MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRESIDENT

THROUGH: CHRISS WINSTON W
FROM: CURT SMITH CS
SUBJECT: URUGUAYAN DINNER TOAST

I. SUMMARY

On Tuesday, December 4, at 9:20 p.m., you will exchange toasts with President Lacalle at a state dinner in Punta del Este, Uruguay.

II. DISCUSSION

About 70 Uruguayan political and business leaders will attend the dinner at the Posta del Congrejo restaurant. The toast (5 minutes, on cards) promotes yet again the Enterprise for the Americas Initiative and thanks Uruguay for their stand against Iraq's aggression.

PRESIDENTIAL REMARKS: LEADERS DINNER
PUNTA DEL ESTE, URUGUAY
TUESDAY, DECEMBER 4, 1990

President and Mrs. Lacalle, honored guests. As this day draws to a close, Doro and I are especially grateful for the chance to share this magnificent setting. //

Fortunately for us, President Lacalle -- in our discussions in New York earlier this year -- was persuasive about our spending the night here. // This is my first trip to Punta Del Este and reports of its beauty "have not been exaggerated." // It is also my first visit to Uruguay -- yet I already know President Lacalle. //

We met in Washington last February -- and again in October at the United Nations. Today, again, I have had the chance to appreciate his insight and eloquence. //

Thirty years ago, Dwight Eisenhower, a great President, come to Uruguay and spoke for the United States. He said: "I bring you this heartfelt message from all the people of my country," he said on his arrival in Montevideo. "We treasure our partnership with you, and all our sister Republics in this hemisphere."

President Eisenhower knew that Uruguay is a Nation vast in size and large in dreams. A Uruguayan professor once remarked, "You could put Belgium, the Netherlands, Denmark, and Switzerland inside [it] and still have plenty of room left over." //

Today, Uruguay has helped to lead the political and economic revolution now sweeping Latin America. // And I salute President Lacalle's efforts to use freedom to reform your economy -- and to help free markets. //

Six months ago, we unveiled an initiative to strengthen those efforts -- our "Enterprise for the Americas Initiative" -- and the day of its announcement, President Lacalle was the first leader to call me with his support. // Like me, he believes that the hope of this region is trade, not aid. Accordingly, we will do all we can to work with Uruguay, Brazil, Argentina, and Paraguay reach a framework agreement with the United States to expand investment and trade. //

Increased prosperity in the hemisphere will also depend on attracting capital to finance growth and easing the burden of external debt. The Enterprise for the Americas Initiative will support countries' efforts to increase private investment -- both at home and from abroad -- and will help reduce debt owed to the U.S. government of countries committed to economic and investment reforms.

The increased exchange of goods and ideas benefits this hemisphere. At the same time, we recognize that naked aggression imperils not only commerce but the dignity of man. Which brings me to events on all our minds: I refer to the Persian Gulf. //

Both our countries have endured hardship: The injury to our economies due to higher oil prices and a loss of trade. // It is not an easy price -- but one we will pay to ensure the right of a free people to survive as a nation, no matter how large or small. I would like to thank President Lacalle and the people of Uruguay for their unwavering support for the measures adopted in the Security Council to counter Iraq's brutal annexation of Kuwait. // Your backing, together with the determination of virtually the entire world community, Iraq's aggression will not stand.

Both abroad and at home, Uruguay and America have never been more united, or better allies and friends. In that spirit, I ask our guests to rise and raise their glasses:

- To the great Oriental Republic of Uruguay;
- To Uruguayan-American friendship;
- And to the health of my friend and colleague, the President of Uruguay.

PRESIDENTIAL REMARKS: LEADERS DINNER
PUNTA DEL ESTE, URUGUAY
TUESDAY, DECEMBER 4, 1990

President and Mrs. Lacalle, honored guests. As this day draws to a close, Barbara and I are especially grateful for the chance to share this magnificent setting. //

Fortunately for us, President Lacalle -- in our discussions in New York earlier this year -- was persuasive about our spending the night here. // This is my first trip to Punta Del Este. Paraphrasing Mark Twain, reports of its beauty have not been exaggerated. // It is also my first visit to Uruguay -- yet I feel that already I know your President. //

We met in Washington last April -- and again in October at the United Nations. Today, again, I have had the chance to observe his insight and eloquence. //

Thirty years ago, one of the greatest men of the Twentieth Century uttered words which eclipse any language. "I bring you this heartfelt message from all the people of my country," he said on his arrival in Montevideo. "We treasure our partnership with you, and all our sister Republics in this hemisphere."

Dwight Eisenhower knew that Uruguay is a Nation large in size and large in dreams. A writer once remarked, "You could put Belgium, the Netherlands, Denmark, and Switzerland inside [it] and still have plenty of room left over." //

Today, Uruguay has been enriched by the political and economic freedom now sweeping the globe. // And I salute President Lacalle's efforts to use freedom to reform your economy -- and to help free markets make the individual -- not state -- the voice of today and tomorrow. //

We met in Washington last April -- and again in October at the United Nations. Today, again, I have had the chance to observe his insight and eloquence. ((President Lacalle, of course, is fluent in both English and French. // I'm jealous. // Some say English is my only foreign language.)) //

Thirty years ago, one of the greatest men of the Twentieth Century uttered words which eclipse any language. "I bring you this heartfelt message from all the people of my country," he said on his arrival in Montevideo. "We treasure our partnership with you, and all our sister Republics in this hemisphere."

