Ed and Linda Fuelner -- Heritage Foundation

Dear Ed and Linda: Linda not there

Many thanks for having me to speak at your annual Board meeting last week. As you could tell, reforming Congress is one subject that can get me going. I was glad we had a chance to talk a bit over dinner too.

Best wishes -- and thanks for your support.

Midge Decter - Mrs. 120 E. 81st St, 7H
New York, N 10028

Dear Midge:

That was one of the warmest and most elegant introductions I have ever received -- thank you very much. Not only did you touch my Hoosier soul, but you fed me the ball beautifully! It was great to spend a few minutes with you over dinner too.

Best wishes.

Dear _____: See

Great to be with you in Charleston last Friday. I enjoyed having the chance to spend some time with you over dinner. As you could probably tell, reforming Congress is a subject that can really get me going.

Best wishes.

Mrs. Amalie Stone Walker

Dear Amalie:

Many thanks for opening up your beautiful home for the Heritage reception last week. It was an honor to be greeted to Charleston in such a gracious manner. I appreciated your nice note too -- I wish Marilyn could always come with me on these trips.

Please give my best to your family.

NOTE TO AL HUBBARD
DAVE BECKWITH
JEFF NESBIT
RICHARD PORTER ✓

FROM: BILL KRISTOL BK/BS

Here, for your information, is the text of Midge Decter's extraordinary introduction of the Vice President at the Heritage meeting last week.

Strange as it might seem on an occasion like this--and in a place so famous for its ships, and golf, not to speak of Southern history --I want to say something to you tonight about the game of basketball. It is commonly held, of course, that baseball is the quintessentially American sport. And then, there is football, which while millions are crazy about it, many people who are fond neither of the game nor of their country tend to harp on as typically American with no flattery intended. But I ask you all just for a moment to think about basketball, and I ask you to think about it as a model precisely for the American ideal of political virtue. This is a game in which a team of five men run their fastest and hardest, from one end of a 94-foot court to the other, virtually without stopping to draw breath from the first moment of the contest to the last, while five other men try to stop them. And all the while they are in motion they are required to keep close track of one another and to be totally sensitive and responsive to one another's needs and intentions.

Now, as is the case in so many areas of life, people who do not really know and love the game tend, if and when they do notice it, to focus their attention only on the high scorer. Those who are truly passionate about basketball, however, look first and foremost to find the man who made much of that scoring possible, that is, the man who is credited with having made the most assists. And those who are truly passionate about basketball are also able to recognize the player who would be making the most assists if only the big guy in the position to score took the good shots that were being set up for him.

Ponder that idea of success and virtue when next you think about whom to trust with the future of your country.

There is one other thing I want to say to you about basketball which may make clear what has put me in mind of the subject. And that is, that nowhere on earth is this game either played or watched with more passion-- nowhere is it taken to be more important--than in the state of Indiana. Now to tell you the truth, I have no idea whether or not our honored guest this evening was ever in his early years a star of court and hoop--or indeed if he actually even played. But watching him perform, as we have been privileged to do over and over again in the past nearly four years, we can have little doubt that the ideals of basketball as I have described them were hovering over the ethos, that very distinctive Hoosier ethos, in which he was brought up.

Consider the parallel here: running your heart out to be the man who makes the assists. All the while knowing better than anyone where each of the other players is at every moment and what all of them need to do, not just to win--that's not always so difficult, if you are up against a bunch of bums, for example--not just to win, then, but to be real champions. Running down the court and trying to put some starch into your teammates, and at the same time aware that they will not always be where you know they should be or handling the ball as you know they should, but knowing also that however they are playing, your own sense of the game demands of you to go on unstintingly and in good spirits until the last whistle blows.

It would be hard to think of a better description either of the person or of the political career of the speaker it is my great pleasure to introduce to you this evening.

Before I do so, however, I must must confess to you that just before, I misspoke somewhat. I referred to him as our honored guest. And whereas it is certainly true that he is our guest, it is we who are the ones being honored by his presence here.

