscular dystrophy is of the ressive X-linked type, in which the defective gene is transmitted by the mother, almost exclusively to male children. There is a 50% probability that any male child of a female carrier will develop Duchenne muscular dystrophy and a 50% probability that any female offspring will be a carrier of the defective gene. Carriers of Duchenne dystrophy are themselves unaffected.

Becker Muscular Dystrophy. Clinical onset of Becker muscular dystrophy occurs between the ages of 5 and 25. As in Duchenne muscular dystrophy, which the Becker type resembles in many respects, victims are male. The first clinical signs are similar to those appearing in Duchenne dystrophy but considerably less severe. Pseudohypertrophy of calf muscles is common, and CPK levels can be as grossly elevated in cases of Becker muscular dystrophy as Duchenne.

Progression, in contrast to that in Duchenne muscular dystrophy, is comparatively slow, although it follows a similar course. As in Duchenne dystrophy, there is progressive weakness and wasting of the pelvic and later the pectoral muscles. However, weakness is less pronounced than in Duchenne and the disease much more benign in its consequences. The patient often lives out a normal life span.

The hereditary pattern in Becker muscular dystrophy is X-linked recessive, as it is in Duchenne muscular dystrophy.

Limb-Girdle Muscular Dystrophy. Clinical onset of the disease occurs anywhere from the first to the third decade of life. The initial muscles affected are the proximal muscles of the pelvic and shoulder girdles.

The progression of limb-girdle muscular dystrophy varies considerably, as does the degree of disability. Progression is sometimes quite slow and sometimes fairly rapid – although never as rapid as in the Duchenne type. When progression is slow, patients may have a normal lifespan.

The hereditary pattern in limb-girdle muscular dystrophy is autosomal recessive. Unless both parents carry the defective gene, none of their children will manifest the disease. When both parents carry the gene, each offspring has a 25% probability of being clinically affected, a 50% probability of being normal but carrying the defective gene, and a 25% probability of being completely free of the hereditary defect. Sons and daughters are equally at risk.

Facioscapulohumeral Muscular Dystrophy. Clinical onset of the disease usually occurs in early adolescence, occasionally as late as the mid-20's, and sometimes in infancy. There is marked variability in the severity of symptoms from patient to patient, as well as in the age of onset. As indicated by the name of the disease, initial involvement occurs in the muscles of the face and shoulder girdle. There is a resulting lack of facial mobility, difficulty in raising arms over the head, and a characteristic forward slope of the shoulders.

The progression of facioscapulohumeral muscular dystrophy is very slow as a rule, with plateaus of significant duration. Average life span is rarely shortened, although patients may suffer considerable disability.

The hereditary pattern is autosomal dominant. In this form of inheritance, a trait is transmitted by a single gene derived from one parent. The carrier of a dominant disease gene usually suffers from the disorder. The is a 50% probability of incidence among offspring – male or female.

Myotonic Muscular Dystrophy. Clinical onset of myotonic muscular dystrophy, also known as Steinert's disease, may occur at any age, including infancy, but is most frequent between 20 and 35. Myotonia (delayed relaxation of muscles after contraction) and facial weakness are among the earliest and most characteristic features of myotonic dystrophy. Weakness of the feet and hands is another common early sign, as is weakness of the anterior muscles of the neck.

The progression of the disease is typically slow. Disability rarely becomes severe until 15 to 20 years after the onset of symtpoms. A distinctive characteristic of myotonic dystrophy is involvement of other parts of the body – such as the central nervous system, smooth muscles, endocrine glands, and eyes – in addition to the voluntary musculature.

The hereditary pattern in myotonic muscular dystrophy is autosomal dominant; the defective gene may be inherited from either side of the family. There is a 50% probability of incidence among offspring.

Congenital Muscular Dystrophy. In this less familiar form of muscular dystrophy, the most progressive and active phase of muscle degeneration takes place during the fetal period, and the disease is already manifest at birth. Its essential features include hypononia, muscle weakness, and contractures – all present at birth – and some functional improvement during childhood, with little or no progression thereafter. The pattern of inheritance is probably autosomal recessive.

Ophthalmoplegic Muscular Dystrophy. Ophthalmoplegic muscular dystrophy usually becomes manifest in adulthood. Extraocular muscles are involved initially and the muscles used in swallowing tend to become affected. Typical facial appearance especially drooping of the upper eyelids, resembles that found in myasthenia gravis. The inheritance pattern often follows an autosomal dominant pattern; however, occasional sporadic cases and cases with autosomal recessive inheritance have also been described.

Distal Muscular Dystrophy. The chief distinguishing characteristic of distal muscular dystrophy is the iniital and primary involvement of the small muscles of the extremities. The resulting impairment is frequently confused with Charcot-Marie-Tooth disease, a disorder of peripheral nerve. Distal muscular dystrophy is the rarest subgroup of the dystrophies. In Sweden, however, its incidence is comparatively high and as yet unexplained. The pattern of inheritance is autosomal dominant.

THE MUSCULAR DYSTROPHY ASSOCIATION: ITS PURPOSE AND PROGRAM

The Muscular Dystrophy Association (MDA) fights 40 neuromuscular diseases through an unparalleled worldwide research effort, a nationwide program of free medical services, and far-reaching professional and public education. Individual grants to investigators in the United States and abroad now number over 700. At ten university-based research/clinical centers supported by the MDA, teams of scientists are conducting interdisciplinary investigations into the complex problems of neuromuscular disease. The MDA's patient service program furnishes free comprehensive medical services to children and adults with and through the Association's chapters. The MDA's programs are funded almost entirely by the voluntary contributions of concerned individuals and cooperating organizations.

THE NATIONAL THEATRE OF THE DEAF*

The National Theatre of the Deaf (NTD) was founded at the Eugene O'Neill Theater Center, Waterford, Connecticut, in 1967. David Hays was the founding project director. The purpose of the NTD was and is the creation of a new theater form based on visual language. The company is fully professional. Its actors, technicians, and administrators are employed year-round in the production and perfomance of its works. The company tours the continental United States twice each year and tours abroad almost every spring or summer. The NTD's travels have included touring America 21 times, touring Europe and the Near East 15 times, and touring Austrailia twice and Canada once. Future plans include an extensive tour of Western Europe and a tour of Alaska, Hawaii, and Japan.

In addition to live stage performances, the NTD has been active in television, having done specials for NBC, CBS and PBS, as well as for Dutch and Danish television. Their most noted TV specials have been "Experiments in Television," "A Child's Christmas in Wales," and "Who Knows One." Major stage productions include "The Three Musketeers," "Four Saints in Three Acts," "The Dybbuk," "Gilgamesh," "Songs from Milkwood," "The Misadventures of Candide," "On the Harmfulness of Tobacco," "My Third Eye," and "The Love of Don Perlimplin and Belissa in the Garden."

The NTD is composed of hearing as well as deaf actors. All the actors use visual language; the hearing actors also speak (as do some of the deaf actors). The hearing actors are not used primarily as narrators or interpreters; they are fully integrated into the action of the play, speaking and signing their own parts as well as speaking for their deaf colleagues. During an NTD performance, you not only see everything that is said, you also hear everything that is shown. The performances are designed for regular theater audiences. The NTD is a theater of the deaf, not only for the deaf. Fully 85% of the NTD's audience is hearing.

THE LITTLE THEATRE OF THE DEAF

The NTD, usually consisting of 10 to 16 actors, is divided into two smaller production units to form the Little Theatre of the Deaf (LTD). Each Little Theatre develops its own repertoire and presents an hour-long performance designed for young people. Each little company tours independently, ordinarily playing a city or a town for five or six consecutive days, performing twice a day in schools throughout the area. During the spring, Little Theatre performances can be held in conjunction with NTD performances. The LTD has toured all over the world, and adults as well as children are enchanted by the performances. The LTD is also active in television, most notably on "Sesame Street." Complementary activities of the LTD include workshops and storytelling. Services of the LTD can be arranged through the NTD Tour Director.

THE PROFESSIONAL SCHOOL FOR DEAF THEATRE PERSONNEL

Each summer the NTD conducts a four-to six-week program on the grounds of the O'Neill Theater Center in Waterford, Connecticut. The people attending the school are deaf, with few exceptions made usually for theater-trained hearing people who are working with the deaf community. Fluency in sign language is usually required. A broad spectrum of courses in theater arts is offered each summer. The purpose of the school is threefold: (1) To offer solid theater training to deaf people who will return to their own towns equipped as resource persons for local deaf communities; (2) to begin the training required for the students with the aspiration and potential necessary for becoming an actor with the NTD; and (3) to enhance and extend the skills for the NTD professional acting company. Applications can be obtained from the NTD Professional School Director.

THE ANNUAL DEAF PLAYWRIGHTS' CONFERENCE

Running concurrently with the Professional School for Deaf Theatre Personnel, the Deaf Playwrights' Conference offers promising playwrights an informal working atmosphere in which to rewrite their plays. Each playwright takes relevant courses in the Professional School and develops his or her plays with the aid of the NTD actors, the school population, the O'Neill Theater Center staff, and special critique teams.

Applications can be obtained from the Deaf Playwrights' Conference Coordinator.

DEAF ACTORS' REFERRAL AND ADVOCACY SERVICES

Deaf actors and theater personnel can register their resumes and portfolios with the Advocate's Referral Service, which acts as a liaison for prefessional opportunities in theater, television, film, arts councils, school programs, etc. Job releases are sent regularly to those registered, and new work is developed. Consultation on professional representation and information on support and legal services are available.

ORGANIZATIONS FOR PARENTS OF DEAF CHILDREN

Information about the International Parents' Organization for Families of Hearing-Impaired Children and a listing of its members, organizations for parents of deaf children, appear under this heading.

INTERNATIONAL PARENTS' ORGANIZATION FOR FAMILIES OF HEARING-IMPAIRED CHILDREN*

What is IPO?

