Subject: 2002-2003 HoS Call List

Angela -- My apologies again for taking so long to get this done. Here is completed list for 2002 plus what we've done thus far this year. I haven't had time yet to do a thorough "scrub" to make sure I've got everything. If you see any glaring problems, please let me know and I will correct. Thanks again, Ralph

MEETING WITH MENTORS AND REMARKS ON THE FIRST ANNIVERSARY OF THE USA FREEDOM CORPS

Thursday, January 30, 2003

10:00 a.m. – 11:20 a.m.

Boys & Girls Clubs of Greater Washington – Jelleff Branch

Washington, D.C.

John Bridgeland

I. PURPOSE

To highlight the accomplishments of the USA Freedom Corps; to announce the details of your new mentoring initiative; and to announce the next phase of policy and program development at the USA Freedom Corps.

II. BACKGROUND

On January 30, 2002, you traveled to Daytona Beach, Florida, and Atlanta, Georgia, to outline your vision for the USA Freedom Corps as a White House coordinating council and office that would work to engage millions of Americans in volunteer activities in response to a broad call to service. To mark the one-year anniversary of the USA Freedom Corps, you will visit a local Boys & Girls Club and meet with participants in local mentoring programs. You then will deliver remarks to an audience of approximately 500 local young people, mentors, and leaders of national and local volunteer service organizations.

Your remarks will highlight your State of the Union mentoring initiative – a $450 million investment to help more than one million disadvantaged children, including 100,000 children of prisoners, make the transition from childhood to adolescence. The mentoring initiative is part of a new USA Freedom Corps youth achievement focus – the first of four “Volunteer Service Action Priorities” to help mobilize volunteers to meet pressing community needs. Upon arrival at the Boys & Girls Club, you will meet briefly with 10 participants in mentoring programs, including mentors, their mentees, and program leaders.

In your remarks, you will also announce that you have formed a new President’s Council on Service and Civic Participation to work with the USA Freedom Corps to support the expansion of volunteer service in America’s communities. The Council will oversee a new volunteer service awards program to recognize millions of volunteers – as well as businesses, schools, and voluntary organizations – for making a sustained commitment to volunteer service over a one-year period, and to connect them to the USA Freedom Corps.

The new Council is modeled on the President’s Council on Physical Fitness and Sports; 20 of the new 25-member Council will attend the event. The new Council members include entertainers, athletes, retired elected officials, business and media leaders, leaders of nonprofit and volunteer service organizations, and community volunteers. Darrell Green, former Washington Redskins cornerback and founder of a local organization that helps disadvantaged children, will serve as the chair of the Council; retired Senators Robert Dole and John Glenn will serve as honorary co-chairs.

VII. ATTACHMENTS

Remarks
Background on Meeting Participants

BACKGROUND ON ROUNDTABLE PARTICIPANTS

Secretary Paige will introduce and moderate the discussion.

Cecil Christian, Mentor – St. John Baptist Church Mentoring Program

Cecil Christian is a retiree of the U.S. Army and Federal workforce. He currently volunteers with several Maryland programs, including the Howard County General Hospital, St. John Baptist Church Mentoring Program, and American Red Cross Disaster Services. He mentors through the St. John Baptist Church Mentoring Program, which has been working for the last 11 years to meet the mentoring needs of young African American males between the ages of 10 and 17.

Gregory Burks, Mentee

Gregory Burks graduated as an honors student at River Hills High School in Columbia, Maryland, in May 2002. He has been a participant in the St. John Baptist Church Mentoring program for more than four years. His long-term goals are to become an architectural engineering designer, to realize his full potential, and to be a positive role model for his younger brother.

Lenwood "Lenny" Compton, AmeriCorps Member and USA Freedom Corps Greeter

Lenny Compton is a full-time college student and an AmeriCorps member, serving approximately 15 hours each week with the AmeriCorps Oakland program. As part of his service, Lenny works at a local Pontiac, Michigan, elementary school tutoring students in grades 1 to 3 in reading and writing. He also works at PATH (Pontiac Area Transitional Housing), providing academic help to children in their after-school program. For the past four years, Lenny has been an active volunteer with MALD (Michigan Association for Leadership Development), a program that provides positive role models and mentors for young African American men ages 10 to 16. Through this program, Lenny has adopted two young men as little brothers, checking in with them daily, bringing them to church with him on Sundays, and taking them to sporting events and other fun activities. You met Lenny on arrival in Detroit, Michigan, this fall. Lenny was also Mrs. Bush's guest for the State of Union.

Erica Nicole Griffin, Mentor – U.S. Dream Academy

Erica Griffin is a 20-year-old student at American University. Erica's biological father has been in and out of jail throughout her life. She was fortunate to have a stepfather who filled the void for her father, who continues to live a difficult and dangerous life and to be in and out of prison to this day. Erica has been a mentor with the U.S. Dream Academy and has been paired with her mentee, Jessica, for more than a year. The U.S. Dream Academy is a youth-focused, after-school program that works to break the alarming cycle of multigenerational involvement in the criminal justice system, effectively lifting children with family histories of incarceration and those falling behind in school out of a devastating cycle of failure.

Jessica Glover, Mentee

Jessica Glover is a 12-year-old student at Malcolm X Elementary School, in Washington, D.C. Her father has been in and out of jail throughout her life and has exhibited violent behavior toward his family. Jessica, like her mentor Erica, has a stepfather who has tried to fill the gap for her absent father. Jessica is a special education student and has struggled with school for many years. She has been coming to the U.S. Dream Academy for more than a year. She has made tremendous academic progress during that period, moving from a third-grade class to a sixth-grade class. Jessica is aware that her father is not around because he has done bad things to others, but may not fully comprehend that he is incarcerated. According to the staff of the U.S. Dream Academy, this is a common situation among this young people with a parent in prison.

Lt. Mark Harris, Mentor – Big Brothers Big Sisters

Mark Harris is currently a Lieutenant in the U.S. Coast Guard and a participant in a graduate school program at the University of Maryland. A graduate of the U.S. Coast Guard Academy, Mark became a Big Brother while at the academy. In 1998, after relocating to the Washington, D.C., area, Mark became a Big Brother with the Prince George's County Big Brothers Big Sisters program. That program is a leader in youth development in the National Capital Area, and it is dedicated to one-on-one mentoring relationships that unite children from single-parent families with caring and committed adult volunteers. Mark is also active in a spiritual mentoring program for young men without male role models in their lives. It is sponsored by his church, the First Baptist Church of Glenarden, where you spoke on Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Day.

Antonio Maurise Harris, Mentee

Antonio Harris is an eighth-grade student at Charles Carrol Middle School in New Carrollton, Maryland. Antonio became Mark's little brother in March 1999, and he is also a member of the First Baptist Church of Glenarden. Antonio aspires to attend college and play basketball.

Angela Rice, Mentor – Best Friends

Angela Rice has been an English teacher at Jefferson Junior High School in Washington, D.C., for the past 20 years. She is the Best Friends coordinator at Jefferson Junior High as well as a mentor with the program, which she helped to establish there 15 years ago when Jefferson was just the second school in the country to participate in Best Friends. The Best Friends Foundation provides to girls and boys a long-term youth development, school-based program with a character-building curriculum that promotes messages of abstinence from drug and alcohol use and premarital sex.

LaTanya Bolden, Mentee

LaTanya Bolden is a ninth-grade honors student at Jefferson Junior High School. She has participated in the Best Friends program as a "Best Friends Girl" for four years and participates in the Diamond Girls Jazz Choir and the Jefferson Junior High School Band.

Karin Walser, Founder, Executive Director, and President of Horton's Kids

Karin Walser is the Founder, Executive Director, and President of Horton's Kids, Inc., a nonprofit tutoring and mentoring program that serves more than 300 underprivileged children who live in the Anacostia area of Washington, D.C. The organization's purpose, as reflected in its mission statement, is to "instill in southeast Washington's disadvantaged youth the knowledge, the support, and the sense of hope to realize their full potential and to live productive lives." Founded 14 years ago, the program uses two full-time staff persons and 300 volunteer mentors, many of whom work on Capitol Hill. Karin is herself a former Capitol Hill staffer, having served as press secretary and communications director to former Congressman Joe Moakley (D, MA), and as communications director to Senator Byron L. Dorgan (D, ND) and former Congressman Vic Fazio (D, CA).

Thursday, January 30, 2003

2:20 p.m. – 2:35 p.m.

