Standing outside the two-story Georgian home where she grew up in this Chicago suburb, Mrs. Clinton mused aloud: "I can hear in the back of my head all the yells and screams of all of us playing here ...

The party had an almost surreal quality to it: Mrs. Clinton and friends stretching back to grammar school tooled around the quiet, tree-lined streets of Park Ridge in a caravan that stretched to more than a dozen buses and cars.

Before noon, Mrs. Clinton had been serenaded with the birthday song four times, two cities (Chicago and Park Ridge) had proclaimed it "Hillary Rodham Clinton Day," and the corner of Elm and Wisner had been renamed "Rodham Corner." She actually turned 50 on Sunday.

BODY:

WASHINGTON - Sitting Thursday in the White House Map Room, Hillary Rodham Clinton opened a thick black briefing book and dived into what she called "a frontier issue:" child-care policy.

This is the "reborn" Hillary Clinton, famously turning 50 on Sunday, a policy diva in a baby-blue tailored suit and a frosted-blond pageboy. She is very much the same Hillary Clinton who has been the object of public affection, fascination and fury over the past five years: enigmatic, clever, frustrating and remarkably composed.

It is no coincidence that the child-care symposium came the same week as Mrs. Clinton's birthday, which is being treated as an unofficial coming-out party for the second-term first lady.

And it is no accident that the birthday is being celebrated with a policy-making forum. This was how Mrs. Clinton wanted it, despite her friends' efforts to mark the occasion with a nostalgic trip down Hillary Lane. Friends and staff ...

... stations of the cross." And Tuesday, she does Oprah.

Although reaching the half-century mark is a traumatic passage for many people, Mrs. Clinton is little given to introspection or self-doubt, her friends say. She is obsessed not with her identity, but with her calling. Her mission, as she sees it, is to ...

... known her, that has this strong sense of responsibility, a very moral sense that you should do whatever you can do," said Ann Lewis, a longtime friend of Mrs. Clinton's and now the White House director of communications. "She has always felt that way and she thinks of that as her role in the White House, too."

Mrs. Clinton is struck by how little time she has remaining on the global stage as first lady and has begun to think about how she ...

... time when both of them have literally the world open to them at a relatively young age.

It's exciting to them, and scary, too."

For now, however, Mrs. Clinton seems energized by her husband's re-election, freed for now of the crippling scrutiny that preoccupied her during much of the first term and liberated by her daughter's departure for college. Mrs. Clinton has assumed again an ambitious and visible role in promoting her husband's agenda and her own.

She is enjoying record approval ratings and ...

In just the past 10 days, Mrs. Clinton has given a major speech on domestic violence and family planning in Argentina, appeared in a public ...

... Siberia, Ukraine, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan and Uzbekistan.

Triumphant return

Her busy schedule and narrowed agenda represent a public reanimation of Mrs. Clinton. They come after 18 months of near-invisibility that began at one of the lowest points of the first Clinton term - her appearance ...

... a military-style greatcoat to answer questions about the mysterious loss and rediscovery of her law firm billing records.

Since then, Mrs. Clinton's tight-knit circle of aides has painstakingly plotted her return to the spotlight.

"This has been a disciplined and focused comeback, the result of a series of very ...

... spots carefully. And it's worked. They have done a really good job of repositioning her."

This official said the public persona of the second-term Mrs. Clinton is very different from that of the first. "No longer is she the co-president and the co-vice president of 1993," this official said. "But she's not Barbara Bush, tea and cookies, either."

Mrs. Clinton has traveled widely in her years in the post-health care wilderness, visiting Africa, China, the Indian subcontinent and Latin ...

... foreign travel. She can really make a difference when she goes into a country; she puts those issues higher on the agenda."

Although Mrs. Clinton has been subjected to some ridicule over her advocacy of a "politics of meaning" and her consultation with personal-growth gurus, she

In a perfect world, the entire nation would be sending warm wishes for a happy 50th birthday today to Hillary Rodham Clinton.

But this is not a perfect world, as Hillary Rodham Clinton often points out. And she is not a perfect first lady.

... confused as she is confident, as rudderless as she is driven.

It is a curious paradox. For all her celebrated strength - of conviction, of purpose, of will - Mrs. Clinton has been notable not for her success in Washington, but for her failure to achieve the lofty goals she brought with her.

It is a ...

... end, to expose not the potential of the first lady's role but the limits.

How this came about, though, is no mystery: Hillary Clinton's ambitious vision of her role, and the sense of mission she brought to it, were always her own creation - rather than a reflection of the wishes of the people ...
