Autumn in New York is still very much Bobby Short at the Café Carlyle. He just celebrated his 10th year as performer-in-residence. Short is a player of songs—old and new—and he always brings a refreshing energy to his distinctive manner of playing and singing.

His interest in popular music is ever expanding from the early vaudeville days in the 30's, up to and including a varied career in show business. Short is no doubt at his best with his piano and backed up by his long-time colleagues on the drums, Gene Gammage, and with the bass, Beverly Peer. In an intimate cafe setting, Short is a troubadour singing the sophisticated songs of Porter, Kern, Gershwin, Coward, Sondheim et al as nobody else can.

Bobby Short has numerous recordings to his credit including a best-seller, Bobby Short Loves Cole Porter. His early years in show business were chronicled in an autobiography, Black and White Baby and he has contributed his writings to a number of periodicals. When not fulfilling his concert schedule, Short finds time to lecture at Harvard University on the American Popular Song.

The State Dinner in Honor of
His Excellency Masayoshi Ohira, Prime Minister of Japan and Mrs. Ohira

FACT SHEETThe Dinner

The West Terrace has been selected as the location for tonight's State Dinner. This will be the first time the President and Mrs. Carter have used the West Terrace to entertain. The entire area will be enclosed by ficus trees strung with tiny white lights.

Approximately 180 dinner guests will be seated at round tables covered with green and white ruffled tablecloths. Centerpieces for each table include clay pots (in their natural color) filled with spring blooming plants such as gardenias and primrose. Hurricane candles surrounding the pots complete the centerpieces. Place settings include the Morgantown crystal and the Truman china.

Because of the Prime Minister's keen interest in a truly American type dinner, the Carters have chosen barbecued meats as the focal point for the State Dinner.

Barbecue drums have been installed on the terrace where buffalo meat is slowly roasting throughout the day. Other meats to be barbecued include chicken and roast suckling pig on the spit. Barbecue sauce from both Texas (made by Ambassador and Mrs. Robert Strauss) and Georgia will complement the meats cooked outdoors. The remainder of the menu includes the following courses:

Avocado Pear Stuffed with Seafood
Sesame Sticks

New Parslied Potatoes
Fresh Asparagus

Bibb Lettuce Salad
Trappist Cheese

Pineapple Charlotte Royale
Petits fours in sugar baskets
Demitasse

Dry Creek Dry Chenin Blanc
Louis Martini Cabernet Sauvignon
Chandon Brut Champagne

The Entertainment

Bobby Short, noted pianist, will provide this evening's entertainment. He has just celebrated his 10th year as performer-in-residence at the Cafe Carlyle in New York. Accompanying Mr. Short tonight will be Gene Gammage on the drums, and Beverly Peer playing the bass.

THE WHITE HOUSE

EXCHANGE OF REMARKS
BETWEEN THE PRESIDENT
AND
HIS EXCELLENCY MASAYOSHI OHIRA,
PRIME MINISTER OF JAPAN

The South Lawn

10:10 A.M. EST

THE PRESIDENT: This morning it is a wonderful pleasure for me, on behalf of the people of our Nation, to welcome to our country, to our Capital city, the distinguished Prime Minister of Japan, Mr. Ohira, and his wife; and also members of his government who have come to consult with us on matters of great import to the people of both these countries.

This welcome is extended to you, Mr. Prime Minister, with our deepest feelings of a common purpose, and a realization of the importance of the friendship which binds us together. We are especially honored because this is your first trip abroad after assuming your new responsibilities.

The United States and its people have a great admiration for the people of Japan. We recognize your deep commitment to the principles of democracy. We trust the basic motivations and ideals of your country.

We are proud of the close cooperation which we have seen exhibited in times of testing and trial, and I believe that this cooperation bodes good for the other people of the world.

Our people are naturally friends. There is an innate appreciation of one another, from the highest levels of government and business to the average tourist who always comes back from a visit to the other country with a sense of hospitality and welcome having been extended.

Our own Nation's security and yours are both enhanced by this close relationship. And, of course, in international political affairs, in economics and trade, we share common problems and we share common opportunities.

