TALKING POINTS: P.A.S. BRIEFING
 [CLOSED PRESS]
 ROOM 450, OEOB
 Thursday, March 28, 1991

- * [A.G. Thornburg, Secretaries Sullivan, Madigan, Lujan, Brady, Skinner, Reilly... welcome, all.]
- * Thought you'd want some visionary, poetic words about the domestic agenda. But then Ede said, "That's okay, the Chief of Staff will have already spoken." So I'll be brief -- and then I'd like to open it up to questions.
- * Want to begin by thanking you all, for the truly outstanding job you've been doing -- within each one of your agencies and boards, and through remarkable interagency cooperation.
- * I've seen in this team an uncommon collegiality and confidence -- and a sense of mission that has served this country well, and made me proud to be your President.
- * You all know how busy we've been on the domestic front. The Gulf may have made the news, these past months -- and the pundits tend to confuse lack of news with lack of action. But as you're well aware, the domestic agenda didn't stop when Saddam overran Kuwait -- and it won't stop now.
- * We've had a series of successes these past two years, working to re-orient government toward the needs of the people. It's been a quiet revolution, but significant:
 - we're giving greater choice to individuals, families, and communities: in child care, in environmental legislation, in the Americans with Disabilities Act, and a host of other domestic achievements.
 - we're putting the power of free wills and free markets to work, in everything from Clean Air compliance to public housing initiatives.
 - and we're beginning, after decades of hard experience, to turn back to states the programs they know best how to design and administer.
- * I know John has outlined our major legislative initiatives, but I'd add a few impressions about the challenges ahead. Ours should rightly be considered a reform agenda -- putting power where it does the most good.

- * After the New Deal, this may be counter-intuitive: but we can no longer measure progress in terms of dollars spent and bureaucracies built. We want what works.
- * Perhaps the most important outcome of the Gulf conflict has been the way it reaffirmed the virtues that have always been central to the American character: qualities like decency, honor, courage, compassion, ingenuity, determination -- the same qualities that motivate our efforts at home.
- * After all, any real "domestic agenda" is about the people: helping them fulfill their aspirations -- not making them conform to the bureaucratic mandates and abstract theories.
- * That's why we're working for choice and quality in education, equality of opportunity, a job-generating economy, more widespread home ownership, thoughtful environmental stewardship, and programs that keep families healthy and together.
- * We're continuing to turn the tide on drugs -- clamping down on violent crime with tough crime control legislation. We can expect an uphill fight, getting the crime package we want from the Congress -- but this country needs it.
- * With our National Energy Strategy, we're working to reduce our dependence on foreign oil. Heard the criticisms about conservation -- but this is a strategy that, above all, won't compromise economic growth.
- * Some sense a schism between domestic and foreign policy. But in a world linked by trade, information, financial markets and geopolitics, domestic and foreign policy are inseparable. Both reflect the character, mission and will of America. Neither stands alone.
- * That's why much of what we're doing heralds forward-looking, significant change: free trade; overhaul of outdated banking laws; Highway Bill. These initiatives will lay the foundation for the vibrant economy all Americans count on.
- * And your efforts are crucial, in calling forth for domestic policy the same qualities that succeeded so spectacularly in the Gulf. So let me thank you again, for the work you've been doing -- and encourage you in your efforts.
- * I believe the nation will look back on these years, and say something significant happened here -- much of it due to a leadership that was able to work together, capably and well -- a committed and engaged executive branch, that put its faith in the people, and found its strength there.
- * Interested in your thoughts, questions, suggestions...

- * Thought you'd want some visionary, poetic words about the domestic agenda. But then Ed e said, "That's okay, the Chief of Staff will have already spoken." So I'll be brief -- and then I'd like to open it up to questions.
- * Nobody knows better than you how busy we've been on the domestic front. You're the people who make policy move. So now that we're mid-way through this term, let me thank you all -- for the truly outstanding job you've done for your country. You've made me proud to be President.
- * The Gulf may have made all the news these past months -- and reporters and pundits tend to confuse lack of news with lack of action. But as you all know, the domestic agenda didn't stop when Saddam overran Kuwait -- and it won't stop now.
- * We've had a string of successes these past two years, working to re-orient government toward the needs of the people. Giving greater choice to individuals, families, and communities -- in child care, in environmental legislation, in the A.D.A. legislation, and a host of other initiatives -- because we know the freedom to choose is not the privilege of wealth, it is the birthright of every American.
- * So we'll continue to pursue a reform agenda that puts power where it does the most good -- at the local level. Tapping the power of free wills and free markets. Measuring progress not in dollars spent and bureaucracies built, but by results.
- * We're working for choice and quality in education, equality of opportunity, a job-generating economy, more widespread home ownership, and programs that keep families healthy and together.
- * We want to continue to turn the tide on drugs -- and to clamp down on violent crime -- with tough crime control legislation. We're working for a complete overhaul of outdated banking laws, to make our financial services industry #1 in the world. And we're committed to thoughtful environmental stewardship.

- * With our National Energy Strategy, we're working to reduce vulnerability to foreign oil; and with our National Transportation Policy, we want to rebuild our highway and transit infrastructure. These initiatives will lay the foundation for the vibrant economy all Americans count on.

- * While I've sketched out the broadest outlines of our domestic agenda, what makes it work is a very engaged and committed executive branch. Interested in your thoughts, questions, suggestions...

TALKING POINTS: P.A.S. BRIEFING
[CLOSED PRESS]
ROOM 450, OEOB
Thursday, March 28, 1991

- * Thought you'd want some visionary, poetic words about the domestic agenda. But then Ed e said, "That's okay, the Chief of Staff will have already spoken." So I'll be brief -- and then I'd like to open it up to questions.
- * Nobody knows better than you how busy we've been on the domestic front. You're the people who make policy move. So now that we're mid-way through this term, let me thank you all -- for the truly outstanding job you've done for your country. You've made me proud to be President.
- * The Gulf may have made all the news these past months -- and reporters and pundits tend to confuse lack of news with lack of action. But as you all know, the domestic agenda didn't stop when Saddam overran Kuwait -- and it won't stop now.
- * We've had a string of successes these past two years, working to re-orient government toward the needs of the people. Giving greater choice to individuals, families, and communities -- in child care, in environmental legislation, in the A.D.A. legislation, and a host of other initiatives -- because we know the freedom to choose is not the privilege of wealth, it is the birthright of every American.
- * So we'll continue to pursue a reform agenda that puts power where it does the most good -- at the local level. Tapping the power of free wills and free markets. Measuring progress not in dollars spent and bureaucracies built, but by results.
- * We're working for choice and quality in education, equality of opportunity, a job-generating economy, more widespread home ownership, and programs that keep families healthy and together.
- * We want to continue to turn the tide on drugs -- and to clamp down on violent crime -- with tough crime control legislation. We're working for a complete overhaul of outdated banking laws, to make our financial services industry #1 in the world. And we're committed to thoughtful environmental stewardship.

* With our National Energy Strategy, we're working to reduce vulnerability to foreign oil; and with our National Transportation Policy, we want to rebuild our highway and transit infrastructure. These initiatives will lay the foundation for the vibrant economy all Americans count on.

* While I've sketched out the broadest outlines of our domestic agenda, what makes it work is a very engaged and committed executive branch. Interested in your thoughts, questions, suggestions...
