Building Partnerships For HIV Prevention

Acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) and human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) infection present unique social, economic, and public health challenges to people and governments throughout the world. These challenges are particularly significant in developing countries, where the pandemic threatens to reverse decades of progress in strengthening national economies and improving the health status and social well-being of millions of men, women and children.

Since 1986, the United States Agency for International Development (USAID) has been a world leader in the global response to HIV and AIDS, committing over $400 million to HIV/AIDS prevention activities through both bilateral programs and contributions to the multilateral efforts of the World Health Organization/Global Programme on AIDS (WHO/GPA). Through this work, USAID has gained extensive experience and valuable insights into the nature and evolution of the pandemic and the relative effectiveness of prevention interventions.

Policy and Programs

Prevention remains the focus of USAID's HIV/AIDS program. USAID supports the development of comprehensive HIV/AIDS prevention programs that integrate multiple interventions and are designed to address a long-term problem. These programs seek to reduce the sexual transmission of HIV by utilizing three basic strategies:

- 1) promoting safer sexual behavior;
- 2) increasing condom availability and use; and
- 3) improving prevention, diagnosis and treatment of sexually transmitted diseases.

In designing and implementing global HIV/AIDS prevention programs, USAID seeks to establish effective partnerships with and between local community-based organizations, private voluntary organizations, the private sector, as well as donors and the governments of host countries. In cooperation with its partners, USAID supports HIV/AIDS prevention interventions, biomedical and behavioral research, information and networking programs and various technical assistance activities in the areas of surveillance and modeling. USAID provides both multi-lateral assistance through organizations such as the World Health Organization's Global Programme on AIDS and bilateral assistance in HIV/AIDS prevention through its field-based missions and centrally-funded program. The following is a brief description of some of USAID's HIV/AIDS prevention activities.

WHO/GPA

WHO/GPA provides technical and policy leadership in the global fight against HIV/AIDS, coordinates research activities and global surveillance of the epidemic, facilitates international donor cooperation, and assists countries with strategic prevention and control interventions. USAID has been a principal supporter of and partner in WHO/GPA efforts and is an active member of the WHO/GPA Management Committee.

UNICEF

Beginning in 1993, USAID will give support to UNICEF for technical assistance in the five key UNICEF strategies for HIV/AIDS prevention: community social mobilization, school based initiatives, youth health development, rural health programs, and family care and counselling.

Bilateral Programs

Many USAID Missions support bilateral HIV/AIDS prevention activities using a variety of local, regional and central technical resources including those provided through the projects described below.

The AIDS Control and Prevention Project

The AIDS Control and Prevention Project (AIDSCAP) is the principal component of USAID's global HIV/AIDS prevention effort. Implemented by Family Health International (FHI), this five-year project is designed to support the local capacity of developing countries to prevent and control HIV. In support of the three key strategies to prevent the sexual transmission of HIV that are outlined above, the AIDSCAP project also emphasizes:

- Behavioral research to explore the cultural and societal factors that affect sexuality, to understand better the determinants of high risk sexual behaviors and to improve strategies that bring about behavioral change.

- Policy dialogue to provide policy makers with the information and support necessary to develop and sustain policies conducive to reducing the spread and impact of HIV infection.
- Evaluation to measure the impact and effectiveness of all activities.
- Support for coalition-building among private voluntary organizations (PVOs) and indigenous, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) working in HIV/AIDS prevention.

The AIDSCAP project provides resources and technical expertise to government and private organizations, universities, and community groups to mobilize large-scale HIV/AIDS prevention programs in 15 developing countries. To date, the emphasis countries are: Brazil, Cameroon, The Dominican Republic, Ethiopia, Haiti, India, Jamaica, Kenya, Malawi, Nigeria, Rwanda, Senegal, Tanzania, and Thailand. AIDSCAP also assists USAID missions in designing bilateral HIV/AIDS prevention projects in other countries in Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Caribbean.

Centers for Disease Control

USAID has an agreement with the U.S. Centers for Disease Control (CDC) to provide short-term technical assistance in HIV/AIDS prevention. This assistance includes a range of activities such as ensuring safety of blood supplies, improving surveillance systems, HIV testing and rapid epidemiologic assessments.

Peace Corps

Through an agreement with the U.S. Peace Corps, USAID supports the development of HIV/AIDS prevention projects in eight African countries. These programs are implemented by Peace Corps volunteers and their counterparts and focus on education of youth and HIV prevention counselling.

International Planned Parenthood Federation

Taking advantage of the large, well-established network of affiliates of the International Planned Parenthood Federation, USAID funds a project to integrate STD and HIV prevention activities including condom promotion and STD diagnosis and treatment into ongoing family planning services in Brazil, Haiti, Honduras, Jamaica and The Dominican Republic.

MotherCare

USAID, through the MotherCare Project, supports a cost-effective, clinic-based demonstration project in Nairobi, Kenya that provides syphilis screening and treatment to pregnant women and their partners in conjunction with existing antenatal care services.

Condom Supply and Logistics

USAID supports condom social marketing programs such as those undertaken by Population Services International and the Futures Group's SOMARC Project to make affordable, high quality condoms readily available to target audiences. To ensure continued demand for condoms in its many programs, USAID engages the technical support of John Snow, Inc. and CDC in the area of commodity logistics management.

International Center for Research on Women

Through the Women and AIDS Research Program of the International Center for Research on Women, USAID supports 17 behavioral, ethnographic, and operations research projects aimed at identifying ways in which women can be effective agents in reducing their risk of HIV infection. The findings from these research projects are being used to strengthen ongoing HIV/AIDS prevention activities and develop new interventions for women.

National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases

USAID engages the expertise of the National Institutes of Health to support short-term training of developing country scientists in biomedical and clinical aspects of HIV and AIDS and for technical assistance in designing and conducting biomedical research in HIV/AIDS.

STD Diagnostics Initiative

The STD Diagnostics Initiative is a multi-donor effort to identify, develop, field test, and assist with technology transfer of rapid, simple, inexpensive STD diagnostic tests for use in resource limited settings. Priorities of this initiative include a simple test for gonorrhea in women and a rapid test for syphilis for both men and women. Utilization of these tests will allow more appropriate and effective use of a syndromic approach to STD diagnosis.

The Population Council

With funds from USAID and other international donors, the Population Council is engaged in a microbicide research, development, and introduction initiative. This initiative involves screening of potentially microbicial compounds and conducting preclinical and clinical studies to assess the stability, toxicity and acceptability of these compounds. In addition, The Population Council will help organize consultative meetings to discuss a broad range of issues related to microbicide research, development and introduction.

U.S. Bureau of Census

The Bureau of Census receives support from USAID to maintain and disseminate a database on HIV/AIDS prevalence in developing countries. The data are used to prepare reports on trends and impacts of the epidemic. Staff from the Bureau of Census also assist the International Working Group on AIDS to integrate demographic data and processes into HIV/AIDS modeling.

National Council for International Health

Through an agreement with the National Council for International Health (NCIH), USAID supports the participation of private voluntary organizations in HIV/AIDS prevention activities. NCIH distributes a newsletter and coordinates semi-annual workshops intended to strengthen the ability of PVOs to assist in the prevention of HIV/AIDS and facilitates networking between these U.S.-based organizations.

HIV/AIDS NGO Support Programme

USAID provides funding to the NGO Support Programme, a multi-donor initiative designed to strengthen indigenous NGOs working in HIV/AIDS and STD prevention by providing them improved access to financial, technical, and managerial assistance.

Mike:

The numbers we are working with for FY 96 is $114,200 - and based on what Rick said a few weeks ago, that number will be straightlined for FY 97. The FY 96 number includes condoms (probably about $8.0 million), but it is not known if that will be the case in FY 97. You should check these numbers with Rick. As you know, we don't make these decisions.

