PRESIDENTIAL REMARKS: CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1991

Dr. Sullivan, ladies and gentlemen. Thank you very much. I'm pleased to be with you for the opening of the Northwest wing of this magnificent hospital. / Psalm 127 says that children are a gift from the Lord. The additional beds located here will help that gift enrich us all.

An old adage counsels, "Live and let live." This facility -- under construction for more than three years -- will help give life to kids. // It is a state-of-the-art pediatric care center. It also towers as a monument to America's volunteer spirit. //

For many years, the children of the Intermountain Area supported Primary Children's Hospital with pennies, nickels, and dimes given on their birthday. // This selfless spirit of charity continues today with the giving of your time, and of yourselves. //

I think of and salute hundreds of volunteers who donate more than a quarter million hours a year to children -- and those community representatives serving without pay as members of the hospital Governing Board. //

I think, too, of your staff and physicians -- one of whom, Dr. Floyd Seager, I have honored as a "Daily Point of Light." That same generosity moved thousands of area residents to help build this facility. // All helped Intermountain Health Care win the health care industry's highest honor for quality -- the Healthcare Forum/Witt Award. //

On my tour of the hospital, we visited the nursery. I saw sick kids who have won their first battle -- the battle for life -- and who are now fighting a second battle for recovery. // They are kids who depend on your trust and affection -- who understand how you reflect the Bible verse, "We were gentle among you, like a nurse taking care of her children."

Nowhere is this more important than in reducing infant morality rates. We must reverse the factors that cause the death of an infant. That is why I have personally made the Healthy Start Program a Presidential Initiative and a top national priority. // It is also why I am pleased, with Dr. Sullivan, to today award Healthy Start Program grants to 15 cities who have shown urgent need / an excellent plan for addressing that need / and community-wide efforts committed to achieving results. //

I asked Congress for $138 million this year to help curb infant mortality -- but was given only $25 million. We will use it as best we can -- $1.7 million will go to each of the 15 cities. / I am pleased that the Healthy Start Program can begin immediately -- but Congress must appropriate more money for this initiative next year. // Together, let us show how America's most precious resource is America's ability to care. //

In that spirit, let me close with a story about one of America's greatest First Ladies. Her name is Pat Nixon, and once she toured a medical center, and stopped to embrace a little girl blinded by rubella. //

For a few minutes, she talked to the girl and held her close. Later, someone came over and told her that the child was deaf, as well as blind. // Pat answered that she had known that. "But she knows what love is," Mrs. Nixon said. "She can feel love." //

At Primary Children's, kids feel love every day of their lives. For that, I thank you. I know you will remain one of the finest pediatric care centers in the world. Congratulations, and best wishes. Now, it is my pleasure to officially open the Northwest wing of the Primary Children's Medical Center.

DAVID SALISBURY INTRODUCTORY REMARKS
September 18, 1991

[4 minutes]

Welcome, everyone, to this special gathering at the new Primary Children's Medical Center. We are deeply honored that President Bush has chosen to include this tour of Primary Children's as part of his visit to the Intermountain area. We are also privileged to have among us the President's Secretary of Health and Human Services, Dr. Louis W. Sullivan. Gentlemen, on behalf of the employees, physicians, trustees, and patients of this hospital and Intermountain Health Care, I thank you for coming.

Mr. President, this hospital is the result of the same American volunteer spirit which you have encouraged in your Daily Point of Light program and other policy statements. From its inception 80 years ago until the present day, Primary Children's has been much beloved and generously supported by the residents of the Intermountain area.

The hospital is the direct result of the strong human impulse to protect and nurture children. One day in 1911, Mrs. Louis B. Felt, general president of the Primary Association of the LDS Church, was walking in downtown Salt Lake City with her first counselor, Miss May Anderson. When these women happened upon a crippled child on the street, they were moved to create a convalescent care facility to serve disabled children.

Originally located in a ward of LDS Hospital, Primary Children's relocated in 1922 to a private home donated and remodeled for this purpose. Over the years, medical services were expanded beyond convalescent care to encompass the full range of pediatric medical science.

Primary Children's may be the only hospital in the world built by children for children. In 1952, a modern hospital was constructed in Salt Lake City's Avenues area, funded largely by donations from area children, who were asked to donate a penny for each year of their age, plus 10 cents for each of the million bricks used in construction. These contributions were matched by the LDS Church which then owned the hospital. The achievements of this "Penny Parade" fund-raiser are recalled in today's "Pennies by the Inch" campaigns, where the same spirit of giving can be seen.

