Honorable Robert Kimmitt
Under Secretary for Political Affairs
Department of State
Washington, D.C. 20520

Dear Mr. Kimmitt:

Mr. Zou Jingmeng, head of the Chinese State Meteorological Administration (SMA), my counterpart in China, has requested that I bring some information to your attention, which may help in the determination on the export of a (b)(3) computer to the State Meteorological Administration for use in the Regional Meteorological Center (RMC) at Beijing. The views I express here are based on the considerable expertise of our National Meteorological Center and the association of my predecessor and me with Mr. Zou for more than 15 years in the World Weather Watch (WWW) program of the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) and over 10 years of bilateral cooperation.

The computer will be employed at the Regional Meteorological Center at Beijing which is operated by SMA within the framework of the World Weather Watch program of the WMO. The WWW is the basis for all international weather cooperation and is generally recognized as a model for successful international collaboration. The RMC is committed to provide its regional weather analysis and forecast products and services to WMO member countries in its area over the WMO coordinated Global Telecommunication System. It is one of only 26 such centers in the WWW; some of the others are Bracknell (UK), Melbourne (Australia), Offenbach (FRG), Tokyo (Japan), The European Center for Medium Range Weather Forecasts (Reading, UK), and Miami.

The RMC Beijing produces automated weather analyses and forecasts for a large portion of the Northern Hemisphere. Please see the enclosure for products and areas of coverage. These products are generated every 12 hours, 7 days a week, on a near real-time basis. China plans to initiate a much needed medium-range forecasting system at the RMC. The (b)(3) a main frame computer, would be the minimal size needed to execute the planned spectral medium range meteorological model of the size T63L15 in a timely manner. This computer system is smaller and less powerful than the computers used at many national meteorological centers around the world.

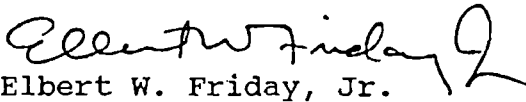

In May 1988, we received a Chinese delegation at the National Meteorological Center in Washington and the National Hurricane Center in Miami to study our medium range forecasting system and limited area modeling for hurricane forecasting. One of the considerations in our decision to receive the delegation was the probable purchase of a computer by SMA from an American company. Another consideration was the fact that China is perhaps second only to the United States in the diversity of the natural disasters brought on by weather phenomena such as tornadoes, typhoons, torrential rains, and flooding.

It is worthwhile to look ahead a bit to the time not far off when China has a weather satellite in operation, and we will want satellite data from them in real-time over the international weather circuits. As you know, China launched an experimental polar-orbiting weather satellite which provided excellent data during its 39-day life. The important point here is that Mr. Zou announced publicly in the WMO that the Chinese weather satellite data would be made freely available internationally (unlike India's policy). Our satellite experts who visited SMA's Satellite Meteorology Center under our bilateral cooperation reported on their rapid progress in meteorological satellite development. China is developing both geostationary and polar-orbiting meteorological satellites. Their data will be most welcome and useful.

Mr. Zou has earned the respect of the members of the WMO, epitomized by his election in 1987 to a 4-year term as President, a first in the UN System for someone from the People's Republic of China. This is not a ceremonial position, but rather one with significant responsibilities. He has exercised the powers of the office responsibly and has been a positive force in the WMO. He is a meteorologist with considerable influence in China and has worked hard to build and modernize its Weather Service.

In short, we believe that the (b)(3) is fully justified for the stated purpose. From the standpoint of its contribution to public warning services for severe weather events, it would also serve a humanitarian purpose.

Sincerely,

Elbert W. Friday, Jr.
Permanent Representative of the US to the WMO
