IN HONOR OF
THE RIGHT HONORABLE
THE PRIME MINISTER OF CANADA
AND MRS. TRUDEAU

THE WHITE HOUSE
MONDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1977

THE YOUNG COLUMBIANS are accurately enough named. There are 19 of them, ranging in age from 13 to 25. They are students of the Columbia School of Theatrical Arts, Inc., in Columbia, Maryland. Unspectacular on the face of it, but then comes a surprise.

The Young Columbians are an all-American happening, an artistic idea whose time has come. In 30 minutes, they cause American history to unfold through classic songs and dances from colonial days to the present, from the minuet to the hustle, from ballads to rock, with a polished innocence and freshness of talent rarely seen in performance.

Like America itself, the Young Columbians grew like topsy. In what was to have been a one-time, show-and-tell appearance in June 1975, they created a grass-roots sensation that has since grown and flourished.

FACT SHEET

The Dinner:

Approximately 100 dinner guests will be seated at round tables.

The centerpiece on each table is a modern, sculptured design of pencil-thin green, white and yellow candles with anemones of assorted colors placed in and around the base. Natural wheat and waxed magnolia leaves will accent the arrangement.

Individual place settings will include the Truman china, the Morgantown crystal, and the Monroe vermeil dinnerware.

The following menu has been chosen:

Saint Michelle Chenin Blanc	Alaska King Crab in Herb Sauce
Louis Martini Cabernet Sauvignon	Roast Stuffed Saddle of Lamb Timbale of Spinach Glaced Carrots
Beaulieu Extra Dry	Watercress and Mushroom Salad Wisconsin Blue Cheese Orange Sherbet Ambrosia Cookies Demitasse

JANUARY 24, 1977

Office of the White House Press Secretary

THE WHITE HOUSE

At the invitation of President Carter, Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau of Canada will pay an official visit to Washington on February 21-22, 1977. This will be the first meeting between the President and Prime Minister.

In view of the close and important relations between the United States and Canada, the President is looking forward to this early opportunity to get acquainted with the Prime Minister and to exchange views on a broad range of international and bilateral questions of common concern to the two countries.

The Prime Minister will be accompanied on the visit by Mrs. Trudeau.

OFFICE OF THE WHITE HOUSE PRESS SECRETARY

THE WHITE HOUSE

EXCHANGE OF TOASTS
BETWEEN THE PRESIDENT
AND
PIERRE ELLIOTT TRUDEAU
PRIME MINISTER OF CANADA

THE STATE DINING ROOM

9:23 P.M. EST

THE PRESIDENT: In preparing for this visit, I learned that we have some very serious and very intense competition with our friends from the North. Dr. George Gallup ran a poll recently. He asked the people who live in the United States to name their favorite nations. The United States got 95 percent. Canada got 91 percent. (Laughter)

So, I feel that I am in an intense and constant and very challenging competition with Pierre Trudeau for the hearts of my own people.

I think this does indicate the great compatibility and friendship and sense of warmth and mutual admiration that has always existed among American people toward Canada. We share a border that is more than 5200 miles long.

For 200 years our people have lived -- with one very brief interval, around 1812 -- in a spirit of friendship. That is important to us, even more than we think, in our daily lives. We are dependent on Canada for many things.

Canada has about 22 million people. Every year, 60 million people cross the border, and as a kinship and a sharing of the light and challenge and enjoyment of life that transcends the political realities of a modern, fast-changing technological world, of course, the technologies are important as well.

We are now beginning to see that many of the things that we took for granted, the purity of water in the Great Lakes, an unlimited supply of oil and gas, security in our borders free of possible direct attack in a time of war, those things are now no longer sure.

I think, in a way, that has brought us even closer together. I know that on the other side of the border, the Canadians feel that we are.

The last time Prime Minister Trudeau came to our country he said that being a neighbor to the United States was like sleeping with an elephant -- (Laughter) -- that you could very quickly detect every twitch or grunt.

Well, the elephants are gone. The donkeys are here. (Laughter) And the donkeys are much more companionable beasts, I think.

MORE

I do want to thank the Canadian people and Prime Minister Trudeau for their gracious offer during this time of energy shortage for our people, for their offer to help us.

They exported some of their cold weather, but they followed it up with all the natural gas. And we had a very delightful meeting this afternoon to discuss some of the international problems that face us both.

Tomorrow we are going to talk about some things that affect both Canada and us in a bilateral fashion.

Prime Minister Trudeau's wife, Margaret came a couple of weeks ago to visit Rosalynn and to open up a display in one of our famous art galleries of Contemporary Canadian Art. I think this indicated, first of all, that we are interested in the same things, but also that our nations are distinctive.

