PRESIDENTIAL REMARKS: MARSHALL COLEMAN FUNDRAISER
RICHMOND, VIRGINIA
NOVEMBER 3, 1989
12:00 noon?

I'm happy to be here in Richmond, back in the beautiful capital of the Old Dominion. /// [[Thank you for such a warm welcome this afternoon. It's just a pity I can't stick around for Friday Cheers.]] ///

[Introductory acknowledgements.] I want to thank all the eminent Virginians who are here with me today. Congressman Tom Bliley, who does such a fine job representing the 3rd District in the U.S. House. Two outstanding members of the Virginia Senate who are ready to step up to new positions of public trust: Joe Benedetti -- running hard for Attorney General. Eddy Dalton -- Virginia's next Lieutenant Governor.

And finally, let's all say hello to Virginia's next Governor: Marshall Coleman. ////

We're in the final four days -- the home stretch, and Marshall's finishing strong. [[And I don't blame the other side if they've lost some of their focus lately. /// It's hard to keep your eyes on the finish line when you're busy looking over your shoulder.]]

[[Reggie Jackson was called "Mr. October" because he always came through when the big game was on the line. Well, I think you'll find that Marshall Coleman is "Mr. November." And I'll tell all of you what I told Marshall just a few moments ago: the only poll that counts is the one that happens on November 7.]]

Four days from now, the people of this state are going to decide who has a vision for Virginia in the 90s -- who can lead the Old Dominion into a new decade full of new challenges.

My friends, that man is Marshall Coleman -- a man of integrity. A man with the new ideas the Old Dominion needs to reach its destiny.

We know what we can expect from Marshall's opponent, and his party's way of doing things. I hear the same things up on Capitol Hill that you do from Capitol Square -- and it's beginning to sound like a broken record. Doesn't matter what it is, every issue is an opportunity -- to raise your taxes.

Well, make no mistake: Marshall Coleman is one candidate who doesn't confuse having a vision for the future with having a sharp eye on your wallets. ///

Marshall knows the issues that matter to most Virginians. Take the issue of law and order. Marshall's a veteran crime fighter -- a former Attorney General who understands you can't have safe streets and neighborhoods unless you're ready to make life tough on criminals. That means tougher sentencing -- and an end to early release and parole policies that put dangerous criminals back on the street when they should stay where they belong -- behind bars.

And Marshall Coleman is the right man to lead Virginia in the battle against drug abuse. The war on drugs isn't a war of words. Anyone can talk tough -- but talking tough doesn't keep dealers off the street. It doesn't keep drugs out of the hands of our children.

Marshall Coleman knows it's time for action. He knows we've got to go after drug dealers and drug users. And he knows it's time to take the profit out of the drug business -- time to confiscate the dealers' ill-gotten gains.

That's the no-nonsense, real world approach we need. And if you need any more proof, just ask the folks out on the front line in the war on crime and drugs. The Fraternal Order of Police has given Marshall Coleman its vote of confidence -- and I think that says it all. When it comes to fighting crime, Virginia can count on Marshall Coleman.

Marshall is strong on the issues across the board. Take the one issue that may well be the most important of any that fall within a state's responsibilities: education. Marshall and I have talked many times about the state of our schools today, and I can tell you: he's as convinced as I am that there is no other issue more vital to the future of this state, this nation, and to the kind of lives our children will lead.

Marshall's got two fine boys of his own: Sean, down from college, and Billy, who's a high school freshman. They're here today, helping their Dad -- and let me tell you, they may be young, but they're real veterans on the campaign trail.

Billy and Sean, your Dad knows what every parent with kids in school today knows: it's time to move beyond the status quo. We've got to recognize what works in our schools -- and reward it. That's the idea behind Marshall's merit pay plan: better pay for better teachers. We've got to increase accountability -- and that means expanding choice in our schools. Choice can create an incentive for improvement that spurs a competition for excellence in all our schools. When it comes to guaranteeing a first-rate education for her children, Virginia can count on Marshall Coleman.

And one thing more about Marshall -- good news for all Virginians. Marshall Coleman draws the line against higher taxes. The people of this state have endured five tax increases in the past four years. I know Virginia -- and I know you can't afford another four years of "open season" on the taxpayer.

Well, with Marshall Coleman in the statehouse, taxpayers won't feel like there's a target painted on their backs. Marshall comes with a four-year, easy-to-understand guarantee: No new taxes. /// And he's gone one step further: when it comes to vetoing any tax hike that lands on his desk, Virginia can count on Marshall Coleman. ///

It's been a long hard campaign -- and in the end, every campaign comes back to basics -- to the simple question every voter asks himself: which candidate is right for the job?

The plain truth is this: Marshall Coleman is a man of integrity -- and experience. A man who deeply loves this state. He's right on the issues -- right for Virginia... // Marshall Coleman will be a Governor all of Virginia can count on.

