~~SECRET/NOFORN~~
DECL: OADR

NORTH KOREA DEPUTIES' COMMITTEE
MARCH 20, 1992

Issues for Discussion

Our basic policy remains that nuclear weapons in North Korean hands are intolerable. North Korea is still on a plausible schedule leading to compliance with its IAEA and bilateral non-proliferation agreements (Tabs 1-4 illustrate best and worst case scenarios for possible DPRK action).

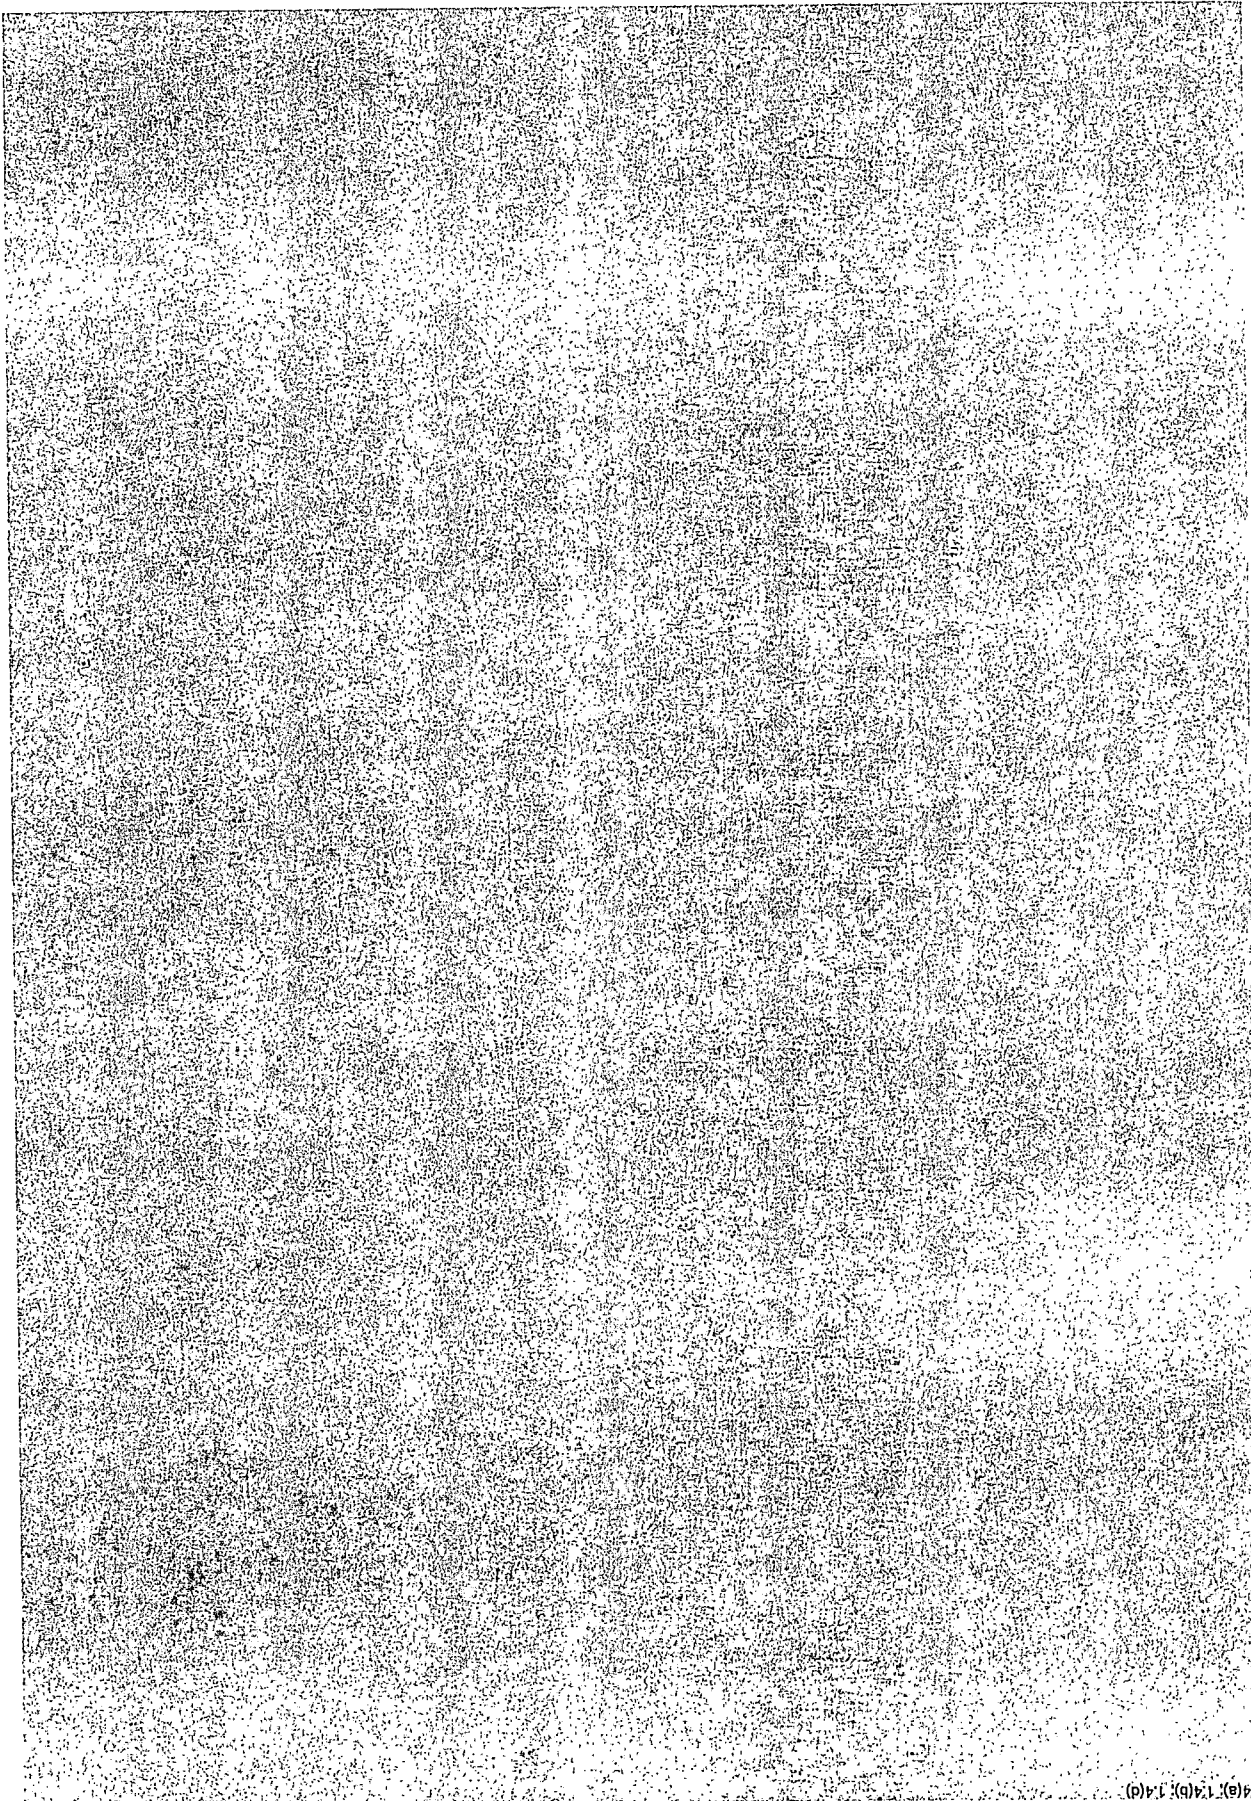

We are thus in a "wait and see" period. The North has taken advantage of every opportunity thus far to prolong the process, but its options have progressively narrowed nonetheless. At Yongbyon, for the moment there is no [redacted] that North Korea is either increasing activity or taking steps to move material out. If North Korea moves toward inspections in June, we may begin to see the satisfactory resolution of the nuclear issue which our "carrot and stick" policy was designed to induce. On the other hand, Pyongyang's past record suggests that we must remain on our guard.