Although we live in close proximity, we are quite different and the differences are carefully preserved. There is an understandable determination not to be dominated and not to be pressured and to be unique and to maintain individuality.

That is a sign of strength on our side and their side of the border that is precious to us both. I feel that we have approached an era of recognition, of mutual purpose and ideals and hopes and dreams and aspirations and also concerns about problems that might bind us even closer together now than in the past.

And in a way, I am thankful for it. I am proud of the personal friendship that was almost instantaneous when I met Pierre Trudeau this afternoon. I had a sense of relaxation and a sense of compatibility that I hope will be an accurate indication on a permanent basis of what our nations feel toward one another.

I would like to close by saying that we have been close in time of war and quite often. When our own nation has made a mistake because of an excessive dependence on our own military strength, Canada and its people have maintained kind of a standard of ethics and morality and commitment to unchanging truths that are a reminder to us to reassess our own position.

So, we learn from one another. I am very grateful to our visitors for coming, to honor us with their presence.

I would like to propose a toast: To the Queen of Canada; to the Prime Minister of Canada, and to the people of Canada.

MORE

PRIME MINISTER TRUDEAU: Mr. President, Mrs. Carter, friends:

I want to thank you first of all for your very warm hospitality and for the informality of the dinner that we are attending tonight. The informality was to be expected from a household where you have a child of school age and a puppy, I understand, and the hospitality and the warmth of it was to be expected from you, sir, and from your very charming wife.

I want to say that I am always a little bit moved and perhaps even intimidated when I am in the White House. It has such history; it has such great memories of remarkable statesmen, American leaders.

It is particularly moving to be here on George Washington's birthday. I find some consolation in that because I was told an anecdote about George Washington when he was retiring from office. The Philadelphia Aurora -- there was then a paper called that name, I don't know if it still exists -- but it had been rather unkind to President Washington during his term of office. When he retired, they had an editorial saying that if ever there was a day for great rejoicing this was it. I feel, sir, that an old politician like myself takes some consolation in feeling that times never change. (Laughter)

You don't have to seek solace in this type of anecdote. But indeed, you added to the sense of hospitality when you were good enough to quote this finding of Dr. Gallup, of which I knew nothing. It makes me feel if ever I get in trouble in Canada politically, maybe I will come down here. (Laughter) I can assure you, if you ever are in trouble, which I pray will never happen, you will be very handily chosen to be the leader of the Canadian people.

Your generous remarks are something which are very much in keeping with the friendship and the long history of cooperation between our peoples. It began, I think, around 1781 when the Articles of Confederation proposed that Canada be admitted, be invited to join the Confederation, just by applying. I believe other colonies had to have the consent of nine States in order to be admitted, but Canada was to be admitted just on invitation and acceptance. Whether it is good or not that we didn't accept in those days, is perhaps very hard to speculate upon except to say that if Canada had accepted I am sure we wouldn't be having such a fine dinner here tonight. (Laughter)

Apart from that very short incident of hostilities to which you alluded very gently, we have since then, since the past 165 years, I guess it is, had very good neighborhood relations, indeed. We have cooperated in many, many ways. We have built together some of the greatest of men's enterprises. We have maintained democracy alive within our countries and we have cooperated in assisting wherever we could around the world in helping other nations in one way or another.

MORE

I think it is fair to say that if in those days, 150 years ago, we were the hope of the new world, a large part of the hope of the new world, I would think that today perhaps in large part we represent the hope of the Third World. This joins many of the discussions we had this afternoon.

I must say on behalf of the Canadian Government and people that we are more than delighted; we are excited with the generous approach that your ideas convey as regards the world order, which would be based on equality and justice.

In our case, sir, we have done our part. In terms of foreign aid, Canada is amongst the top four or five nations of assistance to the Third World, and in terms of our proportion of our GNP. Since the end of the Second World War, we have admitted more refugees, political refugees, to Canada than any other nation, barring the United States. You have a slight edge on us. But they have come to Canada by the tens of thousands, from Czechoslovakia, from Hungary, from Tibet and Uganda and Chile and many other places.

We do try to, as Canadians, show this hospitality to the world which corresponds to the generosity of the Canadian people. I was telling you this afternoon, sir, that though we have been a nuclear power for some 30 years, and though we have the technology and the financial means of building upon, we have chosen not to do so. We have tried to put our technology towards a more creative and fraternal use.

