Stanford's Jennifer Azzi, center, should have quite a few fans in the stands in Knoxville.

YOU CAN GO HOME AGAIN

Azzi returns to scene of her prep heroics

By Susan Slusser
Bee Staff Writer

STANFORD – It sounds like a made-for-TV movie. A girl grows up 20 minutes from Thompson-Boling Arena in Knoxville, Tenn. She has a storied high school basketball career but is overlooked by local power Tennessee.

Four years later, after taking her high tops and three-point shot across the country, she is named college player of the year and returns to Knoxville to play for the national championship.

Things couldn't get much better for Jennifer Azzi. Last week the Stanford senior guard was named Naismith National Player of the Year, and her team won the West Regional on its home floor to advance to the NCAA Tournament semifinals.

"Jennifer has come full circle," Stanford coach Tara VanDerveer says. "She came to the West, and it was a gamble. Now it's nice that she's going home and bringing her team with her. I'm so happy for Jennifer; it's a dream come true."

The only chapter missing from the Azzi fairy tale is that the second-ranked Cardinal (30-1) will not get to play Tennessee. Virginia shocked the fourth-ranked Lady Vols in overtime Saturday.

"It would have been nice to play Tennessee," says Azzi, who came back to haunt the Lady Vols with 18 points and seven assists in Stanford's 85-71 upset of Tennessee, then ranked second, in December. "But this is what happens. I hope the Knoxville fans still come out, even though Tennessee isn't in the tournament."

Even if Knoxville doesn't turn out for the Final Four, nearby Oak Ridge will. Azzi starred at Oak Ridge High School, leading her team to a 34-2 mark and the state finals as a senior.

Azzi got her start in basketball in the Knoxville suburb, joining a girls club league in third grade and working her way up to junior high ball.

"It doesn't feel like I'm going to be playing an away game," says Azzi, who expects a large contingent of family and friends at Thompson-Boling Arena for Friday's game against No. 12-ranked Virginia. "It's like a home game for me."

The 5-foot-9 Azzi will attract attention at Knoxville for more than her local affiliation. She is the most dangerous weapon in Stanford's well-stocked arsenal – not just for her scoring ability but for her overall game.

"I don't think you can categorize Jennifer as a basketball player," says Washington coach Chris Gobrecht, whose team handed the Cardinal its only loss this season. "She's the rare player who can really dictate what happens in a basketball game because of the numerous things she can do with a ball in her hands. She can always hurt you. Stanford is a scoring machine, and Jennifer is the ultimate scorer."

When she's not scoring, Azzi is running the fast break, dribbling behind her back through defenders and locating teammates for spectacular assists. As Mississippi discovered in the semifinals of the West Regional, opponents can keep Azzi from scoring, but that doesn't necessarily limit her effectiveness.

Azzi had a season-low five points against Ole Miss but contributed eight assists and five rebounds. In the meantime, the Rebels were so concerned with their perimeter defense that Stanford's post players scored 52 points inside. Despite Azzi's low point totals, she was named the West Regional's most outstanding player.

"You can pat yourself on the back for shutting down Azzi, but when you've got kids inside, a great player like Azzi becomes a decoy," Arkansas coach John Sutherland says. "And she's still an outstanding passer and a floor leader."

Azzi's statistics reflect her well-rounded game. She doesn't lead Stanford in any category but is in the top three in almost every one, averaging 15 points, four rebounds and six assists. She's also the Pac-10's all-time women's leader in assists (741) and steals (268).

Though others have higher scoring averages, Azzi has been rewarded for her all-around excellence. She was featured in Sports Illustrated's college basketball preview issue, was named Pac-10 player of the year for the second consecutive season and won the Naismith award in a minor upset over Venus Lacy, Louisiana Tech's powerful center.

"It was something of a surprise, because so many times those awards go to the people who score the most," California coach Gooch Foster says. "It's nice to see the committee give the award to a player who can do so many things besides score and who means so much to her team."

The team means just as much to Azzi, a co-captain. The Cardinal squad is very close, and Azzi has seen it go from comparatively hard times – 14-14 as a freshman – to this season's triumphs.

"I took losing very hard, because we didn't lose very much in high school," Azzi says. "Katy (Steding) and I said freshman year, 'We are not going through another season like that.' Now we'd do anything to win, and we'd do anything for each other. The team is really close on the court and off – we're all very good friends."

In practice, teammates delight in mimicking Azzi, who has a tendency to flick her long, dark ponytail when making her slick moves to the basket. Trisha Stevens tosses her hair as she drives the middle to attempt a wildly impossible shot, and the squad laughs as Azzi responds with a dead-perfect Stevens imitation, bouncing up and down on a free-throw shot and cheering when it goes in.

"We definitely make fun of each other," Azzi says. "It keeps things light. They call me 'The Bag Lady' because Sonja (Henning) has it in her head that if anyone is going to just suddenly leave while we're doing something, it's me. I sort of have a tendency to wander off."

After graduation, Azzi, an economics major, plans to play basketball in Europe and hopes to win a berth on the 1992 U.S. Olympic team. Her boyfriend, Rob Englehardt, a defensive back on the Stanford football team, also plans to go overseas, to Australia to play rugby.

"We're real supportive of each other," Azzi says. "I'd never be willing to give up basketball for anything, and he understands that, because he feels the same way about rugby. But if we wind up in the same place in the future, we'll see what happens."

For now Azzi's focus is on Virginia and then, perhaps, a rematch with No. 1-ranked Louisiana Tech for the national title. The Lady Techsters defeated the Cardinal in the Midwest Regional final last year, despite a career-high 30 points by Azzi. A win over Louisiana Tech would provide a fitting end to Azzi's career at Stanford.

"It's really exciting – it's kind of a storybook ending," she says. "I don't think there could be anything better than to win it all at Tennessee."

Stanford wins women's title

By Susan Slusser
Bee Staff Writer

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. – When Tara VanDerveer was recruiting a young guard from Tennessee four years ago, she said she planned to win a national championship within a few years. Though skeptical, the recruit decided to attend Stanford, for educational reasons.

VanDerveer was true to her word Sunday. Stanford won its first NCAA women's basketball championship, defeating Auburn 88-81 in the title game at Thompson-Boling Arena. Jennifer Azzi, now an All-America senior guard from nearby Oak Ridge, celebrated her homecoming by being named outstanding player of the Final Four.

"I just feel so good right now," Azzi said after scoring 17 points in the title game. "I'm happy to have those four years of hard work pay off."

Point guard Sonja Henning, who made 7 of 10 free throws down the stretch, led the Cardinal with 21 points. Forward Katy Steding scored 18 and was named to the all-tournament team with Azzi, who hit four three-point shots. Trisha Stevens had 16 points and 10 rebounds for Stanford, which finished with a 32-1 record, losing only to Pacific 10 Conference rival Washington.

"When I first came to Stanford five years ago and said I was going to win a national championship, people thought I was nuts," VanDerveer said. "I think maybe I was a little naive, but this is a dream come true."

Auburn, ranked No. 9 to Stanford's No. 2 coming into the tournament, has come up short in the last three NCAA title games. The Lady Tigers finished 28-7. Junior guard Carolyn Jones had a game-high 24

Crowds came anyway

Record turnout without host Tennessee

By Susan Slusser
Bee Staff Writer

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. – The NCAA women's Final Four outdrew the men's for the first time ever this year, as Friday's semifinals attracted a paid crowd of 19,467 and Sunday's final drew a record 20,023. Both figures exceed the capacity of McNichols Sports Arena in Denver (17,675), site of the men's tournament.

There had been concern that crowds would be down after Tennessee, the host school, was upset by Virginia in the East Regional final. But Tennessee coach Pat Summitt worked hard all week to promote the event, and those with tickets who decided not to attend were encouraged to give the tickets to local youth groups.

"We have to salute the people in East Tennessee for coming out and supporting women's basketball even without their hometown team in it," Summitt said. "I'm very touched and very proud of Knoxville."

Barmore barometer – Louisiana Tech coach Leon Barmore voted Stanford No. 1 in the women's poll every week this season, even though his Lady Techsters had a perfect record during the regular season.

"I've picked Stanford from Day 1," he said. "And I've meant it. I don't know if there's ever been a women's team with four starters averaging over 13 points. And when Jennifer Azzi wins the Wade Trophy and she's your third-leading scorer . . . geez."

Summitt knew Stanford was of championship caliber when the Cardinal beat the Lady Vols in December.

"I definitely thought Stanford was a Final Four team; Stanford and Louisiana Tech were my favorites," she said. "I'm so happy for Tara VanDerveer. This is one of the greatest success stories in the history of women's basketball."

Azzi awards – Almost lost in the shuffle of the week's events was Stanford's Azzi winning the Wade Trophy, the top honor in women's basketball. Azzi was announced as the winner Friday night in New Orleans, but she couldn't be there; she was with her team in Knoxville.

The Wade Trophy goes to a senior who best combines academics and leadership with basketball ability. Azzi also won this season's Naismith Player of the Year award.

"It's a great honor," she said. "I've heard a little bit about Margaret Wade, and knowing how she helped women's basketball makes me feel even better about the award."

Wade coached Delta State to a string of national championships in the 1970s.

WOMEN'S FINAL FOUR NOTES

Cramping her style – The loss of guard Dawn Staley to leg cramps was critical for Virginia in its 75-66 loss to Stanford in Friday's semifinals. The All-America sophomore scored 14 points in the first half but just four in the second, sitting out much of the period.

Leg cramps have been a problem for Staley all season. Virginia coach Debbie Ryan blames them on Staley's diet, which she said consists "mostly of junk food."

"It's something we're going to have to take a look at next year," Ryan said.

New format – Next year's Final Four, scheduled for New Orleans, will go to a new format. Instead of semifinals Friday and the title game Sunday, the games will be played back-to-back on Saturday and Sunday.

The move is being made so that CBS can televise the semifinals and the final. ESPN has been carrying the women's semifinals.

Saturday's semifinal games will be played from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Pacific time, with the men's semifinals beginning at 2:30 p.m.

The two coaches in Sunday's title game were divided in their opinions on the new format.

"It's well worth it to be on national television rather than cable, which many people still don't have," VanDerveer said. "Any team that is here next year will have to deal with it, and I think they'll deal with it well. I'd like to be here and have to deal with it."

Auburn coach Joe Ciampi has experience with back-to-back games; teams making the final of the Southeastern Conference women's tournament play three games in three days.

"If you have to do it, you just adjust and do it," Ciampi said. "The SEC tournament is the most demanding thing to go through, but it can be done. I still prefer the Final Four format the way it is now."

points and a team-high nine rebounds for Auburn. Guard Chantel Tremitiere scored 17 points.

Jones and Tremitiere were named to the all-tournament team with Azzi, Steding and Louisiana Tech center Venus Lacy.

"Stanford had so many weapons, they created many problems for us," Auburn coach Joe Ciampi said. "They were shooting threes like they were layups."

The Cardinal was 11 for 26 on three-point shots. Steding connected on 6 of 15 three-point tries, setting championship-game records for three-pointers made and attempted.

"We were shooting well outside; Katy was hitting threes, Jennifer was hitting threes," VanDerveer said. "That's something we've been doing all season. We really look for that."

The first half was a series of ups and downs. Stanford led by 11, then Auburn went up by seven, then the Cardinal scored the final nine points of the half to tie the game at 41.

"I wasn't worried about being down," VanDerveer said. "At halftime we went in tied, and we're a good second-half team."

Stanford surged ahead for good early in the second half, using a 14-2 run to take a 57-48 lead. Fittingly, the spurt began with a Steding three-pointer and ended with an Azzi three.

"Good teams make runs at you," Ciampi said. "Basketball is a game of streaks, but you have to stay in control. They made a run early in the second half, and we never countered. They just ran away from us."

A 12-0 surge midway through the half gave Stanford its largest lead at 65-53. The Lady Tigers cut the deficit to 70-64 with six minutes left but came no closer as Henning hit a jumper and Steding popped in a three from the right side.

Forced to foul, Auburn sent the Cardinal to the line for 15 free throws in the final 1:30. Stanford connected on 10 to seal the title.

The first half was not as easy for Stanford. Auburn's pressing defense kept the Cardinal without a basket for one eight-minute stretch and forced seven turnovers on the way to a 37-30 lead.

"We were struggling," VanDerveer said. "It takes time to adjust to the press, and we got in some trouble."

Down 41-32 two minutes before the break, the Cardinal streaked back, scoring the final nine points of the half to tie the game. Freshman center Val Whiting hit two difficult shots inside in traffic, and Henning had a three-point play when she was fouled on a fast-break basket.

"That was a really big swing," VanDerveer said. "Katy was out of the game, and (center) Julie Zeilstra came in and did a nice job at small forward. Val made some big shots."

VanDerveer acknowledged that she anticipated a title at the beginning of the season.

"I had premonitions," she said. "I thought, 'We're not going to go 18-0 in the Pac-10 like we did last year, but we're going to win the national championship.' "

She made a believer out of Azzi, who received a resounding ovation after fouling out with 1:28 to play. Azzi had already arranged for a victory party at her Oak Ridge home.

"It's going to be a big bash," she said. "This has been our goal for the past three years. Every year we've come a little closer, and now we've done it. It just feels great."

Now Auburn gets shot at Stanford

By Susan Slusser
Bee Staff Writer

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. – Auburn is no stranger to the NCAA Tournament title game. The Lady Tigers are playing in it for the third consecutive year.

The problem is, they have yet to win it.

"I'm not a bridesmaid, I'm best man," Auburn coach Joe Ciampi joked. "I think we took the media by surprise, but there's a tradition of excellence in women's basketball at Auburn, and I felt this team had great potential all along."

The ninth-ranked Lady Tigers (28-6) shocked No. 1-ranked Louisiana Tech 81-60 on Friday night to advance to today's final against second-ranked Stanford (31-1) at Thompson-Boling Arena. The game will be broadcast live by CBS (10:30 a.m., Channel 10).

The Auburn upset ended the Lady Techsters' bid for a perfect season. The Lady Tigers also were the last team to defeat Louisiana Tech before its 32-game winning streak, knocking off the Lady Techsters in last year's NCAA semifinals.

"Auburn obviously has a great team," Stanford guard Jennifer Azzi said. "I don't consider them the underdog at all. They've been to the Final Four before, and we haven't."

NCAA WOMEN'S TOURNAMENT

The key to Auburn's success has been defense. The Lady Tigers limited powerful Louisiana Tech to 23 points on 8-of-28 shooting in the first half Friday.

"They're here because of their defense," Stanford coach Tara VanDerveer said. "They're quick, they mix it up, they run a lot of traps, and they make it work. Auburn makes a tremendous effort on defense."

Nevertheless, Ciampi expects his defense to be tested by the Cardinal's explosive offense, which averages 93 points.

"Stanford has so many weapons, I think we'll need six or seven people on the floor to contain them," he said. "They're an outstanding offensive machine. Everyone contributes; I don't see a weakness."

All-American Carolyn Jones leads Auburn with 20 points per game, but the junior guard suffered an ankle injury Friday.

"I jammed it pretty bad," Jones said, "but I have to play with pain. I have to be a team leader."

Auburn's other big threat is 6-foot-6 senior center Linda Godby, who averages 14 points coming off the bench. A starter earlier this season, Godby became a substitute when Ciampi decided he wanted to emphasize defense. The Lady Tigers are 10-1 since the move.

Junior center Trisha Stevens continues to lead the Cardinal with 18 points per game. Senior forward Katy Steding, who averages 15 points, had a team-high 18 in Friday's 75-66 win over 12th-ranked Virginia. Azzi hit her average (15 points) against the Cavaliers.

Luck of the Cardinal – VanDerveer is amazed that six consecutive favored teams scheduled to face Stanford in their next NCAA Tournament game have been upset before getting a shot at the Cardinal.

"We've scouted every wrong opponent in the tournament," she said. "I teased Joe (Ciampi) the other day, 'You want me to scout Louisiana Tech for you?' And look what happened.

"Somehow, these things that are happening are beyond our control. It's unbelievable. Maybe it's destiny."

Said Louisiana Tech coach Leon Barmore, an upset victim: "Maybe it's just Stanford's year."

Louisiana Tech's Lacy tries to cope with defeat

By Susan Slusser
Bee Staff Writer

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. – This wasn't the way Venus Lacy's collegiate career was supposed to end.

Louisiana Tech's All-America senior center couldn't hold back the sobs Friday night after Auburn's 81-69 upset of the top-ranked and previously unbeaten Lady Techsters.

"Being my last season, this hurt a lot," Lacy said. She broke down and could not continue.

Lacy carried the load for the Lady Techsters with a game-high 26 points and 15 rebounds. But she couldn't do it all. The other four starters combined for just 30 points, and the bench contributed only 13.

"Venus Lacy to me is the best post player who ever played at Louisiana Tech, and we've had some good ones," Louisiana Tech coach Leon Barmore said. "She single-handedly put us back in the Final Four. She's had a marvelous career."

The most feared player in women's college basketball for the last two years, Lacy is mild-mannered and timid off the court, wringing her hands and looking self-conscious as she talks to reporters.