IPO is the parents' section of the Alexander Graham Bell Association for the Deaf. Group membership in IPO includes a group membership in the Alexander Graham Bell Association.

IPO is primarily an association of affiliated local parent groups. Any organized group of parents, teachers, or others concerned with hearing-impaired children can affiliate if its members support the objectives of the Bell Association. Parents living in an area where there is no IPO group can request to be considered as individual members of IPO.

IPO was founded in 1957 at the request of parents and other persons interested in working for hearing-impaired children through the Bell Association. The Bell Association is an internationally known information center and vigorous advocate or oral/auditory education for hearing-impaired children.

The Goals of IPO

1. Provide parents and the public with information concerning hearing impairment and hearing conservation.
2. Encourage the use of residual hearing in the development of "listening skills" and speech and language proficiency of the hearing impaired, through appropriate use of amplification.
3. Develop other sensory modalities effectively and efficiently in meeting the individual needs of the hearing impaired.
4. Improve educational, professional, and vocational opportunities for the hearing impaired.
5. Preserve "parents' rights" by advocating educational options.
6. Utilize the "least restrictive environment" (home, school, and society) in helping the hearing impaired attain personal, educational, social, professional, and vocational competence.
7. Promote equal educational and social rights for hearing-impaired children.
8. Inform parents, audiologists, doctors, educators, legislators, and all publics of the benefits of auditory-oral education.
9. Promote parental and professional accountability in the education of hearing-impaired children.
10. Develop parent leadership by working with parents, educational systems, school boards, university teacher education programs, and legislative bodies in promoting excellence in social, educational, career, and vocational programs for the hearing impaired.
11. Promote a coalition of diverse groups in obtaining maximum educational and social benefits for the hearing impaired.

Why Join IPO?

The International Parents' Organization enables parents of hearing-impaired children to speak with unified strength, as parents of other handicapped youngsters have been doing for years. Through its central office in Washington, DC, IPO serves as a clearinghouse for the exchange of ideas, coordinates the efforts of parents with those of professionals who deal with hearing-impaired children, and spearheads action in such areas of national interest and concern as parent surveys, scholarships, public information projects, and legislative action.

IPO not only assists groups of parents to organize and function locally, but also arranges special sessions for parents at regional and national meetings of the Alexander Graham Bell Association. In this way, parents exchange ideas and experiences and learn of new training techniques and resources from the professionals who meet with them.

*Permission to reproduce granted by the International Parents' Organization, a section of the Alexander Graham Bell Association for the Deaf.

A primary concern of all IPO-affiliated groups is continuing parent and public education regarding the necessity of early diagnosis, auditory training, and language and speech training for hearing-impaired child. Through its support of local groups, IPO offers to the parents of hearing-impaired children the opportunity to participate in concentrated and coordinated efforts that are of both immediate and ultimate benefit to their own child, themselves, and hearing-impaired children throughout the world.

PARKINSON'S DISEASE

Information about Parkinson's disease is given below. For additional information, contact either of the two associations at the addresses provided.

FACTS ABOUT PARKINSON'S DISEASE*

Parkinson's disease is a chronic, progressive, degenerative disorder of the central nervous system, named after the English physician who first described it in an essay published in 1817. There are probably three-quarters of a million patients in North America, the vast majority of them over age 45. Since the disease develops slowly in a most subtle manner, it is often difficult to make a correct diagnosis early in the course of the disorder. The disease may occur and remain dormant until a period of particular stress or simple physical deterioration through aging causes the appearance of symptoms.

Four separate groups of symptoms can be described; tremor, rigidity, akinesia, and loss of normal postural reflexes. The tremor, of hand, foot, head, and/or jaw, is less evident during purposeful activity than during rest, and characteristically absent during sleep. Psychological factors may increase tremor. Rigidity is often an early symptom, with the patient's first complaints being stiffness or tightness as well as slowness of movement. Akinesia (also called bradykinesia) refers to slowness in the initiation and execution of voluntary movements, such as rising from a low, soft chair or from bed. Loss of postural reflexes may be evidenced by the patient's head falling forward as though he or she were sleepy, or a difficulty in maintaining an upright position. Any of these symptoms may range from mild to severe in a particular patient. Once diagnosis is definite, drug history should be reviewed since some phenothiazines, haloperidol, and reserpine have been known to produce parkinsonism.

A large number of drugs are useful in the treatment of parkinsonism; that is, the treatment of the symptoms, since the disease cannot as yet be cured. Different patients will respond to different drugs or combinations of drugs, and the same patient may respond differently at different times during the course of the disease. In general, it is best that the patient use as few drugs as possible rather than having to take a number of drugs to counteract the bad effects of the initial agent. Levodopa (also known as L-dopa), either by itself or in combination with carbidopa, is today considered the treatment of choice, often prescribed along with other medications, and always accompanied by regular physical activity to the extent of the individual patient's ability. Medication may have limited effect unless the patient cooperates through a daily physical therapy routine. Side effects, which can occur with overdoses of any drug, must be treated individually, and will often be alleviated through a reduction in dosage. Surgical procedures, once frequently employed, have little effect on the natural course of the disease, and today are usually not considered until medication therapy has beed exhausted.

It should be noted that while levodopa and the many other anti-parkinson medications developed in the last 15 to 20 years are a definite improvement over the treatments of the distant past, they, too, are merely useful in controlling disease symptoms, and do not prevent the disease from progressing. Continuing neurological research will be necessary until a prevention and a cure can be found.

PHYSIATRISTS

Under this heading is a description of the Association of Academic Physiatrists, along with a list of its members.

ASSOCIATION OF ACADEMIC PHYSIATRISTS*

The Association of Academic Physiatrists (AAP) was founded in 1967 to serve as the national organization of physiatrists who are affiliated with medical schools. It is affiliated with the Association of American Medical Colleges.

Physiatrists are physicians who specialize in physical medicine and rehabilitation, a medical specialty that deals with the evaluation and treatment of patients whose functional abilities have been impaired. The disabilities and impairments may result from diseases such as strokes, neuromuscular disorders, musculoskeletal disorders, cardiopulmonary disease, arthritis, peripheral vascular disease, and cerebral palsy. The physiatrists, by medical treatment and by organizing and integrating a program of physical therapy, occupational therapy, speech therapy, and psychological, social, nursing, and vocational services, can improve function capabilities.

The objectives of the Association are to promote the advancement of teaching and research of physical medicine within the area of academic medicine. The organization acts as a sounding board and forum for the exchange of ideas and information relative to all phases of the teaching of the art and science of physical medicine and rehabilitation. It promotes the dissemination of information to future young physicians who will be practicing this art and science for the benefit of the public health and welfare of this nation. The organization further becomes involved in the exchange of information from other areas of the field of medicine both in basic science and in clinical areas of teaching and research.

The Association's bylaws require the prospective member to be a qualified practicing physician, a diplomat of the American Board of Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation, and certified as having teaching responsibilities in the field of physical medicine and rehabilitation in an academic setting.

COMMISSION ON ACCREDITATION OF REHABILITATION FACILITIES*

What is the Commission on Accreditation of Rehabilitation Facilities (CARF)?

The Commission on Accreditation of Rehabilitation Facilities is a private, non-profit organization established by and for the field of rehabilitation to adopt and apply standards in facilities throughout the Nation.

For nearly ten years prior to CARF's formation in 1966, two national organizations representing rehabilitation facilities had been engaged in developing standards for organizations in their respective membership. Once these separate sets of standards were developed, the next questions became, "What can be done with them?" and "How can they be used by the field of rehabilitation?" At this point, in 1966, the two organizations, the Association of Rehabilitation Centers (ARC) and the National Association of Sheltered Workshops and Homebound Programs (NASWHP) agreed to pool their interests in standards by forming CARF.

The Commission was seen by people in these organizations as a means of unifying the standards that had been developed and applying these standards to improve the quality of services being provided in rehabilitation facilities. It was also seen as a means of informing the public that accredited rehabilitation facilities had earned this recognition through their provision of consistently high quality services to handicapped persons as assessed by a competent, independent, voluntary authority.

The Commission's corporate sponsoring member organizations have grown over the years to six national organizations involved in rehabilitation. These sponsoring members, which effectively provide a broad base of representation of the various segments and points of view in rehabilitation are the American Hospital Association, the Association of Rehabilitation Facilities, the Goodwill Industries of America, Inc., the National Association of Hearing and Speech Action, the National Easter Seal Society for Crippled Children and Adults, and the National Rehabilitation Association. The Board of Trustees of the Commission on Accreditation of Rehabilitation Facilities is composed of two representatives of each of these Corporate Members, plus At-Large Members appointed by the Board.

It is the firm belief of the organizations supporting CARF that the independent and voluntary character of the accreditation program is its chief strength; promising continuity, lack of bias, and an unconditionally professional approach to the preservation and improvement of quality.

What is the Purpose of the Commission?

As summarized from its bylaws, the purposes of CARF are:

1. To upgrade the rehabilitation facility movement and improve the quality of services provided to handicapped and disabled people.
2. Through accreditation, to offer to the general public and providers, purchasers, and recipients of rehabilitation facility services a single means of identifying throughout the nation those facilities in terms of concepts and services which are rehabilitative in nature and competent in performance.

3. To develop and maintain relevant standards that can be used by rehabilitation facilities in order to measure their level of performance and strengthen their program.
4. To provide through the accreditation process an independent, impartial, and objective system by which rehabilitation facilities can have the benefit of a total organizational review.
5. To offer to the facility, the community and consumers a mechanism of program accountability, and assurance of a continuing high level of performance.
6. To feed back information to the facility movement based upon aggregate findings obtained in site surveys in order to share basic data on common strengths and weaknesses of facility operations.
7. To provide an organized forum through which all involved in rehabilitation can participate in standard-setting and program improvement.