We, with the United States, are the only member of NATO which has troops on both sides of the Atlantic. We are into our fourth term in the Security Council. We have been in every peacekeeping operation, United Nations peacekeeping operations, since the end of the Second World War. We were in Korea. We were in the four Indochina Control Commissions.

I say these things, sir, partly to be slightly chauvinistic but also because we in Canada today tend to be a little bit cynical towards the role of Canada in the world and towards its generosity. I think that you won't be angry at me for using this occasion and these hidden microphones to talk a little bit about Canada's contribution, because these things would not have been possible without a strong and united Canada.

I just want to assure you, sir, that we intend to keep Canada that way.

It is said that Daniel Boone, when giving advice to those who wanted to join him on the frontier, said that there were three essentials -- to have a good gun, a good horse and a good wife.

MORE

Now the frontier has changed in kind. We are still very much living on a new kind of a frontier. In these days when changing values in the world and the increasing closeness of mankind to each other and where a new, special kind of brotherhood is called for, I think we could replace Daniel Boone's three essentials by three others. I would say it is to have good goals, good discipline and good friends.

I know we have good goals and we discussed them a great deal this afternoon. We found that together we shared many, many of the goals in foreign relations and, indeed, in internal affairs.

In terms of having good friends, well, you have shown us tonight through your hospitality and your friendship that that is a reality.

What has to be achieved is good discipline. I speak for Canada and I feel that it is a virtue that we can do with a bit more of -- if I can twist my grammar that way. We are going through a period now when discipline, self-discipline, is being understood as the only substitute for discipline from the outside or discipline from the state. I must say that I personally was very, very enthusiastic to see the measure of discipline that appears in your thoughts, sir, in your approach to problems and in your way of life.

I would propose a toast, not to the friendship that we have, and not to the goals that we share, but to the disciplines of our people, may it increase, and to President Carter and to Mrs. Carter who will help President Carter in imparting some of those disciplines on the industrialized democracies.

BIOGRAPHIES OF THE PRIME MINISTER OF CANADA AND MRS. TRUDEAU

PIERRE ELLIOTT TRUDEAU

In addition to his post as Prime Minister, Pierre Trudeau has been leader of the Liberal Party since 1968. A confirmed federalist, Trudeau is opposed to the Quebec separatist movement. After the November 1976 electoral victory of the separatist Parti Quebecois (PQ) in Quebec, he stated that there would be no negotiation of independence with the PQ government, although he was willing to cooperate with it within the framework of the confederation. In a January 1977 speech he said that if Quebecers voted for independence he would resign as Prime Minister.

Trudeau believes that good Canadian-US relations are of the highest priority. At the same time, he wishes to assert Canada's identity and reduce its economic dependence on this country; he views improved relations with Western Europe and Japan as one way of reaching these goals. To fight inflation, Trudeau imposed wage and price controls in 1975 to last a maximum of three years. He will not remove them earlier unless he is assured that inflation will not rise again immediately.

A lawyer, Trudeau, 57, studied at the University of Montreal, Harvard University and the London School of Economics. He is intelligent and a skilled debater. An outdoorsman, he enjoys skiing, fishing, flying, scuba diving and canoeing. He holds a brown belt in judo. Trudeau is bilingual in French and English and speaks good Spanish.

MARGARET TRUDEAU

The former Margaret Sinclair, the daughter of former Liberal Party Cabinet Minister James Sinclair, was only 22 when she married Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau in 1971. He is 29 years her senior. During the first three years of her marriage, Mrs. Trudeau avoided the limelight as much as possible. She emerged as a public figure to take an active part in the July 1974 election campaign and proved to be an effective campaigner.

An honor student and self-proclaimed "flower child", Mrs. Trudeau holds a B.A. degree in political science and sociology from Simon Fraser University in Burnaby, British Columbia. In January 1977 she began a 2-year, 20-hour-a-week course in news photography and film processing at Algonquin College in Ottawa. She aspires to a career as a photo-journalist. Mrs. Trudeau feels that she has solved the dilemma of trying to fulfill the duties of the wife of the Prime Minister while at the same time expressing her own identity.

Mrs. Trudeau has traveled extensively in Europe and the Carribean and has also visited the United States, the Soviet Union, the People's Republic of China, Japan, Mexico, Venezuela and Tahiti. She is interested in day care centers, likes health foods and enjoys gardening. The Trudeaus have three sons, Justin, Alexandre and Michel, born in 1971, 1973 and 1975, respectively.

FEBRUARY 21, 1977

Office of the White House Press Secretary

THE WHITE HOUSE

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

During the campaign I committed myself to a prudent and responsible use of the taxpayers' money and to protection of the environment. Today I am announcing a major review of water resource projects which will further both commitments.

