... wanted to come to Calcutta to express our deep sadness at the passing of Mother Teresa, but also to celebrate her mission, her faith and her life," Mrs. Clinton said.

About two dozen 4- and 5-year-olds greeted Mrs. Clinton at the Shishu Bhavan orphanage, which is home to 436 children and was founded by Mother Teresa in 1956.

The children sang songs in English and waved little U.S. and Indian flags as Mrs. Clinton chatted with some of the nuns of Mother Teresa's order, the Missionaries of Charity.

Mrs. Clinton also stopped to pick up a toddler in a room filled with about 50 green cribs and walked through a section with infants lying in white bassinets. Paintings of Jesus Christ and children adorned the walls of the rooms.

Afterward, Mrs. Clinton went for a private visit with Mother Teresa's successor, Sister Nirmala, at the charity's headquarters, Mother House.

CORRECTION:

An article Monday overstated the federal campaign contributions made by Hilary Rosen, CEO of the Recording Industry Association of America. She has donated more than $ 114,000 to political campaigns and organizations since 1987, according to records filed with the Federal Election Commission.

The Sun regrets the errors.

CORRECTION:

 CORRECTION PUBLISHED SEPTEMBER 9, 1997 *****

Because of an error by the author, a column headlined "Fathers - who needs 'em, anyway?" on Monday's opposite-editorial page erred in stating the number of fatherless children in Florida. One in five of Florida's 3.2 million children is expected to grow up without a father.
