I.    SUMMARY

On Wednesday, November 21, you will address the staff of the American Embassy in Paris. Among those attending will be Ambassador Walter Curley and his wife Mary Curley.

PRESIDENTIAL REMARKS: EMBASSY GREETING PARIS, FRANCE
WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 1990

o Ambassador Curley, Mary Curley, friends. I am delighted to be in France again, and to have the chance to meet you. Your greeting marks one of the many warm memories we will take back to the States.

o In recent weeks, you've hosted -- among others -- Secretaries Baker, Cheney and Yeutter, General Powell, and Carla Hills. You must feel like you're running a bed and breakfast. / From now on, I think I'll just hold my Cabinet meetings here in Paris. // o I realize that a Presidential visit is even more burdensome. Barbara and I want to thank you for the work and dedication that have gone into our visit.

o From my own experience in China, I know that there is no more loyal and talented group of people than the men and women -- American and foreign -- who staff our Embassies.

o That is especially true here -- for you directly manage one of our oldest uninterrupted bilateral relationships. America and France aren't merely allies -- we are among the closest of friends. For strengthening that friendship, my heart-felt thanks.

o As you know, I am in Paris for an event you've helped to organize -- the 34-Nation Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe -- where we will review the changes and challenges -- economic, political, and military -- we face in the years ahead.

o It is true that the face of Europe, and the world, is changing. But some things have not. Things like fundamental views about life and liberty. And centuries-old ties which bind us to our European allies, and to our French partners especially.

o Last year, these ties were celebrated by the bicentennial of the French Revolution and the Bill of Rights. Today, in the midst of a CSCE Conference devoted to promoting these same rights and ideals, we salute again the democratic commitment which cements the unique partnership between the United States and France.

o In the deepest sense, you are trustees of the long and treasured friendship between our Nations. Thank you again for your support -- and God bless the United States of America.
