WASHINGTON - Sitting Thursday in the White House Map Room, Hillary Rodham Clinton opened a thick black briefing book and dived into what she called "a frontier issue:" child-care policy.

This is the "reborn" Hillary Clinton, famously turning 50 on Sunday, a policy diva in a baby-blue tailored suit and a frosted-blond pageboy. She is very much the same Hillary Clinton who has been the object of public affection, fascination and fury over the past five years: enigmatic, clever, frustrating and remarkably composed.

It is no coincidence that the child-care symposium came the same week as Mrs. Clinton's birthday, which is being treated as an unofficial coming-out party for the second-term first lady.

And it is no accident that the birthday is being celebrated with a policy-making forum. This was how Mrs. Clinton wanted it, despite her friends' efforts to mark the occasion with a nostalgic trip down Hillary Lane. Friends and staff ...

Mrs. Clinton is struck by how little time she has remaining on the global stage as first lady and has begun to think about how she ...

... time when both of them have literally the world open to them at a relatively young age.

It's exciting to them, and scary, too."

For now, however, Mrs. Clinton seems energized by her husband's re-election, freed for now of the crippling scrutiny that preoccupied her during much of the first term and liberated by her daughter's departure for college. Mrs. Clinton has assumed again an ambitious and visible role in promoting her husband's agenda and her own.

She is enjoying record approval ratings and ...

Her busy schedule and narrowed agenda represent a public reanimation of Mrs. Clinton. They come after 18 months of near-invisibility that began at one of the lowest points of the first Clinton term - her appearance ...

Since then, Mrs. Clinton's tight-knit circle of aides has painstakingly plotted her return to the spotlight.

"This has been a disciplined and focused comeback, the result of a series of very ...

... spots carefully. And it's worked. They have done a really good job of repositioning her."

This official said the public persona of the second-term Mrs. Clinton is very different from that of the first. "No longer is she the co-president and the co-vice president of 1993," this official said. "But she's not Barbara Bush, tea and cookies, either."

Mrs. Clinton has traveled widely in her years in the post-health care wilderness, visiting Africa, China, the Indian subcontinent and Latin ...