The Standards

The Standards Manual for Rehabilitation Facilities is the basic resource document of the Commission and is the result of years of operational research and participation from every sector of the rehabilitation movement.

The Commission recognizes and accepts its responsibility to assess and review the continuing applicability and relevance of its standards. Revisions are made and published periodically resulting from recommendations from a variety of sources including individuals, organized representatives of facilities, consumers, purchasers, and users of rehabilitation services. In addition, in order to ensure that each section of the standards is systematically reviewed, the Commission each year convenes a national advisory committee. Composed of different individuals with acknowledged expertise, these committees make recommendations to the Commission concerning the adequacy of the standards.

Standards have been developed for all aspects of a rehabilitation facility's operation. They serve as a set of guidelines representing the best thinking of those in the rehabilitation facility movement. The standards are acknowledged to be an excellent management tool and a blueprint for facility planning. In the winter of an even-numbered year, the Commission publishes a major edition of the Standards Manual. In the winter of the next year, the Supplement is published and automatically distributed at no charge to holders of the major edition. The current charge for the major edition is listed on the Commission's Publication Order Form, which may be obtained from the CARF office. A holder of the Standards Manual also receives the CARF REPORT and the List of Accredited Facilities.

How Does the Accreditation Process Work?

Details about how the process works are described in the Standards Manual. In summary, however, the first step is for the facility to find out about the standards utilized by CARF. This can be accomplished by contacting the Commission headquarters in Tucson, Arizona. The facility staff then begins a process of performance evaluation – that is, comparing the actual practice of the facility to the standards contained in the Standards Manual. Once the facility satisfies itself that it substantially meets the standards, it voluntarily makes application for accreditation from the Commission. Typically about 90 days after receipt of the application form, a site survey of the facility is conducted.

The site survey is conducted by recognized experts in various facets of the total field of rehabilitation who are knowledgeable in facility operations. Surveyors are selected based upon their familiarity with the particular type of program(s) operated by the facility requesting accreditation. The site survey team spends approximately one and one-half days in the facility applying the standards and making a determination of the specific strengths and weaknesses of the facility and its program with respect to the standards. A detailed survey report is then prepared. The report goes to the CARF Board of Trustees, which makes the final accreditation decision. The facility is then notified of the accreditation action taken by the Board and receives a written report which both acknowledges its strengths and presents specific recommendations for strengthening and improving its program. A facility awarded accreditation receives a Certificate of Accreditation, suitable for framing, and its name is placed on the nationally-distributed List of Accredited Facilities. In addition, facilities attaining this status are eligible to note on their stationery, annual report, grant proposals, etc., that their program is accredited by the Commission on Accreditation of Rehabilitation Facilities.

By voluntarily requesting a site visit and accreditation survey by CARF, the applicant facility obtains individualized consultation and an unprejudiced evaluation of its programs, services, and records by a highly trained and experienced survey consultation team. In addition, the process of assessing quality through the facility's own self-evaluation serves the public interest by demonstrating the facility's ability and sincere desire to provide a consistently high level of services.

All information gathered in the accreditation process is held in the strictest confidence.

What are the Accreditation Outcomes?

A facility can be accredited for three years or one year, depending upon its level of conformance with the standards. The Commission has also developed procedures to deal with instances in which a facility is found to have critical problems precluding its accreditation. When this occurs, the Commission makes no decision on accreditation until after the facility is presented with recommendations to overcome these problems and is granted a period of up to one year to take corrective action. While accreditation can only be awarded to a facility that basically meets the standards, and the "no-decision" approach can assist some facilities to attain an accreditable level of performance, the decision to non-accredit is made when a facility is found to be unwilling or unable to make necessary improvements.

What Kinds of Rehabilitation Facilities are Surveyed and Accredited by CARF?

The Commission on Accreditation of Rehabilitation Facilities has standards for programs in rehabilitation facilities in physical restoration, personal and social adjustment, vocational development, sheltered employment, speech pathology, audiology, and work activity. The facility to be surveyed identifies the program or programs it has in its own facility. The settings of programs which the Commission surveys and accredits include both freestanding facilities and rehabilitation programs operated as units of larger institutions such as hospitals, medical centers, etc., and private non-profit, proprietary, and public agency-operated facility programs.

What Does CARF Do to Assist Facilities to Prepare for the Site Survey?

When a facility applies for site survey, it automatically receives, at no charge, a Self-Study Questionnaire. This questionnaire contains a series of questions, based on the standards, which can help the staff in the facility make its own assessment of specific actions that need to be taken by the facility prior to CARF's site survey.

In addition, CARF staff is available to conduct one and one-half-day seminars, called Performance Evaluation and Accreditation Institutes, for representatives of a group of up to 15 facilities. In these Institutes, participants become thoroughly familiar with the nature of the standards, how the standards can be used in the day-to-day operation of the facility, and what to expect in the site survey and accreditation process.

Why Should a Facility be Accredited by CARF?

The reasons fall into three areas: benefits in preparing for the survey; benefits in the site survey-consultation process; and benefits in accredited status itself.

1. Preparation for Site Survey. In order to prepare for the site survey by CARF, the facility staff and governing body members must undertake what amounts to an organized program of performance evaluation. In the process of reviewing performance, it is often most difficult to make a determination of the questions which must be answered in order to identify the strengths and weaknesses of the program. The CARF Standards Manual provides an excellent tool for use in this regard, in that the standards provide the questions.

2. The Survey-Consultation Process. The site survey team, in effect, holds up a mirror for the facility to look at itself from a slightly different perspective. Team members have acknowledged expertise in the facility's service program and its administration. In interpreting the standards in the facility, this team is thus in a position to serve as a valuable resource for the facility's staff. Their findings are documented in a detailed report with specific, attainable recommendations for priority setting in program upgrading. The best evidence of the value of the site survey-consultation program is obtained by talking with the director of a facility that has already been surveyed by CARF.

3. Accredited Status. Being accredited is a concrete way in which a facility can respond to the accountability issue and can demonstrate to its public its interest and concern for continually improving the services it provides. Accreditation is also a way in which the facility can point to the fact that it meets nationally adopted and accepted standards for high-quality services. Accreditation has also been said by facility directors to be of tremendous assistance in obtaining community dollars to support expansion and improvement. Accreditation by a nationally recognized body is becoming a hallmark that is looked for by third-party purchasers of rehabilitation services such as state agencies and insurance carriers.

In short, whether a facility decides to seek accreditation is largely a matter of priorities. Accreditation is an accepted fact in many fields. In our own field, as a matter of course, we budget in advance for an annual audit of our fiscal operation. The CARF standards and accreditation program offer an opportunity for an "audit" of the total facility, including the services, personnel, recordkeeping, and physical facility.

restorative services to upgrade physical function and enable the person to achieve a better social adjustment, or to obtain employment.

SA = Social Adjustment Programs. A primary emphasis of the facility's program is social adjustment, supported by appropriate medical and vocational and/or speech pathology and audiology services. For example: The primary objective of the program is to apply psychological and social services to resolve the person's problems in social living and enable him or her to improve in social adjustment, or to obtain employment.

VD = Vocational Development Programs. A primary emphasis of the facility's program is vocational development, supported by appropriate medical, social adjustment services, and speech pathology and/or audiology services. For example: The primary objective of the program is to apply vocational services, including training, transitional, or interim employment, to resolve the problem of unemployment and to enable the person to obtain competitive employment or further education training leading to employment.

SE = Sheltered Employment Programs. A primary emphasis of the facility's program is the provision of sheltered employment within the facility. For example: The primary objective of the program is to provide remunerative employment for an indefinite period of time to individuals who cannot meet the standards of the competitive labor market. Some individuals, however, may develop sufficient productive skill and adjustment that would enable them to move out of the facility into the competitive labor market. Rehabilitation services play a supportive role to successful employment in the facility.

WA = Work Activity Programs. A primary emphasis of the facility is work activity, supported by appropriate vocational, social, and personal adjustment services. For example: The primary objective of the program is the provision of therapeutic activities, including work for handicapped persons whose physical or mental impairment is so severe as to make their productive capacity inconsequential.

SP = Speech Pathology Programs. A primary emphasis of the facility's program is speech pathology, supported by appropriate audiological, medical, social and/or vocational development services. For example: The primary objective of the program is to apply speech evaluation and therapy and other restorative services to enhance communication skills.

AU = Audiology Programs. A primary emphasis of the facility's program is audiology, supported by appropriate speech pathology, medical, social and/or vocational development services. For example: The primary objective of the program is to apply audiological evaluation and treatment and other restorative services to enhance communications skills.

SUMMARY OF SERVICES AVAILABLE ON 500 CAMPUSES FOR STUDENTS WITH HANDICAPPED CONDITIONS

This listing consists of summarized information about the services and policies of 500 colleges. The summary was designed to show only the basic services and policies, not to be a comprehensive review of campus features.

This summary can be used in a number of ways. It can stand alone as a useful overview of key aspects of a college. It can be used to help the user to identify the schools that seem to meet basic requirements in terms of services. For readers interested in, for example, those schools seeming to offer the most support for blind persons, it is possible to glance through the summary at the columns identifying services specifically for blind students. The summary tables are the most efficient way to tell which colleges have certain basic services.

The summary tables are divided into four parts, according to the population served:

1. General Services for Students with All Types of Disabilities
2. Services for Blind or Visually-Impaired Students
3. Services for Deaf or Hearing-Impaired Students
4. Services for Mobility-Impaired Students

When a college indicated that it currently had a particular service, this is indicated with an "X"; a "P" indicates that the service is planned. A blank means no service is available specifically oriented toward students with disabilities. The college may well have the service for all students.

General Services for Students with All Types of Disabilities

In this section, it is indicated if a college has the following services, which are available to students with all types of disabilities.

