PRESIDENTIAL REMARKS: DEPARTURE STATEMENT
SOUTH LAWN
TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 1991.

Mr. President, it has been a pleasure and a privilege to meet with you today and exchange views on the important obstacles our two countries must overcome together. You, Mr. President, are Peru's hope for the future. We've spoken openly -- discussing the tough challenges facing Peru -- from economic hardship to renegade insurgencies, from the war against drugs to the battle to preserve human rights. Much has been done on all these fronts -- but much more waits to be achieved. //

Peru's native son, U. N. Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar, wrote that "resolution of conflicts, observance of human rights and the promotion of development together weave the fabric of peace." Mr. President, you've moved to make sure the threads of economic development and economic growth secure the fabric of a peaceful Peru. Since taking office, you've cut government spending, eliminated price controls, knocked down barriers to trade and investment. Those reforms have begun paying dividends: Inflation has eased; net international reserves have risen. Peruvians feel confident in themselves, their economy, and their nation. We want to be a full partner in your efforts to restore Peru's economy, because your people deserve the fruits of economic growth after so many years of suffering.

We also discussed narcotics trafficking and production -- a scourge that blocks Peru's path to a peaceful and prosperous future and poisons its neighbors' neighborhoods. Peru remains the world's largest coca producer -- even while drugs drain its resources, drive insurgency and dampen its hopes for a better tomorrow.

Mr. President, under your leadership, Peru has moved to combat this deadly threat. You've strengthened police and military operations against the drug industry, while stressing the need for alternative crop production. The U.S. and other nations have joined to support Peru's efforts with training, resources, and equipment. In this spirit, I was pleased to reaffirm last May's accords in which we agreed to cooperate closely in combating drug trafficking.

To support these efforts, my administration wants to send 94 million dollars in economic and military assistance to fight drugs. Unfortunately, Congress has placed a hold on disbursement of these funds, chiefly because of human rights concerns. We share these concerns. So do you, Mr. President. But you have made progress on human rights. Let's also see progress on releasing these funds.

Without this needed aid, cocaine traffic will continue unabated. Violence and abuses will increase unredressed. I urge Congress to help Peru and the Andean nations create economic alternatives to coca production by passing my Andean Trade Preference Initiative.

Peru's critics forget that it must cope with violent insurgencies, which have made an unholy alliance with drug traffickers. The murderous Shining Path offers nothing but a dead end. It cultivates chaos, hatred and vendetta -- complicating necessary efforts to honor human rights.

Mr. President, you've combined strong leadership with swift action. You've replaced police officers suspected of corruption and abuse, begun to open up detention centers to prosecutors, and pledged to strengthen your military code. Your reforms have begun to help improve the human rights record of the security forces. Your deeds echo the words of your country's constitution, "That all men, equal in dignity, have rights of universal validity." Rights abuses have fallen sharply since you took office last year.

Mr. President, your leadership and your nation deserve our support -- and you have it. Our government is pleased to co-chair, with Japan, an international group to help Peru with its debt problems, and hasten its reintegration into the international financial community. A number of other countries including several in Latin America have joined this process, which is so important for Peru's future. We hope the democratic community will rally generously to support your people. //

Our world changes at a dizzying pace. Each day writes a new page in history -- before yesterday's ink has even dried. Mr. President, you are confronting the challenge of change with courage and vision. You are building a new Peru with a sound economy, respect for law, and a new sense of social justice and national reconciliation. You are steering your country steadily toward a place of renewed leadership in the community of democratic nations, which Peruvian patriot Juan Pablo Viscardo y Guzman (bees CAR doh ee gooz MAN) once called the "great family of brothers."

Once again, Mr. President, it has been an honor to welcome you to the White House -- and may God bless the people of Peru.

PRESIDENTIAL REMARKS: DEPARTURE STATEMENT
SOUTH LAWN
TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 1991

Mr. President, it has been a pleasure and a privilege to meet with you today. We've spoken honestly and openly -- covering areas of common interest -- including our shared hopes for the future.

We discussed the daunting challenges facing Peru -- from economic hardship to renegade insurgencies, from the war against drugs, to the battle to preserve individual rights. //

We focused on narcotics trade and production -- a scourge that blocks Peru's path to a peaceful and prosperous future. Peru remains the world's largest cocoa producer -- and the drug industry drains its resources, drives an insurgency and dampens Peru's hopes for a better future.

Mr. President, under your leadership, Peru has moved forward on all fronts to combat this deadly threat. You have strengthened police and military operations against the drug industry. Your administration has repeatedly emphasized the need for alternative crop production. The U.S. and other nations have joined to support Peru's efforts with technical and financial assistance.

And, Mr. President, we have re-affirmed last May's agreement, in which we agreed to cooperate closely in combating drug trafficking.

Peru must also cope with insurgent groups that have made an unholy alliance with drug traffickers. The people of Peru know that the Shining Path is nothing but a dead end. It cultivates chaos, creates fertile ground for hatred and vendetta -- complicates necessary efforts to honor human rights.