And let me tell the people of this great capital city, when Marshall Coleman becomes governor -- the man in the statehouse here in Richmond is going to have a friend in the White House.

But right now, Marshall needs to know that he can count on you. That he's got your support -- and come next Tuesday, that you'll be there with your votes and your help to make him the next governor of Virginia.

Only four short days remain in this campaign for the future of this great state. Make them count for Marshall Coleman, for Virginia, and for America.

Thank you. God bless you -- and God bless the great state of Virginia.

I hear the same things up on Capitol Hill that you do from Capitol Square -- and it's beginning to sound like a broken record. Doesn't matter what it is, every issue is an opportunity -- to raise your taxes.

Well, make no mistake: Marshall Coleman is one candidate who doesn't confuse having a vision for the future with having a sharp eye on your wallets. ///

Marshall knows the issues that matter to most Virginians. Take the issue of law and order. Marshall's a veteran crime fighter -- a former Attorney General who understands you can't have safe streets and neighborhoods unless you're ready to make life tough on criminals. That means tougher sentencing -- and an end to early release and parole policies that put dangerous criminals back on the street. ^{Dangerous criminals} ~~when they~~ should stay where they belong -- behind bars.

And Marshall Coleman is the right man to lead Virginia in the battle against drug abuse. The war on drugs isn't a war of words. Anyone can talk tough -- but talking tough doesn't keep dealers off the street. It doesn't keep drugs out of the hands of our children.

Marshall Coleman knows it's time for action. He knows we've got to go after drug dealers and drug users. And he knows it's time to ~~take the profit out of the drug business -- time to~~ ^{and} confiscate the dealers' ill-gotten gains. ← in the war on crime and drugs. The ^{Virginia} Fraternal Order of Police has given Marshall Coleman its vote of confidence -- and I think that says it all. When it comes to fighting crime, Virginia can count on Marshall Coleman.

Marshall is strong on the issues across the board. Take the one issue that may well be the most important of any that fall within a state's responsibilities: education. Marshall and I have talked many times about the state of our schools today, and I can tell you: he's as convinced as I am that there is no other issue more vital to the future of this state, this nation, and to the kind of lives our children will lead.

Marshall's got two fine boys of his own: Sean, down from college, and Billy, who's a high school freshman. They're here today, helping their Dad -- and let me tell you, they may be young, but they're real veterans on the campaign trail.

Billy and Sean, your Dad knows what every parent with kids in school today knows: it's time to move beyond the status quo. We've got to recognize what works in our schools -- and reward it. That's the idea behind Marshall's merit pay plan: better pay for better teachers. We've got to increase accountability -- and that means expanding choice in our schools. Choice can create an incentive for improvement that spurs a competition for excellence in all our schools. When it comes to guaranteeing a first-rate education for her children, Virginia can count on Marshall Coleman.

And one thing more about Marshall -- good news for all Virginians. Marshall Coleman draws the line against higher taxes. The people of this state have endured five tax increases in the past four years. I know Virginia -- and I know you can't afford another four years of "open season" on the taxpayer.

Well, with Marshall Coleman in the statehouse, taxpayers won't feel like there's a ^{bullseye} target painted on their backs.

Marshall comes with a four-year, ~~easy-to-understand~~ ^{easy-to-understand} guarantee: ~~He won't raise taxes.~~

No new taxes. /// And he's gone one step further: when it comes to vetoing any tax hike that lands on his desk, Virginia can count on Marshall Coleman. ///

It's been a long hard campaign -- and in the end, every campaign comes back to basics -- to the simple question every voter asks himself: which candidate is right for the job?

Well, make no mistake: Marshall Coleman is one candidate who doesn't confuse having a vision for the future with having a sharp eye on your wallets. ///

Marshall knows the issues that matter to most Virginians. Take the issue of law and order. Marshall's a veteran crime fighter -- a former Attorney General who understands you can't have safe streets and neighborhoods unless you're ready to make life tough on criminals. That means tougher sentencing -- and an end to early release and parole policies that put dangerous criminals back on the street when they should stay where they belong -- behind bars.

And Marshall Coleman is the right man to lead Virginia in the battle against drug abuse. The war on drugs isn't a war of words. Anyone can talk tough -- but talking tough doesn't keep dealers off the street. It doesn't keep drugs out of the hands of our children.

"taking the profit" out of drugs is a phrase widely used by legalization advocates

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA
NOVEMBER 3, 1989
12:00 noon?

I'm happy to be here in Richmond, back in the beautiful capital of the Old Dominion. /// [[Thank you for such a warm welcome this afternoon. It's just a pity I can't stick around for Friday Cheers.]] ///

[Introductory acknowledgements.] I want to thank all the eminent Virginians who are here with me today. Congressman Tom Bliley, who does such a fine job representing the 3rd District in the U.S. House. Two outstanding members of the Virginia Senate who are ready to step up to new positions of public trust: Joe Benedetti -- running hard for Attorney General. Eddy Dalton -- Virginia's next Lieutenant Governor.

