In addition to Mrs. Clinton's visit, the United States has made efforts to promote friendship with the republics. Those efforts have also included aid.

Mrs. Clinton, for example, held a photo session on the tarmac in Bishkek, Kyrgyzstan, this week with a truckload of $ 2 ...

... States is paying for 12 other such clinics in the independent republics.

To symbolize peaceful coexistence between different cultures, Mrs. Clinton visited a 400-year-old synagogue in Samarkand that survived Soviet efforts to disband it. It is just down the street from a mosque and a traditional Muslim fountain.

Mrs. Clinton also visited several Muslim landmarks, including the tomb of Tamerlane, a powerful and feared 14th-century ruler.

Later she toured ...

Hillary Rodham Clinton's visit to Central Asia _ where even her husband hasn't been _ is not, we are told, a sightseeing trip.

The first lady has promised to talk ...

... elections, to build strong democratic institutions, to help them live with an open and inquiring press, to cherish civil society," said Mrs. Clinton.

... All well and good, but will anyone listen?

The five Central Asian republics that once belonged to the Soviet Union (Mrs. Clinton is not visiting Tajikistan or Turkmenistan) cover a land area four times the size of France, with rich natural resources ...

... enough money from a business she started with a $ 600 loan that she built a house with the profits.

"You built a house?" Mrs. Clinton asked. "Very good."

The woman, a former state employee who lost her job with independence, nodded proudly.

CORRECTION-DATE: November 12, 1997

CORRECTION:

In an article in yesterday's editions of The Sun, the Associated Press erroneously reported that Democratic fund-raiser Johnny Chung had tried to deliver more than $ 700,000 in donations to President Clinton's legal defense fund. Another fund-raiser, Yah Lin "Charlie" Trie, tried to deliver the money to the legal defense fund.

The Sun regrets the error.
