PROCLAMATIONS

Contact: Chris Colley, x2276

7-8 administration officials comment (for clearance) on every proclamation.
Estimated 10-20 minutes for each person to review it.
There are about 150-200 proclamations/year; approximately 3/week.

It's pretty costly, if you figure out the per-page cost of printing it in the Congressional Record; the cost of printing it on parchment; the man hours to research, write, type, photocopy, and fax/mail it; man hours spent by WH staff reviewing it.

There is an independent commission that handles commemorative postage stamps. The President and his administration used to have to handle that, too. Maybe POTUS can propose to do the same for proclamations, and get all the business surrounding proclamations outside the WH.

The Clerk's Office is working on getting us a master list of all proclamations that have gone through the White House since the beginning of GB's Administration.

WHITE PAPER

ON

THE DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

AND THE CONGRESS

This is the most recent...

REPORT TO THE PRESIDENT
BY THE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE

for political or geographical reasons is of increasing concern to the scientific community, and threatens to erode U.S. technological leadership.

Enforcement. Beyond the expectation that DoD will comply with statutory and report language, Congress imposes additional enforcement mechanisms such as funding fences (to be released after a specified action), certifications, review periods, prior notification, and outside audits, tests or cost estimates. The majority of the seven hundred reports required in annual legislation are enforcement mechanisms of this nature.

C. Committee Jurisdiction

The Defense Department has to contend with many more committees than the six with direct responsibility for its budget. In 1988, 14 full committees and 43 subcommittees or panels held hearings concerning DoD. Some 30 committees and 77 subcommittees claim some degree of oversight responsibility for DoD. The activity of "non-defense" committees includes policy initiatives which have an increasing effect on DoD. Oversight activity by committees other than appropriations and armed services soared in the mid-seventies. A GAO study requested by the HASC shows that while the number of hearings at which DoD officials testify has remained relatively constant over 25 years, the number of committees calling DoD witnesses more than doubled between 1974 and 1975, rose further the next year, and has continued at a level three times as high as before 1974.

MEMORANDUM FOR DAVID DEMAREST

FROM: CAROL AARHUS

SUBJECT: REFORM RESEARCH

Okay, I get in this morning, bright and early, eagerly awaiting my research tasks before me. I call Citizens for Congressional Reform -- I knew they'd have all the information I needed -- and the recording says they've gone out or business! I guess they gave up. How depressing. Anyway, I've enclosed a packet of information that I think will be helpful.

I am still waiting for Don Arbuckle in Quayle's office to call regarding regulatory stuff. Gary did a whole packet on it, but gave it to Tony, and he has no idea where it is, so we're starting from square one.

I asked David Mason at Heritage about government programs whose abolishment is long overdue. He said the two best examples are the REA loans and the Peace Institute. Bob Grady handles REA loans, and I've left messages, and he hasn't called back -- no big surprise. Maybe he'll take your calls. The Peace Institute was started by a former senator Jennings Randolph. He said that since we have schools for war (USNA, USMA, etc.) that we should have a Peace Institute. Congress decided to finally fund it out of respect for Randolph upon his retirement. It's still going strong -- in that pork barrel stuff I sent you, I know there was an 8 million dollar appropriation or something for it.

Neil Newhouse at Public Opinion Strategies said that he doesn't have any polling data on right track/wrong track and frustration with government. Howver, he said that with only 15% feeling we are on the right track, it is his gut instinct that the wrong track people are also the most frustrated. He doesn't know of any polling that's been done, either.

I will be in Quantico, touring Marine One, for awhile this afternoon. Jennifer is not going on this tour, and she said she'd be happy to help. I hope Kris' birthday lunch was fun!

HOUSE AND SENATE STANDING COMMITTEES AND SUBCOMMITTEES WITH JURISDICTION OVER NATIONAL DRUG ABUSE POLICY

SUMMARY

This report presents information on House and Senate standing committees and subcommittees with authorizing jurisdiction over national drug abuse policy. It describes committee jurisdiction in terms of the two general facets of national drug abuse policy: 1) supply control, principally law enforcement, including domestic and international components; and 2) demand control, including drug treatment and rehabilitation generally, most federally sponsored research related to drug abuse, drug abuse education, and user penalties.

Two tables provide listings of numerous House and Senate committees and their subcommittees with jurisdiction over aspects of national drug abuse policy. They identify 53 House committees and subcommittees and 21 Senate committees and subcommittees that appear to exercise jurisdiction over the issue. The sizeable difference between the two figures may be attributed to: 1) a greater reliance by House than by Senate full committees on subcommittees for consideration of legislation and 2) the lack of written jurisdictions for some Senate subcommittees, sometimes making it difficult to determine specifically which policy issues they address. The tables include illustrative examples of drug abuse issues over which each indicated panel may exercise jurisdiction.

As these listings imply, House and Senate Rules do not assign jurisdiction over "national drug abuse policy" to any one committee. Under the Rules, one or several aspects of drug abuse policy are assigned to each of several House and Senate committees, which in turn sometimes create subcommittees to deal with these aspects. Legislation dealing with drug abuse policy is referred to committees based on chamber rules, and to subcommittees based on the jurisdictions accorded them by the full committees.

The information presented in this report is derived from chamber rules listing committee jurisdictions; committee rules, which sometimes state subcommittee jurisdictions; and bill referrals of drug abuse legislation to committees and subcommittees in the 99th and 100th Congresses. However, because of the complexity of the issue and the multitude of panels involved, it is difficult to identify with certainty all panels that could conceivably be involved with drug abuse policy. Thus, the exclusion of a panel from this report should not be understood as a definitive negation of its possible involvement with drug-related issues.

INTRODUCTION AND NOTES ON METHOD

This report presents information on House and Senate authorizing committees and subcommittees with jurisdiction over national drug abuse policy, broadly defined. Excluded are the House and Senate Appropriations and Budget Committees, which of course have wide jurisdiction over Federal Government activity, but which are not authorizing committees.

The report addresses standing committee jurisdiction in terms of the two general facets of national drug abuse policy: 1) supply control, principally law enforcement, including domestic and international components; and 2) demand control, including drug treatment and rehabilitation generally, most federally sponsored research related to drug abuse, drug abuse education, and user penalties. It does not address committee jurisdiction over all drug issues, but rather only those related to drug abuse. For example, excluded are panels with jurisdiction over patents for new drugs.

Included are tables providing detailed listings of committees and subcommittees with jurisdiction over drug abuse-related issues. A separate table is presented for each chamber. Committees are listed alphabetically by chamber, and subcommittees are included with the committees under which they operate. The tables include illustrative examples of drug abuse policy issues over which each indicated committee or subcommittee may exercise jurisdiction. Of course, these examples do not represent an exhaustive and complete listing of the range of issues related to drug abuse policy that fall within the purview of a panel. Further, the inclusion of an issue as within the purview of one panel does not mean that this panel exercises exclusive jurisdiction over it. In both chambers, there is considerable overlapping of jurisdiction, and some aspects of drug abuse policy may be shared among committees.

Criteria for Inclusion

Committees are included in this report if they meet at least one of the following criteria: 1) the panel appears to have drug abuse policy jurisdiction based on House Rule X or on Senate Rule XXV, the rules that list standing committee jurisdictions, or 2) the panel received referrals of drug abuse policy legislation during the 99th or 100th Congresses, as recorded in the Library of Congress's SCOPRIO computerized legislative data bases for these Congresses (CG99 and C100). This report does not review appropriateness of jurisdictional issues.