MEMORANDUM FOR PATSY

FROM: LaHoma

RE: USAID HIV-AIDS Priority Setting Workshop
April 15-16, 1996

These are some highlights from the meeting:

- Background - This was one of the last formal meetings organized by USAID to get input into the next phase (1997 -) of USAID HIV/AIDS programming. Town meetings were conducted in Thailand, Chile, Uganda and Washington.
- The first USAID HIV/AIDS project lasted from 1986-91 (Phase I). Major contractors were Family Health International (AIDSTECH) and the Academy for Educational Development (AIDSCOM). The second USAID project phase is in its last year of implementation (1991-96 *plus a 1 yr extension) with FHI (AIDSCAP). USAID will send out an RFP for the next (third) phase of the project sometime in August.
- The purpose of this meeting was to define USAID's comparative advantage with regards to HIV/AIDS programs. We used the "Universal Objective Tree" as a framework and for two days, discussed the global HIV/AIDS needs. We then looked more specifically at USAID strengths and areas for the agency's focus for the next project phase.
- Major concerns/issues raised during the meeting included:
 - Need for a focus on human rights and discrimination
 - Need for focus on gender issues
 - Need for focus on women's/girls' education/social status
 - Need for focus on adolescents/ in and out of school programs
 - Need for training for health care providers
 - Need for access to treatment for STDS and HIV
 - Vaccine research
 - Greater support for PLWAs
 - Greater support for families and orphans
 - Need to focus on approaches for new at risk populations including injecting drug users (Southeast Asia)
- The ability of USAID to address any or all of these new program areas remain to be seen, especially in light of decreases in international development assistance funds and the reduction in monies for family planning programs which provided a great deal of support for condom distribution in some countries.
- USAID will present its findings and new project ideas in Vancouver.

MEMORANDUM FOR TONY LAKE AND ALICE RIVLIN

FROM: Carol H. Rasco

Subject: Funding of USAID AIDS programs

As you know, the HIV epidemic is raging at almost unimaginable rates in Africa -- with some geographic areas seeing infection rates well over 50 percent. Beyond the human tragedy, this also has tremendous potential for political destabilization. USAID has supported a significant number of bilateral AIDS programs as well as given US support to UN-related multilateral efforts in an effort to stem this tide.

I understand that the international aid portions of the budget are very much in flux and that although the Administration is supporting full funding of international programs, this may, in the end, not be the result. Given the growing threat of HIV in Africa and also, increasingly, Asia, I hope that we will be able to protect USAID's AIDS-related funding as much as possible.

I would be deeply grateful for any personal attention you can give this matter.

BRIEFING MEMORANDUM FOR THE ASSISTANT ADMINISTRATOR, BUREAU FOR GLOBAL PROGRAMS, FIELD SUPPORT AND RESEARCH

FROM: G/PHN/HN/HIV-AIDS, Jacob Gayle

SUBJECT: Talking Points for closing session of the Third USAID
HIV/AIDS Prevention Conference

Date: Wednesday, August 9, 1995

Time: 6:00 p.m.

Place: Renaissance Hotel Ballroom

- This meeting has convened the leadership in HIV/AIDS from all over the world. It has been an unique opportunity for the HIV community-at-large to share its experiences and needs.
- This has also been a time for us all to shed our titles and our affiliations, and to roll-up our sleeves together. HIV demands us to join together to seek ways to share our resources and strengths.
- During the past few days, you have discussed issues that many of us have not before shared together in a forum such as this. Issues concerning gender, community participation, engagement of the HIV community in all aspects of the response to the epidemic.
- The nature of this conference demonstrates the complexity of the disease and the need for an equally multi-faceted response to it.
- As the chief administrator for USAID's Global Bureau, I enjoy the opportunity to lead the Agency's HIV/AIDS efforts. Being the world's largest bilateral HIV/AIDS prevention program is no small responsibility! This is why we have counted on you to help us review our progress and suggest what the focus for the future might include.
- Recently, I've taken on another role in the HIV community. The Program Coordinating Board of the new United Nations joint HIV/AIDS Program - UNAIDS has elected me as its chair. I feel honored and recognize the great responsibility it entails.

- I think that I have an unique opportunity as PCE chair to help shape UNAIDS' focus in its operations and activities. This includes ensuring that NGOs are always "at the table" when it comes to programmatic decisions and leadership.
- I must commend you for work well done. When USAID counts its success in the field it speaks of you. For we are only as strong as what you reflect in the field and that has been strength, determination, perseverance and hope. Let us continue!
- Finally, I want to thank the HIV/AIDS Division for its leadership in organizing this meeting.
- Please join us for the reception which follows. Safe journeys.

HIV/AIDS POLICY GUIDANCE

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

We are now entering the second decade of the epidemic of human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) and acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS). No region of the world has been spared, making this crisis clearly a global issue. The epidemic continues to exact an enormous toll in human suffering and threatens the economic, social, and political stability of many societies around the world. This document is intended to update and refine Agency strategy for HIV/AIDS activities. It reaffirms USAID's strong and continuing commitment to providing assistance that will help developing countries address the challenges posed by the HIV/AIDS pandemic.

Estimates prepared by the World Health Organization Global Programme on AIDS (WHO/GPA) indicate that by early 1995 approximately seventeen million people, including one million children, have been infected with HIV. With less than 10% of the world's population, sub-Saharan Africa accounts for about 62% of the total estimated HIV infections. Up to 30% of urban adults in Malawi, Zambia, Botswana, Rwanda, and Uganda are infected. HIV infection is also quickly becoming established in other geographic areas such as parts of Latin America and Asia. The growth of the epidemic is particularly dramatic in Asia. In 1993, for the first time, Southeast Asia had more cases of AIDS than North America and almost twice as many as in Western Europe.

Women and children, target groups of the Agency, are particularly affected. Over 7 million women, 40% of the total number of infected adults, are infected with HIV/AIDS. This, in turn has an effect on children, as infants contract HIV during pregnancy, delivery, or from their mother's breastmilk. Evidence indicates that by the year 2010, AIDS will contribute to dramatic increases in child mortality in a number of countries where significant progress in child survival has been made. This scenario is compounded by the fact that, in the near future, prospects are poor for the development of preventive vaccines or therapeutic agents which would cure AIDS.

Evidence and experience with the disease demonstrates an adverse impact on every level of society and every aspect of development. This is because, unlike other major communicable diseases (malaria, measles, infectious diarrheas, etc.), AIDS primarily increases deaths among young adults between the ages of 14 and 49, ages normally devoted to working and childbearing. Family structures and coping mechanisms are severely affected by these illnesses and deaths. Community resources are drained. Agricultural and industrial sectors are impacted by the effect on the work force, with decreased productivity and increased production costs. These factors can combine to create a considerable negative impact on the macroeconomy and an environment in which sustainable development is difficult, if not impossible. Especially affected is the health sector, because it must respond to increased demands on health budgets and social service delivery systems.

Consequently, the HIV/AIDS pandemic has a significant adverse influence both on maintaining past and enabling future potential achievements in sustainable development. HIV/AIDS has direct negative consequences on USAID's strategic goal of stabilizing global population and protecting human health and the goal of encouraging broad based economic growth. The epidemic may also have indirect consequences on the Agency goal of building democracies. Therefore, USAID will sustain a strong commitment to HIV/AIDS programs. This commitment is reflected in the Agency's strategic objective of reducing transmission of sexually transmitted infections (STI) with a primary focus on HIV.