Oval Office

Karl Rove

I. PURPOSE

To meet and pose for a photograph with Art Linkletter and Charlie Jarvis.

II. BACKGROUND

Art Linkletter serves as the Honorary National Chairman and spokesperson for the United Seniors Association (USA), a grassroots organization that supports your growth and jobs package. Mr. Linkletter, who turns 91 in June, has met every President since Truman and is a friend of Former President and Mrs. Bush. Charlie Jarvis is the CEO of USA and will accompany Mr. Linkletter.

USA is a nonprofit, nonpartisan organization founded in 1991. With 1.5 million activists nationwide, USA is one of the leading advocacy groups for senior citizen activists who want to cut taxes, safeguard the Social Security Trust Fund, and improve Social Security and Medicare.

USA supported the 2001 tax cut and ran ads in key battleground states in 2002 supporting Republican-led initiatives for seniors.

Note: You will present Mr. Linkletter with the National Humanities Medal on February 27, 2003, at an East Room event. He has been notified of this recognition.

Background on Participants

BACKGROUND ON PARTICIPANTS

Art Linkletter

Mr. Linkletter, the Chairman of USA, has been involved in show business for more than 60 years. His best-known shows established records for longevity: People Are Funny ran on NBC-TV and Radio for 19 years and was rated in the Top 10 for more than 11 years; and House Party ran on CBS-TV and Radio for 25 years and was one of the top daytime shows from the day of its first broadcast in 1945, winning two Emmy Awards, as well as numerous other nominations for awards. In addition, Mr. Linkletter starred in and coproduced many television specials, as well as acting in dramatic television shows and several motion pictures.

Mr. Linkletter has written 23 books, of which Kids Say The Darndest Things was one of the top 14 best-sellers in American publishing history (number one for two consecutive years).

Mr. Linkletter served on President Nixon's National Advisory Council for Drug Abuse Prevention, President Nixon's Commission to Improve Reading in the United States, and President Reagan's Commission on Fitness and Physical Education; and he was named Ambassador to Australia and Commissioner General to the 150th Australian Anniversary Celebration by President Reagan.

Mr. Linkletter has served on many Boards, including MGM, Western Airlines, Kaiser Hospitals, and the French Foundation for Alzheimer's disease. As Chairman of Linkletter Enterprises, he oversees businesses involved in the building and management of public storage properties, office buildings, cow-calf operations, real estate development, cattle and sheep stations in Australia, and various oil enterprises around the world.

Mr. Linkletter attended but did not graduate from San Diego College (now San Diego State University).

Charlie Jarvis

Mr. Jarvis is CEO of USA. He is widely respected as a businessman, grassroots strategist, and policy expert with a national reputation. He has appeared on many national television and radio shows, as well as in many periodicals.

Mr. Jarvis has served in senior executive positions in the corporate world, the administrations of Presidents Reagan and Bush, as Legislative Director for U.S. Senator Charles Grassley (R, IA), and Executive Vice President of Focus on the Family.

He holds degrees from the University of Virginia and George Mason University School of Law.

Note: Mr. Jarvis, representing USA, assisted two of Mrs. Bush's State of the Union guests (Mr. and Mrs. Richard "Bud" Beck) with their travel and lodging while in Washington, D.C.

I. PURPOSE

To pose for departure photos with Noreen Hynes, Seth Carus, and Danner Bethel, and to thank them for their service.

II. BACKGROUND

You will pose for departure photos with the following three individuals and their families.

Noreen Hynes and Seth Carus are married. They joined the Vice President's staff shortly after September 11 to work on homeland security issues. Both were actively involved in several critical homeland security initiatives, including the recent announcement of your smallpox policy. They will be returning to the National Defense University and the Department of Health and Human Services, respectively.

Danner Bethel began working as a volunteer on your gubernatorial campaign in 1994. He worked in the Governor's Policy Office and later headed the Austin office of State-Federal Relations. After working in the Policy Office on the Bush for President campaign, he moved to Washington with his wife Tracy and was the Deputy Director of Scheduling for Research and Vetting at the White House. In October 2001, Danner became Deputy Chief of Staff for Secretary Paige. He, his wife Tracy, and their infant son Jake are relocating to Denver, Colorado, in February.

Subject: POOL REPORT #1, 01/30/03

Pool Report #1 1/30/03 - Meeting with Italian Prime Minister Silvio Berlusconi

POTUS began by thanking Berlusconi for signing a European leaders' letter calling Saddam Hussein "a clear threat to peace." Asked if he would let Saddam "slip into exile," POTUS replied that the process for Iraq to comply "is a matter of weeks, not months."

"For the sake of peace, this issue must be resolved," he said. "Hopefully, the pressure of the free world will convince Mr. Saddam Hussein to leave power, and should he choose to leave the country, along with many of the other henchman who have tortured the Iraqi people, we would welcome that, of course."

POTUS said use of military troops was his last choice, not his first. "I understand the costs of war, but I also understand the costs of inaction."

Berlusconi said "we know" Saddam Hussein has chemical and biological weapons and he must reveal them. "If we are all united" - Europe, Russia, the U.S., under UN auspices - then Saddam will have no choice but to disarm, Berlusconi said.

POTUS then said that whether Saddam leaves power or not, Iraq must still disarm. "The goal of disarming Iraq still stays the same, regardless of who's in charge of the government." After a war, food and supplies would follow quickly.

See transcript, forthcoming soon, for more quotes.

Berlusconi spoke in English at first, then switched to Italian through an interpreter, though he corrected her translation at one point.

Your pool got one question, the Italian press got one question to Berlusconi - they tried to ask POTUS one as well but Ari cut them off - and then the meeting began.

Subject: REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT AND ITALIAN PRIME MINISTER BERLUSCONI IN PHOTO OPPORTUNITY

THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary

For Immediate Release

January 30, 2003

The Oval Office

12:13 P.M. EST

THE PRESIDENT: I will make an opening statement; Silvio will make an opening statement; we'll have one question from the Americans, one question from the Italians. We're running a little late -- we'd like to spend hours answering your questions, but the problem is we've got other matters to work on.

First, it's my honor to welcome Silvio Berlusconi back, he is a personal friend. Italy is a great friend of America, America is a great friend of Italy. The Prime Minister and I will of course be talking about a lot of matters, the most significant matter will be how to keep the peace, how to make the world a peaceful place.

I am most grateful that the Prime Minister signed a letter, along with other leaders of European countries, which clarified the issue that we're dealing with -- and that is that Saddam Hussein is a clear threat to peace. It was a strong statement. It also was a statement of solidarity with the United States, and I appreciated that very much.

THE PRIME MINISTER: Thank you.

THE PRESIDENT: I appreciate your friendship. I welcome you back to the Oval Office and look forward to having a long and fruitful discussion.

THE PRIME MINISTER: We are here for good work, for a just cause and for everybody, I think. And I am here with a friend, with a country, that is the best friend of my country.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, thank you. And your English is very good.

THE PRIME MINISTER: No, no. I have never the time. We have so much to do in Italy, I have not time to --

THE PRESIDENT: Not the time to practice?

THE PRIME MINISTER: -- to learn better English.

THE PRESIDENT: Well, thank you for that kind comment. Ron.

Q Sir, are you open to giving Saddam a final deadline, and you willing to let him slip into exile -- this, a man who recently said he wants to break the neck of our country?

THE PRESIDENT: First, let me echo the comments of my National Security Advisor, who the other day in commenting about this process said this is a matter of weeks, not months. In other words, for the sake of peace, this issue must be resolved. Hopefully, it can be done peacefully. Hopefully the pressure of the free world will convince Mr. Saddam Hussein to relinquish power. And should he choose to leave the country, along with a lot of the other henchmen who have tortured the Iraqi people, we would welcome that, of course.

I will tell my friend, Silvio, that the use of military troops is my last choice, not my first. The commitment of young men and Americans into battle is a difficult decision, because I understand the cost of war. But I also understand the cost of inaction. There is a high price to be paid for the civilized world by not enforcing the opinion of the world, which was for Saddam Hussein to disarm.

There's a reason why leaders around the world believe he ought to disarm. There's a reason why the Security Council of the United Nations voted 15-0 to say to Saddam, disarm -- and that's because he's dangerous.

Would you care to call on somebody from the Italian press?

THE PRIME MINISTER: In Italy, I already said it, I have the opportunity to say that we have always been the faithful ally country of United States, we are close friends of the United States, also in this case.