TAB 1:

The following timeline shows how the DPRK could "plausibly" delay IAEA inspections until late September. It is illustrative only and many of the dates for the events listed are still unknown:

April 8-10	DPRK Supreme Peoples Assembly (SPA) "deliberates" on IAEA Safeguards Agreement and submits it to Kim Il Sung for approval and ratification.
April	Kim Il Sung considers, approves, and ratifies the Safeguards Agreement. (Kim has taken 15-50 days to ratify recent North-South agreements.)
Early May	If the North has not ratified by April 30, we will seek from a special IAEA BOG meeting a strong resolution expressing concern over delay and, possibly, a report to the UNSYG or UNSC. If the SPA has recommended ratification and the DPRK indicates Kim Il-sung's signature will soon be forthcoming (or if Kim has signed but IAEA has not yet received formal notification from Pyongyang), the BOG may be reluctant to act.
May 2	DPRK notifies IAEA of ratification and the agreement enters into force. (See note below.) Although on March 17 the DPRK told us that it would ratify the agreement in April and soon after notify the IAEA, we have seen before that in the DPRK lexicon "soon" is an elastic term.
mid-June	IAEA BOG Meeting. The DPRK's bringing the agreement into force before the meeting forestalls a punitive BOG resolution.
June 30	Deadline for the DPRK to submit initial inventory of nuclear material. POSSIBLE PROBLEM: The DPRK may submit an incomplete inventory.
July 1-Aug 30	The IAEA has the right to conduct inspections during this period (immediately after submission of initial inventory). However, the DPRK may strongly resist being "singled out" by the IAEA for inspections before the subsidiary agreement is concluded.
Aug. 30	Deadline for DPRK to conclude a subsidiary agreement implementing safeguards inspections. DPRK agrees that IAEA can begin inspections in three weeks.

Sept. 21

First inspections of DPRK-declared facilities begin. In theory, IAEA has right to conduct "special inspections" of undeclared facilities.

NOTE

The advantage of delaying notice of ratification until the beginning of May -- assuming ratification in April -- is that a state has until 30 days after the end of the month in which it ratifies to submit its inventory of nuclear material to the IAEA. Thereafter, it has 60 days to negotiate inspection arrangements with IAEA, though IAEA can try to conduct ad hoc inspections any time after the inventory is received.

TAB 3

The following would be an ideal timeline for the DPRK on IAEA safeguards:

- By April 30 The DPRK Supreme People's Assembly deliberates on the safeguards agreement and recommends approval. Kim Il-sung signs and ratifies the IAEA safeguards agreement, and the DPRK notifies the IAEA of its ratification.
- By May 30 DPRK submits, on time, an accurate initial inventory to the IAEA.
- By June 15 The IAEA, exercising its right to conduct ad hoc inspections immediately after submission of an initial inventory, conducts first visit to Yongbyon.
- By July 31 DPRK and IAEA conclude negotiation of a subsidiary implementing agreement providing for regular inspections of the DPRK's nuclear facilities.
- By Aug 15 Routine IAEA inspections begin. If necessary, IAEA conducts "special inspections" of suspect sites not listed on initial inventory -- a right it reaffirmed at the February BOG meeting.

The following timeline shows how the DPRK could move to implement bilateral inspections according to the schedule agreed at Panmunjom March 14. The timeline is illustrative only and the dates for the events listed are still unknown:

March 19	First Meeting of JNCC. The South and North table proposals. Over next few meetings, the North raises procedural objections, etc., but compromises as it has on other agreements.
May 19	Two sides reach agreement on an inspection regime.
June 8:	First inspection takes place, as agreed, 20 days after the inspection regime is adopted.
June and beyond	Inspections in both North and South go forward.

Unclassified Summary

The following covers new information since the publication of the 24 April update:

On 4 May North Korea submitted its initial inventory of nuclear materials and facilities to the IAEA. According to an IAEA press release, the list included: an operating 5 MWe reactor at Yongbyon, a 50 MWe reactor under construction at Yongbyon, a nuclear fuel rod fabrication plant and storage facility at Yongbyon, a radiochemical laboratory at Yongbyon, a 200 MWe reactor under construction 20 kilometers northwest of Yongbyon, plans to construct three 635 MWe reactors, a subcritical assembly at Kim Il Sung University, two uranium mines, and two uranium ore concentration plants.¹ After a mid-May visit to Yongbyon, IAEA Director General Blix concluded that the radiochemical laboratory, when fully equipped and operating, could be considered a reprocessing facility. While giving him a tour of the facility, North Korean officials admitted to Blix that experiments conducted at the reprocessing plant had produced a "tiny amount" of plutonium. Blix was also shown a number of other facilities by North Korean officials, who promised full access to all buildings in subsequent IAEA inspections. Despite the recent lifting of some of the secrecy surrounding the facilities at Yongbyon, and North Korean attempts to portray its program as wholly peaceful, we continue to believe that there is little doubt that the two largest reactors at Yongbyon were built to produce plutonium for nuclear weapons. (b)(3)

¹ The IC has been expressing the power level of the North Korean reactors in terms of Megawatts thermal (that is, their absolute energy output). The North Koreans have reported their power levels in terms of Megawatts electrical. The latter indicates the amount of that absolute power which is delivered in electricity--depending upon the efficiency of the reactor type.

