Jews Create Organization Within Democratic Party

Anti-Israel Moves Helped Prompt Action

By E. J. Dionne Jr.
Washington Post Staff Writer

Alarmed at a spate of anti-Israel resolutions that were offered at state Democratic Party conventions during the 1988 presidential campaign, a group of Jewish Democrats has formed an organization aimed at battling in the party for Jewish causes, and at convincing American Jews that their overwhelming Democratic loyalty remains a good idea.

Democratic Party leaders did their part yesterday to help the National Jewish Democratic Council along. In the process, they demonstrated the continuing power of Israel's cause in American politics. Senate Majority Leader George J. Mitchell (D-Maine), House Speaker Thomas S. Foley (D-Wash.) and Democratic National Committee Chairman Ronald H. Brown spoke warmly of Israel.

Mitchell urged wariness of Syria's leader Hafez Assad. "His record is no better than Saddam Hussein's record and words alone do not produce a change in policy, actions do," Mitchell said.

For his part, Brown declared: "Israel has been our strongest ally in that region along with Egypt, and that ought to mean something. Democrats ought to make it clear that we shouldn't be threatening our allies. . . . We shouldn't threaten them or bludgeon them."

The group heard the same message on Monday night from Sen. John D. "Jay" Rockefeller IV (D-W. Va.), who is contemplating a campaign against President Bush next year. "America," Rockefeller said, "can never impose a settlement on the state of Israel."

Despite vigorous Republican efforts to woo Jewish voters over the last two decades, Jews regularly cast more than 70 percent of their ballots for Democratic presidential candidates and usually match that proportion or best it in other contests.

Only in 1980, when President Jimmy Carter was defeated by Ronald Reagan and when John B. Anderson's independent candidacy attracted roughly 15 percent of the Jewish vote, did the Democratic share among Jews fall to around 50 percent.

But tensions between Jews and the party rose during the 1988 campaign because of the strong showing of Jesse L. Jackson in many Democratic primaries. Arab Americans and other critics of Israel played a significant role in Jackson's campaign and won delegate slots at state conventions and the Democratic National Convention.

Stuart Eizenstat, vice chair of the council, noted that Israel's critics secured passage at seven state conventions of resolutions sympathetic to Palestinian rights and, in some of these cases, critical of Israel.

Steve Gutow, executive director of the council, said that his experience at the Texas Democratic State Convention in 1988 proved to be the shock that spurred him to action.

"I walked into the convention and there were 20 Jewish Democrats, 70 Arab Americans and hundreds and hundreds of people wearing anti-Israel buttons," said Gutow, who was a leader of the Texas campaign of candidate Michael S. Dukakis. "I felt like a stranger in a strange land."

Gutow said that while Jews have played a central role in Democratic campaigns and in fund-raising drives, they have been less active at the grass roots and thus less influential in the party apparatus. "We want to get Jews to address envelopes and walk precincts," he said. "It's not just writing checks."

Rep. Nita M. Lowey (D-N.Y.) said the Palestinian issue proved to be a "kind of a defining issue for many Democrats out there." Donna Bojarsky, a political consultant from California, added: "Republican operatives certainly used it."

Thus, the other purpose of the group: To make sure that American Jews keep voting Democratic. "The Democratic Party should not take Jewish support for granted," said Hyman Bookbinder, a member of the council's executive committee. "And Jews should not take the Democratic Party for granted."

Lowey said that one of the concerns of the Jewish Democratic leaders is that younger Jews, like other younger Americans, are less attracted than their elders to both Democrats and liberalism.

Mary Louise Smith has kindly forwarded to me a note from your Mom, asking that I sign the enclosed magazine cover. Although I appreciate the spirit of friendship in which the request was made, long-standing policy prevents me from signing such an item. I know that you will understand, and I hope that you will enjoy the attached White House photograph instead.

It was a treat to go running with you and your fellow students back in 1987. In some ways, it's hard to believe that so much time has passed since then. Your Mom tells me that you will be graduating from Iowa State this year -- congratulations!

