"That's what I see him spending his time on and worrying about.

"Americans are smart, fair-minded, savvy people," Mrs. Clinton said, "and I think that they see things for what they are and they draw their own conclusions. They are satisfied that life is better, our country is stronger, and we're ...

... Later Wednesday, Mr. Clinton and historian Bernard Bailyn joined her for what was billed as the first Internet "cybercast" from the White House. Mrs. Clinton and Mr. Bailyn also answered questions sent to them by Internet users from around the country.

In her television interviews two weeks ago, Mrs. Clinton charged that her husband had been a longtime target of a "vast right-wing conspiracy" and that independent counsel Kenneth Starr's investigation of the ...

... Mr. Starr called the suggestion "nonsense."

Asked at the session with reporters Wednesday whether she had any further evidence of such a conspiracy, Mrs. Clinton said she had seen several news reports recently on the issue and found them to be "quite interesting."

"There's a lot of information out there that I commend all of you for the work you've been doing to bring to public light," she said.

Mrs. Clinton always has been one of the president's staunchest defenders. She has particularly rallied to his side when he has battled allegations of
