This is Anna, Executive Secretary to Snow Peabody, Executive Director for Teen Challenge of Arizona. I am using my email address to send this message from Snow. Here is his message:

We are trying to keep our staff apprised regarding the faith-based issue nationally and I was curious if there is an update that you can give me at this time, especially since I have heard that John Dilulio was resigning from the head of the Faith Based Initiative. As you know, we are very interested in seeing this succeed on behalf of our Teen Challenge Centers across the country. Please let me know if I can be of any further help. I would like to get an update from you to pass on to our staff here at Teen Challenge of Arizona.

Thank you for the work you are doing. We keep all of you in our prayers and ask for God's wisdom in all of the matters with which you are dealing.

Snow Peabody
Executive Director
Teen Challenge of Arizona, Inc.

Prayer in school debate 'heated'

Professor claims current system is fair to everybody

BY BJ GOERGEN

Staff writer

The role of religion and faith in America's culture sparked a heated debate Tuesday night.

The debate, sponsored by the Young Conservatives of Texas, was held in the Barfield Drawing Room before a crowd of nearly 150 students.

"I am asking you to do a gut check against your basic concepts of freedom," said State Rep. Rick Green (R-Dripping Springs). Green told students that he disagreed with the Supreme Court's decision to outlaw prayer in public schools.

"The courts have handed down this decision based upon a faulty understanding of the separation of church and state," Green said. He argued that even ceremonial prayers are important to students because they express freedom of religion and recognize that there is a Creator.

However, Dr. Derek Davis, director of the J.M. Dawson Institute of Church-State Studies, disputed Green's viewpoints. Davis frequently gives testimonies on protecting religious liberties to institutions across America.

"Right now, we have a system that is fair to everybody," Davis said. "The Founding Fathers saw the problems when religion was a part of government."

Davis also said he believes that students have plenty of time to practice their religion without offending others.

"Students can pray before or after school," Davis said. "But they don't have to pray at a football game to express their religious freedom."

Green countered by saying that religion is the moral foundation of American culture.

He said that at one time, American schools required two textbooks. One of the books was the Bible, Green said.

Prayer in school discussion targets government's role

The government cannot endorse or promote any one religion," Davis said.

He described the court's decision to remove prayer from schools as a sign of tolerance for the other religions in America.

The debate challenged the opinion of at least one student.

"I thought I was for school prayer before tonight," Crystal White, a Rockwall sophomore, said.

"But America has become a melting pot, and our country has changed."

Spirited in St. Louis Gore, Bush vie for command in issue-focused finale

BY B.J. GOERGEN

ST. LOUIS, Mo. — In their final presidential debate Tuesday at Washington University, Vice President Al Gore and Gov. George W. Bush did not have the love fest they displayed in discussion No. 2.

Audience questions covered a variety of issues and disagreements between Gore and Bush started early.

Audience member Angie Pedik asked the candidates how the national government could get parents involved in education. Bush responded that schools should be held accountable to set high standards for educating children.

Gore countered by saying he wanted to get 100,000 new teachers in schools during the next few years and give middle-class families a $10,000-a-year tax break for college students.

College professor Steven Kussman asked the candidates about apathy among young people who say some issues don't directly affect them. Gore said, "Thank goodness we've always had enough people who have been willing to push past the fear of a broken heart and become deeply involved in forming a more perfect union [by getting involved in the political process]."

Bush answered the same question by saying, "A lot of people are sick and tired of the bitterness in Washington, D.C. and they don't want any part of politics. What I think needs to happen in order to encourage the young to become involved is to shoot straight, is to set aside the partisan differences and set an agenda that will make sense."

Even with an attempt to grasp the young vote, some felt the candidates still failed.

John Dervin, communications director for YouthVote 2000, an organization committed to getting young voters energized in this election said, "The candidates completely missed the opportunity to connect with young voters," after listening to the debate.

However, George P. Bush, chairman of Students for Bush-Cheney 2000 and George W. Bush's nephew, thought his uncle did address issues facing younger voters.

"It's up to all of us to exercise our civic duty and vote. My uncle believes that the individual has the right to make up their own decisions."

After the debate, both parties were quick to claim victory. Gore spokesman Bill Daley said, "Gore absolutely commanded the evening. He made a breakthrough this evening."

Daley also said Bush fell short because he didn't have command of his facts or of his own record.

In contrast, Bush spokeswoman Karen Hughes said, "The facts are on Bush's side. The vice president spent much of tonight on the defensive."
