HISTORY OF THE 123d AIRLIFT WING

The 123d Airlift Wing is an Air National Guard organization. Its statutory basis is the Dicks Act of 1903. This law allowed deactivated United States military units to be allocated to the 50 American states and its territories.

The Kentucky Air National Guard was created on May 24, 1946. The 123d Fighter Group and the 165th Fighter Squadron were created. The new group and squadron were part of a nationwide redesignation of WW II U.S. Army Air Corps units. Kentucky's unit allocations came from the 368th Fighter Group and 359th Fighter Squadron. Under War Department orders the insignia, WW II battle credits and honors were transferred to the Kentucky National Guard. Federal recognition was received February 16, 1947.

The Kentucky Air National Guard was assigned 25 F-51 Mustangs in May 1947. Aircrews became extremely proficient and competed against other units from the 55th Fighter Wing to demonstrate combat readiness. Their professionalism netted the unit its first Spaatz Trophy. The coveted award, named after General Dewey Spaatz, the Air Force chief of staff, singled out the Kentucky Air Guard as the premier combat ready unit of all Air Guard flying elements for 1949. It was the beginning of many awards for the next 40 years.

On October 10, 1950, during the Korean War, President Harry S. Truman placed the 123d Fighter Group on active duty. The unit was thus moved from Standiford Field to Godman Field, Fort Knox, KY. It became recognized as a Wing Headquarters. The unit's F-51 "Mustang" aircraft were ferried to the Far East. Several of the unit's pilots volunteered for combat duty over Korea. Five were lost in action, including Capt. John W. Shewmaker. The latter's heroic actions were recognized in 1960 as Standiford Field was renamed Shewmaker Air Guard Base. The base kept that name until 1976 when it resumed its previous title of Standiford Field.

In November 1951, the Wing was ordered to replace the Strategic Air Command's 12th Fighter Escort Wing, Manston R.A.F., England. The 123d was equipped with F-84 "Thunderjets". Aircrews participated in joint NATO deployments through June 1952. Deactivation and a return to peacetime status came in July 1952. The unit received another rotation of F-51 Mustangs airframes. Combat training and military readiness again became the primary mission for the 123rd Wing. From 1956 through 1957, the unit flew the F-86 "Sabre Jet". The unit's mission switched to reconnaissance in 1958 when the F-86 aircraft were replaced with the RB-57 "Canberra" until 1965 when it received the RF-101 "Voodoo" supersonic aircraft. Just prior to the arrival of the new airframes the 165th was awarded its second Spaatz Trophy for superior combat readiness and flight training.

In January of 1968, during the Pueblo Crisis off the coast of North Korea (during the Vietnam War), the KyANG was called to federal service by President Lyndon B. Johnson. During this call-up, the unit flew approximately 20,000 tactical flying hours and delivered nearly 320,000 reconnaissance prints to requesting agencies. Assigned personnel served on active duty for 16 months, returning to state service on 8 June 1969. Performances during that period brought the unit its first Air Force Outstanding Unit Award (AFOUA).

The 123d's components continued to fly the RF-101 until the spring of 1976 when a no-notice conversion to the RF-4C "Phantom II" was announced by the National Guard Bureau (NGB). Unlike the single seat RF-101, the RF-4C required a two-man crew. The backseater, or Weapons System Operator, was new to the wing's aircrews.

The unit, through professional effort and exceptional leadership, responded to the challenge and progressed from non-combat ready status to full combat readiness within seven months, a record time frame. Under the Total Force Policy, the unit was part of the defense posture within the Tactical Air Command (TAC).

The Phantom years were marked with many overseas deployments, the unit representing the USAF in international photo reconnaissance competitions and a remarkable record in flight safety. The unit's operational excellence was once again spotlighted in 1981 when it was selected from the ninety-one Air National Guard flying units nationwide to receive an unprecedented third Spaatz trophy.