And finally, let's all say hello to Virginia's next Governor: Marshall Coleman. ////

We're in the final four days -- the home stretch, and Marshall's finishing strong. [[And I don't blame the other side if they've lost some of their focus lately. /// It's hard to keep your eyes on the finish line when you're busy looking over your shoulder.]]

[[Reggie Jackson was called "Mr. October" because he always came through when the big game was on the line. Well, I think you'll find that Marshall Coleman is "Mr. November." And I'll tell all of you what I told Marshall just a few moments ago: the only poll that counts is the one that happens on November 7.]]

Four days from now, the people of this state are going to decide who has a vision for Virginia in the 90s -- who can lead the Old Dominion into a new decade full of new challenges.

My friends, that man is Marshall Coleman -- a man of integrity. A man with the new ideas the Old Dominion needs to reach its destiny.

We know what we can expect from Marshall's opponent, and his party's way of doing things. I hear the same things up on Capitol Hill that you do from Capitol Square -- and it's beginning to sound like a broken record. Doesn't matter what it is, every issue is an opportunity -- to raise your taxes.

Well, make no mistake: Marshall Coleman is one candidate who doesn't confuse having a vision for the future with having a sharp eye on your wallets. ///

Marshall knows the issues that matter to most Virginians. Take the issue of law and order. Marshall's a veteran crime fighter -- a former Attorney General who understands you can't have safe streets and neighborhoods unless you're ready to make life tough on criminals. That means tougher sentencing -- and an end to early release and parole policies that put dangerous criminals back on the street when they should stay where they belong -- behind bars.

And Marshall Coleman is the right man to lead Virginia in the battle against drug abuse. The war on drugs isn't a war of words. Anyone can talk tough -- but talking tough doesn't keep dealers off the street. It doesn't keep drugs out of the hands of our children.

Marshall Coleman knows it's time for action. He knows we've got to go after drug dealers and drug users. And he knows it's time to take the profit out of the drug business -- time to confiscate the dealers' ill-gotten gains.

That's the no-nonsense, real world approach we need. And if you need any more proof, just ask the folks out on the front line in the war on crime and drugs. The Fraternal Order of Police has given Marshall Coleman its vote of confidence -- and I think that says it all. When it comes to fighting crime, Virginia can count on Marshall Coleman.

Marshall is strong on the issues across the board. Take the one issue that may well be the most important of any that fall within a state's responsibilities: education. Marshall and I have talked many times about the state of our schools today, and I can tell you: he's as convinced as I am that there is no other issue more vital to the future of this state, this nation, and to the kind of lives our children will lead.

Marshall's got two fine boys of his own: Sean, down from college, and Billy, who's a high school freshman. They're here today, helping their Dad -- and let me tell you, they may be young, but they're real veterans on the campaign trail.

Billy and Sean, your Dad knows what every parent with kids in school today knows: it's time to move beyond the status quo. We've got to recognize what works in our schools -- and reward it. That's the idea behind Marshall's merit pay plan: better pay for better teachers. We've got to increase accountability -- and that means expanding choice in our schools. Choice can create an incentive for improvement that spurs a competition for excellence in all our schools. When it comes to guaranteeing a first-rate education for her children, Virginia can count on Marshall Coleman.

And one thing more about Marshall -- good news for all Virginians. Marshall Coleman draws the line against higher taxes. The people of this state have endured five tax increases in the past four years. I know Virginia -- and I know you can't afford another four years of "open season" on the taxpayer.

Well, with Marshall Coleman in the statehouse, taxpayers won't feel like there's a target painted on their backs. Marshall comes with a four-year, easy-to-understand guarantee: No new taxes. /// And he's gone one step further: when it comes to vetoing any tax hike that lands on his desk, Virginia can count on Marshall Coleman. ///

It's been a long hard campaign -- and in the end, every campaign comes back to basics -- to the simple question every voter asks himself: which candidate is right for the job?

The plain truth is this: Marshall Coleman is a man of integrity -- and experience. A man who deeply loves this state. He's right on the issues -- right for Virginia... // Marshall Coleman will be a Governor all of Virginia can count on.

And let me tell the people of this great capital city, when Marshall Coleman becomes governor -- the man in the statehouse here in Richmond is going to have a friend in the White House.

But right now, Marshall needs to know that he can count on you. That he's got your support -- and come next Tuesday, that you'll be there with your votes and your help to make him the next governor of Virginia.

Only four short days remain in this campaign for the future of this great state. Make them count for Marshall Coleman, for Virginia, and for America.

Thank you. God bless you -- and God bless the great state of Virginia.