- A Disabled Students Organization.
- A Disabled Students Office.
- Financial aid services specifically oriented toward the needs of students with disabilities.
- Career development services specifically oriented toward students with disabilities.
- Policy flexibility with respect to relocation of classes and making special testing arrangements for disabled students (these are indicated with a "C" and/or a "T," respectively).

Services for Blind or Visually-Impaired Students

In this section, it is indicated if a college has the following services for blind or visually-impaired students.

- Readers.
- Braille/tape resources, including a braille library and/or a tape library and/or the ability to either tape materials for students or to obtain taped materials and/or braille machines and/or other devices or materials such as Optacon equipment or large-type books. In general, this indicates if a school makes provisions for assisting blind or visually-impaired students in obtaining needed materials.
- Mobility orientation, which could include either raised or auditory maps of the campus and/or mobility orientation sessions for incoming blind students.
- Whether guide dogs are allowed in classrooms and residences on campus.

Services for Deaf or Hearing-Impaired Students

In this section, it is indicated if a college has the following services for deaf or hearing-impaired students.

- Interpreters available for classroom and/or non-classroom activities, either directly through the school or arranged with assistance by the school.
- Notetaking services provided through the school. As is indicated below, this service can be beneficial for other students who have upper extremity limitations, not only for deaf or hearing-impaired students.
- Other services for deaf students, including the availability of teletypewriters and/or amplified telephones and/or closed-circuit television and/or videotape facilities and/or captioned films.

SOCIAL SECURITY AND SUPPLEMENTAL SECURITY INCOME

Included under this heading is information about social security and supplemental security income – two sources of financial aid for certain handicapped individuals. Social security is discussed first. The article titled "If You Become Disabled" serves as an overview, and information on disability benefits for blind people and for people disabled before age 22 follows. Then supplemental security income (SSI) information appears. SSI for the blind is discussed, as is SSI for disabled or blind children and SSI for retarded people.

SOCIAL SECURITY

If You Become Disabled

Social Security: The Basic Idea. Nine out of ten working people in the United States are now building protection for themselves and their families under the social security program.

Over the years, changes in the social security law have made significant and far-reaching improvements in your social security protection – improvements for people now getting checks and for those who will be elegible in the future.

Future cash benefits will reflect changes in wage levels over a person's working lifetime. Once a person is on the rolls, benefits will keep their value since they will automatically increase to keep pace with rises in the cost of living.

The basic idea of social security is a simple one: During working years, employees, their employers, and self-employed people pay social security contributions. This money is used only to pay benefits to the more than 34 million people getting benefits and to pay administrative costs of the program. Then, when today's workers' earnings stop or are reduced because of retirement, death, or disability, benefits will be paid to them from contributions by people in covered employment and self-employment at that time. These benefits are intended to replace part of the earnings the family has lost.

Part of the contributions go to provide hospital insurance benefits under Medicare for people 65 and over. Also, disabled people under 65 who have been entitled to social security disability payments for two consecutive years or more are entitled to Medicare hospital insurance. Medicare medical insurance, which helps pay for doctors' bills and a number of other medical items and services, is available to those eligible people who want it and pay a monthly premium.

Disability Benefits Under Social Security. The risk of disability hangs over all of us. When disability occurs, it may affect a family's financial security more than the retirement or even the death of a worker.

Disabled people who get monthly benefits come from all walks of life – the 40-year-old salesman who has had a heart attack; the 23-year-old secretary sidelined for more than a year by an auto accident; the 53-year-old widow who is crippled with advanced arthritis; the retired or disabled worker's 32-year-old son who has been mentally retarded from birth.

Each person who applies for disability benefits is considered for services by the vocational rehabilitation agency in his or her state.

This booklet tells you what you need to know about the social security disability provisions – how they affect you and your family, now or in the future.

Who Can Get Benefits Because of Disability? The social security program provides disability protection in different situations. Monthly benefits can be paid to:

- Disabled workers under 65 and their families.
- Persons disabled before 22 who continue to be disabled. These benefits are payable as early as 18 when a parent (or grandparent under certain circumstances) receives social security retirement or disability benefits or when an insured parent dies.
- Disabled widows and widowers, and (under certain conditions) disabled surviving divorced wives of workers who were insured at death. These benefits are payable as early as 50.
- A disabled person is elegible for Medicare after being entiled to disability payments for 24 consecutive months.

Application for Benefits Needed. An application for disability benefits must be complete before any payments can be made. For disabled persons unable to handle their own affairs, the application may be made by his or her spouse, parent, or other relative or friend, or by the person's legal guardian.

A Disabled Worker Needs Some Work Credits. If you are a worker and become severely disabled, you will be eligible for monthly benefits if you have worked under social security long enough and recently enough. The amount of work you will need depends on your age when you become disabled:

- Before 24: You need credit for 1½ years of work in the last 3-year period ending when your disability begins.
- 24 through 30: You need credit for having worked half the time between 21 and the time you become disabled.
- 31 or older: All workers disabled at 31 or older – except the blind – need the amount of credit shown in the chart below.

Work Credit for Disability Benefits

Born after 1929, became disabled at age	Born before 1930, became disabled before age 62 in	Years of work credit needed
42 or younger	1971	5
44	1973	5½
46	1975	6
48	1977	6½
50	1979	7
51	1980	7¼
52	1981	7½
54	1983	8
56	1985	8
58	1987	9
60	1989	9½
62 or older	1991 or later	10

And 5 years of this credit must have been earned in the 10 years ending when they became disabled. The years need not be continuous or in units of full years.

- Persons previously entitled to disability benefits: The period in which they were disabled is not counted in figuring the amount or recentness of work needed to be eligible for benefits.

If you are disabled by blindness, you do not have to meet this requirement of recently covered work but do need credit for one-quarter year of work for each year 1950, or the year you reached 21 if later, up to the year you became blind. A minimum of one and one-half years of credit is needed.

When is a Worker Disabled? To be considered disabled under the social security law, you must have a physical or mental condition which:

- Prevents you from doing any substantial gainful work, and
- Is expected to last (or has lasted) for at least 12 months, or is expected to result in death.

If you meet these conditions, you may be able to get payments even if your recovery from the disability is expected.

The medical evidence from your physician or other sources will show the severity of your condition and the extent to which it prevents you from doing substantial gainful work. Your age, education, training, and work experience also may be considered in deciding whether you are able to work.

If you can't do your regular work but can do other substantial gainful work, you will not be considered disabled. (For an exception involving blind workers, see below.)

Special Provisions for Blind People. A person whose vision is no better than 20/200 even with glasses, or who has a limited visual field of 20 degrees or less, is considered "blind" under the social security law.

If you meet this test of blindness and have worked long enough under social security, you are eligible for a disability "freeze" even if you are acutally working. This means that your future benefits, which are figured from your average earnings, will not be reduced because you have low earnings or no earnings in those years in which you were disabled.

If you are 55 to 65, meet this test of blindness, and have worked long enough under social security, you can get cash disability benefits if you are unable to perform work requiring skills or abilities comparable to those required by the work you did regularly before you reached 55 or became blind, whichever is later. Benefits will not be paid, however, for any month in which you actually perform substantial gainful work.

People disabled because of blindness have a special measure of "substantial gainful activity." A person getting benefits because of blindness is considered to be engaging in substantial gainful activity if his or her earnings exceed $417 a month in 1980. In 1979 the monthly limit was $375. The monthly measure will be higher in future years.

Dependents of Disabled Workers. While you are receiving benefits as a disabled worker, payments can also be made to certain members of your family. These family members include:

- Your unmarried children under 18.
- Your children 18 to 22 if they are unmarried and attending school full time.
- Your unmarried children 18 or older who were disabled before reaching 22 and continue to be disabled. (Note: Stepchildren, adopted children, and, in certain circumstances, grandchildren also may qualify for benefits on your record.)

- Your wife at any age if she has in her care a child who is under 18 or disabled and who is getting benefits based on your social security record.
- Your wife 62 or older even if there are no children entitled to benefits.
- Your husband 62 or older.

A child may be eligible on a grandparent's social security record only if the child's parents are disabled or deceased and the child was living with and dependent upon the grandparent at the time the grandparent qualified for benefits.

If You Also Receive Worker's Compensation. If you are a disabled worker under 62 and are entitled to both social security disability benefits and worker's compensation, the total monthly payments to you and your family may not exceed 80% of your average monthly earnings before you became disabled.

Your full earnings, including any amounts above the maximum creditable for social security, may be considered when your average earnings are figured for this purpose. Social security benefits must be reduced if combined benefits from social security and worker's compensation would otherwise be over this limit.

People Disabled Before Age 22. If you have an unmarried son or daughter 18 or older who became disabled before 22 and is still disabled, he or she may start receiving disability benefits when you start getting social security retirement or disability benefits, or at your death if you had enough social security work credits for the payment of benefits to your survivors.

A person disabled before 22 needs no social security work credits to get benefits. The payments, based on the earnings of a parent, may continue for as long as he or she is disabled and the parent's eligibility continues. The decision whether a person has been disabled since childhood is made is the same way as the decision whether a worker is disabled.

If a child with a severe medical condition is now receiving child's benefits that are scheduled to stop at age 18, the child or someone in the family should get in touch with the social security office a few months before the 18th birthday to see about continuing the benefits past 18 on the basis of disability.

If a disability first occurs between the ages of 18 and 22, an application should be filed at that time or later when benefits are payable on the social security work record of a parent.

The mother of a disabled son or daughter who is entitled to disability benefits may also qualify for benefits regardless of her age if she has the son or daughter in her care.

Disabled Widows or Widowers. If you are disabled and are the widow, widower, or (under certain circumstances) the surviving divorced wife of a worker who worked long enough under social security, you may be able to get monthly benefits as early as age 50. The benefits will be permanently reduced, with the amount of the reduction depending on the age at which benefits start. You need no work credits of your own to get benefits based on the earnings of your deceased spouse.