Mr. President, you've combined strong leadership with swift action -- you've replaced police officers suspected of corruption and abuse. Your reforms have helped improve the human rights record of the security forces. Your deeds echo the words of your country's constitution, "That all men, equal in dignity, have rights of universal validity." Rights abuses have fallen sharply since you took office last year.

Peru's native son, U. N. Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar, wrote that "resolution of conflicts, observance of human rights and the promotion of development together weave the fabric of peace." But the fabric of peace in any land also requires the strong thread of economic growth. Mr. President, since you took office, you've cut government spending, eliminated price controls, knocked down barriers to trade and investment. Those courageous reforms have begun paying dividends: Inflation has eased; net international reserves have risen -- and Peruvians' feel confident in themselves, their economy, their nation.

Your nation deserves our support. Our government is pleased to co-chair, with the Japanese, an international group to help Peru with its debt problems, and hasten its integration into the

international financial community. //

We live in a world changing at a dizzying pace. Each day writes a new page in history -- and yesterday's ink hasn't even dried. You are steering your country steadily toward a place of greater prominence in the community of nations, which Peruvian patriot Juan Pablo Viscardo (bees CAR doh) y Guzman (gooz MAN) once called the "great family of brothers."

That spirit of brotherhood marked our meetings today -- and promises great progress for our two nations. //

Once again, Mr. President, it has been an honor to welcome you to the White House -- and may God bless the people of Peru.

Mr. President, your leadership and your nation deserve our support -- and you have it. Our government is pleased to co-chair, with Japan, an international group to help Peru with its debt problems, and hasten its reintegration into the international financial community. A number of other countries including several in Latin America have joined this process, which is so important for Peru's future. We hope the democratic community will rally generously to support your people. //

Our world changes at a dizzying pace. Each day writes a new page in history -- before yesterday's ink has even dried. Mr. President, you are confronting the challenge of change with courage and vision. You are building a new Peru with a sound

economy, respect for law, and a new sense of social justice and national reconciliation. You are steering your country steadily toward a place of renewed leadership in the community of democratic nations, which Peruvian patriot Juan Pablo Viscardo y Guzman (bees CAR doh ee gooz MAN) once called the "great family of brothers."

Once again, Mr. President, it has been an honor to welcome you to the White House -- and may God bless the people of Peru.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 1991

Mr. President, it has been a pleasure and a privilege to meet with you today. We've spoken honestly and openly -- covering areas of common interest -- including our shared hopes for the future.

We discussed the daunting challenges facing Peru -- from economic hardship to renegade insurgencies, from the war against drugs, to the battle to preserve <sup>human</sup> ~~individual~~ rights. //

During our talks, we focused ~~we focused~~ on narcotics ~~trade~~ <sup>trafficking</sup> and production -- a scourge and poison <sup>America's</sup> neighborhood that blocks Peru's path to a peaceful and prosperous future.

And, Mr. President, we have re-affirmed last May's agreement, in which we agreed to cooperate closely in combating

To support these efforts, my Administration wants to disburse $94 million in counternarcotics-related economic and military assistance. Unfortunately, Congress has placed a hold on disbursement of these funds, chiefly because of human rights concerns. We share these concerns as does President Fujimori. But progress has been made on human rights and Congress should release these funds, otherwise more cocaine will enter the United States and violence and abuses will increase, not decrease. I urge the Congress also, to help Peru and the Andean nations create economic alternatives to coca leaf production by passing my Andean Trade Preference Initiative.

PRESIDENTIAL REMARKS:

DEPARTURE STATEMENT
SOUTH LAWN
TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 1991

Mr. President, it has been a pleasure and a privilege to meet with you today. We've spoken honestly and openly -- covering areas of common interest -- including our shared hopes for the future.

We discussed the daunting challenges facing Peru -- from economic hardship to renegade insurgencies, from the war against drugs, to the battle to preserve individual rights. //

We focused on narcotics trade and production -- a scourge that blocks Peru's path to a peaceful and prosperous future. Peru remains the world's largest cocoa producer -- and the drug industry drains its resources, drives an insurgency and dampens Peru's hopes for a better future.

Mr. President, under your leadership, Peru has moved forward on all fronts to combat this deadly threat. You have strengthened police and military operations against the drug industry. Your administration has repeatedly emphasized the need for alternative crop production. The U.S. and other nations have joined to support Peru's efforts with technical and financial assistance.

And, Mr. President, we have re-affirmed last May's agreement, in which we agreed to cooperate closely in combating drug trafficking.

Peru must also cope with insurgent groups that have made an unholy alliance with drug traffickers. The people of Peru know that the Shining Path is nothing but a dead end. It cultivates chaos, creates fertile ground for hatred and vendetta -- complicates necessary efforts to honor human rights.

Mr. President, you've combined strong leadership with swift action -- you've replaced police officers suspected of corruption and abuse. Your reforms have helped improve the human rights record of the security forces. Your deeds echo the words of your country's constitution, "That all men, equal in dignity, have rights of universal validity." Rights abuses have fallen sharply since you took office last year.