In 1975, the LDS Church donated its 15 hospitals to the communities they served. Intermountain Health Care was created as a charitable, nonprofit, nondenominational organization charged with operating the hospitals in the community interest. As an IHC facility, Primary Children's is governed by volunteers—14 community representatives who accept no pay for the many hours of service they contribute.

In the last decade, as the needs of area children grew beyond the capacity of our facility, the IHC trustees and hospital governing board members planned a new hospital to serve new generations of children. This dream was realized in April 1990, when the new Primary Children's Medical Center opened here on the University of Utah campus.

This new hospital is also a product of the volunteer spirit, for it too was built in part through the generous donations of area children and their parents. And volunteers are essential to the hospital's mission. For example, the physicians who practice here donate their skills and their time to caring for charity patients.

Then too, we have the hundreds of volunteers—women, men, and young people—who contribute tens of thousands of hours annually to caring for patients and helping the staff. Some of these volunteers have logged so many hours of service at Primary's, they have spent the equivalent of several years of their lives in their volunteer uniforms.

Mr. President, we are grateful for the opportunity to show you this region's volunteer spirit in action. The children who are patients here wanted to thank you and Dr. Sullivan for visiting them today. They created these books of drawings for you as an expression of their love and appreciation. [Presentation of books.]

And now I have the honor of introducing to you a man who has given a lifetime of service to health education. Prior to his appointment to the President's cabinet, he served as president of the Morehouse School of Medicine in Atlanta. Please join me in welcoming Dr. Louis W. Sullivan, Secretary of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

PRESIDENTIAL REMARKS: CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1991

Thank you very much. I'm pleased to be with you for the opening of the Northwest wing of this magnificent hospital. / Psalm 127 says that children are a gift from the Lord. The additional beds located here will help that gift enrich us all.

An old adage counsels, "Live and let live." This facility -- under construction for more than three years -- will help give life to kids. // It is a state-of-the-art pediatric care center. It also towers as a monument to America's volunteer spirit. //

For many years, the children of the Intermountain Area supported Primary Children's Hospital with pennies, nickels, and dimes given on their birthday. // This selfless spirit of charity continues today with the giving of your time, and of yourselves. //

I think of and salute hundreds of volunteers who donate more than a quarter million hours a year to children -- and those community representatives serving without pay as members of the hospital Governing Board. //

I think, too, of your staff and physicians -- one of whom, Dr. Floyd Seager, I have honored as a "Daily Point of Light." That same generosity moved thousands of area residents to help build this facility. // All helped Intermountain Health Care win the health care industry's highest honor for quality -- the Healthcare Forum/Witt Award. //

On my tour of the hospital, we visited the nursery. I saw sick kids who have won their first battle -- the battle for life -- and who are now fighting a second battle for recovery. // They are kids who depend on your trust and affection -- who understand how you reflect the Bible verse, "We were gentle among you, like a nurse taking care of her children."

These children show how America's most precious resource is America's ability to care. In that spirit, let me close with a story about one of America's greatest First Ladies. Her name is Pat Nixon, and once she toured a medical center, and stopped to embrace a little girl blinded by rubella. //

For a few minutes, she talked to the girl and held her close. Later, someone came over and told her that the child was deaf, as well as blind. // Pat answered that she had known that. "But she knows what love is," Mrs. Nixon said. "She can feel love." //

At Primary Children's, kids feel love every day of their lives. For that, I thank you. I know you will remain one of the finest pediatric care centers in the world. Congratulations, and best wishes. Now, it is my pleasure to officially open the Northwest wing of the Primary Children's Medical Center.

PRESIDENT'S REMARKS
CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH

Thank you very much. I'm pleased to be with you for the opening of the Northwest wing of this magnificent hospital.

I think it is very fitting to announce the launching of our Healthy Start Program in this hospital and in this area where hundreds of volunteers have donated more than a quarter million hours a year to infants and children. It is a pleasure for me to have Dr. Louis W. Sullivan, Secretary of Health and Human Services join me for this significant event.

Like some of you, I have had the awesome experience of feeling the tiny infant hands of my own children and grandchildren. Those little hands reaching out to grasp my clumsy fingers -- well, there is just no way to describe the love that wells up in my heart. President Teddy Roosevelt, a rugged outdoorsman, is said to have described a new-born baby's tiny hand as the most beautiful thing in the world. In contrast, one of the most difficult and painful of human experiences is the death of an infant -- that wrenches the heart of the toughest among us.