House Rule X and Senate Rule XXV do not mention "national drug abuse policy." Complex policy areas, such as drug abuse policy, cut across jurisdictional boundaries. Through broadly defined subject areas, e.g., health policy, many House and Senate committees appear to have jurisdiction, under committee jurisdiction rules, over one or several aspects of drug abuse policy.

Although these jurisdictional rules govern the referral of bills in both chambers, their language must be broad enough to accommodate a wide array of subjects. It is therefore often difficult to refer bills by rule alone. In such cases, referrals are influenced by precedents established by past referrals and referral agreements.

Accordingly, to supplement the limited information available in chamber rules, bill referrals of drug abuse policy legislation in the 99th and 100th Congresses, as identified in SCORPIO, have been examined. To cover the many aspects of drug abuse policy as defined broadly, the data bases have been searched using a variety of indexing terms, including drug abuse, drug abuse prevention, drug industry, drug safety and regulation, drug testing, drugs and narcotics, drugs and youth, narcotic traffic, narcotics and crime, and treatment and rehabilitation of narcotic addicts.

Subcommittee jurisdictions in both chambers are determined by the parent committees which create them. Consequently, these jurisdictions are more fluid than those of the full committees; they may change from Congress to Congress. In the House, the jurisdictions of a committee's subunits often are defined in that committee's rules. In the Senate this is less often the case, and sometimes subcommittees' jurisdictions are derivable only from the panels' names. In addition, Senate committees less often than their House counterparts refer legislation to subcommittees for initial scrutiny.

Subcommittees are included in this report when they have been allocated drug-related jurisdiction by the full committee either 1) explicitly, by a provision in the committee's rules, or 2) implicitly, by referrals of drug legislation on a regular basis. Such referrals, again, were identified from the SCORPIO legislative data bases. The full committee, of course, always has the same jurisdiction over drug abuse policy as any of its subcommittees.

Where no subcommittee is shown in the table, the drug jurisdiction of the committee usually is exercised at the full committee level.

Caveats

Certain additional caveats about the tables should be noted. First, because committee and subcommittee jurisdictions sometimes are not parallel between the House and Senate, panels from one chamber may be included while their counterparts in the other are not. Second, because House and Senate committees and subcommittees are so numerous, it is nearly impossible to identify all panels that could conceivably be involved with drug abuse policy. Thus, the exclusion of a panel from this report should not be understood as a definitive negation of this panel's possible involvement with drug-related issues. Third, subcommittees which received referrals of drug abuse policy legislation during the 99th Congress, but which were abolished in the 100th, are excluded. Fourth, House and Senate subcommittees designated as oversight or investigative are excluded, as these subcommittees generally have oversight over all matters within a committee's purview, but lack legislative jurisdiction. Finally, select, special, and joint committees are excluded, because in general they lack legislative jurisdiction, even though several of these panels are concerned with aspects of drug abuse policy. In particular, the House Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control has broad authority for oversight and review of drug and narcotic problems, abuses, and control.

JURISDICTION OVER SUPPLY CONTROL AND DEMAND CONTROL

Drug abuse policy broadly defined encompasses numerous issues, but is generally identified as concerned with either supply control or demand control. Supply control has domestic and international components. In the Senate, jurisdiction over the regulatory statutes on which domestic supply control efforts are based is exercised generally by the Committee on the Judiciary. In the House, such jurisdiction is split among three committees--Energy and Commerce, Ways and Means, and Judiciary. This split is a consequence of House Rule X jurisdictions and accommodations among the committees. A discussion of committee jurisdiction over statutes governing domestic drug control illuminates the point.

Two principal statutes govern domestic drug control: the Controlled Substances Act and the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act, Titles II and III respectively of the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970.[2] The House Committee on Ways and Means has general jurisdiction over the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act. The House Committee on Energy and Commerce (formerly Interstate and Foreign Commerce) initially had exclusive jurisdiction over the Controlled Substances Act, but subsequently the Committee on the Judiciary became responsible for legislation relating to criminal penalties imposed under the act. In the Senate, the Committee on the Judiciary has jurisdiction over both statutes.

Jurisdiction over the international component of supply control resides with the House Committee on Foreign Affairs and the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations. These committees have jurisdiction over statutes governing United States Government participation in international drug control efforts, for example, through various United Nations agencies, and over those governing the provision of foreign assistance for overseas drug control.[3]

Principal demand control issues include drug treatment and rehabilitation, Federal research programs relating to prevention and control of drug abuse, drug abuse education, and user penalties. In the Senate, jurisdiction over most of these efforts is exercised by the Committee on Labor and Human Resources. In the House, demand control jurisdiction is principally divided between the Committees on Energy and Commerce and on Education and Labor. The principal statutes providing assistance for drug treatment and rehabilitation, as well as for Federal research programs relating to prevention and control of drug abuse, are within the purview of the Committee on Energy and Commerce.[4] The major drug abuse education statute is within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Education and Labor.[5]

DRUG JURISDICTION IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary

For Immediate Release March 9, 1992

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
TO THE NATIONAL LEAGUE OF CITIES

The Washington Hilton Hotel
Washington, D.C.

11:36 A.M. EST

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you very much. Glenda, thank you so much for that kind introduction. And to all of you -- and may I salute the members of Congress that have been with us here -- let me say good morning to them, and please do us right up on Capitol Hill. (Laughter.) My greetings to all the special guests here at the head table; to Don Borut and Wallace Stickney, who is with us.

Let me just say that I'm very pleased to join you today. I enjoyed -- Glenda referred to it -- I enjoyed speaking to you over the television hookup in December -- it's much better face to face. And I hear that you have had a very energetic, very well attended series of meetings. And I salute your leadership, present leadership; and then, of course, an old former colleague of mine -- or, put it this way -- a still young, but former colleague of mine in the House of Representatives who will be your leader -- what, starting next November, is it -- Don Frazier.

In January, as Glenda said, I had a follow-up meeting with ten of your members. And like your organization as a whole, they represented a broad cross section of urban America's leadership -- Republicans and Democrats, liberals, conservatives, officials from large and small and mid-sized cities.

And, of course, we're all concerned -- all of us here -- about the big issues -- jobs and family, and world peace. And even so, I was struck at this meeting by the unanimity of the message that your members wanted to deliver. It can't be repeated often enough in Washington, or any state capitol or any city hall. Your message was simply this: the enormous problems facing cities today -- from infant mortality to high dropout rates to runaway crime -- are partly, at least, symptoms of one larger problem, the deterioration of the American family.

Now, I understand the breadth of the issues that you deal with daily, poverty to potholes to property taxes. And in addressing myself to this one subject, I don't want you to think that we are less concerned about these enormous problems you face every day.

But this morning, I would like to discuss that same serious issue that you all raised with me: the family. The restoration of the American family is at the heart of much of what we have done these last three years.

Leaving aside for a moment the enormous costs -- the wasted human resources or the billions spent to repair the damage of broken homes -- family breakdown ultimately endangers our position in a world increasingly driven by economic competition.