I believe that the moment has arrived to find out where all the weapons of mass destruction that Saddam Hussein said he had, where they ended up. We really fear that after the series of terrorist attack, which culminated with the attacks on September 11th, there is the intention of the terrorists is to really come to a terrible disaster. And to do so, they have to avail themselves of the biological, chemical weapons that we know were available as Saddam Hussein.

Therefore, on the basis of the United Nations Security Council Resolution 1441, Saddam Hussein has to reveal and account for the weapons that we know he has. So the decision on face rests in his hands. We all want peace.

And I'm here today to help my friend, President Bush, to convince everybody that this is in the interest of everybody. And if we are all united, the European Union, the United States, the Federation of Russia, everybody, all the other states under the United Nations, then Saddam Hussein will understand that he will have no other option but to reveal the arms and to destroy them.

THE PRESIDENT: Along those lines, let me make one clarification on my statement. I think that no matter how Mr. Saddam is dealt with, the goal of disarming Iraq still stays the same, regardless of who is in charge of the government. And that's very important for the Iraqi people to know.

And I also want to assure Silvio that should we require military action, shortly after our troops go in, will go food and medicine and supplies to the Iraqi people. We will, of course, win militarily, if we have to. But we'll also want to make sure that we win the peace, as well.

Would you care to call on somebody in the Italian press?

Q Mr. Prime Minister, I just had a question. You expressed your sentiment to friendship for the United States, and loyalty. Now, will you be ready to commit Italy to go along with the United States should the United States put together a coalition of the willing, as the President has said?

And to you, Mr. President, do you expect Mr. Berlusconi --

MR. DICKENS: Only one question.

THE PRESIDENT: I would have answered it, but they said, no. (Laughter.)

THE PRIME MINISTER: We will never forget that we owe our freedom -- our freedom -- our wealth to the United States of America. And our democracy. And we also will never forget there have been many American young lives that were lost and sacrifice themselves for us.

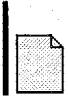

So for us, the United States is not only our friend, but they are the guarantee of our democracy and our freedom. And I already has the opportunity to say this to President Bush, every time I see the U.S. flag, I don't see the flag only representative of a country, but I see it as a symbol of democracy and of freedom.

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you, sir. Thanks.

James S. Brady Press Briefing Room

2:04 P.M. EST

MR. FLEISCHER: Good afternoon. I want to give you a report. It's been a busy day on both the domestic and diplomacy fronts, so I have several reports to give you. Let me start with the President's schedule.

The President had his intelligence briefing this morning; then the FBI briefing. The President then left the White House en route to travel to the Boys & Girls Club here in Washington to announce the new domestic initiative to promote mentoring across America, and to announce a new group on the one-year anniversary of USA Freedom Corps that is designed to usher in more volunteerism across America and more mentors across America.

This group will represent the new Council, and it includes a list that has been provided to you earlier, that includes people such as Sean Aston, who, of course, was Frodo's friend, Sam, in the Lord of the Rings; former Senators Bob Dole and John Glenn; Cal Ripken, formally with the Baltimore Orioles; Darrell Green, formally of the Washington Redskins, and many others, all designed to follow through on the President's State of the Union about the importance of increasing volunteerism and mentoring throughout America.

The President then returned to the White House where he had a meeting in the Oval Office with the Prime Minister of Italy, Prime Minister Berlusconi. He had lunch with Prime Minister Berlusconi. I'll get to that in a minute. He is currently meeting with the Foreign Minister of Saudi Arabia. And this evening he will welcome to the White House the combatant commanders for their semi-annual visit to Washington.

Let me share with you several pieces of information. On the domestic front, the Senate has begun the year with signs of progress. In the Senate Finance Committee, the Finance Committee today passed out unanimously, voted unanimously to support the President's nominee for the Secretary of Treasury, John Snow. The President is grateful for this action. He thinks it's very important that he be allowed to have his full economic team in place.

He would like to thank Chairman Grassley and Democratic Leader Baucus for their bipartisan efforts. Senator Baucus noted it's important for this vote to be taken up on the floor of the Senate today. The President agrees. For the good of the economy, it's important for the Senate to move quickly in a bipartisan way to confirm the Secretary of the Treasury.

In a slightly more partisan way, the Senate Judiciary Committee today, on a party-line vote, reported out Miguel Estrada for the Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit. The President is pleased that this is the first of the nominees that he had named early last year whose appointments had been blocked by the previous Senate, and now action is beginning so the judiciary emergency vacancy can be filled. The President is very grateful to Chairman Hatch of the Senate Judiciary Committee for the action, and he looks forward to passage on the floor.

On the foreign policy front, number one, the President would like to thank the leaders of eight European nations who signed the op/ed that ran in the European versions of many newspapers today. The President is very grateful to these eight European leaders, and to others who are supportive of his efforts to make certain that Saddam Hussein is disarmed.

The President had a very successful meeting with Prime Minister Berlusconi. The two agreed about the importance of disarming Saddam Hussein. The President emphasized once again that he hopes to do this peacefully, and the two agreed about the importance of continued consultation and cooperation, as we will keep in touch with our good friends, the Italians.

The President also made a series of phone calls this morning. I mentioned yesterday that we are now entering in this final stage a diplomatic window, and the President is very busy talking to leaders throughout Europe and throughout the world about the situation in Iraq and how this can be resolved so Saddam Hussein does disarm.

He spoke this morning with Portuguese Prime Minister Barossa. The President thanked the Prime Minister for his public support on Iraq and asked the Prime Minister to pass along his thanks to the Portuguese people for their longstanding friendship that they have shown for the United States. The President listened carefully to the Prime Minister's views on the next steps in addressing Iraq's continued refusal to disarm itself from weapons of mass destruction. Both agreed on the importance of consulting with other members of the international community regarding Iraq. The two leaders agreed to stay in close touch and continue consultations.

The President this morning also called Swedish Prime Minister Person. They had a very friendly discussion and they agreed that Saddam Hussein must disarm, and they need to work together to accomplish that goal. The President said he would continue to seek common ground with leaders, and he noted that time was running out. The President will, again, look forward to continuing this consultation with the Swedish Prime Minister.

And then, finally, President Bush, of course, tomorrow will be pleased to welcome British Prime Minister Blair to Camp David. The Prime Minister was President Bush's first guest at Camp David two years ago, and tomorrow's meeting is another in a continuous series of consultations on a variety of important issues, including Iraq. I expect the two leaders will talk about a range of issues, including Iraq, the Middle East, the war on terror, and ways that we can, together in concert with friends and allies, fight the spread of weapons of mass destruction. The President values Prime Minister Blair's leadership and will listen carefully to what the Prime Minister has to say.

With that, I'm happy to take your questions. David.

Q On the question of exile for Saddam Hussein, is the administration prepared to propose something in a specific and detailed way to back such a move? Or will it simply be satisfied to say publicly, as the President did today, that that would be a good thing if that were to emerge out of the region, if the Saudis push that or if others pushed that and Saddam were to agree? And a second piece to that, any indications? Is the world getting any indication that Saddam would agree to such a thing?

MR. FLEISCHER: Number one, it would be a very desirable event if Saddam Hussein were to leave Iraq. That would be one way for peace to be preserved. And the President hopes that can happen. Whether it will happen or not, I don't think anybody can guess or count on. The only person who know whether that will happen is Saddam Hussein. And the most likely way to make it happen is through continued growing pressure on Saddam Hussein. The less pressure, the less likely it is. The more pressure, the more the likelihood. But it's very hard to assess how likely it will be. And it's very hard to understand what Saddam Hussein has done, let alone to predict what he will do.

As for the question about how that would be treated, this will be an international matter. This is not a matter for the Americans to decide. It would be something that would be discussed in concert with friends and allies. And I couldn't possibly guess or speculate what any outcomes may or may not be.

Q But the pressure is being brought to bear primarily by the United States. We're the ones who have the troops there in the largest numbers. So if we're really committed to putting that on the table, is this administration prepared to put together a concrete proposal to suggest to Saddam that he might take?

MR. FLEISCHER: Again, I think the first thing that would be important is for Saddam Hussein to leave. And again, as I indicated to you -- you are accurate in pointing out that much of the military presence is America. But any such matter -- whether it would or would not come up -- would be an international matter, not a uniquely American one.

Q Are you saying he has leave first?

Q Ari, on your weeks and months formulation, is this a rejection of calls for more time for the weapons inspectors? And is it a deadline?