On the court, however, Lacy quickly establishes an impenetrable position under the basket. Woe to those who attempt to get inside against the 6-foot-4, 190-pound center.

"Venus is a kind, gentle-type person," Barmore said. "It was just a matter of her learning to do things."

Most women's basketball experts say that Lacy improved more than any other player in the nation since her freshman season. She was named to the Kodak All-America team Thursday and won the Champion player of the year award Saturday.

"She's got to be the most improved player in the country," Arkansas coach John Sutherland said. "She's a very intense kid with a lot of natural ability. Now that she's put it all together, it's very scary. I compare her to Moses Malone."

This season Lacy averaged 24 points and 13 rebounds for the Lady Techsters, who were No. 1 in the polls the entire season. She finished 12th in the nation in scoring and seventh in rebounding, despite averaging just 29 minutes per game.

After leading Brainerd High School in Chattanooga, Tenn., to a state title in 1984, Lacy accepted a scholarship to basketball power Old Dominion but decided to leave after one year. At first, she wanted to go back to her home state and play for Tennessee.

"Tennessee was one of the top schools I was considering out of high school, but I chose Old Dominion," she said. "When things didn't work out there, unfortunately, Tennessee didn't have any scholarships available. So I went to Louisiana Tech, and it's worked out great.

"If I'd stayed at Old Dominion, I don't believe I'd be the player I am today. At Old Dominion, I'd be riding the pine still."

Lacy encountered problems at Louisiana Tech, too. In particular, she had difficulty making it to class.

"A lot has been written about Venus, how she was not disciplined, not going to class, not doing things right," Barmore said. "Along the way, we've had to teach her how to be an adult and how to be responsible. She just had to look and see what's good and what's bad. It's very fortunate for us that she chose the right route."

Barmore is pleased with Lacy's accomplishments on the court but is even more impressed with her success off the court.

Lacy is on schedule to graduate, and her outlook on academics has changed so much that she said, "I even dress up to go to class now."

Said Barmore: "Nobody could be more happy with Venus Lacy than coach Barmore. When Venus came to Louisiana Tech, she couldn't lead herself, much less a team. Now she's the team captain. To see where she came from to where she is now is remarkable."

She's Stanford's leading lady

By Susan Slusser
Bee Staff Writer

It's 10 a.m., and Tara VanDerveer, the Stanford women's basketball coach, is in her office watching videotape with her four assistants.

"Did Trisha block out? No!" VanDerveer exclaims as she critiques her team, which is ranked No. 2 in the country. "Who's going to the boards? Katy is the best on my sheet so far; she's got a streak going. We could make a highlight tape."

VanDerveer is a videophile. When she's not at practice or on the phone recruiting, she often can be found in front of a VCR, watching her own team or an opponent. After a long day, VanDerveer settles down at home with a good tape. An old favorite, like Auburn-Tennessee.

In the quest for a national championship, VanDerveer wants to give the Cardinal any edge it can get.

And it has worked. Stanford appears razor-sharp, outscoring its opponents by an average of 28 points heading into a second-round NCAA Tournament matchup Saturday against Hawaii at Maples Pavilion (7:30 p.m. tip-off). The Cardinal (27-1 overall, 17-1 in the Pacific 10 Conference) earned a first-round bye in the tournament, and is the top seed and host of next weekend's West Regional.

Stanford has come a long way in VanDerveer's five years. The Cardinal was 9-19 the year before she arrived. The team went 13-15 in her first season, and has improved every year since, to 14-14 in 1986-87, 27-5 in 1987-88 and 28-3 last season, losing at Louisiana Tech in the quarterfinals of the NCAA Tournament.

For last year's accomplishments, VanDerveer was named NCAA Coach of the Year. At age 36, she is at the top of her profession. A prominent former men's coach has called VanDerveer the best coach in the Pac-10 – man or woman.

"I definitely give the credit to Tara," says guard Jennifer Azzi, who has developed into an All-American. "My freshman year (1986-87) was the first year I ever lost, and I was upset after every game. But Tara was developing the program for the future, not for immediate success. Now I can see how much she helped me as an individual player and how committed she was to building the program."

VanDerveer's first recruits were Azzi and forward Katy Steding, a three-time all-conference player. Each of her recruiting classes has been outstanding, and this year's group includes Pac-10 Freshman of the Year Val Whiting.

"Tara's put together a winner," said Louisiana Tech coach Leon Barmore, whose top-ranked Lady Techsters could meet Stanford for the NCAA championship. "I really admire and respect her. She's built two great programs, at Ohio State and Stanford."

From 1980-1985, VanDerveer's Buckeyes went to three NCAA Tournaments, averaging 22 wins a season. In her two years as coach at Idaho, VanDerveer's Vandals went 42-14. In 11-plus years as a head coach, her record is 261-89 – even though she had no intention of coaching after graduating in 1975 from Indiana University, where she was a three-year starter at guard.

VanDerveer had planned to take a year off to travel, then go to law school. But she ran out of money at Christmas and went home to Boston.

"I was just hanging around, and my dad said, 'Why don't you go down to the high school and help out with your sister's team?' " VanDerveer recalls. "They were doing badly, and it was frustrating. If they wanted to skip practice and go get their hair done, they would. So I decided I wanted to go to the college level, where they're more dedicated."

Off she went to Ohio State, where she spent two years as a graduate assistant, coaching the junior varsity while earning her master's degree.

VanDerveer credits then-Ohio State coach Debbie Wilson with much of her training, but she also picked up a lot while an undergraduate at Indiana, observing Bobby Knight's team.

"I liked watching their practices," VanDerveer says. "I was intrigued with how they played. I took a coaching class from Knight, and a lot of it stuck in my mind."

Over the last five years, VanDerveer has had input from another coaching legend. Former California coach Pete Newell runs a "big man's camp" each summer at Stanford, and he and VanDerveer have struck up a friendship.

"He's very receptive to questions, and is very enthusiastic about women's basketball," VanDerveer says. "We'll go out to dinner and discuss the team, or he'll talk to the team. I like to get a different perspective, and I really respect his opinion."

Newell has high regard for VanDerveer as well.

"Tara has a really fine knowledge of the game," he says. "She's really prepared herself to coach. Very few men or women have done as much to increase their knowledge. From a teaching and preparation standpoint, she ranks right up there with the best men and women coaches. She's done a tremendous job at Stanford."

means watching practices, watching tapes ... she can never do enough. On this particular day, she and her staff look at Stanford's recent win over California, then the previous day's practice.

At 11:30, Steding wanders in to go over tapes. Each of the players sits down with one of the coaches once or twice a week to review tapes.

"The more feedback the players get, the better," VanDerveer says. "We watch tapes of practice and try to chart things people are doing, what they need to work on."

Steding, a senior forward, was the star of the coaches' screening this morning, and her review is glowing. "Look at all those pluses," she says, checking her chart.

"Seeing positive things can help as much as seeing negative things," VanDerveer says.

Businesslike and direct, VanDerveer never hesitates to speak her mind to players, assistants or the press. The players say they appreciate their coach's candor.

"Tara doesn't have qualms about saying what's on her mind, and that's good – most of the time," Steding says with a laugh. "She's very straightforward, but very approachable. If you have a problem, you can go in and see her. She cares about everyone on the team."

After grabbing a quick lunch, VanDerveer tackles a mound of correspondence and returns reporters' phone calls. At the same time she keeps an eye on a tape of Oregon State, the Cardinal's next opponent, which assistant coach Renee Brown is viewing. If time permits, VanDerveer calls recruits. The Cardinal has already signed two top guards, Nikki Sevillion of Flint, Mich., and Kelly Dougherty of Leavenworth, Kan., for next year.

At 3:30 p.m. it's more tape, this time with the entire team, as Brown gives a quick rundown of Oregon State. The players stretch, then warm up with a few drills before starting practice. Near the end of the session the team runs through situation drills: down by two with 10 seconds left, up by one with 40 seconds left.

"We're beating teams by 20-25 points now," VanDerveer says, "but we know what's coming. We have to do things to get ready, create our own challenges."

After practice, VanDerveer will usually stay to rebound for any players who want to work on their shooting. She then heads to training table with the team at 7 p.m., and afterward returns to her office to make more recruiting calls.

When she finally gets home at 8 or 9 p.m., it's tape time again.

"A lot of coaches just put in their time in practice," says assistant coach Amy Tucker, who played for VanDerveer at Ohio State. "Tara spends a lot of her time watching video, and on her day off, if Jennifer wants to shoot, Tara will spend her day off rebounding for Jennifer."

Such dedication hasn't gone unnoticed by her players.

"Tara has worked so hard to get us where we are now," junior forward Trisha Stevens says. "It's great we're doing so well, so she can be rewarded. Her hard work is paying off."

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. – It's a set-up.

Every time a favored team is scheduled to face Stanford, it is upset before it gets a chance to play the Cardinal.

Stanford was the beneficiary of another shocker Friday night when ninth-ranked Auburn stunned No. 1 Louisiana Tech 81-69 in the semifinals of the NCAA women's basketball tournament, handing the Lady Techsters (32-1) their first loss of the season. It was the fifth consecutive upset of a prospective Cardinal opponent.

"This completes the set," said Stanford coach Tara VanDerveer, whose Cardinal wore down Virginia 75-66 in the first semifinal before a national television audience and a Final Four-record crowd of 19,467 at Thompson-Boling Arena. "I think there's a higher power than the seeding committee. Maybe this was meant to be."

■ Sunday's championship

At Knoxville, Tenn.

Stanford (31-1) vs. Auburn (28-6), 10:30 a.m., 10 5 12

Despite a case of the jitters, the second-ranked Cardinal raised its record to 31-1 as Katy Steding's 18 points led four Stanford players in double figures.

The Cardinal will face Auburn (28-6) for the national championship at 10:30 a.m. PDT on Sunday. CBS will broadcast the game live.

Auburn coach Joe Ciampi attributed his team's victory to "the law of averages. They were undefeated. But my kids never stop surprising me."

VanDerveer's chief concern was Stanford's nervousness in its first Final Four appearance.

"Maybe next time I'll scream at them to relax," she said. "It's a very intimidating place to play, with 20,000 people here. We shot bricks and never did get into the flow. We were a step behind a lot of the game."

Virginia's defense forced 17 turnovers and kept Stanford well under its average of 99 points per game. The 12th-ranked Cavaliers (29-6) were hurt when All-American Dawn Staley suffered leg cramps in the second half.

The sophomore guard scored 14 points in the first half but just four in the second, sitting out much of the period and playing ineffectively when in the game.

Staley's 18 points led the Cavaliers.

"With 13 minutes left, my legs started to bother me," Staley said. "I felt I could go on, so I asked to go back in the game. It affected me, but I was going to give it my all."

Seniors Steding and Jennifer Azzi provided some stability for erratic Stanford, hitting key three-pointers. Azzi, who won the Wade Trophy as the top woman player in the country on Friday, scored 15 points and added five assists. She was 3 for 5 from three-point range.

"Jennifer and Katy hit some critical threes," VanDerveer said. "We weren't able to run our offense the way we wanted to. You have to give a lot of credit to Virginia's defense; they disrupted our inside game."

Leading 42-38 at the half, the Cardinal used an 11-2 run to break open the game midway through the second half. Steding had a three-pointer and a fast-break layin during the spurt, which put Stanford up 59-46.

Virginia refused to back down, closing the gap to eight at several points down the stretch, but could come no closer.

"I'm proud of my players for holding Stanford to 75 points," Virginia coach Debbie Ryan said. "We went through a dry spell in the middle of the game and it just got away from us."

The Cardinal shot 40 percent from the floor, 10 points under its average. Freshman center Val Whiting, a 63-percent shooter who scores 13 points per game, was 1 for 11.

"When I first went in, I was so nervous my legs felt funny," Whiting said. "I hope I got it out of my system. I'll try to relax and not put as much pressure on myself Sunday."

Center Trisha Stevens scored 16 points for Stanford, and point guard Sonja Henning had 12 points and five assists. Whiting and Steding each had eight rebounds.

Stanford was 5 for 8 from three-point range; Virginia was just 2 for 13. The Cavaliers shot 38 percent from the floor overall.

The Cavaliers kept it close it the first half, holding leads of 11-10 and 18-16 before Stanford came to life.

"We usually try to pump it inside to our post players, but it wasn't working early, so we started hitting from outside," Steding said. "We weren't specifically looking to score from the perimeter; that's just what they were giving us."

In the second game, All-America center Venus Lacy scored 26 in a losing effort for the Lady Techsters. Junior guard Carolyn Jones led Auburn with 21 points.

The Lady Techsters attempted 23 three-point shots and made just five.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. – The honors de keep piling up for Stanford's Jennifer wh Azzi.

he One week after being named the key Naismith national player of the year, whe senior guard from nearby Oak bas dge, Tenn., was named to the Ko- Hak All-America women's basketball not am Thursday.

bec It was the second consecutive All- vid America award for Azzi, the only re- wa turning member from last year's All- cos America squad. Azzi is averaging 15 the points, four rebounds and seven as- sists for the second-ranked Cardinal, wi which faces Virginia today in an le NCAA Tournament semifinal game at Thompson-Boling Arena.

h "It hasn't really had time to really sink in yet," Azzi said. "We're here, and we're still playing. Maybe I can look back in a few years and say, 'Wow, two years in a row!' But right now I'm just focused on playing."

Said Stanford coach Tara VanDerveer: "Jennifer deserves it. It's a tremendous compliment to Jennifer and to our team. She's a special young lady with a lot of talent."

Each of the other three Final Four teams had a player named to the All-America squad – senior center Venus Lacy of Louisiana Tech, junior guard Carolyn Jones of Auburn and sophomore guard Dawn Staley of Virginia.

Oklahoma controversy – Oklahoma's decision to drop its women's basketball program because of poor attendance and low revenues drew fire from the Final Four head coaches.

"I'm shocked," Stanford's VanDerveer said. "It's a slap in the face to women's basketball and a big step backward."

"It's a disgrace for an athletic department to do that," Auburn coach Joe Ciampi said. "I'm going to investigate this; it's very upsetting to me. There's no reason for it in this day and age."

Staley remembers Gathers – Virginia's Staley attended Dobbins High School in Philadelphia, the same school that produced the late Hank Gathers and Loyola Marymount teammate Bo Kimble. She was the only girl who participated in the regular playground games at 25th and Diamond streets.

Like Kimble, Staley has the number 44 and "Hank" written on her high tops in memory of Gathers.

"I still really can't believe that something like that could happen to someone with such a perfect body," Staley said.

the clock is running down. I have no idea how Stanford would react in that situation, but I think it's a real advantage for us to have played in so many close games."

The key to today's matchup, Ryan believes, is defense. The Cardinal is averaging 99 points, and four starters average more than 14 points.

"Stanford has a little bit of everything," Ryan said. "They're very balanced. There's no doubt that we can't allow them to score 99 points and expect to beat them. But we've been able to play good defense against great teams and keep their point production down."

Sunday's national championship game will start at 10:30 a.m. and will be broadcast on ESPN.

Virginia coach knows the book on Stanford women

By Susan Slusser
Staff Writer

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. – Aside from Stanford coach Tara VanDerveer, Virginia's Debbie Ryan might know the Cardinal's personnel better than anyone in the country.

Ryan has coached four Stanford players on the junior national women's basketball team in the last two years, including point guard Sonja Kraluppi, and two summers in a row.

So Ryan is well aware of what her 12th-ranked Cavaliers (29-5) are up against as they face second-ranked Stanford (30-1) in an NCAA tournament semifinal game at 4 p.m. today at Thompson-Boling Arena at the University of Tennessee. Top-ranked Louisiana Tech (32-0) and No. 9-ranked Auburn (27-6) at 6 p.m. The games will be televised on ESPN.

Ryan's players have done very well playing for her, so she has great respect for them," VanDerveer said. "Sonja and Jennifer (Azzi) know her offense and her tendencies, but Virginia's not going to change its game for us."

In addition to Henning and Azzi, Ryan has coached Stanford starters Trisha Stevens and Julie Zeilstra. But she downplayed any edge her familiarity with Stanford might bring.

"The only advantage it gives us is in terms of preparation because I know their strengths and weaknesses, and I know certain players' tendencies," Ryan said.

"It makes the game a lot more personal because I've been on the road with them and know what they're like. I can say things to them and laugh; it's fun to have that personal relationship."

The Cavaliers have been the surprise of the tournament, shocking No. 4-ranked Tennessee 79-75 in overtime last weekend in the East Regional final. The Lady Vols were expected to compete in the Final Four on their home court.

> 'I can say things to them and laugh; it's fun to have that relationship.'
> – Virginia coach Debbie Ryan

"It's a springboard beating a team like Tennessee," said forward Fran Scott, the Cavaliers' only senior starter. "They're a great team, and we know we're good enough to beat them. We feel like we can play with anybody now."

Virginia's leader is guard Dawn Staley, who was named to the Kodak All-America team Thursday. The sophomore had 25 points and nine rebounds against Tennessee. Just 5-foot-6, Staley leads the team in scoring, averaging 19 points, and rebounding, averaging seven. Tammi Reiss, also a 5-6 sophomore guard, averages 15 points.