In May 1983 the unit reached another historic milestone -- the 123d was awarded the highest possible rating from TAC during its Operational Readiness Inspection. This was the first time that a TAC unit had received an outstanding rating, thereby establishing a standard against which all other TAC-gained units would be measured. On January 1, 1989 the unit received its seventh Air Force Outstanding Unit Award, a record for any Air National Guard unit.

On January 8, 1989 the 123d Tactical Reconnaissance Wing was officially redesignated the 123d Tactical Airlift Wing. The 31-year reconnaissance mission was changed to tactical airlift and the RF-4C high performance jets were exchanged for four engine turboprop C-130Bs. The future of the dedicated tactical reconnaissance mission was waning while the need for airlift with the U.S. military was increasing. Louisville's proximity to two major Army bases, Fort Knox and Fort Campbell, added logic to the conversion.

The year 1989 became a year of many "firsts" for the unit. By the end of the year the unit had been involved in many world-wide airlift missions, including participation in Exercise Volant Oak, where Air Guard flying units rotate through Panama every 15 days. For the first time, the unit participated in an airlift competition. The event, Sentry Rodeo, tested skills such as air drops, short field landings, low level navigational skills and aircraft maintenance. One noteworthy mission involved the delivery of two C-130s to Columbia as part of the U.S.'s commitment to support that nation's efforts to combat drug trafficking. The unit's first humanitarian airlift came in the aftermath of Hurricane Hugo.

In February of 1991 the unit received notification it would convert from the C-130B to the C-130H model aircraft in the spring of 1992. This move also increased the authorized aircraft from 8 to 12, direct from the Lockheed assembly line.

Although the Kentucky flying unit was not federally mobilized in the fall/winter/spring of 1991/92 for Operation Desert Shield/Storm, it reacted as though it was. Using volunteers, the unit flew missions world-wide, around the clock. Despite flying the Air Force's oldest C-130s with the least tonnage capacity, Kentucky airmen airlifted more cargo than any other Air National Guard unit in support of our nation's war effort. An additional 88 unit members were placed on active duty orders during the war in the Persian Gulf.

The 123d Airlift Wing is structured with subordinate units in four states: Maryland (135th TAG); North Carolina (145th TAG); West Virginia (167th TAG); and Ohio (179th TAG). The Wing Headquarters is located at Standiford Field, Louisville, Kentucky.

Major General Robert L. DeZarn is the Adjutant General of the state of Kentucky. The Assistant Adjutant General for Air is Brigadier General John E. Kuhn. The 123d AW is commanded by Colonel Stewart R. Byrne. The commander of the 165th Airlift Squadron is Lieutenant Colonel Donald E. Goley III. The current Chief of the National Guard Bureau (NGB), Washington D.C. is Lieutenant General John B. Conaway, former commander of the Kentucky Air National Guard.

Commander's Column

Summer has come and gone and, now that fall is upon us, it may be a good time to take stock of our achievements since spring. First and most importantly, we have not experienced a command-controlled flight or ground mishap, or a lost-time accident. Wonderful!

Many of you have participated in interesting training opportunities this year. The Volant Partner deployment to Koksijde, Belgium, with representatives from units of each of the four states in the wing was a huge success. Col. Fred Larson, the 179th ALG commander and detachment commander for the deployment, said that this was by far the best planned and executed deployment in which he had participated.

Additionally, the hospital trained in Germany, and the 123rd Services Flight/MSS had hardship duty in Hawaii, as well as other exotic places. Good comments out of all deployments, and we can't forget those who currently are serving in Panama.

Representatives from our ALCE responded to the call to serve in many places, including Los Angeles, Africa and Central America. The civil engineers had a productive deployment early in the year to Belize and followed that with work at AMC Headquarters, Scott AFB, receiving many laudatory comments. Our fire fighters deployed to Reese AFB early in the year and to Myrtle Beach AFB in June to lend a helping hand.