MR. FLEISCHER: Well, number one, the reason the President said weeks not months is because he does not want to repeat the mistakes of the '90s, where Saddam Hussein once again games the world, strings things out and continues to hide his weapons. There does come a point at which the world can judge whether or not Saddam Hussein is complying and is disarming. It doesn't take a long time to know if Saddam Hussein is disarming or not. And the President has expressed that as weeks not months.

Q Does that mean that the President would not agree to an extension of the mandate of the weapons inspectors?

MR. FLEISCHER: The extension -- there is no time period for the inspectors. The inspectors have a mission until their mission is deemed by the United Nations Security Council to have run its fruitful course.

Q So by saying weeks not months, has he effectively set a deadline?

MR. FLEISCHER: Well, again, the President has said that he has not made a decision about military action, if that's what you mean. But the President is clearly sending a message to Saddam Hussein and to our friends and allies that there is no point in repeating the mistakes that have been made before which allowed Saddam Hussein to bob and weave, to hide and to dodge, to cheat and retreat. We will not repeat and return to that era. (Laughter.)

Q I don't know whether I can follow that poetry. (Laughter.)

MR. FLEISCHER: What do you have? (Laughter.)

Q Not even going to go there.

Q Cheat and retreat.

Q In terms of this idea of weeks not months, if the President is as certain --

MR. FLEISCHER: That was inadvertent, by the way. (Laughter.)

Q When you got it, you got it. (Laughter.)

MR. FLEISCHER: I wouldn't even know how I said it if you didn't laugh.

Q If the President is as certain as he was in the State of the Union address on Tuesday night that Saddam Hussein is not disarming and is playing, as you say, cheat and retreat with weapons inspectors, why does he feel the need to wait at all? And in terms of making the decision, what more evidence does he need? Because as you have been quick to point out, you already have all the authorization you need to go to war, if necessary.

MR. FLEISCHER: In the phone calls the President is making to world leaders, and in his meeting with Prime Minister Berlusconi, the President is emphasizing how important it is to let diplomacy run its course to the greatest degree that it can solve this problem. The President is serious about consultation. The President is serious about diplomacy. He hopes it will work, and he wants to give it time to work. But diplomacy never works if it's diplomacy forever in the face of a threat like Saddam Hussein. And that's a lesson the world has seen over the last 10 years, unlimited diplomacy leads to unlimited running around by Saddam Hussein to continue to develop his weapons.

Q Sure. But you also said zero tolerance last fall. The President has said that he's in material breach. He's said he's not cooperating with weapons inspectors.

MR. FLEISCHER: Correct.

Q And he is not disarming. He's said that he is in violation of Resolution 1441. Zero tolerance? Where's the zero tolerance?

MR. FLEISCHER: The President will let you know when it reaches the point where it is down to zero. The President has said that it is the final phase. He does have zero tolerance. If you're asking why isn't there military action today, the answer is because the President is serious about consulting with our friends and allies, as he promised he would do.

Q We do know something that -- you said, the President wants to let diplomacy run its course, but we know that course won't extend more than eight weeks from today.

MR. FLEISCHER: The President said weeks not months.

Q So we will be either at war, or Saddam will have disarmed within eight weeks?

MR. FLEISCHER: The President said weeks not months. I think Saddam Hussein needs to figure out what that means. And hopefully, it will help to disarm. If it doesn't, the President has made clear, he will lead a coalition to disarm him.

Q And it is important for the American people to know, as well, that it's a matter of weeks then.

MR. FLEISCHER: The President did say it for a reason.

Q And could you just clear up one thing that's caused some, perhaps misunderstanding and anxiety, and that's, what specifically is the administration's doctrine for the use of nuclear weapons in any war with Iraq?

MR. FLEISCHER: It's exactly as I said last week and as Secretary Rumsfeld has said, that America's policy involving nuclear weapons is to not rule anything in, not rule anything out. We do not comment about potential use of nuclear weapons.

Q Is there any greater likelihood that nuclear weapons would be used by the United States in this war than in any previous conflict?

MR. FLEISCHER: It is a deliberately ambiguous statement.

Q Senator Kennedy had a speech yesterday. Are you going to be able to provide the undeniable proof to silence the critics?

MR. FLEISCHER: Again, I think people will judge the information that they already have had. I think that most Americans, even before the State of the Union, agreed that Saddam Hussein was a threat and that they would support the judgment if the President were to make it to use force to remove the threat from Saddam Hussein using weapons of mass destruction that we all know, the United Nations knows and others know that he has. And we'll just leave it at that.

Q How do you respond to some of this Democratic criticism?

MR. FLEISCHER: The President respects those who disagree. After all, there were a number -- not a lot, but there were a small number of Democrats who voted against the resolution for the use of force. There was a much larger number of Democrats who voted against the resolution for the use of force in 1991. It is their prerogative, and the President respects it.

The President will continue to do what he thinks is right for the country, and in doing what he thinks is right for the country, this President is confident that his leadership will be followed and will be supported.

Q Back to the question of exile. Would the administration support an effort by the Saudis or by the international community, generally, that would specifically include amnesty from war crimes or any other charges?

MR. FLEISCHER: Let's be more specific on David's previous question. And again, the President thinks it would be in the interest of peace if Saddam Hussein were somehow to be convinced to leave the country. But beyond that, I'm not prepared to speculate about what may or may not happen. Again, that's a matter for not just the United States to have an opinion about, but the international community, and I'm not speculating.

Q But without going into details, though, have there been discussions between administration officials and other nations about what some sort of exile package might look like?

MR. FLEISCHER: Again, I'm not going to speculate about it. I think there are some things that the less said, the better, so that Saddam Hussein leaves the country. Now, don't take that to mean one way or another, but I'm just not going to speculate on the topic. The hope for peace is that Saddam Hussein leaves.

I think it's not only the hope for peace, but the hope for the future of the Iraqi people. The Iraqi people deserve a government where they're the people of Iraq. It is the Iraqi people who have to suffer under a totalitarian state and a brutal regime. It's not just American servicemen and women and people around the world and people in the region who would be spared from harm's way if Saddam Hussein were to leave. That, itself, is important. But what about the people of Iraq? They would be the biggest winners if Saddam Hussein were to leave.

Q Ari, you said that the President welcomes criticism. But how does the President feel about the fact that Edward Kennedy wants Congress to approve any military action, or Robert Byrd saying the matter should be approved by the United Nations? Does he feel that is hampering his efforts to pressure Saddam?

MR. FLEISCHER: No. I think, again, this is a democracy and people are welcome to their opinions. I think many of the opinions that you're hearing are distinct minority opinions that don't have much support on the Hill. In fact, I'm not sure, I suspect there may be some discomfort within some Democratic quarters for ideas like this because I don't think the Democrats want to have to take votes on some of these matters, necessarily.

But the President respects it; these are their opinions. And no matter what, at the end of the day, we all work together in this country of ours, and they have that right. That is the strength of our system.

Q Ari, a second question having to do with Miguel Estrada. You said today he was approved by a partisan vote in the Judiciary Committee. That will go to the floor of the Senate. There, I imagine some Democrats will also try to block his approval. Is the President working on that nomination? I think it's the first one to be passed this year, if I'm not mistaken, by the Judiciary Committee.

MR. FLEISCHER: Well, according to the information I have, it has never happened in the history of the Senate for a circuit court nominee being passed out of committee to be blocked on the floor through a filibuster. So the committee has spoken. Progress is being made. The logjam in the Senate is now breaking. And the President looks at the vote on John Snow in the Finance Committee today, and the vote on Miguel Estrada in the Judiciary Committee today as signs of progress, based on the last election where the American people said, work together and get things done. And that's why the President welcomed the action today, and he hopes that both votes will move to the floor. The American people are entitled to have an Executive Branch and a Judiciary Branch filled in, not left blank and vacant.

Q Ari, the President mentioned something that was mentioned earlier, the aluminum tubes as part of the list of evidence that the U.S. thinks that Saddam Hussein has got weapons of mass destruction. But the IAEA and other world officials -- Mohammed ElBaradei, actually, specifically said that it's just not there, that is not what that it's intended to be used for in Iraq, that it's really just conventional. Isn't there a concern that when the President and the White House make statements like that it's going to undermine your overall argument of this Mt. Everest of evidence that you say exists?

MR. FLEISCHER: No. And I'll give you three reasons why, in the President's judgment. Number one, Mohammed ElBaradei and the IAEA said that the importations of these tubes is illegal and violates the policies that Iraq committed itself to, regardless of what the IAEA has so far judged them to be. They said Iraq's actions in importing them are, in and of themselves, a violation. That should be a cause for concern, number one, about whether Iraq is disarming.