MORE

Certainly, the integrity of the family is critical on its own merit. As Barbara Bush, my favorite philosopher, says, "What goes on at the White House is not nearly as important as what goes on in your house." And there's a lot of truth in that. But particularly at a time when our efforts must focus on economic growth, the family's disintegration endangers -- for all of us -- our ability to create and to preserve jobs, and to create an economy open to participation by all our citizens.

So we must start with a clear-eyed look at what is really happening to the family in American communities today -- not just in poor urban neighborhoods, but all across America. And then we've got to look inside ourselves, to establish the principles that will shape our approach. And then we must act.

The urgency is clear. We all know the statistics -- perhaps you know them better than most Americans -- the dreary drumbeat that tells of family breakdown. TOday, one out of every four American children is born out of wedlock; in some areas the illegitimacy rate tops 80 percent. A quarter of our children growth up in households headed by a single parent. More than two million are called latch-key kids -- who come home from school each afternoon to an empty house. And a large number of our children grow up without the love of parents at all, with nobody knowing their name.

We know form experience the consequences of family decline. Neglected children are more susceptible to the lure of crime and drugs, they're more likely to have poor health, drop out of school early, more likely to lead a life without hope.

Each of you is in a position to know the human costs that these statistics can only dimly sketch. You know, as I do, that for every blip on a chart or dot on a graph, there is a human story to tell, and too often the story is a tragedy.

About 10 days ago, I was in Bear County, Texas, in San Antonio, meeting with Latin American leaders to intensify our war on drugs. And while there, I saw a front-page story in the San Antonio Light. A cabdriver had been murdered last September -- another act of random, selfless violence -- and his murderer had just been found guilty.

But what was truly horrifying -- what would horrify any American -- was this: the murder of a 12-year-old boy. And as the deputies took the boy from the courtroom, according to the newspaper story, they had trouble fitting him with shackles and handcuffs, so slender were his wrists. This youngster was four feet tall, not yet a teenager, but now a convicted murderer.

The drumbeat continues: two teenagers shot dead in a New York public school -- an LSD ring busted up in an affluent Northern Virginia suburb -- or the harrowing stories of runaway kids and the horrors that befall them.

I know that almost all of you could tell stories equally distressing -- stories from your neighborhoods in your cities where the unthinkable has become the commonplace. I am sure that many of you here took office with high confidence in the power to solve these problems, only to discover -- sooner rather than later, I suspect -- that they were far more stubborn than we could imagine. Let's not forget that the trials our citizens face each and every day were generations in the making. We can't expect change overnight. But make no mistake: Change will come because change simply must come.

Let's face it. We can only change things if we work in common purpose. We must call a cease-fire in the war of words that too often consumes us. Casting blame brings no solutions. Nor will questioning each other's motives. We have got to focus every ounce of our energy to turn back this assault upon the American family and act as one nation to defend and strengthen it. As public servants, we must never forget that the best Department of HHS -- of Health and Human Services -- is, indeed, the family. In restoring the family, we restore to coming generations the values, the sense of right and wrong, the will and confidence to succeed that only a family can provide a child. And in doing this, we will reinvigorate our cities and our communities as well.

We needn't look far for principles to guide us. They are old home truths: Rely on what works -- discard what doesn't. Never be afraid to innovate. Remember that government closest to the people responds best to the needs of the people. And let's not forget this as a guiding principle: If people are to be responsible, they must be given responsibility.

The government's first duty is like that of the physician: Do no harm. But the fact is, with the best of intentions, many past government policies have worked against the institution of the family, undermined young people's desire to marry and stay married, to provide for their children, to plan for their future.

As a practical matter, doing no harm means in part that we ensure parents retain the authority to make the big decisions for their families. This doesn't absolve parents of responsibility; it's just the opposite.

Even if we're able to reform our education system -- and I am determined that the federal government assist all of you in every way in revolutionizing the education system -- but even if we are, parents must still read to their children. The point is that government harms the family when it restricts its autonomy or usurps the authority of responsible parents.

Let me give you another example. Those of us in government can never plausibly claim to fight for families if we insist that government, not parents, must choose who cares for their children. So two years ago our administration waged a fight in Congress over this very issue, and we won. We kept choice of child care out of the hands of government and put it where it belongs -- in the hands of parents.

And now we're engaged in a similar fight, over whether parents should have the right to choose their children's schools. We know the benefits of competition; it is the linchpin of American prosperity. And competition among schools will be the linchpin of education excellence, too. From Minnesota to Milwaukee to East Harlem -- school choice works. (Applause.)

But you see, it's important for other reasons: It restores authority and responsibility to parents. And just as it makes our schools accountable, it also makes parents accountable for the decisions they make. Not only in child care and school choice, but in other areas as well; a key to healing the American family will be restoring parental authority and accountability.

Another example: The initiative that we call HOPE -- H-O-P-E. It took more than a year to get that program through Congress and another year to get even partial funding for it. But HOPE will be crucial to our success by offering low-income families a greater opportunity to own their own homes. HOPE is based on a simple principle: To survive, people need the intangible values of dignity and self-respect. Government can't provide those. But homeownership can. An education can. A job can. And being part of a family can.

The federal government has a positive role in preserving the family, and we welcome that role. It's guided the decisions that we make every single day. Since 1989, for example, we have more than doubled the funding for the program that I bet everybody in this rooms supports, Head Start. A program that brings children and parents into the classroom, strengthens family ties and reinforces parental responsibility. For the first time in the program's history, we can support now Head Start for al eligible four-year-old children whose parents choose to have them participate.

There are many other examples. We've increased the earned income tax credit for low-income families. And since '89, we've increased the funding for WIC, the supplementary food program for Women, Infants and Children, by 47 percent to $2.8 billion next year. We've increased other nutrition programs by similar percentages. And this year federal support for childhood immunization grants will top $340 million, an increase of 18 percent over last year's level.

So all told, funding for children's programs -- from nutrition, education to foster care and child immunization -- has increased 66 percent since we took office.

But, look, we will never measure -- and I think you all would be the first to agree with this -- we would never measure our compassion simply in dollars spent. We will measure it by results. The test will be the health and happiness of our children and, most important of all, the sense of well-being and self-reliance instilled by our families. Our administration has targeted funding to programs that efficiently fulfill government's role in supporting families and keeping them together, programs that work for the family.

Yet, at the same time, we must face another fact. Government can sometimes be a burden as well as a boon. Over the past 40 years, the child tax exemption has lagged far behind the soaring costs of child-rearing. And I have asked Congress to increase the exemption by $500 per child. For a family with four children that's an increase of $2000. And it's a crucial first step toward redressing the imbalance, and it's what we can afford to do right now.

And now I come to perhaps the most crucial matter of all. One that concerns you all. We must reform our nation's welfare system. Americans are the most generous people on Earth, but they want to see - and they are entitled to see -- some relationship between welfare and work. Welfare must never be what Franklin Delano Roosevelt warned it might become, "a subtle destroyer of the spirit." It is not meant to be a way of life or a family legacy passed from one generation to the next. Welfare can eat away at the ties that bind a family together.

And state and local governments are undertaking the brave work of reform -- Learnfare in Wisconsin; REACH, Realizing Economic Achievement in New Jersey; Washington State's FIP -- Family Independence Program. These are all demonstration projects that we support. And my administration is committed to reform and we are acting now on waivers, to loosen up on waivers, to waive unnecessary red tape that impedes reform.