Barbara joins me in sending best wishes to you for the future.

Dear Mr. President:

It is with a deep sense of privilege that I recommend to you for reappointment my close friend and associate, Mr. Sigmund Strochlitz. A survivor of the Holocaust, he has served with unparalleled devotion and distinction on the Holocaust Memorial Council since its inception. Many of the Council's achievements are to be credited to his organizational talents. He is the one who almost singlehandedly turned the annual Remembrance Day ceremonies into meaningful events both in Washington and in the fifty States of the Union.

He was at my side--with counsel and support--wherever I went and whatever I did for the sake of remembrance.

Even before the President and Congress decided to create Holocaust-related programs, Sigmund established Institutes and Chairs in various institutions for higher education to help people remember the greatest tragedy in recorded history.

Survivors, Mr. President, have done more than anyone to keep the memory of the Holocaust alive. But even among the survivors, Sigmund stands out as an exception. And an example.

That is why, Mr. President, I urge you to reappoint him to the Holocaust Memorial Council which still needs his help and inspiration.

With every good wish, I remain, as ever,

Elie Wiesel

BEWARE!

Fast Track Could Be Hazardous To Your Health

What would fast track trade negotiations between the U.S. and Mexico really produce?

From the standpoint of food safety and water quality, it would make an already deplorable situation worse.

What we drink.

Mexican border towns like Matamoros and Juarez have virtually no sewage facilities for their populations that swell as the maquiladora plants expand. With no treatment facilities, health problems abound on both sides of the border.

In San Elizario, Texas, for example, 90 percent of the people have Hepatitis A by the time they reach age 30. Nogales, Arizona, has a Hepatitis A rate 20 times the U.S. national average.

What we eat.

With no treatment facilities, produce destined for export may be irrigated with polluted water, including raw sewage. Irapuato, a town in Guanajuato, is an example.

There's a lot at stake here. But a lot of important considerations are getting pushed aside in the fast track rhetoric. In terms of safe food and drinking water, there is already a problem of crisis proportions along both sides of the border. Fast track is not a framework for solving these problems.

This issue—and its long-term political and economic ramifications—deserves a lot more than a simple up or down vote by Congress.

Congress should reject fast track ... it's a shortcut to disaster.

Memorandum For: Bobbie Kilberg
Deputy Assistant to the President and Director of Intergovernmental Affairs

From: Virginia Lamp Thomas
Deputy Assistant Secretary for Congressional and Intergovernmental Affairs

Subject: Weekly Report: April 6 - April 10, 1992

I. Current Secretarial Activities

SCANS ANNOUNCEMENT

On April 7, Secretary Martin and the Secretary's Commission on Achieving Necessary Skills (SCANS) issued the final report, "Learning a Living: A Blueprint for High Performance." The report calls for the reorganization of education and work to close the skills gap and prepare the workforce for the future. SCANS represents a two-year effort by a 31-member commission including representatives of education, business, labor and state government. The Commission is chaired by former Secretary of Labor William E. Brock. At the same time, Secretary Martin released a video called "Second to None" and a "SCANS Report Card," describing nearly 40 of the many SCANS-related programs underway throughout the country.

AMERICAN BUSINESS CONFERENCE ROUNDTABLE

Secretary Martin spoke at a luncheon roundtable session of the American Business Conference on the Labor Department's school-to-work programs, job training and retraining programs and the Glass Ceiling Initiative.

MEETING WITH THE U.K. AMBASSADOR

Secretary Martin met with Sir Robin Renwick, Ambassador to the United States from the United Kingdom. The Secretary and the Ambassador discussed assistance to Central and Eastern Europe; the social dimensions of the European Community 1992, which is a series of proposals to harmonize labor market, health and safety, social security and industrial relations in the European Community; and the close working relationship of the United States and Britain on International Labor Organization (ILO) matters.

TEXAS "PATRIOTS" ROUNDTABLE

Secretary Martin met with 25 members of the Texas Patriots Club, a group of active Texas Republicans, who also met with the President and Cabinet officers.