Number two, on the tubes, the IAEA has said that their investigation remains open. They have not reached final conclusions about this. On that point, therefore, to point three, there are continuing discussions with the IAEA in which information is being shared about this information. The preponderance of evidence is that Iraq attempted to procure high-strength aluminum tubes for uranium enrichment. We stand by that statement.

Our technical analysis at the extremely tight manufacturing tolerances and high-strength materials indicates the tubes far exceed any specifications required for non-nuclear capabilities. Iraq attempted to procure the tubes covertly. The cost of the tubes is far greater than what one would pay for if the tubes were just to be used for artillery. Iraq has devoted substantial efforts to concealing its nuclear program in the past. It's not surprising that it would attempt to mislead the inspectors on this issue and the inspectors have left it open because they want to continue to hear from us and to work on this before final conclusions are reached. The President stands by every word he said.

Q Is this intelligence that's already been shared with him?

MR. FLEISCHER: It's an ongoing process.

Q Will Secretary Powell outline some of that? Because it's an interesting statement --

MR. FLEISCHER: I know you will be there on Wednesday next week, so you'll find out Wednesday.

Q Ari, Prime Minister Blair is on record saying that he would like a second Security Council vote on use of force in Iraq. What's the administration's thinking at the moment about whether a second resolution would be desirable or possible?

MR. FLEISCHER: And, just as I've indicated, we will continue to consult with our friends and allies about the next course. The President does think that the United Nations is important. He hopes that they will prove to be important by taking meaningful action that results in the disarmament of Saddam Hussein so this can be resolved peacefully. But the -- as you know, the President has also said that if Saddam Hussein does not disarm, he will lead a coalition to disarm him.

Q But, you've already demonstrated that you think -- the United States -- this is important by sending Secretary Powell up there next week. On the second resolution, has there been a decision made on whether we will seek a second resolution?

MR. FLEISCHER: The decision is we will continue to consult.

Q You talked about diplomacy running its course. Could you just give us some idea what to expect, beginning with Secretary Powell's comments and running at least through the next report from the arms inspectors, which will be on the 14th of February? What do you foresee happening? What does the U.S. want to happen during that critical period?

MR. FLEISCHER: There is one thing the United States wants to see happen and that is for Saddam Hussein to disarm. That's what this is all about. Everyone of these actions, everyone of these steps, every shipment of troops is all aimed at one thing; that's the disarmament of Saddam Hussein so the threat to the world and to the region can go away.

Toward that end, what you are seeing now is a very active window of diplomacy involving the President's personal time making a series of phone calls -- which will continue -- a series of personal meetings -- which will continue -- meetings and phone calls by the Secretary of State, by others in the government. You're seeing a very active diplomacy of a kind that you saw, frankly, around the September-October period, as well. That will continue. It won't continue forever. It will continue for a finite period of time as the President has said.

Following that, I think this is then where the President will have to make a judgement about whether Saddam Hussein will indeed disarm on his own, or whether he will have to make the decision to use military force to disarm Saddam Hussein.

Q In that context, how important then is the next report from the arms inspectors on the 14th of February?

MR. FLEISCHER: I'm not going to speculate about a report that hasn't been made yet.

Q But it's obviously part of this sequencing and the last one was quite important. This is the next benchmark, if you will, about whether or not the Iraqis are actually coming clean. One would think it would weigh fairly heavily.

MR. FLEISCHER: Today is January 30th and I can't speculate about a report that is two weeks out in terms of gauging its importance. We already know from the last report that Iraq is not compliant.

Q Let me ask you one quick question about Medicare, if I will. Does the administration intend to write its own legislation, and when will we learn the details of the President's proposal?

MR. FLEISCHER: In the immediate aftermath of the State of the Union, the President is going to continue to travel the country and to make the case for the initiatives that he announced in the State of the Union. He did that today on the mentoring program. He will have more to say about the AIDS initiative to help people in Africa and the Caribbean. So you can anticipate a series of events including follow-on statements. No date is picked at this moment and we'll let you know when there is a date picked.

Q To submit legislation you mean?

MR. FLEISCHER: No, to make another speech with additional details. If you're asking about actual legislative language, I don't know if the administration is going to have a legislative language or not. That's something that typically Congress writes through legislative councils offices. But the points and the specifics will be well-known whether or not it includes legislative language or not.

Q Ari, when the President made his remarks today, when he was talking about the issue of exile, he was careful to make the point the goal here is not just to remove Saddam Hussein, but to disarm. And so, whoever comes -- if Saddam Hussein leaves, it's not an automatic that this conflict is over depending on who comes in. So can you flesh out what the administration's concerns are in that area in terms of obtaining the goal of disarmament?

MR. FLEISCHER: Well, certainly. If Saddam Hussein were to leave and the son stayed behind and the son had weapons of mass destruction, the world would be just as much at risk. The President views this as how to promote peace, and the way to promote peace is to make sure that there are no weapons of mass destruction in Iraq, just as they promised and pledged that they would not have them, and to change the regime.

Q Now, how deep in the regime does this -- would this have to go?

MR. FLEISCHER: I couldn't speculate a guess. It has to go to the point of peace. It has to go to the point where Iraq will join its proper place around the world as a peace-loving nation. And it has a peace-loving people, and so perhaps there will be a leadership in Iraq one day with a peace-loving leadership.

Q But clearly when the White House aims at the goal of disarmament and the leadership in Iraq that is also committed to that, are you all not talking about Saddam Hussein and all his top advisors are all going to be --

MR. FLEISCHER: I can't speculate -- as I indicated, I can't speculate and I don't know names.

Q This is really a follow-up to Jean. The President's words were, speaking of Saddam Hussein and the possibility of his exile, "and should he choose to leave the country along with a lot of the other henchmen who have tortured the Iraqi people, we would welcome that." That -- if you take his words literally, that appears to set a pretty precise condition that it's not enough for Saddam to leave, it has to be --

MR. FLEISCHER: That's why it's called regime change. Certainly, nobody would want to leave in place an infrastructure where they could just come back and do it again. So the point the President is making I think is a fairly obvious one, that the regime leadership has to leave, so, therefore, a new leadership can emerge that is focused on peace. I think, otherwise, you would just continue to see turmoil and strife and an Iraq that was to remilitarize. And the President does not think the world wants to repeat this position. This is a chance for the world to deal with this in a fundamental way.

Q How widespread does that have to be? How many people are we talking about --

MR. FLEISCHER: I can't make those judgments.

Q Can you set some minimum benchmarks --

MR. FLEISCHER: I can set you the principles, and the principles are, deep enough so that the leadership that emerges is a leadership dedicated to peace, not war.

Q You mentioned his son. Would his son and the other family members who are part of the regime, at a minimum, have to go?

MR. FLEISCHER: Ken, I didn't bring the family tree with me.

Q Ari, two things. Yesterday in South Africa, former President Nelson Mandela said, "All President Bush wants is Iraqi oil because Iraq produces 64 percent of the oil and he wants to get a hold of it." He also said that America is "so arrogant" that they dropped the atomic bomb on Hiroshima and Nagasaki and killed innocent people. President Bush, on the other hand, yesterday said, "either you're with us or you're with the enemy." In saying this, does the President believe that Nelson Mandela, France and Germany are with the enemy?

MR. FLEISCHER: No, on the last point. And on the first point, if this was a war for oil, the United States would be the ones saying lift the sanctions. That way Iraq could pump oil. This is about peace, and this is about protecting people in the region and the American people from Saddam Hussein who has weapons that kill millions.

Lester.

Q Can I have a second one?

MR. FLEISCHER: No, you can't, not today. We're running late.

Q On January the 27th, during his receiving an award from Ambassador Negroonte in Stamford, Connecticut, the President's father strongly denounced the Episcopal Church's presiding bishop, Frank Griswold for "highly offensive rhetoric," and Griswold saying that he has to apologize for being from the United States which is loathed and hated for indifference to human suffering -- to which the former President said, "This was uncalled for and hurt this proud father very much. I know this President better than the Bishop, and unlike the Bishop, I will never feel the need to apologize for this great country." And my question: Even though this was reported only by Fox Network, Hannedy and Colms and WorldNet Daily --

MR. FLEISCHER: And now, Lester Kensolving.

Q -- surely the President must have heard about what his father said, and so what was the President's reaction to his father's statement, Ari?

MR. FLEISCHER: Number one, Lester, I do not know what the President has heard about what his father has said, and so --

Q He doesn't know?

