MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRESIDENT

FROM: ANTHONY LAKE
SUSAN BROPHY

SUBJECT: Letter from Representative Peter King

Purpose

To reply to letter from Representative King.

Background

Representative King has written you on behalf of his constituent, Irene Mandra, whose brother, Marine Sergeant Philip Mandra, was reported missing and later declared killed in action during the Korean conflict in 1952. In 1993, a KGB Colonel claimed that he had seen Sgt. Mandra in a Russian labor camp as late as 1966. Since then, Mrs. Mandra has tried to get more information from the Russian side about her brother's case but remains dissatisfied with their response. Your letter to Representative King states your intention to see that the U.S. side of the U.S.-Russian Joint Commission on POWs/MIAs works with the Russians to ensure that all relevant facts are brought to light in this case.

RECOMMENDATION

That you sign the letter to Representative King at Tab A.

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

Dear Representative King:

Thank you for your recent letter on behalf of Ms. Irene Mandra. I am concerned by your statement that Ms. Mandra has been dissatisfied with the level of cooperation she has received from Russian officials on the U.S.-Russian Joint Commission in investigating the circumstances surrounding the reported detention of her brother, Sergeant Philip Mandra, in a Russian prison.

As you know, the United States placed the case of Sergeant Mandra at the top of its agenda during the meeting of the Commission in December 1993. Ambassador Malcom Toon, the American co-chairman of the Commission, met with Ms. Mandra to discuss her concerns in detail at that time. The Commission's Russian Co-Chairman, General Dmitriy Volkogonov, has assured us of Russia's full cooperation in the case.

Ambassador Toon plans to raise the status of the Russian investigation when he meets with General Volkogonov at the end of February. In the meantime, I encourage Ms. Mandra to contact the Joint Commission's family liaison representative, Ms. Kay Whitley, to ensure that her concerns are brought to the attention of the Russian side.

Sincerely,

The Honorable Peter T. King

Dear Mr. President:

I write today on behalf of my constituent, Ms. Irene Mandra, to urge you to personally raise the case of Marine Sergeant Philip Vincent Mandra during your upcoming meetings with officials of the Russian Federation.

As you know, Sergeant Mandra was originally listed as missing in action and later declared killed in action from an engagement with Chinese infantry forces in North Korea on August 7, 1952. However, on September 14th, 1993, the Pentagon informed Ms. Mandra that a former K.G.B. Colonel had recently identified her brother as a prisoner he saw in the Magadan prison in the former Soviet Union on two occasions as recently as 1966.

This critical evidence is the first known case of a former Soviet official acknowledging that American Prisoners of War were held by the government of the Soviet Union.

Last month while in Moscow, Ms. Mandra met with the retired K.G.B. Colonel who once again identified her brother as an American Prisoner of War that was held in the former Soviet Union. Clearly, all documents, eyewitness accounts or other evidence concerning SGT Mandra should be released immediately by Russian authorities.

Ms. Mandra remains dissatisfied with the treatment that she received from the Russian Government. She believes that officials provided her with incorrect or incomplete information regarding her brother's case. She has asked me -- as her representative -- to bring her situation to your attention.

I respectfully request that you provide all possible and appropriate assistance in the case of Sergeant Philip Mandra.

Sincerely,

PETER T. KING
Member of Congress

The Ostrich Caucus ✓

It is an awkward question House Democrats would prefer not to discuss: Who will become chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee if the current Federal investigation of Representative Dan Rostenkowski leads to an indictment?

Under House Democratic Caucus rules, Mr. Rostenkowski would be required to step aside while his case is adjudicated, and the second-ranking Democrat, 73-year-old Sam Gibbons of Florida, would automatically become the acting chairman. This undemocratic process ill serves the public. Speaking candidly, few members would say Mr. Gibbons is the best, or even a very strong, choice to head this most powerful of House committees. Though he has expertise on trade issues, and might prove the doubters wrong, many question whether he has the patience and political skills needed to build consensus on complicated and controversial social and fiscal issues like health care. Clearly, seniority should not be the sole selection criterion.

It is time to dust off a sensible rules change proposed last year by Democratic freshmen. It would require that the caucus vote on an acting chairman whenever an indictment forces a committee chairman to step aside. Making such a change would serve the public's strong interest in accountability. It might also encourage a more promising candidate, like Charles Rangel of New York, the fourth-ranking Democrat on the committee — and some say the only realistic alternative — to challenge Mr. Gibbons's claim.

A year ago, the Democrats showed cowardice by re-electing Mr. Rostenkowski chairman. His refusal to testify before a grand jury looking into possible corruption in the House was an unacceptable evasion for someone in such a critical legislative position.

Since then, questions about Mr. Rostenkowski's integrity have multiplied. Last summer the former House Postmaster linked Mr. Rostenkowski to a scheme to convert office and campaign money into cash. And in December, reporters for The Chicago Sun-Times uncovered some curious payroll practices that suggest Mr. Rostenkowski may have paid salaries to Chicago friends and neighbors who performed little or no work for his office.