~~SECRET/NOFORN~~

NORTH KOREA DEPUTIES' COMMITTEE
MARCH 20, 1992

Issues for Discussion

Our basic policy remains that nuclear weapons in North Korean hands are intolerable. North Korea is still on a plausible schedule leading to compliance with its IAEA and bilateral non-proliferation agreements (Tabs 1-4 illustrate best and worst case scenarios for possible DPRK action).

1.4(b), 1.4(d)

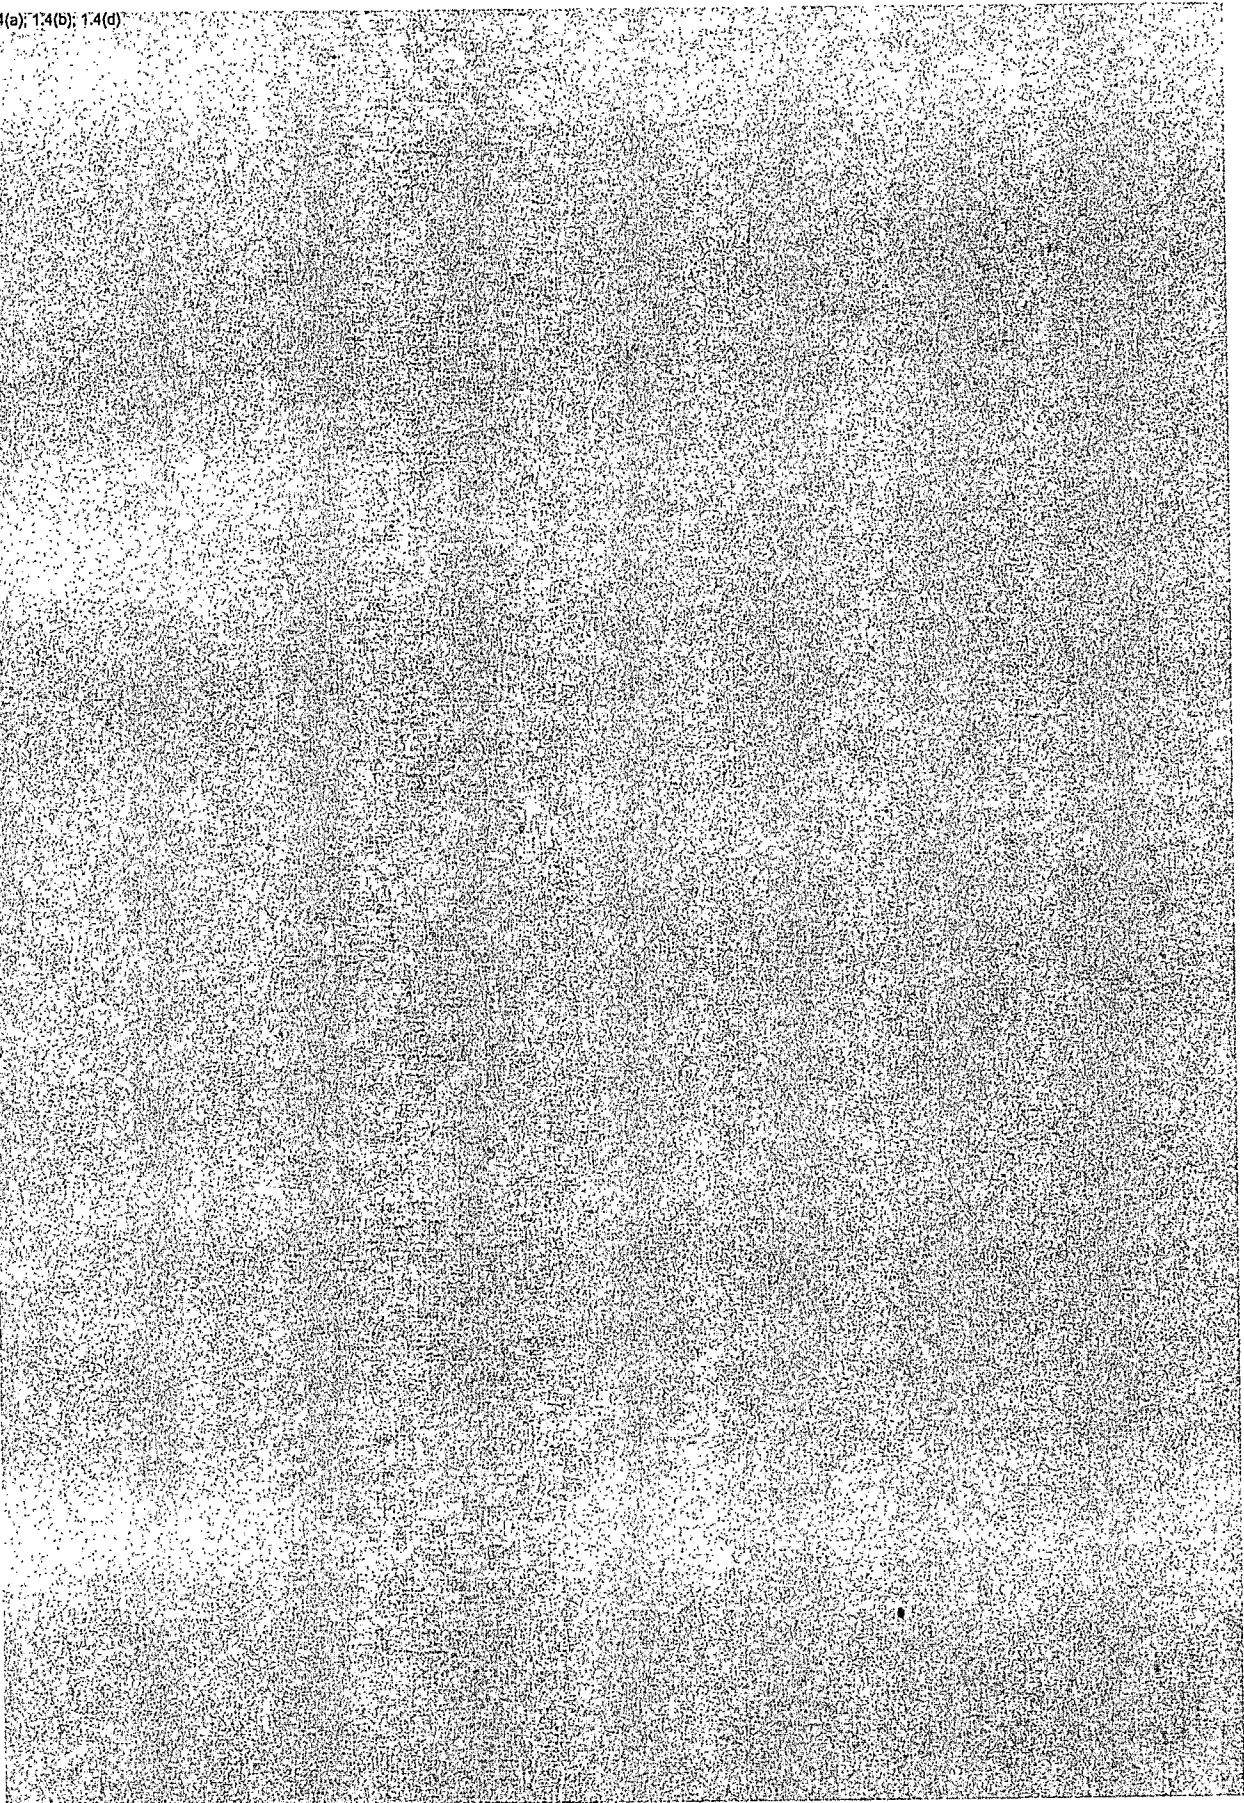

We are thus in a "wait and see" period. The North has taken advantage of every opportunity thus far to prolong the process, but its options have progressively narrowed nonetheless. At Yongbyon, for the moment there is no ^{1.4(d)} [redacted] that North Korea is either increasing activity or taking steps to move material out. If North Korea moves toward inspections in June, we may begin to see the satisfactory resolution of the nuclear issue which our "carrot and stick" policy was designed to induce. On the other hand, Pyongyang's past record suggests that we must remain on our guard.