Water development projects have played a critical role in developing the economy of this nation. But many of the 320 current projects approved in the past under different economic circumstances and at times of lower interest rates are of doubtful necessity now, in light of new economic conditions and environmental policies. At this point, based upon information thus far developed by the Council on Environmental Quality, the Office of Management and Budget and the Interior Department, I have identified 19 projects which now appear unsupportable on economic, environmental, and/or safety grounds. I have attached a list of these projects. I am recommending at this time that no funds be provided for these projects in FY 1978.

I am instructing Secretary of the Interior Andrus and Secretary of the Army Alexander, working together with the Office of Management and Budget and the Council on Environmental Quality, to carry out a complete evaluation of these 19 projects and of all other water resource projects and to develop comprehensive policy reforms in this critical area. They will report back to me and to the Congress by April 15.

This review will give us the necessary facts upon which to make certain that only projects which are economically and environmentally sound will receive final approval. The FY 1978 budget reductions for the deleted projects amount to $289 million. Total potential savings from these deleted projects would amount to $5.1 billion.

I look forward to working closely with Congress to develop a coherent water resource policy.

We must work together to achieve our national goals of adequate water supplies, a sound transportation system and needed flood protection. In doing so, we must make certain that our investments are cost-effective, that the cost burdens are equitably borne, and that the environment is protected.

EXCHANGE OF REMARKS
BETWEEN THE PRESIDENT
AND
PIERRE ELIOT TRUDEAU
PRIME MINISTER OF CANADA

THE SOUTH GROUNDS

3:39 P.M. EST

THE PRESIDENT: To Prime Minister Trudeau and his beautiful wife Margaret, to the people of Canada who have come to be with us this afternoon, and to all of our own welcomers who have come with us on this occasion to make our neighbors feel at home: I am very grateful to be here, to welcome to the White House and to our country a man who shares with me the tremendous friendship that has always existed between the United States of America and the people of Canada to the North.

We share a common border more than 5,000 miles. We share a common defense of our own people. We share the human and natural resources of an entire continent. We share a great respect and friendship for each other. We share a commitment to human decency and to personal freedom. We share a historical belief in the principles of democracy and these principles have been tangibly demonstrated by our Government for generations. And we share a common commitment to world peace.

Canada is our most important trade partner. We have many common purposes and common concerns, common problems, and also the potential for common solutions to those problems. This next two days I will spend with Prime Minister Trudeau and he will have a chance to visit with our top officials and let the Canadian officials share these discussions. We will be talking about defense and peace. We will be talking about the world economy and our Nations' great contribution to that economy.

Prime Minister Trudeau has been recognized for many years as one of the developed nations' leading negotiators and understanders of the problems of the developing nations of the world. Because of his commitment to humanitarian purposes, he has the trust and confidence of people who are not quite so fortunate as we are. He is a senior statesman of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, having been in office now for more than eight years. His common and unique and persistent commitment to the principles of the democratic nations of the world has made him a leader even from the first days when he was in office.

MORE

He made a comment recently that I think is important for all of us to remember, which typifies his own attitude toward human beings. He said it is not enough to measure a nation's product in our gross national financial product, but we should think about the outcome and the output of our nation on the basis of a net human benefit, how well the people find a better life because of the activities and decisions of Government.

Because of all these reasons, in a personal way and as a leader of our great nation, I want to welcome to our country Prime Minister Trudeau and his wife, Margaret.

Welcome, Mr. Prime Minister.

PRIME MINISTER TRUDEAU: Mr. President, Mrs. Carter, and American friends:

First, I wanted to tell you, Mr. President, that I brought the greetings of some 22 million Canadians. But I see by the flags over on the lawn there that a lot of them have preceded me there.

The greetings are warm nonetheless. I want to tell you, also, we bring you our great, good wishes as you assume the very arduous, important office of President of this great Nation.

The Canadians are looking forward to this period of good relationships with you as the head of this great Nation. With your dedication, your hard work, your discipline, your sense of morality, we feel that these are great days for our relationship and for the world.

We are particularly grateful and honored, sir, that you invited your North American neighbors very early in the term of your office. I am sure I can speak for President Lopez Portillo -- I certainly speak for myself and for Canadians -- when I say that we have great expectations that this continental neighborhood will flourish and develop because of the great personal interest you have shown in it.

