EXCHANGE OF TOASTS BY THE PRESIDENT AND GOVERNOR TERRY BRANSTAD

Monticello Mansion
Charlottesville, Virginia

8:25 P.M. EDT

THE PRESIDENT: Welcome, welcome. I will try to keep it short. You see, the record has already been set for toasts here in Charlottesville at the University. Back in 1824, Mr. Jefferson hosted a dinner in the Dome Room of the Rotunda for the Marquis de Lafayette, attended by former Presidents Monroe and Madison. It was an elegant dinner. The libations flowed freely -- so freely, in fact, that 13 formal toasts ensued. (Laughter.) And looking around here -- only to be followed by 37 more impromptu toasts. That's the one tradition that I would like to discourage tonight.

This afternoon, though, we did begin an historic summit -- two days of what will be a lot of hours and hard work. The issues before us in the working sessions are profound. The solutions that we seek will not be simple ones. But I am absolutely confident that the spirit which inspired the founders of this nation, and particularly this university, is ever-present tonight as we gather at the beloved mountaintop home of President Thomas Jefferson.

Below us, outside of this tent, we can see the twinkling lights and lights of Charlottesville. Above us, the quiet pastures of Brown's Mountain. Not far down the mountain road is Ashland Highlands, the home of President Monroe.

And we're overlooking the "academical village" founded by Mr. Jefferson 170 years ago. Earlier, at sunset, we could see the Rotunda and the purple shadows of The Lawn -- once an open-ended field that looked out to the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia. It was Mr. Jefferson's wish that it remain that way so that students would look out to the horizon poised between their education and their future.

Today, in the Rotunda, we worked in that elusive area between education and the future, defining our dream for excellence and giving shape to our hopes for America. And it was one day, shortly before he died, right here, that Mr. Jefferson gazed at the Rotunda and said that establishing his university was "the last act of usefulness that I can render my country."

Building the Rotunda and the university were the crowning achievements of "the Sage of Monticello," and yet he knew that without the creativity and the intellectual challenge of a great faculty, his new center of living and center of thought would be nothing more than bricks and mortar. He searched for the best in Europe and brought them to teach at the university as new citizens -- except in the subject of law, to be taught only by a resident American.

In fact, Jefferson's favorite teacher was his own law professor, George Whyte, a man who also taught him the essentials of ancient philosophy and the classics. I'm sure everyone here has a favorite teacher. I think back myself to the 12th grade to Professor A. B. Darling that some elitist ivy-leaguers might remember -- (laughter) -- but in my case, this man made the immortals of American history come to life. And I'm not going to give you equal time because I'll bet you every Governor here has a special teacher that

Today, as it was in Jefferson's time, it is America's teachers who enlighten our young people and inspire them to excellence. You know, Jefferson knew this, writing once that aside from education, "no other sure foundation can be devised for the preservation of freedom and happiness."

And so tonight I would like to toast those who have heard the call and followed it -- those who have sacrificed so much in order that America might enjoy a sure foundation of freedom and happiness. And I toast our teachers -- those who taught us, those who sacrifice to teach our children, and those among us who have been members of this proud profession. The six members of my Cabinet -- six -- and the 13 Governors present who are former teachers. And just to give a small plug for alternative certification, there is one person present who has never held a teaching position, yet has been a leader in the fight against illiteracy, and that is my wife, Barbara. (Applause.)

We've come to this spectacular home of Thomas Jefferson to build upon his dreams of a strong system of education for all. But without our teachers -- without their vision and their dedication -- the dream would be lost. And so I ask you now to join me in a toast, a salutation to the teachers of America. God bless them all, and God bless the United States.

To the teachers. (A toast is offered.)

GOVERNOR BRANSTAD: Mr. President, First Lady Barbara Bush, on behalf of our nation's governors and our spouses, we thank you for convening us for this historic summit. The first President to bring this body of governors together was Teddy Roosevelt. And when he called a meeting in 1908 to discuss the problems in the natural resources and environment, the governors had such a good time that we decided to meet annually every year and form the National Governors Association.