WORK-BASED LEARNING COMMISSION

On April 7, the National Advisory Commission on Work-Based Learning met in Washington, D.C. Chaired by Jack MacAllister, Chairman of US WEST, Inc., the Commission is composed of representatives of business, education, labor and community-based organizations. The Commission was established to provide advice on a continuing basis to the Secretary of Labor on ways to increase the skill levels of the American workforce and expand access to training in order to improve American competitiveness. Deputy Secretary of Labor Delbert Spurlock and Assistant Secretary for Employment and Training Roberts Jones addressed the panel.

NEW DEPUTY SOLICITOR OF LABOR

Labor Secretary Martin announced the appointment of Burton J. Fishman as Deputy Solicitor of Labor for National Operations. A specialist in employment-related issues, Fishman will report directly to Marshall Breger, Solicitor of Labor.

CHICAGO TRIP

On April 9, Secretary Martin traveled to Chicago where she spoke to fifty Lincoln Park High School students who are members of Junior Achievement. Secretary Martin attended a Chicago Museum of Science and Industry "farewell reception" for the statues commissioned for the 1933-34 Century of Progress International Exposition. The large wooden figures of automobile workers will be shipped to Washington, D.C., to be displayed at the Labor Department. Secretary Martin also spoke to BMW Chairman Eberhard Von Kuenheim and BMW North American President Karl Gerlinger about the possibility of another BMW assembly plant in the U.S.

THE EMPLOYMENT SITUATION

The number of seasonally adjusted initial claims for state unemployment insurance (UI) benefits totaled 432,000 for the week ending March 28, a decrease of 24,000 from the previous week. The revised figure for the previous week remained unchanged at 456,000.

On April 8, Secretary Martin, at the direction of the President, sent letters to the leaders of Congress asking them to work with her in a fiscally responsible fashion to develop and pass legislation extending the emergency unemployment compensation program through the end of 1992.

II. Future Secretarial Activities

During the week of April 13, Secretary Martin will visit Kentucky for a SCANS announcement; Philadelphia for a regional office visit; and New York, where she will address the Society of Human Resource Managers, receive the "Mother of the Year" award and speak to the Financial Executive Institute.

III. Intergovernmental Affairs Activities

Grants

Secretary Martin announced $18.2 million in grants to 12 states this week to assist in automating unemployment insurance systems and procedures. States were selected on the basis of criteria such as the amount of administrative savings, the degree of provision for state payback of funds, capacity for improving system performance, technical merit and strategic design.

Grant winners were selected from 33 states submitting 69 proposals at the invitation of the Department of Labor. OCIA staff notified the Governors of the awards.

The 12 grant awards are:

State	Grant	Governor Notified
Alaska	$1,117,374	Governor Hickel

OCIA mailed information packets on SCANS to Cabinet Members, Administration officials, intergovernmental liaisons, Governors, Members of Congress, Labor Commissioners and public interest groups.

LT. GOVERNORS MEETING

Dear Bobbie:

I hope that all is well with you these days.

I am writing to see if you can arrange a time slot next Monday or Tuesday in which I can give a close personal friend from Italy the West Wing Tour. It would mean a lot to me if you could assist me in this way.

I would also like to have lunch with you sometime soon to talk about the 1992 campaign.

I look forward to hearing from you this week.

Sincerely,

Sam

Bobbie Kilberg, Esq.
Deputy Assistant to the President
for Public Liason
The White House
Washington, D.C. 20500

Dear Bobbie:

As indicated in the enclosed letter from Pat O'Donnell, the American Federation of Television and Radio Artists (the union which represents newscasters, actors, actresses, etc.) is meeting in Washington, D.C., for the first time in many years, and would like the President to address its members on either July 25, 26, or 27, 1991.

Although I am obviously aware that the President is literally the most sought-after speaker in the world and I do not know your criteria for an appropriate speaking occasion, I recommend that you seriously consider AFTRA's request.