Our 123rd Combat Control Team

1992 has been great; look what we've done!

supported training exercises from Fort Bragg to Oklahoma City, including numerous JA/ATT missions. The 123rd MAPS personnel helped build pallets and load aircraft from Fort Campbell to Wright Patterson AFB.

A team from our 123rd Security Police Flight took third place in the State Armed Combat Pistol competition and the team that deployed to Camp Robinson, Ark., for Phoenix Ace training set all kinds of records with two individuals considered "Best of the Best" and another receiving the "Top Gun" award. Wow!

The 123rd Weather Flight provided support to Fort Knox while they were deployed there, and to the 20th Special Forces Group at Birmingham, Ala. Our communications squadron supported exercise Dragon Hammer in Italy, Fertes Caminos in Central America and presently has troops in Saudi Arabia.

We volunteered and had the first airlift aircraft on the ground at Homestead AFB in Florida following Hurricane Andrew, to deliver security police for protection and engineers to evaluate the damage. We kept a third of our fleet of new C-130H aircraft available for two weeks to support the relief effort. Many of you made yourselves available for the long, grueling flights through the night to get badly needed supplies to the hurricane victims. And, we must not forget those who worked long hours on the aircraft here at home to get them ready for the mission.

Of course, we had many visits by

Col. Stewart R. Byrne
Wing Commander

dignitaries and the media. The Man o' War arrival ceremony with Sen. Wendell H. Ford, Gen. H.T. Johnson, Lt. Gen. John B. Conaway and our many distinguished guests will long be remembered. The visit by our adjutant general, Maj. Gen. Robert L. DeZarn, and Brig. Gen. John E. Kuhn was also a memorable occasion, as was the visit by the director of the Air National Guard, Maj. Gen. Phillip G. Killey. To have Air Force One with President and Mrs. Bush on our ramp was also a thrill.

To say the least, we have been busy and I haven't mentioned achievements like our winning bowling and softball teams, or those of you who had a terrific annual field training deployment at Savannah, Ga. We have packed a lot into our limited time this summer with our aircraft conversion training, and we have served ourselves, our families and our country well. We can be proud of what we are achieving and the direction the unit is taking. More and more I can see that we are again setting the pace. You have great ideas and the talent to bring them to life. It's fun working with each of you. Thanks.

CLINTON WILL COST KENTUCKY JOBS:
Clinton's tax on foreign corporations would cost 63,000 jobs in Kentucky.

Clinton's proposed defense cuts would cost 18,000 defense related jobs in Kentucky.

NAFTA:

Since 1987, Kentucky exports to Mexico have nearly quadrupled -- exports to Canada have grown nearly 50% to a combined total of $1.1 billion in 1991. In 1991, over 30,000 Kentucky jobs were tied to exports.

BOWLING GREEN PAPER ENDORSES POTUS:

10/30/92 -- Bowling Green, KY [AP] the Daily News endorsed POTUS saying a Clinton presidency would be "a gamble on the future of America" with stakes that are too high. The Bowling Green paper said the President is the only "candidate who is capable of balancing the many duties and the powers of chief executive and commander-in-chief." "Bill Clinton wants Americas to think things are worse than ever for the middle class worse than the Jimmy Carter years of 1976-80." The paper also said Bush would be best able to handle an international crisis. "Clinton would falter under the pressure or, at best, remain indecisive long enough to allow a threatening situation to get out of control. Remember Jimmy Carter, Iran, the Ayatollah and the hostages?" the endorsement said.

10/30/92 Louisville, KY [AP] Kentucky's new tourism slogan is "Kentucky, What You've Been Looking For," the new logo -- a thoroughbred horse incorporated in the "K" of Kentucky.

10/31/92 Louisville, KY [AP] Federal authorities have prepared special efforts to detect and prosecute any election fraud uncovered Tuesday. A team of federal prosecutors and FBI agents will be on duty in the Eastern and Western districts to receive and investigate complaints of election fraud. Teams of about 25 lawyers and investigators will be sent out to monitor the polls.