A widow or widower may be considered disabled only if she or he has an impairment that is so severe that it would ordinarily prevent a person from working and is expected to last at least 12 months. Vocational factors such as age, education, and previous work experience cannot be considered in deciding whether a widow or widower is disabled (as they may be for a disabled worker).

In general, you cannot get these benefits unless your disability starts before your spouse's death or within seven years after the death. However, if you receive benefits as a widow with children, you can be eligible if you become disabled before those payments end or within seven years after they end. (This seven-year period protects the widow until whe has a chance to earn enough work credits for disability protection on her own social security record.)

A disabled surviving divorced wife may get benefits based on the earnings of her former husband only if their marriage lasted 10 years or longer.

When Benefits are Payable. Benefits begin after a waiting period of five full calendar months. No benefits can be paid for these first five months of disability; therefore, the first payment is for the sixth full month. If you are disabled more than six full months before you apply, back benefits may be payable, but not before the sixth full month of disability. It is important to apply soon after the disability starts because back payments are limited to the 12 months preceding the month you apply.

If you have recovered from a disability that lasted 12 months or more but have not yet applied for benefits, you may still be eligible for some back payments. But if you wait longer than 14 months after you recover to apply, you will not be eligible for any back benefits.

An application for disability benefits can be filed after the death of a disabled worker. If the claim is approved, back payments may be made for some months preceding the death of the worker.

An application for the back payment must be filed within three months after the worker's death. In addition, survivors' benefits may be payable beginning with the month the worker died.

There is no five-month waiting period for people disabled before 22 who are entitled to benefits on a parent's work record. Benefits to a person disabled before 22 can begin with the month a parent's retirement or disability benefits start or the month an insured parent dies.

Your benefit payments may continue as long as you remain unable to work. In general, if someone marries while receiving benefits as a person disabled in childhood or as a disabled widow or widower, the benefits will stop. In some cases, however, they can be continued. You can get more information about these exceptions from your social security office.

Medicare for Disabled People. Certain disabled people under 65 are eligible for Medicare. They include disabled workers at any age, persons who became disabled before age 22, and disabled widows and widowers age 50 or over who have been entitled to disability checks for two consecutive years or more. Medicare protection ends when disability benefits end. If a person has another period of disability later on, Medicare coverage can be resumed after he or she has been entitled to disability checks for another two consecutive years. For more information, ask at any social security office for a copy of A Brief Explanation of Medicare.

Disability Benefits and Other Social Security Benefits. Benefits because of disability are not paid in addition to other monthly social security benefits. If you become entitled to more than one monthly benefit at the same time, the amount you receive will ordinarily be equal to the larger of the benefits.

If you become disabled after you start receiving social security benefits, it may be to your advantage to switch over to benefits based on disability. For instance, if you start receiving reduced retirement benefits at 62 and then become disabled at 63, your benefit may be higher if you change to disability payments.

If the benefit you were receiving before you became disabled was a reduced widow's or widower's benefit or a reduced retirement benefit, your disability benefits also will be reduced to take into account the number of months you received the other benefits.

Even with this reduction, however, your disability benefits may be higher than the benefits you were receiving.

The people in your social security office can give you the amounts of the different benefits in this situation.

Social Security Benefits and Government Pensions. Starting for people who applied in December 1977 and later, social security wives', husbands', widows', and widowers' benefits will be reduced on a dollar for dollar basis by the amount of any pension a person receives based on his or her government employment not covered by social security. This offset will not apply if the wife, husband, widow, or widower is now receiving or becomes eligible for such a pension by December 1982 and could qualify for social security benefits if the law was in effect, and was being administered, in January 1977 remained in effect. In January 1977, men had to prove they were dependent on their wives and the marriage of divorced women had to have lasted at least 20 years for them to be eligible for benefits.

Effect of Work on Benefit Payments. If you receive benefits as a disabled worker, an adult disabled since childhood, or a disabled widow or widower, you are not subject to the general rule under which some benefits are withheld if you have substantial earnings. There are special rules, which include medical considerations, for determining how any work you do might affect your disability payments.

If one of your dependents who is under 65 and who is not disabled works and earns more than $3,720 in 1980, some of the dependent's benefits may be withheld. In general, $1 in benefits is withheld for each $2 over $3,720. Different rules apply to your dependents who are 65 or over.

The amount a person can earn without having any benefits withheld will increase automatically in future years as the level of average wages rises.

The Disability Decision. When you apply for benefits because of disability, the social security office will send your claim to a disability determination services office in your state – usually associated with the vocational rehabilitation agency. There a decision will be made as to whether you are disabled under the law.

A team of trained people in the State agency – a physician and a disability evaluation specialist – will consider all the facts in your file. They will request medical evidence from your doctor or the hospital, clinic, or institution where you have been treated. If there is a charge for a medical report, you are responsible for it.

Additional medical information may be needed to determine whether you are disabled under the law. If this information is not available in the records of your family physician, you may be asked to undergo additional medical examinations and tests at Government expense.

On the medical report form, your doctor, hospital, institution, or agency is asked to give the medical history of your condition: What the doctors have found to be wrong with you, how severe it is, what the medical tests have shown, and what treatment you have received. They are not asked to decide whether or not you are "disabled" under the social security law.

Decisions of Other Agencies. The rules in the social security law for deciding whether a person is disabled are different from rules in some other Government and private disability programs. Some people receiving disability payments from another Government agency or from a private company may be found not eligible for social security disability benefits. However, the report of any examination made for another agency, as well as the decision, itself, may be considered in determining whether you are eligible under the social security program.

Examples of Disabling Conditions. Certain conditions which are ordinarily severe anough to be considered disabiling under the law are described in the Social Security Regulations. Copies of these regulations are available in any social security office. Below are some examples of disabling conditions listed in the regulations:

- Loss of major function of both arms, both legs, or a leg and an arm.
- Progressive diseases that have resulted in the loss of a leg or which have caused it to become useless.
- Severe arthritis that causes recurrent inflammation, pain, swelling, and deformity in major joints so that the ability to get about or use the hands has been severely limited.
- Diseases of heart, lung, or blood vessels that have resulted in serious loss of heart or lung reserve as shown by X-ray, electrocardiogram, or other tests; and, in spite of medical treatment, there is breathlessness, pain, or fatigue.
- Diseases of the digestive system that result in severe malnutrition, weakness, and anemia.
- Serious loss of function of the kidneys.
- Cancer that is progressive and has not been controlled or cured.
- Damage to the brain or a brain abnormality that has resulted in severe loss of judgement, intellect, orientation, or memory.
- Mental illness resulting in marked constriction of activities and interests, deterioration in personal habits, and seriously impaired ability to get along with other people.
- Total inability to speak.

In the case of workers and people disabled before 22, conditions less severe than those listed in the regulations can be considered disabling. This is because age, education, training, and work experience can also be taken into account for these applicants.

You Will be Notified of the Decision in Your Case. After you have submitted the evidence needed for the decision on your disability application, you do not have to do anything more. You will receive a notice from the Social Security Administration as soon as a decision has been reached in your case.

If Your Application is Denied. If you get a letter notifying you that you are not entitled to benefits, the letter will tell you the reason. The doctors and other experts who have studied your case may have found that your condition is not serious enough for you to be considered disabled under the law. Or the evidence may show that your condition is of a type that is not likely to continue for 12 months or more.

In some cases, a disabled worker's application under the disability provisions may be denied because he or she did not work long enough or recently enough.

A letter of denial for disability benefits does not mean that a decision has been made about your eligibility for any other type of social security benefits. It means only that you are not now eligible to receive social security disability benefits.

If your application is denied, you may, if you wish, present new evidence concerning your disability. Your social security office will be glad to see that any new evidence you may have is presented and that your case is reconsidered.

If you have no new evidence to offer but feel that the decision in your case is not correct, you still may ask your social security office to have your case reconsidered. If you believe that the results of this reconsideration are not correct, you may request a hearing before an administrative law judge of the Social Security Administration. There is no charge for reconsidering your claim or for a hearing.

Your social security office will help you get your claim reconsidered or request a hearing.

If you have received notice of the decision made by the administrative law judge and believe the decision is not correct, you may ask for a review by the Appeals Council of the Social Securtiy Administration in Washington, D.C.

If you believe the decision of the Appeals Council is not correct, you may take your case to the Federal Courts.

Vocational Rehabilitation and Special Employment Services. Whether or not you are found eligible to receive benefits because of disability, you may be offered help in improving your condition and in preparing for and finding work.

When you apply for social security disability benefits, you will be considered for vocational rehabilitation services by the State vocational rehabilitation agency. That agency provides counseling, training, and other services that you may need to help you get back to work. Information in your file is made available to help the people in that agency decide whether you can benefit from rehabilitation services and, if so, what kinds of services will be most useful to you.

Rehabilitation services generally are financed by State-Federal funds. In some cases, however, social security pays the costs of rehabilitating those receiving disability benefits. Rehabilitating beneficiaries is expected to save social security money because, in the long run, the cost should be less than the expense of paying them benefits.

You may also get employment counseling and special placement services from your State Employment Service.

People who become entitled to benefits because of disability will not be paid those benefits if, without good cause, they refuse counseling, training, or other services offered to them by their State vocational rehabilitation agencies.

If You Recover or Return to Work. If your claim for disability benefits is approved, you are required by law to let the Social Security Administration know if your condition improves or if you return to work no matter how little you earn. You may do this either by sending in the postcard form which will be given you for this purpose, by writing a letter, or by visiting or telephoning your social security office.

If at any time medical evidence shows that your condition has improved so much that you are no longer disabled, you will still receive benefits for a three-month period of adjustment. This period includes the month in which your condition improves and two additional months. Benefits will then be stopped.