In that spirit, we have all been saddened beyond endurance that the United States ranks 24th in the world for infant mortality rates. As a nation, we must reverse the factors that are causing infant mortality. That is why I have personally made the Healthy Start Program a Presidential Initiative and a top national priority.

Today, we are awarding grants to 15 cities who have shown urgent need, an excellent plan for addressing that need, and community-wide partnerships committed to achieving results. While I asked Congress for $138 million this year, we were given only $25 million. We will stretch that amount as much as we can -- $1.7 million will go to each of the 15 cities.

I am pleased that the Healthy Start Program can begin immediately, but Congress must appropriate more money for this initiative next year. We have done the groundwork that will reverse this national disgrace, but Congress will have to join the effort! It will take the whole-hearted participation of all of us to see the results that we want to see.

We are already devoting enormous resources to maternal and infant health. HHS alone is spending $5 billion this year with an overall federal expenditure of $7 billion.

But, we are not getting the results we want. Over the next five years, our goal is to reduce infant mortality in the 15 targeted areas by 50 percent.

The lessons we learn in the 15 cities will enable us to apply our new knowledge nationwide. I anticipate having our country move up to the top of the list of countries where babies are guaranteed a Healthy Start.

That process will begin in the 15 areas that have been selected for the Healthy Start grants. Within these targeted areas, we will try new approaches to enable women to connect with services and we will encourage total community involvement in order to reduce infant mortality and give our babies a healthy start.

The Healthy Start Initiative is two-pronged. We will concentrate on ACCESS and AWARENESS.

In terms of access, we must learn ways to break down the barriers. I want to ensure that all pregnant women and their babies are wrapped in a blanket of care. That means reaching out to those who are difficult to serve and putting services where they are needed.

In terms of awareness, we must also encourage, teach and support healthy behaviors. Each of the 15 communities will develop creative, innovative ways to make expectant mothers aware of factors which affect infant mortality -- smoking, alcohol, illicit drug use, teenage pregnancy, inadequate prenatal care, and poor nutrition.

Healthy Start will bring together all the services that are vital to the health and well-being of our expectant mothers and babies. The Initiative requires the funded areas to creatively link families, health care and social service providers, the private sector, and volunteers in outreach to those who need to be enticed to services.

Healthy Start also stresses the importance of personal responsibility by encouraging and supporting the formation of families to nurture expectant mothers and their babies. As Dr. Sullivan has said, "We cannot rely only on high-cost, high-tech solutions. We must work more extensively to involve the entire community in ensuring delivery of healthy babies and in nurturing them to a healthy start!"

It is my pleasure to announce the targeted areas today. The locations that will be served under these new grants are:

The people of the Healthy Start targeted areas have joined together for a cause that is higher than themselves. -- Similarly, for eighty years the citizens of the Intermountain area have supported Primary Children's -- giving of your time, and of yourselves. Psalms 127 says that children are a gift from the Lord. When we have helped one of the least of God's children, we have, indeed, served God.

Members of your hospital Governing Board are community representatives serving without pay. The staff and physicians of this hospital have helped Intermountain Health Care win the industry's highest honor -- the Healthcare Forum Witt Award for quality of health care.

One of your doctors, Dr. Floyd Seager, has been honored as a Presidential "Point of Light." This state-of-the-art pediatric care center honors all the men and women serving here today and it stands as a monument to America's volunteer spirit.

Let me close with a story about one of America's greatest First Ladies. Her name was Pat Nixon. While touring a medical center, she stopped to embrace a little girl blinded by rubella. She held the child close, talked to her softly, then moved on. An aide later told her that the child was deaf as well as blind. Pat replied that she had known that. "But she knows what love is," Mrs. Nixon said. "She can feel love."

At Primary Children's, through the efforts of this wonderful staff and volunteers, infants and children feel love every day of their lives. For that, we all thank you and are indebted to you. This center will remain one of the finest pediatric care centers in the world because of your service.

Now, it is my pleasure to officially open the Northwest wing of the Primary Children's Medical Center.

MEMORANDUM

TO: Elizabeth Luttig
Office of Cabinet Affairs

FROM: Robin H. Carle RHC
Executive Secretary to the Department

SUBJECT: Presidential Remarks: Children's Hospital, Salt Lake City, Utah, September 18, 1991.