Peru's native son, U. N. Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar, wrote that "resolution of conflicts, observance of human rights and the promotion of development together weave the fabric of peace." But the fabric of peace in any land also requires the strong thread of economic growth. Mr. President, since you took office, you've cut government spending, eliminated price controls, knocked down barriers to trade and investment. Those courageous reforms have begun paying dividends: Inflation has eased; net international reserves have risen -- and Peruvians' feel confident in themselves, their economy, their nation.

Your nation deserves our support. Our government is pleased to co-chair, with the Japanese, an international group to help Peru with its debt problems, and hasten its integration into the

international financial community. //

We live in a world changing at a dizzying pace. Each day writes a new page in history -- and yesterday's ink hasn't even dried. You are steering your country steadily toward a place of greater prominence in the community of nations, which Peruvian patriot Juan Pablo Viscardo (bees CAR doh) y Guzman (gooz MAN) once called the "great family of brothers."

That spirit of brotherhood marked our meetings today -- and promises great progress for our two nations. //

Once again, Mr. President, it has been an honor to welcome you to the White House -- and may God bless the people of Peru.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRESIDENT

THROUGH: TONY SNOW TS

FROM: JENNIFER GROSSMAN JAB

SUBJECT: DEPARTURE STATEMENT FOR THE VISIT OF PRESIDENT
FUJIMORI

Attached is a draft of the departure statement for the visit of President Fujimori on Tuesday, September 17, 1991 at 1:15 p.m. on the South Lawn.

PRESIDENTIAL REMARKS: DEPARTURE STATEMENT
SOUTH LAWN
TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 1991

Mr. President, it has been a pleasure and a privilege to meet with you today and exchange views on the important obstacles our two countries must overcome together. You, Mr. President, are Peru's hope for the future. We've spoken openly -- discussing the tough challenges facing Peru -- from economic hardship to renegade insurgencies, from the war against drugs to the battle to preserve human rights. Much has been done on all these fronts -- but much more waits to be achieved. //

Peru's native son, U. N. Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar, wrote that "resolution of conflicts, observance of human rights and the promotion of development together weave the fabric of peace." Mr. President, you've moved to make sure the threads of economic development and economic growth secure the fabric of a peaceful Peru. Since taking office, you've cut government spending, eliminated price controls, knocked down barriers to trade and investment. Those reforms have begun paying dividends: Inflation has eased; net international reserves have risen. Peruvians feel confident in themselves, their economy, and their nation. We want to be a full partner in your efforts to restore Peru's economy, because your people deserve the fruits of economic growth after so many years of suffering.

We also discussed narcotics trafficking and production -- a scourge that blocks Peru's path to a peaceful and prosperous future and poisons its neighbors' neighborhoods. Peru remains the world's largest coca producer -- even while drugs drain its resources, drive insurgency and dampen its hopes for a better tomorrow.

Mr. President, under your leadership, Peru has moved to combat this deadly threat. You've strengthened police and military operations against the drug industry, while stressing the need for alternative crop production. The U.S. and other nations have joined to support Peru's efforts with training, resources, and equipment. In this spirit, I was pleased to reaffirm last May's accords in which we agreed to cooperate closely in combating drug trafficking.

To support these efforts, my administration wants to send 94 million dollars in economic and military assistance to fight drugs. Unfortunately, Congress has placed a hold on disbursement of these funds, chiefly because of human rights concerns. We share these concerns. So do you, Mr. President. But you have made progress on human rights. Let's also see progress on releasing these funds.

Without this needed aid, cocaine traffic will continue unabated. Violence and abuses will increase unredressed. I urge Congress to help Peru and the Andean nations create economic alternatives to coca production by passing my Andean Trade Preference Initiative.

Peru's critics forget that it must cope with violent insurgencies, which have made an unholy alliance with drug traffickers. The murderous Shining Path offers nothing but a dead end. It cultivates chaos, hatred and vendetta -- complicating necessary efforts to honor human rights.

Mr. President, you've combined strong leadership with swift action. You've replaced police officers suspected of corruption and abuse, begun to open up detention centers to prosecutors, and pledged to strengthen your military code. Your reforms have begun to help improve the human rights record of the security forces. Your deeds echo the words of your country's constitution, "That all men, equal in dignity, have rights of universal validity." Rights abuses have fallen sharply since you took office last year.

Mr. President, your leadership and your nation deserve our support -- and you have it. Our government is pleased to co-chair, with Japan, an international group to help Peru with its debt problems, and hasten its reintegration into the international financial community. A number of other countries including several in Latin America have joined this process, which is so important for Peru's future. We hope the democratic community will rally generously to support your people. //

Our world changes at a dizzying pace. Each day writes a new page in history -- before yesterday's ink has even dried. Mr. President, you are confronting the challenge of change with courage and vision. You are building a new Peru with a sound

economy, respect for law, and a new sense of social justice and national reconciliation. You are steering your country steadily toward a place of renewed leadership in the community of democratic nations, which Peruvian patriot Juan Pablo Viscardo y Guzman (bees CAR doh ee gooz MAN) once called the "great family of brothers."

Once again, Mr. President, it has been an honor to welcome you to the White House -- and may God bless the people of Peru.