10/31/92 Lexington, KY [AP] Clinton leads POTUS by 7 in KY. Clinton 45, POTUS 38, Perot 12, Undecided 5. Poll conducted by WHAS-TV/Lexington Herald-Leader -- 602 voters. Poll broadcast Saturday night. 4 point margin of error.

"There's a lot of evidence you can sell people on tax increases if they think it's an investment. Interestingly enough, the thing people are least willing to do is to have their taxes raised to pay the debt off or have their taxes raised to expand a program they think is already failing, or a failing government . . ."

Paul Kirk, Democratic chairman: "I think conventions are an institution. I don't think they're going to go away. Even though the constraints of TV are real and you have to live with them, it is an opportunity to project the message and profile of the party. . . ."

night because she was able to raise questions about Bush, about his leadership ability -- not in a nasty tone, but with humor and in good fun. The fact that she could do it with a smile coming from a well-dressed, attractive Texan woman softened the edges . . . without the potential for folks saying, 'Why is that nice woman being so mean?'"

Robert Strauss, Democratic Party elder: "People know there is nothing mean about George [Bush], or evil about him. He may be foolish, but he is not a fool. He may be silly, but he has some confidence. . . . I don't think Bush is going to be an easy candidate to defeat whether or not this is going to be a close race. . . . The Republicans have a lot built for them. There is a developed electoral bias that plays into their hands just as the situation in the House of Representatives plays into the Democrats hands. . . . I think the Bentsen choice upset the Republican campaign considerably. They have to relook at the whole tarot card."

Paul Brontas, Dukakis campaign chairman: "Everybody is looking for the deal. There wasn't any. The deal was that Jackson would campaign for the team. He would reach out to his supporters and we would bring onto the Dukakis campaign staff some of his key advisers, some of his key staff members. We would merge them in with our campaign. His concerns about policy and the direction of the campaign in large part will be channeled through his senior policy advisers who will be a part of our campaign. I don't know what Ron Brown intends to do, but anybody would love to have a Brown on their campaign."

Ron Brown, Jackson convention manager: "This is real-world politics. We didn't have any desire to make Michael Dukakis look like some kind of plague. We didn't want to embarrass him. We didn't want to hurt his chances to be elected. But there were some things we felt very strongly about. We discussed them. We felt comfortable with the results of the discussion and we moved on. Nobody ever wanted any signed documents that would be published. That would've been destructive. We didn't have any desire to be destructive. . . ."

"Jesse Jackson would like to have been at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue. I think he would still like that. I think he is interested in further lessening the influence of race on American politics and other parts of American life."

Sen. Sam Nunn of Georgia: "I'm not interested in the executive branch. Period. [If they offered secretary of defense?] First, I'd have to ask if they were going to put the office on the first floor, because the next one's going to be tempted to jump. But even if they moved it down to the first floor, I would not be interested in being secretary of defense. Period. . . ."

Former president Jimmy Carter: "I take [comparisons with Dukakis] as a compliment. Obviously the Republicans thought in the past, and still think, that's detriment to the Democratic side. But regardless of how you look at it, I've seen public-opinion polls run on a nationwide basis . . . that show I'm no longer a millstone around the Democrats' neck."

Gov. Bill Clinton of Arkansas: "I think people want a more active government, but they don't want to think it will screw the economy up generally. . . . I believe there's a huge majority of people who know we have to do more than has been done in the last eight years with government on a lot of these problems, but they're not sure how much they should pay for it, and they don't want to do it if it's going to screw up declining unemployment, inflation,

HIGHLIGHT:

In addition to covering the proceedings in Atlanta, backstage as well as on the convention floor, NEWSWEEK editors and reporters meet regularly with Democratic Party leaders to get their views on the convention, the candidates and the campaign ahead. The following are excerpts from some of these sessions.

BODY:

Bert Lance, Jackson adviser and budget director in the Carter administration: "In my judgment, Jackson's made the transition from civil-rights leader to political leader. . . . That was very evident when he stepped off that bus in Atlanta.