Agency strategy is based on lessons learned over the past several years in combatting the epidemic. Programmatic experience with the disease has enabled the Agency to effectively target and refine programs. Interventions have been proven successful, and implementation feasible even in the face of difficult socio-cultural conditions. Results and impact are demonstrable. In Kenya, for example, it is estimated that USAID supported condom interventions have prevented 110,000 HIV infections and close to 1.3 million STIs.

Based on this knowledge, two key lessons have emerged which are central to USAID's interventions. First is the need to identify and target populations at particular risk. These include women, young adults, migrant and displaced persons, and persons with STIs. Second is the value of targeted and proven responses to reduce risk and transmission. These include actions which promote and support sustained behavior change, encourage consistent and correct condom use, improve STI services, and involve communities in the design, development, implementation and evaluation of HIV prevention policies and program activities.

Using these guiding principles and considering areas in which USAID has a comparative advantage (particularly relative to technical leadership, field presence and support and linkages both within the PHN sector and across other USAID areas of intervention) USAID's strategy will be to direct efforts in three areas:

- HIV/AIDS prevention programs which use proven strategies to prevent transmission. This aspect of the strategy incorporates prevention programs which promote safer sexual behavior through information, education and communication (IEC); increase the demand for, access to and correct and consistent use of condoms and; control STIs by improving STI diagnosis and treatment services and by education of persons with STIs.

- Policy reform addressing social, cultural, regulatory and economic issues related to HIV/AIDS and other STIs. Key areas of intervention in this component of the strategy include policy dialogue to encourage a high-level, multi-sectoral, coordinated response to HIV/AIDS, deal with resource issues and long term sustainability at all levels, and address the social and cultural impediments to successful implementation of HIV/AIDS programs, including the stigmatization of those individuals infected and at risk, including women, young adults and homosexuals. In addition, tools and research will be developed to serve as the basis for policy dialogue.
- Develop and test new strategies and methods to prevent transmission and mitigate the impact of the epidemic. More effective interventions must be developed to adequately prevent and control this epidemic. The most promising general areas which USAID intends to pursue include research activities which immediately and directly influence the effectiveness of existing programs, activities that enable women to reduce the risk of HIV infection, pilot projects and research to mitigate the impact of HIV in severely affected areas, and activities that support the infrastructure and utilization of HIV vaccines.

To implement this strategy, USAID will work closely with a number of partners. This approach is based on participatory, collaborative principles and is intended to support host country and Mission strategic objectives. Agency implementing partners include:

- Communities - a community-owned, community-based approach is particularly relevant to HIV/AIDS prevention and is an integral strategic focus of this strategy. USAID actively seeks the participation of communities and groups, including persons infected and affected by HIV/AIDS, in the design, management, and evaluation of programs and policies. USAID also supports the transfer of management and technical skills and linkages between the U.S. domestic PVO community and indigenous groups.
- Country Programs - Given serious resource limitations, USAID will concentrate bilateral and core resources on a limited number of emphasis countries while maintaining more modest programs in others. Emphasis countries have been identified based on epidemiologic, demographic and social indicators which demonstrate that they are either key contributors to the global epidemic, play a significant role in terms of geographic regional transmission, or have high prevalence of HIV infection.
- Regional Programs - Experience has demonstrated that certain countries and regions are "areas of affinity" ie they share characteristics which affect the spread of the HIV and positively or negatively influence prevention efforts. Using this transnational approach, where appropriate, to implement programs and activities is both cost effective and encourages inter-regional collaboration.

- Multilateral and other donors - As USAID is the lead donor in this sector, close donor coordination is of particular importance. USAID will collaborate and support the efforts of the UN multilateral organizations through the new Joint and Cosponsored Programme on HIV/AIDS. USAID will also continue to work closely with the World Bank and other bilateral donors such as Japan.

Finally the effectiveness of this strategy will be closely monitored to demonstrate results towards achieving the goal of reduced transmission of HIV/AIDS and other STIs. Both interim and long term markers such as the prevalence of specific STI's will be measured. Work will be undertaken, as well, to further refine indicators for success in this area.

HIV/AIDS POLICY GUIDANCE

I. INTRODUCTION

We are now entering the second decade of the global epidemic of human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) and acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS). No region of the world has been spared. The epidemic continues to exact an enormous toll in human suffering and threatens the economic, social, and political stability of many societies around the world. Particularly hard-hit are the fragile health care and social service delivery systems of many developing countries where demands are great and available resources are easily overwhelmed.

In April 1987, in recognition of the threat to human life and the potential for a broad development impact of the HIV/AIDS pandemic, the U. S. Agency for International Development (USAID) drafted its first comprehensive Policy Guidance on HIV/AIDS. Now, with eight years of experience in over 40 countries, this policy has been reviewed and refined.

This document replaces earlier guidance and reaffirms USAID's strong and continuing commitment to provide assistance that will help developing countries address the challenges posed by the HIV/AIDS pandemic. It focuses specifically on guidelines for HIV/AIDS activities within the broader context of USAID strategic goals related to sustainable development.

II. STATUS OF THE EPIDEMIC

Estimates prepared by the World Health Organization Global Programme on AIDS (WHO/GPA) indicate that by early 1995 approximately seventeen million people, including one million children, have been infected with HIV (the virus that causes AIDS). Conservative estimates also indicate that between 30 and 40 million people will be infected with HIV by the year 2000. Current evidence shows that most, if not all, persons who are infected with HIV will eventually develop AIDS and die. Sexual transmission of HIV accounts for over 85% of the cumulative adult HIV infections in the world. Although in certain countries homosexual transmission plays a role in the spread of HIV, heterosexual transmission is increasingly important and in many developing countries accounts for over 80% of sexual transmission. (See Appendix I for discussion of other modes of transmission).

In examining the geographic spread of HIV infections around the world, distinct patterns in the levels and modes of infection have emerged:

With less than 10% of the world's population, sub-Saharan Africa accounts for about 62% of the total estimated HIV infections.

In some countries in East, Central, and Southern Africa, the prevalence of infection has reached critically high levels -- up to 30% of urban adults in Malawi, Zambia, Botswana, Rwanda, and Uganda.

HIV infection is quickly becoming established in other geographic areas, such as parts of Latin America and Asia -- data from antenatal clinic attenders, considered representative of the general adult community, has found HIV seroprevalence rates of 1% to 4% among clients in urban Honduras, India, and Thailand. Much higher prevalence rates have been found among subpopulations who are engaged in high risk activities, such as commercial sex workers and patients at sexually transmitted infection (STI) clinics.

The growth of the epidemic is particularly dramatic in Asia. In 1993, for the first time, Southeast Asia had more cases of AIDS than North America and almost twice as many as in Western Europe.

Women are particularly vulnerable to the disease. Forty percent of infected adults today are women; this proportion is increasing rapidly, and the total number of infected women is expected to surpass the number of men by the year 2000. Over 7 million women are infected world-wide with HIV/AIDS, eighty percent of whom are in sub-Saharan Africa. This will reach 13 million by the year 2000. Infections among women, in turn, has an effect on children, as infants contract HIV during pregnancy and/or delivery from their mothers. Children are additionally vulnerable as a consequence of the loss of parents and family members to AIDS. AIDS orphans are a growing reality around the world, and are further victimized by prostitution and violence.

This scenario is compounded by the fact that, in the near future, prospects are poor for the development of preventive vaccines or therapeutic agents which would cure AIDS. In addition, access to drugs which may prolong the lives of HIV infected persons in developing countries is limited by high costs and the necessity for intensive medical monitoring, which are generally unavailable and prohibitively expensive.