It is far from certain Mr. Rostenkowski will be indicted. But the Democratic Caucus has a duty to confront the possibility by embracing the modest rules reform served up by its newest members.

Who Is Running Our Korea Policy? ✓

The Clinton Administration insists it will never subcontract its foreign policy to any international institution. Yet it is doing just that in its nuclear diplomacy with North Korea. It is letting the International Atomic Energy Agency decide how to carry out a deal Washington reached with Pyongyang. By changing the terms of that deal, the I.A.E.A. could embroil the U.S. in a dangerous confrontation on the Korean Peninsula.

The I.A.E.A. is supposed to be negotiating detailed arrangements for inspections at all North Korea's declared nuclear sites. These inspections are designed to insure that nuclear safeguards are in place. More thorough regular inspections, which could impede the diversion of nuclear material to bomb-making, would not resume until the U.S. holds a new round of high-level talks with the North. Inspections of suspected nuclear waste sites to determine whether such diversion has already occurred have yet to be negotiated.

But the I.A.E.A., which does not like to see member states trifle with its procedures, is asking for more intrusive access to a reactor site than the North agreed to with Washington, according to Pyongyang. The U.S. now needs to try to break the deadlock between North Korea and the I.A.E.A.

before the I.A.E.A. refers the matter to the United Nations Security Council, which has the power to impose economic sanctions on Pyongyang.

The danger is that the drumbeat of war may drown out diplomacy. The Administration is considering the dispatch of Patriot missiles and other military forces to shore up the South. And members of Congress have, perversely, called for putting nuclear arms back into South Korea. Ratcheting up the threats may appease the hawks at home, but it bolsters hard-liners in North Korea, who could use such threats to justify proceeding with the development of nuclear weapons.

Reinforcing the South makes sense if and when the U.S. decides to abandon diplomacy and press for economic sanctions. Such sanctions would likely end all hope of inspecting North Korea's nuclear sites and could lead to the resumption of confrontation in Korea. Given Pyongyang's unpredictability, reinforcements would then be prudent.

But it is premature to be taking such steps now. The U.S. should be doing what it can diplomatically to gain unimpeded access to North Korea's nuclear sites, step by grudging step. And it should not leave it up to the I.A.E.A. to overreach and thereby trigger a confrontation with North Korea.

Environmental Justice ✓

It should come as no surprise that Washington is only now beginning to see that racial justice is essential to good environmental policy. The environmental movement is run by whites preoccupied with conservation rather than racial issues. Today's basic laws on clean air and water are only a quarter-century old. And for 12 of those years, when Ronald Reagan and George Bush occupied the head of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, collected largely anecdotal evidence showing that communities with large minority populations, even relatively affluent ones, were more likely than white communities to have hazardous waste facilities and other polluters dropped in their midst.

Then in 1992 as part of an even more extensive

Back From the Brink Again

Ending yet another bout of brinkmanship, North Korea acceded on Tuesday to international inspections of its declared nuclear sites. That is a hard-earned victory for U.S. diplomats who are trying to persuade the North to give up any ambition to build bombs.

North Korea agreed to let inspectors into all seven of its declared sites. They can conduct repeated visits if necessary, but only to assure that nuclear safeguards are intact — to verify that no nuclear material has been diverted to bomb-making in the year since their last visit and to check seals and replace film in cameras designed to inhibit diversions in the future.

Once the inspectors are reassured and talks between North and South Korea resume, the stage will be set for a new round of tough talks between Washington and Pyongyang to bring the North into full compliance with the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty. The Clinton Administration needs to prepare a package of incentives to get North Korea to comply, starting with cancellation of this year's Team Spirit military exercises, conducted jointly with South Korea.

The North's response comes none too soon. The board of governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency, which oversees nuclear inspections, is scheduled to meet Monday. If it were unable to certify Pyongyang's compliance with nuclear safeguards, it would refer the matter to the United Nations Security Council, which has the authority to impose economic sanctions.

The North views sanctions as an attempt to strangle it. Imposing them, would almost surely derail diplomatic efforts to gain unimpeded access to all its nuclear sites and would increase the risk of instability, if not war, on the Korean Peninsula. For these reasons the North's neighbors, China, Japan and South Korea, have been reluctant to impose a tight embargo.

The Clinton Administration was wise to cut a diplomatic deal instead. Its strategy is working so far. But the hardest bargaining lies ahead. It rightly wants North Korea to allow more thorough regular inspections of all its declared nuclear sites, to keep it from turning nuclear material into bombs.

It is especially important to resume regular inspections by summer, when North Korea will have to shut down its reactor and replace the fuel rods. At that time, inspectors will be able to weigh and assay the nuclear material to find out whether any of it was diverted in the past, and if so, how many bombs' worth.

Special inspections of suspected North Korean nuclear waste sites might also be necessary for that purpose. Those too would have to be negotiated.

The Clinton Administration should be prepared to pay a reasonable price to gain such access — by meeting the North's demands for improved relations, giving security assurances, providing reactors that are less proliferation-prone, and offering trade and aid. Diplomacy will cost a lot less than confrontation, and it just might get what the world wants — a nuclear-free Korea.