MR. FLEISCHER: I don't know. But even if I did, I don't talk about what the President and his father would talk about, even if they talked to each other through the media.

Q All right. I'm all but sick that you don't want to convey in that answer that you and the President don't know or care about what his father said. So could you check with Fox News and the President and have another answer at your next briefing, Ari, would you?

MR. FLEISCHER: I will.

Q You will?

MR. FLEISCHER: I will.

Q Thank you.

MR. FLEISCHER: Well, I'm kind of shaking my head ruefully. That wasn't quite a vertical shake, as much as a horizontal.

Q Do you want to leave the impression you don't care what the father said, Ari?

Q Lester has a fifth question which I'll be glad to carry for him. (Laughter.) The last time Prime Minister Blair was here, there was a lot of talk about evidence linking Iraq with continued pursuit of chemical, biological, nuclear weapons, and they referenced an IAEA report up at Camp David. It turns out this was a report that actually had been out a couple years before. Next week, Secretary of State Powell goes to the U.N. Once again we have assurances that the case convincingly can be made that Iraq has continued down this path. Will he be able to present to members of the Security Council new -- and by that I mean evidence gathered in the last three to six months, by whatever means our intelligence, intelligence from allied nations -- that will close the loop on this evidentiary-wise, and prove that this is an ongoing and current concern?

MR. FLEISCHER: Let me make a point on this issue of so-called new evidence versus existing known evidence. It doesn't matter if it's new or old if it can still kill you. So whether there is information that is one day old, or one year old that Saddam Hussein has biological and chemical weapons, the impact is not whether the information is new or old; the impact is whether he has them or not. That's what's at stake here. So whether Colin Powell has new information or old information, the point is, is the information accurate describing that Saddam Hussein has weapons of mass destruction. That's what's at stake here.

Q Some of those who have been reluctant to go along with us have, in essence, asked the question, what's the urgency, what is a sign that this is an imminent, like, immediate threat?

MR. FLEISCHER: And in that point what the President would tell you is that, one, Saddam Hussein has committed to giving up the weapons of mass destruction, and if the United Nations is to have a meaningful place in our world, the United Nations resolutions vis-a-vis Iraq to give up the weapons of mass destruction must be enforced. Otherwise, the world can never rest easy because he'll continue to have them.

Two, September 11th changed everything for the United States and, indeed, for this President. While the notion of containment may previously have made some sense prior to September 11th, September 11th changed everything because it shows that we are indeed a vulnerable country, that threats to us cannot be contained. As the President said in his State of the Union speech, imagine if any of the hijackers on September 11th had not only driven their planes into buildings, but were armed with a vial, a canister, a crate of a biological or a chemical weapon. The damage done to our country would have been massive. The risk remains and the risk is nowhere greater than under Saddam Hussein.

Q Ari, it seems that the White House is highlighting South Africa as one of the countries that disarmed. And yet, one of the former leaders of South Africa is highly critical of President Bush and his efforts to possibly go to war with Saddam Hussein. Nelson Mandela is on record as saying that --

MR. FLEISCHER: This was just asked.

Q No, not what I'm asking. He's on record of saying that President Bush has no foresight and he doesn't think properly and he's ready to throw the world into a holocaust. How can you say that you respect the people who disagree -- and he's clearly disagreeing -- but yet still highlight South Africa for disarmament? How does that mesh?

MR. FLEISCHER: I think they mesh perfectly. Number one, South Africa proved to the world that when a nation wants to disarm, it knows how to disarm. And whether a former leader of South Africa has different opinions about politics and diplomacy, that doesn't change the empirical facts of the process that South Africa used, inviting inspectors in to visibly observe disarmament take place.

And as for the statement, Nelson Mandela was a great leader, he remains a great man. But on this, the President and Nelson Mandela do not see eye to eye.

Q Has he ever taken any of Nelson Mandela's calls on this issue?

MR. FLEISCHER: As you know, they've met. I don't know if they've talked recently. I don't think they've had any phone calls recently.

Q Ari, two quick questions. Just came back from a conference in New Delhi, and Indian Americans were meeting on terrorism. They have passed a resolution and sided with President Bush for war against terrorism. Also, they are calling the President that the U.S. can do more as across the border terrorism into India. Also I'm thankful to the U.S. Ambassador to India, Ambassador Blackwell, who hosted the reception and he was very generous. Do you have any comments on how much more the President can do on cross-border terrorism in India?

MR. FLEISCHER: As you know, Secretary Powell met yesterday with the Pakistani Foreign Minister and this conversation came up. And the Secretary recommitted the United States to working with India and Pakistan to continue the reduction of tensions.

Q Ari, you said that the President has not made a decision on military action. Hasn't he made a decision, though, that if Saddam doesn't disarm within these weeks -- however many weeks we're talking about -- that at the end of those weeks that he's made a decision that he will have to resort to military action? I mean, he's made some sort of decision here in the last couple of days.

MR. FLEISCHER: I think that it's been well-known for months when the President says that if Saddam Hussein does not disarm he will lead a coalition to disarm him. So the question is, how could disarmament best be achieved. The President continues to hope it can be achieved peacefully through growing pressure. And certainly the op-ed that ran today from eight European nations, and additional letters that have now, interestingly, started to come in from a couple other European countries, makes the case that pressure will grow.

Q Could you maybe describe what decision, if any, he has made in recent days? His thinking seems to have shifted somehow. You're talking about weeks, not months; you're talking about -- you pointed out this intense diplomacy and you likened it to the September-October period last time, which was right before we waged war. So what has changed in his thinking? Has he reached a final straw now?

MR. FLEISCHER: No, I likened it to September-October when people said that nobody would follow the United States, and the United Nations passed a resolution which unanimously people followed the United States.

Q Ari, during the lead up to the Gulf War, Saddam Hussein was given a deadline for getting out of Kuwait. Obviously -- or presumably, such discussions of a deadline are part of the ongoing diplomacy. Could you share with us in general what some of the President's thinking on the value of a deadline or --

MR. FLEISCHER: Again, what the President has said is this is the time for diplomacy, and he meant it. In the event he makes the judgment that diplomacy is insufficient to protect the peace, at that point, and on the timing of the President's determination, the President would then come to the country and discuss this at far greater length. And I'm not going to go beyond that.

Q I'd like to go back to the aluminum tubes. Are you saying that the administration knows more than the inspectors do? Or are you saying that you're looking at the same evidence and reaching different conclusions? Because while you're right, the inspectors say it's an open case, they clearly say the evidence to date tends to back the Iraqi view of this, as opposed to the United States view.

MR. FLEISCHER: And it's a matter of some technical provision, technical matters, and technical people are talking about this.

Q But do you know more than they do?

MR. FLEISCHER: I don't know I can say that, yes or no. I think both the IAEA and the United States are in a position to know quite a bit, and we work together on these things -- that's the point.

Q Ari, going back to the statement you made earlier, you referred to mistakes of the '90s. Who made those mistakes?

MR. FLEISCHER: Well, I think that mistakes were made collectively that allowed Saddam Hussein to think that he could once again defy the world and keep his weapons of mass destruction. I think that's one of the issues that was very prominent last November, when the Security Council voted unanimously for a much tougher resolution than the resolutions that guided the collective will of the Security Council throughout the '90s.

Q Well, there were two administrations, obviously, in the '90s. Are you assigning blame to one of them?

MR. FLEISCHER: No, it's just as I indicated. It was the collective judgments of the '90s that had weaker resolutions in place that Saddam Hussein was able to defy.

Q Who is to blame for that?

MR. FLEISCHER: As I indicated, the collective will that led to the tougher resolutions.

Q Ari, my question is related to Bob's question, just a little bit different. Will the President and British Prime Minister Blair set a deadline for Saddam Hussein to disarm; a deadline for war if he does not?

MR. FLEISCHER: The purpose of this meeting is to consult, to listen carefully to Prime Minister Blair's idea. And then Secretary Powell will, of course, be up in New York. So, no, you will not see that this weekend at Camp David, no.

Q Senator Daschle and Congresswoman Pelosi, among others in Washington, and senior members of Tony Blair's own Labor Party in London have urged the Prime Minister to act as a restraining influence on President Bush. Is that a realistic assessment of Mr. Blair's potential influence, and how would you characterize that influence?

MR. FLEISCHER: The United States and the people of Great Britain have a very powerful bond, and that is shared by the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of Great Britain. The two don't see everything eye-to-eye; the two differ on issues sometimes. And that is a sign of a great and healthy relationship between two strong democracies. And I anticipate that the Prime Minister will share his judgments and his wisdom with the President. The President looks forward to hearing it and the two will work as they always have, together, to secure peace.