Ladies and Gentlemen, that Hoosier par excellence, that champion of the assists who might one day, if the management is smart enough and the team lucky enough, become the captain: the Vice President of the United States.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE VICE PRESIDENT

FROM

ANNE HATHAWAY Anne

SUBJECT South Carolina Contact Listing

The Honorable Carroll Campbell
Governor, State of South Carolina
803/734-9818 (O)
803/737-3000 (O)
Spouse: Iris

You last saw Campbell during your visit to South Carolina on February 28, 1992. Campbell is the Honorary Chairman of the Hartnett campaign and is scheduled to attend the fundraiser. As you may recall, the Campbells attended the State Dinner in honor of the nation's Governors, as well as, the reception you hosted at the Residence in early February. When you attended the Ryder Cup at Kiawah Island on September 29, 1991, you played nine holes of golf with Campbell. You may recall hosting a dinner at the Residence last June in honor of Governor and Mrs. Campbell. Note, Campbell recently received a mailing containing your recent speeches and articles. Anne Hathaway, Jim Pitts, and Richard Porter recommend this call.

Mr. Emory Main
President, Main Waters Corporation
803/722-1070 (O)
803/723-2211 (H)
Spouse: Joy

Main will be hosting the Hartnett for Senate event at his home on Friday. Jim Pitts recommends this call.

Mr. Bob McCallister
Chief of Staff, Office of the Governor
803/734-9818 (O)

Jim Pitts recommends this call.

The Honorable Jim Miles
Secretary of State, State of South Carolina
803/734-2170 (O)

As you may recall, you campaigned for Miles during the 1990 campaign cycle. Jim Pitts recommends this call.

The Honorable Barbara Nielson
Superintendent of Education, State of South Carolina
803/734-8492 (O)

Nielson is the first Republican Superintendent of Education for the State of South Carolina. Jim Pitts recommends this call.

The Honorable Arthur Ravenel, Jr.
U.S. Representative (R-1st District)
202/225-3176 (O)

Bill Gribbin recommends this call.

Mr. R. Phil Roof
South Carolina State Chairman, Bush-Quayle '92
National Finance Committee
803/799-1601 (H)

Roof attended the Bush-Quayle '92 National Finance Meeting which you addressed at the JW Marriott on January 14, 1992. Jim Pitts recommends this call.

The Honorable Floyd Spence
U.S. Representative (R-2nd District)
202/225-2452 (O)

As you may recall, Spence is soon to be the ranking minority member of the Armed Services Committee due to the retirement of Congressman William Dickinson. Note, Jim Pitts was Spence's Deputy Campaign Manager in 1988. Although you will not be visiting Spence's district, Bill Gribbin recommends this call.

The Honorable Strom Thurmond
U.S. Senator
202/224-5972 (O)

Bill Gribbin recommends this call.

Mr. Warren Tompkins

Owner, J. Warren Tompkins (Consulting Firm)

803/734-9818 (O)

Spouse: Emily

As you may recall, Tompkins is Governor Campbell's former Chief of Staff. Tompkins is the Bush-Quayle '92 Senior Southern Advisor. He attended the dinner you hosted at the Residence in honor of Governor and Mrs. Campbell last June. Jim Pitts recommends this call.

Mr. Barry Wynn

Chairman, South Carolina GOP

803/585-2563 (O)

Spouse: Ray

Wynn is scheduled to attend the Hartnett fundraising event Friday. Jim Pitts recommends this call.

OFFICE OF THE VICE PRESIDENT
WASHINGTON

BRIEFING FOR THE VICE PRESIDENT'S
SPEECH BEFORE THE HERITAGE FOUNDATION'S ANNUAL BOARD MEETING AND PUBLIC POLICY SEMINAR

Date: Friday, April 10, 1992
Time: 7:45 p.m. - 9:10 p.m.
Location: Gibbes Museum of Art, Charleston, S.C.

From: L. Morgan Daines
Nancy L. Mitchell

I. PURPOSE

To mix and mingle with 20 Heritage Board members and their spouses, attend the Board dinner, and give 15-20 minutes of remarks to 200 people attending the four-day Board meeting and public policy seminar.

