PRESIDENTIAL REMARKS: BRAZIL: STATE DINNER TOAST
FOREIGN MINISTRY
MONDAY, DECEMBER 3, 1990
8:30 P.M.

[[ Mr. President and Mrs. [Rosane] Collor. Mr. Vice President [Itamar Franco]. Mr. President of the Senate [Senator Nelson Carneiro]; Mr. President of the Chamber of Deputies [Deputy Paes de Andrada]; Mr. President of the Supreme Court [Dr. Neri da Silveira]; Ambassadors, Ministers of State, and Members of the President's Cabinet; Ambassador and Mrs. Melton. ]]

Barbara sends her regards. No, our dog Millie is not having another litter of puppies. Barbara's doctors have told her to stay off Air Force One for a while, to clear up a sinus problem. To make sure I deliver her messages of affection and respect for Brazil and the Collor family, she's sent along our daughter Doro to remind me.

I am deeply grateful to all of you here -- and to the people of Brazil -- for your gracious hospitality.

[[ It won't be easy to leave. In fact, I'm told that one American ambassador stayed in your country for 21 years. Obviously a smart man. ]]

It was a great honor for me to address your Congress this morning. It was a memorable moment but more than that, it was an affirmation of the proud heritage we share -- and a reminder that we have much reason for hope in the future.

Our two nations have a great deal in common. We've put our faith in similar forms of representative government -- and we've had ambassadors in each other's capitals since the earliest years of this century. Our relations have been long; our devotion to freedom, constant; our commitment to peace, enduring.

Now, I'm convinced that the time has come to move our relations toward a new and higher plane -- to eliminate the false schism between what we once called the First and Third Worlds and to speak of a New World defined by its ideals of freedom, democracy and prosperity shared by all.

All of us in the Americas share a common economic and political vision -- an unshakable belief that extraordinary achievements are possible when the imagination and industry of the individual is unleashed. I believe we have just begun to tap the true potential of the Americas. It is within our power to bring a new dawn to the New World. Our Enterprise for the Americas Initiative is a major step forward -- helping us explore the many new areas of our common destiny in a spirit of optimism and hope for all peoples of the Hemisphere.

Mr. President, you have courageously resolved to make profound changes in your economy -- and I believe those changes will reap handsome benefits for the people of Brazil.

We have a common interest in expanding trade, and protecting it from the damage that perceived inequities would inflict on our economic partnership. No country would gain if our common policy of an open and fair international trading system isn't fulfilled.

We share common environmental concerns, knowing that the destruction of irreplaceable resources, wherever they're found, compromises mankind's well-being everywhere. I'm confident that we will continue to find shared solutions to global environmental challenges.

On these issues, and across the range of concerns we share, I believe my visit will open new opportunities for cooperation in the Americas. Our nations have abundant natural resources, and our peoples are creative, competitive, and confident.

Together, our opportunities are boundless. Let us forge a closer and more vital partnership, to ensure lasting prosperity for all our people.

So, I ask you to join me in raising my cup to the health and happiness of the people of Brazil, to my friend Fernando Collor, and to the friendship between our two great nations.

[[ It won't be easy to leave. In fact, I'm told that one American ambassador stayed in your country for 21 years. Obviously a smart man. ]]

It was a great honor for me to address your Congress this morning. It was a memorable moment but more than that, it was an affirmation of the proud heritage we share -- and a reminder that we have much reason for hope in the future.

Our two nations have a great deal in common. We've put our faith in similar forms of representative government -- and we've had ambassadors in each other's capitals since the earliest years of this century. Our relations have been long; our devotion to freedom, constant; our commitment to peace, enduring.

Now, I'm convinced that the time has come to move our relations toward a new and higher plane -- to <sup>ELIMINATE</sup> ~~abolish~~ the false schism between what we once called the First and Third Worlds.

All of us in the Americas share a common economic and political vision -- an unshakeable belief that extraordinary achievements are possible when the imagination and industry of the individual is unleashed. I believe we have just begun to tap the true potential of the Americas. <sup>INSTEAD OF FALSE DISTINCTIONS BETWEEN</sup> ~~It is within our power to~~ <sup>FIRST AND THIRD WORLDS, LET US ~~SEEK~~ THINK IN ~~TERMS OF~~ AND SPEAK OF THE NEW WORLD,</sup> ~~bring a new dawn to the New World.~~ <sup>A NEW WORLD DEFINED BY ITS IDEALS OF FREEDOM</sup>

Mr. President, you have courageously resolved to make <sup>DEMOCRACY, AND PROSPERITY SHARE BY ALL.</sup> profound changes in your economy -- and I believe those changes <sup>AS WE APPROACH THE 500TH ANNIVERSARY OF COLUMBUS' EPIC VOYAGES, I BELIEVE WE ARE POISED TO EXPLORE MANY NEW AREAS OF OUR COMMON DESTINY.</sup> will reap handsome benefits for the people of Brazil.

We have a common interest in expanding trade, and <sup>THE 500TH ANNIVERSARY OF COLUMBUS' EPIC VOYAGES, I BELIEVE WE ARE POISED TO EXPLORE MANY NEW AREAS OF OUR COMMON DESTINY.</sup> protecting it from the damage that perceived inequities would inflict on our economic partnership. No country would gain if our common policy <sup>OF THE FUTURE</sup> of an open and fair international trading system isn't fulfilled.

