United States Senate

WASHINGTON, DC 20510

April 11, 2005

The Honorable George W. Bush
President
1600 Pennsylvania Ave, NW
Washington, DC 20500

Dear Mr. President:

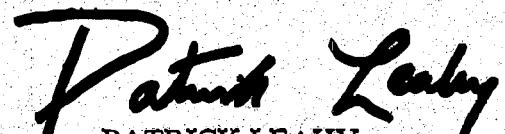

There are currently 28 vacancies on the federal courts of appeals and district courts for which you have not forwarded nominees to the Senate. We write to offer to help you obtain consultation and advice from the Senate on these vacancies so that you may select nominees who will generate strong, bipartisan support.

This evening the Senate is scheduled to consider your nomination of Paul Crotty to become a federal judge in New York. We expect Mr. Crotty to be confirmed with the support of his home-state Senators and an overwhelming vote. We have each been urging you for some time to work with the Senate to fill federal judicial vacancies with qualified, consensus nominees. It is now imperative that we do so.

When you met with Russian President Putin earlier this year, you noted that checks and balances and an independent judiciary are among the fundamental requirements of democracy. We agree. We therefore urge you to make clear to Senate Republican leaders that you do not favor the so-called "nuclear option" which would remove an important check on executive power. Instead, let us work together to identify consensus judicial candidates. Let us preserve our independent judiciary, which is the envy of the world.

Respectfully,

HARRY REID
Democratic Leader

PATRICK LEAHY
Ranking Member

Subject: My Granny

Dear President Bush,

I am traveling by train from Raleigh to Washington on Friday 4/15/2005. My 88 year old Grandmother's last wish on earth is to see the Whitehouse and Capitol before she dies. Her name is Rosie Cox. (b)(6)
(b)(6) told her to make a list of things she really wanted to do in the next year or so and I would make sure she was able to do them. We thought we had tickets from our congressional office to visit the Whitehouse but learned today that they are now not available.

My Granny voted for you in the last election as the first Republican she ever cast a vote for in 70 years of voting because of your support for prescription drugs. She also supports private accounts for social security due to her concern for her grandchildren. Is there anything your staff can do to permit her to visit the Whitehouse while we are in town. We arrive Friday by train around 12:15 and will be staying at the Marriott Courtyard on F Street until the morning of Tuesday 4/19/05 when we depart Tuesday afternoon by train for Raleigh. Please help my granny get her wish.

I am a life long Republican though Granny is coming late to the party.

Sincerely,

Brenda F. Martin, Esq.

Senator Hatch, I have a favor to ask of you. I have spent hours upon hours creating this painting in honor of President Bush. A congratulations for winning the 2004 elections. It would be a dream of mine to present this personally to him. You may view this painting on my website, <http://rebecca.clarkcooper.cc/Art%20Portfolio.htm> . The portrait is titled "Finish" . I know we can make this happen, with your help. I know this may come across as a far fetched request, but I am just an ordinary woman with extraordinary dreams. Though many may not know now, I believe people will soon know my name. You have far better connections than most and that is why I am coming to you. You're a wonderful person, and I trust you. I think President Bush is an amazing President, and that is why I spent this time creating this portrait- in honor of his work. Thank you for your time and help. Please let me know how we can make this happen. Sincerely, Rebecca E. Bornemeier

Senior Advisor to the President
The White House

Dear Karl:

During President Bush's first administration, we offered to carry a live Town Hall Meeting on KSTP-TV, Channel 5, in Minneapolis/St. Paul, Minnesota.

During the Clinton administration, President Clinton requested, and we granted, time for a Town Hall Meeting, and we very much would like to do the same for President Bush.

Karl, we believe it is our responsibility to help the administration communicate with the people, so as to bring understanding of the President's agenda. In that regard, we would like to make available to President Bush an evening Town Hall Meeting, which we would originate from KSTP-TV, Channel 5, in Minneapolis/St. Paul. We would carry the Town Hall Meeting on our other Minnesota stations in Duluth, Alexandria, Redwood Falls, and Austin. We could also offer the Town Hall Meeting on our television stations in New Mexico and New York State, as well as to any other station in the United States, which might wish to carry the event. The length of such a Town Hall Meeting should be determined by the administration. I believe that President Clinton's Town Hall Meeting lasted two or more hours in prime time. The Meeting originated with a live audience from our studios at KSTP-TV, Channel 5.