II. BACKGROUND

This is the Heritage Foundation's seventh annual Board Meeting and Public Policy Seminar. There will be an estimated 100 couples attending the four-day event. The guest list is made up of the Foundation's biggest financial supporters (as well as those asked to speak at the event). An anti-Congress theme is evident in every policy discussion scheduled for the group. The four general discussion topics are: (1) Why Congress Behaves the Way it Does; (2) Congress Out of Control; (3) The Culture of the Imperial Congress; and (4) Is Reform Realistic? At least one of the program speakers during the seminar will discuss the problem of the "iron triangle" -- Congress, bureaucrats and special interests. A three-page agenda for the seminar is attached.

III. PARTICIPANTS

All of the Heritage Board members and major donors are expected to attend this event. A sample: Grover and Sylvia Coors, Midge Decter, Robert and Nancy Kriebel, Ed Noble, Lloyd Nobel, Dick and Ritchie Scaife, Tom and Shirley Roe, and William Tate. Other attendees of note are: Paul Gigot from The Wall Street Journal (he will be addressing the group on pro-Congress media bias), Ed Meese (will speak on congressional reform generally), Robert Bork (will speak on congressional abuse of court nominees), and Dan Oliver.

Seated with you at the head table will be:

- o Ed and Linda Feulner, the President of Heritage
- o Midge Decter, Board of Trustees, Author and former Executive Director of Committee of Free World in N.Y.C.
- o Tom and Shirley Roe, Board of Trustees, Founder South Carolina Policy Council
- o Dick and Ritchie Scaife, Board of Trustees, Chairman of Board of Sarah Scaife Foundation
- o David and Ann Brown, Board of Trustees, Doctor and Chairman of Board of DAB Oil

Note: Many people from "Noble" will be in attendance from Oklahoma, a family foundation with $383 million in assets which donates to conservative causes. Ann Brown is a Noble.

V. SEQUENCE OF EVENTS

You arrive at the Gibbes Museum of Art at 7:45 and proceed to a 20-minute reception with the Board members and their spouses. Dinner starts at 8:00, and at 8:40 Mrs. Midge Decter, a Heritage Board member will introduce you. At this time you will begin your remarks, speaking for about 20 minutes. At the conclusion of your speech, you depart.

VI. PRESS

This is a closed event. As noted above, however, Paul Gigot from The Wall Street Journal will be attending the dinner.

SUBJECT: HARTNETT FOR SENATE FUNDRAISING RECEPTION

Date of Event: Friday, April 10, 1992
Location: Emory Main Residence
Charleston, South Carolina
Time: 5:20 p.m.

I. Purpose

To participate in reception and photo opportunity (40 people @ $500 per person), and a general fundraising reception (50 people @ $250 per person) for South Carolina Republican Senatorial candidate Tommy Hartnett.

II. Background

Emory Main, the host of the event, is the C.E.O. of Main, Waters Management, and the owner of 10 McDonald's restaurants. He and his wife, Joy, live in the 200-year old Col. John Ashe House which they bought in 1986. An article on Main is attached.

U.S. SENATE 1992:

Democrat Senator Fritz Hollings will be up for re-election this November. Hollings was first elected to the U.S. Senate in 1966.

Former Congressman Tommy Hartnett is the acknowledged Republican frontrunner. Hartnett resigned from his House seat after three terms to run for Lieutenant Governor in 1986. As an advocate of term limitations, Hartnett fulfilled his promise to serve only three terms in Congress. He received 49.5% of the vote in the Lieutenant Governor's race, and Governor Carroll Campbell received 51% in his race for Governor. Campbell is the Honorary Chairman of Hartnett's campaign. Hartnett is a Bush/Quayle Co-Chairman.

Hartnett serves as President of the Hartnett Realty Company. A graduate of the College of Charleston, Hartnett also served in the U.S. Air Force Reserves (1963-69), and the South Carolina National Guard (1983-86). He and his wife, Bonnie, live in Mount Pleasant, South Carolina and have two children, Thomas F., Jr., and Lee Ann.

Hartnett's only primary opposition comes from Charlie Thompson, and unknown teacher at Trident Tech. The primary will take place on August 25. According to the Hartnett campaign, Thompson has been completely ignored by the South Carolina press. While the State GOP has not officially endorsed Hartnett, Thompson has complained that he is being ignored by the party. According to the GOP, they are now trying to include Thompson in their newsletters and events where appropriate. Thompson is scheduled to address the South Carolina Republican Convention on May 2. He is reportedly upset about the Vice President's participation in the Hartnett fundraiser.