Given the nature of the epidemic and its effect on the developing world, the demands for assistance are enormous and far exceed available resources. WHO now estimates that it would cost between $1.5 and $2.9 billion dollars per year to provide adequate support for global HIV/AIDS and STI prevention efforts in the developing world. Currently, less than $250 million is expended annually in the developing world on HIV prevention. USAID contributes nearly 50% of this total.

III. THE RATIONALE FOR USAID SUPPORT TO HIV/AIDS PREVENTION AND CONTROL

The AIDS epidemic poses a particular threat to developing countries which are already grappling with heavy debt burdens, high poverty levels, food insecurity and limited government resources. Unlike the other major communicable diseases (malaria, measles, infectious diarrheas, pneumonia, etc.), AIDS primarily increases deaths among young adults between the ages of 14 and 49, ages normally devoted to working and childbearing. This generates periods of prolonged and severe debilitation and excessive population losses in the most economically productive years of life. These losses reverberate throughout their societies with negative impacts on social, economic and political structures, contributing to an environment in which broad-based economic growth and sustainable development become increasingly difficult to attain.

The epidemiology of HIV/AIDS also demonstrates an increasing effect on women and children, key target groups for the Agency. The rate of new HIV infections is growing faster in women than in men with; nearly 55 percent of new infections in Sub-Saharan Africa are among women. This, in turn affects children as HIV/AIDS threatens to reverse the successful results of years of investments in child survival.

In fact, many of the development gains made within the last decade could be wiped out as a result of the pandemic, both in the public health sector and within the broader economy. Evidence indicates that the epidemic is likely to adversely affect society and the human resource base in the following major areas:

Health Sector: Clearly, the health of the population is and will continue to be severely affected, with major impact on health services systems. Improvements generated in infant and child mortality rates in the past two decades have begun to plateau and may actually be eroding in a number of African countries as a result of HIV/AIDS. For example, in Malawi, the infant mortality rate has gone from 150/1000 live births to 167/1000 live births during the past three years, and the child mortality rate from 220 to 250. This increase is ascribed to the impact of HIV/AIDS infections transmitted from mother to child. Evidence indicates that by the year 2010, AIDS could contribute to a nearly fivefold increase in childhood mortality rates in Thailand, threefold in Zambia and Zimbabwe, and double in Kenya and Uganda.

Increased demands on health budgets and social service delivery systems (including personnel, hospital beds, drugs, etc.) result from HIV/AIDS and associated opportunistic infections. Some Sub-Saharan African countries currently spend one-quarter to one-half of their health care budgets on AIDS-related care, with studies indicating that this could rise to as much as 80 percent in parts of Africa and Asia by the year 2010. As demands on the health care system increase, some countries are responding by restricting access to care for those with HIV related illness, persons with HIV disease are sent home to die with minimal or no health care support. The drain on health services has considerable repercussions on resources available for maternal and child health, family planning, and other strategically critical services.

In addition, the HIV/AIDS epidemic has contributed to the emergence of a major secondary epidemic of tuberculosis, placing another health burden on both individuals and health care systems. Tuberculosis is affecting both HIV infected persons and because of increased transmission, persons who are not infected with the AIDS virus. In countries in east Africa and in Thailand where the HIV epidemic is well established, the number of reported TB cases has doubled in the past three years.

Families/Households: Recent studies have analyzed the coping mechanisms of families who have experienced deaths of adult members. They show profound consequences among households which have family members with HIV/AIDS related illness. In the most severely affected countries of Asia and east Africa, 30 to 50 percent of household income is devoted to their care and support. Combined with the loss of earnings from sick individuals, nearly 75% of the family annual income is lost due to HIV/AIDS. With a subsequent loss of another adult and one child from HIV related disease, an increasingly common pattern, 100 to 165% of household income is expended, driving families into debt. Broad-based economic growth becomes impossible in such settings.

Family structure is affected, particularly with an increase in the number of orphans. In Uganda, the ability of the extended family to care for orphans is exhausted within three years of a significant number of AIDS adult deaths. Ultimately the household's ability to cope with adverse conditions, such as drought, is destroyed, resulting in reduced food security. Life expectancy is severely impacted, with projections for some countries, such as Thailand, Zimbabwe and Zambia, showing AIDS reducing life expectancy at birth by more than 25 years by the year 2010.

Community: The social and economic impact at the household level extends to the community. Increased household expenditures and reduced savings and investment has enormous negative consequences on the resources of the community. Education suffers with decreased investment in the sector and reduced educational performance as children are required to help at home.

Community resources are drained caring for orphans and the elderly. Community level leadership, community norms, agricultural productivity and maintenance of community service projects, such as potable water supplies are also severely affected by the epidemic.

Agricultural sector: In severely affected countries, broad movement toward less labor intensive crops and crop production technologies with resultant lower yields and reductions in marketed output are being observed. This may have implications for food security at the national level. Studies are now being undertaken by USAID, in cooperation with the U.S.D.A., to better define this impact.

Industrial sector: In east Africa, negative effects have been documented on specific segments of the "modern" labor sector, i.e. enterprises that employ greater than ten staff. Those sectors most severely effected are mining, trucking/transportation, and services. It is likely that the epidemic will result in increased production costs due to increased morbidity in the workforce, decreased productivity, loss of skilled and trained workers, and increased employer-funded medical costs. Negative effects on the quantity and quality of labor supply and on investment decisions, including investment in human capital are also being observed.

Security/Military Sectors: High rates of HIV infection among police and military personnel could threaten internal and national security. In some countries in Africa and Asia, 15 to 40% of military recruits are HIV positive. While the U.S. Government supports demobilization of military forces in developing countries, this could further exacerbate the HIV/AIDS epidemic through increased transmission by HIV positive military personnel returning to their villages and homes.

Macroeconomy: Multiple socio-economic impact studies show that a number of these factors combine to impact negatively on the macroeconomy. These include aggregated negative impacts at the household and sectoral levels, decreases in overall domestic savings and investment levels, negative effects on foreign investments, reductions in the volumes of imports and exports, and reduction in receipts from tourism. Classic macroeconomic indicators, such as Gross National Product (GNP) and Gross Domestic Product (GDP) per capita, may not be sensitive enough to accurately measure this impact. New paradigms are needed to assess the impact of HIV/AIDS at the macroeconomic level. Studies by the World Bank supported by USAID are now underway to assess the spectrum of potential monitoring methods.

Political Environment: Because of the issues identified above, HIV/AIDS has a high potential to contribute to political instability, particularly in countries with emerging democracies. The irreversible loss of educated leaders is an increasing possibility, and is already being seen in countries in east Africa.

Clearly HIV/AIDS has both actual and potential impacts on women, men and children, individuals and populations, and the movement towards sustainable development in countries and regions. It also has a negative effect on previous USAID investments and development successes achieved to date. The cross-cutting nature of the epidemic and the numerous areas in which it impinges on USAID objectives are evident: protecting human health; encouraging broad-based economic growth; building democracies; empowering women; and providing humanitarian assistance.

Development activities also have the potential to inadvertently facilitate the spread of the disease. For example, construction projects create primarily male migrant work camps which often foster increased commercial sex. Road and transportation projects provide ready routes of transmission, and new towns along these routes often serve as crucibles for transmission. As in the environment sector, the effect of development activities on HIV needs to be carefully considered in the formulation of USAID strategies, objectives, programs, projects and evaluation systems. Anticipation and mitigation of significant negative impacts on HIV must be a part of strategic planning for such infrastructure projects.

In sum, given the broad and compelling implications of the HIV/AIDS pandemic on the people of the developing world, its epidemiology, and its potential impact on micro and macro development, USAID will sustain a strong commitment to HIV/AIDS programs.

