POLICY BRIEFING ON GULF COAST RECOVERY EFFORTS IN LOUISIANA

Wednesday, March 8, 2006

Aboard Air Force One

Karl Rove

Background:

You will receive a briefing from Don Powell and members of the Louisiana Recovery Authority on the progress on the rebuilding and recovery efforts in New Orleans and throughout the state.

Louisiana Recovery Authority

The Louisiana Recovery Authority (LRA) is a 26-member body appointed by Governor Kathleen Blanco (D) after Hurricane Katrina to lead implementation of a locally driven plan for the redevelopment of devastated parts of Louisiana. After you submitted to Congress your FY2006 hurricane supplemental request – which included an additional $4.2 billion in Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) funding for Louisiana – the LRA announced a $7.5 billion Homeowner Recovery Plan called “Rebuild Louisiana” and made it available for public comment. The plan, which would harness the new CDBG funding (as well as Federal funds that have already been appropriated), would compensate uninsured or underinsured homeowners who experienced significant damage as a result of Hurricanes Katrina and/or Rita, with a maximum payment of $150,000 per household.

The most recent data from HUD and FEMA indicate that there are approximately 35,000 significantly damaged owner-occupied units in Louisiana that did not have flood insurance. In addition, approximately 67,000 underinsured owner-occupied units would be eligible for assistance.

Participants:

Mrs. Laura Bush

Don Powell, Federal Coordinator For Gulf Coast Rebuilding

Louisiana Recovery Authority Officials

VISIT TO NEW ORLEANS AREA

Wednesday, March 8, 2006

9:20 a.m. – 10:50 a.m.

New Orleans Area

New Orleans, Louisiana

Karl Rove

I. PURPOSE

To visit a levee and to deliver a statement to the press regarding progress on fortifying the levees, clearing debris, and other recovery efforts.

II. BACKGROUND

Inner Harbor Navigational Canal

The Inner Harbor Navigational Canal, which is commonly known as the Industrial Canal, is a 5.5-mile waterway that runs through New Orleans. This waterway connects the Mississippi River to Lake Pontchartrain and to the Mississippi River Gulf Outlet (MRGO), a 66-mile channel that provides a route to the Gulf of Mexico. During Hurricanes Katrina and Rita, storm surge funneled by the MRGO pressured the Industrial Canal and levees in the surrounding area, resulting in 23 breaches that flooded St. Bernard Parish, New Orleans East, and the Lower Ninth Ward. Temporary sheet piling cofferdam is being used to help fortify the Industrial Canal, providing the necessary protection as the levee and floodwall are being reconstructed. Eight construction contracts have been awarded for work along the Industrial Canal, and construction is 36-percent complete.

Overall Picture for Levee Reconstruction

Throughout the entire New Orleans hurricane protection system, sixty percent (164 of 269 miles) of the levees and floodwall systems and 48 percent (34 of 71) of pump stations were damaged. The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers and its team of contractors continue to make progress toward the goal of repairing and restoring the system to the pre-Katrina level of protection by June 1; where full restoration is not possible, equivalent interim measures (for example, using sheet pile cofferdam in place of permanent floodwalls) will be implemented by that date. The entire system will be upgraded to authorized levels of protection by September 2007.

II. BACKGROUND

Statement

Gulf Coast School Library Recovery Initiative

Mrs. Bush is announcing the Gulf Coast School Library Recovery Initiative, a new grant program designed to assist with the recovery of books, equipment, and furniture of school libraries damaged or destroyed during Hurricanes Katrina, Rita, and Wilma. The Library Recovery Initiative, led by the Laura Bush Foundation for America's Libraries, aims to help as many school libraries as possible rebuild their book collections and refurbish their facilities by the start of the 2006-07 school year.

The announcement is being made at the College Park Elementary School, which took in Gautier Elementary School's 140 students when that school was completely flooded by Hurricane Katrina. College Park Elementary and Gautier Elementary are less than three miles apart.

Home Construction

Akins Family

Jerry (69) and Elaine (58) Akins of Gautier suffered severe damage to their home during Hurricane Katrina. Following the storm, they had their home torn down; on October 29, 2005, reconstruction began. The Akins received FEMA Living Assistance and an SBA loan worth $216,000 at a 2.3 percent interest rate. Until the house is completed, Jerry and Elaine are living in an apartment 15 miles away in Vancleave, Mississippi.

Jerry retired in 1995 after working for Chevron for 32 years; he is also a former Marine. Jerry has two grown children from his first marriage who reside in Pascagoula, Mississippi, and Elaine has one grown daughter. They have no children together.

Wednesday, March 8, 2006

5:25 p.m. – 5:30 p.m.

Diplomatic Reception Room

I. PURPOSE

To participate in a photo-op with Dr. Mudawi Ibrahim Adam, Chair of the Sudan Social Development Organization (SUDO).

II. BACKGROUND

Dr. Mudawi Ibrahim Adam is Chair of SUDO, a group that monitors human rights abuses in Darfur and reports on the Sudanese government's role in the activities there. In an attempt to silence Dr. Mudawi, the Sudanese authorities have jailed him three times in the past 18 months – at times in solitary confinement – without access to a lawyer, his family, or medical attention. While Dr. Mudawi is currently out of jail, the charges against him – which include a possible death sentence – have not been dropped.