TAB 1:

The following timeline shows how the DPRK could "plausibly" delay IAEA inspections until late September. It is illustrative only and many of the dates for the events listed are still unknown:

April 8-10	DPRK Supreme Peoples Assembly (SPA) "deliberates" on IAEA Safeguards Agreement and submits it to Kim Il Sung for approval and ratification.
April	Kim Il Sung considers, approves, and ratifies the Safeguards Agreement. (Kim has taken 15-50 days to ratify recent North-South agreements.)
Early May	If the North has not ratified by April 30, we will seek from a special IAEA BOG meeting a strong resolution expressing concern over delay and, possibly, a report to the UNSYG or UNSC. If the SPA has recommended ratification and the DPRK indicates Kim Il-sung's signature will soon be forthcoming (or if Kim has signed but IAEA has not yet received formal notification from Pyongyang), the BOG may be reluctant to act.
May 2	DPRK notifies IAEA of ratification and the agreement enters into force. (See note below.) Although on March 17 the DPRK told us that it would ratify the agreement in April and soon after notify the IAEA, we have seen before that in the DPRK lexicon "soon" is an elastic term.
mid-June	IAEA BOG Meeting. The DPRK's bringing the agreement into force before the meeting forestalls a punitive BOG resolution.
June 30	Deadline for the DPRK to submit initial inventory of nuclear material. POSSIBLE PROBLEM: The DPRK may submit an incomplete inventory.
July 1-Aug 30	The IAEA has the right to conduct inspections during this period (immediately after submission of initial inventory). However, the DPRK may strongly resist being "singled out" by the IAEA for inspections before the subsidiary agreement is concluded.
Aug. 30	Deadline for DPRK to conclude a subsidiary agreement implementing safeguards inspections. DPRK agrees that IAEA can begin inspections in three weeks.

Sept. 21

First inspections of DPRK-declared facilities begin. In theory, IAEA has right to conduct "special inspections" of undeclared facilities.

NOTE

The advantage of delaying notice of ratification until the beginning of May -- assuming ratification in April -- is that a state has until 30 days after the end of the month in which it ratifies to submit its inventory of nuclear material to the IAEA. Thereafter, it has 60 days to negotiate inspection arrangements with IAEA, though IAEA can try to conduct ad hoc inspections any time after the inventory is received.

TAB 3

The following would be an ideal timeline for the DPRK on IAEA safeguards:

- By April 30 The DPRK Supreme People's Assembly deliberates on the safeguards agreement and recommends approval. Kim Il-sung signs and ratifies the IAEA safeguards agreement, and the DPRK notifies the IAEA of its ratification.
- By May 30 DPRK submits, on time, an accurate initial inventory to the IAEA.
- By June 15 The IAEA, exercising its right to conduct ad hoc inspections immediately after submission of an initial inventory, conducts first visit to Yongbyon.
- By July 31 DPRK and IAEA conclude negotiation of a subsidiary implementing agreement providing for regular inspections of the DPRK's nuclear facilities.
- By Aug 15 Routine IAEA inspections begin. If necessary, IAEA conducts "special inspections" of suspect sites not listed on initial inventory -- a right it reaffirmed at the February BOG meeting.

The following timeline shows how the DPRK could move to implement bilateral inspections according to the schedule agreed at Panmunjom March 14. The timeline is illustrative only and the dates for the events listed are still unknown:

March 19	First Meeting of JNCC. The South and North table proposals. Over next few meetings, the North raises procedural objections, etc., but compromises as it has on other agreements.
May 19	Two sides reach agreement on an inspection regime.
June 8:	First inspection takes place, as agreed, 20 days after the inspection regime is adopted.
June and beyond	Inspections in both North and South go forward.

- Even if North Korea accepts IAEA inspections, that will not obviate the need for challenge inspections under the bilateral ROK-DPRK inspection regime. (S)
- A small interagency group will be convened to examine what coercive actions could be brought against the North Koreans in the event they do not respond adequately to existing efforts to bring about bilateral and IAEA inspections. This group will also consider
- The PCC-East Asia will compile and analyze the public statements on the North Korean nuclear program by the President and the Secretary of State, and recommend to the Deputies Committee whether any adjustment in our public or diplomatic strategy on this issue is warranted in order to support coercive actions that may be required in future. (S)
- The PCC-East Asia will develop a USG position on this issue for general use in public affairs. (S)