By addressing AFTRA, an influential member of the AFL-CIO, the President would meaningfully demonstrate his awareness of organized labor. Additionally, it would be an opportunity for the President to speak directly to those members of the electronic media who broadcast their news reports in cities and towns throughout America every day, but have never seen a President in person.

AFTRA asked for my help because of its awareness of my participation in the Campaign and my continued support for the Administration. Moreover, after 15 years of negotiating and arbitrating against AFTRA throughout the Country, I probably know this Union better than any other management lawyer.

AFTRA is a politically-moderate, non-controversial union, with a predominantly highly-paid, highly-educated, and sophisticated

Dear Bruce:

The American Federation of Television and Radio Artists is holding its 1991 convention in Washington, DC, beginning July 25 and ending July 27. Knowing that you were active in President Bush's election campaign and have an intimate knowledge of our union, I am writing in the hope that you might be able to be instrumental in having the President speak to the delegates of our convention. As you know, AFTRA is a 70,000 member Union made up of freelance actors and actresses as well as employees of radio and television broadcasting stations and networks.

I believe the President would be well received by the AFTRA delegates and that speaking at our convention would offer him an opportunity to not only show his respect for organized labor but address other issues of importance to the nation.

Whatever you can do will be deeply appreciated.

Sincerely,

Patricia M. O'Donnell

membership that has included President Reagan. I am unaware of any disputes it has with the Chamber of Commerce, National Association of Manufacturers, the National Association of Broadcasters or any other management associations. Although it is always a newsworthy event when a Republican president addresses a labor union -- and the predilection of the press to cover itself guarantees substantial exposure in the media -- I cannot foresee any awkwardness or negative reactions to an appearance by the President.

Obviously, the President can speak on any subject which he finds appropriate; but this Union is more interested in topics relating to the War in the Gulf, freedom of speech, and other news and media-related issues than it is to traditional labor issues. In fact, notwithstanding the topic of the President's speech, questions from the audience -- if the President elects to take questions -- are certain to focus on news events rather than labor issues.

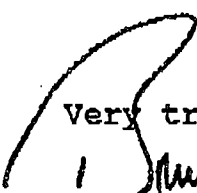

In the event that the President is not available, it is my understanding that AFTRA would also be delighted if Mrs. Bush could address the group. A warm welcome for the First Lady could almost be assured.

If either the President or Mrs. Bush are available, I would be pleased to meet with the speechwriters to describe the issues that are of particular importance to this Union.

Please do not hesitate to let me know if I can further or better explain anything you need to know about the AFTRA invitation.

Best.

Very truly yours,

Bruce D. Goodman

Ms. Bobbie Kilberg
Deputy Assistant to the President
Office of Public Liaison, Room 128
Old Executive Office Building
White House
Washington, DC 20500

Dear Bobbie:

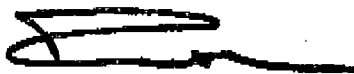

I'm writing to ask for your help with an important new CAWP venture -- National Education for Women's Leadership (NEW Leadership). The program, a summer institute for college women and their advisors from across the country, will be inaugurated this summer here on the Douglass College campus. We're planning to bring the group to Washington for the day on Wednesday, June 19, and we'd love to be able to bring them to the White House to visit with you briefly (and anyone else you would like to bring in) and learn a bit about the life of a woman serving as a high-level presidential aide. We know that the students will be thrilled to spend time in the White House with an insider.

As you'll see from the enclosed brochure, NEW Leadership is a major leadership program funded by the Kellogg Foundation to provide a select group of college women with an intensive introduction to leadership skills and concepts framed in a context of women's political history. Pairs of students, along with a faculty or staff advisor, from each of twelve selected colleges or universities will come to the Douglass campus to learn from a faculty made up of experienced political women, up-and-coming leaders, and scholars. After the summer institute, the students will return to their home campuses to plan projects which will test and hone their leadership skills. The following summer, the students will return to Douglass for a few days to report back on their projects and serve as mentors for the next class of trainees. The students' program will last ten days, while the advisors will be required to attend only for five days but may come for as much of the program as they like.