There's no hidden agenda here. This administration, the mayors, the state leaders who press for drastic reform of welfare aren't modern-day Scrooges chiseling one more dime out of some poor family. Democrat or Republican, California, New Jersey, federal or state -- in our heart of hearts, we really believe reforming, reforming the welfare system is the best way to serve people. Break this sorry cycle of despair. Give people real hope. And we're going to keep on trying to do just that because every single American deserves to believe in the American Dream.

Today with family as the center I've highlighted the role of government -- both positive and negative -- because we're men and women of government. But let's never forget the work of private AMericans dedicating themselves to the voluntary service of others, who create an environment where families can flourish. Each is a Point of Light, offering service with no thought of reward, though the reward will be reaped by every single American.

And let me be very clear: When I talk about Points of Light, they are not a substitute for the good that government can do, but it's m ore this -- we will simply not solve our most pressing problems without the dedication of those Points of Light, of those volunteers. And I urge all of you, when you return to your cities, to do all in you power to encourage these caring men and women, to make yours a community of light.

In my State of the Union address, I announced that we would soon institute a Commission on America's Urban Families. Your executive board of directors or whatever group it was -- I've never been sure with whom I was dealing -- but they were all big shots, believe me -- (laughter) -- came together. And their work will b e one result of my meetings in January with some of your leaders.

And I have asked Governor Ashcroft of Missouri, a very caring man, Annette Strauss, the former May of Dallas, a very able woman who also cares deeply, to lead the Commission and fulfill its mandate: To identify those government programs, at all levels, that weaken or strengthen urban families; to analyze ways to improve private efforts to strengthen urban families; and to recommend new policies to help families in our cities.

I am convinced that we can correct our mistakes, that we can learn from our failures and build on our successes. I do not exaggerate when I say that the future of America depends on our efforts. The family is the irreducible unit of comfort and love, and from families radiate neighborhoods, from neighborhoods come towns and cities, and their health determines the health of our country, for better or for worse. And, like you, I am committed to making our health whole, and to ensuring that our cities, as Theodore Parker said, "remain the fireplaces of America, radiating warmth and light against the darkness."

Thank you all very much for giving me this opportunity to visit with you today. And my God bless our great country. Thank you so much.

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
TO THE SPRING CONVENTION OF
AMERICAN SOCIETY OF ASSOCIATION EXECUTIVES

The Convention Center
Washington, D.C.

1:10 P.M. EST

THE PRESIDENT: Chairman Fondren, fellow Texan, thank you for that introduction. May I salute President Taylor and all the award winners here today. I heard a story about how when Lyndon Baines Johnson moved from the House to the Senate, Jake Pickle and Gene Fondren, then Texas state legislators, flipped a coin to decide who'd run for office and go to Washington. Well, Congressman Pickle's been calling for a rematch ever since. (Laughter.) And this organization is very fortunate to have as its chairman a man of this strength and a man of this conviction.

Robert Frost once wrote that "an idea is a feat of association." Well, association is an idea as old as the American Dream itself. Actually, de Toqueville 150 years ago -- more than that -- had much to say about you. He said, "at the head of some new undertaking in the United States you will be sure to find an association." Well, since that time associations have played a vital role in our country's progress, and they continue that mission today, defining new frontiers and exploring new territory.

Before I spoke, President Taylor handed out the Associations Advance America Awards to salute those who've found a way to help -- to be, in fact, points of light. We hear too often about what's wrong in America. Well, this is what's right in America, and I salute you for what you are doing to help your communities. And again, I single out the awardees here who have starred in all of this.

Of course, it's an election year. Independent of the current preoccupation with the hype and spin of the campaigns, there will remain the issues, the big things -- the core concerns of every American that transcend political party or philosophical idealogy -- jobs, family, peace. They hold us together as a society. They are more than issues we bring to the next election -- they are the legacy we must give to the next generation.

And really, that's what I want to talk to you about today -- not just the issues, but our mood as a nation, and how we must act now if we're to change America for the better. Today, weighing most heavily in the hearts and on the minds of Americans is the state of our economy -- jobs -- preserving jobs, creating jobs. You in this room know best virtually every industry and every profession in America. I don't have to tell you that people are worried about the future.

Frankly, we've had tough economic times before, with higher unemployment -- but less national alarm. There's something different about today's times -- something that touches a nerve. It strikes at the heart of what drives this country forward -- our very confidence. It challenges our belief in ourselves.

MORE

Let me give it to you straight: Unemployment is -- what -- 7.3 percent -- about nine million people out of a total work force of 126 million. During the 1982 recession, 10 years ago, unemployment hit almost 11 percent -- a level not experienced since the Great Depression. So we ask ourselves, why is confidence today lower than at the depth of the 1982 recession?

I've heard a lot of theories. Some say those TV analysts are the problem -- rejoicing in bad news. Others say, well, it's the politicians. I myself have noted that in a political year candidates often shower the voters with a message so bleak and hopeless -- and at the same time they promise the rainbow if they're elected. That steady drizzle on the people's shoulders can wear away confidence and can wash away hope. So it's easy to suppose that the constant drumbeat about what's wrong in America is a self-fulfilling prophecy.

There may be some truth to that. But I think there are other reasons for our country's mood. People are feeling the way they do because America's got some real problems -- they're serious, stubborn, national problems. But I think it would be unfair and certainly untrue to suggest to the American people that we can't overcome these problems -- to imply that the United States of America is a country in decline. So today I want to talk about what we must do to meet the economic challenge that is before us -- how we can build economic vitality into our communities -- how we must ensure that our children see a future that is an improvement over the present.

Sometimes it helps to take some of these enormous issues and bring them down to the personal level. So when I talk about America's economic problems this is what I mean:

They are the worries of parents who have worked all their lives to get their kids through college -- and those kids can't find work. They are found in discouraged families who can't afford to pay off anything but the interest on their credit cards month after month after month. They are the doubts of young people who believe that times will never be as good for them as they were for their parents. Now, these are the things that dim our hope and drain our confidence.

American workers can see that technology and competition are changing the workplace faster than ever before. They can feel the heat -- both at home and abroad. They know American industry is being challenged to keep up or step aside -- I'm going to talk further about that later in the week out in Detroit, Michigan. We live in a competitive world, and people worry about our ability to compete.

American homeowners -- that's almost 70 million people -- worry that the biggest asset they will ever have, their home, will lose its worth because real estate values have declined. The same is true of any business, of association, or charitable organization that owns property -- they're concerned, too.

Finally, as I discussed earlier this week with the League of Cities -- and this one is fundamental -- the deterioration of the American family is very, very serious -- a root problem with tremendous ramifications for our economic well-being as a nation.

But the picture -- these are the problems, but the picture is not all gloom and doom. America -- we're now the only superpower in the world. Millions of immigrants still look to us as the land of opportunity -- because we are. We're the undisputed leader of the world that has a propensity for much more peace. And our economy is poised for recovery. Inflation is down. Interest rates low. Inventories are low. Exports at record highs. But this recovery will come sooner, and stronger only if we in government can come together and act now.

