MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRESIDENT

THROUGH: DAVID DEMAREST for file

FROM: BETH HINCHLIFFE

On Friday, May 29, 1992, you will address children, parents, community leaders and deputies who participate in the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Youth Athletic League.

Your remarks (5 minutes, cards) salute the principles and successes of this program, and talk about how its values help the children who are this nation's future.

PRESIDENTIAL REMARKS: L.A. COUNTY SHERIFF'S DEPARTMENT
LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA
FRIDAY MAY 29, 1992

In this room I see all the elements we need to be hopeful about America. I see kids -- good kids, who've made the tough choice to stay away from drugs and crime. I see parents -- involved parents, who are dedicated to making sure their children grow up whole. I see law enforcement officers -- caring law officers who give the youth of this community positive alternatives to the bleak dead end world of gangs. Together, you are crafting something even more important than today's success -- a future.

I've heard about your programs like the Youth Athletic League, started two decades ago. In those 20 years, thousands of kids have come of age on the streets of L.A. True, some have gotten lost. But think of how many have thrived under this protective umbrella: how many have reached down within themselves and found the strength and pride to forge a good, solid life.

A lot of those kids might not have made it without you -- without the safe environment of your six park youth centers in hard-core gang areas across this county. Here, men and women who care help channel kids' boredom and anger: they coach sports and stand up to gangs and supervise study and fight drugs and build self-esteem for nearly 20,000 disadvantaged kids every year.

Kids like a boy named Darren. Gangs were pressuring him to join, but he had the courage to cross through gang territory to get to Washington Park Youth Center. For six years the deputies were his coaches and mentors, guiding him in football and in homework so he could go to college. Well, today Darren Hagen, former quarterback for Colorado, has been drafted by the 49ers.

One day across a football field he'll see an L.A. Raiderette named Adrienne Harris. Once, she was a scared 8-year-old trying to find her way. Now, after 14 years in Youth Athletic League, she cheers for the Raiders and returns here to help train others.

Americans worry about kids who are running out of hope, kids who live in a world where the edges of life seem too sharp and the nights too dark. The federal government worries, but there's only so much it can do. The solution must come through caring that takes root in the homes and the communities of this land.

I know how difficult these past few weeks have been. I've seen the devastation on the streets and on the faces of this city. Saddest of all is to see it on the faces of the kids. We wanted to protect them -- we didn't want them to have to know that there's any such thing as grieving. But now the healing has begun. These kids can take away from this tragedy the horror and the hate -- or they can come away knowing right and wrong.

That's the lesson you've always shown. Because of you, for these kids policemen are not the anonymous faces of authority -- they're weary basketball coaches and good-natured football coaches and concerned teachers and even Santa Claus at Christmas parties. You've forged a magnificent partnership -- joining the hands of the community and the police in a firm clasp of trust.

I salute you for the work you do every day: throwing a lifeline to kids who might have been swallowed up in despair. Through the Youth Athletic League, Operation Courage, SANE, SMART and other ways, you help them grow up to be drug-free, productive, responsible adults ready to take their place in America's future.

Deputy Al Reed has worked with these kids for years, and I want to leave you with his words. He says: "it's about discipline, relationships, even love -- but mostly, it's about hope." Thanks for showing us that hope does live, that hope does grow, and that our kids are our greatest hope of all. God bless you.

~~I know what a nightmare~~ ^{VERY CHALLENGING} these past few weeks have been! I've seen the devastation on the streets and on the faces of this city. Saddest of all is to see it on the faces of the kids. We wanted to protect them -- we didn't want them to have to know that there's any such thing as grieving.

But now the healing has begun. These kids can take away from this tragedy the horror and the hate -- or they can come away knowing right and wrong. And that's the lesson you've always shown through your actions. When it's too easy for people to form their image of life through the distortion of harsh t.v. images -- your programs show the reality. Because of you, for these kids policemen are not the anonymous faces of authority -- but weary basketball coaches and good-natured football coaches and concerned teachers and even Santa Claus at Christmas parties. You've forged a magnificent partnership here -- joining the hands of the community and the police in a firm clasp of trust.

I want to salute you for the work you do every day in throwing a lifeline to kids who might have been swallowed up in despair. Through the Youth Athletic League and SANE and SMART and Operation Courage and so many other ways, you help them grow up drug-free to be responsible, productive, educated adults ready to take their place in America's future.

Deputy Al Reed has been working with these kids for years, and I want to leave you with his words. He says: "it's about discipline, relationships, even love -- but mostly, it's about hope." Thank you for showing us that hope does live, that hope does grow -- and that our kids are our greatest hope of all. May God bless you, and them.

PRESIDENTIAL REMARKS: L.A. COUNTY SHERIFF'S DEPARTMENT
LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA
FRIDAY MAY 29, 1992

I'm proud to be here -- because I look around and in this room I see all the elements we need to be hopeful about America. I see kids ~~— good kids,~~ who've made the tough choice to stay away from drugs and crime. I see parents ~~— involved parents,~~ who are dedicated to making sure their children grow up whole. I see community leaders ~~— committed leaders~~ who know this city's future rests with its youth. And I see law enforcement officers ~~— caring law officers,~~ who give the youth of this community positive alternatives to the bleak, dead end world of gangs. Together, you are crafting something even more important than today's success -- you are crafting a future.

I've heard about your programs like the Youth Athletic League, ^{which} started two decades ago. In those 20 years, thousands of kids have come of age on the streets of L.A. ~~True,~~ ^{some} have gotten lost. But think of how many have thrived under this protective umbrella: how many have reached down within themselves and found the strength and pride to forge a good, solid life.