Hollings has been weakened by his "no-authorization vote," and has consistently received re-elect numbers below 50%. According to the Almanac of American Politics, a January 1991 poll showed South Carolina voters disapproved of his Gulf war vote by 70% to 24%. The National Republican Senatorial Committee considers Hollings the second most vulnerable Democrat incumbent (next to Senator Terry Sanford).

According to the Hartnett campaign, a February poll showed Hollings with 50% to Hartnett's 30%. His re-elect numbers have hovered around 31% to 35%.

Hartnett plans to campaign against Hollings's vote on the Gulf War, his support of a 5% national sales tax, and his vote for a Senate pay raise.

Hartnett has raised over $200,000, and hopes to raise $1.9 million. According to the RNC, Hollings has raised more than $1 million and could raise up to $3 of $4 million for his 1992 re-election effort.

Both Hollings and Hartnett are from Charleston.

BUSH/QUAYLE '92:

Governor Carroll Campbell is the Bush/Quayle '92 Chairman.
Phil Roof is the Finance Chairman.

South Carolina's presidential primary was on March 7, 1992. Bush/Quayle received 67% of the vote, Pat Buchanan received 26%, and David Duke received 7%. South Carolina has 8 electoral votes, and 34 delegates.

In the 1988 general election Bush/Quayle received 61% of the vote.

CONGRESSIONAL REAPPORTIONMENT:

South Carolina does not lose or gain any congressional seats. The legislature is in the process of trying to create a majority black district in the state. According to the State GOP this would not effect party makeup.

LEGISLATIVE REAPPORTIONMENT:

Governor Carroll Campbell vetoed the Democrat Legislature's redistricting plan. The plan is now in the courts.

The current makeup of the state legislature is as follows:

State House:

44 Republicans
80 Democrats

State Senate:

13 Republicans
33 Democrats

NOTE: The Mayor of Charleston is Democrat Joseph P. Riley, Jr.

This event will take place in Rep. Arthur Ravenel's (R-1) congressional district.

III. Participants

Tommy and Bonnie Hartnett
Emory and Joy Main
Barry Wynn, South Carolina GOP Chairman

IV. Follow-Up

Photos will be sent to VIP reception participants.

TOMMY HARTNETT

U.S. SENATE CANDIDATE, SOUTH CAROLINA

Tommy Hartnett's public service career began in 1965 when he was elected to the South Carolina House of Representatives. In 1973 he became a member of the South Carolina State Senate, where he served until 1980.

A former three-term Congressman from Charleston, Tommy Hartnett is South Carolina's leading advocate on one of the most important issues -- term limitation. When he was elected to the U.S. House of Representatives in 1980, Hartnett promised to serve only three terms and kept his word.

He served South Carolina well on the Armed Services Committee and the Merchant Marine and Fishery Committee.

In 1986, he ran for Lt. Governor of the Palmetto State and with 49% of the vote, came close to becoming South Carolina's first Republican Lt. Governor. Hartnett's statewide name recognition and popularity makes him the best candidate to face Democrat Senator Ernest Hollings in the '92 Senate Elections. 1992 is the first time Hollings has faced serious opposition in a Presidential election year. President Bush collected 62% of the South Carolina vote in 1988. this year. 67%

Born August 7, 1941 in Charleston, South Carolina, Tommy attended the College of Charleston and presently serves as President of the Hartnett Realty Company. Tommy's military service includes the U.S. Air Force Reserves, 1963-69 and the S.C. National Guard, 1983-86. Tommy and his wife, Bonnie, live in Mount Pleasant, South Carolina and they have two children, Thomas F., Jr. and Lee Ann.

Emory Main

The arch of triumph
for burger baron

By DAWN BRAZELL
Of the Post-Courier staff

Emory Main grins at the mention of the red-headed clown sitting in his office.

"That's the chairman of the board," he says, nodding at the Ronald McDonald doll, well-loved by children across the United States.