"They have two good guards," VanDerveer said. "But ours (Azzi and Henning) are better. We match up well against Virginia."

The Cardinal certainly has an edge in height. Stanford has four regulars taller than 6 feet. The Cavaliers have 6-4 freshman Heidi Burge. Burge's 6-4 twin sister Heather, who comes off the bench, and 6-1 Tekshia Ward.

Stanford also holds a decided edge in experience since the Cavaliers start two sophomores and a freshman. The Cardinal has four players, seniors Azzi and Katy Steding and juniors Stevens and Henning, who have played together for three years.

"They're a very young team," VanDerveer said. "They've won an incredible number of close games, and they find a way to win. Tennessee was stronger and more experienced, but somehow, Virginia found a way to win. They just come out loose and play hard. They're freshmen and sophomores who aren't really aware of what they've accomplished."

According to Ryan, her squad has benefited from its youth.

"We make up for our lack of experience with a lot of youthful enthusiasm," she said. "The players relish the underdog role; they like hearing that they don't have a chance. It motivates them even more."

Virginia's forte has been its poise in close games. In games decided by four points or fewer, the Cavaliers are 13-1.

By contrast, Stanford has played in only three games decided by fewer than 10 points, including its only loss, 81-78 at Washington. The Cardinal has outscored its opponents by an average of 22 points per game.

"We feel strongly that we can win late in the game," Ryan said. "The players enjoy it when

Stanford women advance with win over Mississippi

By Susan Slusser

STANFORD – The Stanford women's basketball team stemmed the tide of upsets in the West Regional to advance to Saturday night's final.

Before a crowd of 7,500 at Maples Pavilion, the first sellout in Stanford women's basketball history, the second-ranked Cardinal defeated No. 24-ranked Mississippi 78-65 on Thursday night.

Trisha Stevens' 19 points led four Stanford players in double figures as the Cardinal (29-1) won its 31st consecutive game at home.

"We played as hard as humanly possible, but we played a great team in a tough, hostile environment," Mississippi coach Van Chancellor said. "They're almost impossible to guard. We've never played anyone tougher in the last six years. Stanford has a real good shot of winning it all."

WOMEN'S NCAA

The Cardinal will face No. 22-ranked Arkansas (25-4), an 87-82 upset winner over sixth-ranked Stephen F. Austin, in the final at 9 p.m. Saturday. Arkansas also surprised Georgia in the second round of the West Regional, which has been fraught with upsets.

Mississippi (22-10) hung close in the first half, scoring the final six points to help cut a 13-point deficit to six, 39-33. Kimsey O'Neal's basket to open the second half narrowed the deficit to 39-35, and things started to look tense for Stanford when Stevens, who scored 15 in the first half, sat down with her fourth foul just three minutes into the period.

Shortly thereafter, though, the Cardinal went on a 10-3 run, triggered by six points from freshman center Val Whiting, to go up 54-42. Stanford then chewed up five minutes with a 15-4 burst in which the Cardinal gained its biggest lead, 73-53.

"When Trisha got in foul trouble, I think we did a real good job of getting the ball inside to Val and Julie (Zeilstra)," Stanford coach Tara VanDerveer said. "I was really pleased with how they came through."

Whiting supplied 18 points and eight rebounds. Zeilstra had 15 points and nine rebounds, and point guard Sonja Henning scored 12.

"No. 52 (Whiting) – is that the best sub in the world? She killed us inside," Chancellor said. "And the crowd really made a difference. We made a few runs at Stanford, and the crowd would just not allow us to come back on them."

O'Neal, a senior center, led the Lady Rebels with 27 points. Junior guard Jackie Martin scored 16 for Mississippi.

The Cardinal outrebounded the Lady Rebels 49-21. Mississippi pulled down 18 offensive rebounds in its second-round upset of Nevada-Las Vegas.

"Mississippi is a very good offensive-rebounding team," VanDerveer said, "and we did a good job of getting rebounds. Val helped us immensely in that area."

Stanford guard Jennifer Azzi, named the Naismith player of the year Wednesday, was held to five points, but she had eight assists.

"If the inside is open, I'd just as soon get the ball in to the post players," Azzi said. "They did a good job defending me, and if that's what they want to do, fine – I'll get the ball inside. Scoring is a big deal to some people, and if I have a shot, I'll take it. But if it's not there, I'm not going to force it."

Arkansas 87, Stephen F. Austin 82 – The Lady Razorbacks made a spirited comeback to down the favored Ladyjacks (28-3), ending their 15-game winning streak.

Junior center Delmonica DeHorney led Arkansas with 32 points, helping to offset 39 points by Stephen F. Austin center Portia Hill. DeHorney hit 14 of 16 from the field.

"I honestly believe we had the better team and the better talent," Stephen F. Austin coach Gary Blair said. "But on this night we did not execute down the stretch. Arkansas was very patient, and they won the game with the play of their point guard. Amber Nicholas kept them poised and got the ball to their open people."

With 5½ minutes remaining, Nicholas hit a three-pointer to give Arkansas its first lead, 74-73, and trigger a 10-2 burst that put the Lady Razorbacks on top 81-75.

Nicholas made 4-of-4 free throws down the stretch to seal the win.

Lady Razorbacks like odds against Stanford

By Susan Slusser
Bee Staff Writer

STANFORD – Arkansas is getting a little tired of hearing about pumpkins and glass slippers.

The Lady Razorbacks, who face host Stanford at 9 p.m. today in the women's West Regional final of the NCAA Tournament, wouldn't have made it this far if they didn't have the ability.

"I guess Cinderella showed up at a ball where she wasn't expected, so in that sense, we're the same," Arkansas coach John Sutherland said. "But it's not like we haven't been playing ball. I'm reluctant to say that we're walking around saying, 'Man, I can't believe we're here!' "

In reaching its first regional final, Arkansas (25-4) upset No. 7-ranked Georgia 81-70 in the second round and sixth-ranked Stephen F. Austin 90-82 in the semifinals Thursday night. Second-ranked Stanford coach Tara VanDerveer isn't taking the 22nd-ranked Lady Razorbacks lightly.

"Teams sometimes just get really hot, and Arkansas is obviously a very good team right now," Stanford coach Tara VanDerveer said. "They play loose, and they play well as a team. You might call their wins upsets, but at this point, everyone's equal."

The Cardinal's main concern is 6-foot-3 junior center Delmonica DeHorney, who hit 14 of 16 from the field against Stephen F. Austin. The Southwest Conference's player of the year finished with 32 points, seven rebounds and two blocked shots.

"Their team seems to have a sixth sense of where DeHorney is – every time, the ball goes right to her," VanDerveer said. "They do an extremely good job of reading defense and getting the ball to her."

Stanford's post players also were impressive Thursday, combining for 52 points and 23 rebounds in a 78-65 rout over No. 24-ranked Mississippi. Junior Trisha Stevens scored 19, despite missing much of the second half because of foul trouble. Freshman Val Whiting contributed 18 points, and sophomore Julie Zeilstra added 15 points and nine rebounds.

"Stanford's three post players could play anywhere in the country," Sutherland said. "They're very physical and very deep. They did a pretty good job of moving the defense around inside."

There is a down side to being a surprise team in the NCAA Tournament. Sutherland has seen very little of the Cardinal this season.

"I wasn't the guy sitting around recording games in December thinking, 'Yeah, when we get to the final eight, we'll be ready,' " Sutherland said.

That's as close as Arkansas will come to acknowledging its unexpected appearance in the West final. The Lady Razorbacks fiercely insist that they belong in the regional championship game.

"Everybody thinks we're the underdog, and they keep writing about our 'upsets,' " Arkansas guard Juliet Jackson said. "Now people are finally going to realize that we can play with anybody."

Arkansas isn't intimidated by Stanford's 31-game home winning streak. The Lady Razorbacks are making a habit of "messing up" streaks, according to Jackson. An upset of Texas in Austin on Feb. 23 ended the Longhorns' 183-game winning streak in the Southwest Conference. The Lady Razorbacks handed Georgia its first home loss of the season in the second round of the tournament. And Arkansas' victory over Stephen F. Austin snapped the Ladyjacks' 15-game winning streak.

The Lady Razorbacks won't have one factor in their favor that they had Thursday. The Stanford crowd strongly rooted for Arkansas. After the game, Stephen F. Austin coach Gary Blair said, "You can't tell me there are that many hog-calling Razorbacks here."

Said Sutherland, "My biggest concern is can we get those people cheering for us like they did (Thursday) night? Think they'll cheer for us again? There sure are nice folks out here."

Tonight's game is sold out but will be broadcast on ESPN.

Chris Jones has a way of making the Stanford women's team work harder.

The Male Man helps out at Stanford

By Susan Slusser

STANFORD – Someday, Chris Jones might be able to tell his grandchildren that he played with college basketball's national champions.

The women's national champions.

Jones, a 6-foot-3 Stanford junior from Chicago, is an assistant manager for the second-ranked Cardinal women's team, and has the privilege of getting beaten and bruised in practice guarding Stanford's post players.

"It's tough," Jones said. "They're really, really physical. They're the most intense people I've ever played with."

Jones said when he first came out to practice in January, "everyone laughed, because I was a guy playing with the women's team. But a lot of players have said they appreciate my helping out. They've made me feel like a part of the team."

Having another tall player to practice against has improved Stanford's inside game, sophomore forward Julie Zielstra said.

"He's more physical than any girl I've played against," she said. "He's definitely made me better – I'll push on him hard, and he'll push on me. And he can block shots, so it make us shoot better."

What does the Cardinal think of having a member of the opposite sex at practice?

"Everyone thinks he's kind of cute," Zielstra said, laughing. "But besides that, he really adds a lot to the team."

Steding clobbered – Stanford forward Katy Steding was clotheslined by Mississippi's Teena Bender Thursday night while setting a screen in the Cardinal's 78-65 victory. Steding went down hard and lay on the floor a few minutes and was clearly unsteady as she went to the foul line, but made both her free throws.

"Maybe I'll set picks backwards from now on," she said.

Ole Miss coach Van Chancellor apologized for the incident after the game. "I deeply regret it," he said. "That's just not the way we play at Ole Miss." ... Arkansas coach John Sutherland on his team's defense in its 87-82 victory over Stephen F. Austin: "We couldn't guard a phone booth."

NCAA WOMEN

STANFORD - Normally, the crowd at Stanford women's basketball games starts up cheers for freshman reserve Molly Goodenbour midway through the second half. Saturday night at Maples Pavilion, the raucous sellout crowd of 7,500 started its "Molly" chant just six minutes into the contest.

The Cardinal rocketed to a 27-point first-half lead against No. 22-ranked Arkansas, ensuring plenty of playing time for the Cardinal subs – and a berth to the NCAA women's Final Four at Knoxville, Tenn., this week.

Junior forward Trisha Stevens scored 24 points as second-ranked Stanford overwhelmed the Lady Razorbacks 114-87 in the final of the West Regional, televised nationally on ESPN. Senior guard Jennifer Azzi had 20 points and 10 assists for the Cardinal (30-1), which extended its home winning streak to 32 games. Azzi was named the most outstanding player of the West Regional.

"We played some intense defense and rattled them a little bit," Stanford coach Tara VanDerveer said. "The shots were going in, and they were giving Jennifer a lot of room on the perimeter. She started lighting it up from the outside."

Junior center Delmonica DeHorney fouled out with five minutes remaining after scoring a career-high 39 points for the Lady Razorbacks (25-5). DeHorney also led Arkansas with eight rebounds.

"What else can you ask for Delmonica to do but drive the team bus?" Arkansas coach John Sutherland said. "I knew we were in trouble when I watched Stanford warm up. I can count on my two hands the number of shots they missed in warmups.

"After tonight, I can't imagine Stanford having a hard time with anybody but L.A. – the Lakers, not the Clippers."

Stanford will face No. 12-ranked Virginia in an NCAA semifinal game on Friday. The Cavaliers stunned fourth-ranked Tennessee 78-74 in overtime in the East Regional final on Saturday. The Lady Vols were the top seed in the East and were expected to host the Final Four at Thompson-Boling Arena at the University of Tennessee.

"It makes it a neutral court," VanDerveer said. "I hope it doesn't take away from the crowd in Knoxville, but we can't argue with who we're playing."

And having Azzi, a native of Oak Ridge, Tenn., could work to the Cardinal's advantage.

"Without Tennessee there, a team with a player from Tennessee could pick up a lot of support," said VanDerveer, smiling. "Maybe now we could have 25,000 people rooting for Jennifer Azzi and Stanford University."

Arkansas held its only lead of the game at 2-0 on a Blair Savage basket inside. But the Cardinal scored the next eight points and shortly thereafter went on a 13-2 run to settle things early, with a 24-8 advantage, eight minutes into the game.

Stanford didn't ease up. Two consecutive long-range jumpers by point guard Sonja Henning gave the Cardinal its biggest lead of the half at 53-26.

Even with most of the Stanford starters resting the last few minutes of the period, the Cardinal went into the locker room up 57-32.

"I remember asking my assistants during one timeout, 'Y'all got a 27-point play?' " Sutherland said. "They said no. Stanford was hot. They were pumped up and ready to play."

Stanford led by as many as 35 points in the second half.

Sophomore forward Julie Zeilstra finished with 20 points for the Cardinal, and freshman center Val Whiting had 11.

DeHorney recorded 21 first-half points, hitting 8 of 11 shots from the floor and 5 of 7 from the free-throw line. Stevens had 17 for Stanford, and Azzi added 14, including four three-pointers. She finished with five for the game.

Senior forward Katy Steding fouled out with eight minutes remaining in her final home game, finishing with 17 points and seven rebounds. Azzi, also playing in her last home game, came out of the game for Goodenbour with 6½ minutes left. Both received prolonged ovations.

Stanford went over the 100-point mark for the tenth time this season. Stanford's 114 points broke the regional scoring record of 106 set by the Cardinal in its second-round win over Hawaii last week. It also was the highest point total ever allowed by an Arkansas team.

The Cardinal total also set a new record for NCAA regional play.

The team had a Pacific-10 Conference record 37 assists, 13 by Henning.

DeHorney was named to the all-tournament team, along with Stanford's Azzi and Stevens, Portia Hill of Stephen F. Austin, and Kimsey O'Neal of Mississippi.

Stanford's quiet star makes some noise on her way out

By Susan Slusser
Bee Staff Writer

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. – Stanford's national-championship women's basketball team featured a fiercely competitive senior who is known for her long-range capabilities.

Meet Katy Steding, the Cardinal's other senior launching pad.

Often overlooked on a team dominated by Wade Trophy winner Jennifer Azzi, Steding had her moment in the spotlight in Sunday's 88-81 win over Auburn for the NCAA title. She had 18 points, seven rebounds and five assists.

"How does it feel to win the national championship? Think of the best hot fudge sundae you've ever had – then put on more hot fudge," Steding said.

It was a Sunday to savor for the 6-foot senior from Lake Oswego, Ore. She made 6 of 15 three-point shots, setting championship records for three-pointers made and attempted.

She had 18 points in Stanford's 75-66 semifinal win against Virginia, including 2 of 3 three-point shots and 6 of 6 free-throw attempts. She also had eight rebounds. In two Final Four games, Steding had just one turnover, offset by a steal and a blocked shot. She was named to the all-tournament team and picked up numerous votes for outstanding player – an award that went to Azzi.

"I told Katy at the beginning of the season, 'You're going to be MVP of the national tournament,' and she nearly did it," Stanford coach Tara VanDerveer said. "When I told her that, her jaw nearly hit the floor, but I've been on her about it since Day 1 of practice."

Steding doesn't mind playing second fiddle to Azzi, who grew up in nearby Oak Ridge, Tenn., and won the MVP trophy as a homecoming prize.

"I don't feel like I'm in Jennifer's shadow," Steding said. "She's a great player and won all those awards, and none of them were inaccurate – she's incredible."

Steding has not gone unappreciated by her better-known teammate.

"Katy's been the best teammate I could ask for for four years," Azzi said. "She's been out there working just as hard as I have, been right with me. I feel so good for Katy. This is a great way for her to go out."

According to VanDerveer, the sometimes reticent Steding has been more than happy to have the focus elsewhere.

"I think she likes for all the attention to be on Jennifer," VanDerveer said. "Katy's always played well in games we're supposed to win, but in big games, she's sort of been a wallflower. I told Katy before the tournament to come up to another level. She did that against Virginia, and it kept going into the title game."

Scoring was not Steding's only contribution in the final.

"Katy's defense was the thing that did it for us – that was the key," VanDerveer said. "Evelyn Thompson (an Auburn guard) drove left to the basket every single time (in Friday's semifinal) against Louisiana Tech, and Katy did not let her drive. She did not score once against Katy."

> 'How does it feel to win the national championship? Think of the best hot fudge sundae you've ever had – then put on more hot fudge.'
> – Stanford's Katy Steding

Steding was VanDerveer's first recruit at Stanford. Not highly sought by other schools, she chose Stanford primarily for its academic reputation.