We are proud that you have brought us back together. It has been nearly a century since President Theodore Roosevelt called that meeting of the governors in 1908. And yet, we have come together for only the third time for a summit meeting of this magnitude called by the President of the United States.

We are deeply honored in this opportunity. Our agenda is to develop a world-class education system for the future of America. It is one of the critical challenges facing our nation today.

By bringing your most-trusted advisors to this meeting, Mr. President, you have shown your commitment. And when I say "most-trusted" advisors, I especially mean Barbara Bush -- and the Cabinet members -- you have shown your commitment to literacy and quality education for all.

Just like President Jefferson, you are committed to quality education. Just like President Jefferson, you are helping to build something. Apparently, he supervised the construction of the University of Virginia's Rotunda by watching the work from a telescope here at Monticello.

Here in Charlottesville we have begun what I hope will build something very important. You can watch and help and encourage as we continue the work in the individual states and in the classrooms all across this nation. We thank you for your commitment and for making education and literacy a priority of the American people. (Applause.)

To the President of the United States and the First Lady Barbara Bush. (Applause.)

This afternoon, we began an historic summit and two days of what will be hard work and long hours. The issues before us in our working sessions are profound and the solutions we have discussed not simple ones. But I am confident that the spirit which inspired the founders of this nation and particularly this university is everpresent tonight as we gather at the "beloved mountaintop home" of President Thomas Jefferson. Below us, we can see the twinkling lights of Charlottesville. Above us, the quiet pastures of Brown's Mountain.

Today, in the Rotunda, we worked in that elusive area between education and the future, defining our dream for excellence and giving shape to our hopes for America. And it was one day, shortly before he died, that Mr. Jefferson gazed at the Rotunda and said that establishing his University was "the last act of usefulness I can render my country."

Building the Rotunda and the University were the crowning achievements of "the Sage of Monticello," yet he knew that without the creativity and the intellectual challenge of a great faculty, his new center of living and thought would be nothing more than bricks and mortar. Mr. Jefferson searched for the best in Europe, and brought them to teach at the University as new citizens -- except in the subject of law, to be taught only by a resident American. In fact, Jefferson's favorite teacher was his own law professor, George Wythe, a man who also taught him the essentials of ancient philosophy and the classics. I'm sure everyone here has a favorite teacher ... one of mine was my high school teacher, Dr. A.B. Darling, who made the immortals of American history come alive for me.

Today, as it was in Jefferson's time, it is America's teachers who enlighten our young people and inspire them to excellence. Jefferson knew this, writing once that aside from education, "no other sure foundation can be devised for the preservation of freedom and happiness."

And so tonight I toast those who have heard the call and followed it -- those who have sacrificed so much in order that America might enjoy a sure foundation of freedom and happiness. I toast our teachers ... those who taught us, and teach our children; and those among us who have been members of this proud profession: the five members of my Cabinet and the thirteen governors present who are former teachers. And just to give a small plug for Alternative Certification ... but there is one person present who has never held a teaching position yet has been a leader in the fight against illiteracy ... my wife Barbara.

We have come to the home of Thomas Jefferson, to build upon his dream of a strong system of education for all. But without our teachers -- without their vision and their dedication -- the dream would be lost. I ask you to join me in saluting the teachers of America.

God bless them and God bless America.

TOAST: GOVERNORS' DINNER
JEFFERSON'S HOME AT MONTICELLO
WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1989
7:30 P.M.

((I was worried about coming up Route 53 to get here. I heard there were so many ~~limosines~~ <sup>busses</sup> tonight the Secret Service put them in alphabetical order by state. Well, I am sure Governor Sullivan, of Wyoming wondered if he'd get dinner or breakfast.)

I'll try and keep it short tonight ... you see, the record has already been set for toasts here ~~at the University~~ <sup>in Charlottesville</sup> ... Back in 1824, Mr. Jefferson hosted a dinner in the Dome Room of the Rotunda for the Marquis de Lafayette, attended by former President James Madison and then-President James Monroe. It was an elegant dinner, and the libations flowed freely -- so freely, in fact, that thirteen formal toasts ensued. Only to be followed by thirty-seven more impromptu ones. So once again, I'm holding my charisma in check ... and I'm only giving one toast.