We share common environmental concerns, knowing that the destruction of irreplaceable resources, wherever they're found, <sup>I APPROACH THIS CHALLENGE OF THE FUTURE</sup> compromises mankind's well-being everywhere. I'm confident that <sup>THE ECOLOGY FOR THE AMERICAS INITIATIVE IS ANIMATED BY THIS SPIRIT OF FURTHER OPTIMISM</sup> we will continue to find shared solutions to global environmental challenges.

On these issues, and across the range of concerns we share, <sup>THESE WILL OPEN NEW OPPORTUNITIES FOR</sup> I believe my visit is only the beginning of ~~a new era~~ of cooperation in the Americas. Our nations have abundant natural resources, and our peoples are creative, competitive, and confident.

Together, our opportunities are boundless. Let us forge a closer and more vital partnership, to ensure lasting prosperity for all our people.

PRESIDENTIAL REMARKS: BRAZIL: STATE DINNER TOAST
MONDAY, DECEMBER 3, 1990
8:30 P.M.

[[ Mr. President and Mrs. [Rosane] Collor. Mr. Vice President [Itamar Franco]. Mr. President of the Senate [Senator Nelson Carneiro]; Mr. President of the Chamber of Deputies [Deputy Paes de Andrada]; Mr. President of the Supreme Court [Dr. Neri da Silveira]; Ambassadors, Ministers of State, and Members of the President's Cabinet; Ambassador Richard and Mrs. Melton. ]]

Barbara and I are deeply grateful to all of you here -- and to the people of Brazil -- for your gracious hospitality.

[[ It won't be easy to leave. In fact, I'm told that one American ambassador stayed in your country for 21 years. Obviously a smart man. ]]

It was a great honor for me to address your Congress this morning. It was a memorable moment but more than that, it was an affirmation of the proud heritage we share -- and a reminder that we have much reason for hope in the future.

Our two nations have a great deal in common. We've put our faith in similar forms of representative government -- and we've had ambassadors in each other's capitals since the earliest years of this century. Our relations have been long; our devotion to freedom, constant; our commitment to peace, enduring.

first free elections
in how many years?

Now, I'm convinced that the time has come to move our relations toward a new and higher plane -- to abolish the false schism between what we once called the First and Third Worlds.

All of us in the Americas share a common economic and political vision -- an unshakeable belief that extraordinary achievements are possible when the imagination and industry of the individual is unleashed. I believe ~~we have just~~ <sup>we've just - Porter</sup> began to tap the true potential of the Americas. It is within our power to bring a new dawn to the New World.

Mr. President, you have courageously resolved to make profound changes in your economy -- and I believe those changes will reap handsome benefits for the people of Brazil.

We have a common interest in expanding trade, and protecting it from the damage that perceived inequities would inflict on our economic partnership. No country would gain if our common policy of an open and fair international trading system isn't fulfilled.

We share common environmental concerns, knowing that the destruction of irreplaceable resources, wherever they're found, compromises mankind's well-being everywhere. I'm confident that we will continue to find shared solutions to global environmental challenges.

On these issues, and across the range of concerns we share, I believe my visit is only the beginning of a new era of cooperation in the Americas. Our nations have abundant natural resources, and our peoples are creative, competitive, and confident.

Together, our opportunities are boundless. Let us forge a closer and more vital partnership, to ensure lasting prosperity for all our people.

[[ It won't be easy to leave. In fact, I'm told that one American ambassador stayed in your country for 21 years. Obviously a smart man. ~~And ambassador Melton tells me he's planning to break that record.~~ ]]

It was a great honor for me to address your Congress this morning. It was a memorable moment ~~--- a personal privilege, of course ---~~ but more than that, it was an affirmation of the proud heritage we share -- and a reminder that we have much reason for hope in the future.

Our two nations have a great deal in common. We've put our faith in similar forms of representative government -- and we've had ambassadors in each other's capitals since the earliest years of this century. Our relations have been long; our devotion to freedom, constant; our commitment to peace, enduring.

Now, I'm convinced that the time has come to move our relations toward a new and higher plane -- to abolish the false schism between what we once called the First and Third Worlds.

All of us in the Americas share a common economic and political vision -- an unshakeable belief that extraordinary achievements are possible when the imagination and industry of the individual is unleashed. I believe we have just begun to tap the true potential of the Americas. It is within our power to bring a new dawn to the New World.

Mr. President, you have courageously resolved to make profound changes in your economy -- and I believe those changes will reap handsome benefits for the people of Brazil. ~~Your actions, and those of other forward-looking leaders in the Americas, inspired my own government's thinking as we framed the Enterprise for the Americas initiative.~~

We have a common interest in expanding trade, and protecting it from the damage that perceived inequities would inflict on our economic partnership. No country would gain if our common policy of an open and fair international trading system isn't fulfilled.

We share common environmental concerns, knowing that the destruction of irreplaceable resources, wherever they're found, compromises mankind's well-being everywhere. I'm confident that we will continue to find shared solutions to global environmental challenges.

~~And in the common war we're waging against illegal drugs, I'm also confident that international cooperation -- to stem both~~

~~supply and demand -- will bring the day of the dealer to a close.~~

On these issues, and across the range of concerns we share, I believe my visit is only the beginning of a new era of cooperation in the Americas. Our nations have abundant natural, financial, and <sup>human</sup> ~~labor resources~~ and our peoples are creative, competitive, and confident. ✓

Together, our opportunities are boundless. Let us forge a closer and more vital partnership, to ensure lasting prosperity for all our people.