In January, as most of you know, I sent a message to the Congress -- a plan of action. I felt it was a straightforward set of initiatives based upon tried and true economic realities. I proposed incentives for business to buy equipment, upgrade their plants, and start hiring again. I proposed a shot in the arm to get the housing industry back on its feet -- lead us into economic recovery this spring. I proposed a cut on the capital gains. And then I offered a broader plan of action to keep us strong and economically vigorous in the years ahead. And that included, as some of you all may remember, education reform called -- we call it America 2000 -- to bring the skills of our future workers up to a standard of excellence.

It included a clampdown on excessive regulations that hurt our competitiveness and reform of our legal system so that Americans can spend more time innovating and less time litigating. And I proposed record federal support -- research and development support -- to keep our nation on the cutting edge of new technologies, new incentives for business investment. I proposed a forward-looking trade policy that demands foreign markets open up to high-quality American goods and services. And I reiterated our determination to hold the line on government spending and oppose new taxes.

Well, big issues, big challenges. This is the plan I proposed -- and I set a deadline for the Congress to act. And while the Congress didn't have a comprehensive plan of its own, it didn't like the notion of a deadline. Instead, with great and earnest deliberation, the Congress fixated on how much more to tax the American people. And they would hike taxes by $100 billion. And that plan, in my view, destroys jobs. Whereas, the plan, the incentives I've outlined here create jobs.

The last thing that this economy needs now is a massive tax increase. (Applause.) Any economist worth his salt will tell you that. But this is not new. Congress refuses routinely to take action to stimulate the economy -- but insists on these job-destroying tax increases. Everyone knows that government is too big and spends too much. Everyone knows that. And there's something else everyone knows, too: too often Congress spends the money of its customer, the taxpayer, the wrong way -- inefficiently, ineffectively, without accountability and, frankly, without compassion.

So again, I would like to call on the Congress to pass my plan by March 20 for the good of this economy and the good of the American people. (Applause.)

Now, I realize this all may sound like simply an election year blast at the Congress, controlled by the opposition party. But it is not. We really need a new way of looking at things. And I have made proposals to bring back responsibility and accountability to a system answerable to no one but itself. They are based on some fundamental principles: Rely on what works. And when possible, decentralize. Institute choice to force competition into the system. Give people more power to make the big decisions in their lives. Make the system accountable. And understand the new realities of America's global position -- that we must become more competitive.

We are not going to retreat into the failed policies of uninvolvement, disengagement, isolation, protectionism. We cannot do that. That would shrink markets and throw people out of work in this country. So these are -- staying involved, then, is the fundamental answer on international trade. These are the important ways to reform and change our country.

Chairman Fondren once said that "Leadership requires forthrightness. Hidden agendas rarely, if ever, lead to progress and very often succeed in spoiling the brew." Well, I've never been very good at hiding an agenda, and I'm not about to try to start that now.

The agenda has really been to create jobs, protect the family, and promote world peace. (Applause.) Too many times I run up against a stone wall -- a partisan guard more determined to takes sides than to move the country forward. So March 20th will be an important date. And if the Congress enacts my action plan on the economy by then, the real beneficiaries will be the American people. (Applause.)

If the Congress cannot act, or if it sends to me a bill that it knows today that I cannot and will not sign, I will take this case to the American people, and say the problem is the Congress; send a new Congress to Washington next November. But before that, I want to see us move something forward. I want to see us get something done.

And it's tough in an election year. I know that; I'm involved right up to my neck, just from coming from eight of these darn things yesterday. So I'm not being unrealistic, but I think we still have time to set aside the politics and try to pass something that most economists agree -- I think all economists agree -- would stimulate this economy and get this country back to work again. In the meantime, I will act on my own in the interests of the American people.

I drew a line in the sand -- Jane referred to it -- a little over a year ago in the Gulf. When you look back, that wasn't an easy decision. But we kept our word and we liberated a tiny country. And in the process, we sent the world, the whole world, a message. And the message was: Aggression will not stand. And that message is clearly understood. And because that message is so clearly understood, we have a newfound credibility all around -- all around the world. Travel abroad and find out that we are the United States, second to none. (Applause.)

And so now, in a figurative stance, I've drawn a line in the sand once again, right here in our own backyard. And I will keep my word again, and if we all do our part, we can ensure that our economy and our country get back on the right track.

In the meantime, keep up the wonderful work that these associations do. Government can do a lot. I know I've got to do it better. I know that Congress has to do its work better. But it can never replace that thing that de Tocqueville found so amazing about this country -- association, the propensity of one American to help another.

And when I talk about points of light, sometimes my critics say, well, he's simply forgoing his responsibility. He's simply trying to lay off on the back of private citizens the responsibility of a government. That's the farthest thing from my mind when I commend you and thank you for being points of light. Government can help. Government must help. Government must reach out a hand to those that are hurting. But it is the points of light -- it is the private sector, it is the associations that are going to make a difference in the lives of the men and women and, especially, the children of this country.

So may God bless you for your work. And thank you for letting me come back. (Applause.)

TO: Dave Demarest

FROM: CLAYTON YEUTTER
Counsellor to the President for Domestic Policy

Dave, I had a round robin discussion this afternoon with a number of members (Republicans) of Congress, and the issue of mandates came up. They pointed out that one of the favorite schemes of the Democratic leadership today is to enact programs and stick the states with the bill. That way they can take credit for them with their favorite special interest constituencies, but blame someone else for the cost.

Cong. Sundquist provided the attached as background.

I haven't really thought about whether this might fit in the Fri. speech in Philly, but you may wish to consider it as a possibility.

Hall of the States Mandate Monitor

Mandate Watch List

Overview of Mandates from the first session of the 102nd Congress

In the 1990 Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act, Congress capped spending for each category of discretionary programs—domestic, international and defense as a means of reducing the federal deficit. In addition, federal lawmakers added a "pay-as-you-go" provision for entitlement programs so that any proposed increase in an entitlement must include a plan for paying for it. These new restrictions make it more attractive for Congress to require states to enact its programs, thereby allowing Congress to accomplish its goals for action at "no cost". As of December 1, 1991, over 123 bills were listed on the Hall of the States Mandate Monitor.

In 1991, the three most frequently listed areas of mandates were Medicaid, environment, and corrections. Over a third of the bills on the Mandate Monitor concerned Medicaid. Several bills required expansion of services for children and pregnant women.

Thus far in the 102nd Congress, only three known legislative mandates have been imposed on the states. However, there are significant and costly mandates awaiting further action.

The National Literacy Act of 1991 requires states to establish adult literacy councils to evaluate the states' literacy programs and ensure that the state, nonprofit, and community groups have equal access to funds for literacy training. The original bill also required states to have, within five years, a literacy program in jails or prisons with more than 150 inmates. Including the prison literacy component, the National Association of Legislative Fiscal Officers estimated that the bill would cost states $26.6 million in Fiscal Year 1992. Last minute bargaining turned the prison literacy program into an optional grant program, dramatically lowering the bill's cost to states to $5 million.

The Medicaid provider tax settlement accomplishes the following: 1) compels states to enact broad-based provider taxes only; 2) restricts a state's match from provider taxes to 25 percent of the total (this provision sunsets in 1995); 3) effectively eliminates, with minor exceptions, voluntary contribution programs from federal financial participation and caps the future federal match at 10 percent of a state's Medicaid administrative expenses; 4) establishes a national disproportionate share payment limit equal to 12 percent of total Medicaid expenditures, with provisions treating those over and under 12 percent today; and 5) preserves the integrity of the intergovernmental transfer program. The Administration is expected to sign H.R. 3595.