We are overlooking the "academical village" founded by Mr. Jefferson 170 years ago. Earlier, at sunset, we could see the Rotunda and the purple shadows of the Lawn -- once an open-ended field that looked out to the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia. It was Mr. Jefferson's wish that it remain that way, so that students would look out to the horizon, poised between their education and their future. Today, in the Rotunda, we worked in that elusive area between education and the future, defining our dream for excellence and giving shape to our hopes for America. And it was one day, shortly before he died, that Mr. Jefferson gazed at the Rotunda and said that establishing his University was "the last act of usefulness I can render my country."

MEMORANDUM FOR CHRISS WINSTON
DEPUTY ASSISTANT TO THE PRESIDENT FOR COMMUNICATIONS

FROM: AMY L. SCHWARTZ ALS
ASSOCIATE COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: President's Remarks at the Governor's Dinner

I have reviewed for Counsel's Office the President's Remarks at the Governor's Dinner. (I recognize that the deadline for reply was Friday at 4 p.m., but Counsel's office did not receive the remarks until noon today.)

As you know, the dinner is a part of the Education Summit, which is being paid for out of program funds supplied by the Department of Education. The Department of Education has advised us that although funds may be used to pay for food and beverages at events that are an integral part of the Summit. Counsel's office regards the Governor's dinner as being an integral part of the Summit activities. This conclusion is bolstered, however, to the extent that the President's remarks address substantive aspects of education policy related to the Summit. While the current remarks are brief, they focus on educational issues. We would discourage any attempt to reduce the substantive content of the remarks, and, although not strictly necessary, we would encourage any effort to make the remarks more substantive.

Feel free to contact me if you have any questions.

THE WHITE HOUSE

Memorandum to Chriss Winston
From: Jim Pinkerton
Subject: Governors' Dinner Draft Toast

pg. 1, para. 2, line 2 "...here at the University." Given that the dinner is at Monticello rather than the University, we suggest "...here in Charlottesville."

1,3,4 "...Ashlawn Highlands, the home of President James Monroe."

If it has not already been checked, we wonder if Monroe's home is better known simply as "Ashlawn."

2,2,12 "...everyone here has a favorite teacher ... mine was my high school history teacher, Dr. A.B. Darling...."

Again, we presume that this fact has been checked -- in this case, with the President -- but it bears noting that many of the President's old teachers are still around and are regularly quoted about him, e.g., his high school English teacher, Hart Day Leavitt. Do we risk giving offense here? Would it be safer to say "one of my favorites was....?"

3,2,8 Working a subject like Alternative Certification into a toast cannot be easy, but it is ably and effectively done here.

3,3,2 "...to build upon his dream of a strong system of public education for all."

In order to prevent any misunderstanding on the President's advocacy of encouraging all forms of education, public and private (e.g., through tuition tax credits), we suggest simply saying "education" without the qualifying "public."

Today, as it was in Jefferson's time, it is America's teachers who enlighten our young people and inspire them to to excellence. Jefferson knew this, writing once that aside from education, "no other sure foundation can be devised for the preservation of freedom and happiness."

And so tonight I toast those who have heard the call and followed it -- those who have sacrificed so much in order that America might enjoy a sure foundation of freedom and happiness. I toast our teachers ... those who taught us, and teach our children; and those among us who have been members of this proud profession: the five members of my Cabinet and the thirteen governors present who are former teachers. And not to give too big a plug for Alternative Certification ... but there is one person present who has never held a teaching position yet has been a leader in the fight against illiteracy ... my wife Barbara.

We have come to the home of Thomas Jefferson, to build upon his dream of a strong system of public education for all. But without our teachers -- without their vision and their dedication -- the dream would be lost. I ask you to join me in saluting the teachers of America.

God bless them and God bless America.

TOAST: GOVERNORS' DINNER
JEFFERSON'S HOME AT MONTICELLO
WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1989
7:30 P.M.

((I was worried about coming up Route 53 to get here. I heard there were so many limosines tonight the Secret Service put them in alphabetical order by state. Well, I am sure Governor Sullivan, of Wyoming wondered if he'd get dinner or breakfast.)