While we have set the date for our Washington visit, we haven't yet filled in the schedule for the day, so we have some flexibility if there's a time between 10:00 and 4:30 that's most convenient for you. If you could talk with the group for a short time, respond to questions, and perhaps give them a quick look around, that would be ideal; we certainly don't want to take more than an hour of your time.

I will call you shortly to answer any questions you may have and find out whether we can work something out. The person on our staff who's coordinating the program, Kathy Kleeman, would also be glad to talk with you or a member of your staff about our plans. Thanks for your consideration -- we very much hope you will say yes!

Sincerely,

THE NEED

The well-being of our communities, our states and our nation depends in large measure on the quality of our leaders. In government and politics, those leaders have included few women. At no level of government do women hold more than 18% of available positions, and at the highest level, the U.S. Congress, only 6% of the Senators and Representatives are women. In high-level federal and state appointive offices, the picture looks much the same. The leadership of trade unions, political parties, and public interest groups - except for those serving mostly women - continues to be dominated by men.

Public leadership should be an attractive and feasible choice for bright, talented young women. The Center for the American Woman and Politics (CAWP), a unit of the Eagleton Institute of Politics at Rutgers, The State University of New Jersey, wants to further that goal as a matter of justice and equity. Bringing women's distinctive experiences, viewpoints and consciousness into the process of policymaking is equally essential.

THE PROGRAM -- NEW LEADERSHIP

Educating young women about how to make a difference in public life - whether that means heading up a local organization, running for the state legislature, becoming a judge, or winning the White House - is the goal of NEW Leadership (National Education for Women's Leadership). This new program will be a collaboration between CAWP and the Public Leadership Education Network (PLEN), a consortium of women's colleges working together to prepare women for public leadership. The program is supported by a major four-year grant from the W.K. Kellogg Foundation.

NEW Leadership features ten-day summer institutes to teach college women leadership theory and skills as well as women's political history. The faculty for the program includes well-known and up-and-coming political women, as well as scholars and leadership experts. During the next academic year, students from the summer program create individual campus or community projects at their home institutions to implement what they have learned. They will return to Rutgers the following summer to report back, receive further training, and serve as mentors for new students in the program.

The program will cover such topics as:

- case studies in political action
- skills and strategies leaders use
- balancing public and private lives
- global issues and women's leadership
- definitions of "leadership"

The group will visit New York City and Washington D.C. to meet with prominent women in public life.

Also participating in the training will be advisors who are faculty or staff members from the students' home colleges. The program will enhance their capacity to assist students in their individual projects and to create new public leadership education activities on campus. Through the institutes, advisors will be introduced to people, resources, ideas and skills that can make them more effective teachers and mentors for student leaders.

WHO WILL PARTICIPATE

CAWP and PLEN will select twelve colleges, including six PLEN member institutions, to take part in the program each year. We will be choosing institutions, rather than individuals, to participate. Within those institutions, two incoming juniors and one advisor drawn from the faculty or staff will be selected. Participants will be responsible for some of their own expenses; a limited number of scholarships will be available, and advisors will receive a stipend.

Students, faculty or administrators who would like their institutions to be considered for the program should contact CAWP.

RESEARCH

In addition to the summer institutes, CAWP and PLEN will conduct research and issue publications about public leadership education programs around the country. They will be identifying existing programs, assessing the efforts at PLEN member colleges, and suggesting new kinds of activities which ought to be implemented.

ABOUT CAWP

CAWP was established in 1971 as a research, education and information center concerned with the numbers, status and impact of women in public leadership. The Center conducts programs for women public officials and serves as a clearinghouse of research and information about women in politics and government. It conducts national surveys; maintains a unique data bank with statistics about women in elected office; publishes books, reports and fact sheets; and issues a newsletter about women in politics for subscribers of its information services program. CAWP also acts as a liaison between the scholarly and political communities. To mark its twentieth anniversary, CAWP is seeking an endowment to insure its continued growth as the national research and resource center concerned with women's public leadership.