"What Jackson is doing is not going to end. It's not going to end when we leave Atlanta. It's not going to end in November. It's not going to end for him in January when we're successful in electing Dukakis. That's not going to end as long as Jackson is able to . . . stir people."

Charles Robb, former governor of Virginia and now Senate candidate: "I think that this ticket is more likely to take quick, decisive [budget] action than almost any ticket we could have nominated. Others might chart better with my views on some of the other issues, but in terms of fiscal discipline Mike may be the only other governor that I know of that I would yield a spot in the Cheapy Hall of Fame. He's tough. And Lloyd [Bentsen] with his credibility in the financial area [is] a first-rate partner."

Rep. William Gray of Pennsylvania, chairman of the House Budget committee: "Has Jackson been successful to a great degree at heightening the consciousness of blacks for the need for political participation? Absolutely. That's the great symbolism of his candidacy, which I don't think Michael Dukakis understands and most whites can never fathom. I mean, you cannot understand being down there on that floor last night, being black in the United States of America. Who cares whether the guy came in second? Right over there is Martin Luther King's grave. Right over there is Ebenezer Baptist Church. Right over there is the old YMCA where the black leadership in the '40s and '50s used to meet because they couldn't meet in hotels like this to plot strategy. And the emotional feeling that, God, we are making progress. Most people can't understand that."

Susan Estrich, Dukakis campaign manager: "I don't know George Bush, and I don't feel qualified to say he isn't a nice guy. This is not a matter of whether he is a nice guy or a mean guy. This is about whether he is a strong leader, whether he is his own man. It is not about his persona in the personal sense. . . . I do think that Ann Richards was particularly effective Monday

ISSUES:

CLINTON WILL COST KENTUCKY JOBS:
Clinton's tax on foreign corporations would cost 63,000 jobs in Kentucky.

Clinton's proposed defense cuts would cost 18,000 defense related jobs in Kentucky.

NAFTA:

Since 1987, Kentucky exports to Mexico have nearly quadrupled -- exports to Canada have grown nearly 50% to a combined total of $1.1 billion in 1991. In 1991, over 30,000 Kentucky jobs were tied to exports.

RECENT NEWS STORIES:

BOWLING GREEN PAPER ENDORSES POTUS:

10/30/92 -- Bowling Green, KY [AP] the Daily News endorsed POTUS saying a Clinton presidency would be "a gamble on the future of America" with stakes that are too high. The Bowling Green paper said the President is the only "candidate who is capable of balancing the many duties and the powers of chief executive and commander-in-chief." "Bill Clinton wants Americas to think things are worse than ever for the middle class worse than the Jimmy Carter years of 1976-80." The paper also said Bush would be best able to handle an international crisis. "Clinton would falter under the pressure or, at best, remain indecisive long enough to allow a threatening situation to get out of control. Remember Jimmy Carter, Iran, the Ayatollah and the hostages?" the endorsement said.

10/30/92 Louisville, KY [AP] Kentucky's new tourism slogan is "Kentucky, What You've Been Looking For," the new logo -- a thoroughbred horse incorporated in the "K" of Kentucky.

10/31/92 Louisville, KY [AP] Federal authorities have prepared special efforts to detect and prosecute any election fraud uncovered Tuesday. A team of federal prosecutors and FBI agents will be on duty in the Eastern and Western districts to receive and investigate complaints of election fraud. Teams of about 25 lawyers and investigators will be sent out to monitor the polls.

10/31/92 Lexington, KY [AP] Clinton leads POTUS by 7 in KY. Clinton 45, POTUS 38, Perot 12, Undecided 5. Poll conducted by WHAS-TV/Lexington Herald-Leader -- 602 voters. Poll broadcast Saturday night. 4 point margin of error.