Trial Work Period. If you are a disabled worker or a person disabled in childhood and you return to work in spite of a severe condition, your benefits may continue to be paid during a trial work period of up to nine months – not necessarily consecutive months. This will give you a chance to test your ability to work. If after nine months it is decided that you are able to do substantial gainful work, your benefits will be paid for an adjustment period of three additional months.

Thus, if you go to work in spite of your disability, you may continue to receive disability benefits for up to 12 months, even though the work is substantial gainful work. If it is decided that the work you are able to do is not substantial and gainful, you may continue to receive benefits. Of course, should your condition improve so that it becomes no longer disabling, your benefits would be stopped after a three-month adjustment period even though your trial work period might not be over.

A disabled widow or widower or disabled surviving divorced wife is not eligible for a trial work period. If she or he begins to do substantial gainful work, benefits will stop three months after the work begins.

If You Again Become Disabled. If you become disabled a second time within five years after your disabled worker's benefits were stopped because you returned to work or recovered (within seven years if you are a disabled widow or widower, disabled surviving divorced wife, or a person disabled before age 22 who received benefits on a parent's record), your benefits can begin with the first full month in which you are disabled. Another five-month waiting period is not required for disabled workers or disabled widows or widowers. You are not eligible for a trial work period.

If you reapply for benefits as a disabled worker, you will need to meet the disability work requirements at the time of your new application. Your previous period of disability would be disregarded in figuring the amount and recentness of work needed.

Supplemental Security Income. There also is a Federal program of supplemental security income which assures a minimum monthly income to people with limited income and resources who are 65 or older or blind or disabled. Eligibility is based on income and assets. Although the program is administered by the Social Security Administration, it is financed from general revenuew, not from social security contributions.

Your Social Security Office. To get infromation or to apply for monthly social security benefits or supplemental security income payments because of disability, get in touch with your social security office. If you are unabel to visit that office – because you are hospitalized or unable to leave home – a social security representative can come to see . Or you may telephone or write or have someone do it for you.

In dealing with the Social Security Administration, you have a right to be represented by a person of your choice at any stage of your claim.

You can find the address of the social security office by looking in the telephone directory under "Social Security Administration," or you may ask at your post office.

Disability Benefits for Blind People

Disability Benefits for Blind People. Over 120,000 people disabled by blindness, and their dependents, now receive monthly social security disability payments. Here are the answers to some questions that are frequently asked.

Who Can Get Disability Benefits? Social Security can pay monthly disability benefits to:

- Disabled workers under 65 and their dependents.
- People disabled before age 22 who continue to be disabled. These benefits are payable when a parent receives social security retirement or disability benefits or when an insured parent dies.
- Disabled widows, disabled widowers, and (under certain conditions) disabled surviving divorced wives of workers who were insured at death. These benefits are payable as early as 50.

What Does "Disability" Mean? For social security purposes, "disability" means the inability to work vecause of (1) a severe physical or mental impairment that has lasted (or is ixpected to last) at least 12 months or to result in death; or (2) "blindness." "Blindness" is defined in the social security law as either central visual acuity of 20/200 or less in the better eye with the use of corrective lenses or visual field reduction to 20 degrees or less.

Is There Any Rule About When a Blind Person Must Have Worked to Get Disability Benefits? Blind people must have worked long enough under social security to be insured. How much work depends on a person's age at the time the disability starts. The work can have been at any time after 1936.

People who get benefits as blind widows, blind widowers, or adults disabled before age 22 do not need to have worked under social security.

How About Workers Who Meet the Statutory Test of Blindness? What Special Consideration is Given? Several special provisions apply to a worker whose sight is poor enough to meet the statutory definition described earlier.

For example, a person who has worked long enough under social security is eligible for a disability "freeze" even if he or she is acutally working. This means that future benefits, which are figured from average earnings, will not be reduced because of low earnings or no earnings in some years because of disability.

Most blind workers can get monthly disability benefits only if they are unable to perform not only their usual job but also any "substantial gainful work" (see discussion of this later). There's a more liberal rule for blind workers 55 to 65 who are insured under social security: They can become entitled to benefits if they can't perform work requiring skills or abilities comparable to work they did regularly before 55 (or before they became blind, if later).

Under this provision, an older blind person can establish basic entitlement to disability benefits even though working. And as long as the current work is significantly different from earlier jobs, entitlement can be continued. If the present work is comparable to the person's previous regular job, and is otherwise substantial and gainful, payments cannot be made for the months he or she is working. When the work stops, benefits can be started or resumed without the individual having to file a new application.

Where Do I send a Person with a Severe Visual Impairment to Ask About Disability Benefits? Refer the person to a social security office. For people who cannot get there because they are in a hospital or are unable to leave home, a representative from the office can arrange to visit them.

When Can Payments Begin? Payments generally cannot begin until after a waiting period of five full months of disability. A son or daughter disabled before age 22 may be eligible for benefits as soon as one parent (or, in some cases, a grandparent) begins getting retirement or disability benefits or dies after working long enough under social security to be insured.

People who have been disabled for more than six months before they apply may get benefits for some months before the application was made. It is important to apply soon after the disability starts, however, because back payments are limited to the 12 months preceding the date of application.

Can Disabled People Get Medicare? People who have been entitled to social security checks because of disability for two or more consecutive years also have Medicare protection. They receive valuable help in paying costly hospital, doctor, and other medical bills. Medicare protection ends with the month after the month that a notice that disability benefits will end is sent.

If a second period of disability is established, Medicare protection will begin with the 25th consecutive month of entitlement ot disability benefits in the new period.

Suppose a Person Blinded in an Industrial Accident is Receiving Workers' Compensation Benefits and Becomes Eligible for Social Security Disability Benefits. Can the Person Get Both? Yes, but the total family benefits under both programs may not exceed 80% of the person's average monthly earnings before the onset of disability. This means the average of the person's full earnings, including any amounts above the maximum covered by social security. The social security benefit may be reduced whenever necessary to keep within this limitation. But the adjusted combined benefit will always be at least as much as the social security payments alone.

If a Worker Who Has Retired on Reduced Social Security Benefits Becomes Blind, Would it Pay to Switch to Disability Benefits? It might. The social security representative can explain this in detail.

Under What Circumstances do Disability Benefits Stop? Benefits are stopped if a beneficiary shows he or she is able to do substantial gainful work and is, therefore, no longer disabled within the meaning of the law. Also, benefits will stop if the beneficiary recovers medically and becomes able to work. Benefits to a dependent who marries generally stop. There are, however, some exceptions to this.

Suppose a Blind Beneficiary Tries to Work Again. How Does This Affect Benefits? It is difficult to predict whether any disabled person (including someone who is blind) will be able to continue working for any length of time. Therefore, the decision as to whether a beneficiary's work is substantial and gainful is usually put off until he or she has worked in at least nine separate months (not necessarily consecutive). Meanwhile, benefits continue.

This nine-month "trial work period" gives the beneficiary a chance to fully test his or her ability to work, confident that disability payments will continue without interruption during the work period.

(NOTE: The trial work period provisions apply to disabled workers and persons disabled in childhood, but not to disabled widows and widowers. Persons qualifying for benefits under the special provision for the blind who are 55 to 65 should ask at their social security office how work affects their status.)

Are Benefits Stopped at the End of the Trial Work Period? Only if the work shows the beneficiary has regained ability to do substantial gainful work despite the impairment. Even then, in most cases benefits are continued for three additional months inorder to help in the adjustment of becoming self-supporting again. (A beneficiary who is not working but recovers medically also gets benefits for three additional months.)

If the beneficiary is still unable to perform substantial gainful work at the end of a trial work period, benefits are continued.

What Facts are Considered in Deciding if a Blind Person's Work is Substantial and Gainful? All the pertinent facts are considered in making this decision. The amount of pay is perhaps the best gauge of how substantial the person's work is.

What if a Person's Average Monthly Pay Includes an Unearned Portion, Such as a Subsidy Added to Help Meet Living Expenses? The unearned portion is not counted in deciding if the person is doing substantial gainful work. All that counts is the pay earned through his or her own efforts. By the same token, if it is necessary for someone else to help with the job, consideration is given to the value of this help in figuring acutal earnings.

How is the Work of Beneficiaries Employed in Sheltered Workshops Evaluated? When the pay of a worker in a sheltered workshop is low, the work usually isn't considered to be substantial gainful work. It is not necessary to compare the person's work with that done by non-disabled people in the community. If the sheltered workshop pay is high, factors other than acutal earnings must be considered.

How is Work Activity Evaluated for a Person Who is Self-Employed? About the same way the work of a salaried person is evaluated. All the pertinent facts about the work are considered – skills and experience required, responsibilities, hours, productivity, and earnings.

Business income is influenced by economic conditions, the value of unpaid services of family members, etc. More emphasis is therefore placed on the extent of the activities performed in connection with the business and less placed on the amount of net earnings.

Suppose a Blind Beneficiary Who Returns to Work or Recovers Becomes Disabled Again and is Again Eligible for Benefits. Do Benefits Start, as Before, With the Sixth Month of Disability? If the person again becomes disabled within five years (seven years for widows and widowers and persons disabled before age 22), benefits can start again with the first full month of disability. The person does not have to go through a second "waiting period." Monthly benefits will start with the first full month of disability. Medicare protection, however, will not start until the 25th consecutive month of entitlement to benefits.

What is Done for a Blind Claimant in the Way of Rehabilitation? At the time a decision is made on a disability claim, the applicant is also considered for possible services by the State vocational rehabilitation agency. If the person is considered to have good rehabilitation potential, he or she may be offered services by the agency. Such services include counseling, teaching of new employment skills, and job placement. This services are generally financed from State-Federal appropriations.

Can a Person be Found Disabled Even if the Prospect for Rehabilitation is Good? Yes. The decision that a claimant is disabled is based on present capacity to work, rather than potential to work after receiving vocational rehabilitation services.

