MEMORANDUM FOR BRENT SCOWCROFT

FROM: WILLIAM W. WORKING W.W.

SUBJECT: Deputies Committee Meeting on Intelligence
Priorities (NSR-29)

The Deputies Committee meeting on December 16 will be the second on this subject. It should be a status report from each policy agency and their thoughts on the process. It may also be an opportunity to begin to define a structure for the NSR-29 product. That structure will be something which will emerge from the meeting based on ideas from the participants.

In the November 26 meeting, the following points were made:

- You emphasized the importance of the undertaking and the necessity that it be a policy-level effort.
- The Terms of Reference (Tab A) was not discussed at length, but there seemed to be no major objections.
- The discussion on how to proceed resulted in the following conclusions:
 - No substructure to DC for now.
 - Yes on interagency coordination on common subject areas.
 - No set format at this point; explore fresh ideas.
 - May be a good idea to establish a baseline of current priorities.
 - A strawman paper for relating changed priorities to programs may be useful.

In the interim, I have developed a chart depicting today's top priorities (Tab B). I think it captures the general themes fairly well. It arrays priority 1 and 2 intelligence requirements by region/country and general topics. It is not the kind of output we are looking for in this effort, but it is a fair representation of current top priorities. We can hand this out at the meeting, if appropriate.

The goals of this meeting should be to:

- Share ideas from the departments.
- Start to formulate a general approach based on those ideas.
- Reiterate the January 15 deadline for formal inputs.

RECOMMENDATION

That you start the meeting using the summary (above) of the first meeting. Let each participant explain what they have done. And, from their inputs, structure a general format for their January 15 products.

Minutes

Brent Scowcroft: Thanks and welcome to those who are not usual Deputies Committee members. This is a little unusual. It is an unusual task. We are undertaking a major overhaul of intelligence requirements and priorities. (U)

The dramatic changes in the world bring into question the way we have been doing our targeting for the past forty years. We've had a particular focus on the USSR. We need to evaluate how the changes have affected the requirements. The Intelligence Community needs to remodel its operations over the next decade and a half. (U)

~~CONFIDENTIAL~~

If we do this right, it will set patterns for the future. If we do it wrong it will also set the patterns. In the past, top-level policy people have handed off these kinds of tasks down the line and have not personally focused on them. Let's try to make it a thoughtful, serious process, analyzing what your agency needs from intelligence. Don't turn it over to the intelligence shop. Let's keep the focus on policy needs. (U)

We have a fairly short suspense. The goal is to affect the FY 1993 budget. We will need some delay in the budget. We need to move fast. By 15 February we want a set of top-level requirements in priority order. (U)

I really want the policy people to do it too. I want your own priorities of policy and how they will change over the decade. Don't do it pro forma. We'll get an initial list in the middle of January. We want to keep it simple and straightforward. (U)

Now we need to talk about any comments or changes that you might have on the Terms of Reference. They were general on purpose and we want to stimulate discussion. Each one of you should personally monitor this and make sure that things you get really matter. (U)

Jonathan Howe will take over when he gets here, but I will continue to monitor your progress. This is really important. (U)

Now, for any comments. (U)

Arnold Kanter: I have two questions. Is there going to be any substructure to the DC, something like a PCC to refine these issues? My second question has to do with each of us stipulating our policy priorities leading to intelligence priorities, then we'll integrate the intelligence priorities but not necessarily the policy priorities. (U)

Brent Scowcroft: I think you're going to have to integrate both. Only then will the intelligence priorities make sense. (U)

Bill Working: On the first question of substructure, we don't intend to have a subgroup, but rather will get the inputs from the departments and agencies and I will mash them together. We may need a subgroup at some later point. (U)

John Robson: Would we benefit in the creation of our first submission by some interaction of those with common subjects? Can we establish some general groupings that we can build the requirements in. (U)

Brent Scowcroft: I should have said earlier that we will have a couple of meetings before January 15 to work out the process and problems that might come up. I don't have any problem with general groupings. What we want to do is get your preliminary ideas and get back together. (U)

David Jeremiah: The NITs are organized by topics. Would you like it organized in that fashion? (U)

Brent Scowcroft: It might be useful to follow, but I don't want to be bound by it. (U)

Paul Wolfowitz: Customer surveys like the NITs don't get very high level attention because most of us think they don't make a difference. It may be useful to give the DC an input on how these requirements will be made into programs. The product may be too abstract to be of use. A set of requirements is hard to translate into investments. (U)

Brent Scowcroft: I've done it many times. I know the problems with abstract requirements. (U)

Andy Card: It may be we need two lists. One for where we are today, and where we want to be tomorrow. You do that for each of the three categories. I fear that everything will end up in category 1. (Mr. Card's remarks evidently refer to the categories: critical, valuable and not needed, which are mentioned in the Terms of Reference.) (U)

Arnold Kanter: Is there an extant example of how you want this? (U)

Robert Howard: I have a copy of the Foreign Intelligence Requirements Categories and Priorities. It is very detailed. Is that what you want? (U)

Brent Scowcroft: I want to know what are your fundamental priorities in the world out there. What's needed now that wasn't needed before? I want something from policy to help the Intelligence Community restructure. (U)

Robert Howard: A strawman paper for going from here to there would be useful. It would have the baseline of current priorities and where the emphasis is changed. It would also describe the general program impacts. (U)

Arthur Rothkopf: I expect that we will say that the traditional areas of intelligence are still important to us. We may be adding, not dropping, topics. (U)

Brent Scowcroft: But you don't have to try to cover all possible fronts where you could be doing things just to cover all contingencies. (U)

Henson Moore: We work with intelligence mostly on the Defense programs. We may want to use it differently in the future. We may see an opportunity to define new requirements and relationships. One of our requirements may be to declassify more of the intelligence so that we can use it better. (U)

Brent Scowcroft: I was thinking about Bob Howard's notion of a strawman. That may not be a bad idea. (U)

John Robson: I think it is important to develop something so we avoid a total free form process. Some segmentation of the gathering process. (U)

Richard Kerr: I want to stay out of the requirements side, but maybe it's important to help you look at the end-game. I can imagine that we will need 150% of today's capability, a 50% increase, to meet all of of the interests when we translate them to resource and programmatic terms. Two things would be helpful. What the DC could give us is where the major thrusts of policy will be different from today. And, secondly, to tell us which things may be less important in the future. I was talking to Secretary Baker the other day and he said that we shouldn't worry so much about COCOM and technology transfer issues anymore. That's the kind of input that we need. (U)

David Jeremiah: Let's make a distinction between technical intelligence and technology transfer. I might agree on the technology transfer point, but we still need technical intelligence. (U)

Brent Scowcroft: We spend a lot of time and resources on things that may not be so important any more. We used to know exactly where the threat was coming from and we could concentrate on that. The Soviet Union. (U)

David Jeremiah: From our standpoint, we need to look at a wide area and be able to focus instantaneously. We don't know where the next threat is coming from anymore. (U)

Brent Scowcroft: Now such problems as proliferation produce a very different requirement. It may be harder for intelligence. (U)

David Jeremiah: Come January 15 we are likely to have to make order out of chaos with these requirements. (U)

Arnold Kanter: We need to go off and think about January 15, what's required, and exchange some ideas. (U)

Brent Scowcroft: Yes. Look at how you want to approach this thing. (U)

Bill Working: Some brainstorming early on may prove to be more valuable than a hard structure. (U)

Brent Scowcroft: Why don't we reconvene in two weeks and see what we've got. (U)