"Tara told me we were going to win a national championship, and I thought, 'Yeah, right,' but I humored her," Steding recalled. "I said, 'That's great, but I'll have to see it.' "

A four-year starter, Steding has been named to three consecutive All-Pacific 10 Conference teams. VanDerveer says she is Stanford's most improved player.

"Katy has really been my favorite project. I don't think Katy saw what I saw in Katy at the beginning. As a freshman, she was my favorite whipping-child; I'd get mad and yell at her, until she finally told me, 'Look, Tara, this isn't working.' The whole story on Katy is confidence, pure confidence."

Until Sunday's final, Steding was probably best known for her penchant for diving on the floor. Though thin and delicate-looking, Steding is far from fragile. She never missed a game at Stanford despite the shoves and elbows she took playing inside and the skin she left on various gym floors.

"Katy definitely wins our bruised-and-battered award," VanDerveer said.

"Katy gets a few bruises, but she's that kind of player," Azzi said. "She goes all out. She'll do anything to win."

Said Steding: "If I have to take my lumps, I will."

Steding hopes to continue her winning ways with Azzi. The two would like to play in Europe after they graduate and want to be on the same team.

"We could be a package," Steding said.

Heaven forbid if it's otherwise; Steding might have to be in the limelight on her own.

13 TRAVIS BICE

Guard, 6-4, 152, Sophomore -- Simi Valley, CA (Simi Valley HS)

4.7 PPG / 0.6 RPG / 1.4 APG / 11.8 MPG / 51% FG PCT / 89% FT PCT

An outstanding outside shooter who provides UNLV with a long range touch off the bench... appeared in 27 games and averaged 4.7 points and 1.4 assists per game... scored a career high 19 points in a nationally televised win over Iowa (12/23)... scored in double figures four times... recorded a career high four rebounds against Pacific (2/8)... had five assists on two occasions -- against UC Irvine (1/18) and Pacific (2/8)... UNLV's leading three-point field goal shooter, he has hit 33 of 61 (54%) from beyond the three-point stripe... will finish the season as UNLV's best 3-point marksman ever... a fundamentally sound player who committed only 21 turnovers in 318 minutes of playing time... went to the free throw line only nine times all season, making eight... almost 77 percent of field goals were treys... shot better from three-point range then from two-point range (.541 vs. .435)... missed six games towards the end of the season with a severe case of the chicken pox... weight dropped to 139 pounds from 152 but he has gradually gained it back... sat out last season as a redshirt... an unheralded player coming out of high school, he earned a berth on the roster after walking-on in the 1987-88 season... during his freshman season he played in 17 games and averaged 1.9 points and 0.6 rebounds per game.

30 DAVE RICE

Guard, 6-4 1/2, 205, Junior -- Claremont, CA (Mt. San Antonio JC)

1.2 PPG / 0.3 RPG / 0.2 APG / 3.2 MPG / 31% FG PCT / 50% FT PCT

A fine outside shooter who joined the Runnin' Rebel squad just before school started in August... plays both shooting guard and small forward positions... also an excellent student... connected on four of nine three-point attempts during the season... appeared in 13 games and scored a season-high of three points on four occasions... hit a three-pointer to cap scoring in Big West Tournament Championship Game... four of his five field goals were from three-point range... committed only two turnovers in 42 minutes of playing time... had three points and two assists against Utah State (2/1)... another crowd favorite at the Thomas & Mack... came to UNLV from Mt. San Antonio JC in California... was chosen as the California Junior College Scholar Athlete of the Year in 1989.

15 BRYAN EMERZIAN

Guard, 5-11, 165, Sophomore -- Waukegan, IL (West HS)

0.0 PPG / 0.4 RPG / 0.1 APG / 1.9 MPG / 0-5 FG's / 0-1 FT's

In his second season with the Runnin' Rebels, Emerzian provides depth off the bench... appeared in eight games but failed to score a point in 15 minutes of playing time... played in UNLV's semifinal and championship victories in the Big West Tournament... walked-on last season after participating in the basketball conditioning class... a crowd favorite at the Thomas & Mack Center... pulled down three offensive rebounds this season... a hard worker in practice who comes to play everyday... last year he played in 11 games scoring seven points... wore goggles for the first half of the season last year... the shortest and youngest Rebel on the squad.

33 BARRY YOUNG

Forward, 6-7, 223, Junior -- Ellicott, MD (Mt. Hebron HS)

4.2 PPG / 2.2 RPG / 1.0 APG / 12.0 MPG / 38% FG PCT / 62% FT PCT

One of the best pure shooter on the team, Young can provide instant offense at both the off-guard and small forward positions... a streaky player... played in 33 games during the season with two starts... notched a season high 20 points against Pacific (2/8)... had a 17-point and season-high six rebound game against California in the Dodge NIT... his other double figure game was a 13-point performance against UC Irvine... almost 65% of his field goal attempts (86 of 133) were from three-point range... set a career high with five assists against Cal State Fullerton (1/3)... has grabbed 71 rebounds during the season... a good ball handler for someone his size, he committed only 23 turnovers in 397 minutes of playing time... has improved his defense through better foot speed and reaction time... in his first game as a Rebel last season he scored 14 points against Arizona in Tucson... his instant offense sparked the Rebels many times last season... scored 42 points in his first five games last season... set a career high with 28 points last season against Long Beach State... in that game he connected on seven of 10 three pointers.

UNLV beat Duke 103–73 in the most lopsided NCAA title game ever

Johnson scattered Duke bodies and displayed a nimble grace in making this dynamic save.

GOOD VS. EVIL? WHAT ABOUT EAST vs. West? Tobacco Road vs. the Strip? Grits vs. Glitz? Bookworms vs. Croupiers? Blue vs. Red, for Godsakes?

Choose any of the sociologically significant polarities enveloping the national championship that you wish, but when the Runnin' (positively Ragin') Rebels of UNLV got finished with poor Duke—Miss vs. Match: The official number was 103–73, if you are keeping track on your keno ticket—they had turned a morality play into astonishing theater of the absurd.

What's more, any minute now in Sin City they will be referring to UNLV's NCAA victory as The Title from the Two Ay, that being what the National Collegiate Athletic Association has become known as around the Rebels' basketball office. Investigators have made 11 visits to the campus in the last nine months during their current probe into charges of academic irregularities and recruiting violations, so it's no wonder the Two Ay has become such an intimate component of university life. And what about all those boos from the UNLV cheering section in Denver's McNichols Arena on Monday night when the chairman of the Two Ay basketball committee, Jim Delaney, was introduced at the awards ceremonies? That just showed that Vegas rooters have healthy eyesight. They undoubtedly saw several of the Two Ay tournament committeemen's faces turn even grimmer than usual as UNLV was scoring 18 unanswered points early in the second half to clinch the championship. "I don't look on this as sweet revenge, just sweet," said Las Vegas coach Jerry Tarkanian, who only last week settled, at an estimated cost to him of $370,000, a lawsuit with the Two Ay that had been festering for 13 years.

"But vindication?" said Tark's wife, Lois. "[Jerry's] vindicated as a coach."

While Duke showed up on Monday night in its characteristic bridesmaid's veil—the Blue Devils now being zero for eight in Final Fours—Tarkanian's swifter, stronger and more confident legions were dressed to kill. They raised their game to a wholly different level. Men vs. Toys? Let's go to the videotape.

The key for Vegas was 6′ 7″, 250-pound junior Larry Johnson, who in only 30 minutes on the court contributed 22 points, 11 rebounds, four steals, two three-pointers and one extraordinary flip-behind-his-back-while-lunging-to-the-floor save of a ball about to go out of bounds. "You were so physical, you fouled me out," shouted Johnson's junior teammate Stacey Augmon (12 points and seven assists in 26 minutes before getting his fifth personal), joking that Johnson's play was so rugged Augmon had, in effect, been one of its victims.

In all, it was the biggest blowout in the history of the championship game. It was not just that Vegas became the first team to score 100 or more points in the final, or that it won by the largest margin ever. That was mere offense in a game in which the Rebels' defense was the story. Duke's skinny freshman point guard, Bobby Hurley, was simply overwhelmed. Harried, surrounded, throwing the ball into the finally humbled Duke band, he behaved like the TV cartoon character Bart Simpson ("Don't have a cow, man") as his coach, Mike Krzyzewski, squirmed on the bench.

The underrated Vegas backcourt of Anderson Hunt and Greg Anthony delivered the punishing perimeter defense—"We couldn't get the ball past the hash marks," said Duke forward Christian Laettner—and, on offense, beat the Blue Devils off the dribble, on the run and every whichway for open shots. "It was scary just watching them," said Duke center Alaa Abdelnaby. "They engulfed us."

The normally beleaguered Tark rarely chomped on his omnipresent towel, so easily did UNLV rush to a 21–11 lead. The defense of the Rebels—"Vegas wouldn't let us play well, wouldn't let us function," said Coach K—drove Hurley out of the game with 12:37 left in the first half, whereupon he was replaced first by senior Phil Henderson, who moved over from shooting guard, and then by fellow rookie Bill McCaffrey, who were even less effective.

Just before Vegas took a 47–35 lead at intermission, Duke sophomore Brian Davis made an attempt to slap high fives with Laettner, missed and instead smacked his teammate in the face. It was that kind of rocky night in the Rockies for the team from Durham, N.C. WELCOME FELLOW SCHOLARS said the sarcastic sign that was waved at the UNLV team by the Blue Devil mascot. "We try to draw off that stuff emotionally," said Anthony, the vice-chairman of Las Vegas's Young Republicans, who last summer worked for Nevada Congresswoman Barbara Vucanovich in Washington, D.C.

Try? With slightly more than 16 minutes left, UNLV led 57–47. In the next 2:51, the Rebels scored those 18 straight points while Krzyzewski frantically tried to halt the deluge by calling two timeouts. During the run, Hunt, a 6′ 1″ sophomore from Detroit, sank two treys and three other baskets. Previously best known as the rebellious Rebel who had been suspended for a game for being delinquent in making payments on his student loan, Hunt finished with 29 points on 12-of-16 shooting and was voted the MVP of the Final Four.

The surprise was that he had none of UNLV's 16 steals. He didn't need any. Duke committed seven more turnovers for a total of 23. "This wasn't a game of X's and O's," said Krzyzewski. "It was one of complete . . . domination."

While the Rebels burned, Tarkanian fiddled most of the second half, undoubtedly wondering how he could get out of taping an instructional video in Tulsa the next day so that he could participate in a parade back home in Vegas. Nobody asked him if there would be a float reserved for the Two Ay.

After UNLV defeated Loyola Marymount in the West Regional final on March 25, Augmon spoke about the tournament's morality play, in which his team has had the leading role. "Good versus bad?" said Augmon. "We don't mind what anybody thinks of us. The Detroit Pistons were the Bad Boys, too, and look where they ended up."

Having ended the tear-stained run of Team Courage (Loyola Marymount), which had touched the heart of the nation while playing without its fallen leader, Hank Gathers; having worn down the tournament's most compelling player, Georgia Tech's teenage Ninja monster, Kenny Anderson, in the semis; and now facing everybody's favorite Dookies-next-door, those clean-cut guys from the postcard campus who had taken all those sentimental (that is to say, losing) journeys to the Final Four—well, you get the picture. If ever there was a perfectly cast villain, it was UNLV trying once again to win the NCAA trophy and simultaneously escape NCAA probation. "Sure, I'll be back next season," said Johnson, in answer to speculation about whether or not he would jump to the NBA. "If there are any games."

But wait. As much as this was a tournament of the buzzer-beaters—28 games won by four points or less, including five decided in overtime before Monday's blowout—it was also a season for muddying images. Both Vegas and Duke barely escaped elimination in regional competition at the hands of those legendary national powers, Ball State and Connecticut, respectively. And off the court, the Blue Devils may have forever rid themselves of their boring reputation, while their unangelic fans were losing their devilish rep.

First, back in January, Krzyzewski dressed down the student sports staff from the campus Chronicle in front of his team because the newspaper had dared to write objectively about the Blue Devils. Of course, the young journalists secretly taped Coach K's profane outburst. Later Henderson was reprimanded by the ACC commissioner's office for criticizing a referee, and following Duke's loss to Georgia Tech in the conference tournament, Henderson ripped into his teammates, calling them "babies" and "cop-outs." Was this actually Duke or put up your dukes? Finally, the Blue Devils' notorious student rooters toned down their harassment of visiting teams (who can forget their enchanting reference to Navy as "pond scum"?) and because of a new ACC rule had to cease throwing items onto the court lest Duke be penalized with a technical foul.

Not to worry. The Blue Devils blew away the other three teams in Denver with lightning-fast breaks of elocution. Abdelnaby, for example, credited Duke's success to "the maturation process." A typically cynical national press corps, having endured far too many charming, sensible, polysyllabic sentences from the Blue Devil intelligentsia at this event over the years, responded in kind. "This good-versus-evil story line?" said one writer. "I'm not sold on it. Duke isn't so evil. Annoying, maybe."

To anybody outside the Southeast, the chant of "ACC! ACC!" for member schools Duke and Georgia Tech must have seemed especially irritating during this Final Four. Sure enough, Arkansas heard its fill of it as the anticlimactic seconds ticked off in Duke's 97–83 semifinal victory. Razorback coach Nolan Richardson had spoken of the "Five P's—preparation prevents piss-poor performance." But how could Arkansas's Lenzie Howell have been prepared for what he faced when he went to the foul line with six minutes remaining and his team behind 78–77? Not only did the Duke band sing Old MacDonald Had a Farm ("And on this farm he had some pigs"), but the Georgia Tech band chimed in with "Pig! . . . Pig! . . . Pig!"

Howell made the two free throws, but that would be the last time Arkansas led. Thus, the Six P's: Pity the poor Porkers punctured by a Polish prodigy. Namely, Krzyzewski. Over the next 2:21 of this exhausting, all-hands-on-deck struggle—while Richardson surprisingly rested both Howell and Todd Day, who between them had led Arkansas from an 11-point deficit (54–43) to a seven-point advantage (69–62) and had scored 18 and 27 points, respectively—Duke slipped away with the game.

Transitioned it away, is more like it. Laettner, who finished with 19 points and 14 rebounds, and forward Robert Brickey, who had 17 and 11, devastated Arkansas inside. Now with Duke ahead 82–81, not quite as quickly as you can say abba-dabba-doo, Abdelnaby dunked and Henderson drained an on-second-thought-maybe-I-will-go-for-this-trey-right-here bomb and completed a fast-break layup to put the Blue Devils in front 89–81. Henderson would wind up with a game-high 28 points, and of his long-pause three-pointer, Krzyzewski said, "I'll always remember how long it took Phil on that shot. I thought he was working the clock."

While all this was going on, Day was hardly nigh; he was at the scorer's table, desperately waiting for a whistle to stop play so that he could reenter the game. When he and Howell finally returned to the floor, it was for only a couple of minutes. Richardson threw in the towel by benching two of his starters with 1:38 left. "I didn't think the altitude would have an effect," said Richardson afterward, "but when our guys came out, they were huffing and puffing and blowing. As winded as we were, as solid as Duke was playing, it was time."

From the coach who had proclaimed a game plan of 40 minutes of hell, the end was puzzling: 98 seconds of whimpering help. "In the last five minutes they were the ones who got worn out," said Hurley. "Maybe they would have had some more breaths if they didn't do so much talking."

three-pointers blindfolded—and sometimes grins admiringly at his treys, as if he just has—scored 20 points in the first half, while Brian Oliver and Anderson combined for 23 more. Georgia Tech grabbed a 53–46 lead at intermission when Anderson's double-clutching, lean-in, 12-foot jumper from the left baseline, with a bewildered Las Vegan draped over him like a drunken dice-thrower, went in. It was a brilliant shot for an NBA All-Star, much less a skinny, 166-pound college freshman.

Meanwhile, three of the Rebels' last four shots of the half didn't scratch iron, and a frustrated Johnson missed badly from underneath on the fourth. As they warmed up for the second half, Scott and Anderson were actually laughing. But in the first 3:38, UNLV refocused its energies and showed why all that glitter is mostly gold. With virtually no help from Johnson, who was either fouling or raising his fist to signal Tarkanian that he needed to take his weary bones to the bench, the Rebels outscored the Yellow Jackets 10–1 to seize control of the game.

Augmon, who would swoop and sway for 22 points and nine rebounds, and Hunt, who ended up with 20 points and seven assists, took over the scoring. More important, Vegas abandoned its fruitless stop-Anderson defense and went back to its scratch-and-sniff, man-to-man pressure—"They were in our jocks," said Georgia Tech forward Malcolm Mackey—which meant Augmon latched onto Scott, and Hunt onto Anderson.

The second-half stats were revealing: Scott converted 3 of 9 shots for nine points, and Anderson was 1 for 5 for just three points. Still, with 5:24 to go, UNLV led only 76–74. But the Yellow Jackets had lost their rhythm, and their spirit was barely flickering. Fifty-one seconds later, Hunt had sunk two more three-pointers to give the Rebels an 82–74 cushion and enough confidence for them to begin their usual late-game preening and screaming. "I'm quick, I'm quick," cried out UNLV reserve forward Moses Scurry at Oliver.