IV. LESSONS LEARNED

As the epidemic has progressed, knowledge and experience with the disease has provided valuable lessons. USAID has worked in the area of HIV/AIDS for the past eight years, and has developed increasingly effective targeting and implementation mechanisms.

There have been notable accomplishments. Program interventions have been proven successful, and implementation feasible, even in the face of difficult socio-cultural conditions. The Agency has been able to demonstrate and measure results and impact.

In Kenya, USAID has supported interventions to increase condom use. Newly developed models estimate that 110,000 HIV infections and close to 1.3 million STIs have been averted due to the consequent increase in condom use.

In Haiti, in spite of political upheaval, condom sales rose from approximately 600 thousand in 1991 to 4 million in 1992 in response to a targeted communications and motivation effort.

In Brazil, policy reform activities supported by USAID focused on working with local advocates to lobby for the repeal of the 15 percent import tax on condoms. Analysis showed that the tax made the product too expensive for most people who needed them and helped convince policymakers that a supply of affordable condoms was crucial to slowing the spread of HIV/AIDS in Brazil. The tax was withdrawn in April 1994.

In the Dominican Republic, Agency supported policy work contributed to the passage of legislation outlawing discrimination against people with HIV/AIDS and mandating that every government ministry have a plan to address the epidemic.

Thailand, supported by USAID assistance, has implemented an effective prevention program which serves as a model for other Asian countries. One example of an important and innovative policy instituted by the Thai government and supported by Thai business interests is the "100 percent condom" policy, which requires 100 percent condom use in brothels.

With USAID support, significant progress has been made toward the discovery of an effective vaginal microbicide. A promising compound derived from natural sources has been shown to inhibit transfer of HIV from infected lymphocytes to vaginal cells. Phase One field trials are now beginning in Thailand.

Based on Agency experience, several key lessons have emerged as critical to achieving success in preventing the spread of the disease. They constitute the major factors in USAID areas of intervention. Broadly, these fall into two categories; identifying populations who are at particular risk of becoming infected and transmitting HIV, and designing effective responses to reduce risk and transmission.

A. Priority Target Groups:

Women are at greater risk of HIV infection than their male counterparts due, in part, to the increased biologic efficiency of sexual transmission from men to women, and to the sexual vulnerability related to low socio-economic status of women in many countries of the world. Low status can affect women's knowledge of and ability to adopt practices to protect themselves from HIV. In situations where men have greater access to economic resources, and social-religious and legal conventions maintain gender inequities, women may have little or no say concerning their sexual relations with men. Women and girls with limited education are also less able or likely to respond to information about the disease and take preventive measures.

HIV programs targeted to women not only prevent infection in women themselves but also in their infants. Tools to prevent STIs and HIV such as female controlled barrier methods, better access to information from family planning and reproductive health settings, and communication skills to better negotiate sexual relationships all contribute to preventing the spread of the disease and serve to empower women.

Young adults represent a unique set of challenges as the combination of their biological, emotional, economic and legal situations make them particularly vulnerable to HIV. WHO estimates that half the people infected with HIV acquired it between the ages of 15 and 24. To prevent infection in this population USAID supports efforts using messages, channels and methods specific to this group. The intervention opportunities for young adults range from peer counseling and education and vocational skills building to legislative efforts related to youth.

Migrant and displaced persons are at particular risk and contribute to the spread of the epidemic. Rapid urbanization fueled by young adult migrants has contributed to the spread of the epidemic. Separated from family and traditional values, these migrants are often among the earliest populations to become infected with STIs and HIV. Migrant labor flows also increase the spread of HIV/AIDS both within and between countries. Additionally, involuntary migration in response to civil war or disasters increases the vulnerabilities of communities to HIV infection.

Persons with STIs are more significant and efficient transmitters of HIV and are logical targets of prevention efforts. The presence of an STI, particularly one which causes genital ulcers (syphilis, chancroid), increases the likelihood of sexual transmission of HIV by 5 to 20 times. In addition, persons with recurrent STIs are effective targets for communication campaigns to induce behavior change because they are more likely to be engaging in frequent casual high risk sexual encounters. Educational campaigns that focus on STI patients have been shown to have up to eight times as large a preventive impact as those aimed at the general adult population.

B. Responses to reduce risk and transmission

Sustained behavior change is required to limit sexual transmission. This is a complex and difficult task. Success in HIV/AIDS prevention is predicated upon the ability to effectively influence sexual behaviors. Adoption of safer sexual practices including delaying the onset of sexual activity, sexual abstinence, decreasing the number of casual sexual partners, maintaining faithful monogamous or culturally appropriate stable polygamous relationships, and consistent, correct condom use are the only prevention interventions currently available. Other critical steps include assessment by the individual of their own risk and motivation to practice safer sex. Cultural traditions or practices and political and religious views may impede or support the adoption of specific behaviors.

AIDS education and communication programs have been shown to help modify behavior. Multiple reinforcing channels of communication aimed at changing knowledge and attitudes toward safer sexual behavior are preludes to behavior modification. The identification and adoption of safer sexual practices as a social norm contribute to sustained behavior change. Programs conducted at the sub-national level involving specific communities or groups engaged in high risk behavior have proven most successful.

Condoms are effective in preventing the spread of STIs and HIV. Increasing the demand for, access to, and consistent and correct use of condoms are key factors in reducing the transmission of HIV infection.

Improving STI services by facilitating access to and quality of services is an efficient and effective way to address the spread of HIV. In addition to primary prevention activities, interventions which improve the demand for and quality of public and private sector clinical services are important. Accurate diagnosis and effective treatment of STIs limit the infectivity and duration of active STI infections, and the consequent risk of HIV.

Community participation, including those infected and affected by HIV/AIDS, in the design, development, implementation and evaluation of HIV prevention policies and program activities assures that programs are relevant and supports sustained behavior change in target populations. Community involvement is also critical for the long-term sustainability of programs. Community "ownership" contributes to the likelihood that activities will continue following the period of donor support.

V. STRATEGY

USAID's overall mission is the promotion of sustainable development for lasting improvement of the human condition. The basic strategic goals which must be addressed in order to carry out this mission are:

- * Stabilizing global population and protecting human health;
- * Encouraging broad-based economic growth;
- * Building democracy; and
- * Protecting the environment.

As discussed earlier, the HIV/AIDS epidemic has direct negative consequences on the first two goals, and very probable consequences on the third. Therefore, HIV/AIDS needs to be considered as an integral part of any broad strategy for sustainable development.

Within the strategic goal of stabilizing global population and protecting human health, four agency-wide strategic objectives have been identified which contribute to both fertility and health outcomes. These are the reduction of unintended pregnancies, the reduction of sexually transmitted diseases, the reduction of maternal deaths, and the reduction of child deaths. As the most deadly and rapidly spreading of sexually transmitted diseases, reduced HIV/AIDS transmission is the key component of the second objective, and is becoming an increasingly important contributor to the number of child deaths in many African countries as well. As such, HIV/AIDS prevention fits squarely within the agency's strategy for this sector.

The guidance provided by this document is intended to be flexible, building on the lessons learned and enabling USAID to respond quickly to incorporate new advances in HIV/AIDS prevention and control measures as they develop. It considers areas in which USAID has a comparative advantage, particularly relative to technical leadership, field presence and support, and linkages both within the PHN sector and across other USAID areas of intervention. In order to remain relevant and useful, this guidance will be reviewed and revised periodically.

As noted in the previous sections of this document, the challenges posed by the HIV/AIDS pandemic are almost limitless and could readily consume more than the entire development budget of the Agency. Since the Agency's fundamental mission is directed toward long-term sustainable development rather than short-term relief, and since resources are limited, the strategic basis for this HIV/AIDS policy is directed toward minimizing the total number of HIV/AIDS cases in the world by the year 2025.