We had a large group of Asian-Americans who came to visit me a few minutes ago before this ceremony. And I pointed out to them that our Nation is blessed by approximately 4 million Asian-Americans who have enriched our country. And I also pointed out to them that our Nation is a country of refugees. We look upon the Pacific Ocean not as an obstacle to be overcome, but as a broad highway which we can use with freedom and with ease to bind our countries even closer together in the future.

We are dependent on trade. As you know, I, as you, have been a farmer during most of my life. There are more acres of food being produced for Japan in the United States than there are acres of food being produced in Japan for Japan.

We value the wonderful market which you extend for agricultural products. There are more exchanges between the members of the American Congress and the Diet of your country than between any other two legislative bodies on earth. We consider the relationship with Japan to be the cornerstone of the implementation of American policy throughout Asia. And as you may know, these interrelationships extend on a personal basis. My daughter, Amy, studies violin as a beginning student under the direction of the great Japanese teacher, Suzuki.

We have some economic problems between us. They are being thoroughly discussed. They are important. They are being addressed without timidity and without concealment. But I have no doubt that the bases which I have already described as a foundation for our interrelationship will serve with certainty as a basis for resolving our present economic differences.

I will be going to Japan in June for an official visit at your invitation which I certainly appreciate. I hope to have a chance personally to prove to the Japanese people the importance that we attach to their own personal friendship toward us.

And you and I will be meeting with 5 other leaders of great nations at an economic summit further to pursue some of the ideas that I have outlined so briefly.

MORE

The Japanese people are almost uniquely vigorous and disciplined and productive. And they combine these overt characteristics of strength with a certain grace and quietness and a degree of personal humility and an appreciation for beauty and art and culture that has aroused the legitimate admiration of the people of our country.

Above all, we appreciate the Japanese influence for peace, your commitment to peace which serves as a standard for other nations to emulate.

We have in the past, we do now, and we will in the future, strengthen one another because of shared ideals and I am sure that we will continue in a most profound way to help one another. We are glad to have you here.

In Japan, this is Golden Week, a week dedicated to holidays and joy. And we hope that in addition to your visit being fruitful in the diplomatic and economic and security area, that it will also be a visit of joy for you personally.

Welcome, Mr. Prime Minister, to our country.

PRIME MINISTER OHIRA: Mr. President, thank you for your warm welcome. I have looked forward to this opportunity for us to become better acquainted and explore together the ways in which Japan and the United States may join in even closer partnership than ever before to realize the aspirations of both our peoples for peace and a stable expansion of the world economy.

Recently economic frictions have surfaced between Japan and the United States. The economic problems between our two countries are serious and we both are endeavoring to resolve these problems through mutual cooperation. I am determined to continue to do my utmost to that end.

In resolving our economic frictions, we should never forget that the Japanese-American relationship today in all its aspects is absolutely sound and secure, bound by mutual confidence and trust.

As we look to the 1980s, we cannot see any quick or easy solutions to the complex political, economic and social challenges facing mankind. Under these circumstances, the constructive roles to be played by the industrial democracies of the world, especially Japan and the United States, are of crucial importance.

I am convinced that Japan and the United States can overcome a variety of challenges to fulfill their constructive roles. I believe this because we have among us the spiritual resources as well as abundant material and technical resources to see these tasks through to a successful conclusion.

Japan, I assure you, Mr. President, is fully cognizant of its responsibilities in all these areas. In close and productive partnership with the United States, our irreplaceable friend and ally, we have great tasks to perform. That is why I have come.

Thank you. (Applause)

BIOGRAPHY '78

accompanist

Since 1960 Bobby Short has repeatedly appeared in concert in the great halls of this country and with such prestigious musical organizations as the Boston Pops, the Buffalo Philharmonic, the Dallas Symphony, the Denver Symphony, the Indianapolis Symphony and, most recently, the Sacramento Symphony. In July of 1977 he made his concert debut in Paris at the famed L'Espace Cardin, a performance to be subsequently televised both here and abroad. This is all, of course, in addition to his extensive appearances across the land in the role in which he often describes himself, "saloon pianist and singer."