The 6′ 7″, 220-pound Scurry may be remembered as the fairly mean chap who punched Utah State coach Kohn Smith on Feb. 1 and who mimed drawing and shooting guns at the entire Ball State bench. However, Georgia Tech will better recall Scurry as a clutch rebounder—he contributed all 11 of his boards in 16 second-half minutes—who dominated in the paint. "The altitude bothered us obviously," said Scurry, "but we did what we had to do—got together, sucked it up and played hard."

Regardless of the adversity—how many game suspensions for things like bench-clearing fights, academic probations and nonpayments of hotel-room minibar tabs plagued UNLV?—Tark the Shark's sometimes raunchy Rebels have done just that all season. And in the tournament finale, this lovable rogue of a coach got his team so focused and so fraught with emotion that it treated proud Duke as if it were just another UC Irvine or Cal State–Fullerton. At the end, a heartwarming scene: The so-called thugs of Vegas circled their bald little coach as he hugged each and every one of them—Elmer Fudd congratulating all the cwazy wabbits.

"We want to win this championship bad," Johnson had said on Sunday, "so that the NCAA guys will have to stare at that trophy on Coach's desk while they ask all those questions during the next investigation."

But that's for later. After Monday night's victory, the Runnin' Rebels quickly donned T-shirts inscribed in honor of their mentor: SHARK TAKES HIS BITE. They had already ordered others for back home that would do justice to themselves. Those shirts would read THE NICE GUYS on the front and FINISHED FIRST on the back. ■

HIGHLIGHTS OF THE 1989-90 STANFORD CARDINAL WOMEN'S BASKETBALL SEASON

----------The Stanford Women's Basketball Team won the 1989-90 NCAA Championship, defeating Auburn, 88-81, in Knoxville, Tennessee, April 1, 1990...In the national semifinal game, Stanford defeated Virginia, 75-66, two nights earlier.

----------The Cardinal Women's Basketball Team had an exceptional season, winning a Stanford and Pac-10 record 32 games, while losing only one.

----------The Stanford Women's Basketball Team established over 40 Pacific-10 Conference, over 50 Stanford, and over 10 NCAA Tournament team and individual records during the season--a total of over 100 records overall.

----------Stanford head women's basketball coach Tara VanDerveer was named the Naismith National Coach of the Year, the WABC District 8 Coach of the Year for the third straight season, and the Pac-10 Coach of the Year for the second straight season.

----------Stanford senior guard Jennifer Azzi was named winner of the Margaret Wade Trophy and winner of the James Naismith Award, the top two most prestigious honors in all of women's basketball.

----------Stanford senior guard Jennifer Azzi was named a Kodak First Team All-America for the second straight season, the Pac-10 Player of the Year for the second straight season, First Team All-Pac-10 for the third straight season, Most Outstanding Player of the 1990 West Regional at Stanford, and the Most Outstanding Player of the NCAA Final Four in her home state of Tennessee.

----------Stanford senior forward Katy Steding was named First Team All-Pac-10 for the third straight season, named to the All-Tournament Team at the NCAA Final Four, named the CBS/Chevrolet Player of the Game in the NCAA championship game win over Auburn; led the Pac-10 Conference in three-point field goal percentage at .464, and never missed a game (playing in all 124) of her four year Stanford career.

----------Stanford junior guard Sonja Henning was named First Team All-Pac-10 for the second straight season, led the Pac-10 with a conference single-season assist record of 221, and led Stanford in scoring with 21 points in the NCAA championship game victory over Auburn.

----------Stanford junior center Trisha Stevens was named First Team All-Pac-10 in 1989-90, led the team in scoring with a 17.6

points per game average, led the Pac-10 Conference in field goal percentage at 54.9 percent, and was named to the NCAA Regional All-Tournament Team for the second straight season.

----------Stanford sophomore forward Julie Zeilstra was named a GTE/COSIDA Third Team Academic All-America, a Pac-10 First Team All-Academic, a GTE/COSIDA District 8 Regional All-Academic, scored in double figures in 24 straight games in 1989-90, and was fourth in the Pac-10 Conference in field goal percentage at .538.

----------Stanford freshman center Val Whiting was named the Pac-10 Freshman of the Year, led Stanford in rebounding with a 7.4 rebound per game average, established a Stanford single-season record of 57 blocks, and was second in the Pac-10 Conference in field goal percentage at .547.

----------Stanford senior guard Stacy Parson played in all 33 games this season, served as an excellent reserve, provided extra spark and scoring punch off the bench, and is Stanford's women's basketball candidate for an NCAA Post-Graduate Scholarship.

----------Stanford sophomore forward/guard Martha Richards, freshman forward Chris MacMurdo, freshman guard Molly Goodenbour, and freshman guard Angela Taylor were all included in what was considered the finest bench in the Pac-10 Conference and perhaps the best in the nation.

----------Assistant Coaches Amy Tucker, Julie Plank, and Renee Brown, along with Managers Leslie Crandell, Marla Tuchinsky, and Chris Jones, as well as Trainers Patti Millson and Ann Adkins all combined to form the best support group in the nation.

----------This team, which includes three high school valedictorians, combined to include five members on the Pac-10 All-Academic Team, had one member named to the Academic All-America team, and currently has one member applying for an NCAA Post-Graduate Scholarship.

CHRIS MacMURDO — Aiken, South Carolina
#31 Redshirt Freshman — 6-0 Forward

A human biology major with a 3.70 GPA...Will likely become involved in sports medicine...Ask anyone on the team "Who studies the most?" and the answer will be Chris MacMurdo...Chris played bits and pieces of the team's first five games last year, but then was declared a medical redshirt due to a pair of herniated disks...She had surgery last May, went through a long period of rehabilitation, and is coming back strong...She played in 25 of the team's 33 games this season...AVERAGED 3.6 POINTS, 2.3 REBOUNDS, AND 0.4 ASSISTS PER GAME DURING THE SEASON...Shot .487 from the floor, and .462 from the free throw line...Did not attempt a three-pointer...On the January road trip to Los Angeles, she put together back-to-back 5-rebound games versus UCLA and USC, tying her then- career-high in that category... Then had a new career-high 6 rebounds versus Cal at home...Just named Pac-10 All-Academic honorable mention in '89-'90.

Best career scoring game -- 11 points versus San Diego State this season.
High game this season -- same as above.

STACY PARSON — Los Angeles, California
#14 Senior — 5-6 Guard

A Social Psychology major with a 3.25 GPA...Stacy is someone who can talk about any subject under the sun...A senior who leads the team by example...Second Team Pac-10 All-Academic in 1988-89...Named Pac-10 All-Academic honorable mention in 1989-90...Stanford's lone player from the state of California...And when she graduates this June there will be no players from the state of California, as Stanford's two recruits for 1990-91 thus far are from Kansas and Michigan...AVERAGED 2.8 POINTS, 1.1 REBOUNDS, 1.4 ASSISTS PER GAME DURING THE SEASON...Shot .483 from the field, and .875 from the free throw line (7-of-8)...Shot over .500 from the field the vast majority of the season...She sprained her right ring finger (Mar. 16) the day before the Hawaii game and went 1-for-6 in that game from the floor...Stacy played quite a bit on the January road trip to her native Los Angeles (14 minutes versus UCLA, and 18 minutes versus USC)...Had one of her best games of the year at USC, scoring eight points, going 3-of-4 from the field and 2-of-2 from the line...Stacy followed that up with maybe her best game of the year versus Long Beach on national TV, as she scored 8 points (on 4-of-4 shooting) and had two assists and two steals in 26 minutes...Stacy knows her role...Plays directly behind All-America Jennifer Azzi, but Stacy can also play the point if necessary...A most valuable reserve.

Best career scoring game -- 16 points versus USC at USC as a sophomore in one of four games she has started in her career
High games this season -- 8 points versus USC at USC (3-of-4 from the field); and 8 points versus Long Beach State (4-of-4 from the field).

MARTHA RICHARDS — Hudson, Wisconsin
#41 Sophomore — 5-11 Guard/Forward

Majoring in Psychology with a 3.10 GPA...One of the players on the squad that keeps this team loose...A former National High School Player of the Year according to Women's Basketball News Service (following the 1987-88 season)...Can play either small forward or shooting guard...Could play the point in a pinch, if necessary...Had a tough year shooting the ball, although she shot the ball much better in her last 12 games or so...Her best game this season may have been versus Long Beach on national TV when she scored 8 points (on 3-of-4 from the field, and 2-of-2 from the line), and had a season-high 6 rebounds...She scored 10 points twice this season--once at Holy Cross and once at Arizona State...Her high scoring game of the year came against Cal at home--11 points...AVERAGED 3.3 POINTS, 1.9 REBOUNDS, AND 0.9 ASSISTS PER GAME DURING THE SEASON... Shot .340 from the field...Shot better from three-point range (.371)...Shot .815 from the free throw line (22-of-27)...Played for the West Team at the U.S. Olympic Festival in Oklahoma City last summer...A versatile athlete, Martha HAS joined the nationally-ranked Stanford women's golf team now that the basketball season is over...She is a former Wisconsin state high school champion golfer...The third-leading scorer in Wisconsin girls' state basketball history (behind current teammate Sonja Henning, who ranks number one in that category)...Named Pac-10 All-Academic honorable mention in '89-'90.

more

Best career scoring game -- 13 points versus Wisconsin in her very first collegiate game as a freshman in '88-'89.
High game this season -- 11 points versus Cal at home.

1987-88 FIRST TEAM ALL-PAC-10
1988-89 FIRST TEAM ALL-PAC-10
1989-90 FIRST TEAM ALL-PAC-10
NCAA FINAL FOUR ALL-TOURNEY

Set a SCHOOL RECORD versus Hawaii when she played in her 120th game... Breaks the old mark of 119 games played by Meg Metzger (1979-83)...PLAYED IN 124 STRAIGHT GAMES; SHE NEVER MISSED A GAME IN HER STANFORD CAREER...Perhaps the team's most improved player from the time she was a freshman until now (although Jennifer Azzi is also vastly improved)...Katy is a three-time First Team All-Pac-10 performer--as a sophomore and as a junior, and now again as a senior...A great threat from inside and outside...Can "bomb" people out of a zone with her "threes"...Has made at least one "three" in 26 of the 33 games this year...Has shot 50 percent or better from three-point range in 19 of those 33 games this year...Overall, she shot .464 from three-point range, which placed her first in the Pac-10...Made 6 "threes", an NCAA Final Four record, in the NCAA championship game versus Auburn...Made 5 "threes" versus both San Diego State and Oregon this season...She was 4-of-4 from three-point range at Arizona State...AVERAGED 15.1 POINTS, 6.7 REBOUNDS, AND 2.8 ASSISTS PER GAME DURING THE SEASON...Shot .468 from the field, and .817 from the free throw line...She is the seventh leading scorer in the Pac-10...Started 68 straight games, and 115 of the last 117...She scored in double figures in 25 of her last 29 games, and in 46 of her last 51, and in 58 of her last 64...Steding had five double-doubles this season...Her most recent double-double came at Arizona State (18 points, 12 rebounds)... ONLY TWO PLAYERS IN STANFORD HISTORY ARE IN THE STANFORD TOP 10 IN POINTS, REBOUNDS, and ASSISTS--KATY STEDING AND (AS OF THE MISSISSIPPI GAME) JENNIFER AZZI...Entering the NCAA Final Four, Katy is 3rd in Stanford career scoring with 1586 points, 2nd in career rebounding with 864, and 7th in career assists with 280...Is the 10th-leading rebounder in the league (tied) this season (6.7 pg)...Had 16 rebounds in a game, her career-high in that category, versus Arizona State as a freshman in 1986-87...Has changed her game from her freshman year, when she was strictly a power forward.

Best career scoring game -- 27 points versus San Diego State this season (accomplished in 21 minutes).
High game this season -- Game as above.

-- 35 points in the NCAA second-round game versus Hawaii (13-of-18 from field) on Mar. 17, 1990.

Third best career game -- 31 points versus Iowa in the NCAA Midwest Regional at Louisiana Tech last year as a sophomore.

ANGELA TAYLOR
#22 Freshman

Mountain Home, Idaho
5-6 Guard

Angela's story is perhaps the most heart-warming of this 1989-90 season... She began on Oct. 15 as a walk-on, no certainty whatsoever to make the team ...A few days later, Coach VanDerveer declared she had made the team... Angela's quiet, pleasant demeanor and hard work ethic have made her a favorite among her teammates...And then just before Christmas, VanDerveer rewarded Taylor by granting her a basketball scholarship for the remainder of the season...AVERAGED 0.8 POINTS, 0.6 REBOUNDS, AND 0.2 ASSISTS... Shot .316 from the floor (6-of-18), .500 from three-point range (1-of-2), and .556 (5-of-9) from the line in 23 game appearances...Angela made her

Tim Grgurich
Assistant Coach

Tim Grgurich begins his tenth season with the Runnin' Rebels coaching staff. As Jerry Tarkanian's right-hand man, Grgurich adds a tremendous amount of coaching expertise to the UNLV basketball program.

A graduate of Central Catholic High School in Pittsburgh, PA, Grgurich earned three letters in both basketball and baseball. He then attended the University of Pittsburgh and was again a three-year letterwinner in both basketball and baseball. While playing basketball at Pitt, Grgurich helped the Panthers to quarterfinal appearances in both the NCAA and NIT tournaments.

COACHING EXPERIENCE: Grgurich began his collegiate coaching career as an assistant coach at Pitt. Serving as an assistant for the Panthers for 11 season, Grgurich also coached Pitt's freshman basketball team and fashioned an impressive 99-33 record. He was appointed head coach of the Panthers in 1975 and compiled a five-year record of 71-70, including a 52-30 mark in his final three campaigns. As head coach, he guided the Panthers to a pair of NIT appearances. He also recruited and coached Billy Knight, who earned all-America honors before enjoying a successful NBA career. Grgurich earned numerous coaching honors at Pitt and was named the Pittsburgh Basketball Writers Coach of the Year for the 1975-76, 1977-78, and 1978-79 seasons.

PERSONAL INFORMATION: Grgurich was born 8/11/44. He also earned a masters degree from the University of Pittsburgh. He is married to the former Kathy Kinley and has two children, Jennifer (15) and Suzanne (11).

Ron Ganulin
Assistant Coach

Ron Ganulin begins his third season with the UNLV coaching staff after a successful coaching tour of duty on the east coast. Ganulin's contributions are on the offensive and defensive sides of the ball as well as coordinating the recruiting efforts.

A graduate of Erasmus Hall High School in Brooklyn, NY, Ganulin attended Long Island University where he earned a bachelor of science degree in health and physical education. At LIU, he helped the Blackbirds to three consecutive NCAA Division II tournament appearances. His 1967 team lost in the semi-finals to eventual national champion Winston-Salem, which was led by Earl Monroe.

COACHING EXPERIENCE: Ganulin served two years as an assistant coach to Old Dominion University in Norfolk, VA before coming to UNLV. Prior to his term at ODU, Ganulin served on Bob Dukiet's staff at St. Peter's College in New Jersey for three years. He was head coach of New York Tech in Old Westbury, NY for two seasons (1979-81) where he compiled a record of 40-15. He led Tech to the 1980 Division II finals where they lost to Virginia Union, 80-74. The 1979-80 team finished with a 26-3 record and was led by ECAC Player of the Year Kevin Hicks. Before moving to Tech, Ganulin was an assistant at C.W. Post College in Greenvale, NY (1977-79). He previously had a three-year coaching stint with the Gan Schmuel club team in Israel. He began his coaching career as the junior varsity coach at Brooklyn Tech before moving on as the head coach at Baldwin School in Manhattan, NY for five seasons.

PERSONAL INFORMATION: Ganulin graduated from Long Island University, 1967. He is a native of Queens, NY. NBA coaches Billy Cunningham and Doug Moe both attended his high school, Erasmus Hall. He is single.

Cleveland Edwards
Part-time Assistant Coach

Cleveland Edwards begins his sixth year with the Runnin' Rebel staff. He spent the previous two seasons as administrative assistant with the program. He also has an extensive background in academic consulting and has handled various administrative duties for the Runnin' Rebel program.

A graduate of Fifth Avenue High School in Pittsburgh, PA, Edwards was an outstanding athlete in both football and basketball. A prep all-America in both football and basketball, he earned a basketball scholarship to Pittsburgh's Robert Morris Junior College, where he earned all-America honors. Edwards then enrolled at the University of Pittsburgh where he played for Tim Grgurich. While at Pitt, Edwards earned numrous honors and was selected to the all-East and all-Steel Bowl squads. Following his playing days at Pitt, Edwards was appointed assistant coach at his alma mater. He eventually moved to Las Vegas where he served one year as the assistant football and basketball coach at Bishop Gorman High School.