On his wall hang numerous degrees, including his bachelor of science in chemistry from the University of Georgia, a finance major from Georgia State University and, of course, his master's in hamburgerology from McDonald's. The company's motto holds a prominent position:

Press On: Nothing in the world can take the place of persistence. Talent will not; nothing is more common than unsuccessful men with talent. Genius will not; unrewarded genius is almost a proverb. Education alone will not; the world is full of educated derelicts. Persistence and determination alone are omnipotent.

Main, a whiz kid from Georgia who became a McDonald's franchisee at age 32, has both qualities. He says he loves the fast food industry and gave up one of his life's passions, flying commercial jets, for flipping hamburgers.

It was a tough decision, but one that has given Main more control over his life -- a factor that has guided his course since college, where he could have had a career in medicine, teaching, flying or chemical sales.

The chief executive officer of Main, Waters Management is owner/operator of 10 McDonald's restaurants. Light from a giant window in his office on 15 Middle Atlantic Wharf gleams off the clear, wooden surfaces of his desk and conference table. He likes an ordered setting and one that affords a stunning view of the harbor.

He has done well. Individual store sales are kept confidential, but the average store sales nationally for a McDonald's is more than $1.5 million. Main says the average McDonald's volume is higher than that of an average restaurant, with a national average of 40,000 transactions occurring each month.

He also has been actively involved with the more than three-year restoration of his home at 32 South Battery, which has been a labor of love for him and his wife, Joy. They bought the Col. John Ashe House for $610,000 in March 1988. Main has overseen on a daily basis the restoration of the more than 200-year-old, Georgian block design home.

Mrs. Main says they both were struggling when they married 26 years ago this June. She spent many nights alone while he was in school or working late hours, but she understood his strong drive.

"I knew that he would be successful because Emory has a lot of drive... He's very goal oriented. He doesn't let things get in his way. If you tell him it can't be done,

Please see MAIN, Page 3-D

Buying into the McDonald's franchise has given Emory Main more control over his life.

Staff Photo by Wade Spence

It's like waving a red flag in front of him because he wants to know why it can't be done. If he sets his mind to a task, he does it whether it's raising money for the symphony, heart association or this house."

Main, born Sept. 4, 1940, loved his childhood days when his parents would take him and his sister out of school to travel. He was reared in College Park, Ga., a suburb of Atlanta, where his father was a physician.

He chose to go to Georgia Military Academy when he reached the sixth grade. He wasn't sure if he wanted a military career, but he liked the school. His grandfather, also Emory Main, stood as his main role model, for he had risen to be general manager of a corporation despite his lack of a high school education.

"I learned from him mainly by example. He never preached... I always watched him and had a lot of respect. He is one of the kindest individuals I've ever had any dealings with." Main's grandfather offered him a chance the beginning of his senior year to take a trip around the world on a freighter. He took an absence from school and traveled for four months to exotic places, including the Far East, Saigon, India and Egypt.

It marked a turning point in his life, teaching him maturity and independence. He disembarked in Suez and had to arrange transportation home. He had only $80 left and had to deal with flight reschedulings and cancellations.

"I arrived in New York with only 35 cents. That was quite an experience. It was the first time I was really on my own and I felt like I accomplished getting through it."

His father fanned his love of travel by obtaining free passes from Central Georgia Railroad, which contracted him to treat their employees. Main says his family traveled all over the United States and Canada. He thought then he would be an engineer.

That was before he flew back from Europe. "I was afraid of flying. I thought it was kind of mysterious... When I got up flying I could see the Mediterranean and the Alps. It was just a whole different world." Main knew he wanted to try it one day. But first he wanted to follow in the steps of his father, whom he also respected, and study to be a doctor.

It didn't quite work out that way. He attended Emory University and worked in the hospitals as a technician during the summers. But when his parents divorced he was placed on his own financially and transferred as a junior to the University of Georgia. He had to take a part-time job.

It was then he met his wife, Joy, who was renting an apartment from his mother and teaching. "I was fortunate enough to talk her into marrying me. I think that was the best thing that ever happened to me. She's been very patient and very supportive."

He took a year off to load bags for Delta to earn enough money to finish his senior year. They married and Main finished his pre-medicine courses at the university. Main faced eight years more of schooling before he could be gainfully employed so he decided to try flying. The pilots he knew made a good living, and had time to be involved with

■ Occupation: CEO of Main, Waters Management.

■ Date and place of birth: Sept. 4, 1940, Philippi, W. Va.