Priority will be placed on interventions and areas which are most likely to ultimately decrease the number of persons infected by HIV and, thus, decrease the severity of the global epidemic and its impact on sustainable development. To achieve this, particularly given limited resources, USAID will need to focus efforts, and undertake a more proactive and aggressive approach to leveraging other donor resources and more effective donor coordination.

This has several implications. First, it means that the focus of USAID supported activities must be on prevention of new infections, rather than on the treatment or mitigation of existing infections. There will of course be circumstances in which mitigation serves to promote prevention efforts, but such efforts must be seen as supportive rather than primary. Second, it means that the targets of USAID-supported activities must be those groups among whom the largest number of new infections are anticipated over the next several decades and where the greatest public health impact can be expected. High risk but numerically small target groups will be addressed principally as they contribute to the wider pandemic.

Given this context USAID will direct efforts in the following three areas:

- A. HIV/AIDS prevention programs using proven strategies to prevent transmission.
- B. Policy reform addressing social, cultural, regulatory and economic issues related to HIV/AIDS and other STIs.
- C. New strategies and methods which need to be developed and tested to prevent transmission and mitigate the impact of the epidemic.

USAID does not directly undertake activities but rather sponsors interventions to improve the capacity, infrastructure, systems and policies which support prevention efforts in a sustainable way. All intervention programs will be evaluated for effectiveness. Consideration will also be given to the sustainability of interventions over the long term, looking towards reduced donor dependence.

To maximize the use of available resources, and achieve impact on the global epidemic, USAID will also concentrate efforts by supporting comprehensive approaches in a number of countries, identified as those most critical for controlling the global pandemic. (See Appendix II for HIV/AIDS emphasis country list.) It should be noted that even in these countries, USAID may not have the resources required to mount nationwide efforts. More limited efforts will be supported in other countries, as appropriate. In addition USAID will provide continued support for coordinated multilateral efforts.

In addition to focused HIV/AIDS/STI prevention projects, prevention activities will be increasingly integrated with other USAID sustainable development efforts. In the health and population sector this will be in the context of integrated reproductive health approaches. Other priority sectors for the Agency are also ripe with opportunity to incorporate certain HIV/AIDS interventions, particularly in the economic growth and education sectors. Examples include incorporating HIV/AIDS prevention information in school curricula and microenterprise programs targeted to women.

A. HIV/AIDS prevention programs which utilize proven strategies to prevent transmission.

USAID resources are used for the implementation of prevention activities at the regional, country and community level, with a particular focus placed on comprehensive programs in emphasis countries.

The interventions utilized by USAID's HIV/AIDS prevention activities have been developed based on clear epidemiological trends, findings of behavioral, biomedical, and operations research, and knowledge gained from successful behavior-change interventions conducted to date. They focus on preventing sexual transmission and are known to be effective. Although prevention activities currently work in the areas delineated below, if significant new technologies become available these will be considered and incorporated as appropriate.

In addition, although these programs may occur at a regional or country level, a participatory, community based approach is integral to the development and implementation of programs.

In this context, USAID prevention programs will:

Promote safer sexual behavior through information, education and communication. USAID's extensive experience with information, education and communication (IEC) initiatives in both health and family planning programs is already being applied to the prevention of HIV/AIDS. Communication programs strengthen and support an individual's ability to adopt healthy, low risk behaviors, and influence existing social norms, creating a more supportive environment for behavior change. IEC activities which use multiple reinforcing channels of communication, from interpersonal communication to mass media, have been proven to be the most effective. Targeting specific groups, e.g. young, sexually active men, for selective communication campaigns is also a proven strategy. In addition, sustained behavior change occurs when knowledge and skills are conveyed along with perceptions of personal risk. In some circumstances confidential, voluntary HIV testing combined with counselling may assist in the achievement of a sense of personal vulnerability and concepts of current health status, which may in turn result in decreased high-risk behavior.

In order to continually monitor and improve HIV prevention communication activities, it is essential to increase our understanding of sexual behaviors, especially as they are influenced by community and culture. Behavioral research and surveys will contribute to further target, refine, and evaluate prevention activities.

Increase the demand for, access to and use of condoms.

Correct and consistent condom use is considered nearly 100 percent effective in preventing HIV infection. Although condom use has risen sharply, the percent of users in at-risk populations is still unacceptably low. USAID has extensive experience with condom promotion in family planning programs and works through existing channels to expand commodity demand and use for STI/HIV prevention.

USAID supported condom promotion programs also focus on self-sufficiency. In synergy with family planning programs, HIV prevention activities work to build institutional capacity to manage condom programs, focusing on aspects such as logistics systems and quality assurance. The development of public-private sector partnerships for the marketing and provision of condoms and other social marketing initiatives improve both access and financial sustainability of programs.

Control STIs by improving STI diagnosis and treatment services and by education of persons with STIs. The goal of STI prevention and control activities is to improve the quality of diagnosis and treatment of STIs, to increase access and use of STI services, and to provide targeted education to STI patients in order to decrease recurrent infections. USAID efforts in this area focus on behavior change among clients with STIs, and on improving STI diagnosis and service delivery.

Interventions related to behavior change for STI clients include: counseling for risk reduction (including partner reduction); promoting correct condom use; encouraging compliance with medical prescriptions; and notifying and treating sexual partners. Communication initiatives will foster individual and community recognition of and demand for STI services. Community participation in planning for these services will be encouraged.

Improved diagnosis and service delivery initiatives include: training care providers in symptom recognition and syndromic management; establishing STI screening and management capability at sites where women seek health services, such as family planning and pregnancy care sites; and strengthening STI case management in those groups whose behavior puts them at highest risk of infection. STI service delivery sites are also ideal locations to assess STI prevalence and incidence, information which serves as a dynamic indicator as to both the risk of the spread of HIV in a community as well as the effectiveness of a program.

A critical issue in STI case management is the availability of effective drugs. USAID programs may work to facilitate this aspect of STI control, including, in some instances, procuring drugs. Should this be required it will be undertaken with close scrutiny paid to the long term financial and programmatic implications.

B. Policy reform addressing social, cultural, regulatory and economic issues related to HIV/AIDS and other STIs.

Supportive policies that create an environment in which prevention and AIDS mitigation programs can function efficiently and effectively are critical. Funding levels, the commitment of resources, and priority setting are all policy issues very relevant to HIV/AIDS. Enlightened policies can contribute to both communities and individuals in mitigating the impact of the disease itself. USAID supports policy dialogue and reform at an international, country and local level and in both the public and private sectors.

Key areas of intervention for USAID include:

Policy dialogue with decision makers to encourage a high-level, multi-sectoral, coordinated response to HIV/AIDS. Policies which support international and regional, multi-sectoral approaches are required because of the transnational nature of the disease and the fact that it is transmitted by persons who have no visible sign of the virus. This requires the mobilization of groups which may not normally be implicated in health issues, or may not normally work in collaboration. It also requires cross-border collaboration.

At the country level, key ministries, such as Education, Agriculture, Planning, Defense, Finance, and Health need to be consulted concerning the impact of HIV and explore all possible opportunities for HIV prevention. Provincial, municipal and community level governments must be included in this effort.

The expertise and influence of the private sector is also an extremely valuable means to achieve effective and comprehensive responses to HIV/AIDS prevention efforts. Forging relationships between the public and private sectors to take advantage of the relative strengths of each provides a strong and enduring basis from which to address broad public understanding for and acceptance of HIV/AIDS prevention programs.

