BRIEF REMARKS: STOP THE VIOLENCE MOVEMENT
DROP-BY ON THE TARMAC IN MILWAUKEE
WEDNESDAY, JUNE 6, 1990

It's great to be here in Milwaukee, home of the famed Milwaukee Brewers -- now ranked #1 in their league. They call it "A Great Place on a Great Lake," and there's no place like it anywhere. \\

But like too many American cities, Milwaukee has seen the arrival of drug dealers and violent criminals. Over the last few years, areas of Milwaukee infested by drugs have been plagued by senseless violence -- drive-by shootings, drug-related killings, nightly gunfire in the streets. People were scared to even drive to work, go to the store, or walk to school.

Then one day, on ((date)) of last year, a nine-year old boy, Timothy Washington, was brutally gunned down while quietly playing in his own back yard. The outraged citizens of Milwaukee took to the streets -- with two courageous women, Ruth Varnado and Queen Hyler, leading the way -- standing up to hardened criminals in the most drug-ridden areas of the city. Beacuse of the death of young Timothy, the Stop the Violence Movement was born.

Marches and rallies were organized. Members went door-to-door, starting neighborhood groups working closely with police. When people saw drug dealers waiting to make deals from cars parked on tree-lined streets, neighbors began calling in the license plate numbers to authorities. Store owners were confronted and asked to stop selling drug paraphernalia. Now, nearly a year later, the Stop the Violence message continues to go out across the city, as local media outlets donate free airtime to encourage people to save Milwaukee's children from "drugs and thugs."

Every week, Ruth and Queen talk to prison inmates about the drugs and violence on the streets outside. The women ask the prisoners what could have prevented them from dealing in the netherworld of drugs and crime. From their answers, Ruth and Queen have found the way to stop even more young people from opening the door to narcotics and violence: "relearn, reteach, reinforce, restore, and reinstill values."

Theirs is a lesson for every community in America. But as helpless as one may feel, and as bitter as the pain may be -- people can keep the drug dealers out of their communities. Queen knows this pain -- her own son suffers permanent brain damage from a vicious attack by a street gang. It is for his sake, and for the sake of so many others, that people must work together to stop the criminals and drug dealers. By telling them to move on. By letting criminals know, in no uncertain terms, that we will not tolerate crack houses in our neighborhoods. That we will turn them in when they sit in their cars on our streets, waiting to make a buy, or when they hang around our schoolyards selling drugs to our kids. No one can afford to look the other way. Queen and Ruth didn't, thank God, and none of us can either.\\\

There's still a lot of work to be done ... in Milwaukee, and in cities like it all across America. But we have it within each of us, a moral compass that points us forward -- that admires the good and fights like hell against the evil. By standing up and fighting the depravity of drugs and crime, perhaps in the process all Americans can reinforce, restore and reinstill values in our children. It can be done, and with leaders like Ruth Varnado and Queen Hyler, it is being done.

Thank you, and God bless all of you in the Stop the Violence Movement. Keep up the good work.

BRIEF REMARKS: STOP THE VIOLENCE MOVEMENT
DROP-BY ON THE TARMAC IN MILWAUKEE
WEDNESDAY, JUNE 6, 1990

It's great to be here in Milwaukee, home of the famed Milwaukee Brewers -- now ranked #1 in their league. They call it "A Great Place on a Great Lake," and there's no place like it anywhere. \\

But like too many American cities, Milwaukee has seen the arrival of drug dealers and violent criminals. Over the last few years, areas of Milwaukee infested by drugs have been plagued by senseless violence -- drive-by shootings, drug-related killings, nightly gunfire in the streets. People were scared to even drive to work, go to the store, or walk to school.

Then one day, on ((date)) of last year, a nine-year old boy, Timothy Washington, was brutally gunned down while quietly playing in his own back yard. The outraged citizens of Milwaukee took to the streets -- with two courageous women, Ruth Varnado and Queen Hyler, leading the way -- standing up to hardened criminals in the most drug-ridden areas of the city. Beacuse of the death of young Timothy, the Stop the Violence Movement was born.

Marches and rallies were organized. Members went door-to-door, starting neighborhood groups working closely with police. When people saw drug dealers waiting to make deals from cars parked on tree-lined streets, neighbors began calling in the license plate numbers to authorities. Store owners were confronted and asked to stop selling drug paraphernalia. Now, nearly a year later, the Stop the Violence message continues to go out across the city, as local media outlets donate free airtime to encourage people to save Milwaukee's children from "drugs and thugs."

Every week, Ruth and Queen talk to prison inmates about the drugs and violence on the streets outside. The women ask the prisoners what could have prevented them from dealing in the netherworld of drugs and crime. From their answers, Ruth and Queen have found the way to stop even more young people from opening the door to narcotics and violence: "relearn, reteach, reinforce, restore, and reinstill values."

Theirs is a lesson for every community in America. But as helpless as one may feel, and as bitter as the pain may be -- people can keep the drug dealers out of their communities. Queen knows this pain -- her own son suffers permanent brain damage from a vicious attack by a street gang. It is for his sake, and for the sake of so many others, that people must work together to stop the criminals and drug dealers. By telling them to move on. By letting criminals know, in no uncertain terms, that we will not tolerate crack houses in our neighborhoods. That we will turn them in when they sit in their cars on our streets, waiting to make a buy, or when they hang around our schoolyards selling drugs to our kids. No one can afford to look the other way. Queen and Ruth didn't, thank God, and none of us can either.\\\

There's still a lot of work to be done ... in Milwaukee, and in cities like it all across America. But we have it within each of us, a moral compass that points us forward -- that admires the good and fights like hell against the evil. By standing up and fighting the depravity of drugs and crime, perhaps in the process all Americans can reinforce, restore and reinstill values in our children. It can be done, and with leaders like Ruth Varnado and Queen Hyler, it is being done.

Thank you, and God bless all of you in the Stop the Violence Movement. Keep up the good work.
