Draft Three (B:ABA)

PROPOSED ARTICLE: AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION JOURNAL
JANUARY 1990 ISSUE

When both he and the century were young, Walter Lippmann observed that "Whether we wish it or not we are involved in the world's problems, and all the winds of heaven blow through our land."

Today, all the winds of heaven blow through the world of law. Hardly an issue is raised, hardly a problem emerges, hardly a challenge exists that isn't accompanied by a call for the reasoned voice and deft touch of you who are trained in the law.

I have always believed that the law is a noble calling and that the service you provide helps immeasurably to make America free and prosperous.

But America today needs more from the legal profession. At a time when most of our nation enjoys an historic level of prosperity and comfort, we must devote special attention to those living on the edge, those lacking adequate food or shelter, those addicted or mentally ill, those whose neighborhoods have been decimated by crime.

While there is a critical role for government programs and non-profit organizations, these problems can never be solved until each individual and each institution comes to see them as their problems too. Only active, "hands-on" engagement can reclaim the lost lives of those in need. For what those "left out" need most is a relationship with someone who cares.

I know that many of you, like the ABA, have helped lead the way in doing your part. Consider the example of "Operation Uplift," begun in Minneapolis and now being adopted by firms across the nation. The idea is simple. When a law firm assists a client pro bono, that client is asked to provide some pro bono of their own -- one hour of community service for each hour the lawyer spends working on their case. It costs nothing and doubles the good done by pro bono programs.

Innovative efforts such as these can change the character of a law firm, and change the character of the cities and neighborhoods they serve. And for those of you who are senior partners, I urge you to consider community service by your associates in hiring and promotion decisions. Because the bottom line is this: From now on in America, any definition of a successful life must include serving others.

As lawyers, you can play a major role in the evolving community service movement that I have called "a thousand points of light". In every community, there are forgotten children whose lives would be made whole by a mentoring relationship with a caring adult. In every community, there are men and women who cannot read or write. In every community, there are needs to be met and a difference you can make.

In Maine they tell of an old man walking along the beach with his grandson, who picked up each starfish they passed and threw it back into the sea. "If I left them here," the boy said, "they would dry up and die. I'm saving their lives."

"But," protested the old man, "the beach goes on for miles, and there are millions of starfish. What you are doing won't make any difference."

The boy looked at the starfish in his hand, gently threw it in the ocean, and answered: "It makes a difference to this one."

Please look for your opportunity to make a difference.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRESIDENT

THROUGH:           CHRISS WINSTON CW
FROM:               EDWARD McNALLY EM
SUBJECT:            ARTICLE FOR THE AMERICAN BAR ASSOC. JOURNAL

I.    SUMMARY

Attached for your consideration and review is a draft for your article to be published in the January issue of the American Bar Association (ABA) Journal.

II.   DISCUSSION

The attached draft emphasizes the need for lawyers not only to contribute their professional skills to solving problems in our communities, but to get personally engaged in active, "hands-on" efforts to help those in need. The draft also echoes the call you made at the Red Mass luncheon in Boston -- urging law firms to consider community service in hiring, compensation and promotion decisions.

When both he and the century were young, Walter Lippmann observed that "Whether we wish it or not we are involved in the world's problems, and all the winds of heaven blow through our land."

Today, all the winds of heaven blow through the world of law. Hardly an issue is raised, hardly a problem emerges, hardly a challenge exists that isn't accompanied by a call for the reasoned judgement and keen intellect of those who are trained in the law.

I have always believed that the law is a noble calling and that the service you provide helps immeasurably to make America free and prosperous.

But America today needs more from the legal profession. At a time when most of our nation enjoys an historic level of prosperity and comfort, we must devote special attention to those living on the edge, those lacking adequate food or shelter, those addicted or mentally ill, those whose neighborhoods have been decimated by crime and decay.

While there is a critical role for government programs and non-profit organizations, these problems can never be solved until each individual and each institution comes to see them as their problems too. Only active, "hands-on" engagement can reclaim the lost lives of those in need. For what those "left out" need most is a relationship with someone who cares.

It costs nothing and doubles the good done by pro bono programs.