I hope you and the President will find it helpful to accept our invitation as the President moves around the country to explain his programs. Won't you please give me a call any time - day or night. My cell phone number is (b)(6) and my office number is 651-642-4200.

To Whom It May Concern:

Several weeks ago, I wrote to Mr. Rove, asking if he would mind sending a personal birthday greeting to my aunt, Joan Walsh, who was turning 85 this spring. In response, I was called at home by a very nice young woman, who identified herself as Mr. Rove's personal intern. Unfortunately, I did not write down her name, but I believe it may have been Jessica.

Jessica (assuming that is the correct name) informed me that she could assist in getting a greeting from President Bush sent to my aunt. We were thrilled at this news, as it would be a treat for my aunt to receive a birthday wish from him. In our last conversation, which took place approximately March 8th, I passed her my aunt's address. At that time, Jessica said she thought the greeting would be mailed out within a few days. Because policy prevented the greeting from being mailed to me, as I had originally requested, she said it had to be sent directly to my aunt. Not wanting to spoil the surprise, I told my aunt to watch her mail carefully, because she would likely within the week or so receive a greeting from "a special person."

I just checked with my aunt, who said she has never received any such "special greeting" in the mail. As a result, I'm forced to conclude that either the President's letter was lost in the mail, or the greeting has not been mailed yet. Could you follow up at your end and let me know what happened? I am still hopeful of getting something to my aunt before her birthday, which is May 30.

My aunt's info is: Ms. Joan Walsh

Dear Ms. Beeson:

I am a third year undergraduate at Harvard University researching the influence of the Haitian American community on American foreign policy for my senior thesis. I was wondering if I might be able to get together to speak with someone about the level of participation by Haitian-Americans in developing the US response to the events leading up to and following Aristide's departure. Research at this point is very preliminary, but questions that will be considered include:

1. To what extent were leaders of Haitian-American communities across the nation consulted about potential responses to the crisis?
2. What effects of the crisis were predicted might influence the 2004 Election in South Florida?
3. What attempts have been made to reach out to the Haitian-American community politically by the Bush Administration?

These are only a few of the many questions that would be considered in a discussion on the influence of the Haitian-American community. This is a topic that has not yet been sufficiently studied, and I think this investigation could shed light on the factors involved in this community, and possibly many immigrant communities. You can reach me by email (b)(6) or by phone (b)(6) Thank you very much for your time, and I look forward to hearing from you.

The Churchill Path of Destiny

Dear Mr. Rove,

We write to you after speaking with Mr. Allen Packwood at the Churchill archives in Cambridge this morning. He suggested that you may be able to help us with this important request.

During the last 4 months we have written to President Bush via the Chief of Staff office enquiring to see if the President would select his favourite quotation for the Churchill Path of Destiny in Copenhagen. Regrettably, we have not received a reply to confirm receipt of this request.

The project already has the support from all the Churchill family and his daughter Mary Soames. Prime Minister Tony Blair and Danish Prime Minister Anders Fogh Rasmussen have already selected their favourite quotations.

We know the President and yourself are great admirers of Sir Winston and his mission in life. The Path of Destiny will be a public footpath that leads up to a statue of Winston in Churchill Park in Copenhagen. Each path stone will contain quotations carved in the stone selected by World leaders and prominent people. The footpath will aim to educate children and people about the journey called life and destiny but also remind people of Winston Churchill.

Please do not hesitate to call me if you have any questions and we hope that you are able to help us make contact with the President.

Yours sincerely,

Rob Drinkall - Churchill Fellow 1991

Subject: FW: Forecasters May Have Misjudged the Effect Of Overtime Overhaul - message for Karl Rove

Karl: Great to see you and Darby last night. Thought you might be interested in the article below.

The truth comes out. Finally, the Administration is getting credit for clarifying these outdated regulations. Workers gain, employers get certainty. Class action lawsuits drop which is good for job creation.