Mr. Short has been called "a musical antiquarian" by the NEW YORKER magazine and the late Vernon Duke referred to him as "the last of the great troubadours." Dan Sullivan of the Los Angeles Times simply stated, "Bobby Short is the best!" Whatever the case, he has persistently and faithfully performed American popular songs in his own distinctive manner since he was a child performer in vaudeville.

Bobby Short, whose interest in popular music is ever-expanding, has contributed his writings to a number of periodicals and has lectured at Harvard University on the American Popular Song. His early years in show business were chronicled in an autobiography, BLACK AND WHITE BABY, published by Dodd, Mead and Company in 1971. He has recorded extensively for Atlantic Records. His double LP, BOBBY SHORT LOVES COLE PORTER, reached the best-selling list in 1972 and received a Record of the Year Award from STEREO REVIEW Magazine.

When not pursuing a busy career in concerts, nightclubs, recordings and television, Mr. Short enjoys holiday travel often to distant points on the globe. Born in Danville, Illinois, he is a resident of New York City and in the spring of 1978 he will celebrate his tenth year as performer-in-residence at the Cafe Carlyle.

TO: MRS. CARTER

FROM: GRETCHEN POSTON GP

SUBJECT: STATE DINNER IN HONOR OF THE PRIME MINISTER OF JAPAN
MAY 2, 1979

Please note the underlined portions of the Telex stating the Prime Minister's keen interest in having something like a southern barbecue and in conjunction, folk or western music.

For your consideration, it might be just what he asked for to use the terrace off the State Dining Room for the State Dinner.

We would still maintain the formal air but in an informal setting. Barbecue drums could be set up on the terrace for the meat to be cooked southern style. The remainder of the menu would be prepared in the kitchens in the house.

The dinner would be black tie and seated in the usual form and served in the same formal manner. We have to keep to our 130-140 guests capacity with the understanding that we would have to move inside in the event of rain.

At the conclusion of the dinner, the usual East Room procedure would be followed for entertainment.

A possible artist to consider inviting is Roy Clark who is recognized as a classical artist as well as country/western. To our knowledge he has not performed at the White House before, and is a musical genius. (Chet Atkins might be considered as well at this time.)

Reed fencing would be set up along the north side of the terrace to keep the wind out which predominantly blows from the north. Plant material and trees would also be set up around the terrace. Tiny lights would be in the trees

A menu could include baby filets of beef barbecued and a whole pig if possible also barbecued. The Prime Minister is also fond of sweet potatoes.

Please indicate your approval to proceed or your disapproval of any elements.

ROY CLARK

Roy Clark is a well-known all-around entertainer in the country music world.

He was the first country music entertainer to go behind the Iron Curtain, and is recognized as a singer and as an instrumentalist in the tradition of classical and country music.

He has been the Country Music Association (CMA)'s Instrumentalist of the Year for the last two years and plays both the banjo and the guitar.

CMA elected him as Entertainer of the Year in 1973, and in both 1975 and 1976, he and Buck Trent won the Instrumental Group Award. In 1970, he was also elected Comedian of the Year.

Last year he hosted the CMA Awards Show.

Each year the Mayor of Nashville gives an award to the entertainer who has contributed the most to the music industry in Nashville, and Roy was the winner of that Metronome Award last year.

Memorandum of Conversation

DATE: March 14, 1979

SUBJECT: Prime Minister and Mrs. Ohira's Trip to the U.S.:
Personal Data

PARTICIPANTS: Mrs. Hajime Morita, Daughter of Prime Minister Ohira
Mrs. Fumi Wickel, Widow of FSO James Wickel
Mr. Robert Immerman, Labor Attache

DISTRIBUTION: AMB, DCM, POL/COUNS, POL/A, ECON, ICA-Forster,
Department: EA/J-Romberg, INR/REA/NA,
INR/OIL/B, NSC-Platt

Mrs. Morita, Prime Minister Ohira's only daughter, indicated that she and her husband (a Finance Ministry official on loan to the Prime Minister's Office), would probably accompany the Prime Minister and Mrs. Ohira to the United States this spring. Mrs. Morita said since her father was basically "a country boy" with little grasp of formal Western protocol, the Ohira family was hoping that the various social events connected with the trip would be as informal as possible.