COACHING EXPERIENCE: Edwards' first coaching job was an assistant position at Farrell High School in 1972 just outside of Pittsburgh. His collegiate coaching debut was in 1973 as an assistant at Robert Morris Junior college where he coached all-America Earl Cureton. Cureton later starred in the NBA for the Detroit Pistons. In 1977 he was appointed assistant coach at the University of Pittsburgh. Following a stint at Pitt, he came to Las Vegas and coached at Bishop Gorman. The Gaels captured both the basketball and football state crowns in the 1983-84 academic year.

PERSONAL INFORMATION: Edwards graduated from the University of Pittsburgh, 1972. Date of birth is 2-5-48.

HEAD COACH JERRY TARKANIAN

(All totals includes games played going into the 1990 NCAA Tournament)

 He is the nation's winningest active coach by percentage at the major college level with a percentage of .824 (559-119) entering the NCAA Tournament. He is followed by Temple's John Chaney who boasts a .780 winning percentage (417-119) in 18 seasons.

 Tarkanian is just percentage points behind Clair Bee as the all-time winningest coach in college history. Bee ended his tenure at Long Island University and Rider College with a .8266 winning percentage, just ahead of Tarkanian's .8245. Tarkanian hovered above Bee's mark for three months in 1987-88 before losing to UC Irvine in the Big West Tournament.

 He has taken his major college teams to the NCAA Tournament 15 times in 21 years, including eight consecutive years, making two Final Four appearances.

 After 29 years at the college level, Tarkanian has won 771 games, an average of 26.6 victories per season.

 Tarkanian's winning percentage for his 29 year career is an amazing .842 (771-145).

 He has failed to win 20+ games in a season only twice in 29 years. And, only three times have Tarkanian-led teams lost 10 or more games.

KING OF THE BIG WEST

 Tarkanian is the winningest coach in conference history with a 12 year regular season conference record of 169-17. He was 40-4 in four seasons at Long Beach State and is 129-13 after eight seasons at UNLV.

 Tarkanian is the only coach in conference history to record 100 league victories.

 He has won 12 regular season conference championships in 12 seasons as a Big West coach.

 He recorded a conference record 25 consecutive Big West victories at Long Beach State (1969-72).

 Tarkanian owns an eight year conference tournament record of 18-2 (.900), including three victories and another championship in the 1990 Big West Tournament.

HIS KIND OF TOWN

 The way he owns the city of Long Beach, California, Tarkanian should run for Mayor. Long Beach, site of this year's Big West Tournament as well as Tarkanian's former hometown, is a town that is very, very good to "The Shark". With three more wins in the Big West Conference Tournament in 1990, Tarkanian has an unbelievable record of 81-0 while coaching games played within the city limits of Long Beach. Those games include a 65-0 record as head coach of Long Beach State and a 16-0 record as the head coach of UNLV.

Nationally Prominent

* He is the nation's winningest active coach by percentage at the major college level with a percentage of .823 (530-114). He is followed by Temple's John Chaney who boasts a .786 percentage (397-109) in 17 seasons.

* Tarkanian is just percentage points behind Clair Bee as the all-time winningest coach in college history. Bee ended his tenure at Long Island University and Rider College with an .8266 percentage,just ahead of Tarkanian's .8229. Tarkanian hovered above Bee's mark for three months in 1987-88 before losing to UC Irvine in the Big West Tournament.

* He enters the '89-90 campaign as the sixth winningest active college coach in terms of most wins with 530.

* He has taken his major college teams to NCAA postseason play 14 times in 21 years, including the last seven in-a-row and two Final Four appearances.

* His 14 NCAA appearances are tied for the fifth most in NCAA history. Tarkanian's current line of seven straight NCAA Tournaments is tied for third best among current streaks, and his 27 NCAA Tournament wins is ranked sixth among all-time coaches.

* After 28 years at the college level, Tarkanian has won 742 games, an average of 26.5 wins per season.

* Tarkanian's winning percentage for his 28 year career is an amazing .841 (742-140).

* He has failed to win 20+ games in a season only twice in 28 years. And only three times have Tarkanian-led teams lost 10 or more games.

KING OF THE BIG WEST

* Tarkanian is the winningest coach in conference history with a 11-year regular season conference record of 153-15. He was 40-4 in four seasons at Long Beach State, and is 113-11 after seven seasons at UNLV.

* Tarkanian is the only coach in conference history to record 100 league victories.

* He has won 11 regular season conference championships in 11 seasons as a Big West coach.

* He recorded a conference record 25 consecutive Big West wins at Long Beach State (1969-72).

* Tarkanian won three consecutive Big West Coach of the Year awards at UNLV (1982-85) and five overall (1987-88).

* He owns a seven-year conference tournament record of 15-2 (.882).

A COMMUNITY FIGURE Despite all his achievements on the basketball court, Tarkanian is often overlooked for what he does off the court in the Las Vegas community. A very popular figure, sports or otherwise, he spends many hours of his time involved with community related functions and charities. He has been honored by the Las Vegas Kidney Foundation as Man of the Year for his efforts on behalf of that organization, and in April of 1990, he will receive Man of the Year recognition for humanitarian service from Women at Work, a national fundraising arm of Southwestern Christian College. He also runs statewide basketball camps for youngsters of all ages, as well as being an active member of various charitable organizations.

Tarkanian has been recognized by the university for his community efforts, being named Assistant Athletic Director with designated duties as Director of Community Relations in 1982. He was promoted during the summer of 1988 to his post as Senior Assistant Athletic Director.

BORN, RAISED, AND EDUCATED A native of Euclid, Ohio, Jerry Tarkanian attended Pasadena City College before graduating from Fresno State University in 1955. He proceeded to earn his master's degree with honors in educational management from Redlands University.

Tarkanian and his wife, Lois, have four children, Pamela, Jodie, Danny and George.

STILL GOING STRONG From his passion with pressure defenses to his obsession with towel-chewing, Jerry Tarkanian has indeed compiled remarkable statistics in his lengthy tenure as a college head coach. Twenty-eight years is a very long time to do one thing, let alone do it well. Needless to say, Jerry Tarkanian has done it.

of astounding. Last season he became the first coach in conference history to win 100 or more conference games at the same school. Under Tarkanian's reign, UNLV has won seven consecutive Big West regular season championships including an unprecedented undefeated campaign (16-0) in 1986-87, and a seven-year conference mark of 113-11 (.911). In 11 years overall Tark's ledger is 153-15 (.911) in Big West action. In short, Tarkanian has literally owned the Big West.

A STORYBOOK SEASON One of Tarkanian's most remarkable seasons was just three years ago in 1986-87 when the Scarlet and Gray reached storybook heights in Las Vegas. Another masterpiece for the Rembrandt of collegiate coaches, the Rebels finished the season with a record 37 wins against just two losses, landing at the NCAA Final Four. With a Western Region championship and a semifinal loss to eventual national champion Indiana, the Rebels captured the hearts and imaginations of new fans nationwide. UNLV won a fifth consecutive Big West regular season title along the way with an unprecedented 16-0 record, and claimed its fourth Big West Tournament title in five seasons.

IN THE BEGINNING Prior to his successful career at UNLV, Tarkanian put Long Beach State basketball on the map and began his terror against Big West opponents. In five seasons with the 49ers, he compiled a 116-17 (.872) record and made four trips to the NCAA Tournament. Beginning with the 1968-69 season and ending with his final campaign in '72-73, Tarkanian never lost a home game at the "Beach," winning a remarkable 65 games without a loss. He also earned accolades as Professor of the Year and Salesman of the Year for his efforts in promoting the university. He was recently elected to the Long Beach State Athletic Hall of Fame.

His initial days of coaching began humbly enough at San Joaquin Memorial High School in Fresno in 1956. He moved onward to Antelope Valley High School (Lancaster, CA) in 1958 before making subsequent moves to Redlands High School (Redlands, CA) in 1959 and Riverside City College in 1961.

Tarkanian's collegiate coaching odyssey began in 1961-62 at Riverside City College. His first season ended with an undistinguished 14-13 mark, but things soon changed as he led Riverside to four straight 30+ win seasons and four consecutive California JC championships. He recorded a perfect season in 1963-64, 35-0, and tallied a 145-22 (.868) overall mark in five years at Riverside.

He moved to Pasadena City College for two seasons beginning in 1966-67, compiling a 87-4 (.944) two-year mark and still another California JC crown. He then ventured to Long Beach State in the fall of '68 to begin his present tenure as a major college coach.

Other Tarkanian coaching posts include national and international assignments. He coached in Ecuador for the People-to-People Sports Committee in April and May of 1968. He coached the Junior College Olympic Team the same year.

A RUNNIN' REBEL FAMILY Tarkanian makes his home on the basketball court. He is both father and teacher to the members of his prestigious household, preaching virtues such as hard work, loyalty, and discipline. Even his wife, Dr. Lois Tarkanian, has been instrumental in maintaining his basketball household. She has been a consistent contributor in establishing an academic support system for Rebel basketball that is among the finest and most progressive in the nation.

What is most remarkable about this UNLV family is that in a city of bright lights and big-name stars, the hometown Runnin' Rebels shine brightest.

What They Ask Us About the Most

Tarkanian trademark Tark's Towel. The towel dates back to Jerry Tarkanian's coaching days at Redlands High School in 1960 when, during a league championship game against Ramona High School, Coach sought a simpler way to quench his thirst. Rather than continue walking to the fountain at the end of the court, Tarkanian soaked a towel with water and chewed on it whenever he needed a drink. Needless to say, he continued chewing as the game went to overtime, and a tradition had been established.

"I just got sick and tired of running to and from the drinking fountain in the middle of the game, so I grabbed a towel, soaked it in water, and carried it back to the bench. We won the game and the championship, and since I'm not one to change when something works, I've stuck with the towel ever since. I guess I believe in lucky charms.

Actually, there are two towels now. The one on top is soaked in nothing more than tap water, and a dry one on the bottom is used simply to keep the top one from sitting on the floor. The towel is wetted and folded (into 16ths, by the way), by a designated student-manager who has learned the folding technique from a predecessor. The towels are handed to Coach Tarkanian as he enters the court at pre-game.

Head Coach and Senior Assistant Athletic Director for Community Relations

Jerry Tarkanian

★ The nation's winningest active collegiate basketball coach (by percentage)!

★ Five-time Big West Conference Coach of the Year.

UNLV head coach Jerry Tarkanian enters his 29th year of collegiate coaching and his 17th season at the helm of the Runnin' Rebels as one of America's most successful and well known college basketball coaches.

For 28 years, he has done one thing—coach—very well. So well in fact that he is the nation's winningest active collegiate coach by percentage. Known nationwide for his colorful personality, "Tark" has compiled an .823 winning percentage at the major college level, and is considered by many to be one of the best collegiate coaches ever.

And rightly so. During the 1987-88 season, Tarkanian actually became college basketball's all-time winningest coach for a three-month period (December 8 through March 10) after the Rebels defeated Nevada-Reno and his winning percentage rose above that of the legendary Clair Bee. Bee, a former coach at Long Island University and Rider College, remains the winningest college coach of all-time, ending his career at 410-86 (.8266).

Now in his 17th season at UNLV, Tarkanian is the sixth winningest active coach in terms of most victories with 530. His 14 NCAA appearances are fifth most in NCAA history. His current string of seven consecutive NCAA appearances is tied for third best among current streaks, and his 27 NCAA Tournament wins is ranked sixth among all-time coaches.

He has molded the Runnin' Rebels into a veritable basketball dynasty. Failing to win 20+ games in a season only once at UNLV, the Tarkanian era at UNLV has become known as the "Dynasty in the Desert." The latest milestone, career victory No. 400 at UNLV, became a reality on February 6, 1989 as the Rebels defeated UC Santa Barbara 77-61.

NATION'S BEST RECORD Since his arrival at UNLV, Tarkanian has always managed to attract the top prospects, evidenced by ten NCAA postseason bids including the last seven consecutive years. Over those past seven seasons, Tarkanian has led UNLV to the nation's best record at 212-34 (.861) and during that span, the Rebels have averaged a seasonal record of 30-5.

Tarkanian has twice led his clubs to the NCAA Final Four. His 1976-77 club was 29-3 and eventually finished third, while his 1986-87 Rebels finished with a 37-2 ledger and also finished one game shy of appearing in the national championship. Tarkanian-led squads at UNLV also have advanced in NIT contention twice including a Final Four appearance in 1979-80. Overall, Tarkanian has a 31-18 (.633) postseason record (at UNLV: 20-10 NCAA, 4-3 NIT; at Long Beach State: 7-5 NCAA).

OWNING THE BIG WEST If his success at the national level can be considered commendable, his success at the conference level can be looked upon as nothing short

The Tarkanian Family Then, and Now: The year was 1964 (above left) back in the Riverside City College days. Coach Tarkanian sits with Danny (then two years old) and George (seven months) while Lois is with Pamela (six) and Jodie (four). A year ago (right photo) the Tarkanian family welcomed the first grandchild, Justine Rose King (born August 24, 1988). The Tarkanian children (left to right) Danny, Jodie, Pamela (Mrs. Erik King) and George have varied careers. Pamela is a teacher in a couseling based program for emotionally disturbed children in the Clark County School District; Jodie is an intensive care nurse; George is in a doctoral program in political science; and Danny is practicing law in Las Vegas after graduating magna cum laude from the University of San Diego Law School in 1988.

THE CARDINAL RULES

Led by Jennifer Azzi, Stanford flew past Auburn to win the women's NCAA basketball crown

Auburn's normally sticky defense couldn't quite keep up with the hard-driving Azzi.

BY HANK HERSCH

FOUR AND A HALF YEARS AGO, TARA VanDerveer awoke in a Knoxville, Tenn., hotel room while on her first cross-country recruiting trip as the women's basketball coach at Stanford. Her head throbbed from jet lag, and though it was September, the humidity outside was withering. VanDerveer put on her lucky cotton skirt, the one with gray and white stripes, drove 20 miles west to Oak Ridge and sat in a wing chair in the living room of Jim and Donna Azzi. Over a soft drink, she told the Azzis and their daughter Jennifer, then a high school All-America, that if Jennifer signed with Stanford, the Cardinal would win the national championship before she graduated. Under VanDerveer's predecessor the season before, Stanford had gone 9–19, but Jennifer eventually agreed to play for the Cardinal anyway. "Jennifer was like me," VanDerveer says. "She was a risk taker."

On Sunday afternoon, Jim and Donna drove the 20 miles from Oak Ridge to Knoxville, where they saw Jennifer's risk pay off—not to mention VanDerveer's presumptuous prediction come true. Before 16,595 fans at Thompson-Boling Arena on the University of Tennessee campus, the 5′ 9″ Azzi guided a high-octane, well-blended Stanford team to its first NCAA women's basketball title with an 88–81 triumph over Auburn. Though fellow guard Sonja Henning outscored her (21 points to 17), center Trisha Stevens outrebounded her (10 to four) and forward Katy Steding out-three-pointed her (six to four), Azzi was named the MVP of the Final Four. "She's the heartbeat of that team," said Auburn assistant coach Carol Ross. "That's why she deserved it."

Azzi also provided a fairy-tale plot line that was too touching to ignore: Local girl goes 2,500 miles west to attend a brainy college, returns home and wins hearts, honors and a national championship. "It is kind of like a storybook," said Azzi after the game.

Last Thursday, Woodland Elementary, Azzi's alma mater, sent a floral arrangement garnished with gingerbread men to her at the Cardinal's hotel in Knoxville. On Friday, while Stanford was defeating Virginia 75–66 in the semifinals, Azzi was announced as the winner of the Wade Trophy, which goes to the best senior player in the land. Then came Sunday's finale, followed by—yep—a trip to Oak Ridge, where Jim and Donna had the team, the band and 50 of the family's nearest and dearest friends over to the house for Domino's pizza. Mayor Roy Pruett stopped by, too—to drop off the key to the city.

Signing Azzi was the start of a recruiting bonanza for VanDerveer, 36, who had gone to Stanford from Ohio State. Since then she has reeled in blue-chippers from nine states and improved the Cardinal's record each year, from 14–14 in Azzi's freshman season to 32–1 in 1989–90. VanDerveer also kept reminding her troops of her prediction. Last fall the players put up posters around their locker room that read NCAA CHAMPIONS—GET COMFORTABLE WITH IT. "There was no doubt in our minds we would win it all from day one," says Stevens.

The Cardinal's first opponent in Knoxville was expected to be Tennessee—until Virginia toppled the Lady Vols 79–75 in overtime in the East Regional final. Tennessee's absence from the Final Four sparked anxiety. It mattered a lot to some of the leaders of women's college basketball that their showcase event had a chance to outdraw the men's Final Four because Thompson-Boling has a larger capacity than Denver's McNichols Arena (24,500 to 17,000). After losing, Tennessee launched a campaign that used local TV spots and 5,000 postcards to urge ticket holders to show up or at least give their seats to someone who would. Ultimately, Knoxville set a women's Final Four record with 39,490 paid customers. The turnstile count, however, lagged slightly behind Denver's for each session.

The Cavaliers' chances against Stanford depended on the play of their sophomore guards, Dawn Staley and Tammi Reiss. Staley is all Philadelphia slash and flash—"I try to get the job done in a quiet way like Maurice Cheeks, but my game gets out of hand," she says—while Reiss copied Azzi's all-around game. "She first caught my eye because she was a white girl playing a very savvy, fluent game," says Reiss, who has studied dozens of tapes of Azzi in action.