Forecasters May Have Misjudged the Effect Of Overtime Overhaul

By KRIS MAHER

Staff Reporter of THE WALL STREET JOURNAL

April 18, 2005; Page A2

PITTSBURGH -- Now that the dust has settled from last year's acrimonious overtime debate, one thing has become clearer: More workers appear to have gained overtime protections than lost them as a result of the Bush administration's broad revision of the Fair Labor Standards Act's white-collar overtime rules.

That should come as a surprise to many people who predicted the opposite would occur. When the Labor Department rewrote overtime rules, it more clearly defined which workers are entitled to receive overtime pay and which ones aren't. The new rules reclassified many higher-paid workers as professionals and managers, meaning they no longer automatically qualify to receive time-and-a-half pay for working longer than 40 hours a week. Workers earning less than $23,660 and many white-collar office workers who previously were excluded from overtime, now are entitled to receive it.

At the time, labor groups and some liberal economists said far more workers would be excluded from overtime than would gain it and that incomes for millions of workers would fall. The Economic Policy Institute in Washington estimated that as many as six million workers would lose overtime pay under the rules. Government officials said 1.3 million workers would gain overtime protection.

So far, it appears that many companies have paid out more overtime to more eligible workers since the new rules went into effect, according to executives and consultants. A February survey by Business & Legal Reports Inc. of 400 U.S. companies -- large and small and across industries -- also found that 40% of companies gave overtime protection to some workers who didn't have it before. Only 13% of respondents eliminated overtime eligibility for workers. In each case, fewer than 50 people were reclassified one way or the other.

Likewise, Hewitt Associates, a human-resource consulting firm based in Lincolnshire, Ill., consulted with about 40 large employers over the new rules and found that few, if any, reclassified any employees as exempt from overtime. "It's either zero, or maybe one company, that had to take away anybody's overtime," says Tom Farmer, a senior consultant. But many of these employers, he said, gave overtime to workers who hadn't received it before, including paralegals, executive assistants, administrative assistants, cooks and certain technicians.

But it's not clear whether that trend will continue. Some analysts say it's partly a timing issue. For now, companies have found it easier to give overtime protection to workers who clearly qualify than to take it away from those who no longer qualify, a move that could damage morale. Moreover, some companies may feel it's better to leave some overtime protections in place for questionable job categories, rather than risk lawsuits.

Opponents of last year's overhaul steadfastly maintain that more workers will lose overtime in the long run. "I think we're years away from knowing what the effect is going to be," says Ross Eisenbrey, vice president and policy director at the Economic Policy Institute. "The rights have changed. How people actually get paid may not have changed and may not change for a couple years." Mr. Eisenbrey says many workers who recently gained overtime likely earn less than the $23,660 salary cutoff for overtime. Others should have had overtime all along but had been illegally denied it in the past, he suggests.

Making more people eligible for overtime has increased labor costs for some companies, particularly banks, retailers and technology companies, says Nadine Winter, a compensation consultant with Watson Wyatt Worldwide. Some employers may respond by reducing the work hours of full-time employees and hiring more part-time or temporary workers. "Employers will find a way to manage their costs," she says.

Meanwhile, other efforts have been launched affecting overtime. Last month, Congress considered adding further overtime-rules changes to the bankruptcy bill. Under the so-called flextime proposal, workers could shift up to 10 hours of work over an 80-hour two-week period -- say, work 50 hours one week and 30 the next. A second proposal would allow workers to choose comp time in place of overtime pay -- one-and-a-half hours of time off for every hour of overtime. The proposals, which had been tied to legislation to raise the minimum wage, were voted down but could be revived at some point.

Lonnie Golden, associate professor of economics and labor studies at Penn State University-Abington College, believes those changes would lead to a longer workweek on average. That would improve employers' labor costs in the short run, but could hurt productivity, since accident and error rates tend to increase along with hours worked.

On the other hand, Daniel S. Hamermesh, a professor of economics at the University of Texas at Austin, who has studied overtime extensively, says the recent proposals could boost efficiency by allowing companies to schedule workers when needed within an 80-hour period.

Overtime rules have changed so infrequently that it's difficult for economists to measure what, if any, impact they have on the economy. That is changing. And if the last year is any indication, the expected consequences of change are often wrong, at least in the short run.