Los Angeles Times, February 7, 1992

On Thursday, a C-130 flown by the Kentucky Air National Guard crashed into a hotel and restaurant near the Dress Regional Airport in Evansville, Ind., spewing blazing fuel and debris over nearby buildings, killing at least 16 people. Authorities were trying to determine the cause of the crash, as one eyewitness told investigators that the plane sputtered, slowed and crashed just after takeoff.

The plane was used again in the Persian Gulf War. Rens' 13-plane squadron, which left El Toro for Bahrain on Aug. 13, 1990, pumped 20.9 million gallons of fuel into Navy and Marine jets during Desert Storm.

One of the KC-130s in Rens' squadron was built in 1961 and is running perfectly, he said.

"I have some of the oldest iron in the Navy and Marines," Rens said, referring to his fleet of KC-130s.

"The airplane is known for its safety and reliability. It is one of the safest in the air today," said Rens.

CRASH-TAPES

BODY:

The Air Force Safety Board Monday released tapes of "normal" conversations between the control tower and a C-130 military plane that crashed into an Evansville, Ind., restaurant last month, killing 16 people.

"There's nothing in the tapes beyond normal tower-aircraft conversations," said Federal Aviation Administration regional spokesman Jim Dermody.

The cargo plane's cockpit voice recordings have not been released but could give clues to what went wrong. Dermody said the military will decide if those recordings will be released.

The recordings released Monday showed that the pilot had been instructed to return to the plane's home base, Standiford Field in Louisville, Ky., said Dermody. But the plane crashed into a hotel and restaurant and erupted in flames.

The plane had been performing "touch-and-go" maneuvers, a routine, low-risk exercise that involves taking off and landing without stopping.

Killed were five members of the Kentucky Air National Guard aboard the plane and 11 people on the ground.

Poll Shows Clinton Leading in Kentucky

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) A new poll broadcast Saturday night found Bill Clinton leading President Bush by 7 percentage points among likely voters in Kentucky. ←

According the WHAS-TV/Lexington Herald-Leader poll of 602 voters, 45 percent of those asked the question, "Who will you vote for?" said they would vote for the Democratic presidential nominee. Thirty-eight percent said they would vote for the Republican incumbent. Twelve percent said they would vote for Independent Ross Perot, and 5 percent said they were undecided.

The poll had a margin of error of plus or minus four percent.

Daily News Endorses Bush

BOWLING GREEN, Ky. (AP) President Bush garnered the endorsement Friday of the Daily News, which called a Bill Clinton presidency "a gamble on the future of America" with stakes that are too high.] ✓

The Bowling Green newspaper said the president is the only "candidate who is capable of balancing the many duties and the powers of chief executive and commander-in-chief."

Wednesday's endorsement gave Bush the nod on both domestic and foreign affairs. And the paper twice compared Clinton with the nation's last Democratic president, Jimmy Carter.

"Despite the claims by his challengers, Clinton and (Ross) Perot, Bush has turned the economy back toward prosperity," the Daily News said. "According to Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis economists, the recession probably ended in the second or third quarter of 1991. That is beginning to show. Indicators such as unemployment claims have dropped.

"Bill Clinton wants Americans to think things are worse than ever for the middle class worse than the Jimmy Carter years of 1976-80?"

The paper also said Bush would be best able to handle an international crisis.] ✓

"Clinton would falter under the pressure or, at best, remain indecisive long enough to allow a threatening situation to get out of control. Remember Jimmy Carter, Iran, the Ayatollah and the hostages?" the endorsement said.

Slogan, Logo Part of New Tourism Campaign

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) A new slogan, a new logo and a new contest are just part of the state Tourism Cabinet's latest approach to luring folks into Kentucky.

The new slogan is "Kentucky, What You've Been Looking For," and the new logo is a thoroughbred horse incorporated in the "K" of Kentucky.] ✓

Ford Motor Co., along with Coleman Co. and other companies, plan a six-state Ford Explorer Sweepstakes next spring, highlighting Kentucky. The state will pay $50,000 of this $450,000 campaign.

