SUBJECT: Guatemalan Cocaine Threat Assessment

The overall flow of cocaine through Central America--in particular, Guatemala--has increased substantially over the last year and a half, according to seizure statistics, radar track line data, and a body of human source reporting. The most heavily traveled cocaine transshipment corridor involves traffickers flying from Colombia to offload points in Central America and Mexico--using both the eastern Pacific and the western Caribbean air routes--according to the Interagency Assessment of Cocaine Movement. There has been a dramatic increase in ^{1.4(b); 1.4(d)} detected targets flying into Guatemala, from seven in 1989 to 25 in 1990--there were 26 additional targets detected by radar in 1990. In 1991, possibly as many as 57 confirmed narcotics flights were detected flying into Guatemala, reaffirming the importance of Guatemala as a transshipment country. In addition, there is Intelligence Community agreement that an unknown number of "undetected" operations occurred in this region due in part to traffickers' evasive and deceptive countermeasures and a lack of adequate US government detection and monitoring resources. Guatemalan traffickers, in cooperation with Colombian organizations, are using airstrips located on well-established and legitimate farms, in addition to the more "clandestine"-type airstrips, to transship large quantities of cocaine through Guatemala.

Due in part to the presence of the Northern Border Response Force in Mexico and Operation Cadence in Guatemala the traffickers success rate for detected operations has declined in both areas. According to the Interagency Assessment, traffickers success rates from first quarter 1991 to first quarter 1992--based on detected activity--declined in Central America from 75 to 63 percent and remained fairly constant in Mexico at between 70 to 73 percent. The successes of air interdiction programs in Mexico and Guatemala have had a growing impact on trafficker operations, causing them to use alternate routes and methods, including increasing use of large payload aircraft, maritime shipping, and overland routes. If pressures continue to increase on traffickers in Guatemala they will look for alternate offload countries--most probably El Salvador, Belize, and Honduras. In March 1992, for example, two aircraft were detected flying to El Salvador and one to Costa Rica which supports human source reporting that the use by traffickers of Central American countries is increasing.

According to the Interagency assessment:

DECLASSIFIED IN PART
PER E.O. 13526

2010-2323-MR
mm 9/2/2015

3

- o Detected air operations from Colombia to Central America/Mexico are expected to continue at an average of twelve to sixteen flights per month.
- o Mexico and Guatemala will remain the primary transshipment points for cocaine-laden aircraft in this geographical region.
- o The use of Belize, El Salvador, Honduras, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, and Panama as refueling or transshipment countries will increase.

In addition, Guatemala's participation in and support of Operation Cadence will enhance the antidrug capabilities of its security forces and probably set a positive model for other antidrug programs in the region. Regionally, the trend toward closer political, economic, and military ties--underscored by the inauguration of the Central American parliament and an unprecedented meeting of Central American air force commanders last July--will hopefully facilitate more cooperation on drug trafficking.

SUBJECT: Guatemalan Cocaine Threat Assessment

The overall flow of cocaine through Central America--in particular, Guatemala--has increased substantially over the last year and a half, according to seizure statistics, radar track line data, and a body of human source reporting. The most heavily traveled cocaine transshipment corridor involves traffickers flying from Colombia to offload points in Central America and Mexico--using both the eastern Pacific and the western Caribbean air routes--according to the Interagency Assessment of Cocaine Movement. There has been a dramatic increase in ~~14(b)(1) 14(b)(2)~~ detected targets flying into Guatemala, from seven in 1989 to 25 in 1990--there were 26 additional targets detected by radar in 1990. In 1991, possibly as many as 57 confirmed narcotics flights were detected flying into Guatemala, reaffirming the importance of Guatemala as a transshipment country. In addition, there is Intelligence Community agreement that an unknown number of "undetected" operations occurred in this region due in part to traffickers' evasive and deceptive countermeasures and a lack of adequate US government detection and monitoring resources. Guatemalan traffickers, in cooperation with Colombian organizations, are using airstrips located on well-established and legitimate farms, in addition to the more "clandestine"-type airstrips, to transship large quantities of cocaine through Guatemala.

Due in part to the presence of the Northern Border Response Force in Mexico and Operation Cadence in Guatemala the traffickers success rate for detected operations has declined in both areas. According to the Interagency Assessment, traffickers success rates from first quarter 1991 to first quarter 1992--based on detected activity--declined in Central America from 75 to 63 percent and remained fairly constant in Mexico at between 70 to 73 percent. The successes of air interdiction programs in Mexico and Guatemala have had a growing impact on trafficker operations, causing them to use alternate routes and methods, including increasing use of large payload aircraft, maritime shipping, and overland routes. If pressures continue to increase on traffickers in Guatemala they will look for alternate offload countries--most probably El Salvador, Belize, and Honduras. In March 1992, for example, two aircraft were detected flying to El Salvador and one to Costa Rica which supports human source reporting that the use by traffickers of Central American countries is increasing.

According to the Interagency assessment:

DECLASSIFIED IN PART
PER E.O. 13526

2010-2323-MR
mm 9/2/2015

(3)

- o Detected air operations from Colombia to Central America/Mexico are expected to continue at an average of twelve to sixteen flights per month.
- o Mexico and Guatemala will remain the primary transshipment points for cocaine-laden aircraft in this geographical region.
- o The use of Belize, El Salvador, Honduras, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, and Panama as refueling or transshipment countries will increase.

In addition, Guatemala's participation in and support of Operation Cadence will enhance the antidrug capabilities of its security forces and probably set a positive model for other antidrug programs in the region. Regionally, the trend toward closer political, economic, and military ties--underscored by the inauguration of the Central American parliament and an unprecedented meeting of Central American air force commanders last July--will hopefully facilitate more cooperation on drug trafficking.