Q On the issue, though, of Iraq, is it at all fair or accurate to describe Mr. Blair's influence as being in any way that of restraint?

MR. FLEISCHER: I think that you have to ask the questions appropriately to British officials, who can make the judgments about any of the Prime Minister's thoughts. But I think that this is a question of to restrain Saddam Hussein, not to restrain anybody else.

Q Following on from my colleague's question, would you still agree, as is often said in London, that there is a special relationship between Britain and the United States?

MR. FLEISCHER: I just indicated that in different words, but of course there is. And it's a relationship that is special because of the relationship between the people of the United States and the people of Great Britain.

Q So how much influence will Mr. Blair have on the President, when the final decision, or if a decision is taken to go to war with Iraq -- how much influence --

MR. FLEISCHER: The President very much values Prime Minister Blair's advice and consultation.

Q Does the United States still have plans in place for an American or international caretaker to, in effect, take over and help the Iraqi people after Saddam Hussein?

MR. FLEISCHER: The President has made clear that if there is a decision to use military force, the United States will be committed to preserving security for the people of Iraq; that we will work closely with Iraqis inside and outside the country to protect the territorial integrity of Iraq and the unity of Iraq.

Q You know, there's resentment among moderate Democrats, particularly in the Senate, over the Republican tactics that were used against Senators Cleland and Landrieu, and there's a feeling that it may be more difficult to get those moderate votes for administration positions in the future. Does the White House regret the tone or the tenor of that campaign, or those campaigns in those two states?

MR. FLEISCHER: I don't think I've ever seen an election where either party looked at the other party after the election and said, you ran a campaign that I didn't like. Democrats say it about Republicans, Republicans say it about Democrats. It's the history of our republic.

But the fact of the matter is, when it comes to the good of the nation, all parties work together, as Senator Baucus proved on the Senate Finance Committee today with a unanimous vote to confirm Mr. Snow to Treasury.

Q Ari, if the President is serious about diplomacy and believes there's a narrow window left for peaceful disarmament, why is the President only reaching out to those countries that have come out in support of U.S. policy and a possible war? Why not arrange meetings with the leaders of France and Germany and other --

MR. FLEISCHER: First of all, there aren't very many nations to talk to in that regard. It is not a large number. And as we all know, Germany has said they are unalterably opposed to support. The President understands that. I've never said there won't be any other conversation with any other nations.

But to set the record straight, the President is spending more time talking to people who support his position because most European governments do.

Q Ari, when you referred to additional letters just now, what were you referring to?

MR. FLEISCHER: Additional letters?

Q You were talking about -- you said the eight who have signed the editorial --

MR. FLEISCHER: I saw one report on the wire that Albania has sent a letter very similar to the message that was received earlier. And I also saw a report that one of the Baltic nations has publicly announced that they, too, stand with the United States. So I think you're seeing a developing story.

Q Ari, once again, Germany and France have maneuvered and kept NATO from discussing providing aid to the United States in case of military conflict. You have said before that the President accepts that some people will stand on the sidelines, but how does he feel about what is amounting to actual instruction?

MR. FLEISCHER: Number one, the President appreciates the overwhelming majority of NATO nations who want to work in support of the American position. NATO works by consensus and the President is confident that in the end, consensus will be achieved.

Q -- a military caretaker in Iraq, does that plan still hold under the scenario that Saddam takes his top lieutenants and goes into exile?

MR. FLEISCHER: Well, what holds is that the United States is committed to the preservation of freedom and security in Iraq. The United States, if it gets to the issue of military force, will not walk away. The United States will do what is necessary to help preserve the peace -- into the future.

And as the President said today, that in the event there is military action, it will be immediately accompanied and followed by humanitarian action, food action, medical supplies action for the people of Iraq.

Q Understood. Should Saddam choose exile, will that plan for military caretaker still be in effect?

MR. FLEISCHER: Well, let Saddam choose exile first.

THE PRESS: Thank you.

MR. FLEISCHER: Thank you.

Subject: REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT ON THE FIRST ANNIVERSARY OF THE USA FREEDOM CORPS

THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary

For Immediate Release
January 30, 2003

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
ON THE FIRST ANNIVERSARY OF THE USA FREEDOM CORPS

Boys & Girls Clubs of Greater Washington - Jelleff Branch
Washington, D.C.

10:25 A.M. EST

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you all very much. Thank you all for coming. The most compassionate thing Darrell Green has done is to retire. (Laughter.) Particularly if you're a Dallas Cowboys fan. (Laughter.) The most compassionate thing Darrell Green has done is decided to lend his heart to help America be a more welcoming society for every citizen. I appreciate his leadership; I appreciate his friendship. And I appreciate the other members of the President's Council on Service and Civic Participation.

Darrell will lead this distinguished group of citizens. We have plucked two really fine Americans to be vice chairmen -- that's, of course, Senators Glenn and Dole -- distinguished Americans who have served their country in many ways.

Along with those, there's a lot of other well-known Americans who have heard a call to be responsible citizens for the future of this country by using their positions of influence and stature to rally the true strength of the country, which is the compassion of our fellow citizens. And I want to thank them for their participation in this commission.

It's a commission not only to convince our fellow citizens to love one another just like we like to be loved; it's a commission also to devise practical ways to encourage others to serve. And one practical way is for the development of an award that Americans from all walks of life all around our country will be able to post boldly on their wall, that says, "I served this great country by loving somebody." And I want to thank you all for joining us. It is an important program. (Applause.)

I want to thank members of my administration who are here who will be involved in the implementation of some of the initiatives that I've outlined to the United States Congress. The Secretary of Education is here, Rod Paige, behind me. John Ashcroft is here, the Attorney General. Rich Carmona, who is the U.S. Surgeon General, is with us today. Stephen Goldsmith, who is the chair of the Corporation for National and Community Service, is with us. Les Lenkowsky is with us, who is the CEO of that corporation. Gaddi Vasquez, who is the head of the Peace Corps, is with us.

And, most importantly, Alma Powell, secretary [sic] of Colin Powell, is with us. (Applause.) Where are you? There she is. (Applause.) She's kind of like my mother in many ways; she's always telling me what to do. (Laughter.) And I'm always listening.

I want to thank Congressman Tom Osborne for coming today. Congressman, I'm honored that you're here. I appreciate your compassion and your care for our fellow citizens. They tell me Tim Roemer is here, who just retired from the United States Congress. I appreciate Tim's participation.

I know the Mayor is here. Mayor Anthony Williams, who is a -- (applause.) I like to tease the Mayor, remind him that -- to keep fixing those potholes in front of the White House. (Laughter.) Keep that garbage collected. (Laughter.) But he's doing a fine job, and I'm proud to call him friend, just like many of the citizens here are proud to call him Mayor. I want to thank members of the City Council who are here, as well. Mayors and City Council members must play an active role at rallying the compassion of this country.

I want to thank the Boys & Girls Clubs across the country, but particularly here in Washington, D.C. -- Pat Shannon and Tim Sheahan -- for opening up this facility. (Applause.) The Boys & Girls Club have got a grand history of helping children understand the future is bright for them, as well as any other child in America. Boys & Girls Clubs have been safe havens. They're little beacons of light for children who might not see light. And I want to thank them for their service to the country.

Part of the vision for America is that we have a mosaic of all kinds of people providing love and comfort for people who need help. And Boys & Girls Club is a part of that majestic mosaic of America.

One of the great strengths of our country is the fact that the social entrepreneurial spirit is strong. We got people all across this land who don't wait for some law passed out of the United States Congress to say, what can I do to help a neighbor in need? There are thousands all across this country who have -- who are making a singular difference in the lives of one citizen, or one neighborhood, or one community. And the impact of all that care and love allowed me to say, point-blank, to the American people after the tragedy that out of the evil done to America is going to come some incredible good. (Applause.)

I do think there is an important role for government. One of the roles of government is to ask people to serve today. Once again, I'm asking our fellow citizens to serve your community and to serve your country by finding a program that will make a difference in somebody's lives. It doesn't matter how big or small the program may sound. What matters is your love and your energy and your participation. Help somebody who is lonely. Mentor somebody who needs -- who needs care and concern. Feed the hungry. Find shelter for the homeless. Answer the call of this country.

