HARDLY THE PICTURE of a typical ink-stained wretch, Hillary Rodham Clinton, syndicated columnist, was poised and polished and dressed in pink for her appearance before the Newspaper Features Council's meeting in ...

... States to write a Mother's Day column.

Her next guest columnist, she suggested, might be Eleanor Roosevelt. The Eleanor column, Mrs. Clinton noted, "was her idea, not mine."

She's tuned in to the concerns of ordinary Americans. She confesses that with Chelsea away at college, she will have ...

... discouraging, but that those times were far outnumbered by the good days.

So why do so many people seem to hate her?

The criticisms of Mrs. Clinton are familiar, from the seemingly too-good-to-be-true futures investments, to the murky waters of the Whitewater deal, to the drubbing she took for her considerable efforts to reform health care.

"Hillary Clinton? She's a five-star phony," is the response of a typical Hillary critic.

Perhaps it was natural that she reached for the outlet of ...

... during her White House days.

Mrs. Roosevelt wrote not weekly, but daily, and the column gained her more attention than Mrs. Clinton's ever could.

Unlike the days of the Roosevelt administration, Americans are accustomed to seeing presidents and first ladies on television.

Mrs. Clinton's column came along in an era in which most newspapers, like this one, are reluctant to give space on ...

Syndicates closely guard their numbers, but it seems likely that Mrs. Clinton's column may have a bigger impact abroad than in this country.

That would not be surprising, since foreign newspapers don't need to worry about partisan appearances.

In many parts of the world, Mrs. Clinton is revered by women as a beacon of hope -- not just as a political figure, but also as a mother.

She and her husband have ...

... one child.

The fact that she is a girl makes her no less worthy of education or love or of dreams as big as all outdoors.

Hillary Clinton, politician, will always draw criticism. But Hillary Rodham Clinton, the syndicated columnist trying hard to avoid politics, can make some important points to people around the world.