Policy dialogue to address resource issues and long term sustainability at all levels. At the international level, coordinating effective donor response and leveraging of funding over the long term is needed to assure that adequate resources will be available for programs to reduce the spread of HIV/AIDS. At the country level, identifying and mobilizing local resources along with institution and systems building are key to long term self-sufficiency of programs.

Examples of resource issues to be addressed include creating a positive regulatory environment for the private sector by dealing with problems such as tariffs and taxes for condoms, government acceptance of social marketing, and procurement of antibiotics and other STI and HIV associated drugs.

Equally, governments need to be educated as to the economic and development ramifications of HIV/AIDS and the cost-effectiveness of devoting resources towards activities which prevent HIV/AIDS transmission and mitigate the impact of the disease.

Policy dialogue and reform to address the social and cultural impediments to the successful implementation of HIV/AIDS programs. As has been previously highlighted, HIV/AIDS prevention touches upon the most sensitive social and cultural mores, those related to sexuality. Human rights, advocacy, empowerment and choice are all critical issues relevant to the HIV/AIDS pandemic. Notable examples include the role and status of women and the vulnerability of children and young adults. Confidentiality, the rights, treatment of and status of persons living with AIDS affect all aspects of HIV/AIDS prevention and care.

Support of decision-makers, at an international, national, or community level to address difficult social, cultural and/or religious issues have the potential to contribute to an environment in which persons can begin to make the changes required to prevent transmission of the disease and live with dignity if they are infected.

Develop tools and complete research to serve policy dialogue and reform. To heighten the awareness of key policy-makers as well as bring about policy change, USAID will continue to develop and use tools that project and simulate the epidemic and assess the potential socio-economic impact. Modelling provides powerful arguments for policy makers and assists leaders and managers to define and prioritize interventions. Models which project, over time, the number of newly infected persons with HIV, the number of AIDS cases, and the potential impact of the epidemic on various sectors of the society are particularly potent. Simulation modelling is also a critical design and evaluation tool, allowing assessment of the impact of different interventions at varying degrees of efficacy.

C. New strategies and methods which need to be developed and tested to prevent transmission and mitigate the impact of the epidemic.

Although applying known HIV/AIDS technologies and approaches is the Agency's highest priority, more effective interventions must be developed to adequately prevent and control this epidemic. USAID has access to technical expertise and a network of implementing organizations through which improved technologies and approaches can be developed and tested. Investments in new or improved interventions will consider issues such as cost, potential impact and sustainability. The following illustrative list describes some of the most promising leads.

Research activities which immediately and directly influence the effectiveness of existing programs. These activities can be accomplished in a relatively short time-frame and have immediate effect on programs. Thus, priority is given to studies that improve understanding of the behaviors and epidemiology that are principally responsible for transmission of HIV infection. This includes research activities to identify more effective ways to change behavior. Examples include evaluating the role that HIV counselling and testing may play in modifying sexual behavior, the impact of perceived social norms upon individual behaviors, and assessing the impact of including HIV positive individuals in prevention programs. This type of research also contributes to identifying the most cost-effective mix of strategies for preventing sexual transmission of HIV.

Activities that enable women to reduce the risk of HIV infection. The development of female controlled barrier methods, such as vaginal microbicides, and rapid, simple STI diagnostics, are potentially valuable tools to reduce the risk of HIV and other STI infections in women. Research also focuses on enhancing women's access to information for primary HIV/STI prevention, as well as to STI services. Using existing family planning and maternal/child health centers is one approach along these lines. Behavioral research to identify interventions to enable and empower women to assess personal risk and negotiate sexual relationships is also essential.

Pilot projects and research to mitigate the impact of HIV in severely affected areas. Operations research to test interventions to mitigate the impact of HIV/AIDS on communities, from both a social and cost perspective, are needed to guide program design and policy dialogue. Examples of such pilots include community-based care for persons with HIV infection and AIDS and for AIDS orphans. Tuberculosis, because of its potential secondary public health impact as a predominant HIV related disease, is another topic for further investigation, including analysis of more effective short course therapy regimens.

Activities that support the infrastructure and utilization of HIV Vaccines.

Multiple US Government organizations and private enterprises are involved in research to identify and develop an effective HIV/AIDS vaccine. Consequently USAID's efforts in this area are currently expected to be relatively small, limited to exploring and facilitating opportunities for international field trials of promising vaccines, and coordinating accompanying education and prevention programs.

VI. IMPLEMENTING PARTNERS

USAID's strategy related to HIV/AIDS, as in other priority areas within the Population, Health and Nutrition Sector, is based on participatory, collaborative principles. USAID works in partnership with communities, governments, other bilateral and multilateral donors, international agencies and the private and voluntary sector to achieve maximum efficiency, effectiveness and sustainability of programs.

The Agency's HIV/AIDS program will be implemented in support of host-country and Mission strategic objectives and as an integral part of the country strategic plans and action plans. Bilateral activities will receive strong technical support and guidance from USAID/Washington, and will be implemented in close coordination with other donors.

A. Community Participation

Although a community-based, community-owned approach is a component of USAID sustainable development strategies, it is particularly relevant to HIV/AIDS prevention and is an integral strategic focus of USAID's HIV/AIDS strategy. Sustained behavior change is achieved when individual motivation is supported in a community context. Participation of communities and groups (including persons infected and affected by HIV/AIDS, women and young adults) in the design, management and evaluation of programs and policies are key. This approach empowers individuals and communities to assure that programs are relevant and responsive, builds indigenous capacities and contributes to long term sustainability.

Many community groups such as women's groups, local PVOs and NGOs, however, have limited institutional experience in planning, implementing, and financially monitoring activities. Through U.S. domestic PVOs, NGOs and ASOs (AIDS Services Organizations), USAID will seek to transfer these skills to indigenous groups and encourage and facilitate linkages between these groups. Where indigenous NGOs already exhibit technical and financial capacity, these organizations will receive high priority for support.

B. Country Programs

Reducing HIV/AIDS transmission in a time of serious resource limitations requires that USAID concentrate bilateral and core resources on a limited number of emphasis countries while maintaining more modest programs in others. In emphasis countries, USAID will work with host country governments, the private sector, and the NGO/PVO community, within the framework of a comprehensive program, using the multiple channels and approaches delineated in this document. Determination of emphasis countries is founded on epidemiologic, demographic and social indicators which identify:

Countries which are key contributors to the global epidemic

Countries which play a major role in transmission of HIV throughout their geographic region

Countries with high HIV prevalence

Other factors to be considered in the determination of priority countries and resultant program levels include evidence of national commitment and an absorptive capacity within the public and private/NGO sectors, potential for long-term operational sustainability, role of other donors and opportunities to leverage other resources, and Mission support for funding and staff to facilitate and implement HIV/AIDS interventions.

The current list of emphasis countries is found in Appendix II. USAID will work in non-emphasis countries, using primarily bilateral and field support funds, on a more limited scale.

C. Regional Programs/Areas of Affinity

"Areas of affinity" is the concept that clusters of countries may share characteristics which affect the spread of HIV and positively or negatively influence prevention efforts. These characteristics can include, but are not limited to, religious, cultural, political, or demographic attributes. Approaches which address issues within this context may be very effective with a broader reach than country programs. They also encourage and support inter-regional collaboration and are an efficient use of resources.

USAID will explore opportunities to support trans-national and regional activities in prevention and research. Examples include analysis of the impact on HIV/STI transmission from cross boarder migration, monitoring of STI drug resistance, and the shared development and use of educational approaches and materials.

D. Coordinated multi-lateral and donor community response

Global cooperation and coordination within the donor and lender community is critical to the effective and efficient use of HIV/AIDS resources for significant impact on the disease. Donor coordination is of particular importance to USAID, as the lead donor in this field and the major contributor to multilateral efforts.