I asked whether there were any foods which should not be served to either the Prime Minister or Mrs. Ohira. Mrs. Morita mentioned that on several State dinners in the past, senior Foreign Office officials were embarrassed by the Prime Minister's habit of noisily slurping his soup, so perhaps it should be avoided. She added that neither the Prime Minister nor Mrs. Ohira liked very rich foods; moreover, the Prime Minister did not eat lobster and Mrs. Ohira avoided cheese, yogurt and green peppers. The Prime Minister, as a rule, did not drink, although he was willing to sip wine when offering or receiving a toast. As the Prime Minister was very fond of sweets, Mrs. Ohira worried about his sugar intake. The Prime Minister's favorite food was sweet potatoes. In general, Mrs. Morita thought that he and Mrs. Ohira would very much appreciate American country food, particularly a Southern barbecue served in an informal manner.

According to Mrs. Morita, while the Prime Minister's life centered around politics, Mrs. Ohira had very little interest in the subject. Mr. Ohira's one great relaxation was golf. He was not interested in classical music, ballet or serious theater, but in the past was a great TV fan and, like the Emperor, hardly ever missed an episode of "Colombo". (Mrs. Morita said that her parents would enjoy meeting Peter Falk.) Therefore, Mrs. Morita hoped that any evening or after dinner cultural activities arranged for the Ohira party would be light and amusing (otherwise, she said, her father might doze off to the embarrassment of all concerned). In addition, she thought her parents would very much enjoy American country music, folk songs or light music of the era of the 40s and 50s (she remembered that when she was a girl, her mother frequently listened to records of Carmen Cavallero's orchestra and Perry Como and her father talked about meeting Pat Boone when he was in the U.S.). Mrs. Ohira used to be a movie fan and was therefore very familiar with those Hollywood stars who became famous at least twenty years ago. In an aside, Mrs. Morita mentioned that, after returning from previous trips abroad, her parents often regretted that they seemed to meet the same people at the various social events hosted for them in a given country and had no opportunity to shake hands with people who were not government officials, politicians or businessmen.

Mrs. Morita said her mother had much more sophisticated tastes than her father and gave the impression of being very youthful. She said her mother was very conscious of and interested in fashion but was partial to French designers, mainly because she was not well acquainted with American designers and was of the impression that they specialized in clothing for very young people. Mrs. Morita said that she had recently discovered Oscar De La Renta only because his clothing was being displayed in Japan by Mitsukoshi. Neither Mrs. Morita nor her mother had ever heard of Halston or Bill Blass. Mrs. Morita hoped that in the U.S. her mother would have the opportunity either to meet some American designers or to view a fashion show focusing on designs for mature women. I remarked that this might also help improve the U.S. trade balance with Japan. P

Mrs. Morita noted that she, her two children (one in high school, one in sixth grade) and Mrs. Ohira all studied piano and were, therefore, very fond of music. In this connection, Mrs. Morita recalled that one of Mrs. Ohira's most favorable memories of the U.S. related to her visit to a ukelele manufacturer in Hawaii who gave her on-the-spot lessons in how to play the instrument and then presented her with one as a souvenir.

Turning again to the forthcoming trip, Mrs. Morita emphasized that her parents recognized the necessity for protocol, but nevertheless, looked forward to as informal a program as possible. She added that the entire family hoped they could have some genuinely American experiences with regard to food, popular culture and sightseeing. She said that what the Ohiras, her husband and herself really liked most about America was the informality and good humor of Americans, whom they found easy to get to know. As for herself, while Mrs. Morita denied being able to speak English, she left me with the impression that she understood a considerable amount (particularly since she admitted that she had traveled in the U.S. on at least two occasions without the help of an interpreter).