Social Security Benefits for People Disabled Before Age 22

Over one-third of a million Americans receive social security benefits because they have severe disabilities that began in childhood and that keep them handicapped as adults.

Many families with persons disabled since childhood are able to take care of the additional expense of caring for them. But when the family's regular income is reduced or stopped because of retirement, disability, or death, the burden sometimes becomes too great. When this happens, the social security benefits paid to the disabled person can often mean the difference between care at home and care in an institution.

Each month, millions of dollars in benefits help lighten the financial burden for these families. And there is the security of knowing that the benefits will continue to be paid, even if both parents should die.

Consider, for example, the case of Henry B. – 29 years old and severely mentally retarded – alone and helpless after the sudden death of his parents in an automobile accident. Henry's history, taken from the files of the Social Security Administration, tells how he came to get a new home.

Henry B. was the only handicapped child in a family of six children. He had been mentally retarded since birth and had always been entirely dependent on other people to care for him. At the time his parents died, he was the only child still living with them. One of his sisters wanted to take him into her home, but she and her husband couldn't afford the extra expense involved.

When the social security representative got in touch with this daughter about her father's social security, the representative explained that Henry might be eligible for disability benefits as a survivor of his father. Henry's sister applied on his behalf.

With the social security benefits, Henry's sister and her husband are able to take care of him in their home, where he is happy and does well.

More than 75% of childhood disability beneficiaries have some degree of mental deficiency; Henry's case is a typical one. Other prevalent conditions include cerebral palsy, schizophrenic disorders, and epilepsy.

Who is Eligible? When a person becomes entitled to retirement or disability benefits or dies after having worked under social security long enough for benefits to be payable, his or her children (including adopted children, stepchildren, and, in certain cases, grandchildren) may recieve monthly benefits. Normally, a child's payments stop at 18 (or 22 if attending school full time). However, a child's payments may continue indefinitely – or start at any age – if the child has a severe physical or mental impairment that began before 22 and that keeps the child from doing any substantial gainful work as an adult.

Also, monthly payments can be started again if a person who once got checks as an adult disabled in childhood later recovered but within seven years once again became disabled.

It is not necessary for a person disabled since childhood to have worked under social security. Benefits are paid on the basis of the father's or mother's social security work record. In cases where the child was in the care of a grandparent, it is possible that benefits may be paid on the basis of the grandparent's social security work record.

A mother (or widowed father) caring for a disabled son or daughter also may receive benefits. She is not eligible for benefits if the disabled person is in an institution or in someone else's care. However, she may be eligible for other reasons. She should check with her social security office for details.

Medicare Benefits. Medicare health insurance is available to disabled people who have been entitled to social security disability checks for two or more consecutive years.

An Application is Necessary. Just as for other kinds of social security benefits, someone must complete an application before payments can start. Sometimes the disabled person can handle money and can apply for benefits. More often, however, someone else represents the disabled person and receives benefits for him or her.

Ordinarily, a parent or other relative with whom the disabled adult is living, or who has a strong interest in the disabled person's welfare, is chosen to receive the benefits. In some cases, a legal guardian or representative of an institution or nonprofit is named to manage the funds.

If the disabled son or daughter is under 18 and is receiving social security benefits, an application for childhood disability benefits should be made at least three months before he or she reaches 18 so that payments will continue past 18 without interruption.

If disability begins between the ages of 18 and 22, an application should be filed at the time an insured parent starts getting retirement or disability benefits, or dies. There's no age limit on filing an application so long as the disability began before age 22.

You Will be Asked to Submit Evidence. Before payments can be made, medical evidence is needed that shows:

- That the person now has a severe disability;
- That the impairment began before age 22 and has continued; and
- That there is little likelihood for improvement in the near future.

The evidence will usually include a report from the family doctor or from an institution where the person is a patient. In some cases, other information – such as school records or social agency records – may be needed.

Proof of the disabled person's age and proof of relationship to the worker are also necessary. Usually a birth certificate will show both age and relationship. If the disabled person's benefits are based on a stepparent's social security record, the marriage certificates of the parents and stepparents are required. When an application is made for an adopted child, other proofs will be necessary which the people in the social security office will explain.

If you need help in obtaining medical or other evidence, the people in the social security office will be glad to help you.

Not Only Help but Hope. A main objective of social security is, of course, to provide cash benefits when they are needed most. In the case of disabled persons, another major goal is to help as many of them as possible return to productive work.

So, in addition to financial help in the form of benefits, many are given hope for rehabilitation. The social security office sends disability claims to a State agency (usually the vocational rehabilitation agency) for evaluation. There, the evidence is reviewed to see if applicants are disabled within the meaning of the law. Every applicant is also considered for possible rehabilitation services. These services include vocational counseling, training and help in finding jobs, and medical services and supplies.

Rehabilitation services are financed largely with Federal-State funds. In addition, money from social security trust funds is available to help pay for the rehabilitation of selected disability beneficiaries.

As an example, consider John C., whose father died when he was 12, and he and his mother began receiving survivors' benefits. A year later, John had rheumatic fever, which left him with a serious heart condition. He was unable to leave his house but kept up with his schooling through private instruction.

Shortly before John was 18, he applied for childhood disability benefits. His claim was approved because his heart condition prevented him from working. His mother's payments also continued, since she was caring for him.

Like all disability applicants, John was considered for rehabilitation services by his State vocational rehabilitation agency. Since his prospects for becoming self-supporting seemed good, an agency counselor met with John and discussed the special training and job placement services available to him.

Although John was eager to work, he didn't know if he could hold down a steady job. He was afraid that his benefits would stop as soon as he started work and if he failed in his attempt to work he would be left without any income.

The counselor put John's fears to rest. He explained that his benefits could continue for a "trial work period" of 12 months. Because of this "trial work" provision, John's benefits would not stop until after he had demonstrated his ability to work despite his impairment.

John accpted rehabilitation services and is now working full time for an insurance company.

Now that he has been working for over a year his social security disability benefits have stopped, but if John should become disabled again within seven years, his benefits can be started again on the basis of his father's work record.

Supplemental Security Income (SSI). Social security runs another program that makes cash payments to aged, blind, and disabled people, including blind or disabled children. This is the supplemental security income program (SSI). The purpose of this program is to assure eligible people a basic monthly cash income. Payments go to people who don't have much income and don't own much property that can be turned into cash. To receive SSI payments for disability or blindness, certain conditions have to be met, but there are no age limits for these payments. Although the program is administered by the Social Security Administration, it is financed from general revenues, not from social security contributions. Ask at any social security office for details about SSI.

SUPPLEMENTAL SECURITY INCOME (SSI)

SSI for the Blind and Disabled

Supplemental security income (SSI) is a Federal program that pays monthly checks to people in financial need who are 65 or older and to people in need at any age who are blind or disabled.

The aim of the program is to provide monthly checks when they are needed so that anyone who is 65 or older or blind or disabled can have a basic cash income.

This doesn't mean that every eligible person gets that much in his or her SSI check every month. Some people get less because they already have other income. Some get more because they live where State money is added to the Federal payment. For the most part, a person who is eligible for SSI is also eligible for Medicaid and social services Provided by the State.

Who Can Qualify? People who have little or no regular cash income and who do not own much in the way of property or other things that can be turned into cash, such as stocks, bonds, jewelry, or other valuables, may get SSI.

In addition, eligibility for checks based on blindness or disability depends on the severity of the applicant's condition.

To be considered disabled, a person must be unable to engage in substantial gainful work because of a physical or mental impairment that has lasted (or is expected to last) for at least 12 months or that can be expected to result in death.

Blindness under the SSI program is defined as central visual acuity of 20/200 or less in the better eye with the use of a corrective lens or visual field restriction of 20 degrees or less.

People may be eligible for SSI even if they have never worked.

Things People Own. A person or couple can have assets and still get checks. Assets include savings accounts, stocks, bonds, jewelry, and other valuables a person or couple owns.

Not everything owned counts as an asset. A home dosen't count. And the Federal Government does not ask for liens on the homes of people who get SSI.

Personal effects or household goods also do not count as assets in most cases. Insurance policies or a car may not affect eligibility either, depending on their value.

Income People Have. People can have some money coming in and still get SSI.

The first $20 a month in income generally isn't counted. Income above the first $20 a month (apart from earnings) generally reduces the amount of the SSI check. This includes social security checks, veterans compensation, worker's compensation, pensions, annuities, gifts, and other income.

For eligible people who live in someone else's household – a son's or daughter's home, for example – the SSI check may be reduced.

Not Social Security. Supplemental security income is not the same as social security, even though the program is run by the Social Security Administration.

The money for SSI checks comes from general funds of the United States Treasury. Social security benefits are paid from contributions of workers, employers, and self-employed people. Social security funds are not used for SSI checks.

People who get social security checks can get SSI checks, too, if they are eligible for both. But a person does not have to be eligible for social security to get SSI.

How to Apply. People who think they or someone they know may be eligible for SSI can apply, or get more information, by contacting any social security office.

SSI for Disabled or Blind Children

Supplemental security income (SSI) can provide a new avenue of financial help for disabled or blind children.

In makes no difference how young a person is. Disabled or blind children, as well as adults, can get SSI payments. People can get SSI checks even if they have never worked.

What You Can Do. If you know of a disabled or blind child you think might qualify for SSI checks, please suggest that the person responsible for the child get in touch with any social security office. The people there will explain the SSI program and help complete an application.

A parent, guardian, or other responsible person can apply for the SSI payment on behalf of the child and get a formal decision on eligibility. This is true even though it does appear that the person meets all of the eligibility requirements.

SSI Payment. Children living in a public institution generally are not eligible for SSI payments. However, people who live in publicly operated community residences serving no more than 16 people may be eligible. Also, if the State's Medicaid program pays more than half the cost of the person's care in a public or private institution, he or she may be eligible for a payment. This payment is for the patient's personal use and cannot be used by the institution for the cost of the person's care.