USAID will continue to collaborate with and directly support the efforts of the UN multilateral organizations including GPA/WHO, UNDP, UNICEF, and UNFPA in HIV/AIDS prevention. Each of these organizations offers unique strengths and skills which contribute to the control of the global epidemic. The efforts of these agencies and the World Bank will now be further optimized through the new Joint and Cosponsored Programme on HIV/AIDS (JCP). In the future, USAID support to multilateral efforts in HIV/AIDS prevention is expected to occur through JCP. USAID also collaborates closely with Japan in several countries through the US-Japan Common Agenda for HIV/AIDS prevention. (See Appendix III for further discussion of coordination with other donors and federal agencies.)

VI. RESULTS

Monitoring and evaluation is critical to ensuring that USAID resources are used effectively and that they achieve results. The guiding principle of evaluation in this area is to reach the goal that no person should be subjected to the risk of disease as a result of responsible sexual activity. While this is an ideal, progress toward this goal will be effected by the collection and use of data to assess progress, refine implementation and demonstrate achievement.

Measuring success in the area of HIV/AIDS requires the use of interim markers and indicators. This is due to the epidemiologic dynamics of HIV transmission and the existence of a long term HIV "carrier" state. Even in the presence of extremely effective prevention interventions, decreases of HIV prevalence will not be measurable for at least 5 to 15 years at a national level. Reduction in STI prevalence, however, is an excellent proxy indicator for effectiveness of prevention activities and can be evaluated in a time frame of 3-5 years. Consequently this program relies on an approach which distinguishes between the short (program process), medium (program outcome), and long term (program impact).

USAID, in collaboration with WHO, has established a standardized set of global prevention indicators to be used by both national HIV/AIDS control programs and the donor community. These indicators measure:

- o knowledge by the target audience of preventive practices
- o condom availability
- o use of condoms in relationships of risk
- o proportion of the population who report "non-regular" sex partners
- o the quality of STI case management
- o the prevalence of specific STIs
- o prevalence of HIV

A list of the WHO/GPA country program indicators is contained in Annex IV.

With the increased emphasis on integrating HIV/STI prevention and management interventions into family planning and other health care settings, new indicators for evaluation are being developed by the Center for Population, Health and Nutrition within the Global Bureau. These would encompass assessing the degree of integration, quality, and utilization of these services. Evaluating a woman's ability to negotiate for safer sex must involve determining the transfer of knowledge and skills, and whether dialogue on sexual matters can occur within a relationship. Measuring outcome should include the increased level of "safer sex" in both casual and conjugal relationships, including assessing dual contraceptive method use and delaying the age of onset of sexual activity.

APPENDIX 1. MODES OF HIV TRANSMISSION

Sexual transmission is well-established as the dominant mode of HIV transmission, accounting for almost 85% of all global adult HIV infections. The proportion of transmission via heterosexual or homosexual relations varies depending on the country; however heterosexual transmission is becoming increasingly important and now accounts for 75 to 80 percent of sexually transmitted HIV. The other principal modes accounting for the remaining 15 percent are: mother to child transmission (including breastfeeding); and blood-borne, including transmission related to blood transfusions, injectable drug-use, and contaminated medical and other skin piercing equipment.

Estimates prepared by the WHO/GPA indicate that the number of children worldwide who acquire HIV from an infected mother in utero or during the birth process is expected to continue rising through the 1990s because of increases in HIV among women of child-bearing age. Studies have shown that roughly one-third of babies born to HIV-infected mothers in developing countries become infected themselves. A proportion of this mother-to-infant transmission occurs during pregnancy and delivery. Preliminary data from Kenya and Rwanda indicates that up to 15% of transmission may be attributable to breastfeeding. The risk of HIV transmission through breastfeeding is greater among women who become infected during the breastfeeding period. The international medical community is now urgently engaged in undertaking further research to better define the efficiency of HIV transmission during breastfeeding and to provide breastfeeding guidelines for HIV-infected mothers.

Transmission through blood transfusion is far less significant than through sexual transmission, and has been virtually eliminated in industrialized countries. However it continues to be a mode of transmission in many developing countries. Transmission due to the sharing of needles between injecting drug users is a less prevalent mode of HIV transmission in most developing countries. In parts of Southeast Asia it does, however, account for up to 15% of all adult HIV transmission. HIV transmission through the use of contaminated medical equipment, including reused needles accounts for a small proportion of all transmission. Also less, significant in terms of actual numbers, but none-the-less important, is transmission to health care workers in high HIV prevalence countries due to the lack of gloves and other materials required to practice "universal precautions".

APPENDIX III: COORDINATION WITH OTHER DONORS AND FEDERAL AGENCIES

Donor coordination is a fundamental aspect of USAID's operational approach to development. The goal of USAID's donor coordination is to improve its own effectiveness by cooperating with other donors to avoid duplication and promote complementarity.

USAID recognizes that coordination of HIV/AIDS activities and decision-making about such activities is a process, rather than a structure. This process promotes information exchange, builds alliances between different organizations and facilitates the creation of cooperation and programs which are complementary, collaborative and mutually reinforcing.

1. UN System Agencies

Historically, USAID has worked closely with the World Health Organization's Global Programme on AIDS (WHO/GPA) both as a major contributor and member of a variety of management and decision-making committees including the WHO Global Programme on AIDS Management Committee (GMC), and the GMC Task Force on HIV/AIDS Coordination. In addition, the USG is represented on Economic Social Council (ECOSOC).

In recent years, as other UN System Agencies have become involved in HIV/AIDS prevention in areas of their comparative advantage, USAID has provided initial support to both UNDP and UNICEF in their respective HIV/AIDS prevention efforts.

In the future, USAID anticipates working with UN System Agencies through the Joint and CoSponsored UN programme (JCP) which will have been established based upon the recommendation and endorsement of the ECOSOC in July 1994.

Six organizations of the UN system (WHO, UNFPA, World Bank, UNFPA, UNDP, and UNESCO) with differing expertise have joined forces, drawing on their respective experience for the prevention of HIV and mitigation of AIDS. The JCP will work to prevent the transmission of HIV, and to counter the impact of the pandemic on individuals, communities and societies.

With the formation of the JCP, USAID anticipates that all U.S. contributions to UN System efforts against HIV/AIDS will be coordinated through the JCP. USAID will continue to serve as a member of management and decision-making committees under the new structure of the JCP.

2. Other Donors

In addition to USAID's efforts to coordinate at the global level through the JCP, USAID works to coordinate programs and activities at the regional, sub-regional and country level. This level of coordination requires communication with a broad group of multi- and bilateral donor organizations.

The U.S.-Japan Common Agenda's HIV/AIDS initiative is one way in which USAID is working to maximize the impact of its assistance through donor coordination. Under the umbrella of the Common Agenda, the Government of Japan has been working closely with USAID to ensure coordinated and complementary programming of GoJ assistance for HIV/AIDS. In addition, through their Grassroots Grants Assistance program, the GoJ is providing complementary support to USAID supported NGOs engaged in HIV/AIDS prevention activities.

3. Federal Agencies

USAID coordinates with other U.S. government agencies through a variety of mechanisms. On a policy level, USAID participates in the USG Interdepartmental Task Force on AIDS which is chaired by the Office of National AIDS Policy.

USAID also plays an active role in coordinating the HIV-related activities of other U.S. government agencies in developing countries, including the Department of Health and Human Services and the Department of State. USAID utilizes Participatory Agency Service Agreements (PASAs) to provide support for epidemiological and biomedical research conducted by CDC, BUCEN and NIAID. This mechanism helps to foster collaborative relationships with these Agencies preventing duplication of effort and facilitating information exchange.