The links between our countries are so numerous, the cooperation that we are involved in is so deep that this kind of meeting is as natural as it is friendly. As I look through the enormous briefing books that I had, sir, and I am sure it happened to you, too, I felt there is perhaps nothing our countries can do that doesn't involve one another. There are so many associations, so many committees, so many clubs, so many links between us of all kinds that I believe they are absolutely legion. I tried to get a count and I was told it wasn't possible. I can well understand it.

We have been such old friends and our links are so deep that this number of associations together can only rest on the deep friendship between our peoples.

The International Women's Year has only passed in history for 14 months now. It seems that our wives, Mrs. Carter and Margaret, have already met and established a good agenda for the discussions.

You and I are only meeting this moment. But I am quite convinced that we will, in a friendly way, rivalize with their achievements and catch up to their friendly relations.

I want to thank you, sir, for your very warm hospitality to all the visiting Canadians and to have received us in this beautiful garden and this nice sun. It makes me feel that Canadians now as they are very deep in snow, they have hope. They hope that when that snow melts there will still be grass there on earth.

Sir, we hope with the same faith that you will favor us with your visit and Mrs. Carter's to Canada one of these days.

Thank you very, very much. I am looking forward to our talk.

Memorandum to: Mrs. Carter

From: Coates Redmon

Subject: Conductor of the Marine Band

Major William D. Rusinak, conductor of the Marine Band, retires after tonight's performance -- after 20 years of association with the band.

Gretchen Poston suggested that the President might want to make note of this fact and perhaps go over to Major Rusinak tonight after the East Room festivities, shake his hand, say something and permit a picture to be taken.

MAJOR WILLIAM D. RUSINAK, USMC

Major William D. Rusinak started his musical career as a violinist while still a young boy in Minneapolis, Minn. During his high school years he served as Concertmaster for the National Music Camp in Interlochen, Mich. This famed music camp is a springboard for gifted youth into the professional musical world.

After Major Rusinak's graduation from high school in 1937 he received a four-year scholarship at the Eastman School of Music, at Rochester, N.Y. There he received his Bachelor's Degree in Music, with his major field of study as the violin. During these productive years he was also a member of the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra.

During World War II, while serving in the United States Army, he organized a Special Service Band for Maurice Evans in Honolulu, Hawaii. This Special Service Band has become nationally recognized as a favorite of the Army's musical components.

At the termination of World War II, Major Rusinak underwent graduate work at the University of Minnesota. At this time he was also a member of the Minnesota Symphony Orchestra.

In 1955 Major Rusinak was auditioned and accepted into the United States Marine Corps, for duty with the United States Marine Band. Having been in the Army he was no stranger to military regime, and by the listing of his experience you can well see he was a constant companion to music.

With Major Rusinak's talent and initiative he was soon appointed to the position of Concertmaster for the Band's White House Orchestra in 1956. He first conducted at the White House in 1965, and with much praise for his talent and enthusiasm has been a musical favorite of the countrys' First Family since.

Major Rusinak was appointed the Assistant Director of the United States Marine Band on 1 May 1972, and has served just as proudly and deligently as when he first started his career as a freshman at Edison High School, Minneapolis, in 1933.

PRESIDENT'S INTRODUCTORY REMARKS

FOR THE YOUNG COLUMBIANS -- Canadian State Dinner

I have heard it said by people of older cultures that America is too young and restless to have developed a cultural heritage by which it can be surely known. I disagree.

While it's true that we are a nation on the go, while we are a melting pot of many cultures -- and we wouldn't have it any other way -- I think the American style is very distinct. The problem has always been to collect the wide variety of expression and the total historical experience that comes out of 200 years of non-stop nation -building and gather it up into a single work of art so that the entire picture can be viewed as a whole.

Tonight I think we are going to see that picture, and we are going to see it through song and dance. An immensely talented group of performers called The Young Columbians have combined history and art with a great deal of wisdom and charm.

I think this is the perfect way to celebrate George Washington's birthday.

From: Coates Redmon

Subject: Suggested Addition for the President's Remarks at the State Dinner tonight

After having seen the rehearsal for tonight's entertainment, which is super-patriotic in a very charming way, Mary Hoyt and I thought that it would be a nice touch to add a sentence at the end of his introduction to the entertainers, "The Young Columbians".

Last week I wrote the attached suggested introduction, and have now added one last sentence, referring to George Washington's birthday.

know he is well known,
but Carter has had so much support from music industry that we need to repay some of these debts. Wrote a special song and dedicated it to the President at the inaugural concert.
One of the most tasteful
of the super-star types;
well respected by other people in music industry, so inviting him would get us a lot of milage there as far as later fundraising.