The third legislative mandate is the reauthorization of the 1984 Striped Bass Conservation Act which places a federal moratorium on fishing for striped bass if state actions are inconsistent with the Interstate Commission on Striped Bass.

One trend that occurred this year was the increase of proposed mandates in regulations. In at least three cases, regulations were proposed that violated the intent of the law as adopted and in doing so imposed harsh mandates on the states.

Several mandates were added to the Child Care and Development Block Grant including: requiring states to spend 90 percent of their block grant flexible funds on direct services; withholding federal dollars for any state that restricts parental choice including state restrictions that limit the availability of private and sectarian providers; requiring that no federal matching payments be allocated unless the provider is licensed, regulated, or registered; forbidding states, even if federal money is exhausted, to restrict the number of child care certificates throughout the fiscal year; requiring that federal funding supplement existing state dollars and not supplant it; and, requiring states to allow parents who receive certificates to use them for sectarian purposes (violates 32 state constitutions).

The proposed child care for at-risk children regulations define "in order to work", and would restrict at-risk child care to families who need child care to accept employment or to remain employed. (The regulation excludes those who are unemployed or in training or in educational programs.) According to the regulations, states must set identical standards for daycare centers receiving no public money. This provision would require states to pay for child care even if the provider was exempt from state standards.

The Internal Revenue Service set minimum benefit requirements in the Social Security regulations which state that benefits received from a state or local retirement system must be equivalent to the benefit the employee would have received under Social Security.

Of course, the most egregious regulation was the Medicaid regulation to prohibit the use of provider taxes and voluntary contributions. Currently, 35 states use either or both of these methods to help pay for the state share of Medicaid. This regulation was withdrawn due to the passage of the legislation mentioned above.

Although only a few additional mandates have become law so far in the 102nd Congress, many have been proposed. NCSL has estimated that the mandates in just seven of the bills would cost states $1.6 billion in Fiscal Year 1992. (Further details are provided in The Fiscal Impact of Proposed Mandates, available from NCSL's Marketing Department) With major legislation (Banking, Crime, Higher Education) still under consideration there are many opportunities for additional mandates on the states.

Mandate Outlook for 1992

As the 102nd Congress resumes, there are several items likely to be addressed before the close of the session. There were over 120 bills introduced last year that would impose additional mandates on state and local governments. Only three known legislative mandates were imposed on state and local governments in 1991; however, much of the work of the 102nd Congress was left unresolved.

Agriculture

The House and Senate will again consider the regulation of pesticides.

Banking

Legislation to preempt state control of banks, which failed last year, will likely be offered again in 1992. At issue is the desire by some members of Congress and the Administration to promote interstate branch banking.

Education

The reauthorization of the higher education act will be considered in 1992. The major mandate threat in this legislation involves the federal government requiring states be held responsible for defaults on federal student loans if there are a high percentage of defaults in the state.

Energy and Environment

The reauthorization of an energy bill, the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act, and the Clean Water Act provide potential opportunities to impose costly mandates on state and local governments. The National Association of Legislative Fiscal Officers examined the cost of requiring the states to develop a state waste plan that would include a recycling component. NALFO estimated that the cost of providing for curbside collection and processing materials for recycling would be $198.5 million for Fiscal Year 1992. Although most states indicated that they have some type of program in place, many cited that the proposed federal program would be an expansion of their current services. Many states also indicated that the cost to local governments would be exorbitant. States are also likely to feel the fiscal pressure of the Clean Air Act regulations as they are promulgated.

Health

The Medicaid prescription drug rebate program will be examined again in 1992. Reauthorization of the Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Block Grant will be considered in 1992, opening the possibility for further mandates in this already mandate-laden block grant. There will be further discussion of regulation of health insurance providers. And, there will be discussion of mandatory disclosure of AIDS by physicians and health care providers.

Housing

The relatively new housing program Home Investments Partnership Program (HOME) will be reauthorized in 1992. The program is designed to increase affordable housing for low-income persons through grants to state and local government. The reauthorization could provide an opportunity for federal lawmakers or officials seeking to impose mandates related to state land use, housing, or community development policies.

Insurance

Bills will be considered that would establish "minimum standards" for state insurance regulation. If enacted, states might be required to increase spending to come into compliance. Alternatively, the federal government may seek to directly regulate the insurance industry and may seek to preempt the states' premium tax base to fund new federal activity.

Justice

The Crime Bill which was stopped at the close of the 1991 session will be reintroduced. Major mandates of concern to states include: mandatory sentencing for state offenses; the "police officers bill of rights", and the prohibition of sports lotteries. One further mandate that was eliminated from the National Literacy Act of 1991 that might make its way into the Crime Bill is mandating prison literacy programs in all facilities of 150 inmates or more. The National Association of Legislative Fiscal Officers estimated that this requirement would have cost the states more than $21 million in Fiscal Year 1992 alone.

Economic Recovery

Several members of Congress are preparing "economic growth" or recovery measures. The President is also expected to make proposals in his State of the Union address and his budget this month. These may include tax relief and additional domestic spending. There is discussion of new aid to the states. While such a package may be helpful to states facing difficult fiscal situations, it should be remembered that major mandates could be placed in any reconciliation act that might be necessitated by achievement of consensus on tax relief and/or budget process modification legislation. In 1990, the last year that there was a reconciliation bill, over $13.3 billion in federally imposed mandates were imposed on state and local governments.

Also, the President may introduce block grant legislation in an effort to give states more flexibility. This legislation was first discussed in President Bush's State of the Union address in 1991.

The 102nd's Multiplying Mandates

Congress has found the means to satisfy its expensive taste in programs at bargain basement prices– just charge them to the states.

Martha A. Fabricius

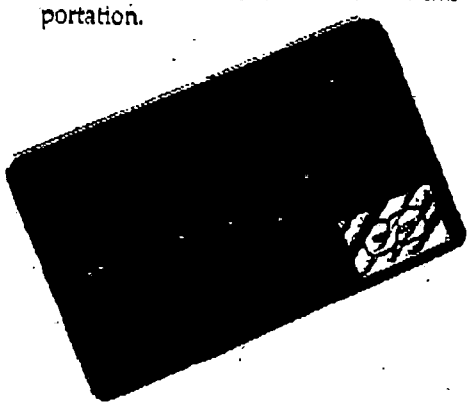
It's not your imagination. Congress really is imposing more mandates on states than ever before. And changes in the federal budget process practically ensure that the problem is going to get worse.

In the 1990 Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act, Congress capped spending for each category of the discretionary programs—domestic, international and defense—as a means of reducing the federal deficit. In addition, federal lawmakers added a "pay-as-you-go" provision for entitlement programs so that any proposed increase in an entitlement's benefits must include a plan for paying for it. These new restrictions make it more attractive for Congress to require states to enact its programs, thereby allowing Congress to accomplish its goals for action at "no cost."

The temptation was too great to resist. As of October 1991, the 102nd Congress had introduced 119 bills that proposed mandates.

When fiscal conditions are tight, mandates have a greater effect on state budgets. Mandates force states to redirect their spending priorities, and they sometimes are unable to meet existing obligations. Tennessee, for example, estimates that 27 percent of the state's projected revenue growth must go toward paying the cost of federal mandates, while spending for K-12 education and essential state improvements may be curtailed.