Dr. Mudawi does not believe the present international effort, led by the African Union, is sufficient to end the crisis. He supports a new initiative that would be led by the United Nations and specifically advocates for the appointment of a “highly visible and well-respected” UN Envoy who would work to solve the crisis.

Dr. Mudawi, 50, is an engineer by trade. He is married and has four children.

Note: Dr. Mudawi and Tom Bernstein of Human Rights First, a human rights advocacy organization, are meeting with Mike Gerson and National Security Council staff today.

III. PARTICIPANTS

"Truce and Troops – Peacemakers and Peacekeepers," Washington Times, Wednesday, March 8, 2006

"Truce and Troops – Peacemakers and Peacekeepers"

Washington Times

Wednesday, March 8, 2006

By Dr. Mudawi Ibrahim Adam and Jill Savitt

Dr. Mudawi Ibrahim Adam is the Chair of the Sudan Social Development Organization (www.sudosudan.org) in Khartoum, Sudan. Jill Savitt is the Campaign Director of New York-based Human Rights First (www.HumanRightsFirst.org).

Unless more is done immediately to end the slaughter of innocents in Darfur, historians may treat today's world leaders about as kindly as the Government of Sudan is currently treating its own people.

History is instructive. In the early 1940s, Allied leaders dismissed reports of what was happening in concentration camps as exaggerated. It wasn't until late in the war that those who managed to escape finally convinced world leaders otherwise. After the war, leaders came together and pledged "never again." But never again has become again and again -- in Cambodia, Uganda, Bosnia, Rwanda, Chechnya and now in Darfur.

The Sudanese government and its hired killers, the Janjaweed, regularly sweep into villages and camps of displaced people to murder, loot and rape. Hundreds of thousands of innocents have died and the slaughter continues today, right now. What is happening in Darfur can only be described as savagery. The question before the world, therefore, is: what is to be done?

Currently, the public debate is focused on peacekeepers - that is, troops for civilian protection. To the extent that civilians are protected now, it is by a struggling African Union force; the African Union is the organization of African states founded for mutual cooperation on the continent. The African Union forces face nearly insurmountable obstacles - of limited resources, communications, and perhaps worst, authority.

The United Nations and major world powers, including the United States, are currently debating how to transform this African Union force into a U.N. operation to make it into a larger, better equipped force. In fact, in early February, when the United States assumed its month-long presidency of the U.N. Security Council, one of the first steps was to request that the Secretary-General begin planning for a greater U.N. military role in Darfur; the U.N. is waiting to learn whether the African Union supports this. President Bush also recently called for a stronger international peacekeeping force, which would include a role for NATO, and asked Congress to approve more than $500 million for peacekeeping and humanitarian aid in Sudan.

While these were welcome moves -- it is imperative to protect civilians with a strong, highly mobile, well equipped force -- they are not enough.

Despite recent steps forward, western and other governments will be highly reluctant, over the long term, to commit their own troops to intervene in a situation where the prospects for peace are remote and where the likelihood is great that many of their own soldiers will be killed and seriously wounded. Add to this the issue of cost and the complicated politics of the U.N. Security Council. It's a matter of political will. In reality, peacekeepers will not be on the ground in Darfur any time soon. And even when they do arrive, civilians will still be at risk. The process of peacekeeping will be unending unless we address peacemaking with the same urgency.

The world, therefore, needs to focus not just on troops, but on truce as well. As it stands, peacemaking efforts are faltering. The current African Union peace talks taking place in Abuja, Nigeria are at a standstill on key issues of security and power sharing. One major problem is that they are not inclusive of all stakeholders to the conflict. While it is hoped that there will be progress in Abuja, reports from the talks suggest that whatever gets done will be insufficient to sustain a lasting peace.

It is now clear that what's needed is something bolder, a jolt of adrenaline to peacemaking and a visible symbol for peace: an international figure to jump-start and lead the diplomatic process. Ideally this new envoy would be appointed by the United Nations and strongly supported by the Bush Administration. This high profile leader's entry into the process would signal a new resolve by the international community, especially the United States, to deal with the slaughter.

Can one individual make a difference? Quite simply: yes. The Bush Administration dispatched John Danforth to Sudan to help successfully negotiate a peace between the Khartoum government and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement. The Clinton Administration turned to George Mitchell to negotiate the Good Friday agreement in Northern Ireland.

In Darfur, an envoy could energize stalled discussions on security and on power sharing among all parties -- including tribal leaders, refugees and civil society -- and put much greater pressure on the Sudanese government and others who have taken up arms to stop the violence. An envoy of sufficient clout and profile could keep the Darfur story on the front page of newspapers and coalesce other governments behind a unified message. But most important, perhaps, an envoy could start immediately -- and start saving lives now.

After World War II, when asked how they looked away, leaders claimed ignorance of the atrocities as they were happening. But today, the evil in Darfur is well documented. Parade magazine, of all sources, recently ranked the President of Sudan, Omar al Bashir, #1 on its list of the "World's Worst Dictators" of 2006.

That's why the United Nations should immediately appoint a highly visible and well-respected international figure to address, and end, the slaughter in Darfur. Peacekeepers alone cannot solve the problem. Darfur needs peacemakers as well.