Reiss held Azzi without a shot for the first 11:10, but then Virginia coach Debbie Ryan, sensing Reiss was tiring, switched Staley on to Azzi. The move proved costly. With Stanford trailing 18–16, Azzi converted a driving, spinning bank shot and a three-pointer from the right wing. Then she sank a trey from the left. The Cardinal went in front 24–20 and never trailed again. Steding led Stanford's balanced attack with 18 points. Afterward, Azzi, who racked up 15 points, six rebounds and five assists, said, "The thing about this team is, if things aren't going well one way, there's always something else."

Auburn, on the other hand, had come to rely on one thing: tenacious pressure defense. The Lady Tigers had lost every first-stringer but junior forward Carolyn Jones from their Final Four teams of 1987–88 and '88–89 and had struggled through December looking for a cohesive starting combination. Coach Joe Ciampi finally decided to go with a small, quick lineup that stressed defense

Had the Final Four been in Lake Oswego, not Knoxville, Steding might have been MVP.

On Friday, Auburn's Venus-flytrap D came at Lacy from all angles.

and to make 6′ 6″ center Linda Godby, a potent scorer who had been starting, his first substitute off the bench. Auburn took off. Coming into the Final Four, the Lady Tigers were holding the opposition to 37.7% shooting with their hard-nosed play. "We don't wear rhinestones on our gym shoes," said guard Evelyn Thompson. "We just play all 40 minutes and all 94 feet."

But even Ciampi's sliding 2–3 zone didn't figure to stop Louisiana Tech, the Midwest Regional champion, and its star, Venus Lacy. The 6′ 4″ Lacy had started her career as a 220-pound sophomore who feasted on Snickers bars and who couldn't be depended on to show up in class or on the court, but she blossomed into a 190-pound senior who averaged 24.2 points and 12.7 rebounds while leading the Lady Techsters to a No. 1 national ranking and a 32–0 record coming into the Final Four.

However, for half of the first half against Auburn, Lacy was on the bench with two fouls, and the Lady Tigers pulled in front 43–23 just before intermission. Lacy, who wound up with 26 points and 15 rebounds, led a second-half Tech rally that cut the lead to 66–58 with 4:24 to go, but Jones made four free throws to seal an 81–69 Lady Techster loss, their first since Auburn beat Tech 76–71 in the semifinals last year.

Before the championship game, VanDerveer stressed to her players that they not only had to break the Lady Tigers' press but also had to attack their defense once past midcourt. Auburn, in turn, wanted to somehow stop a Stanford attack that was scoring 92.9 points a game. "We scouted them to see who played well in big games," said Ross. "Unfortunately, it was a different player every time."

Stevens provided the Cardinal's inside punch early, while Steding extended the Auburn defense with her three-point shooting. Steding arrived at Stanford with Azzi in 1986 as a 6-foot post player from Lake Oswego, Ore., but after her freshman season, VanDerveer moved her to forward. Steding suffered through what she calls "the ugly year," but gradually she developed the outside-shooting range that made her Stanford's toughest player to guard. She had 18 points, seven rebounds and five assists on Sunday. "I had a premonition," says VanDerveer. "I told Katy the first day of practice she had to be MVP of the national tournament." Had it been played in Lake Oswego, she would have been.

Auburn, trailing 22–11, suddenly found its stride. Jones went over and around Azzi for 14 of her title-game record 24 points in a 30–10 run that gave the Lady Tigers a 41–32 edge with 2:07 remaining in the half. Henning, however, answered with a pivotal play. She snapped up a loose ball from Thompson, sped down the court, made a running bank shot, despite being fouled, and nailed the free throw. After that Stanford scored six unanswered points to make the score 41–41 at the half.

Then, with the Cardinal clinging to a 48–46 advantage, Azzi took over the game. She fired a lead pass to Julie Zeilstra for a layup. She canned a pull-up jumper from 16 feet. Then she took an inbounds feed from Steding and buried a three-pointer to cap a 9–2 run. The Cardinal never looked back.

For VanDerveer, the win was an emotional one. Two days earlier she had wanted to protest the abolition of women's basketball at Oklahoma with a moment of silence before Sunday's tip-off (page 19). She has been a hoops junkie all her life—as an undergraduate at Indiana in the early 1970s, she spent her spare time observing Bob Knight's practices—but growing up in Albany, N.Y., she had not been able to play because her high school didn't have a girls' team. "[Loyola Marymount's] Hank Gathers died playing a game he loved," said VanDerveer last Saturday. "What people don't realize is that women love it just as much." In the end, she decided to display her feelings about the Sooners' abandonment by wearing a red ribbon—Oklahoma's colors are red and white—on her blouse.

Thanks to Azzi and Co., the title gave VanDerveer more pleasant thoughts to consider, as well as a new good-luck bauble for her right hand. "I couldn't wait to put it on," said VanDerveer of the championship ring, which should help make recruiting easier. "I sure will be happy to go into a living room now that I can show off this thing." ■

SCHOOLS WORTH A CLOSER LOOK

Here are several top colleges and universities that don't cost a fortune, as well as some that may be better than you think

In the groves of academe, nothing grows more slowly than reputation or more quickly than tuition prices. The tables below take both factors into account, highlighting those up-and-coming schools whose images may not yet have caught up to their campus realities as well as those schools that already are ranked at the top of their classes for academic excellence but whose tuitions have remained well below Ivy League prices.

Although tuitions at many top-ranked private national universities have soared beyond $13,000 a year, many excellent public universities are still within reach of the average family. One year of tuition at Harvard or Yale, for example, buys two years at the University of California at Los Angeles, ranked 16th among national universities. And while the cost differences are less dramatic for top-ranked national liberal-arts schools, they are substantial just the same. Swarthmore and Amherst, for example, cost about one third more than Washington and Lee University, also rated among the best in its category.

This year, for the first time, U.S. News asked college presidents, deans and administrators to identify those schools whose recent educational innovations and improvements made them "up-and-coming" in their categories. These rising stars of American higher education have been propelled upward by a mixture of grants, alumni contributions and the energies of enlightened leadership. For parents and students looking for the hidden gems of academe, the list below is an excellent place to start the search. □

BEST BUYS

These colleges and universities have the lowest tuitions among the top-ranked schools in each category. For public schools, the figures reflect 1989-90 out-of-state tuitions.

Respondents were asked to choose five "up-and-coming" schools, in their own academic category, based on "recent educational innovations and improvements." Six winning schools were chosen in the national categories; two were chosen in each of eight regional categories. However, more schools were listed in categories with ties. Schools are listed alphabetically.

((President Bob Maxim, my fellow Houstonian. President Donald Kennedy. Lois Tarkanian. [[Other acknowledgements to come.]])) Welcome to the White House.

We are here today to honor a proud college tradition -- a sport I love, though it is one I did not play.

((It's true that I could dribble a ball 360 degrees clear around my back, between my legs and over my head.\\ But it's exactly that kind of behavior that got me kicked off the college bowling team.))\\\

((Of course, my grandkids were very interested in the NCAA Basketball Tournament this year, but sometimes they miss some of the nuances of the game. As far as they're concerned -- the "Final Four" are the Teen-age Mutant Ninja Turtles.))\\\

But we are here today to honor two great teams out of the West, the final two of the Final Fours -- Stanford and the University of Nevada at Las Vegas -- better known as The Cardinal and The Running Rebels.

Well, to put it simply, both teams were awesome. The Cardinal Women's Basketball team won a Stanford and PAC-10 record of 32 games. In all, a total of 100 individual and team records broken in this season.

So no one was surprised when Tara VanDerveer was named the Naismith National Coach of the Year. From the very start, she instilled a winning attitude, so that you began your season as champions. Coach, you've given everyone reason to be proud down on the Farm.\\\

Trisha Stevens -- I understand that in your career the number 35 has some significance.\\ And when you came out on the court against Auburn, you set the tone for the rest of the game.

Katy Steding -- three must be your magic number, considering the way you bombed opponents with treys.

Julie Zeilstra ((ZEAL-Stra)) -- I understand that you managed to start all 33 games this season at forward, despite a problem with your achilles heels. When the going got tough, you only got tougher.

Sonja Henning -- after your victory over the Lady Tigers, Stanford should light 21 candles in your honor. They say you're one-half of what is considered to be the best backcourt in women's collegiate basketball. So let me turn to your partner.\\

You know, one of my favorite bands is the Oak Ridge Boys. Well, let me salute an Oak Ridge lady -- a young woman from Tennessee who went to play basketball in Palo Alto, only to achieve her greatest triumph in Knoxville, 20 miles from home. It's no coincidence that Stanford senior guard Jennifer Azzi won the Margaret Wade Trophy and the James Naismith Award -- the two top honors in all of women's basketball.\\\

Now it UNLV's turn -- ((And I just hope you were all able to fit through the metal detectors.\\ I know that for you the NCAA Final was a life-and-death struggle, before you finally nipped Duke by thirty points.\\ Talk about a cliff-hanger.\\ The greatest suspense in the last quarter was waiting to see how Brent Musburger would say goodbye to CBS.))\\\

((Well, let me begin with a salute to Coach Tarkanian. Now, I'm not saying that Tark the Shark has any influence on me, but the next time I'm sweating out a close vote in Congress, don't be surprised if you see me chewing on a towel.))\\\ But towel or no towel, it's was the opposition that was shark-bitten.

Of course, we should give the Blue Devils their due. But you are, after all, the first team to trip a hundred in a Final. And if there were some out there who were not cheering for you, just remember what Wilt Chamberlain once said: "Nobody roots for Goliath."\\\

Stacey Augmon -- You duked it out with Duke all the way.

Anderson Hunt -- You kept the Blue Devils behind the Mason-Dixon line; and made 12 of 16 to become the MVP of the Final Four. Congratulations.

((And then there is Moses. You know, the Biblical Moses parted the waters with his staff. Moses Scurry could part the Potomac with his Rebel yell.))\\\

Larry Johnson -- No wonder you're the first team consensus all-American. In just half an hour, you racked up 22 points, 11 rebounds, four steals and two treys. But what impresses me most is that while you're a probable first choice -- you've made it clear that you'll go for the BA before you go for the NBA.\\\

Greg Anthony, I understand you suffered a broken jaw that had to be wired shut during this season, but that you played through your pain.\\ As Vice-Chairman of the Young Republicans, I hope you'll be coming back to Washington someday.

And finally, let me congratulate every player in both teams, those of you on the bench as well as the center court, and all the assistant coaches, managers and trainers -- this is your day.

In closing, let me say we're here today to celebrate another kind of championship -- the kind of satisfaction that comes not from a fast break or a slam dunk -- but from the quiet achievement of scholarship and learning.

This is the commitment of so many, from Greg and Larry to Trisha, who aspires to be a doctor -- to Chris MacMurdo with a 3.7 average in human biology -- to Stacy Parson, a psych major who is said to be the team encyclopedia.

And just look at your institutions. US News and World Report identified UNLV as one of the "up and coming schools of the '90s." Little wonder it is already one of the fastest growing universities in America. And, of course, we are also familiar with the academic tradition of Stanford University. So whether you study amid the moorish arches of Stanford's quads, or in the modern complexes of UNLV, you are learning that when the cheering has faded and the trophy is on the shelf, you'll still have something to give back. Once again, congratulations.

I thank you, and may God bless you all and the United States of America.

WHEN I FIRST HEARD I'D BE SPENDING SOME TIME WITH THE RUNNING REBELS, I THOUGHT IT WAS A GROUP OF REPUBLICAN CANDIDATES WHO DISAGREED WITH SOME OF MY POLICIES.

I TRIED TO GET SOME OF MY GRANDKIDS INTERESTED IN THE NCAA BASKETBALL TOURNAMENT THIS YEAR, BUT AS FAR AS THEY'RE CONCERNED, THE "FINAL FOUR" ARE THE TEENAGE MUTANT NINJA TURTLES.

THE NCAA FINAL WAS A LIFE AND DEATH STRUGGLE, BEFORE YOU FINALLY NIPPED DUKE BY 30 POINTS.

SOME SAY THE NCAA FINAL GAME WAS SHORT ON SUSPENSE, BUT DON'T YOU BELIEVE IT. ALL OVER AMERICA, MILLIONS OF PEOPLE WERE ON THE EDGE OF THEIR SEATS WAITING TO FIND OUT HOW BRENT MUSBERGER WOULD SAY GOODBYE TO CBS.

I'M NOT SAYING JERRY TARTANIAN HAS HAD ANY INFLUENCE ON ME, BUT NEXT TIME I'M SWEATING OUT A CLOSE VOTE IN CONGRESS, DON'T BE SURPRISED IF YOU SEE ME CHEWING ON A ■ TOWEL.

EARTH DAY (Mark Davis)

BELIEVE IT OR NOT, I'M NOT GOING TO PLANT A TREE TODAY. BUT I RECEIVED A LETTER RECENTLY FROM SOMEONE WHO APPARENTLY APPROVES OF MY TREE-PLANTING EFFORTS. HE SAID "IT'S NICE TO SEE A POLITICIAN DOING SOMETHING USEFUL WITH A SHOVEL FOR A CHANGE.

WITH CONGRESS NOT SITTING ON SUNDAY THE 22ND, THERE WILL BE FEWER GASES THAN USUAL BEING EMITTED INTO THE AIR BY WASHINGTON ON EARTH DAY.

TOM CRUISE, WHO'S HERE TODAY, WAS NOMINATED FOR AN ACADEMY AWARD FOR HIS PORTRAYAL OF SOMEONE BORN ON THE 4TH OF JULY. WE HOPE THE EFFORTS ASSOCIATED WITH EARTH DAY WILL RESULT IN OUR PLANET BEING RE-BORN ON THE 22ND OF APRIL. (Barf!)

WHEN MILLIONS OF PEOPLE JOIN TOGETHER TO RESCUE OUR ENVIRONMENT, THE EARTH CAN BREATHE A LOT EASIER.

Mark:

Sorry this is the best I can do re "Earth Day." It's tough to be creative with something I think is basically nonsense -- other than to do jokes ridiculing it, which you obviously can't use. In my opinion, "Earth Day" is the same as "Hands Across America" -- an opportunity for left-wingers to blame all the world's ills on Reagan & Bush policies. Tough to get motivated to write something which plays into the hands of the Jane Fondas of the country.

P.S. Glad to hear Gorbachev is observing Earth Day. He's promising to use fuel-efficient tanks in Lithuania.

SUBJECT: TEENAGE MUTANT NINJA TURTLES

The Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles referenced in the UNLV\Standford remarks . . . ((Of course, my grandkids were very interested in NCAA Basketball Tournament this year, but sometimes they miss some of the nuances of the game. As far as they're concerned -- the "Final Four" are the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles.)) . . . are four cartoon turtles --Raphael, Michaelangelo, Donatello, and Leonardo -- who have fallen into a slick of radioactive sewer slime only to emerge as intelligent, humanlike beings who fight crime using martial-arts weapons and crave pizza. The cartoon has been turned into a successful movie with animated characters that has grossed $75 million since its March 30th release. As the turtles would say, "Cowabunga!"

Dear Christina,

First, I know I speak for everyone from within our delegation, from Athletic Director Andy Geiger on down the list. Our women's basketball team is thrilled to have an opportunity to visit the White House and President George Bush.

It is an honor for all concerned and we are greatly looking forward to the visit at 2:30 p.m. on April 17.

It is my task to assist you in any way I can, especially concerning the speech writing, the media list, pronunciations, anecdotes, etc.

I have been a Sports Information Director at Stanford for the past eight years. In all eight of those years, I have been the Sports Information Director for women's basketball. The past five years, I have worked very closely with Stanford head women's basketball coach Tara VanDerveer.

If you need my assistance in any way, please do not hesitate to call me. It is my job to make your job as easy as possible.

If you need to contact me, you may do so by calling me on my direct, private line--which is (415) 725-2959. The other number to reach me would be at (415) 723-4418. Our fax number is: (415) 725-2957.

Look forward to hearing from you soon.

-- 35 points in the NCAA second-round game versus Hawaii (13-of-18 from field) on Mar. 17, 1990.

Third best career game -- 31 points versus Iowa in the NCAA Midwest Regional at Louisiana Tech last year as a sophomore.

ANGELA TAYLOR — Mountain Home, Idaho
#22 Freshman — 5-6 Guard

Angela's story is perhaps the most heart-warming of this 1989-90 season... She began on Oct. 15 as a walk-on, no certainty whatsoever to make the team ...A few days later, Coach VanDerveer declared she had made the team... Angela's quiet, pleasant demeanor and hard work ethic have made her a favorite among her teammates...And then just before Christmas, VanDerveer rewarded Taylor by granting her a basketball scholarship for the remainder of the season...AVERAGED 0.8 POINTS, 0.6 REBOUNDS, AND 0.2 ASSISTS... Shot .316 from the floor (6-of-18), .500 from three-point range (1-of-2), and .556 (5-of-9) from the line in 23 game appearances...Angela made her first career shot (a three-pointer) in a game versus Ohio University in Cincinnati at the Communiplex Hall of Fame Classic back in November... Angela has a brother, Gary, who is a sophomore at Stanford...A halfback in football, Gary started two games for the Stanford football team this past season...Major is undeclared.