■ Favorite food: Chocolate fudge sundae, Big Mac, fries and Diet Coke. Also fresh seafood.

■ Favorite president: Ronald Reagan. "I liked his approach. Just because something has been done a certain way doesn't mean it still has to be done that way."

■ Fat peeve: Not having things in an organized place and parents who try to make children eat something they don't want to eat.

■ Biggest disappointment: Not being able to be an airline pilot and run his business.

■ Ideal day: Would be in New Zealand, where they would camp on the beach. He then would run three miles on the beach, swim some and take a hike in the mountains after lunch. "And if I could get to an airplane, I then would fly over the mountains."

■ Favorite music: Beethoven and Mozart.

■ Epitaph on tombstone: He made a difference.

■ Best word or phrase to describe you: Persistence. "I like to achieve goals and when I run into obstacles I'm curious as to how I can overcome them."

airplane and I was more comfortable with him gone. I soloed and I thought 'This is great. I'm actually controlling this airplane by myself...' To be able to go out and as the old saying goes to be able to release the bonds of the earth. I just love it."

He got his private license the summer after he graduated, but then had to have eye surgery. He landed a job as a high school chemistry teacher to pay the bills. Main was told he would be unable to pass the physical needed to obtain a commercial license.

Mrs. Main says her husband fought the verdict. He went to a clinic, where he was given a series of eye exercises that he followed diligently for months. "His eyes are perfect. He was determined he was going to be able to fly and he was."

He also attended night school at Georgia State University and earned a year's credit for a master's in business. His eyes got stronger and he successfully tested to be a pilot. He dropped out of graduate school and bought a Cessna 150 with a friend to log the hours he needed for a commercial license.

Main taught school during the day and taught flying in the afternoons, until he became a full-time flight instructor. Mrs. Main says it was a passion. "He loved it even when the little kids got sick in the airplane."

He applied to the major airlines and finally got an offer he liked from Northwest. He recalls a day training in Minneapolis, when he was caught in a snow storm. He debated not going to class. "But I was told if you want to be successful in any business, you go in early and you always bring a pencil."

He was the only Southerner who made it to class that day and he got a round of applause. Main lived in Hawaii for two months and they transferred to Seattle. Six weeks before their first son, Christopher, was born, he was laid off because of a ticket agents' strike in 1970. He did some soul searching and decided he needed more stability. "I was in Seattle, 3,000 miles from my original home without a job with an unemployment rate of 12 percent."

Main decided to return to Atlanta to attend graduate school full time to complete his master's in finance. His wife had to take care of a new baby and he usually didn't arrive home until late at night. They depleted all their savings so he took a job with a chemical sales company in Michigan after graduation.

He worked there for a year when he learned Northwest wanted him back. Main went back through training and on his first regular flight the pilots went on strike and he was laid off again. His wife just had given birth to their second son, Jeffrey, and he was unemployed again.

"This renewed my determination to make myself independent of anyone else," McDonald's gave him the key to the arches that solved his problem.

Some of the best things in life come by accident — such was the case of Main's involvement with McDonald's.

His research paper in graduate school focused on the fast food business, since he had some friends in the industry. He investigated the management and operation styles of the major franchises available and chose McDonald's as the best.

He then did a marketing/impact study, chose a hypothetical site and arranged mock financing with a bank. "I became very excited about it. This was a great business — the management style the way people thought about things within this company. They believed in treating the customer right, treating him as No. 1 and delivering the best quality service and cleanliness that they could."

Main asked the McDonald's contacts he had made about the possibility of becoming a franchisee. They said he would have to go through the same lengthy process as others, but they did give his restaurant site a try. It turned out to be one of the highest volume stores in Atlanta and the first to do in excess of $1 million in sales in a year.

He wanted to remain a pilot, but McDonald's has a policy prohibiting absentee operators. He teamed up with Dewall Waters, a friend who already was in the fast food business and could serve as a full-time operator, and they applied for a franchise. In February 1973 a site in Orangeburg, S.C., came open.

"I was going to put myself in a position where if another layoff came or if I lost my medical (clearance) physical requirements for pilots are very stringent, or anything else came along that someone else controlled, that I would be in a position to control my future."