Innovative efforts such as these can change the character of a law firm, and change the character of the cities and neighborhoods they serve. And for those of you who are senior partners, I urge you to set an example for your associates by your commitment to community service and to consider community service records in hiring, compensation and promotion decisions. Because the bottom line is this: From now on in America, any definition of a successful life must include serving others.

As lawyers, you can play a major role in the evolving community service movement that I have called "a thousand points of light". In every community, there are forgotten children whose lives can be made whole by a mentoring relationship with a caring adult. In every community, there are men and women who cannot read or write. In Maine they tell of an old man walking along the beach with his grandson, who picked up each starfish they passed and threw it back into the sea. "If I left them here," the boy said, "they would dry up and die. I'm saving their lives."

"But," protested the old man, "the beach goes on for miles, and there are millions of starfish. What you are doing won't make any difference."

The boy looked at the starfish in his hand, gently threw it in the ocean, and answered: "It makes a difference to this one."

Please look for your opportunity to make a difference.

MEMORANDUM FOR CHRISS WINSTON

FROM: ROGER B. PORTER RBP
SUBJECT: Proposed Article for the ABA Journal

You asked for comments on the draft article for the Journal of the American Bar Association. I have only one suggestion. At page 2, in the paragraph that begins "Innovative efforts", I suggest changing the second sentence to read, "And for those of you who are senior partners, I urge you both to set an example for your associates by your commitment to community service and to consider community service by your associates in hiring and promotion decisions."

1989 NOV 30 PM 4:00 Draft Three (B:ABA)

PROPOSED ARTICLE: AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION JOURNAL
JANUARY 1990 ISSUE

When both he and the century were young, Walter Lippmann observed that "Whether we wish it or not we are involved in the world's problems, and all the winds of heaven blow through our land."

Today, all the winds of heaven blow through the world of law. Hardly an issue is raised, hardly a problem emerges, hardly a challenge exists that isn't accompanied by a call for the reasoned voice and deft touch of you who are trained in the law.

I have always believed that the law is a noble calling and that the service you provide helps immeasurably to make America free and prosperous.

But America today needs more from the legal profession. At a time when most of our nation enjoys an historic level of prosperity and comfort, we must devote special attention to those living on the edge, those lacking adequate food or shelter, those addicted or mentally ill, those whose neighborhoods have been decimated by crime.

While there is a critical role for government programs and non-profit organizations, these problems can never be solved until each individual and each institution comes to see them as their problems too. Only active, "hands-on" engagement can reclaim the lost lives of those in need. For what those "left out" need most is a relationship with someone who cares.

I know that many of you, like the ABA, have helped lead the way in doing your part. Consider the example of "Operation Uplift," begun in Minneapolis and now being adopted by firms across the nation. The idea is simple. When a law firm assists a client pro bono, that client is asked to provide some pro bono of their own -- one hour of community service for each hour the lawyer spends working on their case. It costs nothing and doubles the good done by pro bono programs.

Innovative efforts such as these can change the character of a law firm, and change the character of the cities and neighborhoods they serve. And for those of you who are senior partners, I urge you to consider community service by your associates in hiring and promotion decisions. Because the bottom line is this: From now on in America, any definition of a successful life must include serving others.

As lawyers, you can play a major role in the evolving community service movement that I have called "a thousand points of light". In every community, there are forgotten children whose lives would be made whole by a mentoring relationship with a caring adult. In every community, there are men and women who cannot read or write. In every community, there are needs to be met and a difference you can make.

In Maine they tell of an old man walking along the beach with his grandson, who picked up each starfish they passed and threw it back into the sea. "If I left them here," the boy said, "they would dry up and die. I'm saving their lives."

When both he and the century were young, Walter Lippmann observed that "Whether we wish it or not we are involved in the world's problems, and all the winds of heaven blow through our land."

I have always believed that the law is a noble calling and that the service you provide helps immeasurably to make America free and prosperous.

But America today needs more from the legal profession. At a time when most of our nation enjoys an historic level of prosperity and comfort, we must devote special attention to those living on the edge, those lacking adequate food or shelter, those addicted or mentally ill, those whose neighborhoods have been decimated by crime.

While there is a critical role for government programs and non-profit organizations, these problems can never be solved until each individual and each institution comes to see them as their problems too. Only active, "hands-on" engagement can reclaim the lost lives of those in need. For what those "left out" need most is a relationship with someone who cares.