The contest isn't the only example of private business helping to promote the state's tourism industry.

Ford and Toyota Motor Corp. already have plans to help advertise Kentucky. Stretching the state's $1.6 million advertising budget by relying on businesses is one part of a new fourfold strategy.

The slogan and logo were picked after showing 400 people on the street three alternatives developed by the Louisville advertising agency Creative Alliance.

Other plans include:

To advertise beyond March to attract a growing number of working couples who plan summer vacations at the last minute.

To focus more on people with special interests, such as touring historic sites or fishing and hiking.

To sell official Kentucky tourism merchandise, such as sweatshirts and coffee mugs, bearing the logo, a first for the state.

Toyota will sell Kentucky along with its Scepter a version of the Camry station wagon sold in Japan. The cars bear a "Made in Kentucky" sticker and come with a booklet of color photographs of Kentucky sites, all at no charge to the state.

The cabinet also hopes to stretch its dollars by selling merchandise, which Tourism Secretary Crit Luallen expects to return about $100,000 to the state.

It's estimated that tourism brought $5.3 billion to the state last year and supported 132,000 jobs. That was worth $373 million in state and local tax revenue.

Luallen said it's difficult to say how much a marketing strategy contributes to those numbers, but she said an advertising campaign has a definite impact.

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) Federal authorities have prepared special

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) Federal authorities have prepared special efforts to detect and prosecute any election fraud uncovered Tuesday, according to Kentucky's U.S. attorneys in Louisville and Lexington.

Joseph Whittle, U.S. attorney for Kentucky's Western District, and Karen Caldwell, his counterpart in the Eastern District, have appointed assistants to oversee election-fraud prosecution.

They issued separate statements saying that election fraud "dilutes" the honest votes cast and warning that such illegal activity "will be dealt with promptly and aggressively."

Alexander Taft Jr. will oversee the effort in the Western District, and Robert F. Trevey and Thomas L. Self will handle the Eastern District.

A team of federal prosecutors and FBI agents will be on duty in both districts Tuesday to receive and investigate complaints of election fraud, Whittle and Caldwell said.

State Attorney General Chris Gorman's office also will be on the lookout for election fraud, Deputy Attorney General Brent Caldwell said. As it has for the past four years, the office will send out teams of about 25 lawyers and investigators to monitor the polls.

PRESIDENT'S REMARKS ABOUT SUSAN STOKES

Congressional Candidate - Louisville, Ky

- So many political commentators have dubbed 1992 the "Year of the Woman"

- That's because there are so many intelligent and highly qualified women running for office this year

- And when I say that, I think especially --
 - of the Republican candidate
 - for the third congressional district:
 - Susan Stokes

- Susan is the proven anti-tax candidate in this race
 - as a state legislator --
 - Susan Stokes had the courage to vote against
 - the largest tax increase in Kentucky's history

- While her opponent has never met a tax he didn't like

- Susan strongly favors the Balanced Budget Amendment
 - while her opponent has been on both sides of the issue
 - come to think of it, he sounds like my opponent!

- You know, Congress has been controlled --
 - by the liberal Democrats in Washington
 - for almost forty years

- And Susan's opponent has been sitting there in Congress for over half that time -- two decades

- You have to ask yourself -- what has Congress done for you lately?

- Give me good solid conservatives like Susan Stokes
 - and together we will clean the House

- And give me a Congress I can work with --
 - and together we will change America

(c) 1989 GANNETT NEWS SERVICE, August 11, 1989

'We enjoy doing some gospel songs with the country,' Sterban said. 'We even do a little rock 'n' roll - you're not going to confuse us with Bon Jovi but what's permitted within the confines of a country show.'

And the Oak Ridge Boys remain a hit at the White House, even with Vice President Dan Quayle. When the Oaks' heard that the Quayle family's dog died, lead singer Duane Allen offered one of the Labrador retrievers that he raised.

The vice president accepted. ---