I'll try and keep it short tonight ... you see, the record has already been set for toasts here at the University ... Back in 1824, Mr. Jefferson hosted a dinner in the Dome Room of the Rotunda for the Marquis de Lafayette, attended by former President James Madison and then-President James Monroe. It was an elegant dinner, and the libations flowed freely -- so freely, in fact, that thirteen formal toasts ensued. Only to be followed by thirty-seven more impromptu ones. So once again, I'm holding my charisma in check ... and I'm only giving one toast.

We stand tonight at "the beloved mountaintop home" of President Thomas Jefferson, the twinkling lights of Charlottesville below us, the quiet pastures of Brown's Mountain above us. Not far down the mountain road is Ashlawn Highlands, the home of President James Monroe.

We are overlooking the "academical village" founded by Mr. Jefferson 170 years ago. Earlier, at sunset, we could see the Rotunda and the purple shadows of the Lawn -- once an open-ended field that looked out to the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia. It was Mr. Jefferson's wish that it remain that way, so that students would look out to the horizon, poised between their education and their future. Today, in the Rotunda, we worked in that elusive area between education and the future, defining our dream for excellence and giving shape to our hopes for America. And it was one day, shortly before he died, that Mr. Jefferson gazed at the Rotunda and said that establishing his University was "the last act of usefulness I can render my country."

Building the Rotunda and the University were the crowning achievements of "the Sage of Monticello," yet he knew that without the creativity and the intellectual challenge of a great faculty, his new center of living and thought would be nothing more than bricks and mortar. Mr. Jefferson searched for the best in Europe, and brought them to teach at the University as new citizens -- except in the subject of law, to be taught only by a resident American. In fact, Jefferson's favorite teacher was his own law professor, George Wythe, a man who also taught him the essentials of ancient philosophy and the classics. I'm sure everyone here has a favorite teacher ... mine was my high school teacher, Dr. A.B. Darling, who made the immortals of American history come alive for me.

Today, as it was in Jefferson's time, it is America's teachers who enlighten our young people and inspire them to to excellence. Jefferson knew this, writing once that aside from

TOAST: GOVERNORS' DINNER
JEFFERSON'S HOME AT MONTICELLO
WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1989
7:30 P.M.

((I was worried about coming up Route 53 to get here. I heard that there would be so many limosines here tonight, the Secret Service was going to put them in alphabetical order by state. It was an elegant dinner, and the libations flowed freely -- so freely, in fact, that thirteen formal toasts ensued. Only to be followed by thirty-seven more impromptu ones. So once again, I'm holding my charisma in check ... and I'm only giving one toast.

We gather tonight at "the beloved mountaintop home" of President Thomas Jefferson, the twinkling lights of Charlottesville below us, the quiet pastures of Brown's Mountain above us. Not far down the mountain road is Ashlawn Highlands, the home of President James Monroe.

We are overlooking the "academical village" founded by Mr. Jefferson 170 years ago. Earlier, at sunset, we could see the Rotunda and the purple shadows of the Lawn -- once an open-ended field that looked out to the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia. It was Mr. Jefferson's wish that it remain that way, so that students would look out to the horizon, poised between their education and their future. Building the Rotunda and the University were the crowning achievements of "the Sage of Monticello," yet he knew that without the creativity and the intellectual challenge of a great faculty, his new center of living and thought would be nothing more than bricks and mortar. Mr. Jefferson searched for the best in Europe, and brought them to teach at the University as new citizens -- except in the subject of law, to be taught only by a resident American. And so tonight I toast those who have heard the call and followed it -- those who have sacrificed so much in order that America might enjoy a sure foundation of freedom and happiness. I toast our teachers ... those who taught us, and teach our children; and those among us who have been members of this proud profession: the five members of my Cabinet and the thirteen governors present who are former teachers. And just to give a small plug for Alternative Certification ... but there is one person present who has never held a teaching position yet has been a leader in the fight against illiteracy ... my wife Barbara.

We have come to the home of Thomas Jefferson, to build upon his dream of a strong system of education for all. But without our teachers -- without their vision and their dedication -- the dream would be lost. I ask you to join me in saluting the teachers of America.
