PRESIDENTIAL REMARKS: EMBASSY GREETING
SANTIAGO, CHILE
FRIDAY, DECEMBER 7, 1990
9:30 A. M.

- o Thank you, Ambassador Charles Gillespie, for your warm welcome. I'm sorry Barbara couldn't be here today but she sends her regards and a special "envoy" -- our daughter Doro. After my brief stay here, I can see why this is such a popular post -- this beautiful country, these majestic Andes, are hard to beat. But the biggest attraction of a posting in Santiago, I would think, must be the charm and warmth of the Chilean people.
- o At the same time, I know that you face considerable challenges and sometimes danger in strengthening U.S.-Chilean ties. I was saddened to hear that one of your security officers, Tom Colin, was seriously injured in a recent bombing. My sympathy goes to him and to other victims of such senseless, deplorable terrorism.
- o Barbara and I had the privilege of similarly representing the United States abroad, when I was Head of the Liaison Office in Beijing so we know the amount of work that goes into a Presidential visit. We also know what it is like to be far from home, and that being apart from loved ones in the United States takes its toll. Thank you for your dedication and hard work.

- o A democracy in transition is a dynamic process, and it takes creative diplomacy to stay on top of it. A large part of our bilateral relations are based upon the hard work each of you performs day-to-day. I want all the employees of this embassy -- Chilean and American alike -- to know how grateful we are for your tremendous contribution to our common interests.
- o I also know how much an embassy depends on people like our Chilean colleagues. You are our institutional memories, our social guides, our friends. I want to thank you for all you do in building bridges between the United States and Chile.
- o Over the last year, the languages of democracy have become even more numerous. But Chileans are speaking the same strong and vibrant language that we hear from Czechs, Hungarians, Bulgarians and Poles. America depends on you to interpret and faithfully convey what the citizens of these new democracies are trying to tell us.
- o Once again, each and every one of you has our appreciation and our thanks. Keep up the good work.