Main knew he was interested in business in general and chose a master's in finance for a sound background. "If you look at all the CEOs and you look at the senior vice presidents in organizations and you look at business owners, the thing that trips them up is ... lack of knowledge of finance, being able to control the money that you make in the business..."

He says it's important not to overexpand too soon, creating a financial crunch that dooms a business during slow periods. McDonald's offered them a restaurant in Charleston if Main would give up his flying career. He agreed.

Main became store manager (the first restaurant to open in Charleston, controlling the cash, inventory and personnel. "It's not boring. It's not dull. It's always challenging. The biggest challenge is the people you work with — to get them motivated to be able to fulfill your standards of what you feel your business should be."

Waters and Main did well with their two franchises and were granted eight more stores. Main says they expanded slowly and to the time to develop good people. McDonald's likes to promote from within the system, cultivating young people to enable them to take management positions.

McDonald's employs one out of first-time job seekers and has been called America's largest youth training program. "Our whole philosophy about things I'm involved with outside of McDonald's has to do with children and young adults."

He says one of his earliest recollections is of the "A for Cheeseburger" program they re-

Main's desire to be a pilot was tested. His flight instructor was "a screamer" and yelled at students throughout their training.

"Finally one day he got out of the where children got free cheeseburgers for As on their report cards. "They would get so excited and some would have to tiptoe to even see over the counter. It just does your heart good to elicit that kind of pride."

Main says one of his proudest accomplishments is being a founder of the Ronald McDonald House in Charleston, a home where parents and seriously ill children can find lodging while receiving treatment at nearby hospitals. He also is involved with numerous other community projects. "It's very satisfying." • • •

Main, 49, emerges from the basement of his home, where he has been consulting with workers fixing the air conditioning and heating. He's mechanically inclined and likes to "piddle." Main knows the house from the bottom to the very top of its cupola, which offers a superb view of the harbor and the city's skyline.

Main keeps the lantern on; nearby neighbors let him know when it accidentally gets turned off. "It's something that I can contribute to the landscape in Charleston so that no matter where you are in the harbor you can see that light." Main is wearing his favorite attire of blue jeans and tennis shoes, an outfit he wears even to work when he has no business meetings.

He usually rises about 7 a.m. and exercises if he has time by running three to four miles a week or riding his stationary bike, which is tucked away in a cranny in their attic in front of a window overlooking the battery.

Mrs. Main says he enjoys spending time with his family and they often take trips. Main has traveled extensively with his sons, who are in their late teens, to let them see the world. He misses flying the big jets, but he has bought a Piper Seneca III twin engine plane. The family takes the plane whenever they're traveling within 700 to 800 miles of Charleston.

She says he sometimes lacks the ability to accept things at a particular moment if the situation is not as he wants it. "He's not as flexible as I would like him to be." But, he can be spontaneous and fun loving. They sometimes hop into their convertible Volkswagen to tour the backroads. They also go to their Holly Hill farmhouse to relax and ride horses.

Main says he enjoys restoring old homes, coming up with a clean design and following it through. He has an eye for quality. Mrs. Main points to a intricately carved teak trunk at the base of their full-canopy rice bed. "That's what he picked up when he went overseas with his grandfather... What teenager you know would bring something like this home?"

Main, who instructed that lines in his office be kept clean and simple, is a detail man. Robert Horne, director of operations for Main-Waters Management, says he has a fair and consistent style of management and strives to make everyone see the same picture.

"Emory is a really serious person. Anything that he does, he does all the way. He's very dedicated. Everything he does, he does 110 percent, whether it's McDonald's related, a fund-raiser or a vacation."

His secretary, Tammy Klemming, agrees. She has to conform to his standards, but it doesn't bother her. "To Emory everything has its place. As office manager he expects the whole office to look that way. He's a perfectionist. He wants it done the right way."

Main's personality fits perfectly with the McDonald's management style. He says it's a style where people are treated with respect and rewarded for quality. "We take the hamburger business more seriously than anybody else. We work at it day and night... You see this wedding ring?" he says pointing to a silver band with the McDonald's arches on it.

"I've never liked wearing a wedding band so my wife says it's appropriate I wear this ring on my wedding finger because I'm married to McDonald's."