Dwight Eisenhower knew that Uruguay is a Nation large in and large in area size. A writer once remarked, "You could put Belgium, the Netherlands, Denmark, and Switzerland inside [it] and still have plenty of room left over." // <sup>2</sup> And a Nation large in dreams. As Ike said in 1960, Uruguay reveres -- and reveals -- "the sanctity of the human spirit." //

Today, ~~President Eisenhower would applaud~~ how Uruguay has been enriched by the political and economic freedom now sweeping the globe. // And, <sup>o</sup> salute, ~~I am sure,~~ President Lacalle's efforts to use freedom to reform your economy -- and to help free markets make the individual -- not state -- the voice of, <sup>today and</sup> tomorrow. //

Seventeen months ago, we unveiled an initiative to endorse those efforts. <sup>our</sup> We ~~named it~~ <sup>initiative</sup> "Enterprise for the Americas" -- and the day of its <sup>Stet</sup> announcement, President Lacalle was the first leader to call me with his support. // Like me, he <sup>believes</sup> knows that the hope of this region is trade, not aid. Accordingly, we will do all we can to help Uruguay in concert with <sup>a</sup> Brazil, Argentina, and Paraguay reach a framework agreement with the United States. + Affirming free government, <sup>and</sup> free trade, and rising investment. //

One of my most admired predecessors, Theodore Roosevelt, spoke about this just prior to a visit to this continent in 1913. "We wish to open the countries of South America to new business," he said, then concluded: "This cannot be done unless it is to the advantage of the various peoples of South America to have [their] products." //

As was his wont, TR was right. Look at the agreements we have signed today. They show how our bilateral relationship can inspire a hemisphere. / Take the mutual Legal Assistance Treaty. It is a major step in halting the scourge of drug trafficking and related money laundering. // Look at the Civil Aviation Agreement. It will improve and expand the commercial air service between our two countries. // Then, there is the environment. I hope we will act on my proposal for a hemispheric institute investigating global change. // These, and other, acts can realize W.H. Hudson's words in his book, The Purple Land: "A merciful heart showing tenderness towards all God's creatures."//

Let me close with events I believe divine providence will surely bless: I refer to the Persian Gulf. // Both our countries have endured hardships: The injury to our economies due to oil prices and loss of trade. // It is not an easy price -- but one we will pay. I would like to thank President Lacalle and the people of Uruguay for their unwavering support for the measures adopted in the Security Council to counter Iraq's brutal annexation of Kuwait. // With your backing, Iraq's annexation will not stand. We will rebuke the naked aggression which imperils all that is right, and good.

Both abroad and at home, Uruguay and America have never been more united, or better allies and friends. In that spirit, I ask our guests to rise and raise their glasses:

- To the great Nation of Uruguay;
- To Uruguayan-American friendship;
- And to the health of my friend and colleague, the President of Uruguay.

PRESIDENTIAL REMARKS: LEADERS DINNER
PUNTA DEL ESTE, URUGUAY
TUESDAY, DECEMBER 4, 1990

President and Mrs. Lacalle, honored guests. As this day draws to a close, Barbara and I are especially grateful for the chance to share this magnificent setting. //

Fortunately for us, President Lacalle -- in our discussions in New York earlier this year -- was persuasive about our spending the night here. // This is my first trip to Punta Del Este. Paraphrasing Mark Twain, reports of its beauty have not been exaggerated. // It is also my first visit to Uruguay -- yet I feel that already I know your President. //

We met in Washington last April -- and again in October at the United Nations. Today, again, I have had the chance to observe his insight and eloquence. //

Thirty years ago, one of the greatest men of the Twentieth Century uttered words which eclipse any language. "I bring you this heartfelt message from all the people of my country," he said on his arrival in Montevideo. "We treasure our partnership with you, and all our sister Republics in this hemisphere."

Dwight Eisenhower knew that Uruguay is a Nation large in size and large in dreams. A writer once remarked, "You could put Belgium, the Netherlands, Denmark, and Switzerland inside [it] and still have plenty of room left over." //

Today, Uruguay has been enriched by the political and economic freedom now sweeping the globe. // And I salute President Lacalle's efforts to use freedom to reform your economy -- and to help free markets make the individual -- not state -- the voice of today and tomorrow. //

Seventeen months ago, we unveiled an initiative to endorse those efforts -- our "Enterprise for the Americas" Initiative -- and the day of its announcement, President Lacalle was the first leader to call me with his support. // Like me, he believes that the hope of this region is trade, not aid. Accordingly, we will do all we can to help Uruguay in concert with Brazil, Argentina, and Paraguay reach a framework agreement with the United States. Affirming free government and free trade. //

One of my most admired predecessors, Theodore Roosevelt, spoke about this just prior to a visit to this continent in 1913. "We wish to open the countries of South America to new business," he said, then concluded: "This cannot be done unless it is to the advantage of the various peoples of South America to have [their] products." //

Teddy Roosevelt knew that the exchange of goods and ideas would benefit this hemisphere. He knew, too, that naked aggression could imperil not only commerce but the dignity of man. Which brings me to events on all our minds: I refer to the Persian Gulf. //

Both our countries have endured hardships: The injury to our economies due to oil prices and loss of trade. // It is not an easy price -- but one we will pay. I would like to thank President Lacalle and the people of Uruguay for their unwavering support for the measures adopted in the Security Council to counter Iraq's brutal annexation of Kuwait. // With your backing, Iraq's annexation will not stand.

Both abroad and at home, Uruguay and America have never been more united, or better allies and friends. In that spirit, I ask our guests to rise and raise their glasses:

- To the great Nation of Uruguay;
- To Uruguayan-American friendship;
- And to the health of my friend and colleague, the President of Uruguay.