A lot of those kids might not have made it without you. ~~without the safe environment of your six park youth centers in hard-core gang areas across this county.~~ ^{In your six park youth centers,} Here, men and women who care help channel kids' boredom and anger: they coach sports and stand up to gangs, ~~and~~ supervise study, ~~and~~ fight drugs, ~~and~~ build self-esteem for nearly 20,000 disadvantaged kids every year.

These are kids like a boy named Darren. Gangs were pressuring him to join ~~up~~, but he had the courage to cross through rival gangs' territory to get to Washington Park Youth Center. For the next six years the deputies there were his coaches and mentors, guiding him in football and tutoring him in homework so he could go to college. Well, today Darren Hagen, former quarterback for ^{Univ. of?} Colorado, has been drafted by the 49ers.

One day across a football field he'll see a L.A. Raiderette cheerleader named Adrienne Harris. Once, Adrienne was a scared 8-year-old trying to find her way. Now, after 14 years in the program, she leads cheers for the Raiders and comes back to the Sheriff's Youth Athletic League to help train others.

Americans worry about kids who are running out of hope, kids who live in a world where the edges of life seem too sharp and the nights too dark. The federal government worries, but there's only so much it can do. The solution must come through caring that takes root in the homes and the communities of this ^{great} land.

I know what a nightmare these past few weeks have been. I've seen the devastation on the streets and on the faces of this city. Saddest of all is to see it on the faces of the kids. We wanted to protect them -- we didn't want them to have to know that there's any such thing as grieving.

For the next six years the deputies there were his coaches and mentors, guiding him in football and tutoring him in homework so he could go to college. Well, today Darren Hagen, former quarterback for Colorado, has been drafted by the 49ers.

One day across a football field he'll see a L.A. Raiderette cheerleader named Adrienne Harris. Once, Adrienne was a scared 8-year-old trying to find her way. Now, after 14 years in the program, she leads cheers for the Raiders and comes back to the Sheriff's Youth Athletic League to help train others.

Americans worry about kids who are running out of hope, kids who live in a world where the edges of life seem too sharp and the nights too dark. The federal government worries, but there's only so much it can do. The solution must come through caring that takes root in the homes and the communities of this land.

~~I know what a nightmare~~ these past few weeks have been. ^{VERY CHALLENGING}

I've seen the devastation on the streets and on the faces of this city. Saddest of all is to see it on the faces of the kids. We wanted to protect them -- we didn't want them to have to know that there's any such thing as grieving. ^{AND THOUGHTS}

But now the healing has begun. These kids can take away from this tragedy the horror and the hate -- or they can come away knowing right and wrong. And that's the lesson you've always shown through your actions. When it's too easy for people to form their image of life through the distortion of harsh t.v. images -- your programs show the reality. Because of you, for these kids policemen are not the anonymous faces of authority -- but weary basketball coaches and good-natured football coaches and concerned teachers and even Santa Claus at Christmas parties. You've forged a magnificent partnership here -- joining the hands of the community and the police in a firm clasp of trust.

I want to salute you for the work you do every day in throwing a lifeline to kids who might have been swallowed up in despair. Through the Youth Athletic League and SANE and SMART and Operation Courage and so many other ways, you help them grow up drug-free to be responsible, productive, educated adults ready to take their place in America's future.

Deputy Al Reed has been working with these kids for years, and I want to leave you with his words. He says: "it's about discipline, relationships, even love -- but mostly, it's about hope." Thank you for showing us that hope does live, that hope does grow -- and that our kids are our greatest hope of all. May God bless you, and them.

PRESIDENTIAL REMARKS: L.A. COUNTY SHERIFF'S DEPARTMENT
LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA
FRIDAY MAY 29, 1992

I'm proud to be here -- because I look around and in this room I see all the elements we need to be hopeful about America. I see kids -- good kids, who've made the tough choice to stay away from drugs and crime. I see parents -- involved parents, who are dedicated to making sure their children grow up whole. I see community leaders -- committed leaders who know this city's future rests with its youth. And I see law enforcement officers -- caring law officers, who give the youth of this community positive alternatives to the bleak dead end world of gangs. Together, you are crafting something even more important than today's success -- you are crafting a future.

I've heard about your programs like the Youth Athletic League, started two decades ago. In those 20 years, thousands of kids have come of age on the streets of L.A. True, some have gotten lost. But think of how many have thrived under this protective umbrella: how many have reached down within themselves and found the strength and pride to forge a good, solid life.

A lot of those kids might not have made it without you -- without the safe environment of your six park youth centers in hard-core gang areas across this county. Here, men and women who care help channel kids' boredom and anger: they coach sports and stand up to gangs and supervise study and fight drugs and build self-esteem for nearly 20,000 disadvantaged kids every year.

These are kids like a boy named Darren. Gangs were pressuring him to join up, but he had the courage to cross through rival gangs' territory to get to Washington Park Youth Center. For the next six years the deputies there were his coaches and mentors, guiding him in football and tutoring him in homework so he could go to college. Well, today Darren Hagen, former quarterback for Colorado, has been drafted by the 49ers.

TO: CHRISTINA MARTIN
FROM: BETH HINCHLIFFE
SUBJECT: SHERIFF'S SPEECH

Hi. A name change in the Sheriff's League speech -- first paragraph top of page 2 -- please change "Washington Park Youth Center" to "Athens Park deputies' program." Thanks.