About one-third of this year's federal bills required states to provide health services. Other mandates dealt with human services, environmental protection, education, elections, crime and transportation.



Of the top priority, "low-number" bills introduced first in the session, three bills in the Senate and two in the House included mandates on states. These were the Strengthening Education for American Families Act (S. 2), the Child Welfare and Preventive Services Act (S. 4), the Family and Medical Leave Act (H.R. 2 and S. 5) and the Civil Rights Act (H.R. 1). In just the first 16 days of the session, 45 bills were introduced that contained federal mandates on states.

Mandates for health services, for the most part, dealt with changes in the Medicaid program. In fact, two-thirds of the health bills required Medicaid expansions. Several bills required expansion of services for children and pregnant women. The bill with the greatest chance of passage was S. 4, the Child Welfare and Preventive Services Act. It would require states to provide continuous Medicaid coverage for children under age 6 for up to six months at a time, regardless of changes in their families' financial status; not to terminate Medicaid coverage for certain categories of needy children under 19 without determining whether the child could be covered under other criteria; to provide Medicaid coverage for all children who receive Social Security Insurance; and to increase payments to some hospitals for patients whose stays are exceptionally long and costly.

The National Association of Legislative Fiscal Officers (NALFO) estimated that S. 4 would cost almost $1 billion for FY 1992 alone. New York and Pennsylvania each estimated that it would cost more than $400 million to meet the bill's requirement to submit all claims for federal reimbursement under the foster care and adoption assistance programs within one year. The bill was still in the Senate Finance Committee in November.

Family and medical leave bills (H.R. 2 and S. 5), re-introduced from 1990, would require employers with 50 or more employees to grant up to 12 weeks unpaid leave per year to full-time employees for childbirth, adoption or serious illness of employees or members of their immediate family. Employees would be eligible for health insurance during the leave and for reinstatement to the same position or its equivalent upon return. Family leave legislation would affect state government as an employer. President Bush vetoed this bill in 1990 and would likely veto it again, if Congress passes it.

After mandates for health services, environmental protection requirements were the second most numerous. Proposed amendments to the Clean Water Act would require states to strictly monitor local water districts' compliance with pollution control regulations, and impose minimum civil penalties on polluters, and to redesign some pollution guidelines; federal funds could be withheld from states that failed to carry out these responsibilities. Like the Clean Air Act of 1990, this bill requires states to collect fees sufficient to recover 60 percent of the costs of administering the water quality program. The Clean Water Act was still in committee in November.

Human services legislation also had its share of mandates. The Family Preservation Act (H.R. 2571), the House proposal for child welfare reform, originally proposed increasing funding and providing capped entitlement authority for child welfare services. Fifty percent of the money was to be set aside for family preservation services, including substance abuse treatment. The original bill also required states to participate in the AFDC emergency assistance program and inadvertently extended Medicaid coverage to all children under the proposed foster care program, but these two requirements were amended out of the law in October. A mandate was added, however, allowing Indian tribes to apply for a percentage of a state's Title XX funds.

The Family Preservation Act was combined with the Mickey Leland Hunger Relief Act into an omnibus children's package; the new version passed the subcommittee on a voice vote and was in the Ways and Means Committee in November.

The National Literacy Act requires states to establish adult literacy councils to evaluate the states' literacy programs and ensure that the state and non-profit and community groups have equal access to funds for literacy training. The original bill also required states to have, within five years, a literacy program in jails or prisons with more than 150 inmates.

Including the prison literacy component, NALFO estimated that the bill would cost states $26.6 million in FY 1992. Fortunately, last minute bargaining on the House floor made the prison literacy program an optional grant program, dramatically lowering the bill's cost to $5 million.

A proposed "motor voter" bill required states to allow residents to register to vote in federal elections when they apply for a driver's license or for state or federal benefits like unemployment insurance. The same bill required states to update their voter rolls by eliminating the names of people who had died or changed addresses.

In 1990, the Congressional Budget Office estimated that this bill would cost states $25 million per year for the first five years. NALFO, however, projected the cost at $67 million for FY 1992 alone. States that would have to computerize their records would be hardest hit.

The tendency for the feds to extend their authority into states' criminal jurisdiction is reflected in recent bills that mandate registration of convicted offenders, parole restrictions and longer sentences. The Violent Crime Control Act, or crime bill, includes mandatory prison sentences for state offenses such as gang-related crimes and crimes against the elderly and the death penalty for some murders, such as murders of law enforcement officers.

A controversial provision of the crime bill is the "police officers' bill of rights," which requires states to adopt specific standards for investigations of police misconduct. The House eliminated this mandate from its version of the bill, calling instead for a study of the issue. The Senate has retained the requirement in its crime bill.

Mandates in the House highway bill require states to conform to the procedures and forms used under the International Registration Plan and the International Fuel Tax Agreement, compacts some states have joined to consolidate administrative requirements imposed on the motor carrier industry.

The bill also has put a new spin on the usual mandate/sanction approach by introducing a "reprogramming" sanction, or "apportionment transfer." If a state fails to comply with mandates requiring federal speed limits and the use of motorcycle helmets and safety belts, it must "reprogram" or allocate a portion of its federal highway funds for highway safety. To encourage state compliance, limited grant money will be available initially.

Assuming those states that have mandatory seat belt and helmet laws could meet the strict federal enforcement criteria, at least 19 states that don't have the laws would be affected by the reprogramming mandate for a minimal cost of $32 million. West Virginia is predicted to lose the most—about $17.5 million in FY 1992 highway construction funds.

Appropriation bills affecting states included other mandates as the bills went into conference committees in October. One would pre-empt state authority in banking and insurance. Another, prohibiting state sports lotteries, had gained support and was likely to be included in the crime bill. An administration proposal to increase states' responsibility for licensing postsecondary institutions and for oversight in the guaranteed student loan program suggested that states are not doing enough to ensure the financial stability of colleges, universities and trade schools.

The states lucked out on the unemployment insurance bill. The House's bill originally restricted states' ability to disqualify applicants under certain conditions and required states to approve training after a claimant had received benefits for at least 10 weeks, unless states could show that training would provide no net social benefits. The compromise version of the bill, however, eliminated virtually all the original mandates.

At least some members of Congress sympathize with the states' plight. Representatives Olympia Snowe of Maine, George Hochbeckner of New York and Doug Barnard of California introduced bills that would prohibit or limit federal mandates on states. No action has been taken on those bills, however.

Although only a few additional mandates have become law so far in the 102nd Congress, many have been proposed. NCSL has estimated that the mandates in just seven of the proposed bills would cost states a whopping $1.6 billion in FY 1992. It is too early to predict what will happen in the second half of the session, but if the number of mandates that have been introduced so far is any indication of the future, states have good reason to worry.

More Dictates from the Feds

Federally imposed mandates on the states offer congressional leaders a way to take credit for popular programs without incurring any additional costs.

Martha Fabricius

It's free. Or is it?

States are recognizing that as valuable as some federal programs are, one thing they certainly are not is free. Cleaning up junkyards, training merchant marines, reducing noise pollution – these are just a few of the new requirements the federal government is instructing the states to act on – and pay for.

