CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

AK's -- Norinco, Mitchell, Poly Technologies

Background

These assault rifles are semi-automatic copies of machineguns designed in Communist block countries. They are variations of post-World War II military rifles. Military version: AK-47 or Type 56.

Production

These firearms have been imported as follows: Norinco from China, Mitchell from Yugoslavia, Poly Technologies from China. In 1989, these assault rifles were banned from importation into the United States, because they did not meet the sporting purpose criteria under the Gun Control Act. Approximately 100,000 of these firearms have been imported into the U.S., and are still in circulation.

Ammunition Magazine

These assault rifles come equipped with a detachable 30-round magazine. This weapon will hold a magazine of a larger capacity; magazines of up to 150 rounds are widely available.

Numbers Traced *

During the years 1990 to 1993, these firearms accounted for 2,061 of the firearms traced for law enforcement officials nationwide. The traces included 329 narcotics investigations and 272 murder cases.

* not all firearms used in crime are traced.

M-10, M-11, M-11/9, and M-12

Shown is SWD M11/9

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

M-10, M-11, M-11/9, and M-12

Background

These semi-automatic assault pistols are manufactured in the United States, and designed as semi-automatic copies of submachine guns. The M-11/9 weighs 3.25 pounds unloaded, 4.25 pounds when fully loaded, some of SWD's M-11/9 models were manufactured as rifles. Military versions: M-10 submachinegun; M-11 submachinegun; M-11/9 submachinegun; M-12 submachinegun.

Production

Approximately 100,000 of these firearms have been manufactured.

Ammunition Magazine

These assault pistols come equipped with a detachable 32-round magazine. This weapon will hold a magazine of a larger capacity; magazines of up to 150 rounds are widely available.

Numbers Traced *

During the years 1990 to 1993, these firearms accounted for 3,091 of the firearms traced for law enforcement officials nationwide. They were traced for 561 narcotics investigations, 313 murder cases, and 125 instances of assault.

According to ATF's Tracing Center, from 1991 through the present, the M11/9 has been in the top 10 firearms that were traced.

* not all firearms used in crime are traced.

Action Arms UZI and Galil

Shown is UZI Pistol

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Action Arms UZI and Galil

Background

These assault rifles and pistols are semi-automatic copies of machineguns designed in Israel. They are variations of post-World War II military rifles. Military versions: UZI and Galil.

Production

In 1989, these assault rifles were banned from importation into the United States because they did not meet the sporting purpose criteria under the Gun Control Act. Approximately 10,000 of these firearms were imported into the U.S. prior to the ban and are in circulation today. The UZI assault pistol was banned from importation into the United States in 1993 by President Clinton because it did not meet the sporting purpose criteria under the Gun Control Act. The UZI assault rifle has the same appearance as the submachine gun, and was first imported in 1980. The Galil was introduced into U.S. commerce in 1982.

Ammunition Magazine

The UZI Carbine chambers 9mm ammunition, and comes equipped with a detachable 25-round magazine. The Galil is a .308 caliber semi-automatic rifle and comes equipped with a detachable 20-shot magazine. These weapons will hold magazines of a larger capacity; magazines of up to 150 rounds are widely available.

Numbers Traced *

During the years 1990 to 1993, these firearms accounted for 755 of the firearms traced for law enforcement officials nationwide. Galils were traced for 9 narcotics investigations, 2 murder cases, and 2 instances of assault. Uzis were traced for 151 narcotics investigations, 47 murder cases, and 30 instances of assault.

* not all firearms used in crime are traced.

Street Sweeper/Striker 12
(also including the USAS 12)

Shown is Street Sweeper

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Street Sweeper/Striker 12 (also including the USAS 12)

Background

On March 1, 1994, these assault shotguns were classified as destructive devices under the National Firearms Act. As such, they may still be manufactured, but must be registered with ATF.

Production

In 1984 and 1988, these shotguns were denied for importation because they did not meet the sporting purpose criteria under the Gun Control Act. They have subsequently been manufactured in the United States. Approximately 18,000 have been manufactured domestically to date.

The Striker was originally designed in Rhodesia and manufactured in South Africa for the purposes of crowd control. The Street Sweeper is a domestic copy of the original Striker 12. The USAS-12 was originally produced in Korea and was based on an automatic version of the weapon used by the military.

Ammunition Magazine

These shotguns come equipped with magazine capacities of 12 shotgun shell rounds.

Numbers Traced *

During the years 1991 to 1993, these shotguns accounted for 176 of the firearms traced for law enforcement officials nationwide. They were traced for 42 narcotics investigations, 11 murder cases, and 6 instances of assault.

* not all firearms used in crime are traced.