The President's stop at Children's Hospital on September 18th appears quite short and the schedule may not provide for a more substantive message. However, I feel that this stop could afford an excellent opportunity for the President to announce the sites selected for the Healthy Start Initiative demonstration projects. The selected communities will be challenged to reduce their infant mortality rate by 50 percent over the next five years.

This is a much anticipated announcement and will receive significant attention from communities and elected officials across the country. There are some major benefits to having the announcement made by the President.

- o Showcase Initiative. Since the Administration is being held accountable for the high infant mortality rate, the announcement of the sites selected for the Healthy Start Initiative would showcase a major example of what the President is doing to directly impact the lives of our most vulnerable children -- newborn infants.
- o Emphasize Need for Additional Support. The Administration asked for more dollars for this effort than Congress appropriated. Attention to the Healthy Start "pilot project" could emphasize the need for additional support for the infant mortality problem.
- o Highlight Corporate Partnership Opportunities. The Healthy Start program will be featured in a national public relations effort that will be co-sponsored by the Johnson and Johnson Company. This type of corporate partnership is necessary for addressing the social and health problems facing the Nation.

- o Stress the Necessity for Cooperative, Comprehensive, One-Stop Efforts in Addressing Domestic Concerns. The Healthy Start sites will combine three key elements of service: the availability of medical treatment, the key social services, and the motivation of the pregnant women to participate.
- o Opportunity for Showing Substantive Progress on a Domestic Issue. Given the attention that would be generated by the announcement of the Healthy Start sites, the President could give a more substantive message about the progress being made in reducing the levels of infant mortality.

If there is interest in further discussion about this announcement being incorporated into the President's stop at Children's Hospital, please feel free to contact our Assistant Secretary for Public Affairs, Alixe Glen at 245-1850 for a more extensive discussion.

If the President decides to go with the attached original remarks, there is a unique example of children supporting a local hospital which would provide an exceptionally gripping story. By way of background, for many years, the young children of the Mormon Church, on their birthday, donated a penny, nickel or dime for each year of age. This money was used to help support Primary Children's Hospital. Consequently, I suggest that the following addition be substituted for the first sentence of paragraph three:

"For many years, the children of the Intermountain Area supported Primary Children's Hospital with their pennies, nickels and dimes given each year on their birthday. This selfless spirit of giving continues today with the giving of your time, and of yourselves."

Thank you for consideration of my requests.

For a few minutes, she talked to the girl and held her close. Later, someone came over and told her that the child was deaf as well as blind. / Pat answered that she had known that. / "But she knows what love is," Mrs. Nixon said. "She can feel love." /

At Primary Children's, kids feel love every day of their lives. For that, I thank you. I know you will remain one of the finest pediatric care centers in the world. Congratulations, and best wishes. Now, it is my pleasure to officially open the Northwest wing of the Primary Children's Medical Center.

PRESIDENTIAL REMARKS: CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1991

Thank you very much. I'm pleased to be with you for the opening of the Northwest wing of this magnificent hospital. / Psalms 127 says that children are a gift from the Lord. The additional beds located here will help that gift enrich us all.

An old adage counsels, "Live and let live." This facility -- under construction for more than three years -- ~~will help live and help live.~~ / It is a state-of-the-art pediatric care center. It also towers as a monument to America's volunteer spirit. //

For eighty years, the citizens of the Intermountain area have supported Primary Children's -- giving of your time, and of yourselves. // I think of hundreds of volunteers who donate more than a quarter million hours a year to kids -- and those community representatives serving without pay as members of the hospital Governing Board. /

I think, too, of your staff and physicians -- one of whom, Dr. Floyd Seager, has been honored as a Presidential "Point of Light." / That same generosity moved thousands of area residents to financially help build this facility. // All helped Intermountain Health Care win the health care industry's highest honor for quality -- the Healthcare Forum/Witt Award. //

On my tour of the hospital, we visited the nursery. I saw sick children -- kids who have won their first battle -- the battle for life -- and are now fighting a second battle for recovery. // They are kids who depend on your trust and affection -- who understand the Bible verse, "We were gentle among you, like a nurse taking care of her children."

These children show how America's most precious resource is America's ability to care. In that spirit, let me close with a story about one of America's greatest First Ladies. Her name was Pat Nixon, and once she toured a medical center and stopped to embrace a little girl blinded by rubella. /

For a few minutes, she talked to the girl and held her close. Later, someone came over and told her that the child was deaf as well as blind. / Pat answered that she had known that. / "But she knows what love is," Mrs. Nixon said. "She can feel love." /