Federal demands on the states are increasing in both costs and numbers. The explosion of federal mandates started in the second half of the 1980s when many states were enjoying strong revenue growth and expanding services, and were enacting innovative new programs. At the same time, the federal government was struggling to reconcile new spending demands and record budget deficits. The prevailing attitude in Washington was that the states could afford new mandates. Congress learned quickly that it could take credit for new program expansions while shifting the costs to the states.

Last year was no exception to the trend – at least 20 additional mandates with a price tag topping $15 billion over five years have been imposed on states. They range from new standards for clean air and the transportation of hazardous materials to requiring driver's license revocation for certain drug offenses.

The bulk of the $15 billion cost comes from three expensive mandated changes: expanding the Social Security system to state and local employees not participating in a public retirement system, increasing the Medicare wage cap from $54,300 to $125,000, and changing the eligibility requirements for various Medicare and Medicaid programs.

Regulations on new legislation promulgated by federal agencies will result in still more mandates. Such regulations can sometimes be more perilous to states than the law. One recent example was an environmental regulation requiring that the interest earned on state wildlife funds be placed back in the funds. This affected several states that used the interest for general fund purposes. Nobody realized the cost of this mandate until it became effective. Now states are urging the Office of Management and Budget to reverse the policy.

Yet another place where mandates are often "hidden" from state leaders is in the 1,000-page budget documents. In the 1991 Budget Reconciliation Act alone, approximately $13.3 billion in unfunded mandates over the next five years has been passed on to states.

One of the most invasive mandates of the 101st Congress is found in the Clean Air Act of 1990. States are required to collect the bulk of the fees established by the law and the fees go to the states. However, if a state fails to collect the fee, the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) moves in, collects it and keeps it.

The $15 billion cost of the 1990 mandates is strictly an estimate. It's difficult, if not impossible, to calculate the exact total cost of these mandates to the states for a number of reasons:

Martha Fabricius tracks federal mandates for NCSL.

New Mandates from the 101st Congress

Program Area	Brief Title	Explanation & Programs Affected
Child Care	Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990	The act sets no standards but requires state and local governments to establish minimum health and safety standards, health and safety training, and standards to prevent and control infectious diseases. A voucher program must be in place by October 1992.
Labor	Americans with Disabilities Act	Provides civil rights to employment and use of public accommodations, transportation and telecommunications.
Revenue and Tax	Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990	Requires Social Security coverage for state and local employees who are not covered under an existing public retirement plan.
Transportation	Hazardous Materials Transportation	Establishes federal uniform standards to be enforced by states in technical areas and route designation.
	Driver's License Revocation	Mandates revoking of drivers' licenses in certain cases involving drugs or alcohol.
	Drug Abuse/Transportation	Requires state plan and education to counter drug abuse.
Education	Student Athlete Right-to-Know	Requires colleges to disclose athlete graduation rates in some circumstances.
	Vocational Education Act Reauthorization	Requires state legislatures to review state vocational education plans.
	Drug Free Schools and Community Act	Anti-drug policy required for all schools that get federal funds.
Environment	Clean Air Restoration and Standards	Sets new standards to reduce smog, acid rain, toxics and auto emissions.
Health	Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990	Requires states to phase in Medicaid coverage of children below 19, in households with incomes below 100 percent of the poverty level, over a 10-year period beginning in 1992.
	Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990	Requires states to provide continuous coverage to infants during their first year, post partum women and pregnant women.
	Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990	Prohibits states from imposing time limits on inpatient care for Medicaid eligible children under 6.
	Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990	Requires states to provide reimbursement for a larger number of prescription drugs.
Other	Cash Management Improvement Act	Sets uniform standards for cash flow between federal and state government.
	Lobbying: Interior Appropriation	Bans all federal funding of lobbying; states must report all lobbying.
	Nutrition Labeling and Education Act	Sets federal standards on nutritional labeling that pre-empt state standards.

• The Congressional Budget Office is required by law to study the fiscal impact of federal legislation once it has passed through a full committee. However, tax and appropriations bills (where a great many of the mandates are hidden) are exempt from this requirement.

• The information gathered on costs depends upon how the state or localities interpret the mandate. "A good example of this is how states and localities estimated the impact of ensuring handicapped accessibility to voting places," comments Terri Gullo of the Congressional Budget Office. "Estimates for compliance with this bill ranged from $845 per county in Georgia (to transfer registration of handicapped voters to accessible facilities) to $10,000 in the city of Minneapolis alone (to install ramps in all polling places). Given this wide range of expected compliance cost and little data available, there was no valid way to estimate one aggregate cost figure. Instead, the estimate discussed the potential range of impacts and provided numerous examples."

• Cost estimates are not updated after bills are amended. This is a substantial disadvantage in a number of cases because often the bill is changed completely by amendments.

The 1990 Budget Reconciliation Act included the passage of major reforms in the budget process. Two new requirements will likely cause more unfunded mandates to be imposed on the states.

First, there are caps on appropriations for discretionary spending – defense, international and domestic programs – for the first three years. If the caps are exceeded by congressional appropriations, the president's Office of Management and Budget will order an across-the-board cut in spending within that category. Therefore, it is no longer possible to pay for a human service program with a cut in defense.

Second, each new program must be on a "pay-as-you-go" basis. That is, any legislative proposal to increase spending on entitlement programs will be required to be deficit neutral – it must either contain cuts in other entitlement programs, or increased revenues, or both. Under these enforcement procedures, Congress apparently will have relatively little room for new initiatives over the next five years, and any that crop up are likely to rely heavily upon unfunded mandates on the states.

Congress is apt to push even more off on states this year. There will be additional pre-emptions of states' rights in a number of areas including state pesticide regulations, electric power regulations and state-run "Buy America" programs.

There are other likely areas of federal intrusion. Congress seems poised to place new regulations on cable television, set recycling goals, expand Medicaid immunizations, regulate insurance companies, implement "motor voter" programs, require states to test criminal defendants for drugs, and regulate use of seat belts and helmets.

NCSL Tracks Mandates

Efforts to combat the trend of forcing the states to comply with federal mandates have been hampered by the lack of detailed information. In June 1990, NCSL and several other state organizations started a project to track new mandates that impose costs upon the states. The venture is modeled after a program in Tennessee, where state budget analysts keep track of all proposed mandates and provide cost estimates for those that are nearing passage.

NCSL's new "Mandate Monitor," lists all bills introduced in Congress that impose costly new mandates on the states. Information on the costs of the bills is provided for certain major pieces of legislation. In addition, a special Watch List is included to alert state leaders to particularly threatening legislation that is nearing passage.

A separate catalog of all existing mandates is now also available. This 20-page document gives the public law number, lists the Congressional Budget Office estimate of state and local costs where available and describes briefly what the mandate is. If a state has analyzed the cost of a particular law, the catalog includes it.

1 One-House veto
2 Approval by Committees of both Houses
3 Two-House veto
4 Two-House Approval
5 One-Committee veto
6 Two-Committee veto
7 Other miscellaneous types of legislative veto

Note:

The Supreme Court has declared one (1) and two (2) House legislative vetos unconstitutional because they violate the 'presentment' clause of the Constitution (Article I, Section 7) and the separation of powers doctrine. We have continued to note reporting requirements with legislative veto provisions until the Court determines the question of 'severability'.

(1) Immigration and Naturalization Service v. Chadha
(2) Consumer Energy Council of the United States v Federal Energy Regulatory Commission; Consumers Union of the United States v. Federal Trade Commission