Children living in a private institution may be eligible for SSI checks. Their payment may be reduced, however, depending upon who is paying for their care.

Pre-Release Application. A disabled or blind child living in a public institution may have progressed to the point that he or she could live outside the institution if a continuing source of income is available. SSI checks may help provide a solution.

Some public institutions notify social security in advance so an application for SSI payments can be processed before the person leaves the institution. If the institution does not have such an arrangement, someone responsible can apply on behalf of the child when it appears he or she will be able to leave the institution soon.

For additional information, see the portion of this section covering SSI for the blind and disabled.

SSI For Retarded People

The supplemental security income program (SSI) can provide another avenue of financial help for retarded people. A severely retarded person may be eligible for these payments.

It makes no difference how young a person is. Children, as well as adulst, can receive SSI payments as disabled persons.

What You Can Do. If you know of a retarded person you think might qualify for SSI checks, please suggest that the person responsible get in touch with any social security office. The people there will explain the SSI program and help complete the application.

A parent, guardian, or other responsible person has the right to apply on behalf of the retarded person and get a formal decision on eligibility. This is true even if it does not appear that the person meets all of the eligibility requirements.

People living in a public institution generally are not eligible for SSI payments. However, people who live in publicly operated community residences serving no more than 16 people may be eligible. Also, if the State's Medicaid program pays more than half the cost of a person's care in an institution, he or she may be eligible for a payment of up to $25 a month. This payment is for the patient's personal use and cannot be used by the institution for the cost of the person's care.

People living in a private institution may be eligible for SSI checks, although the payment may be reduced, depending upon who is paying for the care.

Pre-Release Application. A retarded person living in a public institution may have progressed to the point that he or she could live outside the institution if a continuing source of income is available. SSI checks may help provide a solution.

Some public institutions notify social security in advance so an application for SSI payments can be processed before the retarded person leaves the institution. If the institution does not have such an arrangement, someone responsible can apply in behalf of the retarded person when it appears he or she will be able to leave the institution soon.

Things People Own. An individual can be eligible for SSI even if he or she has assets – things a person owns.

Personal and household goods usually don't count as assets. Insurance policies or an automobile may not count either, depending on their value. A home does not count, nor is a lien placed on a person's home.

Savings and checking accounts, savings certificates, cash, or valuables, such as stocks and bonds, do count as assets.

Income People Have. People can have some money coming in and still get SSI payments.

The first $20 a month in income generally isn't counted. Income above the first $20 (apart from earnings) generally reduces the amount of the SSI payment. This includes social security checks, veterans' pension and compensation, workers' compensation, pensions, annuities, gifts, and other income.

For eligible people who live in someone else's household – an adult living with his or her parents, for example – the SSI payment may be reduced.

SSI for Children. In deciding on the eligibility of a child under 18 (or under 21 if in school) living at home, part of the parent's income and assets are considered to be the child's. Not all of the parent's income counts, however. There are allowances for work and living expenses and for other children living in the home. After these allowances are deducted, the remaining amount is used to decide if the child meets the income and assets requirements.

Disability of a Child. A retarded child under 18 (or under 21 and attending school) is considered disabled if it is shown that:

- IQ is 59 or less; or
- IQ is 60 through 69 with marked dependence, in relation to age, upon others for meeting basic personal needs and a physical or other mental impairment that restricts function and development; or achievement of developmental milestones is no greater than that generally expected of a child half the applicant's age.

SSI or AFDC? A child cannot receive both SSI and AFDC payments. But if a retarded child is eligible under both programs, the parents or guardians can choose whichever one best suits the family. Information about these two programs is available at the local public assistance office and at any social security office.

SSI for Adults. An adult retarded person's own income and assets are considered in deciding his or her eligibility. A retarded adult is considered disabled if it is shown that:

- IQ is 49 or less; or
- IQ is 50 through 69, with an inability to perform routine, repetitive tasks, and a physical or other mental impairment resulting in restriction of function; or
- There is severe mental and social incapacity that creates a marked dependence on others for meeting personal needs, characterized by inability to understand the spoken word, inability to avoid physical danger or follow simple directions, and inability to read, write, and perform simple calculations.

Medicaid. In many states, a person eligible for SSI is also eligible for Medicaid, which pays health care expenses. The social security office or your local public assistance office can tell you more about Medicaid.

How Disability is Evaluated. Social security works with an agency in your state, usually the vocational rehabilitation agency, in deciding if the retarded person is disabled.

In reaching a decision, the agency evaluates reports from psychologists, psychiatrists, and other professional people and reviews any other evidence discribing the retarded person's condition.

If additional examinations are needed, social security will pay the costs.

What Information is Needed. When you visit a social security office, it will be helpful if you have certain information with you. This includes:

- A record of the retarded person's social security number if available.
- A birth certificate or oldest proof of age available.
- Medical records or other information about the person's disability. (If reports are not available, the names and addresses of doctors, hospitals, and clinics that have provided treatment and care will do; also, the names and addresses of social workers, school principals, and institution superintendents should be provided.)
- Information about the person's income and assets, such as bankbooks, payroll slips, or copies of tax returns. If the retarded person is a child, information about the parent's income and assets is also needed.
- Information about the retarded person's living arrangements.

Other Help Available. Social security people will help you contact community organizations that may be helpful to mentally retarded persons. The local health department, for example, can help meet some health needs. The public assistance office may provide additional financial help or other services.

Everyone who applies for SSI payments because of disability is considered for services by the State vocational rehabilitation agency or another appropriate agency. These services include counseling, teaching work skills, job placement, and training for independent living for those able. These services are usually provided at no cost.

There are many State and local chapters of the National Association of Retarded Citizens which provide services to retarded persons and their families.

SPINA BIFIDA

For additional information on Spina Bifida, contact the Spina Bifida Association of America at the address shown at the end of the article.

SPINA BIFIDA: WHAT IS IT?*

What is Spina Bifida?

Spina Bifida is a birth defect that involves damage to the spine and nervous system. The vertebrae of the spine and the spinal cord are not formed properly and surgery is usually required immediately after birth. The long-term effects frequently include weakness or paralysis of the legs and problems with bowel and bladder control. Spina Bifida is often accompanied by hydrocephalus (accumulation of fluid within the brain), which in controlled by a surgical procedure relieving the fluid pressure. Genetic counseling should be sought by all people with any form of Spina Bifida, hydrocephalus, or a family history of either condition. Prenatal diagnostic testing for Spina Bifida is available to interested couples.

How Often Does Spina Bifida Occur?

Every hour, twenty-four hours a day, somewhere in the United States, a child is born with Spina Bifida.

What Causes Spina Bifida?

Many theories about Spina Bifida have been advanced, only to be found incorrect. The cause of Spina Bifida remains a mystery. The general population knows less about it than about other disabilities.

STATE AND REGIONAL VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION AGENCIES

Three separate listings are included under this heading. First, the regional offices of the Rehabilitation Services Administration are given. The directors of these offices are good sources of information about rehabilitation services in their particular region. Next, the State Vocational Rehabilitation Agencies for the Blind are listed geographically (alphabetized by state), and, finally, other State Vocational Rehabilitation Agencies are listed. The facilities included in the last list serve individuals with many different types of handicapping conditions. The directors of these offices can provide more specific information about the services the agencies provide.

TELECOMMUNICATIONS FOR THE DEAF

Below is presented information on telecommunications for the deaf. The first section explains what a TTY and a TDD are, and the second section lists manufacturers of various telecommunication devices. A directory of TTY/TDD numbers of many government offices, hospitals, police stations, and stores, called the International Telephone Directory of the Deaf, is available to members of Telecommunications for the Deaf, Inc. For information on the membership fee, contact the office:

WHAT IS A TTY? WHAT IS A TDD?*

A TTY (teletypewriter) is a hard copy teleprinter machine enabling the user to send and receive messages through telephone lines. This is done with the aid of a coupler, acting as an interface.

A TDD (telecommunications device for the deaf) functions in the same role as a TTY. But TDDs are all kinds of devices – hard copy machine, semiportable devices, and portable devices.

The TDD is a new definition, coined few years ago when semiportables and portables came out on the market.

The current network involves over 40,000 such TDDs.

SOURCEBOOK OF AID FOR THE MENTALLY AND PHYSICALLY HANDICAPPED

Judith Norback, Ph. D., Editor
Patricia Weitz, Assistant Editor

Millions of Americans suffering from mental and physical handicaps are not aware of all the services available to them. Seeking help or information is often needlessly time-consuming, frustrating, and fruitless.

Now you can turn to this one source to find virtually all essential information for the handicapped. It provides extensive lists of public and private agencies, and programs — with addresses, phone numbers, and the names of people to contact — as well as coverage of a wide range of relevant subjects. Alphabetical arrangement of topics and state-by-state breakdowns on lists guide you to the help you seek fast.

This comprehensive manual gives you access to —

- Federal assistance programs
- Research centers for the handicapped
- Rehabilitation facilities
- Services for handicapped college students
- Recreational facilities for the handicapped
- Career counseling and training
- Fellowships, grants, foundations, scholarships, and loans for the handicapped
- and much more

The Sourcebook lists state offices for the handicapped and sources of legal information. It explains relevant laws, the rights of disabled persons and their parents, and special regulations on property ownership and driving. You also find out about religious organizations serving the handicapped, library services, national parks accessible to the handicapped, and special sports and games.

Descriptions of many handicaps are given, along with instructions on where to go for treatment and advice. Cerebral palsy, hearing and sight loss, mental retardation, Huntington's disease, Parkinson's disease, and multiple sclerosis are just some of the disabilities covered.

Providing the handicapped the help they need to lead fuller, less problematic, and more independent lives, the Sourcebook is a vital resource for the handicapped and their families, as well as for teachers, therapists, and administrators.