A year ago we started what's called the USA Freedom Corps. I thought it was important for the federal government to lend a structure to the thousands who may want to help, to provide an outlet for those who heard the call, to provide 4,000 hours, two years of service. And people are responding. There are over 60,000 opportunities that the USA Freedom Corps can steer people to, opportunities to volunteer all across the country. And thousands and thousands and thousands of our fellow citizens have inquired as to how to help; have said, I want to help, let me be a part of an optimistic future for America. And I want to thank those thousands who have signed up.

Corporate America has a responsibility -- it's fine to sell product, and that's important. There's a lot of responsibilities that come with running a company. Telling the truth is a responsibility that comes with running a country, by the way. Treating your -- (applause) -- being honest with your shareholder, if you're public company; being thoughtful to your employee. But I also believe there's a corporate responsibility to encourage and provide incentive for employees to go help in the community in which the company exists -- 160 companies have signed up. I know Rich Parsons is here, of AOL/Time Warner; Gene Case; and this company has been one of the -- on the forefront, among others -- Nardelli, of Home Depot, as well -- have encouraged their employees to not only provide good product, but provide love and compassion in their communities.

And I want to thank corporate America for hearing the call. I encourage more companies and more corporations to participate in this quest to make sure the American Dream extends itself in every neighborhood and in every corner of this country.

AmeriCorps has got tens of thousands of people helping to inoculate children against disease, or tutoring children. I'm a supporter of AmeriCorps. I urge the Congress to pass the Citizens Service Act to make sure that -- (applause.) Part of being a compassionate country also means we need to be compassionate abroad. That's one of the reasons I laid out a powerful AIDS initiative for the citizens in Africa who suffer from AIDS. It's an initiative that I believe will lend the great heart of the American people to the salvation of life after life after life on that continent. (Applause.)

And I want to tell the folks that Peace Corps applications are up by 30 percent. And what I find -- (applause.) And even more interesting, 38 more countries have asked for Peace Corps volunteers to come into their land to help their country and to help their citizens realize their full potential. See, in this country, we say every life matters. Everybody is precious. Everybody counts. (Applause.)

Senior Corps is vibrant and strong these days in America. There's over a half a million members of Senior Corps. (Applause.) Sounds like it's vibrant and strong right here in this room. (Laughter.) We've got 300 Citizen Corps Councils around America to -- (applause) -- to help every community prepare in case of emergency. It's a useful way to -- for many of our citizens to volunteer, to help lend their talents to make sure America is buttoned up and prepared if the worst were to happen again.

I think we ought to take our initiatives and make sure that they're focused and pointed, as well -- particularly at the federal level. What I'm about to say doesn't preclude other good things happening in America, but I do think it makes sense to take some of our resources and lend them to help those who are vulnerable citizens, those who have got great potential but need a little extra help.

I strongly believe in mentoring. I know we can change America one heart and one soul at a time. There's just no doubt in my mind we can. (Applause.) So I want to rally the compassion of the country to focus on junior high students who may need a mentor. And I particularly -- I want to help the boys and girls whose mom or dad may be incarcerated. (Applause.) There are programs all across our country that already do that. I fully recognize that. This isn't anything new. This is a way to build upon the good works that already exist.

I was in Philadelphia. I saw the program that has been existing way before I was thinking about writing my speech, about how that community -- out of a church -- began to call upon other members of churches throughout Philadelphia to love a child who has to hug a mom or dad through a prison bar. And it's making a difference in the lives of those children.

We need to have that type of program all across the country. I'm asking for the Congress to provide $450 million. The money will go to encourage recruitment, provide structure, to cover the overhead necessary to rally the mentors, to find the folks that are willing to hear the call. I believe we can change lives through mentoring.

You know why I say that? I say it because I've seen mentor and mentoree and heard their testimony -- just like I did today, earlier. I heard about the Best Friends Program here in Washington, D.C., changing lives. (Applause.) I met a young lady, a junior in college from Atlanta, Georgia. She goes to school up here. And her college -- they said, we need people to help. We got what we call a U.S. Dream Academy. And she heard the call. A junior in college. So I said, can you help. And she said, you bet I can help. Erica is now mentoring, and I want to thank her for her mentorship. She's changing one life. Her love and her compassion and her dedication to something greater than herself will give her the great satisfaction of knowing that she has made one life better. She may make a lot of other lives better, too. But right now, she can say, I'm making one life better. It's that cumulative effect of people in America being able to say, I have made one life better, that will make the whole country better.

I asked my fellow citizens to think about how you can be a person making somebody's life better. I talked to Cecil from St. John's Baptist in Columbus, Maryland. Cecil said his preacher called him into action and his wife said, you keep talking about the need for mentors, but you haven't done a darn thing about it. Cecil and I married well. The same thing happens to me, Cecil. (Laughter.) But Cecil decided to become a mentor. He brought his young mentoree with him today. I decided I'd trick the guy and say, you got any goals? He looked me right in the eye and said, I'm going to be an architect. I'm going to be an architect.

Congratulations to a great future architect of America, but congratulation, as well, to his mentor who helped set the example. Cecil, thank you for coming and thank your church. (Applause.)

I met Mark Harris. Mark wears the uniform of the United States of America. He's in our military. Mark is here to continue his education and he met Antonio. See, he's a big brother, part of the Big Brothers and Big Sisters Program, which is one of our nations strongest mentoring programs. He realized service to the country was more than just putting on the uniform. Service to the country was serving our country by loving somebody, by being a mentor. He understands what I know, that when you change a life, you change the country for the better. Mark and I share a deep passion -- we not only want a secure country, we want a hopeful country as well, an optimistic country.

I met Karen Walser (phonetic). She's what I call a social entrepreneur. I think I'm looking at a lot of social entrepreneurs here. These are people who are, as we say in the vernacular, thinking outside the box to make America a better place. She started a program called Horton's Kids, which is a mentoring program on Capitol Hill -- use the facilities there to help children understand structure and focus and love in their lives. No, mentoring is a fabulous, fabulous part of the American society.

Larry Compton knows. He's a 23-year-old student who is with us today. He was mentored as a kid coming up in Pontiac, Michigan. He found direction in his life, and guess what? He now mentors. He has been mentored and he now mentors. (Applause.)

My point is, it's the beginning of a process that feeds upon itself. Mentoring will change the country. I ask the Congress to pass this initiative. I ask my fellow citizens to join many, many fellow citizens, in loving somebody who needs help. (Applause.)

And as we structure response to society's needs, we must never forget the power of faith in our society. There's a -- some of the greatest programs, initiatives come out of our faith-based programs or faith-based churches or synagogues or mosques. You know why? There is a universal call to love somebody like you'd like to be loved yourself. The handbook is pretty clear about the role of -- (applause.) There are fabulous programs that aren't related to faith-based initiatives. That's fine and that's good. But the corollary to that is government should not discriminate against faith-based programs. They ought to welcome faith-based programs in our society. (Applause.)

There are fantastic programs that helped drug addicts kick their habit, and I think we ought to focus resources and time and efforts to help those who are addicted to drugs. But there are also some wonderful programs based upon faith, on the understanding that if you change a person's heart, you can change that person's behavior. Our government should welcome faith-based programs into our society. (Applause.)

So I'll continue to work with Congress to get this, the full aspects of the faith-based initiative. Out of the halls of Congress, we ought not to be stuck on process. We ought to be focused on results. We ought to ask the question, does it work? And if it works, we ought to welcome anything that works to save American lives. (Applause.)

I'm a confident man. I'm a confident man about the future of this country. I truly believe that we can achieve peace. I believe we can achieve peace at home and I believe we can achieve peace abroad. Likewise, I believe we can achieve a hopeful, hopeful future.

Listen, there are pockets of despair in America. In spite our plenty, in spite of the fact we've got great wealth compared to many societies, there are people who hurt, people who wonder about their future, people who are lost, people who are addicted, people who need help. And there is no question in my mind, however, that because of the great strength of our country, the compassion of our people, we can help those people realize a better tomorrow.

The goal of this country is for everyone -- not just a few -- everyone in every community in every state in every part of our country to understand the greatness and potential of this country. Everybody counts in life. Everybody matters. Everybody is precious in the sight of the Almighty. Everybody has worth. That would be a philosophy that drives this government as we work to strive to make the American experience strong and hopeful for every single citizen.

I want to thank my fellow citizens for your love. I want to thank my fellow citizens for your time. I want to thank your fellow citizens -- my fellow citizens for serving something greater than yourself, the greatest country on the face of this Earth. God bless you all and God bless America. (Applause.)