The McDonald's system is like a religion almost, he says. Arches adorn his office to the point of being embossed on his stationery. His car sports a prestige tag that says FAS-TMAC.

"It gets to where you get ketchup in your veins. It's hard to get it out. If you're going to be successful, you got to love it."

Dear Richard,

As I promised you at the Harnett reception,
having no card for file, here are the particulars:

CAPT Benjamin Gardner USNR-Ret
100 Granby Crossing, Apt. 301
CAYCE, SC29033-4324

For further reminder I was the "VP whats-his-name" old boy. I plan to be working on "Quale for President" well before '96.

When you get a few weeks away from the rat-race come spend some time in coastal Carolina. Its an experience not to be missed.

Best always,

Ben Gardner

Strange as it might seem on an occasion like this--and in a place so famous for its ships, and golf, not to speak of Southern history --I want to say something to you tonight about the game of basketball. It is commonly held, of course, that baseball is the quintessentially American sport. And then, there is football, which while millions are crazy about it, many people who are fond neither of the game nor of their country tend to harp on as typically American with no flattery intended. But I ask you all just for a moment to think about basketball, and I ask you to think about it as a model precisely for the American ideal of political virtue. This is a game in which a team of five men run their fastest and hardest, from one end of a 94-foot court to the other, virtually without stopping to draw breath from the first moment of the contest to the last, while five other men try to stop them. And all the while they are in motion they are required to keep close track of one another and to be totally sensitive and responsive to one another's needs and intentions.

Now, as is the case in so many areas of life, people who do not really know and love the game tend, if and when they do notice it, to focus their attention only on the high scorer. Those who are truly passionate about basketball, however, look first and foremost to find the man who made much of that scoring possible, that is, the man who is credited with having made the most assists. And those who are truly passionate about basketball are also able to recognize the player who would be making the most assists if only the big guy in the position to score took the good shots that were being set up for him.

Ponder that idea of success and virtue when next you think about whom to trust with the future of your country.

There is one other thing I want to say to you about basketball which may make clear what has put me in mind of the subject. And that is, that nowhere on earth is this game either played or watched with more passion-- nowhere is it taken to be more important--than in the state of Indiana. Now to tell you the truth, I have no idea whether or not our honored guest this evening was ever in his early years a star of court and hoop--or indeed if he actually even played . But watching him perform, as we have been privileged to do over and over again in the past nearly four years, we can have little doubt that the ideals of basketball as I have described them were hovering over the ethos, that very distinctive Hoosier ethos, in which he was brought up.

Consider the parallel here: running your heart out to be the man who makes the assists. All the while knowing better than anyone where each of the other players is at every moment and what all of them need to do, not just to win--that's not always so difficult, if you are up against a bunch of bums, for example--not just to win, then, but to be real champions. Running down the court and trying to put some starch into your teammates, and at the same time aware that they will not always be where you know they should be or handling the ball as you know they should, but knowing also that however they are playing, your own sense of the game demands of you to go on unstintingly and in good spirits until the last whistle blows.

It would be hard to think of a better description either of the person or of the political career of the speaker it is my great pleasure to introduce to you this evening.

Before I do so, however, I must must confess to you that just before, I misspoke somewhat. I referred to him as our honored guest. And whereas it is certainly true that he is our guest, it is we who are the ones being honored by his presence here.

Ladies and Gentlemen, that Hoosier par excellence, that champion of the assists who might one day, if the management is smart enough and the team lucky enough, become the captain: the Vice President of the United States.

Alexandria, VA 22302

Dear Mr. and Mr. Van Buskirk:

Thanks for your kind note of April 12. I do believe you will be hearing more of the President's real "vision" for America this summer and fall, and meanwhile, the Vice President will keep on fighting the good fight as well.

Best wishes,

Bill Kristol

We really enjoyed V.P. Quayle's speech to the Council for National Policy on April 10th. It's good to hear about the Administration's emphasis on family, education (choice), and parental/community involvement.

Can we hear more about the President's vision for America? President Reagan used to inspire the Nation with his vision of family, faith and freedom... "Shining city on the hill" speeches. Americans want to be inspired!

-over-

We really appreciate your work for the V.P. and your excellent staff.

Best wishes