Best career scoring games -- 4 points twice--once versus Ohio and once at USC.
High game this season -- same as above.

promises of nonaggression made at Munich, and the phrase "peace for (or in) our time" became an obscene irony.}

CHAMBERLAIN, Joseph (1836–1914), British politician. He was a leading Liberal until he quarreled with Gladstone over Irish Home Rule and joined the Conservatives (1886). Appointed colonial secretary (1895), he handled the Boer War and its aftermath with considerable skill.

1 Chamberlain was once guest of honor at an important civic dinner. The main part of the meal over, the mayor whispered to Chamberlain as the coffee was being served, "Shall we let the people enjoy themselves a little longer, or had we better have our speech now?"

{A similar anecdote is told of others.}

CHAMBERLAIN, Sir [Joseph] Austen (1863–1937), British statesman. As foreign secretary (1924–29), he negotiated the Locarno Pact (1925).

1 Offered the post of chancellor of the exchequer in 1919, Austen complained that the prime minister, David Lloyd George, had not sent for him with the customary formality, but had simply thrown the office at him—like a bone to a dog. "Stop a minute, Austen," said Lloyd George to him, "there is a good deal of meat on that bone."

2 Chamberlain and his wife were dining one evening with the well-known London hostess Mrs. Ronnie Greville. The excellent food and wine were marred only by the fact that the butler had obviously been drinking.

Rather than make a scene in front of her guests, Mrs. Greville surreptitiously scribbled a note and handed it to him. The message read: "You are drunk—leave the room at once." The butler dutifully laid the slip of paper on a silver salver, tottered around to the other side of the table, and presented it to Austen Chamberlain.

CHAMBERLAIN, Wilt (1936– ), US basketball star. Seven feet, one inch tall, Chamberlain dominated the sport during his professional career (1959–73), setting many of the National Basketball Association's records for scoring and rebounding.

1 Despite his personal successes, Chamberlain was criticized for not taking his team to titles. Then in 1967, when his Philadelphia team finally won a championship, someone asked Chamberlain if he thought that everybody would get behind him now. "No way," he said.

"Why not?"

"Nobody roots for Goliath," was the answer.

CHANEL, Coco [Gabrielle Chanel] (1883–1971), French dress designer. Her Paris fashion house led a trend toward simplicity and comfort in the design of women's dresses and suits.

1 When Coco's nephew, a country child, visited his aunt in Paris, he found it difficult to adapt to the unfamiliar society life. Taken to lunch at the Rothschilds', he refused to eat with the other children in the nursery because the boys were wearing what appeared to him to be girls' shoes. Sitting instead at the table with the adults, he looked in horror at the fingerbowls. "I've behaved very well up to now," he said, "but I'm not going to drink that!"

2 Coco's friend the Duke of Westminster detested any form of extravagance, and continued to have his shoes resoled long after the uppers were worn out. Exasperated by this obsession, Coco secretly ordered twelve new pairs of shoes for him and hid them in his wardrobe. Some time later she saw the duke, wearing one of his new pairs of shoes, and unaware that he was being watched, jump purposefully into a large puddle to take the offending shine off them.

3 When Cocteau's Antigone was produced in Paris in 1924 the playwright specified that Mlle Chanel was to make the gowns worn by the princesses in the play. "She is our leading couturière," he said, "and I cannot imagine Oedipus's daughters patronizing a 'little dressmaker.'"

4 When the mini-skirt came into fashion in the mid-1960s, Chanel was asked whether she approved of girls' exposing their knees and thighs in this way. "Thighs—replied. "But knees—never!"

BODY:

Please don't tell Mister Frisky, but the record winning streak he will be trying to tie Saturday in the Santa Anita Derby is one of the least imposing in American sports. . . .

Edwin Moses won 122 consecutive 400-meter hurdles races. Rocky Marciano retired unbeaten after 49 fights. UCLA won 88 consecutive games in basketball, Oklahoma 47 in football, the Lakers 33 in the NBA and the New York Giants 26 in the National League. . . .

But no thoroughbred in the U.S. or affiliated islands such as Puerto Rico, where Mister Frisky began his career, ever has equaled the 16 consecutive victories by Citation in 1948-49. . . .

It's a case of animals being even less predictable than human beings and the conditions of racing -- horses moving up in class and adding weight -- being a great equalizer. . . .

The world record of 54 in a row was set by Kincsem, who raced in Europe in the 1870s. . . . I'm surprised major league baseball owners and players didn't reach a compromise on roster limits for the first three weeks of the season -- 25 1/2 men per team. . . .

Mike Witt's poor spring training performance and demotion to the bullpen haven't exactly increased his trade value. And now it's doubtful that the Angels would include Kirk McCaskill in a deal. The rumor mill had McCaskill and Devon White going to Philadelphia for Von Hayes. . . .

One reason the Pittsburgh Pirates traded Billy Hatcher to the Cincinnati Reds was his $690,000 salary -- pretty hefty for a reserve outfielder even these days. . . .

JOHNSON IS MAGIC TO UNLV;
REBELS: JUNIOR COLLEGE TRANSFER HAS BEEN EVERYTHING TARKANIAN WANTED -- IF HE WOULD ONLY SHOOT MORE.

BODY:

During a 14-0 run by Nevada Las Vegas at the start of a nationally televised game against Louisville last month, forward Larry Johnson of the Runnin' Rebels waved toward the bench.

He wanted out.

"Oh, no," Coach Jerry Tarkanian thought. "He must be sick."

Once on the bench, though, Johnson assured his worried coach that everything was OK. "But it's seniors night," he told a surprised Tarkanian. "Let Mo play."

UNLV's leading scorer and rebounder had given up his place on the floor for senior Moses Scurry.

Such magnanimous gestures have come to be expected of Johnson, a transfer from Odessa College in Texas who joined a veteran team this season, established himself as UNLV's first consensus All- American and still managed to ingratiate himself with his new teammates.

"He's just fun to be around," Anderson Hunt said. "When you're around him, you get that feeling like, 'Damn, I'm around Larry Johnson. ' You don't run into too many people like him."

So accommodating is Johnson that his teammates call him Ambassador. His generosity is said to have held down his statistics, which may sound surprising because the 6-foot-7, 250-pound junior is averaging 20.7 points and 11.6 rebounds a game.

Some expected more.

Three years ago, at Skyline High School in Dallas, Johnson was the Parade Magazine high school player of the year. He signed with Southern Methodist, but questions about the validity of his score on the Scholastic Aptitude Test diverted him to Odessa.

In his first season in West Texas, he was the junior college player of the year and was named freshman of the year in all of college basketball by the Sporting News and Basketball Times. He was the only junior college player invited to the Olympic trials.

Last season, Johnson was even better, averaging 28 points and 17 rebounds a game and again earning recognition as the JC player of the year. He led the U.S. team to the gold medal in the World University Games last summer at Duisburg, West Germany.

So, before he had played a game in major college basketball, Johnson was projected by some as the player of the year.

Tarkanian called him the best player he'd ever recruited.

Although UNLV had five returning starters, Johnson was on the cover of the media guide along with Olympian Stacey Augmon. Above them was the declaration: "The Big Year Is Here!"

It would have been difficult for anybody to live up to that kind of advance billing, but Tarkanian said Johnson has been everything he expected.

UNLV has reached the Final Four for the second time in four seasons -- the Rebels (33-5) will play Georgia Tech (28-6) in a semifinal game Saturday night at McNichols Arena in Denver -- and Johnson was the player of the year in the Big West Conference.

"All those news clippings don't mean anything, but when I saw him play for the first time, I knew we could win the national championship," Hunt said of Johnson, who was named this week as a finalist for the Wooden Award as college basketball's player of the year.

Tarkanian lost only one letterman from the team that fell one victory short of the Final Four last season, but Johnson's arrival has not upset the Rebels' chemistry.

"He came into a veteran team and he fit in beautifully because he's so unselfish," Tarkanian said. "I think part of the reason for the way our kids feel about each other -- the closeness -- is because of Larry. He's always giving credit to somebody else, praising somebody else. And I think that kind of attitude rubs off."

Said Coach Jerry Pimm of UC Santa Barbara: "His ego is not involved in the game."

Tarkanian describes all of his players as "great kids," diminishing his credibility in a season that has been filled with academic problems, suspensions, fights and arrests, but he can't seem to say enough about Johnson.

"He's such a nice person that you almost can't believe it's true," Tarkanian said. "I absolutely love him. I don't know anybody who doesn't like him. Even opposing players like him."

That's not true of many Rebels, but Pimm said of Johnson: "Our players all thought he was a great guy. He'll talk at you once in a while -- he gets his little street talk going -- but he is a good person. And, therefore, he'll do what he has to do to help his team win."

Such as limit his offensive role to get everybody involved.

"I don't think a lot of people have seen all his potential," said Ed Goorjian, former Loyola Marymount coach and an administrative assistant to Tarkanian. "I think he has definitely held back. I don't know if that's the right word, but the important thing for Larry is to be a team player and for the team to do well.

"What he's doing is good for the team because of the personalities (involved). It definitely would not be the kind of team that would be happy with a one-person show.

"He has handled himself just tremendously. He has passed up shots and made the extra pass."

Occasionally, he has done so to Tarkanian's consternation.

"I always encourage him to shoot more," Tarkanian said, using as an example a play where the center flashes across the key to take a pass from the wing.

"Whenever (David) Butler flashes high, he shoots it," Tarkanian said of the Rebels' 6-10 center. "When Larry flashes high, he never shoots it. And Larry's a great shooter! But he never shoots it. I said, 'Larry, shoot the ball.' He never misses it in practice."

Next season, Tarkanian said, he probably will force the issue.

"We will utilize him more," he said. "And I think he will feel like exerting himself more."

It's possible, though, that Johnson will forgo his senior year to join the NBA.

"Everybody's known about him since high school," said Jerry Reynolds, vice president of the Sacramento Kings. "He's not exactly a sleeper."

Reynolds said Johnson would have been a first-round draft choice last year. He would be a lottery pick this year, Reynolds said, and would "definitely" be among the top five next season.

"There's nothing he can't do quite well," said Reynolds, who compared Johnson to Charles Barkley of the Philadelphia 76ers. "The only negative I can see is that for the position he likes to play -- around the basket -- he's not very tall. But his strength makes up for it."

Last November, Laker General Manager Jerry West called Johnson "absolutely tremendous," adding: "I don't know how he can stay in school, he's so tremendous."

Asked this week if Johnson had been everything he expected, West said: "Is he everything you expected? He is a great player. He's tough. He knows how to play. His court demeanor is wonderful."

Johnson, though, said the NBA will have to wait.

"That's what I've said 20,000 times," he said again this week. "I'll be back. I love it here. I'm just having too much fun."

Johnson and Augmon, who met during the Olympic trials two years ago, are the best of friends, often sneaking out of pregame meals to dine together at McDonald's.

"But don't tell Coach," Johnson told a television reporter.

Tark probably wouldn't mind.

Just the other day, Johnson asked Tarkanian, 59, if he would be back next fall for an 18th season as UNLV coach, and Tarkanian told him: "If you come back."

How would Johnson benefit from another season at UNLV?

"The only thing he doesn't do is put it on the floor and pull up quickly for a jump shot, but he's got much better range than people think," said Pimm, who watched Johnson during tryouts for the World University Games last summer and called him dominant.

Said Johnson: "There are a lot of things I need to work on -- perimeter defense, shooting, ballhandling. Hopefully, next year I can work on those things and become a better basketball player."

Tarkanian said Johnson, 21, has told him that he isn't ready for the NBA lifestyle.

And Johnson has told friends that he would like to stay to help make Augmon a better player.

Apparently, that's his way -- always thinking of somebody else.

Everyone wants to know if UNLV's Larry Johnson is going pro; he says

BODY:

You know those statistics that authorities use to scare you, like: ''Every four seconds a crime is committed.''

In the case of Nevada-Las Vegas' power forward, the phrase goes: ''Every fourseconds, Larry Johnson is asked whether he'll turn pro this year.''

Johnson, a junior and the most intimidating-looking player in college basketball, has been fielding the same question repeatedly for the last month. Each time he exposes his gold front tooth with a smile -- not the showy Magic Johnson toothpaste ad, just a friendly, pleasant grin -- and says politely, ''No, I'm coming back next year. I'm not ready for the pros yet.''

Not ready? Johnson, a consensus first-team All- American, has helped UNLV to a third-round NCAA Tournament game against Ball State on Friday at the Oakland Coliseum Arena. He may be college player of the year as a junior and could be the first overall NBA pick this year.

His coach at Skyline High in Dallas, J.D. Mayo, said Johnson would have been a lottery pick had he entered the pros last season out of Odessa Junior College. And New Mexico State coach Neil McCarthy, who faced UNLV twice this season, says, ''He may be as skilled a four-man (power forward) as the NBA has right now.''

He is called the perfect NBA power forward, despite being 6-foot-7 when the going height for NBA power forwards is 6-10. You see, Johnson weighs 252 pounds, and it looks as if about 250 of it is stacked neatly between his midsection and neck.

He is an absolute physical wonder, and his massive shoulders appear more ominous because he wears a white T-shirt under his jersey.

''I told Larry,'' said teammate Stacey Cvijanovich, '' 'If you ever had a mean streak, it would be murder.' ''

Luckily for all concerned, Johnson is a gentle man with worlds of patience. He signs autographs forever, apologizing to one little girl when he took more than two seconds to get to her, and talks to the media endlessly -- no boasting, just easy-going chatter.

''That's ambassador Johnson,'' says teammate Greg Anthony, listening in. ''We should pay him an endorsement fee.''

Johnson has helped UNLV's image considerably. When some teammates stopped talking to the media this season, Johnson was always accessible.

''The media's been good to me,'' he says.

What's not to like? Patient, talented, easy-going. Has anybody ever seen this guy mad?

''Yeah,'' said teammate and close friend Stacey Augmon, ''It's scary.''

Just the thought is frightening. And certainly there are players and fans who want to test the big guy.

''He takes a lot,'' said Augmon. ''I wouldn't take half the stuff he does, on or off the court.''

Gentleness is an unlikely trait, given Johnson's background. He grew up in an area of the Dallas projects known as the War Zone, a place where drug deals and prostitution were as common as flies.

His mother kept him in check, and by the time he was 14, Johnson had his priorities set -- he was going to play pro basketball.

''Things on the side can nibble at you,'' said Mayo, ''but he doesn't party or do drugs or anything. He just worked on getting better. The days after his last game as a senior, he said, 'Coach, can I start Monday getting ready for college and the McDonald's all-star game?'''

Johnson had mastered every phase of the game by the time he left high school and was rated among the top three prep players in the country.

''He could play any of the five positions,'' said Mayo.

Johnson signed to play at Southern Methodist, but his SAT scores were less than 700, which meant he had to sit out his freshman year. He took the test again and scored much higher, easily enough to play as a freshman, but SMU, already smitten by a death penalty in football, was wary of Johnson's marked test-score improvement and still required that he sit out his freshman year.

Johnson decided to go to Odessa (Texas) Junior College instead, and he became the nation's dominant JC player, while improving his bench press to 350 pounds. There are tales of Johnson's practices at Odessa -- having two players defend him while a point guard tries to feed him the ball or holding off a 250-pound reserve center with one arm.

''And he hung around the perimeter a lot,'' said Riley Smith, a teammate of Johnson's at Odessa and the Big Sky player of the year this season at Idaho. ''He could do anything. They have him down on the block at Vegas, but he can shoot as well as anyone.''

He was the only JC player invited to the Olympic tryouts in 1988, and may be the player of the year in his first season on the major-college level.

Johnson's has only two drawbacks: he is so efficient that he makes things look too easy, and he's not selfish enough. UNLV's Jerry Tarkanian had to tell Johnson to shoot more, and Mayo recalls telling Johnson the same thing.

''He'd say, 'Oh, coach, I'm just having fun passing the ball,''' Mayo said, '''and besides, there's two guys on me.' I said, 'If there's six on you, then you pass it out.'''

McCarthy said he can't believe a man so big can be that agile and have hands so soft.

''He's so smooth and handles himself so well,'' said Pacific coach Bob Thomason, ''sometimes it looks like he could do so much more but he doesn't want to -- that he wants to keep his team happy.''

Ohio State's Chris Jent discovered that defending Johnson was a near-impossible task.

''I realized I can't get in a pushing match with him,'' said Jent, ''because I'd get pushed off the court. And he's so strong that it's tough for me to front him and prevent him from getting a lob, even though he's just 6-7.

''And he's such a hard worker. Most post players, if you get in front of them twice and they don't get the ball, they quit. He just worked harder until he got it.''

So, Larry, are you going to turn pro? ''No.''

Even if UNLV is placed on probation? ''No.''

Stay there, we're not convinced. We'll be back in four seconds.
